LOTICHIUS (Peter) Nephew to the former, took the Sirname Secundus, that he might not be confounded with his Uncle. He was born at Solitaire the 2d. of November 1528. His Father, [γ] tho' he was only an honeſt [δ] Country Man, deſigned him for a Scholar; and we need not wonder at it, conſidering what we have ſaid of the Abbot Lotichius. This Uncle having obſerved by the Progreſs his Nephew made at Solitaire School, that he was admirably qualified for the Sciences, reſolved to take a very particular Care of him, and ſent him to Frankfort, where Micyllus Taught the Liberal Arts with great Reputation. After having learnt a great deal of Latin and Greek, and the Rules of Poetry much more, to which his Genius ſtrongly Inclined him; he was ſent to Marpurg in 1544, and afterwards to Wittemberg, whither Melanchthon and Camerarius drew a great Reſort. The young Lotichius quickly gained the Friendſhip of theſe two Famous Profeſſors, as alſo of George Sabinus, a Celebrated Poet, and of ſeveral other Learned Men. The War which broke out in Saxony in 1546. obliged Melanchthon and his Partners to quit Wittemberg. The firſt retired to Magdebourg [ε] and was followed thither by our Lotichius; but when he left that Place to ſeek a better Sanctuary, Lotichius inſtead of following him, took up Arms. This kind of Life did not intirely break off (A) his Commerce with the Muſes, nor did it laſt long; for we know that in the Year 1548, he lived peaceably among his Books at Erford. A little after he returned to Wittemberg, whither the Peace had permitted Melanchthon to go and continue his Function. He there finiſhed his Studies of Philoſophy, and afterwards went into France in Quality of Governor, to Daniel Stibar's Nephew, Dean of the Chapter of Wirtzbourg, a Man of great Merit, and an intimate Friend of Joachim Camerarius. It was in the Year 1559, that he began theſe Travels, which laſted (B) near four Years. He made a long ſtay at Montpelier; and probably he and his Pupils had ſuffered ſome Inſults [ζ], for having eaten Meat in Lent, if Cluſius, who lodged at Bondelet's, had not interceded for 'em with a Dominican, who performed the Office of Inquiſitor. They were diſcharged for a Sum of Money. He was ſcarce returned into Germany before he thought of Travelling into Italy. He made this Tour, as he had that into France, at the Expence of Daniel Stibar; but he had the Misfortune of getting Acquainted with too many ſorts of People. He lodged at Bologna, with a young Canon of Munich, and though he might have had [ζ] a Complaiſant Landlady at home, he went to make Love abroad. The Landlady being deſperate in Love, and Jealous to boot, prepared a Philtre for him; but by Misfortune Lotichius finding his

[a] Eccleſiæ Solitarienſi ut inſpectorem præfecit. Paul Freher. Theatro, pag. 213.

[b] Taken from the Theatre de Paul Freherus pag. 213. Freherus cites the Bibliotheque poetique de Jean Pierre Lotichius.

[γ] He was called Louis Loticius. Melanchthon changed this word into Lotichius, which ſeemed to him more Emphatical, on the ſcore of Peter Lotichius Secundus, his Scholar.

[δ] Le Theatre de Freherus pag. 1249. dit à Marpourg.

[ε] They threatned 'em with making an amende honorable.

[ζ] Tum forte (ut ſit) amare foris, quod domi habebat, ut ait Terentius. Id. impatientius ferens hoſpita juvenis formoſiſſimi amore capta &c. Hagius in vita Lotichii p. 63. Edit. 1609

(a) Id Ep. 48. pag. 120.

(b) Cardinalis Lotharingius videtur ſimulare ſe aliquid tale Cogitare: nam Rhemis ita Concinatur ut videatur non multum á noſtris diſſentire ſed viderint alii quantum huic ſit fidendum. Id. Epiſt. 63. pag. 159.

had formerly ſhewn that he wiſhed for the Reformation of a great many Things, but this was only a blind, as Languet well foretold: (a) Cum præſertim Cardinalis Lotharingius, Jam pulchre ſimulet ſe omnino expetere, ut fiat aliqua emendatio in religione & fateatur hoc eſſe plane neceſſarium. Ego ſane in ea re ipſi non Credo ſed exiſtimo, ipſum hoc Ideo facere, quia videt advertendo ſe nihil pene proficere & ſperat ſe ſic agendo plura poſſe impedire, ſed tamen parum proficit. What is ſaid in a Letter dated from Paris the 26th. of Nov. 1561, is much more to the purpoſe; for having ſpoken of the Converſion of the Biſhop of Troies, it adds, that the (b) Cardinal of Lorrain made a Shew, as if he had the ſame Intentions; forſo it goes on, he preached at Rheims in ſuch a manner, that he did not ſeem very far from Lutheraniſm.

(A) Did not entirely break off his Commerce with the Muſes.] Let us hear what he himſelf ſays of it addreſſing his Diſcourſe to them:

Vos (c) quoque ſum lituos inter veneratus & enſes,
Quodque fuit vacuum tempus ab hoſte dedi.
Deque tot amiſis etiam nunc pauca ſuperſunt
Carmina, militiæ tempore facta meæ.

Mean time, he made only one Campaign, ſo that the Authors cited by Mr. Baillet had no Reaſon to ſay in general (d) That what's remarkable is, that Lotichius compoſed his Verſes in the Tumult of a Camp, and under Arms.

(B) Which laſted near four Years.] This was the Term (e) of the whole Travels. Now as they firſt ſaw Paris, Rouen, Dieppe, Lyons, and went (f) for the moſt part on Foot, having but one Horſe among Eleven of 'em to carry their Cloths; 'tis certain they ſtaid not at Montpellier four Years, as an Ingenious Man (g) has ſaid. They lived there about two Years together. Cum biennio jam atque

(c) Eleg. 11. lib. 1.

(d) Jugemens ſur les Poetes. tome 3. pag. 273.

(e) Revertentes tandem igitur poſt exactum jam ferme quadriennium ex Galliis. Hagius in vita Lotichii p. 56.

(f) Idem p. 42. 44.

(g) Teiſier, Addit. ann. Eloges, to. 1. p. 207.

his Broth too Fat, changed it for that (C) of the Canon, and grew immediately Mad upon it. He was relieved by Vomiting up a part of the Potion, which however threw him into a Malignant Fever that made his Nails fall of, and had like to have [illegible] him his Life. Hubert Languet, his good Friend, Travelling into Italy, found [illegible] in this miserable Condition at Bologna. The Poison Operated so violently upon [illegible]us, that it was not above a Year before he had some Returns of his first Malady; [illegible] at last died of it. Before he left Italy, he took his Degree of Doctor in Physick at [illegible]a. Some time after his return into Germany, he was invited to Heidelberg to [illegible] Professorship in that Faculty; he accepted of this Employ, and went to Heidelberg in 1557. He there got the Esteem and Friendship of the Elector Palatine, Otho Henry, and of every Body else; and as he had all manner of Reason to be satisfied with his Employ, [illegible]e refused the Offers that were made him at Marpourg, of a Place of Professor in [illegible]ick or Poetry. He did not long Enjoy that pleasant State; being attacked with [illegible] old Distemper in the beginning of November 1560, and died the 7th of the same Month, he was a Man of admirable Conversation, and was Candor and Sincerity (D) it self [a]. A Collection of his Poems were published (E) in 1561. It contains so many Love-Verses, that it was thought the Author had need of something of an Apology on this Score. Hagius (F) undertook it. The fourth Elegy of the 2d. Book has something surprizing in it; it turns upon a Dream, which

[a] Taken from his Life, composed by John Hagius, his good Friend and published 25 Years after the Death of Lotichius. Melchior Adam, in vitis Medicorum pag. 112. has given a very full Abridgment of his Life.

(a) Hagius ibid. pag. 63.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Thuanus lib. 26. sub fin.

(d) [illegible]. pag. [illegible]. (e) [illegible]an. ubi supra.

(f) Camerarius, in Epist. Dedicatoria Operum Petri Lotichii.

(g) In vita Philosoph. pag. 210.

eo amplius forte in Academi[illegible]outpeliana vixiſſent, says Hagius in the 47th [illegible].

(C) Changed it wi[illegible]t of the Canon.] According to Hagius's manner of relating the thing, this Philtre was given in a Soop; but he is strangely mistaken, in imagining, as he seems to do, that the Italians give the Name Minestra to these enchanting Potions, which the Greeks call Philtron. Jus parare, says he, [illegible]cio quod malè temperatum ac conciliatum [illegible], Itali minestram illud, hoc philtron Gr[illegible]unt. The Italians by Minestra, or Menestra, barely understand Pottage or Soop.

(D) Was Candor and Sincerity it self.] His Historian gives a most Remarkable Proof of it. He might if he pleased, have Married very Advantagiously; but because he believed he should quickly die, he could not think of deceiving the Woman; and therefore refused all the Matches that were proposed to him. (b) Quod se sciret supremi diei fui nec vita longioris conscium fallere puellam ingenuam ullam, fœmineumve genus, aut lactare spe connubii fortunaque stabilioris nolle.

(E) A Collection of Lotichius's Poems were published in 1561.] Joachim Camerarius wrote the Epistle Dedicatory to it, in which he gives Lotichius the Character of the best Poet, that his Age, and Germany had seen. After this Edition, many others were made with Additions of several Poems, Thuanus (c) who has put three Years betwixt Lotichius's Death, and the [illegible]ation of his Poems by Camerarius, is out [illegible]koning by two Years. Moreri has Copied [illegible]ault, and has added a little false Chronology [illegible] his own upon the Day of his Death, which hapned not as he says, on the 24th of October, but on the 7th of November. Thuanus, who has placed his Death on the 1st. of November, is Guilty of a like Fault. Freherus (d) also reckons three Years betwixt Lotichius's Death, and the Edition of his Verses. Thuanus (e) has rank'd this Poet below Eobanus Hessus. Camerarius pretends, that if the latter had been alive, he would have owned himself Inferior to Lotichius. (f) Sed & Eobanus & Sabinus, si viverent, cum omnia in Lotichii scriptis magnopere probarent, tum elegantia & suavitate atque exprimendi vetustatis similitudinem contentione, se ab hoc alicubi superari non negarent. Hagius affirms, that the greatest Poets of Germany have publickly acknowledged the particular Esteem they had for Lotichius's Verses; and pretends, that in the common Opinion, Lotichius equalled the most excellent Poets, both Ancient and Modern, [illegible]as preferable perhaps to some of the Anti[illegible]cites Paul Melissus's Verses, in which the Su[illegible]rity is given to Lotichius above all the German Poets in point of Elegy. Melchior (g) Adam is a little unexact in his Abridgment of this Place, since he makes Hagius say, that the greatest Men, and particularly George Sabin, John Stigelius, George Fabricius, Posthius and [illegible]us have given Lotichius the Palm in Matter of [illegible]k Verse. Hagius at the most makes only [illegible]chius and Melissus expresly give him this Palm; he says nothing of the other three, either expresly or implicitly that can relate to this matter.

I thought that the Edition of Lotichius's Poems procured by Camerarius in 1561, was the first: but Mr. Kortholt has been pleased to inform me, that there was printed at Paris in 1551. at Vascosan's, Petri Lotichii secundi elegiarum liber, ejusdem carminum libellus ad D. Danielem Stibarum equitem Francum. The Letter he writ me hereupon is so mislaid among my Papers, that when I was Reviſing this Article, I could not find it; however I remember he gave me several particular Characters of this Edition, and told me amongst other things, that the Dream I shall speak of (b) below, is not found in it. Mr Kortholt acquainted me also that he had inserted several Things concerning this Lotichius in his Dissertation de enthusiasmo poetico printed at Kiel in 1696.

(b) In the Remark G.

(F) Hagius undertook the Apology of his Love-Verses.] He (i) confesses that being very young he made frequent Reflexions with some sort of surprize, on the perpetual Complaints with which the Poets fill their Verses; as that they burn with Love, that they are pierced with Cupid's Darts, and that they find no Remedy for these consuming Flames.

(i) In vita Lotichii.

Mille fatigatus verum discrimina vici,
Sæpe graves æstus, frigora sæpe tuli:
Unius haud possum superare Cupidinis ignes,
Nec desideris fortior esse meis.

After these Verses of Lotichius, he cites three of Virgil's.

Aspice aratra jugo referunt suspensa juvenci,
Et sol crescentes decedens duplicat umbras.
Me tamen urit amor, quis enim modus adsit amori?

He adds, that having asked some Poets the meaning of this, Lotichius answered him, that it was the Fire of Divine, and not Venereal Love, that burnt the Poets.

Curvatum pars magna suos decantet amores
Miraris Hagi candide, & causam roga,
Accipe, non illos Veneris fas improba, verum
Æterni amor generosus urit numinis.

This Answer's Ridiculous; 'twas taking Hagius for a Child. He does not speak of it as he ought to do; for he only says that Melissus explained to him all the Mystery (k) much better. Melissus represented to him, that if any thing was capable of attracting Hearts, and conveying invincible Charms into the very Marrow, 'tis the Love that's kindled by a modest and chast Object. The purest Heaven, (l) adds he, formed this Love, and assigned it inflamed Hearts for its Throne. The Stars take care to keep up this Fire; and as the Poets receive the Influences from Heaven, which Inspire their Poetry, we need not wonder that they have so lively a sense of the Fire of Love; for these Influences having the same Origin as (m) Love, both kindle and keep it up.

(k) Quam rem non paulo & copiosius, & luculentius mihi enucleavit Melissus.

(l) Purior hanc ætherolim generavit & intra Successus jussit regna tenere fibras.

(m) Habent alimenta calores Vivida sideris fata perennis focis.

&c which seems to be a Prediction (G) of the Sacking of Magdebourg. I shall make several Remarks on this Subject, which yet are rather Conjectures, than an Explication,

Sic propagare laborat
Iudita naturæ semina quisque suæ.

To reduce this Explication into plain English, and to its just Simplicity, we must Suppose that Melissus meant to say, that the same Complexion which disposes a Man to Poetry, disposes him to Love. This Proposition is not easie to be made out; for besides that there are many Persons, who have a Talent at Poetry without being of an Amorous Constitution, 'tis certain there are innumerable People who can't make a Verse, and yet are more furiously tormented with the Fire of Love, than those whose Poems are the most Amorous. How many Love-Verses are printed, which are only Essays of Wit? A Poet never so little touched, appropriates to himself whatever he finds in the most Passionate Elegies; he tries even to carry things higher than his Reading; he Invents new Turns, and Studies the most mournful Characters. Their Design is to make their Verses admired; to Exercise their Vein upon Thoughts, which at once give a Reputation to their Wit, and Flatter the Object of their Passion. There are even some who are wholly unaffected with Love, when they compose this kind of Verses. Beza was one of them. (a) Istos bonos viros non pudet quicquid de poeticæ Candidæ amoribus lusi, (lusi autem certè pleraque, veteres illos imitatus, priusquam etiam per ætatem, quid istud rei esset, intelligerem) ad castissimam & lectissimam fœminam accommodare. Id autem non aliter se habere quàm dico, non ii tantum testari possunt quibuscum per id tempus vixi, verum etiam res ipsa declarat: quum nullos unquam liberos ex uxore susceperim, in meis autem illis carminibus, Candidam prægnantem superis commendem: quod tum mihi minimum illud fictitium argumentum, ut alia subinde multa, occurreret. You have in these Words an Instance of the Conduct of Poets; they give themselves imaginary Subjects, that they may have an Opportunity of saying Witty Things. But let's come to Lotichius's Apology.

He had Four Mistresses (b) successively; for whom he made Abundance of Verses: he never proposed, as is said, to obtain any Favours from 'em, but 'tis only from himself, a Witness in his own Cause, that we know this. Non fecit id non honeste, quia & caste amavit Lotichius & sine crimine ac scelere: si modo castissimi Poetæ verbis versibusque dignamur aliquam habere non dubiam fidem, sic etenim ipsemet de amoribus suis canit, & Claudia sua (c).

Feliciter arsi
Inque meo nullum crimen amore fuit.
. . . . . .
Non ego te, mea lux, deceptam fraude reliqui
Non spolium rapto turpe pudore tuli.
Di mihi sunt testes, fi mentior, æquore vasto
Obruar, & mutis piscibus esca natem.

The Apologist observes, that the Privileges of Poetry allowed Lotichius to exercise his Muse upon earthly Beauties, it being an Art which is exercised in the Contemplation, and Explication of all that is beautiful in the Universe. Fecit Lotichius id primum jure poetices optimo, ad quam scilicet rerum omnium pulcherrimarum quæ magna hac universitate orbis continentur, cœlestium terrestriumque species habilium formarum contemplatio, commentatioque rite pertinet. Besides, as he was civil and polite, he applied himself to write Love-Verses, and would not be denied this piece of Gallantry, which besides was not unuseful towards polishing his Muse. Et quo illud faltem consecutus est commodi, ut molles amores cantando mollius carmen redderet. In fine, he had need of this agreeable Diversion (d) to banish the melancholy Thoughts with which he was haunted.

(G) A Dream, which seems to be a Prediction of the Sacking of Magdebourg.] That is, of the dreadful Sacking this Town was exposed to in 1631, being taken by the Imperial Forces. Observe Mr. Morhof's Note. (e) Illud singulare in hoc viro & propemodum divinum est, ac plus quam Poeticum ingenium argurit, quod in Elegia 4. lib. 2. ad Joachimum Camerarium scripta tristissima obsidionis & expugnationis Magdeburgensis fata integro seculo prædixerit. Res omnino notatu digna, ac elegia illa pulcherrima est. Hac ille aurea carmina, quod mireris, inter armorum strepitus ipse miles scribebat. Lotichius in a Dream saw a great Town besieged, a young Woman, who called her self the Protectress of the Place, complaining of the Cruelties that should lay it waste, and reduce it to a heap of Ashes. He does not name this Town, nor know whether it was upon the Rhine, or the Danube, or the Elbe, but he believes it was upon the Elbe. However, he must have characterised Magdebourg, since this Elegy is intituled, De obsidione urbis Magdeburgensis. There's doubtless something surprizing in it, though it must be owned, that the Condition the Poet was then in, diminishes the Wonder. He (f) was in the Army of the League of Smalcalde, probably under great Apprehensions of the good Successes of Charles V. His Imagination extended it self (g) to all the possible Consequences of Charles V's Victory. Possibly this Supposition might have intermixt with his Dream, that the Emperor would severely chastise Magdebourg, if the Confederate Army was beaten. The Poet immediately prepared to deplore the Miseries of a stormed Town; and one of his Fictions was, that the Tutelar Goddess (h) makes her Complaints, &c. When we awake, we easily confound the Images, because we forget their Order: Those escape us which were the Bond of Connexion; and hence we imagine, that the Ideas, which we our selves have link'd to one another, came all at once by Inspiration. 'Tis almost as easie to form to ones self Systems about general Affairs sleeping as waking; abundance of People having read great News in a Gazette, draw an admirable Plan of the Consequences it will produce. In a Quarter of an Hour, they conduct the Victors to the Capital City of the vanquished; they fancy to themselves Thrones turned topsy-turvy, and all Europe changing its Face at once; and if they are Poets or Orators, they add to all this the Sketches of a fine Poem, or eloquent Oration; they have the Figures ready in their Heads, and represent to themselves the very Mien and Words of the Deputies, who come to deliver up the Keys of a Town. We may be certain, that all the Day long, such things as these are rolling in some Peoples Brains: The Soul, when they sleep, is no less exercised with respect to these Cimera's; they draw Schemes reaching quite out of sight. Such was the Scene perhaps that Lotichius acted that Night. I have given the Reason why, when he waked, he might not perceive that he was the Author of this Train of Visions, as they who build Castles in the Air whilst awake, know and perceive themselves to be the true Authors of 'em, without the assistance of any Foreign Intelligence striking in with 'em to reveal Futurities; the true reason why they draw no Presages from 'em.

This is an Observation that might be made upon admitting Mr. Morhof's supposition, namely, that Lotichius dream'd this Dream before the Battel of Mulberg, in which the Confederate Army was beaten by Charles V. But this Supposition having no Foundation, I shall chuse rather to say, that Lotichius dream'd thus, during the Siege of Magdebourgh, in the year 1550 or 1551. It was easie to imagine that Maurice, Elector of Saxony, who commanded the Siege for the Emperor, would take the Town, and treat it cruelly. Lotichius possessed with this Fear, imagined the sacking of the Town in a Dream, and fell into Poetick Fictions. He failed not to introduce the tutelar Goddess, who made Protestations of her Innocence and Fidelity, tho' the Emperor expelled her from her Habitation, &c. On the Morrow he found this Subject so fit to be handled in Verse, that he made an Elegy upon it, intitling it, De Obsidione

(a) Beza in Epistola dedicatoria Poemat.
(b) Puellas quoque facile amavit bellas ac bonas formas mortales ac Claudiam quidem primum suam multo carmine celebratam, mihi vero non incognitam, subfuscam, non informem nec inamabilem puellam: deinde Callirhoen, alteram Celtiberam tenicatam, formosam: hinc pectoris custodem, religiosam nimis Italam Panaridem: ac postremum non vero nomine dictam Phyllida pulchram Nicrogenam. Hagius ubi supra.
(c) Id. ib.
(d) Oblectationem eam animi honestam ad seniendas animi curas, molestias, ægritudines duceret maximam. Quod poeta ipse de se se nostur professetur. Mollia sæpe quidem deducere carmina tento, Non tamen ut puris auribus illa probem. Sat mihi sit vigilas interdum fallere curas, Solamenque malis grata sit arte meis.
(e) Morhofius, Polyhist. lib. 1. c. 19. pag. 226.
(f) I speak according to the Supposition of Mr Morhof, which is not the most certain.
(g) Mark well his 5th. Verse. Somnia sunt CURAS hæc imitata meas.
(h) See what shall be cited from Balzac, in the Remark K. the Article Thomas(Paul) cation, that can fully ſatisfie. It's thought ſtrange, that Julius Cæſar Scaliger ſhould no ſidiens urbis Magdeburgenſis. I believe indeed, he imagined there was ſomething Prophetical in this Dream, which proceeded from his not remembering the Beginning of the Scene, and not knowing that he had ſpun all theſe Viſions himſelf, as the Newſmongers do theirs, (a) in ſtarting all the Conſequences they are pleaſed to ſuppoſe to Sieges and Battels. Now as the Siege of Magdebourgh was terminated, not by taking of the Town, but by a Treaty of Peace, Lotichius doubtleſs diſabuſed himſelf; he diſcover'd the Vanity of his Dream, but his Verſes were preſerv'd and publiſh'd after his Death. But who knows whether he did not feign that he dream'd this? Do not Poets daily give themſelves this Liberty? Having well conſidered this, I think it more probable, that he did not dream what he related; but, like other Poets, feigned he dream'd thus.

Since the firſt Edition of this Work, I have been informed by a Letter from Mr. Kortholt (b), of ſome Particulars, which oblige me to call this matter over-again. In the firſt Place, it is certain, that the Elegy De obſidione urbis Magdeburgenſis, is not found in the Collection of Poems, which Lotichius printed at Paris at Vaſcoſan's, the Epiſtle Dedicatory whereof, is dated from Paris the 13th. of February 1551. If he dated it according to the Style at that time received in France, it was in February 1552. He knew then, that the Town of Magdebourg was in no Apprehenſions; being delivered from the Siege by a Treaty of Peace in (c) November 1551. If he dated it beginning the Year with January, the Siege of Magdebourg ſtill continued, and was far from being ended. Whatever Style he made uſe of, it's plain, he ought not to have publiſhed the Poem in Diſpute at that time; the Elegy, I ſay, in which he is ſuppoſed to ſpeak of the Sacking and Burning of Magdebourg, and though we ſhould be certain, that he had already compoſed it, we ſhould yet believe he would have been very cautious of inſerting it in the Edition of his Latin Poems. In the 2d. Place, Mr. Kortholt, who underſtands Poetry very well, and who has collated the ſeveral Editions of Lotichius's Verſes, finds a great Difference betwixt that of Paris 1551, and thoſe that followed the Death of the Author. He finds Lotichius but a mean Poet in the Paris Edition of his Poems, compared to what they were after they had been corrected, and in Compariſon of the new Poems added to Camerarius's Edition. In a Word, he finds, that Lotichius in 1551, was not capable of compoſing ſo excellent an Elegy as that de Obſidione Urbis Magdeburgenſis. We muſt conclude then, that it was made when this Town was out of Danger, and therefore the Dream that threatned it with an intire Deſtruction, can't be explained by the Hypotheſis I have alledged. 'Tis a matter has Relation to the Time to come, and conſequently to the Sacking of Magdebourg in 1631, as Mr. Morhof pretends. To this I have two Replies to make.

I. Firſt I ſay, that Lotichius writ this Elegy whilſt he bore Arms, or compoſed it during the Siege of Magdebourg, and that either in Conſequence of a Dream, or under the Fiction of a pretended Dream, he ought not to have inſerted it amongſt the Pieces which he publiſhed at Paris in 1551. I have given the Reaſons for this already. But he was not obliged to burn it; he therefore probably preſerved it, and having afterwards given it ſome new Touches, and poliſhed it over and over, he worked it to that Perfection which he was not able to give it when his Poems were firſt Printed. Age, Study and Labour had improved his Muſe; he changed into an excellent Elegy, what at firſt was but an indifferent Poem. It was found among his Papers after his Death as he had perfected it at ſeveral Reviews, and it was ſent to his Friend Camerarius to be printed (d) with his other Writings. Theſe are very probable Conjectures, and therefore thoſe I propoſed in my firſt Edition, loſe none of their Weight. Poets naturally fond of their own Works, won't willingly deſtroy what they have once writ; but carefully preſerve it, even when the Occaſion is paſſed; eſpecially when they perſwade themſelves, that they have treated a Subject well, and that it was very capable of Decorations. Mr. Menage having heard that Mr. Corneille was dead, compoſed an Epitaph for him, which he thought a good one, and would not loſe the Publick Honour of it, even after he knew that Mr. Corneille was alive. He preſerved this Piece ſo carefully, as to inſert it in the Editions of his Poems, and even after his Enemy Cotin had ſeverely rallied him for it. Here follows his Raillery, which I believe contains a falſe Suppoſition; for I am perſwaded, the News of Mr. Corneille's Death was actually ſpread abroad. 'Tis above Ten Years ago, ſays Cotin (e), ſince Menage made Corneille's Epitaph, though Corneille be not yet dead, having collected out of Greek and Latin Poets, abundance of Thoughts upon the Death of a great Poet, he killed his good Friend to exhauſt his common Place, he made him die of a Peripneumony. Let it be obſerved, that the Subject of Lotichius's Elegy was very proper to inſpire the Author with Compaſſion; it is favourable to the Poetick Art, and therefore the Preſervation of Magdebourg was not likely to ſuppreſs that Piece of Poetry.

II. But let us grant, that Lotichius had written nothing like this, when this great Town was out of Trouble, and the Peace of Paſſau had ſecured the Proteſtants of Germany; yet muſt we however in the ſecond Place ſay, that the Dream of the Author has nothing extraordinary in it. We muſt remember one thing, which can't well be called into Queſtion, which is, that Poets frequently work upon Subjects of pure Invention; they deſcribe Shipwrecks which they have not ſeen, and which never were; they feign as they think fit, Times, Places, Conſequences and Incidents. They do the ſame with reſpect to the taking of Towns. Theſe are Subjects, which can exerciſe their Talents to Advantage; they make Choice of 'em, not only when they are awake, but alſo when they Sleep. If their Nocturnal Viſions lead 'em to a Beſieged Town, they fancy a general Aſſault, the beſieged forced to give Ground; the Town carried, plunder'd, burnt, &c. If it be a Town, which they are greatly concerned for, their Poetical Fancy is heated; they deplore the Misfortune, they form the Draught of a Poem; and when wearied with the Dream, they awake, and know not whether it be a natural, or an extraordinary one; however they take Pen in Hand, and give a Poetical Deſcription of the Viſion. It ſometimes happens, that they have ſuch ſort of Viſions, only becauſe the Day before, they had meditated upon the Deſcription of the Storming of a Town. Experience informs us, that thoſe Objects which poſſeſs our Thoughts in the Day-time, commonly (f) preſent themſelves to our Minds the Night following; and there are thoſe who ſooner light on a fine turn of Poetick Thought, whilſt they Sleep, than when they are awake. Their Dreams are vehement, and move and agitate the Spirits with a prodigious Force. They find themſelves, as they awake, in an aſtoniſhing Commotion, they perceive ſomething wonderful in it, which they think deſerves cultivating, and immediately fall to verſifying. If you examine all theſe Things well, you'll find a Foundation for the Conjecture upon the natural Cauſes of Lotichius's Elegy.

Let's go on with our Conjectures. There are few who have not obſerved, that they have often dreamt of the ſame thing; as that they were attacked by Robbers, that Lightning fell into their Chamber, that a Mutiny happened in a Town, &c. The return of the ſame Dreams is more common, when the Objects make a lively Impreſſion, and when the Conſtitution of the Brain gives way to their making well-purſued and deep-printed Tracks. 'Tis probable, that during the Siege of Magdebourg, Lotichius dreamed a Dream, that repreſented the ſacking this Town, and purſuant to it, fell to making Verſes the next Day, or a few Days after. If the Town had been taken and ſacked, he had publiſhed

(a) See the Deſcription which Mr. de la Bruyere. Caracteres de ceſiecle, au titre du Soverain, p. m. 371. and the following, has given us of the Character of theſe Gentlemen, whether in an over Sanguine or, a deſponding Mood.

(b) Schaſtian. de que ſupra, pag. 1870. letre b.

(c) See David Chytræus, in Saxonia, lib. 17. p. m. 441.

(d) Conſult the laſt Letter of the 5*th. Book of* Joachim Camerarius.

(e) Cotin Menagerie pag. 31. Edit. de la Haie, 1666.

(f) Apply to this what Lucretius ſays, lib. 4. v. 959. Et quo quiſque fere ſtudio devinctus adhæret, Aut quibus in rebus multum ſumus antè morati, Atque in qua ratione fuit contenta magis Mens. In ſomnis eadem plerunque videmur obire: Cauſidici cauſas agere, &c.

no where have (H) praiſed Lotichius. We ſhou'd have ſome reaſon to wonder at it, had not Lotichius's Reputation been chiefly founded upon the Works that were not printed till after Scaliger's Death; but this Critick's ſilence is not in reality ſurprizing, ſince the [a] firſt Editions of Lotichius's Poems are much inferiour to that which it was impoſſible for him to have any Hand in.

[a] That of Paris 1551. in 8. that of Leipſic 1552.

LOTICHIUS (Chriſtian) younger Brother to the preceding, diſcovered in his Infancy no leſs Diſpoſitions to ſtudy, than he. Therefore his Uncle the Abbot, having firſt cauſed him to be diligently inſtructed in his School of [illegible]ſtaire, ſent him afterwards to Wittemberg, to ſtudy Philoſophy there, and eſpecially Divinity. It was not in this Univerſity, but in that of Heidelberg that he took his Maſter of Arts Degree in 1549. after which his Uncle gave him the Charge of his Church and College. Whilſt he was thus Vicar to the Abby, he was deſired by ſeveral Learned Men, to collect all the Poems of Lotichius Secundus, and publiſh them, with an exact Hiſtory of the Life and Studies of his illuſtrious Brother. He was working upon it, when the Death of the Abbot Lotichius, his Uncle, interrupted his Labours in 1567. It was in his Power to ſucceed him in his Abbey; for they who had the right to elect, declared for him; but he freely reſign'd his Pretenſions to his Brother-in-law Sigefroy Hettenus, Miniſter of the Church of Grocningen. He could not have long enjoy'd the Dignity of Abbot, if he had accepted it, for he died in 1568. He pretended to Poetry with tolerable Succeſs. A Collection of his Poems was printed [b] in 1602. by the Care of John Peter Lotichius, his Grandſon, who joyned 'em with his own. I have not found in Freherus, who ſupplies me with this Article, that Lotichius Secundus, and our Chriſtian Lotichius's Poems, were ever printed together.

[b] Draudius, Bibliotheca pag. 1573. Edit. 1625.

[c] See Moreri's Dictionary, printed in Holland affirms this in the Citation from Freherus.

LOTICHIUS (John Peter) Grandſon to the former, made himſelf known by the great Number of Books publiſhed by him in Verſe and Proſe. He was a Phyſician by Profeſſion, and well vers'd in Human Literature. The Commentary upon Petronius, publiſh'd by him at Frankford in 1629. anſwers (Y) theſe Two Qualities. The Recompence of his Dedication (Z) of his Epigrams, was the pooreſt imaginable. He was invited to Vintell, to a Profeſſorſhip of Phyſick.

[d] See Sainte Marthe in Elog. Macrini.

LOUDUN, in the upper Poictou, upon the Confines of Anjou and Touranine, and the Dioceſs of Poitiers, is a very Ancient Town, tho' we muſt not give credit to thoſe [c] who aſcribe the founding of it to Julius Cæſar. It became conſiderable in the liſhed 'em doubtleſs about the ſame time; but hearing in his Travels the News of the Peace, he dropped his Poem. We may ſuppoſe at Three or Four Years end, the ſame Dream returned; the Traces it had left the firſt time, formed a Ghannel, the Mouth of which was kept open by the Tumultuous and irregular Agitation of the Animal Spirits; but this Irregularity hindered not their running along the ſame Tracks, and thus the view of the Sacking of Magdebourg was renewed. Lotichius thinking it perhaps Myſterious, new-poliſhed his Verſes, amplified 'em, and put 'em in the Condition which the Publick has ſeen 'em in. I don't know but he might have fancy'd from his Love for Magdebourg, that this new Dream was Prophetical and Supernatural; but in my Opinion, he ought not to have thought it more ſo now than at the firſt Time. Should a Poet only as a Trial of Wit make an Elegy at this time, reſembling that of Lotichius, it might well enough happen before Eighty Years come about, that the Town he ſung of in a Frolick, may be bombarded and levelled to the Ground.

[c] Guy Patin, lettre 112. du 1. tome. pag. 433. It's dated the 1. of April 165[illegible]

(H) That Julius Cæſar Scaliger has not praiſed Lotichius.] You'll find at the end of the Text to this Article, the Reaſons why we are not to wonder at Scaliger's Silence. However, let us hear Mr. Morhof's Complaint. (a) Fuit Phœnix Poetarum Germaniæ Lotichius, omnibus exteris ſi non ſuperior, certe æqualis. Hujus tamen vel ipſis Germanis pene ignotum nomen eſt: exteri nullam ejus mentionem faciunt. J. C. Scaliger cum cenſuram Poetarum Germanorum inſtituit in Hypercritico ſuo ne verbulum quidem de hoc noſtro, qui tamen omnibus cæteris erat anteferendus.

(a) Morhof. ubi ſupra pag. 225.

(Y) Anſwers theſe Two Qualities.] For he there explains by it ſelf, whatever is in Petronius, relating to Phyſick; and afterwards, in another part, gives Critical Philoſophical Notes upon the ſame Author. He appears to have more Reading, and a better Memory, than Penetration and Judgment. See what an Opinion Goldaſt had of this Commentary: (b) Mitto tibi Lotichii commentaria in Petronium cum aliorum notis——videbis quantum abs tuo inſtituto ac judicio Lotichius diſſideat. Volebam hominem amicum hac occaſione ad lectionem veterum Medicorum deducere, quorum illum prorſus expertem & negligentem eſſe advertebam. Sed judicio deſtitutus nec in bonis auctoribus verſatus, nobis undiquaque compilavit quæ ad grandiendum librum conveniſſent ex Cornucopia, Calepino, Textoris Officina, Eraſmi Chiliadibus & conſimilibus ſcriptis poterat, ut tandem monſtroſum, horrendum, & inſanum magnum iſtud commentum pareret. Adeo ſibi philautia placet, ut etiam ſordes ſuas putet mera olere cinnama. This Judgment is very hard, but I think it more reaſonable than that of Guy Patin, and I admire that a Man, who was incomparably more enclined to deſpiſe Authors than eſteem them, ſhould ſpeak ſo much to the Advantage of this Commentary on Petronius. [illegible] Lotichius, formerly 'a Phyſician, and at preſent an Hiſtorian, has 'wrote Two Volumes in Folio, Rerum Germanicarum, and perhaps the third is printed; if you 'have 'em, ſend 'em me. Let me know too if he has 'reprinted his Petronius in Folio, much enlarged, 'as he deſigned long ago. This laſt is an excellent 'Book, and the Author a very Learned Man. He 'had deſigned to have reprinted it here with all his 'Augmentations in Folio; but I told him 'twas 'impoſſible, there being too many Monks, Je'ſuits, and others, Enemies to good Letters in this 'Place, who merited Indulgences by hindering ſuch 'Impreſſions.

(b) Goldaſtus, Epiſtola ad Hofmannum, inter Richterianas p. 555.

(Z) The Recompence of the Dedication of his Epigrams.] He not only dedicated 'em to Maurice, Landgrave of Heſſe, but alſo gave him a Copy of 'em with his own Hands. The Prince thanked him by an Epigram (d), and that was all the preſent he made him. This was imitating a great Emperor (e). He who furniſhes me with this Particular, ſays alſo, that he dedicated [illegible] many other Books to Princes and Re[illegible] without ever geting a Great for 'em.

(d) Nuper Doctor Lotichius ſua epigrammata illuſtriſſimo Mauritio Haſſiæ Landgravio inſcripſit, & in præſentiarum obtulit, qui ei epigramma euchariſticon honorarii loco redonavit. Goldaſtus ib. p. 561.

(e) See what Macrobius Saturnal. lib. 2. c. 4. ſub fin. ſays of Auguſtus.

(A) In the upper Poictou.] Coulon in the Index of his Book of the Rivers of France, places Loudun in Touraine. Mr. de Marolles is in the ſame Error, ſaying (f) that Loudun was part of Touraine, tho' Loudunois be in the Dioceſs of Poitiers. He ought to have ſaid that Loudun was [illegible] this Dioceſs. The truth of the Matter is, that the Election of Loudun depends on the Generality of Tours.

(f) In the Liſt of thoſe who had made him Preſents of their Books at the Worſ Ghevreau.

(B) Con-

the Civil Wars (A) as well on account of its Castle, which Lewis XIII. demolished in 1633. as for its Situation. The Duke of Anjou [a] in vain attempted to make himself Master of it in 1569. but the King of Navarre [b] reduc'd it Twenty years after with the greatest ease. There are several Convents in it: That of the Carmelites is the Rendezvous of all the Devotees, who go [c] on Pilgrimages to Notre-Dame of Recouvrance. That of the Ursulins became extreamly Famous, when in 1633. and 1634. there was so much talk of the Possession of several of these (C) Nuns. The Prote-

[a] Mezeray Françoise tome. 2. pag. 768.
[b] D'Aubigné to. 2. pag. 223.
[c] Du Chesne Antiq. de villes.
[d] Id. id.

(A) Considerable in the Civil Wars.] Here is a little Story that does honour to this Town: D'Aubigné (a) relates that in 1569. Puviaut at the Head of a Company of Sixty Men, being in sight of Auville, where the Duke of Anjou was quarter'd, saw Eighty Horsemen come forth, the Heroes of the Court, as the Guises, Brissac, Pompadour, Fervaques, Lanssac, Jarsaie Fontaine and others. He resolutely stood 'em, the Fight was obstinate, and twice renewed; but not one of Puviaut's Men quitted his Post. D'Andelot appearing with Twelve Standards obliged the Courtiers to retire, leaving Two of their Men dead upon the spot, and carrying off several wounded. They had a mind to know who they were that they had fought with: the Curate Jarsaie, who with Clermond la Barbee, and other Volunteers, gloried in following this Captain on occasions; instead of naming these Gentlemen, answered, it was the Company of Puviaut, and Lanssac replying, What the Sieurs of Loudun? most of 'em being of this Place, and of such and such Quality. The Duke of Guise cried out, Let's change this Discourse, they are all very good Gentlemen.

(a) Histoire universelle, tome. 1. pag. 392.

(C) The Possession of several Nuns of Loudun.] I have spoke amply of it (b) in another place; but I did not then know a thing which I have read a few Days ago, and which I shall relate, after having occasionally taken notice of a Fault of Father Labbé. He says (c) that in 1566. a possessed Nun of Loudun, so celebrated in Story, was dispossessed by the Holy Eucharist, in presence of above Ten Thousand Men, and amongst others, of Florimond de Remond, who soon after, of a Huguenot became a Catholick. Instead of Loudun, he should have said Laon, which is an Episcopal Town in Picardy; it was there that Florimond de Remond saw this famous possessed Person, as he relates in Two (d) places of his Works. Mr. de Sponde (e) relates this Fact, and uses the Word Laudunum, which probably led Father Labbé to believe, that this Adventure happened at Loudun. Mr. Moreri has committed the same Fault in the Article of Florimond de Remond.

(b) In the Article Grandier.
(c) Labbe Chronolog. Françoise, tome 5. pag. 783.
(d) In his Book of Anticbrist, and in the Work of the Birth & Growth of Heresy. li. 2. chap. 12.
(e) Spondanus, Annal. Eccles. ad ann. 1566. n. 31.

'Tis affirmed in Mr. Artagnan's Memoirs, that Grandier was one of Cardinal Richelieu's unhappy Victims. (f) 'Some Body had perswaded him that 'he was a Sorcerer, and had possessed the Nuns of 'Loudun with a Legion of Devils. Upon his 'Accusation the Sieur de Laubardamont, at 'the Head of his Delegates, against the Opinion 'of a great many of his Judges, condemned him 'to be burnt alive. He frankly told 'em, to 'oblige them to subscribe to so injust a Sentence, 'That if they opposed it so vigorously as Men 'of Honour ought to do, they should have a Jury 'impannel'd upon them, who would soon convict 'em of being Accomplices in his Witchcrafts, 'since he was no more a Sorcerer than they might 'be. He was much more in the right in talking 'to 'em after this manner, than in resolving to 'put an innocent Man to Death. All poor 'Grandier's Crime was his Debauching these 'Nuns; and if he had possessed their Bodies 'with any Devil, it could be no other than 'that of Impurity. Now as these Judges had 'been to see these Nuns as well as he, and might 'as easily have lain with 'em, for they were 'very far from being Vestals, they began to 'consider what they had best do; but being at 'last prevailed upon, they chose to shew them-'selves unjust in condemning an innocent Person, 'rather than hazard themselves by desiring to 'save him; for after all, they might have been 'accused of Sorcery as well as he, and no one 'knows what might have happened, his Emi-'nence being as innocent as he was. I am far 'from warranting the truth of this, or can I perswade my self that Laubardamont talked at this rate to the Judges. He was a wicked Man, you'll tell me; transeat, be it so; but that had not sufficed Cardinal Richelieu, he must have had sense and address besides, but what can be more improbable than to say, That a President of a Commission is ingenious in wickedness, and yet speaks as this Man is made to speak in Mr. d'Artagnan's Memoirs. This, in my Opinion, is foisted in, either by him who has put these Memoirs in order, or rather by the Corrector of the Press. Be it how it will, Mr. d'Artagnan gives no great credit to the Story; for at the time of this Devildome of Loudun, the Figure he made, and the Places he frequented, could only afford him the most uncertain and popular Reports in this matter.

(f) Memoires de Mr. d'Artagnan pag. 160. & seq. Edit. 1700

I have (g) in another place said a thing which seemed incredible to some People, which is, That the Priest Grandier found means of presenting himself in a Nuns Chamber, as an Apparition of the late Ghostly Father of the Ursulines. I must now add a Word or Two, to make this Matter more credible; nothing can be more proper for my purpose, than the Abjuration imposed within these Two years (h) upon a bare-footed Augustine, who had bin guilty of Molinosisme. He was convicted of having decieved Pere Benigne, by counterfeit Revelations: He'd fain have perswaded him, That the things he had told him on several Occasions, were true and holy; That he was a greater Saint than any in Heaven. For this he refer'd himself to St. Gaetan, and shewed himself to Pere Benigne in the Habit of this Saint. He also contriv'd false Apparitions of the Holy Virgin, and made use of artificial Illuminations, and many Changes in the Tone of his Voice. Let's set down the Words of his Abjuration: Confessasti che le Visioni succedenti erano opere tue, esperimente le Revelationi del Padre Benigno, mentre tu gl' apparisti con l'habito di S. Gaetano, con un bellissimo e candidissimo giglio in mano, e barba postiticcia. Il tutto facesti e operasti per far gli credere che le cose dette da te in piu e diversi occasioni erano veridiche e sante e che tu eri un santo maggior di tutti, i santi che stanno in cielo. Facesti apparire la Beatissima Vergine à forza di lume contrafacendo la voce hora in un modo, e hora nell' altro, e per questi tuoi e altri misteri il sudetto Padre Benigno credeva fermamente a queste tue visioni, e visitationi celesti, e che dio non le concedeva se non a te puramente. Mr. Silvester (i) returning from Rome, communicated to me a Manuscript Copy of the Act of the Inquisition, in which are these Words, it's intitled, Ristretto de l'Abjura semipublica seguita nel' sant' Officio in persona di Fra Pietro Paulo di S. Gio: Evangelista Romano al Sacello di Casa Granisi, in eta d'anni quaranta, inquisito altre volte nella Cita di Napoli, e in quella di Spoleti. I pass over the Infamies this Monk was convicted of, as a Quietist, and the abominable Impurities he confessed he had committed with his Votaries; they make ones Hair stand on end, and let us see at the same time, that since the Inquisition was satisfy'd with condemning a bare-footed Austin, only to perpetual Imprisonment, it ought to be acknowledg'd on some Occasions a Tribunal of extraordinary Clemency and Gentleness. But these Reflections apart, I content my self to say, that by Facts undoubted and judicially attested, we know that the Secret of representing the dead, and counterfeiting Apparitions of the Holy Virgin, is a thing known and practised in the Monasteries. Why then should we deny that the Curate of Loudun appeared to a Nun, as her deceased Confessor? I could never perswade my self, that all the Stories of the Apparitions of the Holy Virgin,

(g) In the Remark K of the Article Grandier.
(h) This is writ in 1700.
(i) Confer qua supra pag. 1776. lettre f.

A Confirmation of what has been said of a pretended Apparition of the Confessor of the Nuns of Loudun.

Proteſtants about this time loſt the College (D) which they had founded there. The laſt National Synod was held in this Town, from the 10th of November, 1659. to the 10th of January, 1660. Loudun has been the Birth-place of ſeveral Learned Men, as Salmon Macrinus, Scevola de St. Marthe, Julius Cæſar Bulenger, Iſmael Bouillaud, Urbane Chevreau, &c. Some call it Juliodunum in Latin; but (E) that's not it's true Name. The Geographer du Val [a] was in the wrong, to ſay, That it [redacted] the Title of a Dutchy; if he had conſulted Mr. Moreri, he would not have [redacted]eſſed himſelf in the Preſent Tenſe. That Lady of the Family of Rohan, in [redacted]e Favour Moreri ſays, the Dutchy was Erected, was the Lady de la Garnache, [redacted]hom I have ſpoken in her Place.

[a] In his Treatiſe of France pag. 144.

LEWIS VII. King of France, was Crowned at Rheims [b] the a[redacted] October 1131, and Reigned with his Father till the Firſt of Auguſt 1137, and [redacted]wards by himſelf to September 1180. He Married Eleonora, Daughter and Heireſs to William, the IXth. of the Name, Duke of Guienne, in the Year 1137 [c]. This Princeſs was a great Fortune, both on Account of her Beauty and of the fine Provinces her Father had left her; but 'tis pretended ſhe was very Lewd, and that her Husband had very good Reaſons to diſſolve the Marriage, if Human Prudence could have ſuffered him to Renounce the Poſſeſſion of Eleonora's great Eſtates by this Divorce. All Hiſtorians blame him for being more Jealous then Politick; for not being able in the Iſſue to bear the weight of his Jealouſy, and the diſhonour he pretended his Wife's irregular Life had brought upon him, he [d] earneſtly Sued for a Divorce, and obtained it by the Sentence of the Prelates of the Kingdom, Aſſembled at Baugency, in the Year 1152. He did what Marcus Aurelius would have done in the like Caſe; but he had Acted a wiſer part (A) if he had Imitated that Emperor [redacted] in Conſideration of the Dowry, ſtifled all Thoughts of a Separation. He [redacted]d to the Divorced Princeſs all that belonged to her; and thereby put his moſt dangerous Neighbour in a Capacity of Oppreſſing France; for the King of England [e] preferring the Intereſts of

[b] Mezerai, abregé

[c] Id. ib. Pag. 557.

[d] Id. ib. pag. 570.

[e] This was Henry II. He was not King as yet.

† That is, are not always the Cauſe; for on the Whole I don't deny that they may be ſometimes, or that the impreſſion which the bare relation or reading of Stories of Apparitions; or an artificial Viſion makes, may not produce the firm Perſwaſion of other Viſions, in which there's no Artifice at all.

gin, with which abundance of Books are ſtuffed, are either Fictions or Deceptions of ſenſe; the[redacted] a great deal of reality in theſe Stories. The [redacted] poſtors perſonally enter the Chambers, and actually pronounce Words under what Name and Figure they pleaſe: Vapours and Fits of the Mother (†) don't make the Nuns ſee and hear this or that. Their Senſes are really ſtricken with the Objects; all the Deception conſiſts in their attributing to the Divine Favour, what only depends on Human Artifice. The Engaſtrimythes, thoſe who ſpeak from their Bellies, and who ſo well manage the Air in their Lungs, that their Voice ſeems to proceed from a Cave or a Garret, are very fit for theſe Myſteries; they are very ſerviceable People; by their means many are made to believe, that the Dead ſuffer much in Purgatory, and come to petition their Heirs to cauſe Maſſes to be ſaid for 'em. Mind the Exceptions which I hint to in the Marginal Note. (†)

(D) The College which they had founded there.] The Hiſtorian of the Edict of Nantes relates, (a) That the Reformed of Loudun had loſt their College in the year 1635. and that Laubardamont had Lodged the pretended Poſſeſſed Women there. After that they were never able to get their Poſſeſſions reſtored, not to indemnify themſelves of what it had coſt them; but the Court being at Loudun, in 1650. they applied themſelves to the Preſident Mole, who was then Keeper of the Seals. The reſult was, that at the deſire of the Queen they were contented with a Summ much below the Price of their College, which was offered 'em in the Name of the Urſulines. This Summ pretty nearly equall'd the Value of the fourth Part of the Buildings, and was not one Half of the Intereſt. See in the ſame Author (b) the Treachery made uſe of to deprive 'em of the Exerciſe of their Religion.

(a) Hiſt. de l'edit de Nantes to. 3. liv. 3. pag. 145.

(b) Tome 3. part. 2. pag. and the following ad ann. 1684. 1685.

(E) Juliodunum, but that's not its true Name.] Mr. Valois the younger, ſays (c) that Macrinus and Scevola de St. Marthe, were the firſt, or Two of the firſt, who by a Poetical Licenſe called Loudun Juliodunum, to make their Country participate in the Glory of Julius Cæſar. According to him, its Name is Caſtrum Laudunum, that of Laſdunum is later; ſome have alſo given it the Name of Lacidunum, Landunum, and Lodunum; William le Breton has given it this laſt Name, in the 8th Book of his Philippeides.

(c) Hadrian. Valeſius, Notit. Galliar. pag. 265. & 450.

(A) If he had imitated Marcus Aurelius.] When it was repreſented to this Emperor, that ſince he would not put his Wife to Death, whoſe Debaucheries were arrived [redacted] the utmoſt of Infamy, he ought to divo[redacted]her: He [redacted]red, But if I do that, I muſt reſtore her Portion, that is, I muſt divorce my ſelf from the Empire. (d) Fauſtinam ſatis conſtat apud Cajetam conditiones ſibi & nauticas & gladiatorias elegiſſe: de qua quum diceretur Antonino Marco, ut repudiaret, ſi non occideret, dixiſſe fertur, Si uxorem dimittimus, reddamus & dotem. Dos autem quid erat, niſi imperium quod ille ab ſocero, volente Adriano adoptatus, acceperat? This Anſwer very well became a Philoſophical Emperor. We here ſee that Marcus Aurelius knew how to reconcile theſe Two Characters. If he had kept the Empire after the Divorce, he had done an unjuſt Action, and had but ill maintained the Character of a Philoſopher. If he had choſe to be reduced to a private Condition, rather than be a Cuckold, he had ſhewn a contempt of Greatneſs and Authority, and ſo [redacted]ou'd have forfeited his Character of Emperor, [redacted] Juſtice of his Maxim was acknowledg[redacted] Burrhus, Nero's Governour; for when this P[redacted]ou'd have divorc'd Octavia, the Emperor Cla[redacted] Daughter, Burrhus (e) indeavour'd to diſſ[redacted] him from it, by telling him, That if he divorced her, he muſt reſtore her the Empire. We have here a King of France, who practiced this Principle ſo conſcientiouſly, that we may ſay he was ſcrupulous, not only beyond what a Prince ought to be, but beyond what any private Perſon would have been. To prove this, I ſhall ſet down the Words of a modern Hiſtorian, a great favourer of Eleonora. She retired, ſays he, (f) immediately into the Eſtates of Guienne, from which the King withdrew his Garriſons, without retaining any one Place; tho' having Two Daughters by that Marriage, which he kept with him, it ſeems he might under Pretence of Securing their Pretenſions to the Succeſſion, have ſeized on the Forteresſes of the Dutchy. Poſſibly he might have acted thus out of Policy, to prevent the Revolt of Guienne, where the People Turbulent, Jealous of their Rights, would never have ſuffered him to make himſelf Maſter to the Prejudice of their Lawful Sovereign; ſo that he judged it [redacted]ent eſt to wait till the Death of this Princeſs, [redacted]ould put her Daughters in Poſſeſſion. Perhaps too it was a pure Nicety of Conſcience; not believing he could juſtly retain the Eſtates of a Princeſs he had Divorced. [redacted]ides he had lately loſt two of the Ableſt Men of the Kingdom; the Abbot Suger, and the Con[redacted]rmandois, who died in the ſame Year; and [redacted]ey had the whole Management of the Kingdom, whilſt he never concerned himſelf with it, he of his Grandeur before the Shame (B) of Marrying a Divorced and Disgraced Princess, went as we may say Post * to Bourdeaux, when she was offered to him after the Separation, and presently concluded the Marriage. He Sacrificed without any difficulty, and even with a great deal of Pleasure, the Nicety of a [illegible] of Honour to Ambition? The King of France had taken Eleonora along with [illegible]nto Asia, where, as if Europe were not a large Field enough for her Gallantri[illegible]s said, (C) she compleated her Ruine, being little Affected with the Sanctit[illegible]he Places she went to see, in Company of Princes Devoted to the Crusade.

(d) Capitolinus in Marco Aurelio cap. 19. p. m. 362. tom. [redacted]

(e) [redacted] ἀναλαβεῖν αὐτὴν, ἢ ἀπολιπεῖν τὴν ἀρχήν. Burrho illi quidem reſiſtente, & pr[redacted] ben[redacted] la[redacted] di[redacted] illi[redacted]en-te: dotem igitur ei, hoc eſt, principatum redde. Xiphilin. in Nerone.

(f) Mr. de Larrey, in his Heritiere de Guienne pag. 60. ad ann. 1152.

* Le Pere de Nicome, ag. 61.

he was in as great a perplexity at their Death, as a Man whom his Guides forsake in the midst of a Forest. So much it imports a Sovereign to be timely Instructed in the Interests of his St[illegible] and to govern by his own Lights, and not [illegible] of his Ministers. However, Queen Elonor[illegible] very happy, that Lewis VII. being more a Monk than a King, listened to the Scruples of his Conscience, rather then the Motives of Ambition. I have retrenched nothing from this Passage; there's a Justness of Thought runs through the whole, proper to Instruct the Reader. Another Modern Writer Reasons upon the Motives of Lewis VII. without intermingling any Scruple of Conscience. Here's what he says: 'Lewis being returned from 'the Holy Land, had [illegible]annulled his Marri- 'age with Eleonora of [illegible]ne, under Pretence 'that they were Re[illegible] but indeed to punish 'this Queen, for a susp[illegible] Gallantry of hers in 'the East, with a Turk named Saladine, and for other 'Debaucheries, too publickly acted to be kept a Secret. 'Pure Discontent put him upon this Divorce, 'with so little precaution, that against all the 'Rules of P[illegible] he sent back Eleonora into her 'own Cou[illegible] which he restored to her; no[illegible] 'thinking p[illegible]aps, that either there was any M[illegible] 'so venturous as to Marry a Princess he had Di- 'vorced, or any Prince so little Nice, as to take 'a Disgraced Woman, by whom he had had two 'Daughters. The Event shewed he was mistaken. 'Henry, then Duke of Normandy, overlook'd this 'Scruple, to despite Lewis, and add Guienne to so 'many other fine Territories which he possessed 'in France; by which he saw himself in a fair 'way to be one Day as powerful as the King'. Add to this a Passage of Mezerai, which I cite in the following Remark.

(a) Pere d'Orleans, History of the Revolution in England, tom. 1. pag.

For any thing farther, I pretend not to draw a Parallel betwixt Faustina and Queen Eleonora; the greatest Detractor can't say that of the latter, which History says of Faustina. She went her self to chuse her Gallants on the Sea-shoar (b), amongst Watermen and Mariners, and that because they commonly [illegible]naked. My meaning's easily understood.

(b) Cujus (M. Aurelii Antonini) divina omnia domi militiæque facta consultaque: quæ imprudentia regendæ conjugis attaminavit [illegible] in [illegible]m p[illegible]iæ p[illegible]e- rat, [illegible] in Campania sedens amœna littorum obsideret ad legendos ex muticis, quia plerumque nudi agunt, aptiores. Aurel. Victor in Cæsaribus, p. m. 131.

(B) Before the S[illegible] Marrying a Divorced and disgraced Princ[illegible] A Passage of Mezerai will inform us of two things which will amaze good Men, and Men of Honour; the one will be Surprized, that the King of France should defer so much to the Severe Laws of the Gospel, and the others, that a Presumptive Heir of England, should not defer enough to the Laws of Humane Honour: (c) 'Lewis VII. being returned from 'the Holy Land was willing to get rid of his 'Wicked Wife, though he had had two Daughters 'by her, Mary and Alix. To this end having declared to the Pope, that she was related to him 'in a prohibited Degree, he assembled a Council 'at Baugency, where the Bishops being secretly 'advertised of the true Cause of this Divorce, 'pronounc'd the Marriage Null: Eleonora having 'as passionately desired it as he, because said she, 'he was more a Monk than a King. And truely 'it was well for her that he was; for if he had 'not been somewhat Monkish, he would have 'treated [illegible]er in another manner, and not 'have[illegible] Conscientious, as to restore her 'Guienne [illegible]d Poitou; but have Confiscated 'em 'for her Crime, and for the rest have granted her 'the Favour of her Life, if he had thought fit. 'But we need not wonder that he committed 'such a horrid Solecism in point of Polic[illegible] in 'which he had little Experience, having [illegible]ys 'trusted the Administration, in a word, all [illegible]o- 'vernment and Management of Affairs to his [illegible]er, 'the Abbot Suger, who dying the Year bef[illegible] had 'left him as much bewildred, as a Man who 'loses his Guide in a Desert and unknown Coun- 'try. Most honest Men will think this Scrupulous Restitution strange, and Men of Honour 'will, besides, wonder to see that Henry, to whom 'Stephen having no Children, had bequeathed 'the Kingdom of England, should Marry 'this Princess, whose Debauchery was so 'publick, that the King could not think 'any private Gentleman would have had the meanness to dishonour his Family with her.

(c) Mezerai, Hist of France Vol. 2. p. 103.

(C) Into Asia, where 'tis said she compleated her Ruine.] Pere d'Orleans had been telling us, that she was suspected of a Gallantry with a Turk, named Saladin. This wants a little Explication here, such as this Queen's Apologist has given. During Lewis VII's abode at Antioch, the Queen (d) writ to Saladin for the Liberty of one of her Relations, whom she loved much, and back'd her Letter with a considerable Summ for his Ransome . . . (e). He granted the Queen the Liberty of her Relation, without taking the Ransom, and gave a very Ingenious and Civil Answer to her Letter. The Prisoner was the Bearer of it, and gave it the Queen, saying any thing to the King. He often of Saladin's Generosity to the Queen, and every where praised his genteel Carriage, and great Merit with such Exaggerations as are natural to those who speak of a Benefactor. The King was advertised of it, and was willing to know the Circumstances of the Adventure. The Secret the Queen had made of her Negotiation with Saladin look'd Suspicious, and the proceeding of the Sultan seemed so extraordinary for a Turk, that he could not believe his Generosity was Disinterested. He thought an Adventurer such as Saladin was, and Head of the Robbers, such as the Turks then were, incapable of so generous an Action, had he not designed to reprize himself by something more advantageous than the Ransome he had refused. He made no long Enquiry what might be his Design. What was told him of the Genteelness and Bravery of Saladine, of the Letter the Queen had written to him, and of the Answer he had given her, made him look upon the Queen as a Woman who had betray'd him, and who had settled a Criminal Commerce with Saladine. He made no Reflection upon the distance of Places, nor the Quality of the Persons which render'd this Commerce impossible, but fancy'd that this Sultan might come disguis'd to Antioch, and that the Queen saw him at her Uncles. Add to this, that this Princess provok'd by his Suspicions, took no Care to Cure him of 'em; but push'd on by her Uncle, who was resolv'd to Revenge a Repulse the King had given him, instead of a meek Behaviour and Complaisance, expressed a great Contempt for him, and proposed the dissolving their Marriage, which the Relation she said, betwixt 'em made unlawful. Then it was, that the King feared, she would quit him the first Opportunity, to follow her Gallant, and 'twas the fear he had of this, that made him send her away in a hurry from Antioch, not doubting after such a Proposition, but she had formed the Design. This is what History informs us concerning this Adventure, which might give occasion to the Jealousies of so Weak and Suspicious a Prince as Lewis VII. but which cannot justify the Calumnies, with which most Historians have blacked this Queen's Innocence.

(d) De Larrey ubi supra. pag. 45.

(e) De Larrey ubi supra, pag. 46.

I grant with Mr. de Larry, that the Calumnies founded on this Adventure, as if Saladine (f) had actually lain with Queen Eleonora, are frivolous; but I don't think with him, that Lewis VII. betray'd any Symptoms of a Weak and Suspicious Prince in being perswaded there was a Mystery of Iniquity in the Case; the most Resolute and the greatest Prince would have had a just Occasion to be alarmed

(f) That's to say, the Conqueror Saladin.

Cruſade. I ſhall ſet down (D) what Brantome ſays of it. The Diſcontents ſhe gave her Husband in that Cruſade, were not the leaſt ſenſible Diſgraces that Expedition expoſed him to. St. Bernard had not (E) promiſed this ill Succeſs; on the contrary, he had fed him with Hopes of great Victories; and was ſo little daſhed at the Murmurs raiſed againſt him, that had it not been for Perſons leſs zealous, and conſequently more capable of reaſoning aright upon the Conſequences, he had ſtill engaged in a ſecond Expedition. Lewis had reaſon to repent all his Life, of the Fault he had committed, in ſuffering the Inheritance of the Duke of Guienne to come into the Hands of the Engliſh. To oppoſe the King of England, he was forced to take a Conduct moſt unjuſt in it ſelf, and of pernicious Examples to all Kings; which was to excite this Prince's Sons to rebel againſt their Father, and to protect 'em in their Rebellion. This he did ſo faintly, and with ſo little Succeſs, that he contributed more to the Glory of his Enemy, than his Prejudice. Eleonora was very much diſſatisfied

- See the Remark C.

med. The moſt reſerved Hiſtorians acknowledge that this Princeſs was (a) wanton, and burnt (b) with Luſt and Ambition. Some Months after her Divorce, ſhe Married Henry Duke of Normandy, and Preſumptive Heir of England, a Prince Young, Ardent, Red-hair'd, and very capable of Contenting all her Deſires. She was in Love with him before ſhe was Divorced, and it was that Paſſion that prompted her to preſs the Diſſolution of her Marriage, as Mr. de Larrey (c) confeſſes. From a like Motive ſhe was likely enough to run after (d) Saladin. I have read in a Book of the Lady de Villedieu, a Paſſage that I think Remarkable, and which I ſhall ſet down without Warranting the Truth of it. (e) 'Hiſtory has ſo Celebrated this 'Princeſs's Beauty, that 'twere a vain Attempt to 'Deſcribe it. She it was that Charmed the Fierceneſs of the Brave Saladin, Commander of the '(f) Saracen Army; and who having given him 'to underſtand, that ſhe believed no Proteſtations 'of Love, but in her own Tongue forced this 'great Captain to that Surprizing effect of Love, 'as to Learn the French Tongue in Fifteen 'Days.

(a) Mezerai. Abr. Chronologique, tom. p. m. 566.
(b) Ib. ib. pag. 571.
(c) Ubi ſupra, pag. 59.
(d) Suppoſing that at this time he were Sultan, or at the Head of a great Army, which I confute below.
(e) Annales galantes, 1. partie, pag. 31. Edit. de Hollande 1677.
(f) Saladin was General of the Turks, and not of the Sarracens.

Mr. de Larrey doubtleſs will not take it ill, after I have owned with him, that there's no likelihood Eleonora had to do with the great Saladin, if I Advertiſe my Reader, that good Hiſtorians who ſpeak of this Queen's Diſorders, don't ſuppoſe her Lover was the ſame Saladin, who made himſelf ſo Famous by his Conqueſts. They ſay, then that the Perſon ſhe had an Affair with in Antioch (g) was one Saladin, a Baptized Turk. Others, without Specifying the Converſion of this Perſon, ſimply ſay, that it was a Turk named Saladin. And there are ſome who ſpeak as if he had never been Baptized, they deſcribe her running after a Turkiſh Soldier, whom ſhe had made the Object of her Paſſion, in Contempt of her Religion and Dignity. 'Tis Mr. Larrey himſelf, who ſpeaks thus in his Adverteſſment to the Reader. All this manifeſtly Inſinuates that the great Saladin is not the Perſon concerned, for a good Hiſtorian could not in ſpeaking of ſo great a Man, make uſe of the Phraſe one Saladin; a Turk named Saludin. Beſides, when this Queen carried her ſelf ſo ill in Antioch, Saladin was not Sultan of Iconium, as Mr. de Larrey ſuppoſes (h), nor do I think that Country was ever one of his Conqueſts. He Married one of his Daughters a long time after (i) to Melich, the Sultan of Iconium's Son. This does ſome Prejudice to Eleonora's Apology.

(g) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tome 2. pag. 102.
(h) Pag. 44. 45.
(i) See Maimbourg Hiſt. des Croiſades, liv. 5. tom. 2. pag. 177. Edit. de Holl. ad ann. 1190.

John Bouchet, in his Annals of Aquitaine, affirms, that Lewis VII. ſuſpected his Wife had a mind to marry the Sultan Saladin, and that that Reaſon was alledged by the King in Treating of the Divorce. Some have written, that if the ſaid King Lewis had not brought away his Wife Eleonora, ſhe had formed a Deſign by the Advice of her Uncle Duke Raymond, to quit the King, and marry the Sultan Saladine; by which means the ſaid Duke Raymond would have recovered all his Lands; he did this out of Revenge, becauſe the ſaid King Lewis had refuſed to aſſiſt him to recover 'em; but he ſaid nothing to Eleonora of it, till he was in France, as we ſhall ſee afterwards. (k). Let us ſee what is contained in the Place he referred to: '(l) The Council being aſſembled, the Queſtion 'was put in Debate by the Archbiſhop of Langres, who was alſo ſummoned thither, giving 'his Opinion thus: You know, Gentlemen, what 'our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt formerly ſaid, that Man 'cannot ſeparate thoſe, whom God has joined in 'Marriage; however, he excepts one caſe, which 'is when one or t'other commits Adultery; for 'if that happens they may be diſſolved and ſepa'rated. Now Gentlemen, it is true, as the King 'commands me to ſay, that in a Voyage beyond the 'Seas (from which Thanks to God he is returned) 'through the great Love he had to Madam Eleo'nora his Wife, he took her along with him, as 'well to viſit the Sacred Places of Jeruſalem, as 'to ſee Maymond, the Duke of Antioch her Uncle, 'by whoſe means the King expected to have Suc'cours and Aſſiſtance in the ſaid Country, to per'fect his Enterprize; nevertheleſs, the ſaid Lady, 'without Occaſion, Cauſe, or Reaſon, and from 'meer Levity, was minded to deſert the King her 'Husband, and give her ſelf up to Sultan Saladin, 'whoſe Picture ſhe had ſeen, and thus betray the 'King and all his Army, and all by the Counſel 'of the ſaid Maymond her Uncle. Which curſed 'and damned Enterprize was not executed, as God 'would have it, by the great Diligence the 'King made to retire from the Danger, which he 'never declared to the ſaid Lady. However, he 'has always laid this Fact to Heart, and can anno 'wiſe truſt in her, and would willingly be divor'ced, if he ſaw the Thing were reaſonable, and that 'God would not be offended by it. For as he ſays, 'he can never be aſſured of the Race that proceeds 'from her. The Author adds, that the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, deſiring that her Divorce might be grounded on ſome other Reaſon, beſides the Privilege and ill Intentions, the ſaid Lady Eleonora was charged with, propoſed another more honourable Medium, which was, that the King and ſhe were Relations, and that in the Degrees prohibited. This Overture was accepted, and the Diſſolution of the Marriage founded upon it. The Queen, informed of what had paſſed (m) fainted away from the Chair ſhe ſat in, and was ſpeechleſs above two Hours; nor could ſhe cry, nor open her Teeth. And when ſhe was a little come to her ſelf, ſhe began with her clear and beautiful Eyes to look upon thoſe who had told her the firſt ſad News, and ſaid to them, &c.

(j) Id. ib. fol. 79. ad ann. 1152.
† He ſhou'd have ſaid Biſhop.

(k) Bouchet, Annales d'Aquitaine, fol. 78. Edit. de Poitiers, 1557. in fol.
(l) Id. ib. fol. 79. ad ann. 1152.

(m) Id. ib. fol. 80.

(D) I ſhall ſet down what Brantome ſays of it.] He ſpeaks of Eleonora, as on a wrong foot; he blames Edward III. for having confined his Mother in a Caſtle for her Love Intrigues. A ſlight Offence, ſays he (n), ſince it is natural; and having dealt ſo much among the Soldiers, and uſed her ſelf ſo much to ramp with 'em amongſt Arms, Tents, and Pavilions, it was hardly poſſible for her to contain, from playing the ſame Pranks within the Curtains, as this often happens; I refer my ſelf to our Queen Eleonora, Dutcheſs of Guienne, who attended the King her Husband beyond Sea, and to the Holy War, and who by frequent converſing among Arms and the Soldiery, gave her ſelf ſuch a looſe as at laſt to have to do with the Saracens; for which the King divorced her, which coſt us dear: Conſider, what ſhe had a Mind to try whether theſe Warlike Men were as brave Champions in a Chamber, as in the Field of Battle, and that poſſibly it was her Humour to love valiant Men, for one Valour ſtrikes another, like Vertue; nor did he ſay amiſs, who ſaid, that Vertue reſembled Lightning, which penetrates every thing.

(n) Brantome, Memoires des Dames galantes, tom. 2. pag. 311. 312.

(E) St. Bernard had not promiſed this ill Succeſs.] Being ordered to preach up the Cruſade throughout all Chriſtendom, he began in France. 'He 'af-dissatisfied at her second Marriage. She was at least as jealous (F) of the second Husband, as the first had been of her. But the second was much harsher than the first; he put her in Prison, and kept her closely confined (G) for Life, as we shall see assi[illegible]nal Council at Chartres, in which [illegible] was chosen Generalissimo of the Expedition; b[illegible] refused that Office, contenting himself to be th[illegible]peter of it; he published it every where w[illegible]t vehemence and assurance of Success, a[illegible] was believed, with the working so many Mirac[illegible], that Cities and Towns were deserted, and all People listed themselves for this War. (a) The Emperor (b) [illegible]radus marched with an Army of Sixty [illegible] and Horse, and arrived in Syria, in Lent 11[illegible] Emanuel the Emperor of Constantinople, ca[illegible] Plaister and Lime to be mingled with the [illegible] which he furnished to Conradus, and (c) gave him Guides, who having led the Army by long Circuits, in which he consumed all his Provisions, delivered it half dead and languishing, into the Hands of the Turks, who cut it all to Pieces, insomuch that the Tenth Part did not survive the Enterprize. Lewis ran the same risk as Conrad; however, he escaped by greater good Fortune than [illegible]denee. He gained a Battel in passing the Rive[illegible]der; but he reaped no Advantage by it; [illegible]r this, not standing circumspectly enough [illegible] his Guard, he received a notable Check at the [illegible]le of a Mountain. At last he came to Antioch, whereof Raymond the Queen's Uncle by the Father's side, then held the Principality. [illegible]re it was that he discovered (his Wife's Com[illegible]) with Saladin, and saw himself tempted t[illegible]dissolving of his Marriage. He found no [illegible]r Remedy to avoid this Scandal, th[illegible]on. taking his Wife by Night from Antioch, and sending her away before him to Jerusalem. He and Conrad besieged Damascus, and (d) succeeded in this Enterprize, as ill as in all the rest, thro' the Prodigious Treachery of the very Christians of the Country. Therefore these two Princes detesting the Villany——thought only of returning. Lewis being on board his Vessels (e), met on the Road the Naval Force of these Miscreants, who laid in wait to take him. As they were at Blows, or even, according to some Authors, as they led him Prisoner, it happened by good Fortune, that the Army of Roger, King of Sicily, their capital Enemy, conducted by his Lieutenant, arrived, who quickly caused 'em to release their Prisoner, having burut, taken and sunk abundance of their Vessels. The ill Success of this Cruisade, (f) Which made so many Widows and Orphans, ruined so many Families, and dispeopled so many Countries, raised Murmurs and Reproaches against [illegible]Barnard's Reputation, who seemed to have promised a quite different Event. So that when the Pope at two Years end would have had him preach up another Cruisade, and oblige him to go in Person to the Holy Land, in order to draw a greater Number after him; the Cisteaux Monks broke all his Measures for fear of a Second Misfortune, which might have been greater than the first.

(a) Mezerai ubi supra, p. 564. ad. ann. 1146.
(b) Id. ib. pag. 565.
(c) Ibid. pag. 566.
(d) Ibid. pag. 567.
(e) [illegible] 1149.
(f) Id. ib. pag. 568.
(g) See the Article Bernard, Remark E.

(F) She was at least as jealous of the Second Husband.] We'll take the Expressions of a Modern Historian already cited. (b) Queen Eleonora, the 'Woman of all the World, whom it least became 'to be jealous of her Husband, was extravagantly 'so, and had Reason for it. Henry was a Man of 'ill Fame, on the score of Women, and the Mo'nument we have remaining of the famous Rosamond, is a Testimony to Posterity, of this 'Prince's Debauchery. She who at the time I 'speak of, inflamed this Queen's Jealousie, 'was Alix of France, betrothed to the Prince 'Ri[illegible] and given as her Sister Margaret, to be ed[illegible] by her Father-in-Law, who was fallen 'in L[illegible] with her. Prompted by this Passion, and 'at the same time, by the fear, that if the Son 'were vanquished, the Father being enraged, might 'come to some Extremity against him, Eleonora 'knew so well how to perswade Richard and Geoffry, that it was their Interest, not to quarrel 'with their elder Brother, that she engaged them to 'enter into the Confederacy of the Malecontents. That all my Readers may understand this, I ought to observe, that the King of England's eldest Son by Queen Elenor, was in Rebellion against him. He had stolen the Princess Margaret of France, Daughter to Lewis VII. who was to be his Wife, and whom the King of England educated in his own Court. According to some Historians, it was she (i), that raised Eleonora's Jealousie, and it was Eleonora (k) who excited her eldest Son to this Rebellion, as afterwards she engaged her two younger Sons to join with their elder Brother. This Plot was hatched, whilst the King was in Ireland. As soon as he returned into England (l), the first thing he did was to shut up Eleonora in a close Prison, where she remained all the Time her Husband lived, and very dearly paid for the Satisfaction she had sought in a Revenge, which neither respected the Rights of the Throne, nor those of the Conjugal Engagement.

(i) De Larrey ubi supra, pag. 86.
(k) Idem, pag. 87.
(l) Id. ib. p. 90. ad ann. 1173.

(G) Confined for Life, as we shall see in the Remarks.] To remove all Ambiguity, I must say, that Eleonora was a Prisoner till the Death of the King her Husband. This Prince died in 1188. Richard his third Son succeeded him. He was then in France, where he had been engaged in a furious War against his Father. The first thing he did after his Return into England (m), was to deliver Queen Eleonora his Mother, who had been a Prisoner Sixteen Years. He made her Regent of the Kingdom (n) whilst he went into the Holy Land. The Jealousie which still cankered in her Soul, induced her to make a Voyage to Navarre to seek a Wife for the King her Son. To understand this, we must know (o) that was told this Queen, in Prison, that Henry designed to divorce her——in order to marry the Princess (p) Alix. The Fear of this made her hate this Princess mortally; and when she was in a way to revenge her self, she carried Things to an Extremity. As she had a great Ascendant over Richard, she indeavoured to put him out of Conceit with this Match, by giving him Suspicions of his Father's Conduct with this young Princess, and seeing that her Suppositions were not sufficient, she added, that Henry had debauched her, and had had a Son by her. At last, fearing that the Charms of so fine a Princess would be more prevalent in Richard's Heart than her Words, she made all the haste she cou'd to marry him to another. For this Reason she went to the Court of the King of Navarre, designing to match Richard with the Princess Berengere, having obtained Permission to negotiate this Treaty before she left England. It was not difficult for her to accomplish it, having so much Address as she had, and the Match besides appearing to Navarre so advantagious as it really was. Afterwards she conducted the Princess of Navarre into Sicily to her Son, who consummated the Match before he set sail to the Holy Land. Eleonora returned into England, from whence she went over into Germany (q) in 1194. to deliver Richard, who was made a Prisoner by the Duke of Austria. Richard dying in 1199. She formed Cabals for devolving the Crown upon her Son John, Earl of Mortaing, to the Exclusion of Arthur her Grandson, tho' she had more (r) Affection for Arthur than for John, and though she was perswaded, that John's Pretensions were unjust. But her Ambition was the only Rule of her Conduct. (s) She apprehended, that if Arthur should come to Reign, he would suffer himself to be governed by the Dutchess Constance his Mother, a Woman of solid Sense, and excellent Courage, who would not give her any Share in the Authority. Thus she preferred the Earl of Mortaing before him, a Prince without Faith or Honour, because she believed, that having need of her Support, he would let her Reign in Conjunction with him. This Earl is the same who was called John without Land. By the Peace he made with Philip Augustus King of France, in 1201, it was said that the Infanta of Castile his Niece, was to marry Lewis, Philip's only Son. (t) Queen Eleonora, notwithstanding her great Age, went in quest of this Infanta her Grand-Daughter, to the Court of Toledo, and brought her into Normandy. She was besieged in Mirebeau, by Prince Arthur her Grandson,

(m) Idem, p. 137. ad ann. 1189.
(n) Idem, p. 141. ad ann. 1189.
(o) Idem, pag. 155.
(p) Daughter to Lewis XI. who not being at Age, was affianced to Richard, and put into the Hand of Henry till she should be Marriageable.
(q) Idem, pag. 210.
(r) Idem, pag. 240.
(s) Ibid. See also P. d'Orleans ubi supra pag. 281.
(t) De Larrey, ibid. pag. 241.

(b) Pere d'Orleans, Revolut. d'Angleterre, tom. 1. p. 186.

(a) Mezerai ubi ſupra, pag. 583.
(a) Mezerai, hiſt. de France, tome 2. pag. 131.
(b) Reverſus indefiliam Cæſaris Juliam quam in matrimonio Marcellus habuerat duxit uxorem, feminam neque ſibi neque reipublicæ felicis uteri. Paterculus l. 2. c. 93.
(c) Ad ultimum tanto nobis effecta eſt vinculo ſinceriſſimæ dilectionis, quæ Religiones alias quaſi deſpuens, noſtri Ordinis ſuſcipere, & in noſtra prælegit Eccleſia ſepeliri. Ex Necrologio Fontis-Ebraldi apud Patrem de la Mainferme, Clypeo naſcentis Ordinis diſſertat. 3. pag. 159.
(d) See the Book of P. de la Mainferme ibid.
(e) Ex Necrologio Fontis-Ebraldi, apud la Mainferme ibid. pag. 158.
(f) I have prov'd the truth of this: See the Genealogical Tables of this Jeſuit, pag. 49. Edit. of Paris, 1664.
(g) I have proved the truth of this. See the Hiſtoire de la Maiſon rotale pag. 78 ſee in the Remarks, with the Sequel of this Queen's Hiſtory. Lewis died on the 18th or 20th of September, 1180. Two Years after he had made (H) a Devotional Voyage into England. He had made ſuch another to St. James's of Galicia, not in the Year 1152. as Mezerai affirms, but in 1155. He cauſed his Son Philip to be Crowned at Rheims, the 1ſt of November, 1179. He had him by Alix de Campaigne, his third Wife. I inſiſt not upon a Chronological Account of his Actions, becauſe it may be found in Moreri.

LEWIS XI.

ſon, in the Year 1262. But John without Land ſuccoured her, and took this Prince Priſoner, and murthered him ſome time after. He durſt not do it, they ſay, whilſt Eleonora lived. This Queen died, loaden with Years and Sins. Let us uſe Mr. Mezerai's Expreſſions. "(a) This Woman, conſummate in all ſorts of Wickedneſs, lived above Eighty Years, kindled a War that laſted for above Sixty Years, and ſettled a Hatred betwixt France, and England, that has continued above Three Ages; ſo that with Reaſon we may ſay of her what the Greek Poet ſaid of Menelaus's Wife, That we have ſuffered not a Ten, but a 400 Years Fire and Sword by means of this Woman. Her Fruitfulneſs deſerves but part of the Epithets which are given to the (b) Fecundity of Julia, Auguſtus's Daughter, for Eleonora's Sons had a great Complaiſance for their Mother's Paſſions, they revolted againſt their Father at her Deſire; and they who reigned ſuffered her to enjoy the Regency; but otherwiſe they brought a Thouſand Miſeries upon their Country. They had Hearts like Lions; but then 'twas not ſo much a true Courage, as a Hardineſs determined to deſpiſe the Maledictions of Fame, and behold with an unconcerned Eye, the moſt Atrocious Crimes. In a Word, they neither did Honour to France, from whence they deſcended originally, both by Father and Mother, nor to England, the Inheritance of their Father. Eleonora's Death is placed on the 31ſt. of March 1204. by Mr. Moreri, who adds, that coming out of Priſon in 1194. She retired into a Monaſtery, and died in that of Fontevraud. He is miſtaken by Five Years, as to the time ſhe came out of Priſon, and much more as to her Retirement; for after her Liberty, ſhe ſhewed her Ambition as much as ever, her intriguing Spirit, her Jealouſie and vindictive Humour. But 'tis true, that ſhe deſired (c) to be buried at Frontevaux, and took the Vail of the Order. She was a great Benefactreſs (d) to that Houſe; for which reaſon ſhe is repreſented in the Dead Roll of Frontevaux, as one of the moſt virtuous Princeſſes in the World. So ſure a means is Magnificence for obtaining of the Gentlemen Monks Teſtimonials of a good Life, in the midſt of a Conduct ſo ſcandalous, that the moſt flattering Hiſtory dares not conceal it. See the Remark I. of the Article St. Gregory, (e) Migravit à ſeculo domina Alienoris Regina Francia & Anglia, Duciſſa Aquitaniæ, quæ nitore Regiæ ſobolis ſuæ mundum illuſtravit. Nobilitatem generis, vitæ decoravit honeſtate, morum ditavit gratia, virtutum floribus picturavit, & incomparabilis probitatis honore, ferè cunctis præſtitit Reginis mundanis. I am ſorry Father de la Mainferme has not mark'd the Day and Year of Eleonora's Death; but if it be the 31ſt of March, 1204. as Mr. Moreri affirms, it follows that Mr. de Mezerai, and Mr. de Larrey are miſtaken, in ſaying that John without Land durſt not kill his Nephew Arthur in his Mother's Life time, Mr. Pinſſon des Riolles, whom I deſired to conſult Father de la Mainferme, has informed me that this Monk is dead, and that Father Labbe (f) in his Geographical Table, and (g) Father Anſelm in his Hiſtory of the Royal Family of France, mark the time of Eleonora's Death, as Moreri does.

It muſt not be forgotten that this Princeſs has been put in the Catalogue of Learned Women. Anno CIↃCIII. obiit Eleonora Regina——— Ab eruditione ac prudentia multum celebrata eſt. Scripſit epiſtolas ad Cœleſtinum Papam, Henricum Cæſarem, Richardum & Joannem filios. Vide plura apud Matthæum Pariſium, nec non Balæum. Thus it is Voſſius ſpeaks at the 82. Page of his Treatiſe de Philologia, in the Amſterdam Edition, 1650. 'Tis among the Additions to his Book. He did not know this Particular, when he wrote the Second Chapter, where he gives a long Catalogue of Learned Women.

(H) A Devotional Voyage into England.] Let's make uſe of Mezerai's Words. (h) 'As the Devotion 'to the Relicks of St. Thomas Becket, increaſed 'by the Example even of King Henry himſelf, 'who of his Proſecutor was become his Votary; 'King Lewis went over into England, paid his 'Devotions at his Tomb, and left ſome Riches 'there, as Teſtimonies of his Piety. That Prince had made one Devout Voyage before. Let us hear what Mezerai ſays. '(i) It was not lawful for 'the Kings of France, as Yves de Chartres ſays, to 'Marry Baſtards. Now common Fame ſaid, that 'Conſtance (k) was one. For this Reaſon Lewis, 'Two years after his Marriage, was willing to 'inform himſelf, and under pretence of going a 'Pilgrimaging to St. James's in Galicia, he paſſed 'through the Court of his Father-in-law, the 'moſt Magnificent Prince of his time, who re'cieved him, and treated him Royally at Burgos, 'and removed the Scruple he had in his Mind. This ſhews that Devotion was one of the principal Qualities of Lewis VII. He was unfortunate in his greateſt Enterprizes, ſays Mezerai, (l) and too ſlack in Affairs that demanded Vigour; but as Pious, Charitable, Good, Equitable, Liberal, and Valiant, as any Prince of his Age: Yet Two Faults may be laid to his charge, one againſt Prudence, in having divorced his Wife; the other againſt the Laws of Nature, in having ſupported the Rebellion of King Henry's Children againſt their Father. Devotion and Piety are undoubtedly the greateſt of all Vertues. A Prince can no more diſpenſe with 'em than a private Perſon, and if he chuſes with 'em to fulfil his Duty, rather than preſerve his Dominions, he is, in the ſight of God, one of the greateſt Men on Earth; but tis certain that, according to the Courſe of Human Affairs, nothing's more likely to ruin a Nation, than the ſcrupulous Conſcience of the Ruler. If his Neighbours acted like him, we might expect from his Piety, the greateſt Happineſs that a People can enjoy; but if whilſt they practice all the Tricks of State Policy, he preremptorily refuſes to take the leaſt ſtep beyond the ſevere Rules of the Goſpel Morality, both he and his Subjects will infallibly be a Prey to other Nations, and all the World will ſay, he was fitter for a Monaſtick Life, than to wear a Crown, and that he would do well to quit his Place to a leſs ſcrupulous Prince. (m) Exeat aula Quivolet eſſe pius: This Maxim eſpecially regards the Head of a Court. I ſpeak not of the Piety, which conſiſts in Building Magnificent Churches, in extending the Limits of his Religion by force of Arms, and extirpating Sects. This kind of Piety (n) is ſometimes ſubſervient to the temporal good of a Prince, to his Greatneſs and Conqueſts. I ſpeak of a Piety, that withſtands the Serpentine Windings of Policy; I ſpeak of a Conſcience that always prefers the honeſt before the profitable part, and that rejects all the Maxims of the Art of Reigning, which are contrary to exact Probity. This Virtue is doubtleſs prejudicial to a temporal Intereſt, becauſe it allows not the reſiſting the Attacks and Caballs of the Enemy. Lewis VII. is an inſtance of it, (o) tho' it muſt be owned that his Scruples were of a very particular Nature; for they hindered not his encouraging Children to revolt againſt their Father, and protecting 'em in Rebellion; but they wou'd not ſuffer him to Marry a Baſtard; they forced him to make a Voyage, to know whether his Wife was the lawful Daughter of King Alphonſus; he was afraid of offending againſt the Laws of the Kingdom. Why did he not fear to offend againſt the Law of God, which commands Children to honour their Fathers?

I con-

(b) Mezerai. Abrege Chronolog. to. 2. p. m. 582. ad ann. 1178.
(i) Ibid. pag. 571. ad ann. 1152. but he ſhou'd have mark'd the year 1155.
(k) Daughter of Alphonſo VII King of Caſtile, Married to Lewis in 1154.
(l) Mezerai, ibid pag. 583.
(m) Lucanus, lib. 8. v. 493.
(n) This Reſtriction was neceſſary; for ſometimes this Piety brings great Prejudice to the Potenteſt Monarchs, as the Houſe of Auſtria has experienced it, France ſmarts for it.
A REFLECTION on ſcrupulous Princes.
(o) See Pere Maimbourgh, Hiſtoire des Croiſades liv. 3. pag. m. 357. & the following where he ſhews that the Scruples of this Monarch, were the cauſe of the ruin of all his Affairs in the Expedition to the Holy Land.

LEWIS XI. King of France, was born at Bourges, in 1423. He succeeded Charles VII. his Father, in the Year 1461. He was a Prince well verſed in the Art of Reigning. He was conſummate in the Intrigues of Policy, which he very happily imployed to deliver himſelf out of a Thouſand Perplexities; but they ſometimes [a] became a Snare to himſelf, which is the leſs to be wonder'd at, when we conſider that he was not uniform in his Conduct, but ran from one Extream (A) to another, being reſerved to exceſs, for the moſt part, and too open-hearted on ſome Occaſions. It was juſtly ſaid of him, that he made himſelf [β] as conſiderable by his Vices as Vertues, being apt in one as well as the other, to run into Extreams. He was neither a good Son, nor good Father, nor good Brother, nor good Husband. At Sixteen Years of age he ſet himſelf at the Head of a Party, and being forced to return to his Duty, he watch'd for other Occaſions of Revolt, and perſiſted (B) in theſe Courſes till the Death of his Father, and even afterwards diſcover'd his unnatural Temper (C) in a ſcandalous manner. He took no Care of the Edu-

[a] See Varillas, Hiſt. de Louis XI. liv. 10. p. m. 333. 334.

[β] Paſquier letr. liv. 3 p. m. 154.

(a) Amelot, Preface to his Tranſlation of Machiavel's Prince, pag. 3.

I conclude with a Paſſage of Mr. Amelot de la Houſſaye, in which he cites Machiavel. '(a) The Man, ſays he, in the 15*th Chapter of his Prince*, who profeſſes himſelf a perfectly honeſt Man, 'amongſt ſuch Numbers as are otherwiſe, will be 'ſure to be ruined. There is therefore a neceſſity 'that the Prince, who would ſtand his ground, 'ſhould learn the Faculty of not being good, 'when he ought not to be ſo (1): And in his 18*th 'Chapter, after having ſaid that the Prince ought 'not to keep his Word, when 'tis againſt his Intereſt, 'he frankly confeſſes that* this Precept ſhou'd not 'be given, if all Men were good; but there be'ing ſo many wicked and deceitful, it is for a 'Prince's Security to know how to be ſo too. 'Without which he might loſe his Kingdoms, and 'conſequently his Reputation; it being impoſſible 'that a Prince, who has loſt the one, ſhould pre'ſerve the other. Some Pages after he ſpeaks thus: Some Maxims of State are to be more e'quitably interpreted than is uſually done, the 'Practice whereof is become almoſt abſolutely neceſ'ſary, thro' the Wickedneſs and Perfidiouſneſs of Men. Add to this, that Princes are of ſuch refined Policy, that he who at preſent would act like a downright Honeſt Man, would quickly be a Cully to his Neighbours.

(1) Plutarch ſays, that if to Reign well one muſt abſolutely diſcharge all the Duties, and obſerve all the Rules of Juſtice, Jupiter himſelf would not be Maſter.

(A) He ran from one Extream to another.] This is what an Hiſtorian ſays of him. '(b) He was 'the ableſt Prince in the World, to bring Men over 'to his Opinion, to diſcover the Secrets of his Ene'mies, to perplex 'em with Diſtruſts, and divide 'the moſt united; but in his jolly Humour, was 'incapable of keeping his Secrets; every thing 'eſcaped him, and he was more ſubject to commit 'Faults, than able to repair 'em, which he did by 'all manner of ways, and more frequently by bad 'than good.

(b) Mezerai, abregé Chronolog. tom. 3. ad ann. 1472. p. m. 322.

(B) He ſet himſelf at the Head of a Party——— and watch'd for other Occaſions of a Revolt, and perſiſted.] Charles VII. made (c) a Regulation, which neither pleaſed the great Men, nor the Officers who were fatned by the Miſery of the People: They interrupted it by a dangerous Commotion, which was called la Praguerie. The Dukes of Alenſon, Bourbon and Vandome, the Baſtard of Orleans, and many others, were concern'd, they complained that the King put the Government in 'the Hands of Two or Three private Perſons; and 'hereupon made a League againſt his Miniſters. 'La Trimouille himſelf, who was diſgraced, joyned 'with 'em, reſolving to return to Court at 'any rate. To add more weight to this Conſpiracy, the Faction (d) ſet the Dauphin at the Head of 'em, giving out, that they only deſigned the Reformation of Abuſes, and to order it ſo, that all things for the future ſhould be managed by this Prince's Authority, regulated by the Advice of the Princes of the Blood. (e) They wrote Letters in his Name to the Towns of Auvergne, and other Provinces, where they thought theſe Deſigns might be approved——But all the Towns abominated this Revolt; and as the King was vigilant, and attacked the Conſpirators, where-ever they appeared, they were forced to have recourſe to his Clemency, and deliver up the Dauphin. This Commotion (f) was quell'd in leſs than Nine Months. This ſhews their Compariſon to be juſt, who liken the People to wanton Girls. There are ſome Days in which they are not to be moved with Sighs or Preſents; the next Day they come to hand without any Trouble. We may ſay too, that there are Conjunctures, in which the moſt plauſible Manifeſto's of thoſe who take Arms againſt their Soveraign, ſhake not the Fidelity of the People: At other times half theſe Pretences would be ſufficient for an entire Revolution.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 258, 259. ad ann. 1440.

(d) Matthieu, Hiſtoire de Louis XI. liv. 1. c. 6. p. m. 18, 19.

(e) Id. ib. c. 7. pag. 20.

(f) Id. ib. c. 11. p. 28. ad ann. 1440.

The King having pardoned his Son, kept him near his own Perſon, and watched him narrowly. He led him out to ſome Expeditions, and ſent him upon others, and gave him Opportunities of obtaining a great Reputation, eſpecially by the Defeat of Four or Five Thouſand Swiſſers near Baſil, (g) who defended themſelves very bravely. He diſtruſted his Son's natural Temper, and kept him ſomewhat ſhort; but the young Prince too haughtily took Head; and 'tis ſaid (h) that he gave a Box o'th'ear to the Fair Agnes, the King's Miſtreſs. This joined with other Delinquencies, obliged his Father to ſend him (i) into Dauphiné for Four Months. The Dauphin made his Retreat in a menacing manner: He carry'd himſelf with a great deal of Haughtineſs, and committed intolerable Extortions. (k) He made Intrigues with the Neighbouring Princes, and thought of returning no more to Court; he received Orders to return, and did not obey 'em; and knowing that Charles VII. was taking Meaſures to ſecure him, he eſcaped to the Duke of Burgundy's Court, (l) and thereby made himſelf ſo much dreaded, that his Father haſten'd his own Death, by too great an Abſtinence, upon the bare Apprehenſions of Poyſon. Mezerai had reaſon to ſay, that Charles VII. (m) might juſtly have been called Happy, if he had had any other Father, or any other Son.

(g) Id. ib. c. 14.

(h) Matthieu ibid. c. 20. pag. 48. ib. cite Robert Gaguin.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 50.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 52.

(l) Varillas, Hiſt. de Louis XI. liv. 11. pag. 360.

(m) Mezerai ubi ſupra, p. 284. ad ann. 1461.

(C) He diſcovered his unnatural Temper, in a ſcandalous manner, after the Death of his Father.] This Death '(n) gave him too great a Joy to be 'conſtrain'd, and he betray'd ſuch Symptoms of 'it, as could not but make the Government of 'ſo unnatural a Son to be feared and hated. He 'rewarded him that brought him the firſt News 'of it, beyond his Expectation. He wore Mourn'ing but one Morning, and appeared in Cloaths 'of a White and Carnation Colour after Dinner 'the ſame Day. He even forced the Courtiers, 'who haſten'd to join him at Guenap, to follow 'his Example, ſince he would not ſuffer 'em to 'come into his preſence, with Cloaths of a 'different Colour from his own. Another Hiſtorian ſays, that from this King's 'firſt Behaviour 'it was concluded, (o) that he would Embelliſh 'the Beginning of his Reign with other Tro'phies, than Clemency; he diſcarded almoſt all 'the Officers and Servants of King Charles his 'Father, being wonderfully pleaſed to undo what 'he had done, to pull down what he had built, 'and to build what he had pull'd down. 'Tis 'obſerved (p) that he puniſhed his Father's Phyſician, becauſe, following the Rules of his Art, 'he had obliged the ſick King to eat. He who informs me of this, adds, 'That the Pretences 'of Lewis XI. took to render the Authority of the 'Sovereign inviolable to the laſt, are not al'lowable. He is in the right; but if he fancy'd that it was the true Motive of this Prince; if he believed, I ſay, that he was willing to take example by Domitian's Temper, (q) he is miſtaken. The Phyſician was puniſhed only becauſe Lewis XI. had an Averſion for a Perſon, who had endeavoured to ſave Charles VII's Life.

(n) Varillas ubi ſupra, liv. 10. pag. 344, 345.

(o) Matthieu ubi ſupra, liv. 2. c. 4. pag. 86.

(p) La Mothe le Vayer, inſtruct. du Dauphin, p. 43. 44. du 1. tom.

(q) Ut domeſticis perſuaderet ne bono quidem exemplo audendam eſſe patroni necem, Epaphroditum à libellis, Capitali pœna condemnavit (Domitianus) quod poſt deſtitutionem Nero in adipiſcendâ morte manu ejus adjutus exiſtimabatur. Sueton. in Domit. c. 14.

Education (D) of his Son, and Married his Daughters in such a manner, as shewed he had no Concern for their Welfare. 'Tis pretended that he put his Brother (E) to Death, and 'tis certain (F) he had Mistresses and Bastards. The Peace he made with England in 1475. was more useful than glorious; he was jested on for it,

(D) He took no Care of the Education of his Son, and he married his Daughters in such a manner.] He 'was an ill Father, and tho' he 'had had his only Son so late, who was afterwards Charles VIII. that there was no Probability this young Prince should ever give him the 'same Disturbances, that he remembered he had 'formerly given Charles VII. nevertheless he 'looked upon him as a formidable Person. He 'took no care of his Education; he placed none 'but People of mean Quality about him; he had 'him bred up in Sloth and Pleasures; and the 'only Maxim he taught him, was, That a Man 'was incapable of Ruling, that did not know 'how to dissemble. Anne of France, his Eldest 'Daughter, was perfectly Beautiful, but she had 'abundantly more Wit than he was willing she 'should have had; and it was to humble her, that 'he Married her to a Younger Brother of the 'House of Bourbon, of a Genius so mean, that 'his Majesty had no reason to fear, he should enter into any Intrigues against his Service. Jane 'of France, his second Daughter was so deformed, 'that the Physicians affirmed, she would never 'have Children; nevertheless he constrained the 'Duke of Orleans, the first Prince of his Blood, 'to Marry her, tho' he had reason to foresee she 'would be unhappy with him. He had obliged himself (b) to give the Duke of Calabria a Force sufficient to recover the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, 'together with his Eldest Daughter in Marriage; but of the Temper he was of, he 'was far from chusing so Worthy a Man for a 'Son-in-law. He perform'd neither of these 'Promises. —— The Count de Beaudieu was 'preferred before this Duke, for no other Reason, but because he was beneath him in Merit 'and Valour; but the Fortune of this Younger 'Brother of the Family of Bourbon, was not 'better'd by Marrying Anne of France. A Contract of Marriage was presented him to sign 'which would have made over all the Estates of 'this House to his Wife, had not he been advised to evade it by some Words which were not 'taken notice of; and as long as the King his 'Father-in-law lived, he employed him only in 'Affairs that made him odious. —— And after all, 'never did him any good. Peter Matthieu (c) observes, that Lewis XI. hated his Daughter 'Jane, because she was Black, Little, and Crooked. 'The Lord Lesquiere, her Governour, frequently 'hid her under his long Robe, when the King 'met her, that he might not be afflicted at the 'sight of her.

(E) That he put his Brother to Death.] Let us comment this in Varillas's Words. (d) 'Tho' 'Lewis by the advice of Francis Sforza had invested 'his Brother with the Dutchy of Normandy, 'yet he took it away from him a little after that 'the League for the Publick Good was broken, 'and gave no other reason for it, but that this 'Province was then one Third of the Revenue of 'France, and that his Younger Brother would be 'too Rich, should he enjoy it. He chose rather 'to give him Guienne; but so repented him afterwards, that the Author of the History of 'Aquitaine, and the Abbot of Brantome pretend, 'he got his Brother poysoned by the Abbot of 'St. John d'Angeli. I have else where cited (e) Brantome's Words, and will not repeat 'em here. See also Peter Matthieu, in the History (f) of Lewis XI.

(F) He had Mistresses and Bastards.] I observe this as the Proof of the Character I have given him of an ill Husband. He was Twice Married; the first time to Margaret Stuart, Daughter to James I. King of Scotland, in 1436. She (g) died at Challous upon the Marne the 26th of August, 1446. in the 26th Year of her Age. Hall and Grafton (h) Two English Historians, affirm that she disgusted her Husband by her stinking Breath. Buchanan is very angry with 'em, and confutes 'em in the first Place by Monstrelet, who says she was Handsome and Virtuous; in the second place by a Scotch [redacted], who went into France with her, and [redacted] forsook her as long as she lived. He [redacted] left it in Writing, that she was beloved [redacted] her Father-in-law, her Mother-in-law, and her Husband, and was highly extoll'd in a piece of Poetry made upon her Death. Monstrelet's Testimony does not co[redacted] the English Historians: A Woman that's [redacted]me and Vertuous, may however be disgustful [redacted] the Part they mention. The Scotch Author is suspicious, a Domestick does not think himself obliged to publish, that his Mistress was hated in the Family of her Husband, and makes no scruple to give out the contrary: 'Tis a Common-place of Praise. Funeral Encomiums, are no Argument against the Indifference of a Husband. It might be proved by Modern Examples, that Princesses much dissatisfied with their Husbands and Father's in-Law, have been praised after their Deaths, in the mos[redacted]nificent Strains by Poets and Preachers. H[redacted]ver lets see Buchanan's Words: (i) Quantam [redacted] existimabimus vel mentiendi licentiam, vel maledicendi libidinem, qua, in ejusdem Regis filiam, utuntur: quam, ob oris gravedinem (nihil enim in morte, homines aliqui tam impudentes, audebant confingere) marito scribunt fuisse ingratam? At Monstreletus [redacted] feriptor aqualis, & probatus [redacted] & fortunæ, memoria prodidit; & [redacted] Pius ejusdem scripsit, ejus Regina, [redacted] & moriens, fuit comes, scriptum reliquit, eam, dum vixit, quegis coram socero, socrui, & marito fuisse, epitaphiumque carmen, omni laude plenum, Gallicis versibus, Catalauni ad Matronam (quo in oppido decessit) fuisse publicatum, quod in Scoticum Sermonem versum, plerique nostrorum adhuc habent. Monstrelet (k) affirms that Louis XI. cou'd never Love his first Wife, because of some Secret Imperfection and so had no Children by her. His Second Wife was Charlotte of Savoy. (l) This Second Marriage was Consummated at Namur in the Year 1457. She was very Ill treated by her Husband for many Years together, and died at Amboise the 1*st of* December, 1483, being 38 Years of Age. I know not therefore for what Reasons Mr. Varillas had Recourse to the Silence of the Historians of Savoy. Lewis, says he, (m) was subject to [redacted] fultory Love . . . We have read in the [redacted] very three Contracts of Marriage, which [redacted]ned in Favour of so many of his Natural Daughters . . . . but passing that, the Savoy Historians don't charge him with having used Queen Charlotte his Wife unkindly. The following Passage of Peter Matthieu will shew, she was unhappy. '(n) In the first Year of 'his Abode there, Charlotte of Savoy was brought to 'Namure, to Consummate the Marriage that had 'been treated five Years before. A Marriage 'which being made with Reluctancy, was consequently without Love. When the Duke of 'Burgundy gave the Dauphine his Pension of 12 'Thousand Crowns, Oliver de la March writes, 'that it was upon Condition he Married her, 'which shews he had no great Inclination to it. 'She brought him a Son whom he called Joachin. '. . . . The Child died immediately after, which 'gave the Father extream Trouble, who not being yet possessed with the Jealousies which Age 'brought upon him, desired to see him a Man, 'knowing that Children, who are born late, are 'Orphans betimes. The loss of [redacted] Child, 'who was the first that made [redacted] a Father, touched him so sensibly, that [redacted] made a Vow, as Philip de Comines says, never to know any other Woman but his own Wife, and yet in several Places of his Chronicle, we find [redacted] amongst the Women, some of which were [redacted] and others Married, and that to [redacted] of mean Fortune raised to Employs, [redacted] abundance of other Strokes of this kind, [redacted] don't bespeak a Continence equal to Alexander's,

(a) Varillas ubi supra, pag. 361. He particularizes in his Epistle Dedicatory, the ill Education of Charles VIII.

(b) Varillas ubi supra, pag. 362. Voiez aussi pag. 325.

(c) Matthieu ubi supra, liv. 10. c. 11. pag. 606.

(d) Varillas ib. pag. 364.

(e) In the pensées diverses sur les Cometes, pag. 462.

(f) Matthieu ubi supra, liv. 5. c. 17. pag. 256.

(g) Anselme. Hist. Genealog. de la maison de France, pag. 125.

(h) See Buchanan in Hist. Scotiæ, lib. 10. pag. m. 357.

(i) Buchan. ibid. pag. 357.

[redacted] 350.

(k) Anselme, ubi supra.

(l) [redacted]

(m) Varillas ubi supra pag. 323, 364.

(n) [redacted] supra [redacted]. c. 25. pag. 59, 50.

it, (G) but at bottom was excusable; for considering the great Number of Potent Enemies he had to deal with, 'twas better stoop than be haughty in that Juncture. Of Two Evils the least was to be chosen; it was a cast of Prudence, and a Man ought not to pretend to a Roman Courage out of Season. Lewis XI. raised a great deal of Money in his Kingdom, and trampled much more on his Subjects than his Predecessors had done, and yet his Personal Expences were so small, that he can't be acquitted (H) of Sordidness. Those of his Houshold were (I) as poor in Proportion. The same may be said of his Embassies; but in other Re-

'anders'. We shall see below (a) the particulars of his Gallantries; but that which is sufficient to convince us, that Charlotte of Savoy was scarce happy, is that her Husband, at his Death, admonished his Son (b) not to trust her; For, says he, I have always found that the Favours the Burgundian; Judge whether he could Love her, tho' he believed her otherwise Good and Virtuous. Mezerai, having said of this King's first Wife, what we have seen above, adds; (c) He would very seldom have visited the Second, only in hopes of having an Heir. Observe this that follows: '(d) 'Every thing gave King Lewis apprehensions; he 'always kept his Wife at a distance, and in his 'last Years banished her into Savoy'. Philip de Comines observes (e) that this Queen was none of those in whom her Husband could take great Pleasure, but however was a very good Lady.

(G) He was jested on for it, but at bottom was Excusable.] I am going to cite an Author who is none of the most Celebrated; but what then? It suffices that he speaks good Sense. We find, says he, (f) That Lewis XI. King of France having too many Affairs upon his Hands, demanded Peace of Edward IV. King of England, as soon as he understood he was enter'd into Picardy, and bought it very dear, little minding that the Count de Lude, and others of his Favourites called him Coward, as the Politician Angevin has written, because he only made that Peace to Disunite and Waken his Enemies, whilst he might fortify himself to Defeat 'em one after another afterwards, and Master 'em, as he did for the most Part——(g) The Romans would rather have lost their Dominions, than have had such a Thought; for it never appears during the space of 700 Years, in which they might War with other Nations, that they ever sued for Peace, except of the Gauls, who Besieged 'em in the Capital, after having burnt their City, for which they Revenged themselves quickly after. On the contrary being overpowered by King Perseus, they would not grant the Conqueror a Peace, unless he submitted himself and his Kingdom to their Mercy, altho' he offered to pay 'em Tribute. And when King Pyrrhus, after having obtained some Victories, and received some loss, sent his Ambassadors to Rome to Treat of Peace in the Equipage of great Lords who are in another Country; Answer was made that he must first depart Italy, otherwise there could be no mention of Peace, which was the Answer of a Magnanimous People, who perceived themselves able to make Head against the Enemy: a thing which would ill become a weak Prince, who ought, as a wise Pilot, to lower his Sails, and obey the Tempest that he may get Safely into Harbour, and not make Necessity Minister to Ambition; like the Vaivod of Transylvania, who confidently and openly said, that he would chuse to be a Slave to the Turk, rather than an Ally to Ferdinand, which happened to be his Fate. Peter Matthew relates, 'That Edward 'had taken 12 Members of the House of Com- 'mons along with him, who by this time were 'weary of the War, and of Lying in the Field 'like the Soldiers; these approved the Proposals of 'Peace, and said that if it was Just and Reasonable, 'it would be Imprudent to refuse it, and that they 'ought to be satisfied with having reduced the 'King of France, to Sue for Peace of the King of 'England, forasmuch as a great King can't be more 'humbled, nor descend Lower, than to Sue for 'Peace of his Enemy (b)'. This was doubtless a horrid Mortification to France; but the Circumstance of the time would allow no other Methods, without exposing the State to greater Evils. Read these words of Philip de Comines: (i) 'I believe 'a great many may think that the King debased 'himself too much: but Wise Men may judge by 'what I have said, that this Kingdom was in 'great Danger, if God had not interposed his 'Hand; who disposed the Mind of our King to 'make so Wise a Choice, (and much confounded 'that of the Duke of Burgundy, who committed 'so many Errors as you have seen) in this matter, 'after having so much desired what he lost by his 'own Fault. We had at that time a great many 'Secret Heart-burnings amongst us; from which 'great Mischiefs would have ensued to this King- 'dom, and that quickly too, if this Resolution 'had not been taken, and that without Delay, 'both with regard to Britain, and other parts.

(H) He can't be acquitted of Sordidness.] This is what we find in a Book of [illegible] Mothe de Vayer: '(k) Scandalous Parsimony being the opposite to 'Prodigality, is perhaps equally blameable. 'Lewis XI. made himself contemptible by his vile 'Habit, and his greasy Hats, which History up- 'braids him with, and we can't Read without In- 'dignation in the Registers of the Chamber of 'Accounts, an Article of Twenty Pence for two 'new Sleeves, to mend one of his Doublets, with 'another of Fifteen Pence to Grease his Boots'. Hope a Passage of Mezerai will very conveniently come in. (l) The decisive Sentence of Lewis XI. did a little satisfy either Party (m) as his Interview with Henry King of Castile satisfied either French or Spaniards. The latter Laughed at the Penuriousness, and Sordid and Silly Mein of King Lewis, who wore a Surtout of a plain Drab (1) over a short and streight Vest, and carried a ladden Notre-Dame in his Bonnet; the former were pique'd at the Castillian Arrogance, and at the Fastuousness of Count de Lodesme, Henry's Favourite. La Mothe, le Vayer, and Mezerai borrow these Particulars from John Bodin; observe how he speaks: '(n) There may be Parsimo- 'ny without lessening the Majesty of a King, or 'the Dignity of his Houshold, or Debasing his 'Greatness, which sometimes is the Cause of the 'Contempt of Strangers, and Rebellion of Sub- 'jects; as it happened to King Lewis XI. who 'having expelled some Gentlemen out of his Fa- 'mily, employ'd his Taylor for his Herald of 'Arms, his Barber for Ambassador, and his Phy- 'sician for Chancellor, (as one Antiochus, King of 'Syria, made Apollophanes, his Physician (2) 'President of his Council) and to mock other 'Kings, he wore a Greasy Hat and the Coursest 'Cloth; and even in his Chamber of Accompts 'was found, &c.——Nevertheless he height- 'ned the Taxes three Millions a Year, beyond his 'Predecessor, and alienated a great part of the 'Crown Revenue.' Here's what he had said in another Place of the same Book: (o) The King of Egypt having seen Agesilaus rolling in a Meadow, clad in a plain Cloak of poor Cloth, and Lean, Little, and Lame, made no more Account of him, than was made of King Lewis XI. who being chosen Arbiter of a Difference between the Kings of Navarre and Castile, the Spaniards at the Meeting Ridiculed the French and their King, who look'd like some Pilgrim of St. James's, with his Greasie Hat edg'd with Images, and his Jacket of a tan Colour Cloth, and who had no Majesty in his Face, no more, than in his Manner; and his Train accoutred like himself, for he could not endure to accoutred like himself, for he could not endure to see any body finely Dress'd; whereas the King of Castille, and his Retinue, Sumptuously Habited, and their Horses bravely Caparison'd, shewing a certain Spanish Grandeur, which made the Frenchmen look like their Valets. We shall see below (b) that we may trace this to an Author who lived before Bodin, and whom Varillas did not understand.

(I) The Expences of his Houshold——and of his

(a) In the Remark K

(b) Matrine credito cum enim Sabaudiensis sit Burgundis favere mihi semper visa est: alioquin bonam & pudicam illam sum arbitratus. Gaguin. History of France, l. 10 fol. 288.

(c) Mezerai ubi supra.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 343. ad. ann. 1481.

(e) Comines, liv. 6. chap. 13. pag. 406.

(f) Honorat. de Meynier responses libres aux demandes curieuses, pag. 590.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 591. 592.

(b) Piere Matthieu ubi supra liv. 6. ch. 19. p. 317.

(i) Philip de Comines liv. 4. ch. 7. pag. m. 222. ad ann. 1475

(k) La Mothe le Vayer opuscules 1. part pag. 83. in 8. tome de ses œuvres.

(l) Mezerai, ubi supra, pag. 290. ad ann. 1462

(m) That's to say, John King of Arragon, and Henry King of Castile.

(1) Short Habits Ridiculous for People of Quality.

(n) Bodin de la republique, liv. 6. chap. 2. circa fin. p. m. 900.

(2) Polyb. lib. 3.

(o) Bodin ibid. liv. 4. chap.

(b) In the last Remark.

Reſpects he was [redacted] Prodigal, and retained Penſioners in moſt Foreign Courts. He ſpent a great deal in Spies, upon Hunting, and (K) upon the Ladies, and rewarded thoſe liberally, who were the firſt Meſſengers of great News. He gave [redacted] Four Hundred Marks in Silver to Philip de Comines, and to the Seigneur de Bouthage, who brought him the firſt News of the Battle of Morat. He [redacted] ſometimes ſaid, I'll give as much more to another, who will tell me ſuch another piece of News. [redacted] often uſed to diſcourſe of, and gueſs at the Iſſue of Affairs before he had any [redacted]nt of 'em. This was one Sign of his Impatience, and we need not wonde[redacted] this, that he was the firſt King who [redacted] ſettled the Poſts. He made his Soldi[redacted]y their Quarters punctually, and ſeverely forbid 'em to do any Injury, and [redacted]hed the Diſobedient with the utmoſt rigour. This was the Reaſon (L) that [redacted] Kingdom, tho' ſufficiently loaded with Taxes, did, notwithſtanding grow rich. The enacting [redacted] See Matthieu in his Life, lib. 11. p. 699 700.

[redacted] Ibid.
[redacted] pag. 700.
[redacted] Id. ib. He cites Philip of Comines.
[redacted] Id. ib.
[redacted] Id. ib. pag. 696.

his Embaſſies.] Theſe are the Words of Peter Matthew, who wrote in the Reign of Henry IV. (a) The Expences of his Houſhold (b) were much Inferior to thoſe of ſome Lords of that time—: By the Accounts it appears, that they were Augmented according to the Years, Affairs and Penſions. They did not exceed 36 Thouſand Livres till the Year 1480. when they came to 43 Thouſand Six Hundred Nineteen Livers. In the Year 1481. they were 66 Thouſand Six Hundred Eighty Livers; and in the laſt Year of his Life 80 Thouſand Six Hundred and three Livers. Nevertheleſs he never ſtirred from Pleſſis from the 8*th of* November to the 7*th of* September the Year following, when he was carried to his Grave at Notre-Dame de Clery. The number of Servants for the ordinary Service of that Expence, was not great, their Wages were ſmall in Compariſon of what they are in our Days. They ſerved all the Year, and the Year began in October. None were in the Liſt of of his voluntary Penſions but theſe following. Two Chaplains at Ten Livers a Month each, and a [redacted] of the Chappel at a Hundred Sols. A Va[redacted] Chamber of of the King at 90 Livers a Year. [redacted] Clerks of the Kitchen at 120 Livers a Year each. An Overſeer of the Roaſt, the Pottager, the Sauce-maker, the Maſter Cook, a Diſpencer of the Armoury, two Valets of the Sumpters, at ten Livers each a Month. Two Scullions of the Kitchen at 8 Livers a Month; a Porter, a Paſtry-Cook, a Baker; two Coachmen, each at Sixty Livers a Year; a Groom of the Stables, and two of his Aſſiſtants at 24 Livers a Month; a Mareſchal of the Forges at 120. The Maſter of the Chamber of the King's Revenues 1200 Livers, and the Comptroller Five Hundred. The Valets Livieries coſt but 50 Sols, and the gowns of the Clerks, Notaries and Secretaries of the Houſe and Crown of France, but a dozen Livers.

(a) Matth. ubi ſupra, lib. 11. pag. 647.
(b) That's to ſay, of Lewis XI.
(c) La Roque traité de la nobleſſe chap. 96. pag. 338.
(d) Oliverius Dandus Legatus Ludovici XI. ad Mariam Burgundiam ab ea ludibrio habitus: ipſa enim quæſivit quid ſibi opus medico cum optime valeret quia erat tonſor ſeu chirurgus. Id. ibid. Il raporte cela comme de Gaguin, mais je ne le trouve point dans les Annales de cet Auteur.

We have already ſeen that this Prince employ'd his Barber on Embaſſies. He made him a Noble-Man by Patent in 1474. Inveſting him with the County of Meulant, and changed his Name from Oliver the Devil, into that of Oliver le Daim (c). He ſent him on a Compliment to the Heireſs of Burgundy, who laughed at him: (d) What, ſaid ſhe, have I to do with a Surgeon, I am very well? Mr. de Wicquefort (e) has mentioned this Deputation of Oliver le Daim.

(K) Upon Hunting, and upon the Ladies.] Lewis's (f) two Predominant Paſſions were for Hunting and the Ladies; and 'tis obſerved that his Bounty ran into an inconceiveable Exceſs, as often as he had a mind to gratify either of theſe two Paſſions. As for the Firſt, he kept a prodigious number of Huntſmen, Falconers, Hawks and Hounds, and was ſo Sollicitous of hindring thoſe who had the right of Hunting, from exerciſing it under any Pretence whatever, that 'twas more dangerous to kill a Stagg than a Man——When he parted from Lions, after he had received certain Advice of the Defeat of the Duke of Burgundy at Morat, he took with him to the great Scandal of good People, from this City, to that of Paris, two Miſtreſſes, (4) one called la Gigonne, a Widow, and the other la Puſſelon, a Merchant's Wife. Immediately after the Prince of Orange had made himſelf maſter of the Dutchy of Burgundy, he ſent for a young Lady, a perfect Beauty, called Huguette de Fequelin. But before all this were found in the Kings Library three Contracts of Marriage, which are ſo many Teſtimonies of his Incontinence, ſince he there appears in Quality of a Father of three natural Daughters, and Marries without Diſguiſing the matter. Peter Matthew will tell us that this Prince was at Expences for his Amours, even when he was reduced to the Neceſſity of borrowing. '(g) I have ſeen in the Chamber of the Re-'venues, that being on a Progreſs to Arras, he 'borrowed of one of his Servants, called James 'Hamelin, the Sum of three Hundred and Twenty 'Livers, ſixteen Sols and eight Deniers, to Em-'ploy in his Reaſu[redacted]nd Voluptuouſneſs, and 'ſending for a G[redacted]man of Dijon, called 'Huguette Faquelin, [redacted]ow to the deceaſed Phi-'lip Chamages, in Auguſt 1479, (i) one of his 'Carvers, who went to fetch her, advanced the 'Charges both of her Journey and of the ſtay 'that ſhe made at Tours.' Note, that at that time 20 Sols went farther than two Piſtols at preſent.

(f) Varillas ubi ſupra, liv. 10. pag.
(4) In the Manuſcripts of Meſſieurs du Puy.
(g) Matthieu ubi ſupra, liv. 11. p. 707
(i) This Expence from the 1*ſt. of* Auguſt to the 11*th. of* December, amounts to 298 Livers.

(L) That his Kingdom——did [redacted]ſtanding [redacted]w Rich.] Thus you ſee how the [redacted] Qualities of a Monarch are ſometimes compenſated with others, which, all things conſidered, make the People as happy as under a good and well-natured Sovereign. What Tacitus ſays, That the Diſorders of Government are interrupted by good Princes who ſucceed bad ones; and that this makes a Compenſation, is a good Thought. (h) Vitia erunt donec homines, ſed neque hæc continua, & meliorum interventu penſantur. But we may go farther, and ſay, that in the ſame Perſon the good and the bad Qualities ſometimes ſo Counterpoize one another, that more publick Advantages reſult from it, than from a certain uniform Goodneſs. Lewis XI. levied too much Money upon his Subjects, but he made that Money Circulate; for his Troops were obliged to pay exactly for whatever was neceſſary for 'em, and he never ſuffered 'em to Steal or Pilfer. Let us uſe [redacted]quine and Antique Style of John Couchet. [redacted] would have Juſtice Adminiſtred, the Churches Covered and not Pillaged; and he delighted in adorning Images and Monaſteries; and he ordered his Soldiers exactly to be paid their Wages, which his Treaſurers could not fail in without Peril of the Halter. He had a long time in his Pay above four thouſand Men of Arms, and a great number of Foot, called French Archers, with whom the Earth was quite covered, from Bourdeaux to Picardy. Amongſt whom there was ſo good Oeconomy and Military Diſcipline, that no Violence was known to be done to the poor People, except in one Place, where they ſtole ſome Beaſt, and in another, where they filched a Couple of Pullets, for which the Malefactors were immediately Hanged, tho' they were Men at Arms. For this Reaſon, tho' the People were burdened with great Aids and Subſidies, and the King Levied upon 'em four Millions, Seven hundred thouſand Livers in Taxes, yet the Kingdom of France was Rich, becauſe the Money which the People gave, paid the Soldiery, and the Soldiery afterwards gave part of what they had re[redacted]back, for what they had, and ſo it did not g[redacted]the Kingdom. For, this wiſe King never endeavoured to have two Crowns, nor an Imperial Scepter. Here you may obſerve a For well plac'd; nothing exhauſts a Kingdom more than That deſire of making Cr[redacted] in Foreign Countries, either for the Co[redacted]f Elections, or any other Conqueſt. Note th[redacted] this John Bouchet contradicts the other

(h) [redacted] 4[redacted]

Hiſto-

ing that Law, which makes Miſpriſion of Treaſon (M) a capital Crime, is aſcribed to him. He was ſubject to Caprices and Humours bordering upon Folly, and theſe were ſometimes (N) the Rule of his Favours and Benefits. As he was infinitely deſirous Hiſtor[illegible] who affirm, that Lewis XI. much Impover[illegible]is Subjects, and Imploy'd a great deal of Mo[illegible] maintaining Penſioners and Intelligencers in [illegible]gn Countries.

(M) A[illegible]ſion of Treaſon, a Capital Crime.] This Tex[illegible]t unworthy the Readers Curioſity, but the C[illegible]t much more deſerves it, as containing ve[illegible]icular Circumſtances of Thuanus's Trial. I [illegible] only be the Count de Brienne's Tranſcriber, who was Miniſter and Secretary of State. 'The true occaſion of m[illegible]macy with 'the Chancellor, ſays he, (a) w[illegible] Promiſe he 'made, and which he faithfully [illegible] of contributing all he could to the Deliver[illegible] of Thuanus; 'and indeed he Acted with ſo much Zeal in it, 'that tho' there was a Law made in Lewis XI's 'time declaring, that whoever ſhould have notice 'of a Conſpiracy form'd againſt the King's Perſon, 'or Eſtate, and did not come and reveal it, 'ſhould be puniſh'd as the Author of the Crime, 'and Incur the ſame Penalties of loſs of Life and 'Eſtate; tho' I ſay [illegible] compleat a Magiſtrate, as 'the Chancellor, in t[illegible]nowledge of our King's 'Ordinances, could [illegible] ignorant of one of this 'Importance, yet [illegible]mbled the Knowledge of 'it, and carried [illegible]f on this Occaſion, as if 'he made no Account of the Law; for after having often adviſed Thuanus, when he was Examined and flew out according to his lively and 'brisk manner, to give himſelf time to hear what 'was aske[illegible]him, and to conſider what he ought to 'Anſwe[illegible] did not ſtick to ſpeak out, and d[illegible] 'clar'd t[illegible]dinal de Richlieu himſelf, to p[illegible] him for his Acquittal, that he found no [illegible] which condemn'd to Death a Perſon who had Knowledge of a Conſpiracy form'd againſt the State, unleſs he was an Accomplice in it; that as to the Accus'd, it appear'd indeed that Fontrailles, at his Return from Spain, had given him ſome Intelligence, but that he diſapproved the Deſign, and blamed this Gentleman for having ſerv'd as an Inſtrument to engage Monſieur in ſo Odious a Buſineſs. Cardinal Richelieu ſurpriz'd at this Diſcourſe conſulted with ſome of the Commiſſioners of the Chamber, one of which having related the Ordinance I have mentioned, he caus'd it to be Tranſcrib'd from the Body of the Law, and ſhew'd it to the Chancellor himſelf; but tho' he was preſs'd ſo by this Miniſter (whoſe way of Acting on ſuch Occaſions is but too well known) yet he could not be brought off from the Re[illegible]n he had taken of diſcharging the Ac[illegible]; but went on to Invalidate that Ordinance, ſaying, That it was not in uſe in the Parliament of Paris, where he had been bred. I can't diſown but when the Votes were taken, he was of the Side of the Decree; but as his Vote could not abſolve Thuanus, ſo it was not that which cauſed his Condemnation, and every one who knows the Duty of a Preſident will acknowledge, that he can't depart from a Law, which all the Judges declare Valid, much leſs from a Majority of Opinions when given in Form; 'tis alſo a great Error, and which I am, with all the Lawyers very far from entertaining, that it is in a Judge's Power, as a Pacifick Arbitrator, to pronounce according to Equity, and not according to the Rigour of the Law; for beſides that his Oath obliges him to do Juſtice, the Character of a Judge does not appoint him Maſter, but only Preſerver and Miniſter of the Laws and Ordinances'.

(a) Reponſe aux Memoires de Mr. le Comte de la Chaſtre p. m. 20. & ſuiv.

Some Particulars relating to the Tryal of Thuanus.

This [illegible]ing not only an Hiſtorical but a Critical Diction[illegible]l may be allowed to make ſome Reflexi[illegible] this Narrative of the Count de Bylienne. [illegible] then, that there are ſome Paſſages in it, which make not much for the Honour of the Chancellor. That which is alledged in his Excuſe, of being for the Decree, has a great deal of Weight; but on the other hand, it may be implead as a Conviction againſt him; for if he ought [illegible] the Miniſter of the Laws and Ordinances, he ought not to have attempted to have brought off Thuanus, that is, to invalidate the Ordinance of Lewis XI. He ſhould either have refuſed the Function of Judge, or have diveſted himſelf of all Friendſhip, as well as Hatred for the accuſed Perſon; and had no other view than the Diſcovery of the Fact, and giving his Suffrage according to the Ordinance. Inſtead of this, we are told here, that he ſeemed to be ignorant, that there was any Law which affected the Criminal; and being adverti[illegible]ſed that there was, he anſwered, that it was not in uſe. Why then did he conform to it, in giving his Vote? For what end was he their Preſerver and Miniſter of the Laws! He could not be excuſed, either of oppreſſing Innocence or of Prevarication; for if the Law of Lewis XI. was obſolete and out of uſe, Thuanus could not be reckoned an Infringer of the Laws, but muſt be declared innocent. But if in pronouncing him guilty, nothing was done but according to Law, it follows, that the Ordinance of Lewis XI. had preſerved its Force, and conſequently, that the Chancellor diſcharged the Duties of his Place but ill, in endeavouring to make it believed, that there was no Law of this Nature in being, and when this was made appear, then in alledging, that it was not obſerved in the Parliament of Paris. There is reaſon to ſuſpect, that this was a Subterfuge, and that he only ſpoke thus, that he might not be reckoned ignorant of an Ordinance of Lewis XI; for [illegible] is it probable, that the Parliament of Paris [illegible]d diſpence with the Subjects Obligation of [illegible]vealing Treaſon? This Obligation ſeems inſeparable from the Oath of Allegiance to the Sovereign. Mr. du Maurier (b) relates, that one of de Barnevelt's Sons was beheaded at the Hague, for being privy to the Conſpiracy his Brother had formed againſt Prince Maurice, and not revealing of it; having not been accuſed by any of the Conſpirators who were executed in great Numbers in all the Towns of Holland——(c) He had the ſame Deſtiny as Francis Thuanus, who died for not revealing the Deſign that Mr. de Cinq Mars, Great Maſter of the Horſe of France, had communicated to him. The Du Puy's Noble Relations, cauſed to be printed on this Subject, wherein a Diſcourſe to be printed on this Subject, wherein to prove the Iniquity of the Sentence, amongſt o-other Paſſages, they made uſe of this of Gigas a Milaneſe Lawyer. Qui conſilium adverſus Majeſtatem Principis initum cognoverunt, nec probare poſſunt, non tenentur revelare: & qui tales condemnant, non ſunt Judices, ſed carnifices. They who know a Conſpiracy againſt a Sovereign, and can't prove it, are not obliged to reveal it; and they who condemn ſuch, are not Judges, but Murderers. By this Milaneſe Lawyer's Favour, Thuanus's Judges did their Duty, but the Court did not; for never any Fault of that kind was more worthy of Pardon than Thuanus's. I am not ignorant of the fine Diſtick (d).

(b) Du Maurier, Memoires pour ſervir à l'hiſtoire de Hollande p. 373.
(c) Id. ib. pag. 374.
(d) Theſe two Verſes of Grotius on the Death of Thuanus, are excellent, O legum ſubtile nefas, quibus inter amicos Nolle fidem fruſtra prodere, proditio eſt. Menagiana, pag. m. 313. 314. Note that Grotius, Epiſt. 627. part. 1. pag. 945. mentions that he heard of the Opinion of Gigas, &c.

(N) To Humours which bordered upon Folly, and theſe were ſometimes the Rule of his Benefits.] He once commanded '(e) the Abbot of Eugne, 'a Man of great Wit, and who had a knack at 'inventing nevv Muſical Inſtruments, and al-'vvays attended the King, and vvas in his Ser-'vice, to get him (a Conſort of Svvines Voices, 'thinking it impoſſible. The Abbot vvas not ſur-'prized, but demanded Money for the Perfor-'mance; which was immediately delivered him, 'and he wrought a thing as ſingular as was ever 'ſeen. For out of a great Number of Hogs, of 'ſeveral Ages, which he muſter'd up, and placed 'under a Tent or Pavillion, covered with Velvet, '(before which he had a Sound-Board of Wood, all 'painted, vvith a certain Number of Keys) he 'made an Organ, and as he plaid upon the ſaid 'Keys vvith little Spikes, vvhich pricked the 'Hogs, he made 'em cry in ſuch Tune and Con-'ſort, desirous (O) of prolonging his Life, no Person experienc'd his Liberality more than his Physician. He gave him an absolute Authority over him. He was very credulous as to Astrology; but I know not what to think of a Story related by certain Authors, that at last he preferred an Ass to his (P) Astrologers, and swore that silly

(e) Bouchet Annales d' Aquitaine, fol. 146

'sort, as highly delighted the King and all his 'Company. Bouchet adds to this the Story of a 'Scullion. The King, dress'd in a very plain 'Cloth, went one Day into the Kitchin, and 'asked a Boy that turned the Spit some Questions, 'who not knowing him, answered; I am a 'Native of Berry (a), such a one's Son, and my 'Name is Stephen; I serve the King here in mean 'Quality, and yet I get as much as he. The King 'asked him what the King got? His Expences '(said the Boy), and by my Faith, I will have 'my Expences of him, as he has of God, and he'll 'carry away no more than I. The King (who 'sometimes raised People in a Frolick) was pleas'd with the Answer, and Stephen made his 'Fortune by it; for the King made him his Valet 'de Chamber, and he grew very rich. Some say 'this was Stephen the Usher, who was so loved 'by the King, that when at any Time he gave 'him a Box o'th' Ear in Anger, he pretended to 'be sick, and immediately the King gave him a 'Thousand, or two Thousand Crowns. This 'King was very familiar with those he loved; 'and despised Royal Pomp and costly Cloaths; he eat 'and drank always in the Hall, with all his Lords 'and Gentlemen, and they who were hard Drinkers, 'and they who had any lascivious Jest upon Women, were very welcome. One Day, as he 'entred into a Church, whilst the great Bell 'went, he saw a poor Priest sleeping before the 'Door, and understanding that the Bells went for 'a Canon deceased, whose Benefice was in his 'own Nomination, he ordered the Priest to succeed him, to verify the Proverb, That he is happy whose good Fortune comes when he is asleep (b). Let's add to all this, a Passage of Stephen Pasquier. (c) Now, though Lewis XI. pretended to great Zeal for Religion and Piety, yet he used them sometimes according to the Convenience of his Affairs, sometimes out of a wonderful Superstition; thinking all things were lawful to him, when he had performed some Pilgrimage. In short, a Man of arbitrary Humours, by means of which, right or wrong, he put in and put out what Officers he pleased, and upon the same Foot, sometimes ran into Fooleries and Impertinencies, in which he would not be contradicted. As when he ordered all the Birds of Paris that could speak, to be brought into his Chamber to divert himself with their Gibberish.

The Jesuit Garasse has censured these Words of Pasquier, and made himself ridiculous. For a Subject, says he (d) to take the Boldness of thinking, speaking, and writing, that his King was a Fool, or subject to Fooleries and Impertinencies, is such an Extravagance and Insolence, as deserves Chastisement——— (e) I remember this Device of some old Slanderers, who to stain the Honour of a brave Emperor, said of his Religion, that aliam sibi aliam servabat imperio, that he had two Religions in his Sleeve, one for shew, and another for Conscience, one for the Closet, another for the Mall, one for himself, and another for his Subjects——— (f) That a Subject should describe his King as an Atheist! who plays with God and Religion, and makes Theramenes's Buskins of both, and takes Pilgrimages to canonize his Impieties: I question whether the Ministers have written so much of Charles IX.——— (g) This is a Symptom of an unnatural Spirit, and a very undutiful Disposition. The Answer that was made to this Invective of Garasse, could not but confound him; he was shewed (h) what was the Duty of an Historian, and 'twas maintained against him, that the first Scandal proceeds from him who commits the Evil, not from him who relates it, and that Pasquier said nothing but what he had found in the Histories of Lewis XI. We must not forget the Words of Tacitus (i), which teach us, that the main Design of an Historian ought to be the preserving the Memory of good Actions, and making Posterity dread the Infamy of bad ones.

I omit the Four Stories related in Erasmus's Colloquies; for though they denote a very singular and unequal Method of Rewarding, they are rather good Proofs of the Dexterity at distinguishing the Artifices of a Sharper, from true Merit, than Signs of a whimsical Humour. Let's only give the Abstract of one of these Four Stories (k). A Countryman, at whose House Lewis XI. in the time of his Disgrace, had sometimes eaten Raddishes, was very well recompenced for the Present he made him of a large Raddish, after he was upon the Throne. This made a Lord of the Court believe, that if he gave the King a fine Horse, he should receive a magnificent Reward, but the King only ordered him the Countryman's Raddish.

(O) Infinitely desirous of prolonging his Life——he gave his Physician an absolute Authority over him.] Concerning this Passage, see the Miscellaneous Thoughts (l) upon Comets, and add to 'em this Reflection. 'Tis believed, that his Devotion for St. Servatus, was founded upon this Saint's long Life. The Legendaries say, that he lived three Ages, others are content to give him a Bishoprick, which he enjoy'd above Sixty Years. Instituit, Belgarum maxime populis opinione, affinem illum Christi, ejusque supperem temporibus extitisse atque inde excepisse tertiam hominum ætatem: sive ita fuerit, neque enim desunt, affirmare hoc ausi, seu notibus ex longissimam Episcopatus sui præfecturam, non altera septuaginta annos illum extendit; prodigaliter annosam ac trisecli senem planè crediderint. Ut hinc suspicari forte quis possit Ludovicum Undecimum Galliæ Regem id eo sibi ornandum delegisse Serbatii templum, ut ab eo inter Divos maximè longævo, longam ipse vitam, cujus erat producendo secupientissimus, impetravit (m). Let us not forget this, Lewis XI. '(n) had often said in his Life-'time, that in whatever Extremity he should be, 'they should never pronounce on him the Word of 'Death, thinking it too harsh for the Ear of a 'a King———They who had the Charge of 'his Conscience, expected, that he himself finding himself going, should acknowledge it. One 'Divine, his Physician, and Mr. Oliver, took a 'a Resolution to signify his Extremity to him. 'They went to him boldly, and with little Respect, as People who had added Impudence to the meanness of their Condition, and their Speech 'was in these Words: Sir, we are obliged to discharge our Consciences, confide no longer in this 'Holy Man, nor in any thing else; for assuredly 'you are no Man for this World, take care of your 'Conscience, for there is no Remedy. Each of 'em spoke some such short Sentence, to let him 'know, that they were all of the same Opinion 'concerning his Death. He answered, I hope 'God will assist me, I am not perhaps so ill as you 'imagine. What shall we say of the Caresses he made to Francis de Paul? (o) 'He flattered him, 'supplicated him, threw himself on his Knees 'before him, built two Convents of his Order, 'the first in the Park du Plessis les Tours, the second at the foot of the Castle of Amboise, that 'he might prolong his Days for him. As to the Authority of his Physician, read these Words, Lewis XI. (p) changed his Servants Day after 'Day, and depended on the Unskilfulness of John 'Cottier his Physician, to whom he gave Ten 'Thousand Crowns a Month, durst refuse him no-'thing, and promised him all he could ask, provided he would drive away the terrible (1) Phantom of Death, at the mention whereof he would 'run behind the Curtains. This Physician some 'times told him in a Bravado, I know well enough, 'that some Morning or other you'll send me pack-'ing as well as the rest, but I swear by God, that 'you shall not live Eight Days after. This poor 'Prince, instead of treating him as Maximin (2) 'did his, gave him all he desired, Bishopricks, 'Benefices, and Offices.

(P) He at last preferred an Ass to his Astrologers.] The Story is this, which I relate Word for Word, as I find it in a Work printed at Lyons in the Year 1650. (q) Lewis XI. having a most famous Astrologer in his Court, and intending 'one

(a) Id. ib. verso.
(b) Pierre Matthieu hist. de Louis XI. liv. 11. pag. m. 702. says, that Corrozet relates this Story. Du Verdier Vau-Privas, pag. 959. of his Bibliotheque Françoise, attributes this to Francis I. but since he says, he was certainly informed, that the matter passed in the Church of Nostre Dame de Clery, we ought to believe, that they gave him Quid for Quo: for Lewis XI. frequented this Church.
(c) Pasquier, lettr liv. 3. tom. 1. pag. 154, 155.
(d) Garasse, recherche des recherches, p. 79.
(e) Id. ib. pag. 83.
(f) Id. ib. pag. 85.
(g) Id. ib. pag. 86.
(h) See la defense pour Estienne Pasquier, liv. 2. sect. 6. p. 181. and the following.
(i) Præcipuum munus annalium reor, ne virtutes sileantur, utque pravis dictis factisque ex posteritate & infamia metus sit. Tacit. Annal. lib. 3. cap. 65.
(k) See [illegible] in colloquio cui titulus est Convivium fabulosum, p. m. 345.
(l) A la page 462. & suiv.
(m) Famianus Strada de bello belg. decad. 2. l. 2. init. p. m. 69.
(n) Matthieu ubi supra, l. 10. p. 598, 599.
(o) Mezerai ubi supra, pag. 348. ad ann. 1483.
(p) Matthieu ubi supra, pag. 593. Semblable Mezzerai ubi supra, pag. 347. where he says, that James Cottier snub'd him like a Foot-Boy, and got out of him 55000 Crowns, under great many Favours in Five Months Time.
(1) Alexander Tyrant of Pharos, lived in such Fears, that the Chamber where he lay, was guarded by two terrible Mastiffs, and there was no coming to it but by a Ladder.
(2) Maximin ordered his Physicians to be put to Death, because they could not cure him.
(q) J. Marcel in the 2d. Book de la Sage folio. ch. 7. pag. m. 107. and following.

...lly Beast ſhould ever after be his Oracle before the beſt of the Tribe of Aſtrologers. I ſhall not repeat what I have ſaid [α] in another Place, concerning the Hypocriſie of his Devotions. Paſquier has made a right Judgment on 'em, and could not in Juſtice be cenſured [β] for what he had ſaid upon that Point, and ſome others. There never was a King in France, whoſe (Q) cruel Conduct and Extortions ſo nearly bord[illegible] upon Tyranny, as thoſe of Lewis XI. We ſhall ſee in another [γ] Place in this [illegible]onary, what an abſolute Submiſſion he required of the Parliament of Paris. In the m[illegible]time, he had eminent Qualities, and ſuch as were abſolutely neceſſary in his Circu[illegible]ces; for without theſe he never could have maintained the Monarchy againſt Do[illegible]ck and Foreign Enemies, againſt ſo many Factions of his own Subjects, and [illegible]rude Attacks of the Duke of Burgundy, ſeconded by England. He not only preſerved his Dominions in the midſt of ſo many Aſſaults, but alſo enlarged 'em; for he reunited A[illegible], Maine, and the Dutchy of Burgundy [δ] to the Crown, and acquired Proven[illegible] was in his Power to have added to it all the Eſtates α In the Penſees diverſes ſur les Cometes, n. 152. 154. See alſo Varillas ubi ſupra, p. 330.

β See the Rem. N.

γ In the Article Vaquerie.

δ Matth. ib. liv. 10. pag. 601.

ε See Tacitus Annal. l. 6. c. 21. (d) Matthieu ubi ſupra, l. 11. ch. 6. pag. 674. & ſuiv.

(ζ) The Cardinal de la Balue, who invented the Iron Cages, was the firſt who handſelled 'em, and lived in 'em 14 Years. Lacum fudit & aperuit eum, & incidit in foveam quam fecit.

(η) The Reign of Antoninus was ſo mild, that Herodian calls it, [illegible], that's to ſay, unbloody.

(θ) Matth. ib. p. 672.

(ι) Id. ib. pag. 678.

(κ) Strange Stories are told of his Executions. The Chronicle ſays, that on Thurſday the 8*th. of* October, Triſtan the Hermit had a Man drowned in the Seine, called Sylveſter the Monk, a Native of one Day to go a Hunting, aſked him, whether it would be fair Weather, or whether he did not ſuſpect it would Rain, who having conſulted his Aſtrolabe, anſwered, that the Day would be fair and ſerene; the King determined therefore to purſue his Deſign; but having rode out of Paris, and coming near the Foreſt, he met a Collier driving his Aſs, laden with Coals, who ſaid, that the King would do well to return, becauſe there would ſuddenly be a great Storm; but as what ſuch People ſay is but little regarded, the King made no Account of him, but rode into the Foreſt, and was not long there but the Day grew dark, Thunder and Lightning came on, and the Rain fell in ſuch Abundance, that every one endeavouring to ſave himſelf, the King was left alone, who had no Recourſe, but to his [illegible]'s Heels, to eſcape this Misfortune. Next Day the King having ſent for the Collier, aſked him where he had learnt Aſtrology, and how he could ſo exactly foretell what ſhould come to paſs; the Collier anſwered, Sir, I was never at School, and indeed I can neither Write nor Read; nevertheleſs, I keep a good Aſtrologer in my Houſe, who never deceives me; the King being amazed, aſked him what was his Aſtrologer's Name, upon which the poor Man, quite abaſhed, anſwered, Sir, it is the Aſs which your Majeſty Yeſterday ſaw me leading, loaden with Coal; immediately before bad Weather comes, he hangs down his Ears as he goes, he walks more ſlowly than uſual, and rubs himſelf againſt the Walls; by theſe Signs (Sir), I certainly foreſee Rain, which is the Reaſon that Yeſterday I adviſed your Majeſty to turn home: The King hearing this, caſhier'd his Aſtrologer, and gave his Salary to the Collier, that he might [illegible] much of his Aſs, ſaying: Vivit enim [illegible], quia deinceps alio non utar Aſtrologo, [illegible] carbonarii aſino. Alas, poor Aſtrologers, where have you lived, if an Aſs knows more than you? I have ſaid elſewere (a) that Angelo Catthо, who had been the King's Aſtrologer and Phyſician, arrived to great Honours. You'll find in Peter Matthieu, the Names of this King's other Aſtrologers. It's ſaid, that one of 'em prophecied, that a Lady whom the King loved would die in a Week's Time. The thing happening, Lewis XI. ſent for him (b), and commanded the People about him not to fail at a Signal he ſhould give 'em, to take the Aſtrologer, and throw him out of the Window. As ſoon as the King ſaw him: You that pretend, ſays he, to be ſuch a wiſe Man, and know ſo perfectly the Fate of others inform me a little what will be your own, and how long you have to live? Whether the Aſtrologer was ſecretly advertiſed of the King's Deſign, or whether he knew [illegible] the Extent of his Science: Sir, anſwered [illegible] without expreſſing any Fear, I ſhall die three Days before your Majeſty. The King was ſo [illegible] from having him thrown out of the Window after this Anſwer, that on the contrary, he took particular care not to ſuffer him to want for any thing, and did all that was poſſible to retard the Death of a Man, which his own [illegible] ſo cloſely to follow. This Aſtrologer was [illegible]s ingenious than he who delivered himſelf [illegible] a like Danger in Tiberius's Time. And [illegible]ing asked what the Stars predicted to him that Day; anſwerd, after ſome artificial Preambles, that he found himſelf menaced with an extream Danger. This Anſwer was the reaſon, notonly of his not being thrown from the top of the Houſe, as it had been reſolved, in caſe his Science ſhould be found fallacious, but alſo of Tiberius's honouring him with his Confidence (c).

(a) In the Article Catthо.

(b) Bourfault nouvelles lettres, p.m. 394. 395.

(Q) Whoſe cruel Conduct and Extortions ſo nearly bordered upon Tyranny.] (d) Had Comines deſigned to give the Portraiture of a cruel Prince, he could have imployed no ſtronger Colours than theſe which deſcribe his rigorous Priſons, his Iron-Cages and Nets. (3) He ſays, they were made of Wood, covered with Plates of Iron, which he had got ſome Germans to make with very weighty and terrible Irons to put on the Feet, and in which there was a Ring to put one Foot in, very hard to be opened, like an Iron-Collar, with a thick and heavy Chain, and a great Iron-Ball at the end, much heavier than it ſhould have been in Reaſon, and thoſe were called the King's Nets——The Reign of this Prince was terribly tempeſtuous; but it can't be ſaid of it as of that of Antoninus, that it was not ſtained with Blood. (4) Triſtan his Grand Provoſt, who juſtly deſerved by his barbarous and bloody Conduct, the Name of Triſtis. as Maximin did, was ſo ready to execute his rigorous Commands, that he ſometimes deſtroy'd the Innocent with the Guilty, and always diſpoſed this Prince, rather to uſe the Sword to puniſh Offences, than the Bridle to reſtrain Men from offending——Claude de Seyſſel could ſay nothing more Satirical on the Memory of this Prince, than what he writ, that about the Places where he was, were ſeen a great Number of People hanging on Trees, and the Priſons and other Neighbouring Houſes full of Priſoners, which were often heard both by Day and by Night to cry out for the Torments they endured, beſides thoſe who were ſecretly caſt into Rivers. The ſame Hiſtorian obſerves (e) that Lewis XI. carried his abſolute Power to exceſs. His Provoſt went and took the Priſoners, who were in the Palace-Goal, and cauſed 'em to be drowned near the Grange aux Mercier, —— —— (f) Beſides the Examples of the Contempt of Juſtice, which are not clearly explained in many Parts of the Hiſtory of Lewis XI. in which we ſee Trials begin by Execution, and Executions without Example, (5) It ſays, that in many Proceſſes, he would have Juſtice done according to his own Humour, and would not truſt to thoſe, who had the Diſpenſing of it. A Place alſo is ſtill ſhewn at Pleſſis La Tours, where he concealed himſelf to watch his Provoſt, when he examined the Priſoners——(g) There were repreſented to the States which were held after his Death, ſeveral ſorts of Injuſtices, which during his Reign had afflicted the People, each complaining that he had not taken care to maintain the Rules of Juſtice. It was ſaid in that Aſſembly, that the King had raiſed to Offices of Judicature, Men without Sufficiency and Experience, and that blank Patents were ready drawn, to inſert the Names of thoſe who bid moſt, which were given to Soldiers, Huntſmen, Foreigners, and illiterate People;

Auxerre. (g) Id. ib. pag. 679. 680.

ſtates (R) of the Houſe of Burgundy, by matching the Heireſs with the Dauphin; but a ſurpriſing Fatality ſo infatuated him in this Point, that he could not ſacrifice a perſonal Paſſion to the moſt ſolid Advantage he ever could have procured France for the preſent and the future. He was blamed that he would ſuffer his Enemies to make Conqueſts in Germany, and prolong a Truce, which gave 'em Opportunities of ple, that they might exerciſe 'em by others, and reap the Profit of 'em; that the Secretaries of the Chancery were paid exceſſively at their Diſcretion, and that for a Seal to confirm a Privilege to a City, they had exacted Four Hundred Pounds of Gold. That Letters of Appeal to the Chancery and Parliament, were denied to thoſe who had Recourſe to the Supreme Juſtice of the King, againſt the Injuſtices and Oppreſſions of inferiour Judges; that they who preſided in the Parliaments, exacted great and exceſſive Fees to reimburſe themſelves for the Offices they had bought; that many had been accuſed of Crimes, of which they were innocent, and the Accuſers rewarded with the Confiſcation of their Eſtates, and ſometimes commiſſioned to make the Trial, or name what Commiſſioners they thought fit; that the Number of Serjeants was multiplied in ſuch a manner; that in the Bailliwicks and Seneſchalries, in which there were wont to be only 20 or 30, there were in his Reign 100, or double the Number. Many Lords and others addreſſed themſelves to this Aſſembly for the Reſtitution of their Goods, Lands and Offices, of which they had been deprived. It was repreſented to the ſame Eſtates (a) that Men, Women and Children, were in ſeveral Places forced, for want of Beaſts, to labour with the Plough to their Necks, and that by Night, for fear the Day might expoſe 'em to the Commiſſioners of the Taxes.

(a) Matthieu, ibid. pag. 711.

We'll finiſh this Remark with a Paſſage of Mezerai. Comines, ſays he (b), deſcribes him to us very prudent in Adverſity, admirably skilled at penetrating the Intereſts and Deſigns of Men, and at drawing and turning them to his own Ends, furiouſly ſuſpicious and jealous of his Power, moſt abſolute in his Will, who never pardoned, and who terribly trampled his Subjects under Foot, and yet with all this, the beſt Prince of his time. He had put to Death above 4000 Perſons by different Puniſhments, which he ſometimes delighted to ſee. Moſt of 'em had been executed without Form of Law, many drowned with a Stone tied to their Necks, others precipitated, hanging upon a Swipe, from whence they fell upon Wheels armed with Spikes and cutting Inſtruments; others were ſtrangled in Dungeons; Triſtan his Companion, and Provo of his Palace, being Judge and Witneſs, and Executioner.

(b) Mezerai ubi ſupra, pag. 348, 349.

(R) To have added to it all the Eſtates of the Houſe of Burgundy by matching——but a Fatality.] The Princeſs Mary, Heireſs of all theſe Eſtates, had a mind to marry the Dauphin, and negotiated this Affair by her principal Counſellors. They removed all the Difficulties that Lewis XI. propoſed to 'em: His Son (c) he ſaid, was not yet Nine Years old; he was extraordinary little for his Age; his Conſtitution could not either be more weak or more tender. Nothing was more dangerous for him than an early Marriage.

(c) Varillas ubi ſupra, liv. 8. pag. 167.

They replied (d) that the Affairs of that Princeſs would not admit any Delay of her Marriage; but that when it ſhould be accompliſhed with the Dauphin, there might be Ways found to retard the Conſummation as long as it might be judged prejudicial to either of the Parties. That Mary of Burgundy had declared ſhe would willingly wait as long as they thought convenient; but that her Subjects had at preſent Occaſion for a Maſter. The King replied, that the Means they ſpoke of were not infallible; and that in the mean time, the Health of his only Son was ſo precious to him, that he could not expoſe it to a Danger ſo great for a young Prince, as that of a preſent Marriage to a young Lady, who was but too capable of conſummating it. The Flemings in Truth endeavoured to convince Lewis, that his Fear was imaginary, and not being able to effect it, they made him a ſecond Propoſition, which was no better received than the firſt. This was the Marriage of the Princeſs to Charles (e) Count of Angoulême. The King was ſo blind as to ſlip this the moſt glorious and advantagious Opportunity that Heaven could have offered him. His hatred (f) for the Duke of Burgundy was extream, and whimſical withal. It did not ſtop at his Perſon, but extended to that of his Daughter, for this only reaſon, that the Duke was her Father. This Daughter had never done Lewis any ill, and yet he was ſo little equitable on her Account, as to chuſe, that the Eſtates ſhe inherited ſhould be poſſeſſed by Strangers, rather than aſſure himſelf of 'em in a lawful Way, by ſuch an Alliance. This ſhews, that the Paſſions of Monarchs don't always turn with the Wind of their Intereſts. They are accuſed of this Fault, and ſuppoſed to diveſt themſelves of Friendſhip and Hatred, with the greateſt Eaſe, when their Grandeur requires it; this may be true, generally ſpeaking, but they all have like other Perſons, ſome ſecret Paſſions, or certain Antipathies, on ſome Occaſions which don't permit them to govern themſelves otherwiſe than according to the Inſtinct of this Diſpoſition; to which they ſacrifice their Glory, their Prudence, and moſt valuable Intereſts. Philip de Comines aſcends to a higher Cauſe, and deſerves to be heard.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 168.

(e) Who was the Father of Francis I. ſo that by this Management, theſe Countries had been ſoon united to France. See Mezerai ubi ſupra, pag. 332. but as Lewis XI. could not foreſee this, there's no ground to blame him on this Score, eſpecially having ſolid Reaſons againſt aggrandizing the Princes of the Blood. See the Bourgogne (Marie.)

(f) Varillas, ibid.

(g) Notwithſtanding that Lewis XI. was thus free from all Apprehenſions, God permitted him not to take this matter, which was ſo great, by the moſt uſeful Handle; and God ſeems to have ſhewn then, as he has done ſince, that he would rigorouſly perſecute this Houſe of Burgundy, both in the Perſon of the Lord of it, and of the Subjects having their Eſtates in it. For all the Wars which they have had ſince, would not have happened, if the King our Maſter had taken things by the end he ſhould have done, to compleat their Happineſs, and unite to his Crown all theſe great Lordſhips, to which he had no Pretenſions of Right. Which he ought to have done by ſome Treaty of Marriage, or have attracted them to him by good and true Friendſhip; which he eaſily might have done, conſidering the great Deſpair, Poverty and Weakneſs, in which theſe Lordſhips were. By doing which, he had reſcued 'em from great Troubles, and at the ſame time had ſtrengthned his own Kingdom, and ſecured it by a laſting Peace——(h) When the Duke of Burgundy was yet alive, the King often talked to me of what he would do, if the Duke ſhould die, and he ſpoke with great Reaſon at that time, ſaying, that he would endeavour to marry his Son (who is our King at preſent) to the Duke's Daughter, (who ſince has been Dutcheſs of Auſtria) and if ſhe would not hearken to it, becauſe the Dauphin was much younger than ſhe, he would endeavour to marry her to ſome young Lord of his Kingdom, to keep her and her Subjects in Friendſhip, and to recover without Conqueſt, what he pretended a Title to; and the King was ſtill in this Mind, till a Week before he heard of the death of the Duke. But this wiſe Reſolution, I ſpeak of, began to change a little, the Day that he knew of the Death of the ſaid Duke of Burgundy. He expreſſes himſelf ſtill more preciſely in the following Chapter, for he expreſly ſays, that God blinded this Prince, in order to puniſh thoſe who did not deſerve to be happy. (i) Our King's Underſtanding was ſo great, that neither I nor any one elſe in the Company could ſee ſo clearly into his Affairs as he himſelf; for doubtleſs he was one of the wiſeſt and moſt politick Princes of his Time. But in theſe great Affairs, God diſpoſes the Hearts of Kings and great Princes, (which he holds in his Hand) to purſue Methods ſubſervient to the Works which he deſigns to bring about in due time. For beyond all Controverſie, if it had been his Will, that our King ſhould continue the Reſolution which he himſelf had taken before the Duke of Burgundy's Death, the Wars which ſince have followed, and thoſe which are waged at this Day, would all have been prevented; but we were not worthy on any ſcore

(g) Philippe de Comines, liv. 5. chap. 12. pag. m. 300. ad. ann. 1476.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 301.

(i) Id. ib. chap. 13. pag. 303.

or

(a) The Ancients, Remark I.

(b) Horat. Epist. 2. l. 1. v. 14.

† See Shada, in the beginning of his History of the Wars of the Low-Countries: he says among other things that Mars makes Visits to other Countries, but keeps his ordinary Residence here: Plane ut in alias terras peregrinari Mars, ac circumferre bellum, hic armorum sedem fixisse videatur.

(c) Varillas, preface du t. 5. de l'hist de l'heresie.

(d) Rem. on a Dissertation of the Sieur de Gremonville, p. 68. The Author of the Religio Medici had said the same thing before, 1 Sect. 16. p. m. 96. De qua (Hollandia) superbe satis tyrannus Turcicus, si quantum Hispano molestiæ negotiique ab illa ortum esset, sibi obtigisset, minsurum se fuisse dixit qui ligonibus furculisque in mare conjicerent.

(e) That's to say, Holland against the King of Spain.

(f) Mala Coil. 1.

of making Additions to their Greatness. This (S) Censure was ill-grounded. He died the 30th. of August 1483, after so tedious and severe Ailments of (T) Body and

'or in any respect, to obtain that long Peace which 'was held forth to our Sight; and hence proceeds 'the oversight of our King, and not from any 'Defect in his Understanding; for, as I have said 'before, he was a very great Man. Nothing can be more judicious than this Discourse. We must say of this oversight of Lewis XI. what the Physicians say of some Distempers, that there's something supernatural in 'em, below n. Herodotus would speak out more frankly than any other; he who conceived the Deity (a) as a jealous and malignant Nature; for the Event has shewn, that it was for the Punishment of the People that God permitted the Marriage of Mary of Burgundy and the Dauphin should not take Effect.

(b) Quicquid delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi.

The Marriage of this Princess with Maximilian of Austria, was the Original of a War, which has lasted above two Hundred Years, and which in all probability will last much longer. It has been sometimes interrupted by the meer Languor of the Combatants, only to return like intermitting Fevers, when the disipated Humours have had time to Recruit. Hence we may derive those Rivers of Blood, those repeated Burnings, Ravagings, and Desolations. There's Reason to wonder how a Country of so little extent has been able to furnish for so many Ages an ample Theatre of War to such numerous Armies †: France and the House of Austria, the principal Parties, who have Disputed this Piece of Ground, have ingag'd most of the Christian Princes in their Quarrel; for when ever the Ballance of Power has been on the side of the latter, the former has been seconded in its Attacks; and when the former has been but too likely to Conquer, the other has been vigorously assisted. The Eastern Nations who know not the Nature of the Country, nor the concurrence of Obstacles, laugh, that so many Battles gained, and so many Towns taken, should not decide this Quarrel. The Conquest of Three or Four Provinces, is with them the Business of a very few Days; their Historians spend but Three or Four Pages in relating it. What would they say, should they know that Two Camels could not carry all the Histories, that have been written upon the Wars of the Low-Countries? The Histories of the Troubles which occasioned the Erection of the Republick of the United Provinces are so numerous, that when Mr. Varillas (c) came to Paris, no body but Mr. Naudé was capable of giving a Catalogue of 'em. And yet these are but a very small part of the Wars of the Netherlands, since Charles VIII. 'Tis said (d) that a Turkish Emperor desiring to see, in a Map, the little (e) Territory that maintained so long a War against so potent a Monarch, said that if it were his Business, he would send a good number of Pioneers, and make 'em shovel that damn'd little point of Land into the Sea. These People doubtless pity both those who have lost, and those who have not carry'd all in so long a Series of War. They don't think it glorious to fight so often for the same Towns; they take and restore 'em Two or Three times in the same Reign, and so they are always to begin again. But what would they say, had they Genius enough to reflect upon the Consequence of these Losses? The House of Austria would not by this time have had a Foot of Ground in this Country, if it had not lost half of it in the Sixteenth Century. It has experienc'd the truth of this Maxim of the Ancients, (f) that Half is better than the Whole. What it lost then has serv'd, and will always serve as a Bulwark to save the rest; but for this it would neither have had what it has preserved, nor what it can never resume. The poor Flemings, as Comines very well said, have the worst End of the Staff; they are always the Sufferers; whereas by the Marriage of their Princess with the Dauphin, they had probably only seen War at a distance; it would have been kept out of their Bowels, which is an inestimable Advantage. As long as an Inch of Ground is left to be fought for, they will always be the suffering Party; this will be a constant and infallible Ferment of new Wars.

(f) Melius [illegible]. Dimidium plus toto. See Erasmus, Centur. 9. n. 115. pag. m. 318. 319.

(S) This Censure was ill grounded.] It was indeed specious; for, generally speaking, it's true Policy to oppose the Conquests of an Ambitious and armed Neighbour. But there's no Rule without an Exception, and there are Circumstances in which instead of crossing an Enemy in his Enterprise, we ought to beware intermedling in it: As for example, When we foresee that such a one will be hamper'd, and that the Consequences of this may be of advantage to us. This was the Duke of Burgundy's Case, when having conquer'd the Dutchy of Gueldres, he formed new Projects against the Empire. Let's hear a Man that understood this Matter admirably. "The said Duke 'prolonged his Truce with the King, and some of 'the King's Servants thought, that he ought not 'to have prolonged it, nor have given so great 'Advantage to the Duke. This seem'd rational 'enough, but they did not understand this Matter, 'for want of Experience, and duly weighing Circumstances. There were others who saw farther into it than they, and who had more Experience, 'as having been upon the Place, who told the 'King, that that Truce was wisely made, and 'that he suffered the said Duke to dash himself 'against the Germans (an Enterprize so great and daring, that it was almost incredible) saying that 'when he had taken one Place, or ended one 'Quarrel, he would soon be ingag'd in another, 'and that he was not a Man, ever to be contented 'with the success of any Undertaking (in which 'he was opposite to the King; for the more he was (1) embroiled, the more he would embroil himself) and that there was no better way of 'being reveng'd on him, than letting him go on 'his own way, and even giving him some small 'Aid, without the least Inclination to any Design of 'breaking this Truce; for considering the Greatness and Power of Germany, it was not possible but he must soon be ruined and undone to all Intents and Purposes. For the Princes of the Empire, tho' the Emperor was a Man of little 'Virtue, would see it done; and so it happened 'in the issue to the said Duke. (g)

(1) Understand this of the Duke.

(T) After so tedious and severe Ailments of Body and Mind.] He who supplies me with the Proofs of this, is so valuable a Witness, that it's not possible to have a better; for 'tis Philip de Comines. (b) He tells us that the King his Master fell sick at Forges, near Chinon, in March 1480. He lost his Speech, his Senses, and his Memory.——At Two or Three Days end he began to recover his Speech, and his Senses.—— (i) As he found himself somewhat better, he began to enquire, who they were that had hindered him by force from going to the Window? They told him the Truth, and he immediatly expell'd 'em his Family; some he turn'd out of their Places, and never wou'd see 'em more. Others——he only dismissed. The Reason of all this was, that there was nothing he so much dreaded as the losing his Authority. What Torment, what an Infliction was this? (k) This Distemper held him about 15 Days, and he Recovered perfectly as to his Sense and Speech; but continued very Weak, and in great apprehensions of a Relapse. He accordingly Relapsed the Year following, (l) and lost his Speech a second time, and was thought to be dead for two Hours——They devoted him to Monsigneur St. Claude——immediately his Speech returned, and he walked about the House in a very weak Condition. He made a Journey to St. Claude, and returned to Tours (m) and shut himself up, so that few could see him, and grew wonderful Suspicious of every Body, and Jealous, lest they should take away or diminish his Authority——(n) He did a great many strange things, for which they that saw him, thought him bereft of his Senses; but they did not know him——he knew that he was not belov'd by the great Persons of the Kingdom, nor by many of the meaner Sort, and he had so Taxed the People, as never King did—— (o) so that its no wonder if he had distracted Thoughts and

(g) Philippe de Comines, liv. 4. ch. 1. pag. 195. 199. ad ann. 1474.

(b) Philippe de Comines, liv. 6. Chap. 7. pag. m. 377.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 378.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 379.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 380.

(m) Id. ib. pag. 381.

(n) Id. ib. pag. 381.

(o) Id. ib. pag. 383.

and Mind, that there's hardly a Humane Creature so barbarous as to wish his bitterest Enemy the like. He may well be reckoned in the Number of the Princes, whose bad, much exceed their good Fortune. He performed an Act of Religion, and Imaginations, and fancy'd he was not wished well, and had great Fears on that Account.——In the First place hardly any one came to du Plessis le-Parc, (which was the place were he kept) except his Domesticks and Archers, of which he had four hundred, a good number of 'em always standing Centinels, and walking before the Place, and guarding the Door: No Lord or great Person lodg'd within the Court, and but few of the great Lords were ever admitted: No body came near him but Monseigneur de Boajeu, the present Duke of Bourbonne, his Son-in-Law; he encompass'd the Castle of Plessis, with an Iron Pallisade, and fortify'd the Entrance into the Ditches of Plessis with forked Iron Turn Pikes; he also caused four Watch-Houses to be built all of Massy Iron, with Port-Holes to shoot at every Angle, and it was a Majestick Piece of Work, and cost above 20 thousand Franks; and he settled forty Cross-bow Men for the Outguard, who Day and Night were in these Trenches, and had Orders to Shoot at any Man who approached 'em, till the Gate was open in the Morning: He fancy'd moreover that his Subjects were somewhat forward to assume his Authority when they saw an Opportunity. Comines having amply spoken of Francis de Paul, goes on ' (a) Our King was in Plessis, attended by ' very few except Archers, and under the Suspici- ' ons before mentioned; but he had taken all ima- ' ginable Precaution; for he left no Man either in the ' City or Country, of whom he had a Suspicion, but ' sent 'em all away, under a Guard of Archers. No ' body spoke to him of any Thing but the [illegible] ' Men about him: He look'd more like a [illegible] ' than a living Man. He was grown so Meagre ' that there was no knowing him; he cloath'd ' himself richly, more than ever he used to do, ' wearing only Robes of Crimson Satin, furr'd ' with fine Sables, and gave 'em to whom he ' thought fit, without asking: for no body durst ' ask any thing, or speak to him; he order'd severe ' Punishment, to procure Respect, and for fear his ' Subjects Obedience shou'd slacken; for so he told ' me himself. He dismissed Officers, and disband- ' ed Soldiers, lessened the Pensions, and retrench- ' ed on all Hands; and he told me a few Days be- ' fore his Death, That he made it his Diversion to ' place and displace People, and get himself more ' talk'd of in the Kingdom than any King ever ' was, and this he did for fear they should think ' him dead; for as I have said, few saw him: ' but when his Actions were talked off, every one ' was in Suspence, and could scarce believe he ' was Sick; he caused (b) all sorts of Beasts to be ' brought him from Foreign Countries, and gave ' a prodigious Price for 'em; and all this to a- ' muse the People that they should not think he ' was Sick. The Historian compares (c) the Evils and Pains King Lewis suffered to those he had made others suffer; because, says he, I hope that the Miseries he suffered before his Death——will prepare his way to Heaven, and be one part of his Purgatory. He reckons amongst those Evils, the Indiscretion of those who pronounced him a dead Man. (d) What a Thunderstroke was it to him to hear this News, and this Sentence? For never Man feared Death more, or endeavoured more to find a Remedy for it; and he had all his Life-time said to his Servants, and to me among others, and prayed, that if ever we saw him in Extremity, we should say nothing to him, except, Speak but little; and that we should only move him to Confession, without pronouncing upon him the cruel Sentence of Death: for he did not seem to have a Heart to hear this Word——(e) You see then how indiscreetly this Death was signified to him. Which I was willing to repeat——in order to shew, that the Miseries he endured were very great, considering his Nature, who exacted more Obedience than any one else in his Time, and who had had more paid him. So that the least Word of an Answer, contrary to his Inclination, had been a great Punishment for him to endure: Some Five or Six Months before his Death, he was suspicious of all Men, and especially of all who were worthy of Authority; he was afraid of his Son, and caused him to be strictly guarded. No body either saw or spoke to him, except by his Command; he was suspicious at last of his Daughter, and Son-in-Law the present Duke of [illegible], and would know what People enter[illegible] when and where; at last he broke off [illegible]cil, which the Duke of Bourbon, his Son-in-Law held there by his Command. When his Son-in-Law and the Count de Dunoir came back from reconducting the Embassie, which was come to his Son's Wedding, and the Queen's [illegible] Amboise, and entred Plessis, and much People along with 'em, the King, who caused the Gates to be well-guarded, being in the Gallery, which looks into the Court of Plessis, ordered one of the Captains of his Guards to be called to him, and commanded him to go and examine the Attendants of the same Lords, whether they had not Coats of Mail under their Cloaths; and that he should do it, as by discourting with 'em, without making too much shew of it. Judge then, whether he who had made so many People live in Suspicion, and fear of him, was [illegible] recompensed; and who were those that he could trust, since he was jealous of his Son, his Daughter, and his Son-in-Law. I speak not this on his Account only. But for all other Princes who desire to be feared, they never feel the Chastisement of it till old Age; for their Penance they are made to fear every Body; and what a wretched thing was it for this King to be pe[illegible] with this Fear, and these Passi[illegible] afterwards the Author relates (f) the Slave[illegible] which the [illegible]cian kept this Prince, and ha[illegible]decried (g) the Precautions the King took to secure himself in a House surrounded with great Grates, &c. He goes on, ' (h) Is it possible to keep a King in sa- ' fer Custody, or in a stricter Prison than he kept ' himself? The Cages in which he kept others, ' were about Eight Foot square, and he that was ' so great a King, had only the small Court of a ' Castle to walk in, though he seldom came there, ' but kept in his Gallery without moving, except ' through the Chambers; and went to Mass with- ' out passing through the aforesaid Court. Would ' not one say, that this King suffered as much as ' others? who thus shut up himself, and had ' Guards about him, who was thus in fear of his ' Children, and of all about him, and of his Re- ' lations, and who changed continually his Ser- ' vants which he had brought up, and who had all ' their Dependance upon [illegible] so as to confide in ' none of 'em, but thus [illegible]n himself to such ' strange Confinements, [illegible] Enclosures? What ' he says in the Thirteenth Chapter, is wonderful. ' (i) The Poor and the Vulgar ought to place but ' little hope in any thing in this World, since so ' great a King has suffered and laboured so much, ' and at last left it all, unable to keep off Death ' but one Hour, with all the Diligence he employ- ' ed to do it. I have known him, and have ' been his Servant in the Flower of his Age, and ' in his greatest Prosperites; but I never saw him ' without Trouble and Care. Above all Pleasures, ' he loved Hunting and Birding in its Season, but ' he took not so much Pleasure in this, as in ' Dogs——(k) And even in Hunting he ' had almost as much Trouble as Pleasure; ' for he took great Pains at it, he kept up with ' the Stags, and rose very early, and rode some- ' times a long Chase, and lost no time as long as ' he was out; and thus he sometimes returned ve- ' ry weary, and almost always in a Fret [illegible]some ' Body or other.——He was co[illegible] at ' this Sport, and lodged in the Village [illegible]ome ' News came of a War; for most com[illegible]very ' Summer, there was something to [illegible]twixt ' the Duke of Burgundy and him, and in the ' Winter they made a Truce——(l) Thus the ' Pl[illegible] he took were but for a short Season of ' th[illegible], and were very laborious to his Person, ' a[illegible] said; at the time that he reposed him- ' f[illegible] Understanding was at work; for he had ' [illegible] in a great many Places, and as willingly ' concerned

(a) Id. ib. chap. 8. pag. 386.

(b) Ibid.

(c) In the 12th. Chap. of 6th. Book pag. 397. and the following,

(d) Id. ib. pag. 399.

(e) Ibid. pag. 400.

(f) Ibid. pag. 401.

(g) Ibid. pag. 403.

(h) Ibid. pag. 404.

(i) Id. ib. chap. 13.

(k) Id. ib pag. 406.

(l) Ibid. pag. 407, 408.

[illegible] inti-[illegible], Additions à Hiſtoire de Louis XI.

a Intitled, Hiſtoire de la Maiſon roiale de France.

on upon which a (U) Modern Author has had ſome Thoughts, which want to be examined. They who ſay he was an illiterate Man, and no way countenanced Learning, have been ſufficiently confuted by a Gabriel Naudé. I don't give a Chronological Series of his principal Actions; this you'll find in Moreri, copied almoſt word for word from a Father Anſelm; which ought alſo to be underſtood of the other

(a) Id. ib. pag. 407, 408.

(b) Ibid. pag. 408.

(c) Charles Duke of Burgundy, Edward IV. King of England, Matthias King of Hungary, and Mahomet II. Emperor of the Turks.

(d) Id. ſur la fin du livre 6.

(e) See the Treatiſe of the uſe of [illegible] by the Abbot de St. Real, printed at Paris in 1671. pag. 235, 236.

(f) Ibid. pag. 235, 236.

(g) Ibid. pag. 237.

(h) Ibid. pag. 238.

(i) Ibid. pag. 240.

(k) As to Bellona round the Temple of Comana, and to Venus round the Temples of Eryce, &c.

(l) Life, read pag. 238. of his Book.

' concerned himſelf as much in the Affairs of his ' Neighbour as in his own. When he was in War, he ' long'd for a Peace or a Truce; when he had ' made a Truce, he could hardly indite it; he ' concerned himſelf with many little things in his ' Kingdom, which he needed not to have done; ' but ſuch was his Temper, and ſo he lived. The Life of this Prince, before he was King, was not very happy. (a) Comines declares it, after which he makes this Concluſion: (b) "Now in what ' time of his Life could it be ſaid he enjoy'd any Plea- ' ſure, conſidering all the things above-mention'd? I ' believe that from his Infancy to his Grave, he ' had nothing but Anguiſh and Fatigues; and ' that, if all the good Days of his Life, in which ' he had more Joy and Pleaſure than Labour and ' Trouble, were reckoned up, they would be found ' but very few; and that there would be Twenty ' of Pain and Labour, for One of Pleaſure and ' Eaſe.

There is no Reader ſo ſtupid as to want a Comment upon what I have been relating; every one is able to imagine that there is no Condition more miſerable than that of a ſick Prince, who dares not own he is ſo, who dreads every Shadow, and is forced to uſe a Thouſand Stratagems, to perſuade People he is not dead. Note, that Philip de Comines ſhews, by the Example of (c) Four great Princes, who died in his time, that (d) Man is but an inconſiderable thing, that his Life is ſhort and miſerable, and that there's nothing deſirable in it.

(U) He performed an act of Religion, upon which a Modern Author has had ſome Thoughts which want to be examined. Lewis XI. (e) made a Contract, which was called the Donation of Lewis XI. to the Virgin Mary of Boulogne, of the Right and Title to the Fief; and Homage for the County of Boulogne (on which the County of St. Paul depends) to be performed before the Image of the ſaid Lady by his Succeſſors, in 1478. The Abbot of St. Real pretends, that "(f) all Antiquity, whether Greek or Roman, never ſaw any Man pretend to ' honour himſelf before the People, by beſtow- ' ing Bounties on the Gods, ——— and that this ' Refinement of Devotion was reſerved for Lewis XI. He maintains (g) that an exceſs of this Nature in ſuch a Spirit as his, ought rather to be reputed an Artifice, than an Extravagance. ——(i) That this Attempt, however bold it appears, ought to be looked upon by us as the Fruit of a conſummate Wiſdom, and a long Experience of the Judgments of Men: That there is nothing extraordinary in a Prince's conſecrating ——the Revenue of Lands to the Service of God and his Saints, to the Uſe of his Miniſters, to the Ornament of their Temples and their Altars, nor even in putting his Eſtates under their particular Protection. ——(h) That all this is agreeable to Natural Light; but not ſo as to make choice of Celeſtial Powers for the Objects of our Liberality: That inſtead of asking any thing of 'em, or pretending to have received from 'em, one ſhould take upon him to be their Benefactor; as if they had need of our Goods, as much as we have need of theirs; which they may actually enjoy, as we may theirs, (viz.) their Light and Intelligence, when they pleaſe to communicate ſome Rays of 'em. That notwithſtanding this has been practiced; for (i) tho' Lewis XI. made open profeſſion of Inſincerity, as we ſee by his Device, yet it does not appear that at that time any one ſuſpected the leaſt Artifice in ſo extraordinary a Devotion. So true it is ——That the bare Shadow " of an imaginary Intereſt, that ' Heaven has in ſuch ſort of Actions, and the ' ſanctity of Names, that are mingled with 'em, ' may ſo blind the World, as to hinder it from ' perceiving the Extravagance and Mockery. ' This is extreamly ſtrange; but it ſerves the ' better to diſcover the Nature of the Human Mind, ' by its weak and whimſical ſide, that no one ' thou'd at that time reflect on the Extravagance ' of a Man's contracting with the Holy Virgin, juſt ' as one Man does with another, and making her ' at leaſt in fiction accept of a Preſent which he ' remained as much Poſſeſſor of after this pre- ' tended Bounty as before. For, in effect, Were ' Bailiffs, Provoſts, and other Officers of the ' County of Boulogne, when they were call'd the ' Virgin's Bailiffs, Provoſts, and Officers, leſs obli- ' ged to obey the King? Did the Church of Bou- ' logne enjoy the Revenue of the Land, ſo that ſhe ' was better ſerved than before? Was the King ever ' the leſs Count of it, for having given this County ' to the Virgin? Did not the People at that ' time ſee this as we ſee it? they might if they ' had pleaſed; but Lewis XI. ſaw all theſe things ' much better than they or we. In the mean time ' this Prince, ſo dexterous in the Uſe of all the ' Inſtruments of Poli y, who had ſo profoundly ' ſtudied that of Religion in particular, and plaid ' this Engine in all the known Methods, thought ' he might ſafely try it this one way more, when ' once he had invented it, and carry it ſo far with- ' out danger; he judged in ſhort that his People ' were capable of bearing it. He muſt have been ' well acquainted with their Nature, to venture ſo ' far. I don't copy any of the reſt of this long Paſſage, tho' it be very ſolid.

I find by ſome Views a great deal of ſolidity in theſe Reflections; but conſidering the Practice that has prevail'd in all times, and which the Abbot of St. Real has commended, I don't find any thing ſo very ſtrange in this Conduct of Lewis XI. nor any reaſon to expect more Artifice in it, than in the reſt of his Devotions. The Heathens made Donations to their Gods, not only of Precious Stones, and of Veſſels of Gold and Silver, but alſo of (k) Lands. The Catholicks daily give the Holy Virgin, ſome a Pearl-Neck-lace, others a Crown, or a Robe beſet with Diamonds, &c. They diſſeiſe themſelves of the Property of theſe Goods, and convey 'em to the Mother of the Son of God. Why won't you allow then, that a Man may as well convey the Title of Sovereign of a certain Fief to her? Is it ſtrange that Lewis XI. ſhould declare himſelf her Vaſſal, her Liegeman in reſpect of a County whereof he was Sovereign? What mighty wonder is it, that he ſhould from henceforth command Homage to be paid this Saint? I own he reſerves to himſelf the profitable Demeſnes, and all the other Advantages of Poſſeſſion; but this hinders not his granting away an honourable Right; and the Conveyance he makes of it comes under the ſame Species of Liberality, as the offering a Heart of Silver, or a Crown glittering with precious Stones. The Act of this Conveyance hung up from the Roof of a Church in Letters of Gold, would be as Glorious an Ornament as a Statue of Silver. Wherein then lyes the extraordinary Whimſicalneſs of Lewis XIth's Devotion? and why muſt it be ſaid, that he would not have had the Boldneſs thus to impoſe upon the Publick, if he had not profoundly known the Folly and Weakneſs of the People. If he had conſecrated to the Holy Virgin the Revenue of this Fief, to be employed to the uſe of Eccleſiaſticks, and the adorning of Altars, he had practiced a ſort of Devotion, which the Abbot of St. Real (l) had judged moſt ſolid. This therefore is a laudible way to chuſe the Celeſtial Powers for the Objects of our Liberality; it ought therefore to be permitted, to offer 'em the Sovereignty of ſuch or ſuch Fiefs, and make legal Conveyances to 'em, in order to hold from 'em back again, by Fealty and Homage; for this Right is what a Man may as well diveſt himſelf of, in honour of them, as of the Revenues and mean Profits. Remember that the Victims Sacrificed to the Gods, and all the other Offerings of Devotion, were always conſidered as a Preſent, and that the Prieſts employed 'em neither for Food nor any other Uſe otherwiſe than in quality of the Miniſters of the Celeſtial other French Monarchs. Mr. Varillas is miſtaken as to the cauſe he aſſigns of the Antipathy (X) between the French and Spaniards.

LEWIS XII. King of France, great Grandſon (A) to Charles V. ſucceeded Charles VII. upon the 8th of April, 1491. He had born the Title of Duke of Orleans and had gone through many Diſgraces in the Reign of his Predeceſſor. Nor had all the ſubmiſſion due to a Sovereign: For he had taken up Arms againſt his King, and was taken Priſoner in a Battle gained * againſt thoſe of Brittany, by the Arms of Charles VIII. He was in love with the Heireſs of Brittany, and hoped to marry her; but he had not that ſatisfaction till after the King his Predeceſſor's Death, and it obliged him to an Action altogether odious and unjuſt, to wit, the diſſolving his Marriage (B) with the Princeſs Jane of France. His Reign was remarkable for great

* This was the Battel of St. Aubin du Corminer gain'd on the 28th of July, 1488.

Powers. They were not the Proprietors, they were only the Uſufructuaries, and that by a kind of ſecondary Conveyance. The firſt conſiſted in this, That the Man who offered a Victim, or any thing elſe, gave up to the Gods all the Right he had in it. The ſecond in this, That the Gods transferred to their Miniſters the Adminiſtration and Uſe of theſe Offerings. So that at bottom, the Conduct of Lewis XI. had nothing extraordinary in it, as not being a Liberality of a new Invention, and we need not wonder that his Subjects were nor ſcandalized at it. 'Tis true, he might have been ſure that his Donation alienated nothing from him; for he ſtill remained Maſter of the Land, he reſerved the mean Profits, &c. wholly to himſelf. But we ſhould be to blame, in imagining that he ſought only to decieve; this Act of Religion might in him be as ſincere as any other. 'Tis very probable he believed he had made a Donation which would highly pleaſe the Holy Virgin, diſpoſe her to protect him, and be liberal of her Favours towards him; his Principles and Acts of Piety might all be Wrong, and yet attended with a ſincere Perſuaſion of Mind; one Proof of this is, that he never durſt ſwear Falſly by the Croſs of (a) St. Laud, being ſtruck with a Vulgar Tradition, (b) That they who ſwore by this Croſs, and were Perjured, dyed a Miſerable Death before the Years End. The Conſtable of St. Paul pray'd him to ſwear by that Croſs, (c) That he would neither do, nor ſuffer any other to do him any harm. The King anſwered, (d) That he had ſworn he never would take that Oath for any Man alive; but that there were no other Oaths; but he would willingly take to ſatisfy him.

(a) Its at Angers.
(b) Matthieu ubi ſupra, liv. 6. ch. 16. pag. 309. ſee alſo Varillas in the Preface to his Hiſtory of Louis XI.
(c) Idem Matthieu ibid.
(d) Id. ib.

I wiſh this Reflection may ſerve as a Warning to all my Readers, that there are no Thoughts ſo much to be ſuſpected, as thoſe which are put off in an aſſuming Manner, and with a Majeſtick Tone. The foregoing Reflections of the Abbot of St. Real are, of this kind, the fitteſt in the World to dazzle; but diveſt 'em of their Ornaments, and take a near View of 'em, and you'll find nothing ſolid in 'em.

(X) Mr. Varillas is miſtaken, as to the Cauſe of the Antipathy between the French and Spaniards.] (e) Moſt of the Relations both French and Spaniſh, that were made upon occaſion of the Interview of Lewis with Henry IV. King of Caſtile, aſſign as a reaſon of the ſtrange Change between the Nations, Lewis's extream negligence in Dreſs, unbecoming the Dignity of a Prince of his Rank; and to ſay the truth, before that Interview, the French and Caſtilians practiced, towards each other, all the Duties of good Neighbourhood. They mutually ſuccoured each other, and performed all the good Offices that Decency and Charity required. Mr. Varillas gives ſeveral Inſtances of it, after which he goes on in this manner, (f) but as ſoon as the Court of Henry IV. King of Caſtile, which appeared in ſo Magnificent an Equipage, that the like was never ſeen, nor any thing near it, for Three or Four Hundred Years before, ſaw Lewis dreſſed in a Drab de Berry, that was not new, and his Head covered with an old Hat, which had nothing remarkable in it but a Leaden Virgin, that was ſtitch'd to it; the Caſtilians conceived ſuch a Contempt for the French on account of their King, that they took the firſt Opportunity of breaking with 'em; and the Antipathy betwixt the Two Nations, may be dated from that time, which has ſince become Immortal.

(e) Varillas ubi ſupra, liv. 10. pag. 323.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 324.

I doubt not but Mr. Varillas would be hard put to it, to find any Relations of this Interview, in which the Hatred which has laſted ſo long between the French and Spaniards, is derived from ſuch an Original. I am certain Philip de Comines is the firſt who has made Reflections hereupon, and that almoſt all other Writers are his Tranſcribers in this Particular; but he is far from giving a Foundation to the pretended Diſcovery of Mr. Varillas. He has made a Diſgreſſion (g) tending to ſhew that the Interview of Princes is more prejudicial than profitable. He gives ſeveral Inſtances of it, the firſt whereof is the Interview of Lewis XI. and the King of Caſtile: Now theſe Two Nations, ſays he, which had been ſo ſtrictly allied, ridiculed each other. (h) The King of Caſtile was ill-favour'd, and his Dreſs diſpleaſing to the French, who laughed aloud at it. Our King was dreſſed in a ſhort Jerkin, and ſo mean that nothing could be more ſo; and ſometimes he wore a very coarſe Cloath, with a ſlouching Hat, different from the reſt, with a Leaden Image tacked to it. The Caſtilians laughed at him, and ſaid it was out of Sillineſs. Thus in effect that Interview broke up, with Scoffing and Satyre o'both ſides, and thoſe Two Kings never loved one another. What he has ſaid of the Interview of the Emperor and Charles Duke of Burgundy, is (i) equally ſtrong. Should we hence conclude, that the Germans and Burgundians have hated one another ever ſince? Would not this be falſe? Were not they good Friends, after the Death of the Duke of Burgundy? Did not they act in conſort againſt France, we ſhould have ſeen the ſame betwixt the French and Caſtilians, had not ſtronger Reaſons interven'd than the Diſcontent at this Interview. Caſtile, Arragon, and many other Eſtates of Spain were re-united: And hence proceeded the Hatred of the French and Spaniards; for ever ſince that Re-union, France has been obliged to act either on the Offenſive or Defenſive againſt Spain.

(g) It's the 8th Chap. of his ſecond Book.
(h) Comines, ibid. pag. 105.
(i) From the Interview of the Emperor and Charles Duke of Burgundy, they loved one another, neither they nor their People. The Germans deſpiſed the Pomp and Speech of the ſaid Duke, attributing it to Pride. The Burgundians deſpiſed the Retinue of the Emperor and their poor Habits. Id. ibid. pag. 105, 106.

(A) Great Grandſon to Charles V.] He was Son to Charles Duke of Orleans, who was Son to Lewis of France Duke of Orleans, aſſaſſinated in Paris by his Uncle the Duke of Burgundy, the 23d of November, (k) 1407. This Lewis, Son of Charles V. had Married Valentina of Milan; ſo that Lewis XII. Grandſon to Valentina, had the juſteſt Pretenſions in the World to the Dutchy of Milan, and yet he could never maintain himſelf in that Country.

(B) He was obliged to diſſolve his Marriage with the Princeſs Jane of France.] She was Daughter to Lewis XI. and Siſter to Charles VIII. She was Married at Twenty-two years of Age, to our Lewis, in 1476. She carried her ſelf like a good Wife whilſt he was in diſgrace, and it was ſhe who, (l) by her Importunites, brought him out of Priſon, in 1491. but that was not ſufficient to ballance, in her Husband's Heart, the violent Inclination he had for Charles the VIII's Widow: This was Anne of Bretany. He had loved her, and was beloved by her, before ſhe Married Charles; therefore to gratify his Paſſion for her he cauſed his Marriage to be annull'd, and procured ſuch Rewards to Pope Alexander VI. that he obtained of him all he had a mind to. There are few but believe he was perjured, in maintaining he had not known her. (m) He profeſſed he had Married her by force, fearing the Indignation of Lewis XI. her Father, who was a Man of an abſolute Will, but that he had never known nor touched her. This Brantome ſays, but adds, (n) I believe her Husband, as I have heard ſay, had known her very well, and ſenſibly

(k) P. Anſelme, Hiſtoire genealogique pag. 178.
(l) Id. id. pag. 129.
(m) Brantome, Memoires des Dames illuſtres, p. m. 277.
(n) Id. ib. pag. 288.

great Events, some prosperous, and others unfortunate; but take him all together, he was one of the greatest Men that had been seen for some Ages. The Republick of Venice being grown very powerful, and the Haughtiness great Power is attended with, being to too visible in her Conduct, several Estates (D) confederated to b[illegible]her to Reason. Lewis XII. who came into this Alliance, had almost the sensibly [illegible] her, tho' she was somewhat amiss in her Body, she was not so chast as to abstain, having [illegible] near him, and so close to his Side, considering [illegible] temper, which was a little covetous, and very prone to the Pleasures of Venus, as his Predecessor had been; but he was minded to recover his first Love, which was Queen [illegible] and that fine Duteby, which threw great [illegible]ations into his Soul, and therefore he div[illegible] that Princess, and his Oath was believed [illegible]ceived by the Pope, who gave him a Dispensation, which was received by the Sorbonne, and by the Court of Parliament of Paris. Mr. Varillas will give us the Circumstances of the Injustices which were committed in this Affair. (a) " Lewis XII. had ' sollicited (1) the Dissolution of his Marriage ' with Jane of France, Daughter and Sister to ' the Two last Kings, tho' he was obliged to her ' for his Liberty and [illegible] he had sworn before ' the Commissioners [illegible] Holy See, that the ' Marriage had not b[illegible]nsummated, tho' this ' Princess had sworn [illegible] contrary; and the Miracles she afterwar[illegible]rought, seem to confirm ' the Truth of what she had said; he had main- ' tain'd in Writing other Facts upon this Sub- ' ject, which were altogether as improbable, he ' had corr[illegible] by his Money the Legate's Secre- ' tary, (2) [illegible] understanding from him, that the ' Permiss[illegible] to Marry again was expedited, he ' Married [illegible] Queen, without waiting till the ' Dispensation came to his Hands, which was the ' cause of the Legate's poysoning the Secretary. They who will not allow that this Princess work'd Miracles, will not be obliged to acknowledge, that she lived an exemplary Life after her Divorce, and that her Moderation under so sensible an Injury was wonderful; for which reason her Word is more to be depended on than the Oaths of her Husband. For 'tis certain that she declared to the Commissioners, with all that Modesty which her Virtue and her Sex required, that the Marriage had been consummated. (b) " Jane of France be- ' ing interrogated in her turn upon the same Ar- ' ticles, answered——That Modesty would not ' permit her to explain her self clearly (c) upon ' the Third Article, and nevertheless that her ' Conscience did not suf[illegible] to assent to it. If it were true, as a Jesui[illegible]s, that great Prodigies were obtery'd upon t[illegible]olution of the Marriage, no one cou'd doubt [illegible] Injustice and Perjury of Lewis XII. The Declaration of this Divorce (d) was followed, or at least attended with terrible Prodigies, as Earthquakes, Storms, Tempests, Thunder, and above all, with so great a Darkness, that, in the day time, says this Author, (e) they were obliged to make use of Torches, to be able to read the Sentence of Separation and Nullity of the Marriage. These are surprizing Events, of which the Cotemporary Writes ought not to have been silent; for their general silence would have been a stranger Prodigy than the rest. However, its plain they have said nothing of 'em; for if they had, the knowledge of a thing of this Nature would not have been so ill preserved, as that every one should look upon it as a new Discovery in the Jesuits Book. We shall here mention a Reflection of a Modern Author: How is't possible, says he, that an Event of this nature should be unknown to Brantome[illegible] Mr. Varillas, who have known or read so m[illegible]ecret Memoirs? We may observe this small diff[illegible]e betwixt the Two, that the latter says expressly, that [illegible]een Jane wrought Miracles; whereas the first content to say, She was reckon'd a Saint, and as it were a Worker of Miracles. In matters of this kind, the farther we are removed from the Fountain Head the more we know of them. Note, that (f) the People of Paris murmured [illegible], at the King's divorcing the Daughter of L[illegible]XII. and that there were scrupulous Doctors, who [illegible]med him in the Pulpits: Judge then whether the Prodigies would have been concealed. It might be said that after Brantome's Death, many Miracles (g) were wrought at this Queen's Tomb, and therefore Mr. Varillas might be more positive than he. Be it how it will, the Sentence that declares the Marriage null being pronounced (b) the 22d of December, 1498. the King Married Anne of Britany the 8th of January following. (i)

(C) Others unfortunate.] Amongst Lewis the XIIth's greatest Misfortunes, must be reckoned the loss of the Kingdom of Naples, and that of the Milanese. He was the Bubble of the King of Aragon, as to the first of these Losses; but it could not be wholly attributed to the Frauds of the Court of Spain. The French were beaten in several Engagements, so that it may be said that the Gen[illegible] of France suffered it self to be wretchedly bu[illegible]led by that of Spain, and that the French Soldiers suffered themselves to be soundly beaten by the Spanish. The bad Conduct of Lewis the XII's Generals, the manifest Cause of these Disgraces, is no ground of Comfort or Apology, but rather another M[illegible]tification for this Prince, as testifying that he made an ill choice of his Officers. The other loss, to wit, that of the Milanese plainly manifested the same defect: He gave the Government of it to (k) a Man very much hated, and who in that Post made himself more odious than he was before; and who amongst other Faults, committed that of suffering the French to provoke the Jealousie of the Inhabitants, (l) by the Liberties they took with the Women. Yet he had the Consolation of quickly recovering the Milanese, for which he was indebted to a piece of Treachery, which is very rare among the Swissers (m); but he never could repair the other Losses in this Country. In vain he raised great Armies, to revenge himself on the King of Aragon; he miscarried every where, both in Italy, Biscay, and Rousillon. The Discontent occasioned (n) by so many bad Successes, the loss of his Reputation, and the Inability to unravel all these Spanish Deceits, was so great, as to bring upon him a Sickness which reduced him to the last Extremity.

(D) Several Estates confederated to bring her to Reason.] Lewis was highly provoked against the Venetians by Twenty Affronts that they had put upon him (o). The Pope, the Emperor, and the King of Spain (p) Hated 'em no less for different causes, and particularly because they had encroach'd upon the Territories of each. All these Powers formed a League with that Secrecy against them at Cambary, in the Year 1501. (q) that as dextrous as they were, they knew nothing of it till it began to be executed (r). The French Ambassador (s) declaims against 'em in a terrible manner, in a Speech he made before the Emperor Maximilian, in the Year 1510. He set forth (t) the Origin, Progress, Designs, Artifices, and Maxims of this Republick. But it must be remember'd, that an Orator who would excite his Auditory to War, is not much concerned about Historical Exactness. However it be, this Republick had been already ill treated otherwise than by Words. This we shall see in the following Remark.

Note, that John le Maire de Belges, Judiciary and Historiographer to Queen Anne of Britany, Wife to Lewis XII. writ a Book at least as Satirical as the Ambassador's Oration; he intituled it, The Legend of the Venetians. He observes in his Poem, that the intire Ruin of their Republick was fully reckon'd upon, for which were alledged certain Prophecies, (u) Oracles, and Soothsayings, and Astrological Prognostications, Appearances of Signs, strange Eclipses, Comets, Lightnings, Earthquakes, Monsters, Portents, and divers Presages. ——— I have given my self the Trouble, continues he, to

(a) Varillas, Hist. de Francois I. Book 1. p. 8. Hague Edition, 1690.

(1) In the Manuscript Vol. in the King's Library, which contains the the Process of about the Dissolution of the Marriage of Lewis XII. with [illegible] Borgia.

(b) Varillas, Hist. de Louis XII. liv. 1. p. 21.

(c) Which was that Lewis XII abstain'd from Consummation, Id. ibid.

(d) Journal des Savans, for [illegible]h o[illegible]ust [illegible] in [illegible]-tract of the Life of Queen Joan of France, written by Lewis de Bony a Jesuit.

(e) Louis de Bony.

(n) Nouvelles de la Repub. des lettres, for Sept. 1684. pag. 755.

(f) Mezerai Abregé Chronolog. tome 4. pag. 418.

(g) Hilarion de Coste, Eloges des Dames illustres, tome 2. pag. 20. says, that Lewis XIII. knowing that God works continual Miracles at the Tomb of Queen Joan, wrote several times to the Pope, desiring that he wou'd declare her Sainted, and that the Pope named Commissioners to take Information of the Miracles.

(b) Anselme ubi supra, pag. 126.

(i) Id. ib. p. 126. Mezerai ubi supra, says the 18.

(k) To Trivalcio.

(l) Mezerai ubi supra, p. 420. ad ann. 1500.

(m) They betray'd Lewis Sforza into the Hands of the French tho' they were in his Pay. See Mezerai ibid. p. 421. ad ann. 1500.

(n) Mezerai, ibid. pag. 439. ad ann. 1504.

(o) Id. ibi pag. 446.

(p) Id. ib. ad ann. 1507.

(q) Ibid. ad ann. 1508.

(r) Ibid. pag. 447.

(s) Louis Helian.

(t) See the Preface to this Oration in the French Translation published in 1677. and bound up with the French Translation of Squittinio della liberta Veneta. All this was reprinted in Holland, together with the History of the Government of Vienna, written by Mr. Amelot de la Houssaye. (u) He instances in a good number. make the ſole Glory (E) of humbling this Power, which was grown formidable and odious to all its Neighbours. After ſo noble a Succeſs, a League was formed againſt this Monarch, by the Intrigues of the Pope [a], who was not only a great Warrior, but alſo a refined Politician. Lewis ſo confounded this Confederacy, that if the Duke de Nemours had not been killed in the Battle of Ravenna, this Haughty and Warlike Pope, had been forced to ſeek a Sanctuary (F) out of Rome. France would even have depoſed him, notwithſtanding the Death of the Duke de Nemours, if almoſt all Europe had not conſpired againſt her. Never was ſeen againſt a ſingle Kingdom, make a Collection and ſummary Abridgment of all the Venetian Hiſtories and Chronicles, which I have reduced to Three principal Points; by which I have found, that if any Prophecies, Divinations, or Prognoſticks of their Ruin have been divulged, it has been by the Foreſight and Pre-admonition of the juſt Judgment of God, which I pretend to prove by the aboveſaid Three Points or Articles. It's worth while to obſerve all this Bluſter, becauſe it ſerves to diſcover, 1. The Oſtentation of Nations, who ſee a ſucceſsful beginning of their Enterprizes. 2. The Credulity with which People collect and apply Prognoſticks. 3. The Speedineſs wherewith Providence confounds theſe Factious and Superſtitious Diſcourſes; for the Republick of of Venice ſoon recovered it ſelf.

[a] Julius II. See his Article.

(E) Almoſt the ſole Glory of humbling.] The Venetians ſaw him(a) 'of their ſide the Mountains, with 'Forty Thouſand Men, beginning the War with 'em, and the Pope at the ſame time thundering 'againſt 'em with Excommunications, which make 'great Impreſſions upon People, when ſeconded by 'the Terror of Arms. The King having paſſed 'the River Adda, purſued their Army ſo cloſely, 'as to fight it the Fourteenth Day of May, and 'gained that memorable Battle of Giera-d'Adda, 'near the Village of Aignadel, four Miles from Caravaz. Their Infantry were all cut to Pieces, and 'their General Alviana having loſt an Eye, was 'taken Priſoner. In Fifteen Days time, the King, 'almoſt without ſtriking Stroke, reduced all the 'Places they had kept from him. He might have 'farther taken Vicenza, Padua, Verona, Treviſo, 'and all the Places that belonged to the Empire 'or the Houſe of Auſtria, if his Juſtice had not 'exceeded his Ambition. He ſent back the Deputies of all theſe Towns, who brought him the 'Keys, to the Emperor, who received 'em under 'Obedience, and put Garriſons in 'em. The Pope 'had marched an Army of Ten or Twelve Thouſand Men, into Romagna. King Ferdinand had 'only a ſmall Naval Force in the Gulph, and waited 'to make his Markets of 'em, as indeed he did by 'the Labour, and at the Expence of the French. 'Now the Loſs (b) of the ſingle Battle of Aignadel, 'put the State of Venice into ſuch a Conſternation, 'that deſpairing to keep any thing on the Terra firma, they reſolved to ſhut themſelves up in the 'Iſlands of their Gulf, and in this Deſpair commanded all the Governours of the Places that 'had belong'd to the Pope, or Ferdinand, to open 'their Gates to 'em, and recalled their Magiſtrates 'from Verona, Padua, Vicenza, and other Places, 'to which the Emperor had Pretenſions. Thus 'you ſee how theſe Three Potentates, by the 'Valour of the French, rather than by their own 'Forces, recovered all that had been taken from 'em; and how the Ambition of the Venetians, by 'keeping no Bounds themſelves, ſaw thoſe of their 'Dominions in a Trice reduced to the very brink of 'their Canal. You'll tell me, 'tis a French Hiſtorian that ſays this, who may be ſuſpected to flatter Lewis, in attributing to him all the Effects of the League of Cambray. Let us therefore cite Paulus Jovius, who acknowledges that the Emperor had ſent little more than Envoys, when the French Army had already confined all the Venetian Forces within their Canals. This Hiſtorian, to excuſe the Pope for abandoning the League, and reuniting with the Venetians, repreſents his Action as the only means of preſerving Italy. He does not ſay, that there was any thing to be apprehended from the Emperor, or the King of Spain, but only ſpeaks of Lewis XII. His Expreſſions are very ſtrong. (c) In præaltis animi receſſibus graviores cauſa pontificem cunctis ſenſibus peracrem, ſtrenuum, indomitum vehementer excitabant, ut ſaluti Italiæ maturè proſpiceret, diligentiſſimeque caveret, ne deletis Venetis, impotenti demum barbaro foret ſerviendum. Namque Ludovicus ubi uno ſecundo prælio Venetas opes contrivit, ac adjunctis tot urbibus continentis, gentem adverſo rerum ſucceſſu conterritam intra paludes, ipſaſque Venetas circumflui maris beneficio permunitas compulit, cunctis formidandus videbatur: præſerat: præſertim quum ad id bellum Maximilianus Cæſar nihil ferè præter legatos & Auguſti nomen attuliſſet. Noverat Julius Galli regis ingenium proferendi imperii maximè avidum: noverat inexhauſtas Gallorum opes: videbat florentiſſimum Mediolanenſium imperium exactis ſortibus Galliæ attributum; Ligures verò ſuos, armis planè domitos, ac arce cervicibus impoſita in ſervitutem redactos. Porrò Venetos, quorum toto orbe terrarum paulò antè ſummas & inveterata fuiſſet auctoritas, unius horæ momento, copiis, imperio, ac dignitate penitus eſſe ſpoliatos. Quibus rebus adductus (uti pium æquiſſimumque & verè Italum pontificem decebat) Venetos, ne ſe tantis fluctibus obrutos, planè demerſos, ac penitus extinctos vellet, ſuppliciter deprecantes, ſublevandos cenſuit.

(F) Seek a Sanctuary out of Rome.] Even before Gaſton (d) de Foix, that Thunderbolt of War, who probably would have excelled the two Scipio's, if he had lived as long as they; before, I ſay, he had gotten the Victory of Ravenna, Julius II. was upon the Point of leaving Rome, that he might not fall into the Hands of the French; and he had abandoned it, if Lewis XII. had not ſuffered himſelf to be inchanted by the Charms of Superſtition. This we learn from Mezerai. (e) In this Conſternation, feeling no Security for him in Rome, if the Victorious Army of the King advanced, he had thoughts of propoſing an Accommodation, but when he found that the King, hamper'd with troubleſome Scruples of his Wife, had given Orders to Trivultius, to make no Attempt upon the Lands of the Church, he ſhewed himſelf more intractable and implacable than ever. The Victory of Ravenna caſt Rome into a like Conſternation, though the Commander, who was moſt to be feared, had loſt his Life in the Battle. (f) And the Pope was ſupplicated to embark as ſoon as he could, and betake himſelf to Flight. The Charms of the ſame Superſtition, gave him new Confidence once more, and delivered him from Danger. (g) The Aſtoniſhment was ſo great in Rome, that the Cardinals in a Body came and ſupplicated the Pope to make Peace with the King. Ferdinand and the Venetians having given him a little Heart, he had recourſe to his ordinary Artifices, which were to amuſe the King, by Propoſitions of Accommodation, and to put the Ruin upon him, who from Motives of Conſcience, did by her Caveſſes, Intrigues, and Importunities, frequently diſarm him, and cool his Courage. Who would not pity the Fate of Lewis XII. who had ſo dangerous a Domeſtick Enemy, in the Perſon that was moſt dear to him? This is a ſtrong Confirmation of what I have ſaid above (h) concerning the Scruples of Lewis VII. Nothing's ſo capable of ſtopping an Army ready to lay an Enemy under Foot, or reaching to gather the Fruits of an important Victory, as the Artifice or Bigotry of a Confeſſor. 'Tis ſaid indeed, that Lewis XII. once impoſed Silence on his Wife, who continually importuned him; (i) How now, Madam, ſaid he, do you think that you are wiſer than ſo many famous Univerſities, who have approved the Council of Piſa? Don't your Confeſſors tell you, that Women are to be ſilent in the Church? But what could it ſignifie to ſay this once? A Woman ſo tenderly beloved by her Husband, as Anne of Bretaigne was, is not diſcouraged at Three or Four Refuſals. She ſtill returns to the Charge, till her Demands are granted. Theſe are Birds of the Bed, or the Night,

[b] Id. ib. pag. 448.

[c] Paulus Jovius in vita Leonis X. lib. 2. pag. 73, 74.

[a] Mezerai, ibid. ad ann. 1509.

[d] This is the ſame with the Duke de Nemours.

[e] Mezerai ubi ſupra pag. 457. ad ann. 1512.

[f] Erant plerique adeo mente conſternati, ut Julio veluti deſperatis rebus ab Oſtia triremibus fugiendum eſſe trepide ſtuderent. Jovius in vita Leonis X. lib. 2. p. 107.

[g] Mezerai, ibid. pag. 460.

[h] In the Remarks H. of the Article Lewis VII.

[i] Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tome 2. pag. 890, 891.

Kingdom, ſuch a Concourſe (G) of Enemies, ſo that it muſt be confeſſed, France ſaw it ſelf reduced to great Extremities [a]. But beſides its being very Glorious for Lewis XII. to have been ſo much the Terror of his Neighbours, as that they ſhould believe it impoſſible, without an unanimous Oppoſition, to ſtop his Carreer; he had another Glory of diſſolving this formidable League (H), by his Negotiations. The Peace he made with the Engliſh, contributed much to it. 'Tis true, that by Accident it became fatal to him, having engaged him in a Marriage, which did him more Miſchief, than an Hundred Thouſand Men could have done: for this Prince having eſpouſed Henry VIII's Siſter, a very amiable Princeſs, gave himſelf up too much (I) to the Pleaſures of Matrimony. He did not Proportion his conjugal Benevolence either to his own Strength or Age, but to the Youth of his Spouſe, to whom he paid it. Having only had Daughters by his former Queen, he earneſtly deſired that this might give him a Succeſſor. He quickly wore out in that Exerciſe, the Niceneſs of his Conſtitution. He [b] conſummated the Marriage the 10th. of October 1514, and died of a Niceneſs the 1ſt. of January [c] 1515, in the 53d. Year of his Age [d]. without being able by ſo many Efforts ſo prejudicial to his Life, to get the Queen with Child. This was very happy for France; for if the Queen had brought him a Son, inſtead of Francis I. they would have had an Infant King, who would have been (K) perhaps a weakly Prince all his Life. Lewis XII. was ſo well inclined to promote the Welfare of his Subjects, that he deſerved the Sirname of Father of the People, an Elogy a Thouſand Times more glorious than that of the Great, the

[a] Mezerai Abregé Chronol. tome 4. p. m. 470.
[b] Beginning the Year from the 1ſt of January.
[c] Mezerai, ib. p. 471.

Night, whoſe warbling is much to be feared, it perſwades ſooner or later. The Hiſtorian (a) whom I have cited, obſerves, that ſome Prieſts, who governed this Queen's Conſcience, ſo filled her Soul with Scruples, that ſhe never ceaſed to importune her Husband. Had Juvenal known ſuch a Caſe, he'd have bid People beware of a Superſtitious, more than of (b) a learned Wife. The Queen we ſpeak of, obſtinately maintained her Point, the her Husband was forced to grant her all ſhe de red, that is, to make a Sordid Submiſſion to the Court of Rome. Here's another Paſſage of Mezerai. (c) The Spirit of the King bore up againſt all theſe Adverſities, but he had one Domeſtick Trouble, which was greater than what all his Enemies gave him. This was his own Wife, who tormented with Scruples common to her Sex, could not ſuffer him to be at Variance with the Pope, or to ſupport the Council againſt him. As ſhe continually ſtun'd him upon theſe two Points, he was frequently forced for Peace ſake, to ſtop the current of his Arms, when his Affairs went beſt, and he was upon the Point of bringing Julius to Reaſon. At laſt, being totally vanquiſhed by her Importunities, and by the Remonſtrances of his Subjects, whom ſhe excited on all Sides, he renounced his Council of Piza, and adhered to that of Lateran, by his Proxies, who cauſed his Mandate to be read the 8th. Seſſion of the 14th. of December, the Pope preſiding (d).

(a) Mezerai, ibid. pag. 891.
(b) Non habeat matrona tibi quæ juncta recumbit, dicendi genus; aut curtum ſermone rotato Torqueat [illegible] ſciat omnes. Juvenal. Satyra, 6. v. 446.
(c) Mezerai, Abregé Chronolog. tom. 4. p. 469. ad ann. 1513.
(d) See the Article Julius II. Remark G.

(G) Againſt a ſingle Kingdom, ſuch a Concourſe of Enemies.] Lewis XII. had at one time a War to maintain againſt the Pope, the Republick of Venice, Spain, and England; or againſt the Pope. England, the Emperor, and the Swiſs; and for an Over-charge, he was to maintain a miſerable (e) dethroned King, who brought him no other Aſſiſtance than the Juſtice of his Cauſe, which ſignified nothing: This is a common caſe enough.

(H) By his Negotiations.] France (f) was then in greater Danger than it had been in of a long Time before. For on one Hand, the Switz, extreamly fluſhed with the Victory of Novara, entered it by the Dutchy of Burgundy, and he (g) with the Engliſh, attacked it on the ſide of Picardy. The Switzers beſieged Dijon with Twenty Five Thouſand Men, to which the Emperor had joined the Nobility of Franche Comte, and ſome German Cavalry, commanded by Ulrick Duke of Wirtemberg. La Trimouille having defended it Six Weeks, thought it adviſable to divert the Courſe of this Torrent, which after the taking of the Place would have overflowed all to the Gates of Paris, than render it more violent by Oppoſition. He entred into a Negotiation with 'em, and managed it ſo well, as to ſend 'em back into their own Countries, undertaking that the King ſhould pay Six Hundred Thouſand Crowns, and renounce the Counties of Piſa, and the Dutchy of Milan. He had no preſs Orders to grant 'em theſe Conditions; he thought he ought to do it for the ſaving of France, and gave 'em Six Hoſtages, Two Lords, and Four Citizens (h). At the ſame time, towards the middle of July, the Emperor and the King of England had beſieged Terouanne with above 50000 Men. The French Army ſucceſsfully enough, threw a Convoy of Proviſion and Ammunition into the Place; but upon their Return, not being ſufficiently upon their Guard, they were charged and routed. The Battle was fought the 18th. of Auguſt, near Guinegaſte. 'Tis called the Battle of the Spurs, becauſe on that Occaſion, the French made more uſe of their Spurs than of their Swords. Terouenne (i) capitulated Fifteen Days after. Tournay quickly ſurrendred. A Peace came ſeaſonably after theſe Operations, which was concluded (k) at London the 2d. of Auguſt 1514.

(e) Mezerai, Abregé Chronolog. tom. 4. p. 469. ad ann. 1513.
(f) See the Article John d'Albert, King of Navarre.
(g) Mezerai, ibid. p. 467. ad ann. That's to ſay, the Emperor.

(I) Gave himſelf up too much to the Pleaſures of Matrimony.] Guicciardin and Paulus Jovius make this Obſervation. Cælibi Ludovico, ſays (l) the latter, ſupra ſolemne pacis ac amicitiæ fœdus, Mariæ Henrici regis ſororis eximiæ venuſtatis virgo deſponderetur. Qua in Galliam perducta, Ludovicus incredibili ſumptu & mira ludorum varietate nuptias celebravit. Sed dum ætatis & valetudinis quæ ei tum erat tenuiſſimæ, penè oblitus, intemperantius (ut ferunt) procreandis liberis operam daret, concepta edaci febricula non multos poſt dies interiit. Theſe are Guicciardin's Words: (m) Le re di Francia, mentre che dando cupidamente opera alla bellezza eccellente & alla età della nuova moglie, giovane di diciotto anni, non ſi ricorda dell' età ſua, e debilità della compleſſione, oppreſſo da febbre, e ſupravenendogli accidenti di fluſſo, parti quaſi repentinamente della vita preſente, havendo fatto memorabile il primo giorno dell' Anno M. D. XV. con la ſua morte. Mezerai agrees with theſe two Italians. 'Many believed, ſays he (n), that his too 'frequent careſſing the young Queen, was the 'cauſe of his Death. Mr. Varillas (o) obſerves, 'that the Phyſicians and Courtiers, who ſaw him 'marry again, jointly foretold, that he would not 'long ſurvive this ſecond Match.

(h) Mezerai, ſays in this Place, that the King having refuſed to ratify the Treaty, they run a great Riſk of loſing their Heads. The Fear the Swiſs were under of loſing the great Sums which he offered 'em, ſaved the Life of theſe Innocents.
(i) Id. ib. pag. 408.
(k) Ibid. pag. 470.
(l) Paulus Jovius in vita Leonis X. lib. 3. p. 146. In the 14th. Book of his Hiſtory he ſpeaks thus: Sed Rex ætate provecta—— quum intemperantius puellaribus complexibus indulſiſſet, in febrim incidit, nec multo poſt invaleſcente etiam profluvio ventris extinctus eſt.
(m) Guicciardin, l. 12. fol. 351. verſo.
(n) Mezerai, hiſt. de France, tom. 2. p. 872.
(o) Varillas hiſt. de Louis XII livre 11. p. m. 387.

(K) Who would have been a weakly Prince all his Life.] We don't lay down this as infallible, but only as probable, grounding on the Reaſon aſſigned by good Authors, of the Infirmities of Charles VIII. '(p) There is no Reaſon to doubt, 'that Charles VIII. was of ſo weak a Conſtitu'tion, as we have ſaid, ſince Comines aſſures us, 'that this Prince was always (1) infirm 'in Body and Mind, and Gaguin (2) has 'gone farther than he, in ſaying, teneris atque 'imbecillibus membris adeo Carolus fuit, ut ſedulo 'ducei illum & geſtari molliter priuſquam ſolide incedere oporteret. Which we may reaſonably believe, proceeded from the great Age of his Father, ſince, according to Dominicus Mancinus's Obſervation,

(p) Naudé, Addition à l'hiſtoire de Louis XI. pag. 41.
(1) Book 8 ch. 13.
(2) Initio lib. 11.

'Proms

the Auguſt, the Magnificent, the Hardy, &c. He bore Satyrs (L) againſt his own Perſon with much Patience, but not againſt the Queen. He paſſionately loved this Princeſs, and had Conſiderations for her, which were prejudicial to his State. She filled him with Scruples [a] which were not to be claw'd off, and which were ſerviceable to Julius II. the moſt Mortal Enemy that ever France had in Italy: Bating this, ſhe was a great Queen, (M) and of admirable Chaſtity. There were many good Sayings [β] aſcribed to Lewis XII. I (N) ſhall mention one of 'em. I ſhall alſo give [β] See Mezerai, Hiſtoire de France, to. 2. pag. 873. 874. & Varillas Hiſtoire de Louis XII. Book 11. pag. 395. and the following.

[a] See the Remark F.

'Pronus (3) in cunos Ludovicus annos
'Cum daret vires animo ſenectus
'Corpori auferret, meruit decoram
'Gignere prolem.

'Now amongſt the Evils of old Age, this has 'been always reckoned one of the principal.

(3) In Carmine de prima ætate Caroli 8.

'(4) Coïtus jam longa oblivio, vel ſi
'Conteris, jacet exiguus cum ramice nervus.

(4) Juvenalis ſatyra 10.

'Inſomuch that after the uſe of Medicines called 'by the Phyſicians Entatica, and a Thouſand a-'morous Incentives,

'Incendi jam frigidus ævo
'Laomedontiades, vel Neſtoris hernia poſſit.

'a good Off-ſpring can't be expected from this 'Conjunction, becauſe, as Galen affirms, (5) Quæ 'florentem ætatem vel præcedunt ætates vel ſe-'quuntur, aut plane ſemen non effundunt, aut certe 'infœcundum, aut male fœcundum emittunt. Which 'in effect was found true in Charles VIII. who 'had all the Inconvencies above-mentioned from 'the old Age of his Father.

(5) Initio 2. de ſanit. tuenda.

(L) Satyrs againſt his own Perſon, but not againſt the Queen.] For this we'll cite Brantom's Memoirs: The King, (a) ſays he, had that Conſideration for Anne of Britany his Wife, that being one day told, how the Clerks of the Baſoche du Palais, and the Scholars had acted Plays, into which they brought the King and his Court, and all the Grandees, he made no more of it, than to ſay that they muſt paſs their time, and that he allowed 'em to ſpeak of him and his Court, but not irreverently; eſpecially he bid 'em forbear ſpeaking of the Queen his Wife in any manner whatever; otherwiſe he would have 'em all hanged. Thus you ſee what Honour he paid her. I add to this Paſſage theſe Words of Caſtor: '(b) Our Lewis XII. who deſerved the 'Title of Father of his People, Was not he acted 'in a full Theatre in his good City of Paris, and 'repreſented as an inſatiable Miſer, who drank in 'a great Gold Goblet, without being able to 'quench his unreaſonable Thirſt? He praiſed the 'Invention, and made himſelf as merry as others, 'and perhaps was glad that his love of Riches, 'which had never given the leaſt of his Subjects 'occaſion to cry, furniſh'd 'em with a Subject of 'Laughter and agreeable Diverſion. In general this Monarch was of ſo ſweet and debonaire a Temper, that the Rigour he exerciſed againſt the Duke of Milan, was thought to be of Divine Appointment. (c) He cauſed him to be removed from Lions to Loches, where he was ſhut up for Ten Years together to his Death, with a Rigor ſo contrary to the Mercy of this good Prince, that it was believed to be a viſible Chaſtiſement of God. This miſerable Duke of Milan was ſhut up in an Iron Cage, where he had not ſo much as the Conſolation of being able to read or write. This one ſevere Action made many conclude, that Lewis was of a cruel Temper. (d) Eum tamen previcacis obſtinatæque naturæ, & proinde ſavum & inexorabilem pleriique exiſtimarunt, vel ob id præcipue, quod Ludovicum Sfortiam erepto omni ſcribendi, & quæ cuperet legendi ſolatio, ferratæ in cavea hominum miſerrimum mori coegiſſet.

(a) Brantome Memoires des Dames illuſtres, pag. 11.

(b) Caſtor, Lettres, tome 1. pag. 728.

(c) Mezerai ubi ſupra, pag. 421. ad ann. 1500.

(d) Paulus Jovius, Hiſtor. lib. 14. ſub fin.

(M) A great Queen, and of admirable Chaſtity.] You may ſee her Eulogy in Brantome, (e) and in (f) Hilarion de Coſte, I only point to theſe Originals; but I ſhall do more as to Peter de St. Julian, whom I ſhall copy concerning a very curious Fact: Queen Anne, ſays he, (g) Dutcheſs of Britany, and Madam Anne of France, Dutcheſs of Bourbonnois, the former twice Queen of France, and the latter Daughter to King Lewis XI. and Regent in France, during the Minority of King Charles VIII. her Brother, ſo vertuouſly baniſhed Immodeſty, and planted Honour in the Hearts of the Ladies and Gentlewomen, Citizens Wives, and all other ſorts of French Women, that they who were known to have blemiſhed their Honour, were ſo diſgraced and degraded, that the Vertuous Women would have thought they injured their Reputation, ſhould they ſuffer 'em in their Company. I don't think there was a ſurer way to make Virtue flouriſh than this. If once it were the Faſhion for all Women of good Reputation to refuſe the Company of thoſe who were ſuſpected of Gallantries, Wou'd any of our Ladies venture to diſhonour themſelves? It would be eaſie, in my Opinion, for Queens to place their Sex upon a good foot; they need only baniſh the Ladies their Preſence, who were accuſed upon ſufficient grounds: In a Word, they need only imitate Anne of Britany. A Modern Author (h) points out the moſt fruitful Source of our Ages Corruption, when he ſays, that whereas heretofore a Woman who was jealous of her Reputation, would have ſcrupled the Company of another, whoſe Vertue was ſuſpected, at preſent the ſame Reſpect is ſhewn to thoſe of an irregular Conduct, and to thoſe of a regular. 'Tis diſcouraging (i) Virtue, to rob it of its temporal Recompence, which is done by paying the ſame Reſpects and Civilities to a Woman of a loſt Reputation, as to another of Virtue and Honour: This is almoſt the paſs that things are come to. (k) In effect, what can we inſtance that is eaſier obtained by thoſe who are continually on their Guard, than by others who are under ſome Diſgrace? Do the former go more confidently than others to great Feaſts, or Ceremonial Meetings, or do they recieve greater Civilities at 'em? Is it any Obſtacle to a great Marriage Settlement, that one has been the Diſcourſe of a whole Nation? Is one leſs praiſed in an Epiſtle Dedicatory, or a Funeral Sermon? By no means; and we may ſay with Solomon upon all this, That the ſame thing happens to him that ſacrificeth, and to him that ſacrificeth not. See the Remark C of the Article Gonzague (Eleonorade.)

(e) Ubi ſupra, à pag. 1. uſque ad 31.

(f) Vies des Dames illuſtres, tome 1. at the beginning.

(g) Peter de St. Julien, Antiquitez de Maſon, apud Hilarion de Coſte, ubi ſupra, pag. 54, 55.

(h) La Chetardye, Inſtruction for a young Princeſſe. See the Nouv. de la Rep. des lettres, Octobre, 1985. art. 1. p. 1075.

(i) Nouvelles de la republique des lettres, ibid. pag. 1076.

(k) Ibid.

To return to Queen Anne of Britany: Her Chaſtity was not unſerviceable to the ſupporting her lofty Humour. Theſe are the Words of one of her Panegyriſts: (l) "I am not ignorant that 'ſome (6) have written, that this good King find-'ing his Princeſs was very fond of Ruling, let her 'peaceably govern her Dutchy of Britany; and 'underſtanding that ſhe was carrying on ſome In-'trengues againſt his Inclination and Service, he 'would not however reſent it, ſaying to thoſe that 'preſt him ſo it: Some Allowance is to be made to 'a Chaſte Woman. There are thoſe who had ra-'ther their Wives were given to Gallantry, pro-'vided they were ſubmiſſive, than have 'em, (m) Chaſte, and Imperious with all: Lewis XII. was not of this Humour. See the Tenth Satyr of Boileau, in the place, where he ſpeaks of the Price, at which a Virtuous Wife knows how to rate her Modeſty.

(l) Hilar. de Coſte ubi ſupra, to. 1. p. 6.

(6) A. Perron & other Hiſtorians.

(m) Malo Venuſinum quam te Cornelia, mater Gracchorum, ſi cum magnis virtutibus affers Grande ſupercilium. Juvenal. ſat. 6. v. 166.

(N) I ſhall only mention one of his Sayings.] (n) "After the League of Cambray, the Veneti-'ans made a Deputation to him to endeavour to 'bring him off. The Senator, who was the chief 'of the Embaſſy, made him a Speech full of the 'Wiſdom of that Republick; and Lewis, who 'would neither contradict, nor grant what he de-'manded, anſwered pleaſantly, I'll play ſuch a 'Number of Fools againſt your Wiſe Men, that all 'their Wiſdom ſhall not be able to reſiſt 'em; for 'the Fools are a ſort of People that ſtrike every 'where, without minding where, or underſtand-'ing any reaſon for it. He might well ſay that he would oppoſe Fools to the Venetians: for all that alſo give the Deſcription (O) of his Perſon, as we find it in a Book of Bartholomew Cocles.

(n) Varillas, Hiſt. de Louis XII. Book 11. p. 397.

LEWIS XIII. King of France, Son and Succeſſor to Henry the Great, was born at Fontainbleau, the 17th of September, 1601. and began his Reign the 14th of May, 1610. If the Ten firſt Years of his Reign were diſturbed (A) by various Factions, which ſometimes degenerated into Civil Wars; the Twenty-three others were no leſs agitated by Religious or Foreign Wars: ſo that what Job [a] ſays in general, of all Men, is applicable in a more particular manner to this Prince. His Reign, which was ſo little peaceable, was extreamly glorious; nor had France of a long time gained ſo many Signal Victories as it did under him: and yet in the midſt of all theſe Triumphs and Glories, this Monarch may be ſaid to have been very (B) unhappy: for his own Family threw him perpetually into Diſcontents. He

[a] See Job. Ch. 7. v. 1.

(a) Si Carolus VIII. & Galli tum temporis ita fuiſſent animati, ſicut eſt Ludovicus XIV. & ejus conſilium, cujus inſtituta rationeſque fere ſunt mathematicæ, actum fuiſſet de Italia, cujus nulla ampliùs erat vis militaris. Sed ut Galli hanc expeditionem impetu magis quam conſilio, fati non prudentiæ ductu ſuſceperant & executi erant, ita mirum non eſt, idem fatum, deficiente conſtantia, illos deſtituiſſe. Ulricus Huber Hiſtoriæ civilis Tomo 2. pag. 112, 113. Editione Franeker, 1992.

(b) Pag. 44.

(c) This Book of Naudé was printed in 1630.

(d) Bartholomæus Cocles lib. 2. Phyſiog. quæſtio 15.

(e) Teſtament politique de Mr. de Louvois, pag. 388.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 343.

(g) Ibid. pag. 388, 89.

that the French did in Italy under Charles VIII. and Lewis XII. was an Effect of that Martial Fury, which Foreigners themſelves own to be the Temper of the French Soldiers at the firſt Onſet. That Heat and Alacrity produce very good Succeſſes; but as their Generals were not Men of Brains, and very little Conduct was obſerved in the Affairs of France, their Conqueſts were as ſoon loſt as gained. There was not much Prudence at that time, either in the Head or Members of the Council. This it was that ſaved Italy, as has been lately acknowledged by a Famous Profeſſor (a) of Frizeland.

(O) The Diſcription of his Perſon.] Naudé has inſerted it in his Additions (b) to the Hiſtory of Lewis XI. and obſerves, that he found it in a very ſcarce Book, which was printed 120 Years ago (c). We ſhall ſee the Title of it in the Margin. (d) Caput non magnum, acutum, frons anguſta, oculi groſſi eminentes, facies macra, capilli curti, nares amplæ & elevatæ, labra groſſa, & mentum acutum, collum curtum & ſubtile, humeri anguſti, manus & brachia ubtilia & longa, epiglottis eminens, furcula pectoris ſtricta, pectus anguſtum, ſtatura potius curva quàm recta, corpus colericum, & motus oculorum velox & ſurſum revolventes ſe, & crura ſubtilia.

(A) Various Factions which ſometimes degenerated into Civil Wars.] When a Man examines the Hiſtory of Lewis the XIII's Reign, from the Beginning to the End, he's a thouſand times tempted to put himſelf theſe Queſtions: But is it true, that I am reading the Tranſactions of France? Have I not before me a Book, wherein the Writer, from a Romantick Fancy, has thought fit to Characterize a mutinous People, a Nobility inclined to Rebellion, and to publiſh theſe Characters under the Name of France, to conceal that of ſome other Nation? A Man is the more tempted to ask theſe Queſtions, who ſuffers himſelf to be prejudiced, either by the Railleries of Strangers, who repreſent the French as the Idolaters of Monarchy and of their Monarchs, or by the Elogies which ſeveral French Authors beſtow upon their own Nation, as if naturally dutiful to their Kings, from an unparallell'd Zeal and Loyalty. Nothing's falſer than theſe Railleries of Foreigners, and Encomiums of French Pens. The Author of Mr. de Louvois's Political Teſtament, knew the Genius of the Nation much better; he lays it down, that the only and true way for France to avoid Civil Wars, is the abſolute Power of the Sovereign vigorouſly ſupported, and armed with all the neceſſary force to make it feared. As for turbulent and rebellious People, ſays he, (e) it's certain there have been as many ſeen in France, in the preceding Reigns, and in the beginning of your Majeſty's, as in any other Country in the World. He eſtabliſhes the ſame Maxim, when he makes this Reflection upon the Engliſh: '(f) 'Tis well known what Diſpoſition they are 'of at bottom, they are as inconſtant and unruly as moſt Nations; but when all is ſaid, they are 'not more ſo: 'Tis the Occaſions and the Form of 'their Government, the Impunity and the Means 'that are left in their Hands, which make them turbulent. We ſhou'd ſee, in other Kingdoms, Subjects who are in appearance the moſt Paſſive, 'grow Mutinous and Factious, if the Prudence, 'the Authority, and Vigour of their Sovereigns, 'did not keep 'em under, and cut off all Opportunities. Conſider how he reaſons upon the difference there is in France, betwixt this and the preceeding Reigns. (g) "What's become at 'preſent of thoſe Multitudes of turbulent and 'ſeditious Spirits? Have they not all the Pre'tences they ever had? Do not the Wars and o'ther Expences, with which your Majeſty is obliged 'to maintain the Luſtre of your Glory, conſtrain 'you to impoſe upon the People more exceſſive 'Taxes, than ever were raiſed by Lewis XI. Have 'not the Proteſtants been more provoked than 'under Charles IX. and Lewis XIII? Is not the 'Nobility heavier laden than ever? Does not the 'Clergy contribute to the Neceſſities of the State 'more than ever they have done, either in this 'Age or in all the Ages paſt? And has not your 'Majeſty as many Controverſies with the See of 'Rome as any of your Predeceſſor's ever had? and 'yet all is quiet and ſubmiſſive; there's no Revolt nor Treaſon heard of. War and Confuſions are 'kept off at a diſtance; whereas heretofore they were 'at home and in our Bowels---(b) Whence proceeds 'this difference? ---Whence comes this Change? 'From the difference wherewith your Majeſty 'manages the Royal Authority; from your Prudence to make a right Uſe of it, from your Skill 'in riding that brute Beaſt the People, which being 'unbridled, would run at random every way, whither 'its inſtinct drove it; but which is inſenſibly accuſtomed to be governed by a Bit and Bridle, 'and moves ſurer where it feels an even and ſtrait 'Rein. 'Tis abſolute Power that's the true and 'only Curb to check the intemperate Heat of a 'Blind and Capricious Multitude. He ſays in another place (i) "That the limited Authority of 'the Sovereign and of Republicks has more Inconveniences, and is ſubject to more unlucky 'Conſequences to the State and People than Arbitrary Power. Factions, Seditions, Tumults, 'Civil Wars, frequently do more Miſchief in 'one Year, than all the Exceſſes of an abſolute 'Monarch can cauſe in a whole Life. He may be miſtaken with reſpect to ſome Countries; but there is no Probability that he is miſtaken as to his own Nation, which is of ſuch a Genius, that the worſt State that can befal it, is to live under an effeminate and weak Government; in that Caſe every Gentleman is the Tyrant of his Village; every great Lord is the Tyrant of his Lordſhip, and nothing but Seditions and Inſurrections are to be heard of. (k) Read the Hiſtory of France, and eſpecially obſerve the Minorities, and you'll be convinced of what I have been ſaying; you'll find that the Character of this Nation is the very ſame that Mr. de la Bruyere gives of Children. (l)

(b) Ibid. pag. 392, 393.

(i) Ibid. pag. 383, 384.

(k) See the Paſſage of Coſtar in the Remark P.

(l) La Bruyere, Caracteres de ce ſiecle, pag. 438, 439. Edit. de Paris, 1694.

(B) In the midſt of theſe---Glories this Monarch was very unhappy.] A Modern Author willing to ſhew the Vanity of Humane Proſperities, makes uſe of Two great Examples; he runs over the Life of Auguſtus, and then proceeds in this manner: (m) "Let us come to 'the ſecond Inſtance, and behold the moſt 'glorious Potentate of this Age, with ſuch a 'Continuando of the Bleſſings of Heaven, as 'all the Earth has reaſon to be aſtoniſh'd at. 'It may eaſily be concluded that I mean Lewis XIII. whoſe Proſperities will doubtleſs be admired by thoſe who come after us, 'if they judge of 'em by the Luſtre of his 'Heroick Actions, by the Number of his 'Trophies, by the Extent of his Conqueſts, and 'by the Greatneſs of his Triumphs. In effect, 'whether you conſider the Monſters he has ſubdued at home, or caſt your Eyes on the Advantages he has every where reap'd abroad, you will 'be forced to confeſs, that France never had a 'more fortunate King than he. There's not a 'Frontier but he has far advanced into his Ene-

(m) La Mothe le Vayer, Diſcours de la proſperité &. of his Works pag. 328. & the following Edit. of Paris 1681. in 12.

He could not confide either in his (C) Mother, or Wife, or Brother; three Persons who suffered themselves to be governed by turbulent Factions, and ill-[illegible]tioned Spirits. His very Sisters were against him, especially she whom he had [illegible]ied to the King of England: For she received with open Arms all the Malec[illegible]s, and cherished her Husband's Inclination for the Interest of Spain. Lewis X[illegible] having not a Head strong enough to reign by himself, and suffering himself [illegible]e always led by Favourites, furnished but too many Pretences to unquiet Min[illegible]and if in the Necessity he found himself of depending on his Ministers, he [illegible]not at last fallen into the Hands of the great Cardinal Richelieu, he had run the Risk (D)

' mies Country. France has no Malignants now left in ' her; he has tamed their Pride, and confounded their ' Designs. And if you observe what has past on ' the Ocean, as well as the Mediterranean, you'll ' conclude, that all the Elements fought for us, ' under the Command of this Prince. Now the ' Instances of his good Fortune were no less con- ' spicuous in his domestick Affairs; and here ' doubtless he had great Advantages above Au- ' gustus. God gave him for a Companion of his ' Bed, a Princess, whose singular Goodness, toge- ' ther with many other extraordinary and truly ' heroical Vertues, might have made her beloved, ' tho' she had not been in other Respects one of the ' most perfect and most agreeable Persons of her ' Time. He saw himself the Father of two ' Sons, most worthy of his Affection; as being ' so beautiful and well-formed by Nature, that he ' could not wish 'em more accomplished; besides the ' Season in which he had 'em, ought to have render'd ' 'em still more dear to him. He was respe[illegible] ' all the World; and on what side soever he[illegible] ' himself in his Louvre, he saw nothing but the ' Testimonies of Love and Reverence. Could any ' thing then be wanting to his Felicity, to make it ' more entire, if we judge by Appearances? And ' yet with all this, what should we say, if by his ' own Confession, he never spent one Day without ' some Mortification, nor ever tasted in his Life ' a Joy that was not diluted with the Bitterness ' of Discontent? I shall here take care, not to com- ' mit the Fault of him, whom the Athenians ' treated so ill for having obliged 'em to deplore a ' second time the Misfortunes of their Allies, by ' representing 'em on the Stage. And indeed, my ' Imprudence would be greater than his, if I ' should at present enlarge on so ungrateful a ' Subject, as would be that of the cutting Cares, ' and continual Inquietudes of this Monarch. But ' however, since the last Words at the Point of Death, ' which the Civilians call Sacred, and which are ' reckoned Oracles in Mouths less sincere than his, ' have assured us, that his Satisfactions were never ' pure, nor his Pleasures exempt from Sadness and ' Affliction, may we not vvell conclude, that all ' his Happiness, as vvell as that of Augustus, had ' nothing real in it, and vvas only of the Nature ' of those Things, vvhich subsist no vvhere but in ' Opinion? I make no Reflections on this long Passage, though it vvere easie perhaps to find in it some Subject of Criticism: I shall content my self vvith observing, that vve here see the most con- vincing Proof imaginable of my Text. Lewis XIII. confesses he vvas unhappy; no Body could knovv this so well as himself, and he had no Reason to dissemble, in the Condition he vvas in. See in the Remark E, my Citation from Mr. le Laboureur.

(a) La Mothe le Vayer, ib. (b) Tiberius's Succession of Augustus, was the Son of a Person who, the Truth is, declared against Augustus, during the War of Perousa, and afterwards endeavoured to form a Party in Favour of Pompey's Son, and last of all, joined with M. Antony; but soon after made his Peace with Augustus, and even made a Cession to him of his Wife. Sueton. in Tiberio, cap. 4.

La Mothe le Vayer says one thing, which obliges me to give a short Supplement. ' Augustus, ' says he (a), had the Mortification to leave for ' his Heir to the greatest part of his Estate, and ' Successor to the Empire, the Son of his mortal ' Enemy. This is false (b); but 'tis true, that Lewis XIII. left the Regency of his Kingdom to a Person he heartily hated, and herein his Mortification, was greater than that of Augustus could have been. 'Tis easily guess'd why this Author did not carry on the Parallel between the Misfortunes of the Roman Emperor, and those of the King of France on this Head. The following Remark will acquaint us with the little Affection Lewis XIII. had for his Wife, whom yet he declared Regent.

(C) He [illegible] not confide either in his Mother, or his W[illegible]r his Brother. Here's just matter enough [illegible] three Heads of Division in this Remark.

I. Lewis XIII. for the good of his Kingdom, that is, to remove from factious Spirits, the Means of forming dangerous Cabals, was forced to give Orders for his Mother to depart France; nor did he come to these Extremities, till after he had rub'd through a long Course of Disturbances, in which the Royal Authority was but very scurvily treated. It was necessary more than once to subdue by Force of [illegible], the Partisans of Mary de Medicis.

II. As to his Wife, I refer you to the Memoirs of Mr. de la Rochefoucaud (c). ' I have been as- ' sured by Mr. Chavigny himself, says this Duke, ' that going to wait upon the King, as from the ' Queen, to beg Pardon for whatever might have ' been done; as also for having di[illegible]d him by ' her Conduct, beseeching hi[illegible]cularly not ' to believe, that she had any H[illegible] in the Affair ' of Chalais, or had ever listened to any Propositi- ' ons of Marrying Monsieur, after Chalais should ' have murdered the King; His Majesty answered ' Monsieur de Chavigny, without any Passion, In ' the Condition I'm in, I ought to pardon her, but ' I'm not obliged to believe her. Note, that the King was just expiring when he spake these Words. It's a Time, in which for the Gener[illegible] a Man speaks what he thinks, especially in M[illegible] ters where a Lye is of no use to him. We m[illegible] conclude then, he died fully perswaded, that his Wife was an Accomplice in a most Hellish Conspiracy, in which it was resolved to take him off, and to marry her to the Duke of Orleans his Successor. Now as the Affair of Chalais happened in the Year 1629, judge wh[illegible]her this Prince lived a few Years in Distrusts, [illegible]espect to this Queen, and in the Anguish o[illegible]cholly Resentment. Nor ought it any lou[illegible] thought strange, that she continued barren [illegible] so many Years. Could the most incontinent Husbands easily resolve to approach their Wives, if they believed 'em guilty of so black a Treason? It would require a great deal of time for a Prince to digest this Thought; his Confessor (d) must return again and again to the [illegible] Charge, even though a long Course of Years [illegible] should have seamed the Wound. Whether Lewis XIII. had Reason or no, it was the same thing. His Heart equally suffered. Mr. de la Rochefoucaud says (e), that the King, when he gave this Answer to Mr. de Chavigny, believed, that the Queen was still in a Correspondence with the Spaniard, by means of Madam de Chevreuse, who was then at Brussels. He observes also, that there were an Hundred Engines to be plaid, in order to procure the Regency for the Queen. ' (f) She ' believed the King very far from such a Thought, ' considering the little Inclination he had ever ' shewn for her——— (g) She [illegible] Monsieur, ' who had had but too many Proo[illegible] the King's ' Aversion, and who almost e[illegible] suspected, ' that he designed to exclude tha[illegible]n the Ma- ' nagement of Affairs, sought all possible Ways to ' prevent it. She never would have obtained the Regency, if the King must have left her in full Authority; but in hopes of leaving her only the [illegible]w of it, he past the Declaration. ' (h) He [illegible]r could consent to declare her Regent, nor [illegible]d he resolve to share the Authority betwixt [illegible] and his Brother. The Intelligences of which ' he suspected her, and the Pardon he had lately ' granted Monsieur upon a Treaty of Spain, held ' him under an Irresolution, which he could [illegible]

(c) Memoires de Mr. de la Rochefoucaud, p. 5.

(d) Article [illegible]ius, Remark B.

(e) In his Memoirs, pag. 3.

(f) Memoirs de la Rochef. ibid.

(g) Ibid. pag. 4 & 5.

(h) Ibid. pag. 4.

(D) at leaſt of his Crown; but this able Miniſter being obliged by his own Intereſt to ſupport the Authority of his Maſter, applied himſelf with ſo much Vigilance to break the Neck of the Cabals, that he ſoon made all their Deſigns vaniſh into Smoke. He was forced to behead ſome great Men; but this Severity (E) was abſolutely neceſſary at that time. Clemency, ſo uſeful on many other Occaſions, had been very pernicious in this We muſt not believe thoſe who venture to affirm, that People were put to Death, whoſe only Fault conſiſted in their having had the Misfortune to diſpleaſe

' have gotten over, if ſome Conditions in the ' Declaration which Cardinal Mazarine and Monſieur de Chavigny propoſed, had not furniſhed ' him with an Expedient, whereby he hoped to ' limit the Power of the Queen, and to make her ' in ſome Meaſure dependant upon the Council he ' deſigned to eſtabliſh †.

† See on the whole matter, the Remark V.

III. As to his Brother, all the World knows his falls and Relapſes; he was engaged in all ſorts of Conſpiracies, whole Provinces made Inſurrections in his Favour; he was in an Intelligence with Spain. In a Word, ſince the King believed him an Accomplice in the Affair of Chalais, he could not chuſe but look upon him with an Evil Eye: This Object brought to his Remembrance that a Deſign had once been formed to take away his Life, and marry his Widow to the Duke of Orleans, who was to have ſucceeded him. I don't know whether Jealouſie, mixed with all the other Diſcontents of Lewis XIII. but 'tis poſitively ſaid, that the Queen was highly civil to the Duke of Orleans. Let us hear what ſome Memoirs publiſhed in 1685, inform the World. (a) ' Monſieur made his Court daily to ' the Queen's, who reſided at Paris during the ' Siege of Rochel, carrying himſelf with a great ' deal of Freedom, even to the Reigning Queen, ' with whom he had always been in a good Underſtanding, and never obſerved overmuch Ceremony. When ſhe came into France, ſhe called ' him, Monſieur, both ſpeaking to him, and of ' him, and always continued that Style, with ' which ſome found fault, for as much as in Writing to him, ſhe obſerved the Style of Brother. ' During the ſhort Journey that the King had ' made to Paris, Monſieur having met the Queen ' one time as ſhe was coming from a Nine Days ' Devotion ſhe had made to obtain a Child, told ' her by way of Raillery, Madam, you have been ſoliciting your Judges againſt me, I conſent you ſhould carry your Cauſe, if the King has credit enough. As he is repreſented in theſe Memoirs, he had ſome need of the Advice that was given (b) the Duke of Valois. The ſame Book acquaints us, that the King was at leaſt as much diſpleaſed at his Brother's having Children, as at the Barrenneſs of the Queen. Hear what Alarms were given him upon the Marriage of the Duke of Orleans with the Heireſs of Montpenſier. ' (c) Tronſon, Secretary ' to the Cabiner, and ſome other particular Servants of the King, who only conſidered the Intereſt of his Royal Perſon, and not that of the ' State, having repreſented to the King, of what ' dangerous Importance it was to him to marry ' Monſieur his Brother to a rich Heireſs, allied as ' ſhe was to the Houſe of Guiſe, which had heretofore aſpired to the Crown, and with ſo large a ' Revenue as was ſettled upon him; by which ' Means, his Majeſty having no Iſſue, would only ' be conſidered as a languiſhing King, and the ' Court, which is wholly conducted by Intereſt, ' would abandon him, to go over to Monſieur, as ' a vigorous Prince, who quickly promiſed an ' Heir, upon which every one might found his ' Hopes and Deſigns, which muſt needs be to the ' Prejudice of his Royal Perſon. His Majeſty was ' hereby ſo affected with Jealouſie, that Father Souffrai his Confeſſor, coming to wait on him one ' Morning in his Cloſet, his Majeſty juſt riſing out ' of his Bed, threw himſelf on his Neck all in ' Tears, telling him, that he knew to his Coſt, ' that the Queen his Mother would remember all ' her Life, what paſſed at the Death of Mareſchal ' d'Ancre, and that the Advantages ſhe procured ' to Monſieur, permitted him not to doubt, but ' that ſhe loved him much more than himſelf. ' The Father being much ſurprized at this Diſcourſe, indeavoured gently to heal this Diffidence in ' the King's Mind, and aſſured him to the contrary, &c. He was pacified, and the Marriage was concluded (d); from which quickly proceeded a Daughter: All this renewed the King's Spleen, and it was good luck for him, that his Siſter died a little after her Lying-in: However, he appeared to be greatly afflicted. See the Margin (e). He was very averſe ever after to a Second Marriage of his Brother.

(a) Memoirs of the late Duke of Orleans, containing all that has paſt in France, from the Year 1608. to 1636. At Amſterdam, by Peter Mortier, 1685, in 12.

(b) See the Article of Francis V. Remark B.

(c) Memoires du Duc d'Orleans, pag. 41.

(d) In 1626.

(e) Ibid. pag. 72.

(D) He had run the Riſk at leaſt of his Crown.] They who laid Siege to the Two Queens and Monſieur, had no Expectations under the Miniſtry of Cardinal de Richelieu, but had mighty Hopes, provided his Royal Highneſs ſhould aſcend the Throne. There were two Ways of placing the Crown upon his Head; one by making away with the King, the other by treating him like Don Alphonſo, King of Portugal. The ſecond Means could not eaſily be executed, in a Nation ſo jealous (f) of its Fundamental Laws, and under ſo vigilant and able a Miniſter as Cardinal de Richelieu. Therefore the other Expedient was agreed on, if it be true, that Chalais had the Deſign above-mentioned (g) in the Paſſage of Mr. de la Rochefoucaud. It was impoſſible to convince a great many People, but there was a moſt horrible Myſtery of Iniquity in Agitation, to give at once the Crown and the Queen to the Duke of Orleans. I know not what to think of it. See the Life of Cardinal Richelieu, printed at Amſterdam in 1694, Tome 1. pag. 304.

(f) Note, that tho' this Nation is as ſubject as any to Revolts, yet there's always a powerful Party which ſticks cloſe to the rightful Prince in all Civil Wars.

(g) Pag. 1894. letter c.

(E) To behead ſome great Men; but this Severity was ——— neceſſary.] Of all thoſe that were beheaded for Rebellion in the Reign of Lewis XIII. none was ſo much lamented as the Duke (h) of Montmorenci. And truly he was a Lord of great Merit, adored in Languedoc, his Government, and admired by all France, as appeared by the Zeal with which they ſollicited his Pardon. But this was the very thing which in good Politicks ought to induce a Monarch, not to pardon his Treaſon. It was dangerous letting a Perſon live ſo generally admired, and who might ſo eaſily draw all Languedoc into a ſecond Rebellion. Had he done it at the time (i) that the Spaniards beſieged Leucate, what would have become of France? Don't tell me, that Gratitude would have fixed him to his Prince's Service, or the Weakneſs he had diſcovered in the Duke of Orleans, have cured his Fondneſs of Revolting in favour of him. Theſe are poor Reaſons. The Duke of Montmorenci received to favour, would never have been able to bear the Credit of the Cardinal, and would have taken his Meaſures a ſecond time to deſtroy him. He would have made his Advantage of the Teſtimonies, the Grandees and Provinces had given him of their extraordinary Eſteem, during his Impriſonment, &c. There was need of great Examples of Severity, under a Reign in which the French Nobility were ſo familiarized to this ſort of Conſpiracies, Inſurrections, and Correſpondencies with Spain, that one would think that the Idea of Infamy, or even of a Fault, did not enter into this ſort of Crimes. It would be in effect turning a Monarchical Government into Anarchy, to let ſuch Abuſes go unpuniſhed. Mr. le Laboureur relates a thing which is curious enough; to wit, that the King conſented to the Duke of Montmorenci's Death, only from a Spirit of Servitude. I'll relate the whole Paſſage; becauſe it ſerves to ſhew, that Lewis XIII. with a Sceptre in his Hand, and the Crown on his Head, was under greater Conſtraints, and more unhappy, than if he had had Irons on his Feet. This Reflection ought eternally to renew the Tears of France, upon the Deſtiny of Henry Duke of Mommorenci, and Damuille, Admiral and Mareſchal of France, only Son to the Conſtable, who fell rather by Misfortune than Inclination, into a ſmall Fault, and who was overwhelmed with all the displeaſe (E△) the firſt Miniſter. Poſſibly they might ſpeak more reaſonably, and the Charge would be ſevere enough, ſhould they ſay, there were ſome beheaded, whoſe Crimes had all gone unpuniſhed, if they would have adhered to his Intereſts. They who ſpake equitably, were content to complain in behalf of ſome [illegible] theſe unhappy People, that the Court had ſubmitted 'em to the moſt ſevere Inter[illegible]ions of the Law, and not mitigated their Puniſhment; they who liſtned onl[illegible] their [illegible]ſions, Rigour of the Laws; though it had had no ill Conſequences, and though there was no danger of any ill effect from it: I ſay farther, though the King was to loſe by it the Ornament and Glory of his Court, the Honour of his Nobility, the Delight of his Kingdom, and what ſtill ought to be more dear to a great Prince, the moſt auguſt and worthy Subject of Clemency that will ever be ſeen. I have it from the Mouth of the late deceaſed Prince of Condé, that Lewis XIII. expreſſed to him his Remorſes on his Death-Bed, not with Tears, but with Sobs, and conjured him to believe, that Violence had been done him in that unhappy Journey to Toloufe, which he made againſt his Will, and where againſt his Reſolution, he was overpowered by a Cloud of Pretences, or rather Legerdemains of State, which diſappeared after that fatal Tragedy, and left him under the moſt ſtinging Diſcontents which he had ever ſince concealed in his Boſom. Ah! my Couſin, ſaid he to him afterwards, this is not to reign, but rather to be the Slave of Tyranny, at leaſt to feel all the Pains of it in a lawful Royalty, to hear only ſiniſter Reports, and to be always in diſtruſt of thoſe who are neareſt to us, of our principal Officers, and of thoſe on whom we place our Affections; and to ſubmit and regulate our Conduct, by the Phantoms of Politicks, which are frequently only another's private Intereſt (a).

(h) He was beheaded at Thouloufe in 1632. See his Elogy.

(i) In 1637.

(a) Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Memoires de Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 152.

There are, I queſtion not, many Truths in this Diſcourſe. I'm perſwaded that Cardinal Richelieu more than once repreſented to the King his Maſter, the Deſigns of his Rebellious Subjects, greatly heightned and exaggerated; for in the numerous Conſpiracies that were formed in this Reign, there were many that deſigned only the Ruin of the Cardinal, and meant no harm either to the Perſon or Authority of the Prince; and yet his Eminence had the Policy (b) to inſinuate, and even to perſwade him, that they were contriving to take the Crown from off his Head, in favour of the Duke of Orleans. Hence it was that this Prince was brought to conſent to the taking off ſo many Heads. He underſtood theſe Illuſions in the Sequel, and ſecretly lamented them. He was to be pitied; but 'tis very probable, that he was ſenſible he could not deliver himſelf from one Slavery, without ſubmitting to another Yoak, ſtill more incommodious; and this was the Reaſon that hindered his diſplacing the Cardinal, though he really hated him. The removing of this Miniſter had delivered the King bound Hand and Foot, into the Power of the Duke of Orleans. They might perhaps have left him the Title of King; they might have governed in his Name; but all Affairs would have been managed according to the Caprices of this Duke's Favourites. 'Twould have been a ſtrange Government. The two Queens and their Creatures, the Duke of Orleans and his, would have perplexed and confounded all things, and no great Deſign could have been formed for the Glory of the Monarchy, and againſt the Intereſts of Spain; and if any great Events had happened, the King would have ſeen the Duke his Brother carry away all the Honour of 'em; a cruel Subject of Jealouſie, and a Thouſand Times harder to bear, than the Aſcendant of the Cardinal. We are not ignorant how often Jealouſie of Authority, made Lewis XIII. uneaſie. He fell ſick, when he was told, that the Engliſh had landed in the Iſle of Rhe; and could not go in Perſon to the Coaſt of Poitou. (c) He was adviſed to ſend Monſieur his Brother as his Lieutenant-General. Monſieur's firſt Enterprize having not ſucceeded well, the King wrote to him (d) a Letter full of Reſentment, for having ſo lightly expoſed the Troops, without any Occaſion, and againſt the expreſs Orders of his Majeſty, which were only to keep things as a ſtand, and to hazard nothing till his Arrival. Perhaps, if Monſieur had ſucceeded in his firſt Attempt, he would have given greater Diſcontent; and it is believed that that Fear made the King anticipate the time of his perfect Recovery, that he might appear in his Camp as ſoon as poſſible. Here follows a ſtill greater effect of the [illegible] Jealouſie. (e) The King having declared the [illegible] Orleans General (f) of the Army in Italy, at the Sollicitation of the Queen his Mother, afterwards repented his having given him this Command, from an Apprehenſion, that his Brother might reap a great deal of Glory in Italy, which would eclipſe his own. This Thought ran in his Head to ſuch a degree, that it even broke his Sleep. Coming to (g) Chaliot, where the Cardinal was, he told him he could not ſuffer his Brother to be Generaliſſimo of the Army in Italy, and that a way ſhould be found to remove him from that Poſt. The Cardinal anſwered, That he knew but one way of getting this Command out of the Duke of Orlean's Hand, which was, that the King ſhould go himſelf into Italy; but if he took that Reſolution, it was neceſſary to depart in Eight Days at fartheſt. The King ſaid he would do it, and immediately prepared for his Expedition. A Man muſt know but little of Princes, to deny that the Jealouſie they conceive againſt their Sons or Brothers, and in general againſt their Succeſſors, is not more afflictive [illegible], than the Chagrin of depending too much on the firſt Miniſter. See in Brantome (f) the furious Jealouſie of Charles IX. againſt his Brother the Duke of Anjou, General of the Troops, that beat the Proteſtants at Jarnac, and at Montcontour. There is no doubt but it was a leſs Affliction to Lewis XIII. to be managed by Cardinal Richelieu; than it would have been to ſee his Brother, his Mother, or his Wife, in too great Credit at Court. The Creatures of theſe Three Great Ones would have been eternally forming little Court-Intrigues, which would have ruined the general Affairs. So that the good of the Kingdom (g) required, that Severity ſhould be uſed againſt the Heads of the Rebels, who would put the Government into Hands which were too much in the Intereſt of the Spaniards.

(c) Memoires du Duc d'Orleans, printed in 1685. pag. 81.
(d) Ibid. pag. 83.

(e) The Hiſtory of Cardinal de Richelieu, printed at Amſterdam, 1694. tome 1. p. 436. ad ann. 1629.
(f) Baſſompier Mem. T. 1. page 521.
(g) Le Vassor de Fan-vier.

(E△) Who venture to [illegible], that People were put to Death, whoſe only Fault conſiſted in their Misfortune to diſpleaſe the firſt Miniſter.] The Author of the Memoirs of Mr. d'Artagnan affirms, (h) that the Mareſchal de Marillac, and many others, were judged and condemned by Commiſſioners, though no other Crime could be imputed to 'em, beſides their having preſumed to diſpleaſe the Cardinal. He afterwards relates, what we have ſeen (i) above concerning the Prieſt Grandier, and then adds ' (k) St. Preuil's Caſe exactly remembled that of ' this Unfortunate Prieſt; a Thouſand and a Thouſand Witneſſes were produced againſt him, both ' from the Government of Dourlens, which he had ' enjoy'd before that of Arras, and from many other ' Places. Le Mennier was often confronted with ' him, but though all his Crime, as well as ' Grandier's, conſiſted only in diſpleaſing the high- ' er Powers, he nevertheleſs loſt his Head. Obſerve here three great Falſhoods: for if we examine without Prejudice all the Parts of Mareſchal de Marillac's Trial, we ſhall eaſily ſee, [illegible] he was guilty of infinite Exortions and Depr[illegible]ns, and within the Statute, which condemns to Death thoſe guilty of Peculation, to the Confiſcation of Body and Goods. 'Tis true, that interpreting this Law in the moſt mild and favourable Senſe, by the Confiſcation of Body, might be underſtood the Loſs of L[illegible] and not of Life, but from the Judges not t[illegible] it in the milder Senſe, but following the [illegible] Interpretation, it does not follow, that Mareſchal was innocent, and that all his Crime [illegible] in having rendered himſelf diſagreeable to Cardinal Richelieu. Many Irregularities are alledged

(h) Memoires de Mr. d'Artagnan, pag. [illegible]
(i) [illegible] 18[illegible] tre a,
(k) Ibid. pag. 161.

(l) See the Hiſtory of Cardinal Richelieu, printed at Amſterdam, 1694. tom. 2. pag. 49.

(a) Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Memoires de Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 152.
(b) The Conſtable de Lucries had made uſe of the ſame Stratagem before he had put it into the King's Head, that Mary de Medicis would uſe him as Catherine de Medicis had treated Charles IX. See the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nantes, tome 2. Book 6. pag. 288.

(f) Memoires tome 4. pag. [illegible]. 3. In the [illegible]

(g) See in the Rem. P. the Words of Coſſar.

Paſſions, extended their Complaints and Curſes even to the Judges themſelves, which could not be juſt with regard to him, who (EΔΔ) preſided in the Trial of the Duke of Montmorenci. Notwithſtanding the home-bred Conſpiracies the Cardinal had to ſtruggle with, he omitted not applying himſelf vigorouſly to Foreign Affairs. He procu[red] the King his Maſter the Glory of humbling the Houſe of Auſtria, which was th[e] terror of all Europe at that time. To induce him to make War with Spain, he remo[ved] ſome Scruples (F) of Conſcience which had reſtrain'd him before; for as

(a) See the ſame Hiſtory, pag. 49. & 50.

(b) See the Miniſtry of Cardinal Richelieu, tome 2. pag. 392. and the following Edit. of Holl.

ledged (a) in [the] Trial, and all to prove that the Commiſſioners were bribed, and that the Innocence of the accuſed was oppreſſed; but we muſt know alſo, that other Authors affirm (b) the Trial was agreeable to the exacteſt Forms of Law. Conſider well Mr. du Chaſtelet's Obſervations [on] the Life and Condemnation of Marſhal de Marillac; 'tis an Anſwer to a Libel the Cardinal's Enemies had publiſhed. We ſhould be too raſh, either to believe without Examination what they maintained, or the Narratives of his Friends in favour of him; the Satyrs of one ſide are as much to be ſuſpected, as the Flatteries on the other. Let us miſtruſt both, and determine nothing till after a thorough Diſcuſſion of the Facts; let's alſo diſtruſt that Natural Biaſs we all have to preſume in their favour, who incur the Diſ[grace] of a too potent Miniſter. (c) "'Tis a Fa[ult] too common in thoſe "who are not called to the Helm, to indeavour to "croſs the Steerage; and as if the confidence of "the Prince, and the favour of the People could "not be united in the ſame Subject, we ſee not a "Man in Place, or who has the leaſt ſhare in the "Conduct of Affairs, whoſe Perſon and Actions "are approv[ed] till after his Death or Diſgrace. "The diffe[rent] Accidents of the Marſhal de Marillac's Life, and the different Affections to"wards him according to his Fortune, furniſh our "Age with a certain proof of this ancient Maxim. "All France found fault with the choice the King "had made of him, ſpoke out of his Depredations, "blamed his Promotion to Honours, detracted "from his Courage, and could obſerve no Merit "nor Quality in him worthy ſo high an Advance"ment. As ſoon as his Majeſty was reſolved to puniſh "him, and for weighty Reaſons withdrew his Pro"tection, his former Accuſers wou'd have ſupported "him againſt Juſtice, affirmed he was innocent, wor"thy of Employs, and ſo overſtock'd with Courage "and Honeſty as to deſerve every thing except his "Fall. Thus Mr. du Chaſtelet ſpeaks, at the Be"ginning of a Book I have cited above. 'Tis ſaid that Cardinal Richelieu underſtanding that the Commiſſioners had paſſ[ed] the Sentence of Death upon him, cried out: It muſt be own'd that God grant an undeviſ[ing] Heart to Judges, which he does not give to other Men, ſince they who have tried the Marſhal de Marillac, have diſcovered Actions in him worthy of Death; I did not believe there was enough againſt him to whip a Page for. If I had heard the Cardinal ſay this, I ſhould believe he ſpoke it. It's generally ſaid he had been well aſſur'd that in a Conference, wherein it was debated what Courſe ſhou'd be taken with the Cardinal, this Marſhal had given his Vote for killing him; 'tis ſaid too † that he offered his Arm for ſuch an Exploit. Such a Man as this would have been actually puniſhable, and would eſpecially have appear'd ſo to the Cardinal.

(c) Du Chaſtelet, Obſervat. ſur la vie & la condemnation du Mareſchal de Marillac, init.

(d) See the Abbé de Murolles in his Abridgment of the Hiſtory of Fra[nce]. See alſo the Hiſtory of Cardinal Richelieu, ubi ſupra, pag. 52.

† See the Memoirs of the Maurier, pag. 369.

As to what concerns St. Preuil, the Memoirs I have cited are much more unreaſonable: He was a Gentleman of Angoumois, who had raiſed himſelf by an extraordinary Bravery; as nice on the Point of Honour, and the Reputation of a good Duelliſt and gallant Cavalier, as he was little conſcientious in point of Debauchery and Extortion. 'Tis co[nfeſſed] in Mr. d'Artagnan's Memoirs, that he h[ad] to do with a Married Woman. Who afro[nt] will venture to ſay, that all his Crime conſiſted in having diſpleaſed the higher Powers? Is not a Rape puniſhable with Death by the Laws of the Kingdom? Are not they who ſtea[l] a Maid, tho' with her own Conſent, reputed, in [ſome] worthy of Death? St. Preuil, by a ſtrong [Rea]ſon, had incurr'd the ſame Puniſhment, [in] carried off a Woman whoſe Husband [was] ſtill alive. I paſs over his Extortions and Violences, of which he was convicted, and which were ſo much the more odious as he commanded in a Place but lately reduced under the French Juriſdiction, and which was to be reconciled to their new Dominion, by a Moderate Adminiſtration. The Truth of this Maxim of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius, was never more manifeſt than in the Reign of Lewis XIII. (e) In cauſis majeſtatis hæc natura eſt, ut videantur vim pati etiam quibus probatur. It's the Property of all Trials for Crimes againſt the State, that even they who are duly convicted, are thought to have been oppreſs'd. Moſt People are ſo careleſs as not to give themſelves the Trouble of examining who is in the Right or who in the Wrong, however they will be judging of things, and ſo do it the cheapeſt way; they take up with Probabilities, and think it very likely that the greateſt is the injuſteſt ſide. Dion Chryſoſtome has made this Obſervation: (f) Οὐ γὰρ ἅ ποιοῦσιν ἐνθυμοῦνται ἀλλὰ τίνες ὄντες· ἀδίκως τε ἀκούσαντες, ἢ βιαζόμενοι ἰδίᾳ τι ἐξαίφνης πολλάκις, ἀλλ' ἐκ τοῦ εἰκὸς βιάζεσθαι τὸν ἀδικούμενον πλέον. Quidam enim non conſiderant quæ faciant, ſed qui ſint; neque injuriam facientes, neque violentiam paſſos voluus examinare plerumque, ſed quibus veriſimile ſit injuriam fieri ab iis qui plus [poſſunt]. A compaſſion for the miſerable, and the [Ill] Men bear to Men in Power, are a Source of Deception. See the Margin. (g) But that which gives occaſion to this, is the too frequent Experience that they who are in Authority, are apt to abuſe it, to revenge themſelves on their Enemies by oppreſſing them with falſe Accuſations.

(e) Vide Carmis Gallicanus in Avidio Caſſio, pag. m. 445. tome. II.

(f) Dio Chryſoſt. orat. 34.

(g) Τὰς [ἐπὶ] τοῖς δυστυχήμασιν ἐπιχαιρεκακίας, τὸ [φθονερὸν] τῶν ἀνθρώπων, καὶ τὸ πρὸς τοὺς ἐν ἀρχαῖς ἔχθος. Quippe infelices miſericordia, potentes invidia ſequitur: ac victus acceptiſſe, victor attuliſſe injuriam videtur. Herodian. lib. 4. cap. 5. pag. m. 187. See the Paſſage of Salluſt cited in the critique general du Calviniſme de Maimbourg, pag. 209. Edit. 3.

(EΔΔ) Could not be juſt with regard to him, who preſided in the trial of the Duke of Montmorenci.] It was Mr. de Chateauneuf Keeper of the Seals. He was in diſgrace, when Lewis XIII. died, and great Endeavours were uſed to recal him after the Prince's Death; but Cardinal Mazarine oppoſed it to the utmoſt, (a) in which he was vigouroufly aſſiſted by Madam the Princeſs, who upon the occaſional Pride of the Victory of Rocroy, thought every thing due to her, and peremptorily publiſhed that all their Family won'd retire from Court, if the Queen reſtored a Man to the Council, who had preſided at the Condemnation of the Duke of Montmorenci her Brother. Cou'd any thing be more unjuſt than this Princeſs's Pretenſion? Did Mr. de Chateauneuf deſerve to be expoſed to the leaſt Reſentment of the Duke's Siſter and Relations? Could he poſſibly wave preſiding at this Trial? Did not his Place require him to accept of this Commiſſion from the King? And could he be of a different Opinion from that of all the Judges, who in ſpight of the vehement deſire they had to ſave the Duke of Montmorenci's Life, gave their Votes for the Sentence of Death. The Prince of Condé, his Brother-in-law, and the Princeſs of Condé his Siſter, had they been his Judges, could not have given their Voices otherwiſe than Mr. de Chateauneuf did. Nothing's more evident, than that a Governour of a Province, who Revolts againſt his King, and gives Battle to the King's Troops, and is taken Priſoner in ſuch a Cauſe, deſerves Death. It was evidently true, that Mr. de Montmorenci's Caſe was this: The Proofs were as clear as the Day, beſides his own Confeſſion. There remained therefore no Shadow of uncertainty, either upon the queſtion of right, or that of Fact, and therefore there could be no difference in Opinion; the Princeſs therefore had no reaſon to complain of Mr. de Chateauneuf, and yet ſhe expreſs'd her Reſentment openly, as if it had been a reaſonable thing; ſo true it is, that the Great ſuffer themſelves to be blinded by their Lordly Paſſions, ſo far as to glory in that which is really a Vice, and a lamentable Weakneſs.

(a) Memoires de Mr. de la Chaſtre p. m. 333.

(F) Thoſe Scruples of Conſcience which had reſtrain'd him before.] Mr. Silhon informs us of this: How juſt ſoever, ſays he, (b) was the ground of this Rupture

(b) Silhon, Eclariciſſement de quelques difficultez touchant l'Adminiſtration du Cardinal Mazarin, liv. 1. pag. 127. Edit. de Holl. in 12.

as Lewis XIII. hated the Proteſtants, he could not eaſily bring himſelf to diſturb the Houſe of Auſtria, which had them upon its Hands. The Cardinal turn'd him from theſe Views of Religion, and engaged him in a League with Holland. This was concluded in the year 1635. and at the ſame time a War was declared againſt Spain. People won't allow that the preſſing Sollicitations of the United Provinces was that which overcame the Repugnance of the French to this League. On the contrary, it's pretended, that the French were they who in the laſt place (G) expreſſed the greateſt Earneſtneſs for it. Some ſay that the Cardinal drove on this Affair too faſt, and ground themſelves on the Perplexity he was in the very ſecond Campaign; but they don't conſider that the ſublimeſt Human Underſtanding could never have foreſeen that the firſt Campaign would have gone as it did: It began with a compleat Victory over the Spaniſh Army, and according to all appearance muſt have diſabled 'em for ſeveral Years; and yet in the iſſue was the pitifuleſt Campaign that ever was. (H) The French have long ſince imputed the whole Blame to the Prince

a See the Memoirs of Montreſor, to. 1. pag. 74. where the Cardinal is much blamed.

(c) This is wrote the 7th of December, 1695.

Rupture (a), they had heſitated upon it, but for the violent inſtances of the Hollanders, and the zealous Offices of ſome Friends they had near the King and Cardinal Richelieu, the King was averſe to it upon Scruples of Religion, which were removed by an Aſſembly of Doctors, ſummoned upon this Occaſion. This Prince's Diſpoſitions in his Alliances with Proteſtants will be better known, if we conſult the Muſæum Italicum of Two famous Benedictines. (b) "They had the ſight of a Letter of 'the late King Lewis XIII. in Cardinal Francis 'Barberini's Liberary. Pope Urbane VIII. had 'complained to his Majeſty of his Alliance 'with the Swedes, whoſe Victorious Arms at that 'time ravaged Germany. The King ſecretly an'ſwer'd the Pope with his own Hand, and offered 'to break off his Alliance with the Swedes, pro'vided the Catholick King would ceaſe to protect 'the Duke of Orleans, who was then retired to 'Bruſſels, and would join his Forces with thoſe 'of France, to turn 'em againſt the Proteſtants 'of Germany and the French Huguenots. His 'Holineſs communicated the King's Letter to the 'Spaniſh Embaſſador, who wrote about it to 'Madrid, and recieved no Anſwer. But for this 'Original Letter the Publick would have been un'acquainted with this curious piece of our Hiſtory. This Paſſage is taken from Mr. Couſin's Journal. Add to this what we find in one of Mr. Gallois's Journals, which will inform us, that if Lewis XIII. had followed his own Inclinations, he would have ſuffer'd the Proteſtant Religion to be deſtroy'd by the Emperor in Germany, ſince before the Miniſtry of Cardinal Richelieu, he did great Services to the Catholick Cau e in the Empire. Here are the Words of Mr. Gallois in an Abſtract he gives of the Embaſſy of the Duke of Angouleſme, the Counts of Bethune and Chateauneuf, ſent by Lewis XIII. into Germany, in 1620. (c) "The 'Motive of this Embaſſy was as glorious to 'France, as the Succeſs of it was advantagious to 'the Houſe of Auſtria. Ferdinand II. ſucceeding 'to the Empire, ſaw himſelf diſpoſſeſs'd of the 'Crown of Bohemia by the Prince Palatine, and 'of that of Hungary by Bethlen Gabor. He ſaw 'at the ſame time the upper Auſtria revolted, and 'moſt of the Proteſtant Princes in Arms againſt 'him. The King might have peaceably waited 'the Ruin of a Prince, whoſe Deſigns could not 'but be ſuſpected to him; but becauſe the Catho'lick Religion might have ſuffered ſome Diminu'tion in Germany by the Loſs of this Prince, he 'choſe rather to ſupport him in his Fall, than to 'ſuffer Religion to fall along with him. He offered 'him a potent Aſſiſtance, and at the ſame time to 'ſuccour him with his Counſels, and the Autho'rity of his Name; he ſent the Duke of Angou'leſme, and the Counts of Bethune and Chateau'neuf, Embaſſadors into Germany. Upon their 'Arrival they made the Treaty of Ulm, by which 'a Ceſſation of Arms was concluded be'twixt the Catholicks and the Proteſtants; 'this was a means of gaining the Battle of Prague 'and afterwards of the Re-eſtabliſhment of the 'Emperor's Affairs. Don't imagine that this Language is an Artifice of the Journaliſt; for the Proteſtants acknowledge (d) that this Embaſſy was very ſerviceable to the Emperor, and prejudicial to the Princes, who were confederated againſt the Houſe of Auſtria.

(a) That's to ſay, the Declaration of War againſt Spain in 1635.

(b) Journal des Savans, for the 26th of Jan. 1688. pag. 249, 250. Edit. of Holl.

(c) Journal des Savans, March 7. 1667. pag. pag. m. 95.

(d) See Wiequefort traité de l'Ambaſſadeur liv 1. p. 448. & liv. 2. pag. 426.

(e) Journal des Savans, pour l'an 1684. pag. 49. Edit. of Holl.

(f) Quinquam Gallis erat fixum animo, rebus Hiſpanorum labefactatis, ſpe certa magnorum progreſſuum, in bellum adverſus illos erumpere, tam callide tamen hoc conſilium diſſimularunt, ut à Fœderatis, quos interim modicis fovebant ſubſidiis, per integrum annum ſequentem le rogari & obſervari ſuſtinuerint. Priuſquam animum & arma detegerent, facto opus eſſe judicarunt, ut Regis fratrem cum matre Bruxellis agentem, ſibi reconciliarent, eumque in Gallia complecterentur. Ulric. Huber Hiſt. civilis tomo. 3. pag. 180.

(g) Ulric. Huber ib. pag. 182.

(h) In the Remark F.

(i) Silhon, ubi ſupra, pag. 127, 128.

(k) Baptiſte Nani, Hiſtoire de la Republique de Veniſe, tome 4. liv. 10. p. 7. Holland Edition, 1682.

(G) The French were they who in the laſt place expreſs'd the greateſt earneſtneſs for it.] Mr. Huber, who has been ſome time dead, (e) Profeſſor of Law in the Univerſity of Friſeland, pretends (f) that the Court of France, fully reſolving upon the War, politickly concealed the Deſign as long as the Duke of Orleans was at Bruſſels. She made her ſelf be courted by Holland, and this Game laſted above a year; but, after the return of the Duke, and the Defeat of the Swedes at Nortlingen, Cardinal Richelieu expreſſed a violent deſire to enter into a League with Holland. Neque tamen aliter ſe commiſere, quam ubi præter Suecos, etiam Belgas fœderatos ſtabili & fidenti fœdere ſibi conjunxiſſent, à quo multi in Hollandia imprimis, adhuc erant alieni. Mirum eſt, quanto ſtudio & fervore Richelius extremo tempore, cum prius ſe rogari paſſus eſſet. in hoc fœdere fabricando verſatus ſit, quod tandem confectum die 8. Februar. M.DC.XXXV. (g) If you believe the French, the Cardinal was not drawn out of his Irreſolution but by the meer force of the Engines the Hollanders played. We have already heard Mr. Silhon (h) upon this; the following Paſſage will tell us another Story. (i) "That which drew us out of 'that State of Uncertainty, and turn'd the Scale 'againſt ſeveral Conſiderations which were of 'weight in the King's and Cardinal's Mind, was 'the Truce the Hollanders gave clearly to under'ſtand they would make, unleſs we reſolved on a 'War. The Conſequences of this Truce (if it 'had been made) were doubtleſs to be feared by us 'and our Allies, but not in the point which was 'then apprehended at Court, and in which Father 'Joſeph and Charnaſſe, who laboured mightily at 'this Wheel, endeavour'd to repreſent it.——— 'The Preſents which were not ſpared on the part 'of the States, during this Courtſhip, ſome time 'after remov'd all the Obſtacles that ſtood in the 'way. Beſides this, as the fear of the Inconve'niencies, with which the Truce threatned us, 'had been the moſt Potent Motive to make us 'hearken to the War, the hopes of the fruits 'we might reap by it, was no ſmall Charm to 'draw us in. Almoſt one Half of what Spain poſ'ſeſſes in the Netherlands, was to have accrued to 'us by the Articles of the Treaty, and the Di'viſion between the Hollanders and us, was 'ſcatch'd out upon Paper ſo nicely, that each had 'what lay moſt convenient for him in this ima'ginary Spoil. With theſe Engines they work'd 'us juſt as they pleaſed, and the Zeal we mani'feſted to follow all their Motions was ſo great, 'that whereas they would have given us Money 'to oblige us to break, if we had kept up the 'Market, they obtained a great Summ from us, 'and would not receive it except in Fifteen-penny 'Pieces and by Weight, that they might more 'advantageouſly convert it into their own Country 'Coins. The beſt of all was our conſentining that 'the Prince of Orange ſhould have the whole 'Management of the War, and that our Generals 'ſhould be only his Subalterns, and receive their 'Commands from him.

(H) Was in the iſſue the pitifuleſt Campaign that ever was.] Let's hear an Hiſtorian who is neither a Frenchman nor a Hollander, nor Spaniard: As the French, ſays he, (k) marched towards Maſtricht with above Thirty Thouſand Men, and Forty Pieces of Canon, Prince Thomas with ſome Troops which Prince (l) of Orange, Generaliſſimo of the Army, and have alſo ſaid, that Cardinal Richelieu, with all his great Genius, ſuffer'd himſelf to be tricked (K) by the Holl[illegible]. The Famous Cavalier Nani has given too far into theſe French Notions, which [illegible] not very ſtrong, attempted to diſpute their Paſſage [illegible]lines (a), where he was beaten, and loſt a great [illegible] Men. Afterwards the Victors advancing [illegible] Oppoſition, joined the Prince of Orange, who expected 'em with Twenty Thouſand Foot, Six Thouſand Horſe, and Eighty Pieces of Canon. This Army appeared terrible, both for its Numbers and Valour, and the World [illegible] already in expectation of Succeſſes anſwerable [illegible] Greatneſs of its Forces. But what were [illegible] Exploits? It forced (b) a little pitiful Town, where dreadful Barbarities were committed: It (c) pretended to march to Bruſſels; but the Prince of Orange having retarded the March, gave the Spaniards time to come up with their Army to it. It beſieged Louvain with the following Succeſs: † "The Boldneſs of the 'Aſſailants having been at firſt a little check'd, 'the French Army began to diſperſe; for the 'Hollanders ordering [illegible]viſions to be punctually 'brought from the [illegible]bouring Places for their 'own Troops, took [illegible]are of the French, who 'tho' by their Brave[illegible]nd Strength they might 'have ſurmounted all other Perils, yet experienc'd 'that Hunger was an invincible Enemy. A great part 'died for want of Bread, a greater part deſerted, who 'were afterwards killed by the Peaſants; ſo that 'their For[illegible]ing extreamly weakened, and Pro'viſions [illegible], the Generals agreed [illegible] 'Neceſſity [illegible]raiſing the Siege, and permitti[illegible] 'to eſcape the beſt they cou'd. Th[illegible] 'manders and the Remnant of the French Army 'were reduced to come and take Shipping in Hol'land, where the People laughed at 'em, ſeeing no 'more remain of a great Army, which expected 'important Conqueſts, than a Handful of diſpi'rited People all in confuſion, and forced to 'take Sanctuary among their Allies——(d) The 'French Army was no ſooner diſpers'd, but the 'Terror, which before ſeized the Provinces de'pending on Spain, ſeized the Hollanders in their 'Turn, and pierced 'em to the Heart. The Count 'd'Embden ſurprized the Fort of Skenck——which 'opens a Paſſage into the Heart of Holland. The 'Prince of Orange, without loſing time, went to 'lay Siege to it. Mr. Nani commits a groſs Fault here: He ſuppoſes, on one hand, that the Spaniards did not take the F[illegible] Schenck till after the diſperſion of the Fre[illegible]ops; and on the other, that the French h[illegible] ſhare in the Re-taking of this Fort. Theſe are all (e) Falſhoods; Silhon ſpeaks of 'em in a quite different manner: But further, ſays he (f) having firſt related the Inſincerity of which he accuſes the Hollanders, as if Fortune had meant to put an Opportunity into our Hands of revenging our ſelves generouſly on the Hollanders, and returning Good, for the Ill which they had done us; ſhe permitted the Spaniards to ſurprize the Fort of Schenck in the Betau, that is to give 'em Entrance into the very Bowels of Holland,——(g) In this ſevere and melancholly Strait France was not wanting to them; and without remembring the Treatment our Army had met with from them, ſent Orders to Marſhal de Brezé, who was the only Commander left, not to ſeparate from the Prince of Orange till the Reduction of the Fort of Schenck, which was done many Months after its Attack.

But here follow more myſterious Reflections. I have read in a Book (h) printed in 1664. that the French [illegible]amned that the Hollanders had ſuffered the [illegible] of Skenck to be taken, in order to have a P[illegible]e of ſeparating the Armies, whoſe Conjunction gave 'em Umbrage. See the Words of of this Book: (i) If you'll believe the French, they'll give another Account of it; for they ſay that this Loſs was ſuffer'd by the Conſent of the States; who being jealous to ſee the Forces of ſo potent a King come too near their Fronti[illegible] that this Fort be loſt on purpoſe, that they might have a Pretence of ſeparating from the French Army, to re-take the Key of their Country; and in maintenance of their Poſition they alledge Two Reaſons; the firſt is, That no conſiderable Garriſon was left in it, and that Two Men of War ſail'd out the very day it was taken. The ſecond, That they deſignedly ſtarved their Army; ſo that of Forty Thouſand Men, there return'd not above Five Thouſand into France; which Words are not to be taken for an Article of Faith.

(l) Have impured the whole Blame to the Prince of Orange.] I cite no Authors that have written ſince the year 1672. Neither de Pontis (k) who repreſents this Prince in a perfect Diſtraction at the Victory of Aveſnes; nor Abbot (l) Bizot, who accuſes Holland of having acted a treacherous Part at Siege of Louvain, and on ſome other Occaſions. I ſhall cite a Book printed in 1651. which ſpeaks after this manner: (m) "The Hollanders did not 'wait long to make us feel the Effects of this 'Jealouſy. The gaining the Battle of Aveſnes, 'which attended the firſt Motions of our Arms, 'contrary to the Expectation of all the World, no 'leſs alarmed them, than the Spaniards, who loſt 'it; and for fear this Advantage ſhould draw o'thers after it, as is uſual, and that our Generals, 'Marſhal Chaſtillon and Marſhal Brezé, ſhould 'puſh the Victory farther, the Prince of Orange 'ſent 'em Orders to come and joyn him. How'ever, if Chaſtillon, who underſtood nothing but 'Honeſty in the things he was concern'd in, had 'been hearken'd to, they had gone and beſieged Namur, and there made a good Eſtabliſhment, 'notwithſtanding the Orders of the Prince of Orange. But Brezé, who was in the confidence 'of the Cabinet, and in the ſecret of Affairs, op'poſed him, and made his Companion reſolve to 'obey their Generaliſſimo according to the Inten'tention of the Court. This was the firſt Seed 'of Diviſion, which afterwards ſo ripen'd betwixt 'theſe Two Generals, that they came at laſt to 'drawing their Swords one againſt the other.—— (n) The Prince of Orange marched our Army ſo 'long, without any other Action except the Siege 'of Tirlemont, and left it ſo deſtitute of Subſiſt'ence, tho' he was (o) obliged to furniſh it, that 'it mouldred away of it ſelf; or rather we may 'ſay, that the Hollanders deſtroyed it without 'fighting, and had the Spoil of it, which was 'very great and rich, almoſt for nothing. Be'ſides this, the Conduct of the Prince of Orange, 'and the tedious round-about Marches of his 'Army and ours, without any Meaning or Deſign 'gave the Spaniards leaſure to recover from the 'Conſternation the Battle of Aveſnes had caſt 'them into, and to call a potent Aſſiſtance from 'Germany, which put us almoſt upon the De'fenſive.

Let's here copy a Paſſage from a Work I have often cited: (p) "Much about the ſame time 'came the News of the Defeat of Prince Thomas 'at Aveſnes, which cauſed a great Conſternation 'in all the Country: The French Army after'wards advancing to the very Gates of Bruſſels, 'never was ſuch a Terror known among theſe 'People. The Cardinal Infant had already cauſed 'the moſt precious Moveables to be removed from 'the Palace to Antwerp, and all his Army to line 'the Coaſts of the Canal, being reſolved to a'bandon Bruſſels himſelf, if Hunger and Picolo'mini, who arrived with the German Succours, 'had not forced our Army to retire. It was ſaid 'too, that the Prince of Orange was not over'joy'd to ſee 'em ſo far advanced into the Country. 'The Queen-Mother and Madam, were already 'fled to Antwerp, where their Officers were forced 'to conceal themſelves a good while, to avoid the 'Fury of the People, who deteſted the French Na'tion after the Sacking of Tirlemont. What might not a General have done, who had had Inclination or Ability to make uſe of this ſtrange Conſternation, which had ſeized the Court of Bruſſels? A Roman Conſul in the like Caſe would have given a good account of a whole Province, before the End of the Seaſon.

(K) Cardinal Richelieu——ſuffered himſelf to be tricked by the Hollanders.] They '(q) were

(a) It ſhou'd have been A-veln.

(b) Tillemont.

(c) Nani ib. pag. 8.

† Id. ibid.

(d) The French were [illegible]'d [illegible] of Fort Schenck.

(e) Read de Pontis & Puyſegur who ſerv'd in the French Army, you'll find that the French

(f) Silhon ubi ſupra, pag. 133, 134.

(g) Ibid. pag. 134, 135.

(h) Intitled, Apologie pour la Maiſon de Naſſau, ou refutation des calomnies contenuës au livre intitulé, De Staat-houderlijcke Regeeringe, by P. L. J.

(i) Pag. 295.

(k) De Pontis, Memoires, tome 2. p. 70, 77.

(l) Hollande metallique. See the Journal des Savans of the 19. of Jan. 1688. pag. 237. Edit. of Holl.

(m) Silhon, ubi ſupra, pag. 131.

(n) Ibid. pag. 133.

(o) Mr. Huber denys this. See the Remark L.

(p) Memoires de Mr. le Duc d'Orleans, pag. 271, 272.

(q) Nani ubi ſupra, pag. 5.

Notions, as a (L) Frieſland Civilian has ſhewn him. Lewis XIII. died the 14th. of May 1643. after a tedious Sickneſs, and ſo weary of his Life, that he ceaſed not to repeat theſe Words of Holy Job. Taedet animam meam vitæ meæ [a]. He had been a Lover of War, and perſonally ingaged in ſeveral Actions. He bore the Sirname of, JUST; a Title, which according to the Maxim of the Antients, includes all Moral Vertues. He never loved reading, after he had been diſguſted, by

[a] In juſtitia autem comprehenſim omnis virtus ineſt. Theognis, v. 147.

'to attack the Spaniſh Provinces with Fifty Thouſand Foot and Ten Thouſand Horſe—— they had cantoned the Conqueſts after this manner: Luxemburgh, Namure, Hainault, Artoiſe, and Cambray, were to be the Portion of France, with a part of Flanders on this ſide the Line that was to be drawn from Blachemberg, betwixt Bruges and Dam, including in it Ruremond. The reſt was to fall to the States of Holland, which promiſed to leave the Catholick Religion, in Poſſeſſion of all the Places where it was eſtabliſhed. It was agreed alſo to make neither Peace nor Truce, but with joint Conſent, and to enter into no Accommodation nor Treaty, till the Spaniards were intirely driven out of the Low-Countries. They were to beſiege the Places alternately, firſt one of thoſe that was deſigned for France, and then one of thoſe aſſigned to Holland; and to leave the Generals of the Army the choice of attacking, which they thought fit. They were beſides this to maintain jointly a Naval Force at Sea. France was to declare War with the Emperor, or any other Prince, who upon this Occaſion ſhould attempt to diſturb the States of the United Provinces. This gives occaſion to a Dilemma; either Cardinal Richelieu was perſwaded, that the Hollanders would obſerve this Treaty, or he was not. If he was perſuaded of it, where were his Brains? Does not the leaſt common Senſe dictate, that it was incomparably more the Intereſt of Holland, that Spain ſhould preſerve a part of the Low-Countries, than that they ſhould be intirely divided betwixt France and the United Provinces? If Cardinal Richelieu did not think that Holland was ſimple enough to conſent, that Spain ſhould loſe all this Country, he was very ſimple himſelf to make a Treaty, which he knew Holland would never execute, and which the publick Good, the Sovereign Law of States, could never permit 'em to execute. I confeſs, that 'tis hard to draw the Cardinal out of this Labyrinth, and not to ſee, that he committed a Groſs Blunder, unleſs we ſay, that the poor Condition the Swedes were reduc'd to, and the barbarous Affront France had received, by the Detention of the Archbiſhop of Treves, would not ſuffer this Crown to leave Spain at reſt, but ingaged it in a League with Holland upon Conditions, which it knew would never be intirely executed. The preſent Evil required, that France ſhould be ſatisfied with the Execution of one part, and let Time work out the reſt. See Mr. Silhon's Reflections.

'(a) The Hollanders by this Means (b) compaſſed 'two Points, which were very much to their Advantage, one was the embarking us in the ſame War 'they were ingaged in, which it was in all Appear'ance impoſſible ever to get out of but by a Peace, 'which would make 'em be acknowledged for Sovereigns, by thoſe who looked on 'em as Subjects; 'which was what was propoſed in their Treaty 'with us. The other, that though the Diviſion 'agreed on, if it came to be accompliſhed, muſt 'be an eternal Principle of Jealouſy; and they muſt 'believe, that the having us for their Neighbours, 'inſtead of the Spaniards, was only changing their 'Fears, and perhaps making their Condition worſe; 'yet they thought it more eligible to expoſe themſelves to a certain Evil, (againſt which there 'were many Remedies) to obtain a preſent and very important Good, namely, that of making us 'Partners in their Fortune; that is to ſay, of giving themſelves by this Alliance, a more firm and 'ſolid Baſis than they had before. 'Tis true, they 'would have allowed us to make our ſelves Maſters 'of the Maritime Towns, which were ſo fatal to 'their Commerce in the Hands of the Spaniards, 'or even of ſome other Places which were Frontiers to ours. But for us to eſtabliſh our ſelves 'in the Heart of Flanders, and in the Places which 'bordered on themſelves, was that which made 'them uneaſie, and which they hoped the Courſe 'of the War would hinder of it ſelf, or that they 'themſelves ſhould find means to prevent, either by ceaſing to act againſt the Spaniards, and 'imploying, as they always did, a great part of 'their Forces; or taking an Opportunity of reconciling themſelves to 'em, under any plauſible 'Pretence, which the State of Affairs might offer, &c.

[a] Silhon, ubi ſupra, pag. 130, 131.

[b] That's to ſay, by the Treaty concluded with France.

(L) As a Frieſland Civilian has ſhewn the Cavalier Nani.] This Cavalier imagined, that Prince Frederick Henry ſuffered the French Army to periſh, to revenge himſelf of an Injury he had received from Cardinal Richelieu; and that he ſought occaſions of making it appear to all Europe, that himſelf was the greater Genius of the Two. There is no doubt, ſays he (c) but that as ſoon as the United Provinces had agreed to all the Articles which obliged the French to an open Rupture with Spain, they feared nothing ſo much, after the obtaining their Deſires, as having them for their Neighbours, under the Preſence of Friendſhip. To the general Intereſt of Holland, were added the particular Reſentments of the Prince of Orange, againſt Richelieu; for the latter, though he outwardly profeſſed a Friendſhip for the Prince, and an Intimacy with him; had endeavoured but a few Years before, by ſome ſecret Practice to make himſelf Maſter of Orange, a Town whereof the Anceſtors of the Naſſau Family bear the Name, and which is ſituate towards Dauphine; but as this Deſign did not ſucceed, the Cardinal concealed the thing as much as poſſible, and prevented its being talked of. Frederick Henry for his part diſſembled this Injury with as great Artifice as had been uſed to ſuppreſs it, and waited a favourable Occaſion to revenge himſelf. At laſt this Prince found the Means of having it ſaid, that if by the taking of ſeveral Places of Importance, he had obtained the Reputation of great Courage, and Military Experience, he could not be denied in the World, the Praiſe of a great and conſummate Politician, ſince he outwitted Richelieu: however, Richelieu ſeeing a Neceſſity for the Alliance of the Hollanders, and the Friendſhip of this Prince in the War he had undertaken, deſpiſed leſſer Revenges, to apply himſelf to the greater. Let us ſee Mr. Huber's Anſwer. 1. He ſays, that if the French wanted Proviſions, it was their own Fault; why did not they ſettle Magazines? The Treaty (d) did not import, that Holland was to furniſh 'em with the neceſſary Proviſions; that if the Victuallers chooſe to ſell their Goods to the Hollanders rather than to the French, it was becauſe the latter wanted Money, and obſerved no Diſcipline (e). (2). That it was in the Hollanders Power to remove the King of France's Territories from their Frontiers, by making Peace with Spain, and that the Hatred (f) they had for the Spaniſh Nation, did not give 'em time to reflect upon the Evil of being next Neighbours to France; and that after all, Cavalier Nani judges of their Manners by the Myſterious Artifices of Italy. Non eſt dubium quin Nanius Belgarum ingenia moreſque ſecundum Italos eorumque profundas artes eſtimet (g). 3. That the Prince of Orange being Generaliſſimo of the two Armies, and having earneſtly laboured the concluding this League, there is no Probability, that to revenge himſelf of ſome Practices of the Cardinal, he would be willing to deprive himſelf of the Glory of a proſperous Campaign, nor expoſe the Republick to the Reſentment of ſo neceſſary and formidable an Ally. 4. Laſtly, that the Alliance having ſubſiſted for 12 Years, the French never complained of this pretended Treachery. (h) Arauſionenſis ſummo ſtudio belli ſocietatem procuraverat, Ludovicum in ipſum Gallorum exercitum ſuo conjunctum acceperat, ut omnis gloria in ipſum redundaret: hoc unice in eam gratiam, ut propter evanidas in arcem Arauſionenſem inſidias à Richelio propenſitas, Regem potentiſſimum deformi proditione lethaliter offenderet? Remque publicam tunc ejus [illegible]

(c) Nani, ubi ſupra, pag. 2.

(d) In fœdere non erat comprehenſum, ut Belgæ in hoſtili ſolo Gallis de commeatu proſpicerent; id ipſis incumbebat pro ſe, uti Belgæ pro ſuis id ſatagerunt. Ulricus Huber Hiſtoria civilis, tome 3. pag. 188.

(e) Si negotiatores Belgis quam Gallis vendere maluerint, ac inde Gallorum inopia ſit orta, id horum rapinis & ſtipendiorum defectui imputandum. Si hac fiducia Brabantiam ingreſſi ſunt, quod Batavi illos alerent, male rationem putaverunt. ib.

(f) Nihil eſt certius, quam odium Hiſpanicæ gentis pleriſque Belgis tum nequeadum permiſſiſſe, ut quantum à Gallorum vicinia periculum immineret, ad animum revocarent. Id. ibid. pag. 189.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 189, 190.

by being forc'd to read a Book (M) that diſguſted him. We may ſay, generally ſpeaking, that he had not been well formed (M△) in Literature, and that he did not love it. And yet upon ſeveral Occaſions, he diſcover'd a great (M△△) Fineneſs of micitiæ indignam daret præcipitem, & Societatem tanta Principis ipſius cura ſtudioque contraduƈam in-continenti dirumperet? Quid enim aliud ab immani proditione perfidiâque poterat expectari? Cum tamen eadem Societas per duodecim annos continuata ſit, nec quicquam ejuſmodi tunc temporis vel unquam poſtea Galli de fœderatis Belgis, etiam cum irati eſſent, conqueſti fuerint.

I don't think theſe Arguments of Mr. Huber can be oppoſed by what Mr. Maurier relates of the Prince of Orange's Reſentment againſt Cardinal Richelieu, and his revenging himſelf for the Enterprize he had formed upon the Principality of Orange. This Author (a) ſays, that the Prince 'concealed his Reſentment, and waited for a favourable Opportunity to expreſs it, which happened to preſent not long after; for——— '(b) the Army of France having totally routed 'the Spaniſh Forces at Aveſnes, joined the Prince 'of Orange, after having pillaged a Part of Brabant; but the Prince who had always at Heart 'the Affair of Orange, and who liked the Neighbourhood of the French, no better than the 'Spaniards, by a Scarcity of Proviſions and Subſiſtence, ruined our victorious Army, which retiring into Holland, after the raiſing the Siege of 'Louvain, under the Pretence of the Approach of 'Picolomini with the German Army, periſhed there 'for the moſt part, of Hunger, Poverty, 'and Diſeaſes, the Sixth Part not returning into 'the Kingdom. The Prince of Orange looked upon Cardinal Richelieu as a reconciled Enemy, 'who courted him only becauſe he had a neceſſary 'Occaſion for him; And therefore, underhand, gave him all the Diſcontents imaginable, favourably receiving all thoſe who were diſgraced in France, and honouring 'em with the 'nobleſt Imploys, and even with his Intimacy; amongſt others, Mr. Hauterive and Mr. Beringhen, whom he conſidered as much to vex the 'Cardinal, as for any Merit of theirs; and Cardinal Richelieu, as Potent as he was, ſaw himſelf 'obliged to ſwallow theſe Pills, his Affairs neceſſarily requiring a Diverſion on the part of Holland———(c) Thus he continued to court 'the Friendſhip of the Prince of Orange, and it 'was agreed, that each ſhould forthwith attack 'the common Enemy on his Side. From that 'time he kept up a faithful and perfect Correſpondence with the Prince; and the Prince, who 'was ſufficiently revenged, and drew great Advantages from the Alliance with France, afterwards executed the Treaties ſincerely. 'Tis manifeſt, that this is only a Copy of the Cavalier Nani's Reproaches; and beſides, as du Maurier's Memoirs are wrote after the Year 1672. they are not fit to be alledged in Proof. On the whole, we might from a Fact of this kind, collect to what great Misfortunes a King is expoſed, when he is ſerved by a firſt Miniſter, who is perſonally hated in the Countries of his Allies. Lewis XIII. would have had the fatal Experience of it; they would have ſacrificed his Armies, to the Paſſion of being revenged on the Cardinal. This Sacrifice would have been a very ingenious way of Revenge; for nothing is more likely to kick up the Heels of a firſt Miniſter, than the bad Succeſs of a War. But let's not believe all this Syſtem of the Venetian Hiſtorian, and Mr. du Maurier.

(a) Du Maurier, Memoir. pour l'hiſt. de Hollande, p. 321.
(b) Id. ib. pag. 322.
(c) Id. ib. pag. 324.

(M) By being forced to read a Book that diſguſted him.] 'Lewis XIII. by not being conducted by his Inclinations, nor by the way his 'Genius led him to, ſo tired with the uſeful but 'diſagreeable reading of Fauchet's Antiquities, that 'it gave him a general and inveterate Averſion for 'all ſorts of Books, which could not be cured to 'his Lives End. The Author (d) from whom I borrow theſe Words, cites Gomberville in the Doctrine of Morals, and places this Fact under the 24th of March. I know not why he choſe that Day. See the Menagiana, where you'll find what follows: (e) M. de Gomberville of the French Academy, was Son to one Buvetier, of the Chamber of Accompts. He has written in his Book concerning the Doctrine of Manners, that what diſcouraged Lewis XIII. from Study, was the giving him Faucher's Hiſtory of France to read. The bad Language of this Author gave him a Diſguſt, though otherwiſe there were ſome good Things in him.

(d) Pere David l'Enfant, Dominicain, hiſt. generale de tous les ſiecles de la nouvelle log, mois de Mars, pag. 160.
(e) Menagiana, pag. 219. de la 1. édition de Holl.

(M△) He had not been well formed in Literature, and that he did not love it.] Mr. le Vaſſor, who has publiſhed the firſt Volume of the Hiſtory of Lewis XIII. obſerves (f), with great Aſtoniſhment, that he has found but few Things concerning this King's Education. He ſays, that (g) the Governour, whom Henry IV. appointed him, had not Qualities equal to that important Employ, and that (h) the Picture an Author (i) has lately given us, of the extravagant and romantick Amours, of the wholly Epicurean Life and Death of Vauquelin des Juvetaz, firſt Preceptor to Lewis XIII. is a certain Proof, that Henry IV. who had made choice of him from his own Judgment, was not a good Judge of Men of Merit. He adds, that a Year after the Death of Henry IV. Vauquelin loſt this Employ, through the Jealouſie of ſome People, and that Nicolas le Fevre ſucceeded him, a Man diſtinguiſhed by his Learning and Piety, who died a Year after, and that Florence Rivaut, an able Mathematician, ſay they, aſcended from the Poſt of Sub-Preceptor, to that of Preceptor in chief. A young Man, continues he, who paſſes through ſo many different Hands, ſeldom makes any great Proficiency. 'Tis certain, that Nicolas Vauquelin, Sieur des Iveteaux, had Wit and Learning. He was Son (k) to Mr. de la Freſnaie, Preſident to the Bailliage, and Preſidial Seat of Caen, in the Year 1605. of whom a great Collection of Verſes are ſeen printed at Caen. Nicholas le Fevre was of Paris, a Man of great Merit, and of an exact, profound, and extenſive Knowledge, of great Probity, and incomparable Modeſty. Moreri's Article of him is good. See alſo the Elogies (l), which Caſaubon hath given him. He was choſen by Henry IV. to inſtruct (m) the Prince of Conde, but not to be Preceptor to the Dauphin, as le Grain affirms (n). He was raiſed to this Preferment, under the Regency of Mary de Medicis (o). He died the 3d. of November 1612, aged Sixty Eight Years and ſome Months. But let us ſuppoſe, as much as you pleaſe, that both he and des Iveteaux were Men of great Merit, and that the Quality of a good Preceptor, a Quality more rare than that of Preceptor is common, was united in them to that of being Learned: We could not thence conclude, that Lewis XIII. had been well educated; for they were but a very ſmall time Directors of his Studies. We ought to know how they acquitted their Charge, who came after le Fevre. We can't be over-prejudiced in their Favour, when we conſider, that they perſiſted in making him read Fauchet's Works, which diſguſted him. This was not the Way to form his Judgment, but diſcourage him. 'Tis ſaid however, that he grew very nice upon the point of Eloquence, and that the Haranguers of that Time infinitely diſpleaſed him, though his own Encomiums were the ſubject Matter. Here's my Witneſs: '(p) Always to praiſe and 'admire, and to this purpoſe to make uſe of long-'winded Periods and Exclamations, diſguſts even 'thoſe whom we praiſe and admire. The victori-'ous complain of it in the midſt of their Tri-'umphs. And I know from good Hands, that the 'late King beholding himſelf one Day in a Glaſs, 'and wondering at the great Number of his grey 'Hairs, charged 'em upon the Complimenters of 'his Kingdom, and their long Periods. He ſaid 'to the Perſon from whom I have taken theſe re-'markable Words, I fancy, it's the Harangues that have been made me ſince my coming to the 'Crown, and particularly thoſe of Monſieur le  'that have made me grey ſo ſoon.

(f) Le Vaſſor hiſt. de Louis XIII. tom. 1. p. 667.
(g) Gilles de Souvré.
(b) Le Vaſſor, ibid. pag. 668.
(i) Vigneul Marville in his Melanges d'hiſtoire & de litterature. See alſo the 1ſt. tome of the Chevræana, p. 292. and the following Edit. of Holl.
(k) L'Abbe de Marolles, in his Liſt of Authors, who had given him their Books.
(l) Caſaubo. exercit. 16. in Baron. cap. 80. p. m. 551.
(m) Continuat. Thuani, pag. 318.
(n) Le Grain, decade de Louis XIII. pag. 2.
(o) Contin. Thuani, ibid.
(p) Balzac avant propos du Socrate Chreſtien, fol. 2111.

(M△△) On many Occaſions he diſcovered great Fineneſs of Parts.] If what Balzac has been telling us, do's not ſeem a good Commentary upon this Text, what will you ſay after reading theſe of Parts. I shall transcribe the Character given him (N) in the History of the Edict of Nantes. The same Reason which hinders my relating a Series of Actions, according to the order of time in several other Articles, prevents me here; because I would not repeat, what's to be found in Mr. Moreri. I am [illegible]ized, that he should forget the solemn Act [a], by which Lewis XIII. put his [illegible] and Kingdom under the Protection of the Holy Virgin. Mr. Godeau exercis[illegible] Muse on this Subject, with little Judgment. A Learned Critick (O) attac[illegible]him upon it with great Force. I forgot to say, that the Royal Authority ma[illegible]lf more [illegible]nsiderable,

[a] See the Remark O.

(a) Chevalier de Mer, traité de l'esprit, pag. 23. Edit. de Holl.

Words of the Chevalier de Mere? (a) 'How 'comes it then that this Court is so different from 'what it was heretofore? Henry the Great, who 'judged well of every thing, though he had hardly studied any thing but the Trade of War, and 'the late King, in my Opinion, have not a little 'contributed to it. This Prince, whom we have 'seen, had a delicate Wit, and said excellent 'Things. Can any thing be more agreeable than 'this Saying: Put on your Hat, Brion; my Brother will have it so? And so many others which I 'could relate. As he loved good Raillery, he very much 'disliked that which was bad; and the C. D. R. had 'like to have been disgraced, for having written to 'M. D. E. in a kind of Raillery, tho' all the guilt of it 'consisted in its Folly. Abundance of Readers will better understand the meaning of, Put on your Hat, Brion, &c. if I tell the Story a little at large, as Mr. Boursault has related it. (b) The late Duke of Orleans, Gaston of France, was so jealous of the Rights belonging to his Quality, that upon this Head, he never excused any Body; that he might have the Pleasure of seeing the Princes of the Blood [illegible] Cap in Hand to him whenever he found an O[illegible] tunity of speaking to 'em, he kept 'em as lo[illegible] possibly he could, and never uncovered himself one single Moment, for fear of forgetting his own Quality, Lewis XIII. going one Day from Paris to St. Germain, in the excessive Heat, in Company of the Duke of Orleans, the Lords, who were bareheaded at the sides of the Coach, were hardly able to bear the Violence of the Sun. The King perceiving how they suffered, had the good Nature to say to 'em; Cover your selves Gentlemen, cover your selves, my Brother gives you leave.

(b) Boursault lettres nouvelles, pag. 381. Edit. de Holl.

(N) The Character that is given him in the History of the Edict of Nantes.] (c) He was 'jealous of his Power even to excess, though he 'could neither understand nor enjoy it. He could 'never in the whole Course of his Life, either 'exercise it by himself, or suffer it in the Hands of 'another. It was equally impossible for him not to 'raise his Favourites to an exceeding Power, and 'abide 'em in the Grandeur, to which he himself 'had raised 'em. By the meer enriching 'em, he 'capacitated 'em to displease him. The excess of 'his Complaisance to 'em, was as it were, the first 'degree of his Hatred; and I don't know, whether we can find in his History, the Example of a 'Favourite, whose Death or Fall he lamented. 'But he always concealed his Sentiments; and because he communicated 'em to few People, they 'who will have the Conduct of Princes to be always mysterious, accuse him of a black and profound Dissimulation. To say the real Truth, the 'Reason of his Silence was, that he neither trusted 'himself, nor any Body else; and was very timorous and weak. Almost all that have spoken of 'him, acknowledge he had Courage; that in danger he lost not his Judgment; that he loved and 'understood War; that he was Master of much 'fine Knowledge; but that he had not the Art 'of Reigning. This Picture seems drawn well enough to the Life.

(c) Histoire de l'edit de Nantes, tom 2. liv. 5. pag. 220.

(O) A Learned Critick attacked Mr. Godeau.] The King's Declaration concerning this Act of Devotion to the Holy Virgin, is dated the 10th. of February 1638. You'll find it entire in the French Mercury (d); I'll only take this part of it: 'FOR THESE CAUSES we have declared, and do declare, that taking the most holy 'and glorious Virgin, for the special Protectress of 'our Kingdom, we particularly consecrate to her 'our Person, Estates, Crowns, and Subjects, beseeching her to inspire us with a Holy Conduct, 'and to defend this Kingdom so carefully against 'the Efforts of all its Enemies; that whether it 'suffers the Scourge of War, or enjoys the Calms 'of Peace, which we beg of God with all our Heart, 'it may never depart out of the Ways of Grace, 'which lead to those of Glory. And that Posterity may never fail to pursue our Desires upon this 'Subject, for the immortal Remembrance, and in Testimony of the present Consecration, which we 'make, we will cause the great Altar of the Cathedral Church of Paris to be built anew, with 'an Image of the Virgin embracing her precious 'Son in her Arms, descended from the Cross; we 'will be represented at the Feet of the Son and of 'the Mother, in a Posture of offering 'em our 'Crown and Scepter. We admonish the Sieur 'Archbishop of Paris [illegible] at the same time enjoin 'him, that he annu[illegible]n the Day and Feast of 'the Assumption, m[illegible] a Commemoration of our 'present Declaration, in the High Mass, which 'shall be said in his Cathedral Church, and after 'the Vespers of the same Day, that a Procession be 'made in the said Church, at which all the Sovereign Companies shall assist, and [illegible] Body of the 'City, with equal Ceremony, as is [illegible]ved at the 'most solemn general Processions [illegible]ich we will 'also have done in all Churches, both Parochial 'and Monasterial of the said City and Suburbs; 'and in all Towns, Burroughs and Villages of the 'said Dioceses of Paris. We in like manner exhort 'all Archbishops and Bishops of our Kingdom, and 'at the same time enjoin 'em, to cause the same 'Solemnity to be celebrated in the Episcopal 'Churches, and other Churches of their Dioceses.

(d) Tome 22. p. 284. the following. See the Histoire de l'edit de Nantes, tome 2. pag. 578.

Mr. Godeau made a Hymn upon this Occasion, in which the King addressing to the Holy Virgin, expatiatiates on the extraordinary Merit of Cardinal Richelieu, and acknowledges him not only as his Collegue, but as a Collegue who watched in order to let his Partner Sleep. The Jesuit (e) who censured Mr. Godeau, exceeded the Bounds of Modesty and Temper; but at the bottom he had reason for censuring this [illegible]duct. I'll relate his Censure somewhat at [illegible]nd don't fear being blamed for it, as [illegible]possibly be for many other Citations out of [illegible]Books, which are very common; for this Jesuit's Book is scarce known, and hardly to be met with. We'll therefore boldly cite a large piece of it, which will inform us, that Lewis XIII. did not love to have his first Minister praised at his own Cost. He was sensible of his Dependance, but he did not care that any Body should know it, and 'tis even certain, that the Cardinal dextrously managed his Master's Delicacy, both in his Words, and his External Conduct. So that Mr. Godeau made use of Flatteries, which were neither conformable to Decorum nor Prudence. (f) Cùm Ludovicum XIII. offerentem se ac regnum Mariæ Virgini, inducaret, huic de isto sermonem assinxit, qui totus abhorreat à regis sensu & consuetudine, Cardinalis prudentia, ac voluntate, rei natura. Quid attinuit à rege, sanctis ac religiosis suis ad Dei matrem precibus, cujusquam mortalis laudes admiscere? quid necesse fu[illegible]minutè atque enucleatè exaggerari? quid conve[illegible] multis in tam exiguo carmine?——V[illegible]remitto pessimi poetæ errata, atque condono [illegible]is hoc, Antoni, tibi ignoscat, vel civis bonus[illegible] vir non socors, quòd regi socium & consortem regni invidiosissimè addidisti?

(e) François Vasseur disguised under the Name of Candidus Hesychius.

(f) Anton. Godellus, Episcopus Grassensis, in trum Poeta, pag. 82. & seq.

[illegible]Tandis (i) qu'un si sage Ministre
[illegible]Avec moy tiendra le timon.

[illegible]is, perdnellis? Tenir le timon avec le Roy tene[illegible] clavum & principatum cum rege pariter? neque est enim istuc pro regem agere, sed una cum rege

(i) p. 136.

conſiderable under the Reign (P) of Lewis XIII. than it had ever done in France; and I don't believe the Parliament of Paris ever ſuffer'd a more ſhameful (P△) Mortification, than what it ſubmitted to in 1631. 'Tis true, this illuſtrious Body ſeem'd a little to have forgot it's Duty, and had the Misfortune to ſuffer it ſelf to be thrown out of Temper, by the Artifices of ſome factious Spirits. I ſhall examine, perhaps in another Place « the Horoſcope, that is found in Sulli's Memoirs.

« In the Article Riviere.

'Tis very probable that Lewis XIII. was not ſorry for the Death of Cardinal Richelieu; for he was a Man he rather feared than loved; and whom he would have been gladly rid of, if powerful Reaſons had not prevail'd. He imagined, amongſt other things, rege regem eſſe. Quod ſi de filio regis unico, herede proximo & vero, patre vivo, dicas, crimen imminutæ majeſtatis incurras: Cùm de alieno, de cive, de adminiſtro, de eo, qui hoc ſine ſcelere cogitare non auſit, dixeris; omni culpa, reprehenſione, pœna liber es? Neſcis quàm retinens Ludovicus auctoritatis? quàm nihil hujus perferens, unde peti vel tantulum majeſtas videretur? quàm gnarus iſtorum cardinalis, neque quidquam tam verens, quàm ne quis iſtiuſmodi parum conſideratus ſermo & improbus ac ſeditioſus ad aures regis accederet, aut in vulgus ſerperet? ut mirum ſit, ni apud utrumque, ſi modo legere ſcriptiuncuſam iſtam tuam curavit, graviter offenderis. Præſertim cùm nihil excuſare poſſes, neque hoc tibi imprudenti excidiſſe, neque ullis verſus anguſtiis, ac neceſſitate coactum feciſſe; cui tam facile fuerit tam apertum nefas advertere, & invidiam verbis atque aſperitatem vel tollere omnino, vel ſic mitigare: Tandis qu'un ſi ſage Miniſtre Deſſous moy tiendra le timon.——Quod ſequitur, ſatis ridiculum, eumdem Cardinalem unum opponi inferis ac dæmonibus cunctis: (2) Les enfers n'ont point de demon, dont je craigne rien de finiſtre. Et hoc arrogans ac propè impium. (3) C'eſt par luy que tous m'eſt poſſible. Nempe ſi Cardinalis affuiſſet, non eſſet rex mortuus. Vitandum ſanè fuit, ut ne id uſurpares, in quo aperta aſſentatio minimum eſt, quod reprehendatur, illum ipſum regem futurum fuiſſe, niſi regi adjutor & comes adjunctus eſſet. (4) Et vous en euſſiez fait un Roy, &c. Non poſſum verò tibi, Godelle, non ſuccenſere, quòd in tam effuſis adminiſtri regii laudibus, regem deprimis, & nobis exhibes ſomniculoſum, ac nihil agentem, qui hoc etiam confiteatur de ſe:

(2) p. 136.

(3) p. 136.

Je (5) gouſte en repos le ſommeil, &c.

Quem porrò regem? vigilantiſſimum, laborioſiſſimum, patientia injuriarum cæli ac terræ inſignem, qui multiplici & diverſa in ultimas regni oras expeditione, valetudinem & corpus amiſit, neque vitam longiùs, quàm in quartum (a) & quadrageſimum annum produxit.

(a) Father Pavaſſeur is miſtaken Louis XIII. lived but 41. Years, and near upon 8 Months.

(P) The Royal Authority made it ſelf more conſiderable.] A remarkable thing! The Royal Power was more ſtrongly eſtabliſhed under a Prince who neither enjoyed Authority nor abſolute Liberty himſelf, than it had been under Monarchs leaſt depending on their Miniſters, and the beſt ſkilled in the Art of Governing. 'Tis properly under Lewis XIII. and not in the Reign of Lewis XI. that the Kings of France had their Manumiſſion. This muſt be aſcribed to Cardinal Richelieu; 'tis he that began the Work of Arbitrary Power, and carried it on pretty near to Perfection; but not ſo near, as was then complain'd of; the ſucceeding time has ſhewn, that many things were wanting to this Work, which have been ſince added, or are adding at preſent. The People and Magiſtrates were ſenſible of this Innovation, and murmured at it; (b) it was the Subject of a Thouſand Diſcourſes, Coſtar argued once againſt a Politician, who maintained, "That no Princes were more "dangerous, than ſuch as a Latin Poet (c) calls "nimium Reges, Sovereigns that are too much Sovereigns; and Kings that are too much Kings. They who would ſee Mr. Coſtar's Reaſons, need only read the laſt Letter of his Diſcourſes: Under weak Reigns, ſays he, (d) Foreign and Domeſtick Wars are inevitable. If a King is not abſolute at Home, it's impoſſible he ſhould be feared abroad; and his Enemies Contempt of his Forces will neceſſarily provoke their Ambition and their Avarice.—— Provided the Cardinal be ſuffered to act, provided God meant not only to ſhew him to Mankind, but to ſuffer us to enjoy for many Years the noble Preſent he has beſtowed upon the Earth; all theſe little Taſſel-Hawks of Kings, which in ſome ſort divided the Kingdom, † will ſee their Tyranny at an end; and if they are any farther conſiderable, it will not be through the Power of doing ill, but only by the Merit of their Perſons, and the Uſefulneſs of their Services.——The People for a long time have been compared to the Sea, which is naturally Calm and Smooth, unleſs diſturb'd by the Violence of the Winds; but our Wiſe Pilot has found out a way of binding them, ſhutting 'em up, and maſtering 'em: So that in the Condition he has placed us, if any Trouble or Sedition could poſſibly riſe, whilſt it wanted Heads to conduct and ſupport it, its Remedies would be as eaſie as its Cauſes were light; for this Multitude we ſpeak of is a Monſter, whoſe Heart as well as Brains is in its Head. And Tacitus has ſaid of the Populace, that without a Guide, it trembles all over, is in pannick Fears, and out of its Wits: Vulgus ſine rectore, pavidum, ſocors. Obſerve how he apologizes for the Sentences of Baniſhment and Death, to which recourſe was forced to be had to diſperſe the Factions. In the inteſtine Diſeaſes, adds he, (e) with which France laboured, there was a Neceſſity to repeat bleeding to ſave its Life.

(b) See the Memoires Marolles, pag. 143.

(c) Manilius.

(d) Coſtar, Entretiens avec Voiture, pag. 563.

† Confer quæ ſupra, pag. 1452. col. 1.

(e) Coſtar ubi ſupra, pag. 565.

(P△) That the Parliament of Paris ever ſuffered a more ſhameful Mortification than in 1631.] The King being adviſed of the Preparations for War, which were made in favour of the Duke of Orleans, almoſt (f) throughout the Kingdom, and that Burgundy was to be the principal Seat of the Rebellion, he flew thither to quaſh it. This Diligence obliged the Duke to retire (g) into the Spaniſh Territories with his Abettors. Theſe were declared guilty of Treaſon. The Declaration (h) having been recorded in the Parliament of Burgundy, was ſent to the Parliament of Paris, where the Opinions (i) were ſo divided, that there was a Decree of Diviſion, inſtead of a Decree of Verification. (k) "Whereupon the King being re-"turned to Paris, was obliged, that he might not "let ſuch an Irregularity paſs without due cor-"rection, to ſend for the Parliament to the Louvre, "with Orders to come thither on foot as culpable, "and in a Condition of receiving the Reprimand it "deſerved, giving them to underſtand that it "was not their Province to deliberate about Affairs "of State; that he did not ſend 'em the Declara-"tions he made upon this Subject for any other "End but only to publiſh 'em, Regiſter 'em, and "make 'em obſerved by the People, and that the "Declaration in queſtion ought to have been pub-"liſhed with ſo much the leſs Difficulty, as there "is a great deal of difference betwixt a Commiſſion "which is delivered for the making the Trial, and "giving Judgment on any one; and a Declara-"tion which is publiſh'd by his Majeſty, to let his "Subjects know who they are he complains of, the "Reaſons he has for ſo doing, and by which they are "guilty of the Crime of High-Treaſon; conſidering "moreover that in a Declaration of this kind his "Majeſty allows 'em a certain time, during which "they may obtain the Favour of his Clemency, if "they have recourſe to it, and even after that all "the Formalities neceſſary in Criminal Cauſes are "obſerved, before Condemnation. This was done "in the Louvre, the King ſitting in his Council, "and the Parliament in a Body, kneeling in his "Preſence; and after the Keeper of the Seals had "given 'em to underſtand from his Majeſty, that "they had no Authority to judge of the Declara-"tions of State that were ſent to 'em, he tore

(f) See the Miniſtere du Cardinal de Richelieu, tom. 1. pag. 207.

(g) At Bezanſon.

(h) Ibid. pag. 215.

(i) Aubery, Hiſtoire du Cardinal de Richelieu, liv. 4. chap. 17. p. m. 303, 304.

(k) Miniſtere du Cardinal de Richelieu, ubi ſupra, pag. 218, 219.

things, that his Troops being commanded by the Creatures (Q) of his Eminence, he could not diſpoſe of 'em as he pleaſed, if he broke intirely with him. He was often ' with his own Hands the Decree of Diviſion ' which had been enter'd in the Regiſters, and ' commanded to ſubſtitute in its Place that of his ' Counſel, by which he annull'd it, with Prohibi- ' on to deliberate for the future upon ſuch like ' Declarations; and finally to expiate the Fault ' of this Body upon ſome Particulars; the Preſi- ' dents Gayan and Barillon, and the Sieur Leſné ' Counſellor, were commanded by the King's Order ' to remove for ſome time from Paris, and were ' ſuſpended from the Exerciſe of their Employs, ' for having ſpoken of his Actions and the Con- ' duct of the State with too little Reſpect.

In Foreign Countries abundance of People, imagine that the excluding the Parliaments of France from a ſhare in the Sovereignty is a new thing; there are many Frenchmen under a like miſtake. It will not be amiſs therefore to ſhew here by certain and indiſputable Facts, that the Parliament of Paris has for a long time had the Bounds of its Juriſdiction declared, and that upon the foot of an ancient Cuſtom. This Society being in the Louvre, in 1631. in the Poſture before obſerved, (a) the Keeper of the Seals, de Ghaſteauneuf highly blamed the Proceeding of the Parliament of Paris, and proved to 'em by abundance of Reaſons, AND BY DIVERSE EXAMPLES that the Parliament neither can nor ought to take Cognizance of any but private Affairs, and Differences betwixt Party and Party, and not meddle with the Affairs of State, of which the Sovereign reſerves the ſole Cognizance to himſelf. That in the Buſineſs of Trials of Princes, Dukes, and other Officers of the Crown, for their Male-adminiſtration, the Direction of the Treaſury, and the Management of the State, to the end that the Parliaments may take Cognizance of 'em, 'tis neceſſary the King ſhould ſend 'em an expreſs Commiſſion, which in that Caſe extends their ordinary Juriſdiction; or elſe that his Majeſty aſſiſt in Perſon, and authorize by his Preſence the Inſtruction of theſe extraordinary Proceedings. That moreover, there being a great difference between a Commiſſion to make out a Trial, and a Declaration, only denoting thoſe the King complains of, it was never doubted, but the Parliaments ought to take Cognizance of the Cauſe, before they judge upon a Commiſſion; and that on the contrary, they are obliged, without any Delay or Deliberation, to record a Declaration, which always leaves Criminals a certain time, in which they may return to their Duty, and thereby ſtop the proceeding any further in their Proſecution. The Remonſtrance of the Keeper being at an end, the King ordered the Regiſter of the Court to be brought him, and the Leaf ſhewn him, wherein was the Decree of Diviſion, which he himſelf tore out, and inſtead of it, cauſed the Decree of the Council to be inſerted the ſame day, the 12th of May; by which moſt expreſs Prohibitions were made to the ſaid Court of Parliament ever after, to deliberate upon ſuch like Declarations, concerning Affairs of State, its Adminiſtration and Government, at the Peril of loſing their Places, and greater if they fail'd; and for the Fault committed in this Inſtance by the ſaid Court, it was ordered, that the ſaid Letters of Declaration ſhould be withdrawn from it, with moſt expreſs Inhibitions, to take any Juriſdiction or Cognizance of their Contents. No body was ever better acquainted with the Laws of the Kingdom, than Chancellor de l'Hoſpital; and yet obſerve how he makes Charles IX. ſpeak. Bodin (b) will tell you that this Prince made a Decree the 24th of September, 1563. forbidding the Parliament of Paris to put it to the queſtion, whether they ſhou'd or ſhou'd not record the Edicts his Majeſty ſent 'em. Francis I. (c) made a like Ordinance in the Year, 1528.

(a) Auberi ubi ſupra, pag. 304.

(b) Bodin. de republica, lib. 3. cap. 1. pag. 319. Edit. Latina, 1600.

(c) Id. ib.

(Q.) That his Troops being commanded by the Creatures of the Cardinal he could not diſpoſe of 'em.] Mr. d'Artagnan's Memoirs inform us that Cinqmars the King's Favourite conceived a great Averſion for Cardinal Richelieu, after he had obſerved that his Eminence prevented his marrying of a Princeſs. He endeavoured to induce the King to ruin this Miniſter, and (d) he believed he had [illegible] that if his Majeſty did it not, it was [illegible] much for want of good will, as becauſe he [illegible] afraid of him. His Majeſty had anſwered, that he ſpoke to him of it, that what he propoſed was very difficult, that he did not conſider that this Man was Maſter of all the Places of his Kingdom, and of all his Armies both by Sea and Land; that they were his Relations and Friends who commanded 'em, whom he could cauſe to revolt againſt him, both as often and as long as he pleaſed. Let's add a Reflection upon this: The Favourites of Princes, or thoſe who have the greateſt Share in the Government, apply themſelves generally with an incredible vigilance to get themſelves, or procure for their Relations the moſt profitable and honourable Imploys. One would ſay, that they look upon themſelves as the Heirs of Mankind: There is no Place vacant, but they beg it for themſelves or for ſome of their Creatures. Some there are who attribute this only to an inſatible Avarice, and a boundleſs Ambition; but it's certain, that if in the Beginning theſe are the only Motives of their Conduct, Prudence obliges 'em to continue it after; for the Maligners and Enemies of a firſt Miniſter daily increaſe in Proportion to his Authority: He has therefore new and hourly Occaſions to make himſelf Supports and Ramparts; for which Reaſon he inceſſantly turns out of Places Perſons who are ſuſpected by him, and advances ſuch as devote themſelves to his Intereſt. Cardinal Richelieu maintained himſelf this way, and ſo ſtrengthned his Power, that it laſted all his Life. You have ſeen in the Paſſage of Mr. d'Artagnan's Memoirs, that 'twas this hindred the King from gratifying his Deſire of ruining him. Obſerve now from theſe Words of Mr. de la Rochefoucaud, in what Condition Affairs were, after the Death of his Eminence: (e) I came to Court, which I found as obedient to his Will, (f) after his Death, as in his Life time. His Relations and Creatures had the ſame Advantages that he had procur'd them; and by an Effect of his Fortune, of which few Examples are to be met with in Story, the King who had hated him, and wiſhed his Deſtruction, was obliged not only to diſſemble his Reſentments, but alſo to authorize the Diſpoſal the Cardinal had made in his Will, of the principal Imploys and moſt important Places of his Kingdom. He further choſe Cardinal Mazarine to ſucceed him in the Government of Affairs, whereby he was aſſured of Reigning more abſolutely after his Death, than the King his Maſter had been able to do for the Thirty-three Years that he wore the Crown. But to omit nothing, it muſt be obſerved, that it was for the King's Intereſt at that time, that the Armies and Forts ſhou'd not be under the Direction of the Cardinal's Enemies. This Miniſter's Abilities had not been ſufficient to ſupport him, but for the good Succeſſes which attended the King's Arms; he muſt neceſſarily have fallen if Lewis the XIIIth's Wars had been unproſperous. It was therefore the Intereſt of his Enemies, that the Spaniards ſhould triumph, and put the Kingdom in continual Frights. What would not have been to be feared, if the French Generals had wiſhed the Ruin of the Cardinal, and if their particular Fate had not depended upon that of the Miniſter? They who wiſhed his Ruin, were wonderfully pleaſed with the Succeſſes of the Spaniards in 1636. And the Count de Soiſſons, a Prince of the Blood, ſhew'd himſelf but an ill Subject, when the queſtion was how to ſtop this Tempeſt, by ſaying he could be ſorry if it increaſed even to the Point of forcing the King to ſacrifice the Cardinal to the public Indignation. We could never have believed, there are the Words of the King's Declaration, (g) that after we had pardoned the Count de Soiſſons, our Couſin, the ill Offices he had been guilty of againſt our Service in the Year 1636. when we truſted our Arms in his Hands, that he would have embarked himſelf again [illegible]. See what has been ſaid above, concerning the raiſing the Siege of Fontarabia.

(d) Memoires d'Artagnan, pag. 180.

(e) Mr. de la Rochefoucaud, pag. 2. See the Remark S.

(f) That's to ſay, of Cardinal Richelieu.

(g) Dated June, 8. 1641. See the Memoirs de Montreſor, pag. m. 367, 368.

We

often ſollicited either to give Orders or Permiſſion (R) for killing the Cardinal, but cou'd never be brought to it. Nor would he even after the Death of the Cardinal, ſuffer his Family to loſe any of its Luſtre; and 'twas believed he deſign'd by this, to perſwade the World that he had not raiſed it out of

We have ſeen at the Beginning of this Remark, that Cardinal Richelieu provoked Cinqmars, by oppoſing the Marriage of a Princeſs. Not to engage the Reader in the Trouble of conſulting another Book, I'll juſt mention that this Princeſs was the ſame Mary de Gonzague, who Married the King of Poland ſome time after. She had been beloved by the Duke of Orleans, his Majeſty's only Brother; but the Queen-Mother to prevent the Match, (a) cauſed her to be ſent to the Bois de Vincennes. This Detainment was a little after by the King's Order, who promiſed his Brother, in 1631. (b) leave to Marry her. The Duke of Orleans made no Advantage of this Conſent; he meditated a Rebellion, which was quaſh'd in its Infancy, and he eſcaped into Foreign Countries, and engaged himſelf to a Siſter of the Duke of Lorrain. One of the Six things which gave Cinqmars an implacable Averſion to Cardinal Richelieu, was, that [illegible] making of the Princeſs Mary de Gonzague, he [illegible], that his Mother had a mind to Marry him to her. Your Mother, anſwered his Eminence, is Mad, and if the Princeſs Mary has ſuch a Thought, ſhe is madder than your Mother; When ſhe has been propoſed as a Wife for Monſieur, would you have the Vanity and Preſumption to pretend to her? 'Tis a ridiculous thing. (c) [illegible]te, that the Author of the Galantries of the Kings of France, has vented a [illegible] Diabol[illegible] Satyrical concerning the Amours of Cinqmars.

(a) Auberi, Hiſt. du Cardinal de Richelieu, liv. 4. chap. 6. p. m. 269. & 270. du 1. tome.

(b) Id. ib. chap. 10. pag. 298.

(c) See Journal du Cardinal de Richelieu, pag. 208, Edit. 1648 in 12.

(d) Me-

(R) To give Orders or Permiſſion for the killing of the Cardinal.] I have related in the preceding Remark, Lewis the XIII's Anſwer to the Propoſition of diſgracing the Cardinal. This Anſwer made this young Favourite conclude (d) that when he ſhould have kill'd the Cardinal, the King, inſtead of revenging him, would be the firſt that wou'd be pleas'd at the Deliverance. Thus continually fortifying his Reſolution of Sacrificing this firſt Miniſter, he attempted to engage Treville in the Execution; (e) " But Treville, who was Wiſe and ' Prudent, anſwer'd him when he ſpoke to him of ' it, that he had never been concern'd in Aſſaſſina- ' tions, and that it was as much as he ſhould be ' able to do bring himſelf to, tho' his Majeſty ſhould ' declare to him, that the good of the State de- ' pended on it. Cinqmars reply'd, that if nothing ' was wanting but that, the thing ſhould be quickly ' done, even before [illegible] was Two days older, and ' deſir'd him not to promiſe but upon that ' Condition. Treville gave him his Promiſe with- ' out making much Reflection on what he did; ' mean time, whether he only did it becauſe he be- ' lieved the King would never conſent to ſuch a ' thing; he who was daily and hourly repeating ' how terribly diſturb'd he was at having cauſed ' the Marſhal d'Ancre to be taken off as he was; ' or whether he gave too much way to his Re- ' ſentment, Cinqmars had no ſooner his Word for ' it, but he ſounded the King upon the Matter. ' The King, who was downright, acknowledg'd ' that he ſhould not be very ſorry to be rid of his ' Eminence, not thinking on what Deſign he made ' that Propoſition. He thought that what he ſaid ' to him was only a thing at random, as when one ' is ask'd whether he would be glad or ſorry that ' this or that ſhould happen. However, Cinqmars ' making the moſt of this Anſwer, ſent for ' Trevi[illegible] and bid him try the King—— ' Trevi[illegible]oke to his Majeſty upon this Topick ' that [illegible]day. He anſwer'd nothing but what ' was [illegible]eable enough to what Cinqmars had ' endeavour'd to perſwade him.——(f) Cinqmars ' who was already dextrous at deceiving, and ' putting off a Look or a Wink for expreſs Com- ' mands, thought inſtead of getting the [illegible] to ' ſay all he had promiſed for him, that 'twa[illegible]uch ' as if he declared the ſame things to Tre[illegible] that ' he had ſaid to himſelf. Treville who [illegible] heard ' the King ſay as much, not once, but an Hundred ' times before, was not ſo thorowly ſatisfied as he imagin'd; he deſir'd that his Majeſty would explain ' himſelf more poſitively upon it; and the thing ' being ſpun out till his Departure, it was reſolv'd ' to execute their Deſign at Nemours. The one in- ' gaged only upon the other's Promiſe, which he ' conſtantly made of the King's declaring himſelf; ' and the other made him this Promiſe only, be- ' cauſe he thought to amuſe and inſenſibly oblige ' him to do the thing, without making much Re- ' flection on it. When the Court was come to (g) ' Melun, Treville challenging Cinqmars with his ' Promiſe, he referrs him to Fontainebleau, where ' the King was to ſtay a Day. He actually ſpoke ' of it to his Majeſty, and preſs'd him to conſent ' to it; but the King deteſting the Propoſition, ' and anſwering him, that he did not think he ' durſt have ſpoken to him of it; he conceal'd ' this from Treville, telling him that his Majeſty's ' Anſwer was, That Hints were ſufficient to be ' underſtood, without obliging a King to give a ' poſitive Command. This Game the Marſhal ' de Vitry play'd, when he took off the Marſhal ' d'Ancre—— (h) Treville was not at all ſatiſ- ' fied with this Anſwer; and tho' all the Meaſures ' were taken for this Aſſaſſination, he broke it ' off, as ſoon as he ſaw the King would not conſent to it. After this the Author relates, that [illegible]mars had a Dagger made to kill the Cardi- [illegible] himſelf; That he hang'd it to the Hilt of his Sword, as was the Faſhion of that time; That the Cardinal having notice of the Deſign ſtood upon his Guard; That Chance, however, order'd it ſo that he was Twice ſide by ſide with Cinqmars on the Road; but whatever Reſolution this Favourite had taken, he was ſo confounded when the Buſineſs was to ſtrike the Blow, that he had not the Power to lay his Hand to the Poniard, which yet was made on purpoſe to take away his Life.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Ibid. pag. 183.

(g) The King ſet out for Rouſſillion in 1642.

(h) Ibid. pag. 184.

I don't pretend that every thing in Mr. d'Artagnan's Memoirs is to paſs for Truth, but it's certain his Eminence was perſwaded that Cinqmars had reſolv'd to execute this Aſſaſſination at Lions. See the Letter (i) he wrote to his Majeſty the 7th of July, 1652. "(k) And 'tis plain from the ' King's Letter, that Cinqmars made no ſcruple to ' attempt the Perſon of the Cardinal; and that he ' not only propoſed it to the King, as a thing ab- ' ſolutely neceſſary, but alſo offer'd to ex- ' ecute it himſelf; at which his Majeſty was ' aſtoniſh'd, and condemn'd ſo wicked a Thought. Hence we may collect a good Argument, to confute a falſe Story of Guy Patin; A World of People take it for a certain Fact, and make a Thouſand Serious Reflections upon it; the thing ſounds ſo very ſtrange and ſurprizing. Theſe are his Words: " (l) I have always in my Thoughts ' the Paſſage of the Preſident Thuanus's Hiſtory, ' where mention is made of Antony Richelieu, ' commonly call'd the Monk, which coſt Thuanus ' Grandſon his Life. He had much better not ' have written a Hiſtory at all. Who can tell but ' in ſome Age or other a Tyrant may ariſe, who ' may let looſe his Indignation againſt my Family, ' to revenge ſome truth that I had ſpoken of his ' Anceſtors? Thuanus had not loſt his Head, if ' Cardinal Richelieu had not ſought an occaſion of ' revenging himſelf upon the Grandſon, for what ' the Grandfather had written. This he wrote the 8th of November, 1658. He perſever'd in this Notion, and repeated this Obſervation in writing to a Friend, the 31ſt of July, 1669. with this only difference, that he took the Cardinal's Victim for the Hiſtorian's Son, and not his Grandſon. He then was better acquainted with the Degree of Relation. The Preſident Thuanus's Hiſtory, ſaid he, is fine (m) and more than fine; but it ſo diſpleaſed Cardinal Richelieu, that it coſt him his Eldeſt Son's Life, who was a very worthy Man, and this on account of a Paſſage concerning Antony du Pleſſis de Richelieu, in the 1ſt. Tome under Francis II. in the Year 1560.

(i) It's among the Memoirs of Montreſor, pag. 203. See alſo pag. 190.

A CONFUTATION of what Patin has ſaid of the Cauſe of the Death of Thuanus, Son of the Hiſtorian.

(k) Auberi ubi ſupra, liv. 6. chap. 83. pag. 321.

(l) Patin lettre, 124 pag. 486. du 1. tome.

(m) Idem lettre 492. pag. 432. du 3. tome.

——This

of a (S) Slaviſh Condeſcenſion. The ſame Reaſon ſhould have induced him to leave in Priſons or Baniſhment, the Perſons the Cardinal had diſgraced; yet perceiving himſelf near his End, he conſented to the Liberty or (T) Return of moſt of 'em. 'Tis ſaid ſome Economical Motives mingled in this Affair. The ſhort Time that he ſurvived the Cardinal, was perhaps the moſt uncomfortable of his whole Life; for beſides his Bodily Infirmities, he had a great many Troubles of Mind. And as 'tis very probable, he was not ignorant (V) of the Queen's Intrigues, we may reaſonably believe that his Mind was toſſed with a Thouſand Diſturbances.

———This Paſſage begins thus. Antonius Richelius vulgo dictus Monachus, &c. The Readineſs of ſo many People's believing Guy Patin's Aſſertion in theſe two Paſſages, may convince us, that on ſome Occaſions an Argument is ſtrong enough to perſwade, if it abounds with Extravagance and Crimes: It becomes credible on this very Account, that it ſhocks good Senſe and Probability. But omitting that, let's reaſon a little upon it. 'Tis certain, that Cinqmars had undertaken to deſtroy Cardinal Richelieu; his Eminence was convinced, that the way of doing it was by an Aſſaſſination. It appears, that Thuanus was Cinqmars's intimate Friend, at leaſt, that he was admitted to (a) the inmoſt Confidence of this Favourite, as to the Point of ruining the Cardinal's Fortune. Is not this ſearching for Mid-day at Twelve a Clock (if we may uſe this Proverbial Phraſe), to go ſo far as the Expreſſions of Thuanus the Hiſtorian, in queſt of the Cauſe of Thuanus's Death, the Confident of Cinqmars. Could the firſt Miniſter, as vindictive as he was, found his Reſentment upon a Phraſe of the Father, when he knew his Mortal Enemy, had ſo much Intimacy with the Son. Muſt not the Spirit of Revenge have ariſen from this Partnerſhip in the Crime? Patin talks like a Man who ſhould affirm, that Mevius having received a Stroke of a Cudgel from Titius, chaſtiſed him only becauſe Titius's Father had not ſaluted a Relation of Mevius with Reſpect enough.

(a) This appears by ſome Pieces of the Proceſs.

(S) Had not raiſed it out of a Slaviſh Condeſcenſion. 'It was (b) believed, as ſoon as he was 'dead, that as the King had hardly ever loved him, 'his Family would not long ſhine with that Luſtre 'he had given it. But his Majeſty, who foreſaw, 'that if he made an Attempt like that, it would 'be teſtifying too openly, as it had been often ſaid 'in the World, that this Miniſter had always kept 'him in Tutelage, from which nothing but his 'Death had freed him, he not only ſupported it, 'but gave it additional Honours; cauſing the 'Mareſchal de Breze's Son to be received Duke and 'Peer by the Parliament. We have ſeen (c) above Mr. de la Rochefoucaud's Obſervation concerning the Credit the Cardinal's Creatures were in, when he returned to Court after his Eminence's Death. Mr. de la Chaſtre (d) has ſpoken of it in the ſame Strain.

(b) Memoir d'Artagnan, pag. 198.

(c) In the Remark Q.

(d) La Chaſtre, Memoires, p. m. 286.

(T) He conſented to the Liberty and Return of moſt of them——— Economical Motives.] 'The '(e) King, whoſe Diſtemper increaſed every Day, 'deſirous to give at the end of his Days ſome 'Marks of his Clemency, whether out of Devo'tion, or to teſtify, that Cardinal Richelieu had 'had a greater Share than he in all the Violences 'which had been committed ſince the Diſgrace of 'the Queen-Mother, conſented to the return of 'the moſt conſiderable of thoſe who had been per'ſecuted; and he was the more willingly induced 'to it, as the Miniſters foreſeeing ſome Diſorders, 'indeavoured to oblige Perſons of Condition, to ſe'cure themſelves againſt all that might happen in 'a Revolution like that which threatned them. 'Almoſt all who had been baniſhed, return'd. The Author I have this from, is very conſiderable, being a great Lord, who was then upon the Place and who was as diſtinguiſhable by his Parts as Birth. Another Perſon of Quality, and much concerned in the Intrigues, will help to confirm our Text: his following Words contain a Satyrical Stroke upon the King: (f) 'Some time before 'Cardinal Mazarin and Monſieur de Chavigni had 'induced the King to releaſe the Mareſchals de Vi'try and Baſſompierre, and the Count de Cramail. 'The Means they made uſe of on this Occaſion, 'deſerve to be mentioned, being pleaſant enough; 'for not finding his Majeſty had much Inclination 'to it, they attacked him on his weak ſide, repreſenting, that theſe Three Priſoners were a great 'Expence to him in the Baſtille; and that not being in a Capacity of Cabalting in the Kingdom, 'they might as well live in their Houſes, where 'they would coſt him nothing. This took; the 'King being poſſeſs'd with ſo extravagant an Ava'rice, that all who had a Demand of Money up'on him, were as a Weight upon his Shoulders; 'inſomuch, that after the return of Treville, Beaupuy, and others whom the late Cardinal's 'Reſentments on his Death-Bed had forced him to 'abandon, he ſought an Occaſion of ſnubbing 'each of 'em, to deprive 'em of all hopes of be'ing rewarded for what they had ſuffered for him. 'The Liberty of the Priſoners was followed by 'the recalling ſome Exiles (g). Facts of this kind are ſuch, as many think moſt deſerving the Readers Curioſity. Wherefore I imagine the putting 'em in my Dictonary will be approved.

(e) Memoires de la Rochefouc. pag. 7. & 8.

(f) Memoires de la Chaſtre pag. 296, 297.

(g) See at the 309*th. Page of the ſame Memoires* de la Chaſtre, the recalling of other Exiles.

(V) He was not ignorant of the Queen's Intrigues.] The Movements ſhe made (h) from the Death of Cardinal Richelieu, to that of the King, teſtify that ſhe was very ambitious, and that it was not without Reaſon, that the Cardinal herein conforming to the Senſe of his Maſter, kept her ſhort; for had ſhe been ſuffered to meddle in publick Affairs, ſhe would have had her Dependencies and Cabals, the ready way to multiply Factions, which were already but too importunate. Let us ſhew in general, what ſhe did to come at the full Regency, in ſpite of the Purpoſe and Intention of the King her Husband. The Cardinal had remonſtrated to this Prince, that conſidering (i) 'the laſt Conſpi'racy againſt the State, in which Cinqmars had 'imployed the Name and Authority of his Royal 'Highneſs, to give greater Weight and Credit to 'his Faction——it would not be proper, in 'caſe of his Majeſty's Deceaſe, to ſuffer the Duke 'of Orleans his Brother to aſſume the Regency 'and Government of the Kingdom, much leſs 'the Tutelage and Education of the Sons of France. The King reliſhed this Advice of the Cardinal; and underſtanding (k) on the firſt or ſecond of December, 1642, that the Recovery of this firſt Miniſter was deſpaired of, he haſted to execute this Counſel, ſo that on Wedneſday the 3d. Day of the Month, he ſent for the Preſidents of the Parliament of Paris, and the great Officers of the Crown, and told 'em, 'that he had cauſed a Declaration to be drawn 'up, to exclude the Duke of Orleans his Brother 'from the Regency, (in caſe God ſhould diſpoſe of 'him) whom he had already pardoned, even to the 'Sixth time, and to whom he did not think he 'ought after this, to intruſt what was moſt dear 'to him, his Kingdoms and his two Sons; that 'the Parliament was to regiſter, as ſoon as poſſible, 'this Declaration ſo important and neceſſary to 'the publick Tranquility. It was regiſtred the 'Fifth of the ſame Month (l) to be fully and entirely executed. The King's Health declined every Day, and no Body judged he could live long: Hereupon the Court was filled with Deſigns and Intrigues; ſome were very zealous to offer their Services to the Queen, others were contriving to reſtore the Duke of Orleans to Favour. Father Sirmonde the King's Confeſſor (m) 'was induced 'to propoſe to him his Brother's Co-regency with 'the Queen——but this Propoſition ſo violently 'diſpleated the King, that after having ſharply 'rejected it, and ſaid ſomething of it to the Queen, 'he would hear his Confeſſor no more, and diſ'miſſing him, under another Pretence, took Fa'ther Caſtaines in his place. At laſt the King was reconciled both to the Queen and the Duke of Orleans. He made a Declaration, in which '(n) he 'appointed (God calling him to himſelf) the 'Queen his Wife to be Regent, to have the Edu-

(h) See the Memoires of Mr. de la Rochefoucaud, the Anſwer of Mr. de la Chaſtre, and the Anſwer of the Comte de Brienne to the Memoir of Mr. de la Chaſtre.

(i) Auberi hiſt. du Cardinal Mazarin, liv. 1. pag. 124.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 125.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 127.

(m) Memoires de la Caſtre, pag. 295.

(n) Auberi hiſt. du Cardinal Mazarin, liv. 1. pag. 128.

ſturbances. There was no Body even to the Dauphin (X), but gave him the Spleen, without the leaſt ill Meaning or Deſign o'their ſide. We have not as yet ſeen a good Hiſtory of this Reign, which makes us impatiently wait for that, which Mr. le Vaſſor has undertak[en] the firſt Volume of it, which [a] reaches to the Time of this Prince's comin[g] Age in 1614, has been well received by the Publick.

LU[B]ERT, (Sibrand) Profeſſor of Divinity at Franeker, was born at Longo-worde in [Fr]eland, about the Year 1556. He went through School Learning in the College [of] Lemmen, and ſtudied afterwards in the Univerſity of Wittemberg, where he learned He[brew] to a great Perfection, under the Profeſſor Valentin Scindlerus, after which he [went] to Geneva, and was a very aſſiduous Auditor of the Lectures of Beza, Caſaubon, a[nd] Francis Portus. His next Remove was to Neuſtad, whether Prince Caſimir had tranſlated the Pro[teſtant] Profeſſors. He paid his chiefeſt Attendance at the Lecture of Zachary Ur[ſinus] and inſinuated himſelf into his Intimacy and Favour. He

[a] Printed at Amſterdam Twice in 1700. The Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres have told us, that there have been two Tranſlations of it into Engliſh.

[b] He was then explaining Apollonius Rhodius.

(c) Mr. Aubery ib. ſays, that Mr. du Puy had furniſhed Memoirs, Inſtances, and Authorities.

(f) Memoires de la Chaſtre, pag. 317.

'cation of their Children, with the Adminiſtration 'of the Kingdom; and the Duke of Orleans his 'Brother, to be Lieutenant-General of the Mi-'nor King, in all the Provinces, under the Autho-'rity of the Queen. He will have the Queen-'Regent, and the Lieutenant-General, to be able to 'determine nothing, without the Sovereign Advice 'and Counſel of the Re[gency], compoſed of his Cou-'ſins, the Prince of C[onde] and Cardinal Maza-'rine, and the Sieu[r] Seguier, Chancellor of 'France, Boutillier, Superintendant of the Fi-'nances, and de Chavigni, Secretary of the Com-'mands, all Stiled Miniſters of State; and that 'the Prince and the Cardinal were to be chief in 'the Order, as they are named, in the Abſence 'of his R[oyal] Highneſs. It is his Pleaſure alſo, 'that eve[ry] thing be deliberated and reſolved in 'his Co[uncil] by the Plurality of Voices; and 'that by [the] ſame Plurality, Proviſion be made 'both for the moſt important Imploys, and prin-'cipal Offices of the Crown, and alſo for the 'Places of Superintendent of the Finances, firſt 'Preſident, and Attorney-General in the Parlia-'ment of Paris, and Secretary of the Commands.

This Declaration being read aloud in his Majeſty's Chamber, in Preſence of the Princes and Dukes and Peers, &c. (a) the 19th. of April 1643. The King ſigned it, and added the following Poſtſcript; This above is my moſt expreſs and laſt Will, which I will have to be executed. The Queen and the Duke of Orleans ſigned it likewiſe, after having promiſed and ſworn to each other, not to contradict it. Which was not done with reſpect to the Queen, without a Flood of Tears, the Teſtimonies of her Grief and Affliction ——— This being done, the Deputies of the Parliament were introduced. The King, ſick as he was, declared to 'em himſelf, that he had cauſed Letters for the Regency to be drawn, which he deſired might be ſpeedily recorded, to which purpoſe he would ſend the next Morning Monſieur his Brother, and Monſieur the Prince, and Monſieur the Chancellor to the Grand Chamber. In effect, they were read and publiſhed the ſame Morning, in the Audience. The Letter of the Seal, which accompanied the Declaration, injoin'd the Parliament (b) to verify it without Delay or Difficulty ——— Afterwards to take from the Regiſters, the Declaration againſt Monſieur the King's only Brother, immediately to put it into the Hands of the Chancellor, to be cancelled or torn. The Queen, very ill ſatisfied with the Limitation affixed to her Regency, was taken up only with the neceſſary Meaſures to avoid the Declaration, and the King had ſcarce cloſed his Eyes, but ſhe pompouſly was conveyed to the Parliament of Paris, to obtain a full and entire Regency. It was the antient Cuſtom that the Widows of the Kings of France ſhould keep for Forty Days together in their Chamber, without [ſee] Sun or Moon till their Husbands were bu[ried]. Anne of Auſtria, Lewis XIII's Widow, did not ſhut her ſelf up in that manner; but went to Paris the next Day after the Death of the King (c) her Husband, and three Days after appeared at the moſt Pompous and Splendid Co[urt] that could be ſeen at the Parliament of Pa[ris] by the Intrigues ſhe had formed before, [to] the laſt Will of the King to be annull'd, that very Declaration of the Month of April before, which ſhe had ſworn to obſerve, and which (d) had coſt ſo much Labour and Pains, and was undoubtedly the Work of Monſieur the Chancellor Seguier (e) ——— and Monſieur the firſt Preſident Mole.

'Tis obſervable, that one of the Means the Queen's Servants imployed to arrive at their Ends, was to induce her to imploy the Creatures of Cardinal Richelieu, and like a good Chriſtian to forget the Injuries ſhe had received from 'em. Montaigu (f) a Devotee by Profeſſion, mixing God and the World together, and joining to the Reaſons of Devotion, the Neceſſity of having a Miniſter inſtructed in the Affairs of State, added farther, (in my Opinion) another Conſideration, which abſolutely gained her, to wit, repreſenting to her, that Cardinal Mazarine was the beſt qualify'd of any one to negotiate a Peace, and that being born a Subject to the King her Brother, he would yield to Advantageous Terms for his Family, which ſhe ought to endeavour to maintain in Power; in order to make it a Support a-gainſt any Faction which might ariſe in France in the time of her Regency. No Prophet could have gueſſed truer than Montaigu; for it fell out, that at Sixteen Years end, Cardinal Mazarine concluded the Peace with Spain, ſo advantageous to that Crown, and diſadvantageous to France, that the moſt Intelligent have thought, that that Conduct of his was owing to the Entreaties or Commands of the Queen-Mother, in whom the King her Husband had always obſerved a Spaniſh Heart; the Reaſon in part, why he was willing that her Regency ſhould depend on a Select Council. Lewis the 'Juſt did not ſo much inſiſt upon Preſidents as Rea-'ſon. He knew that the Queen his Wife under-'ſtood nothing of Affairs, and that ſhe could not 'have any Experience in 'em, having never had 'any Share in the Government. As the Regency, 'ſaid he, is a thing of great Weight, and the 'Queen has not the Ability that is neceſſary for the 'Reſolution of Difficulties, inſeparable from Go-'vernment; we have thought fit to conjoin with 'her, and under her Authority, a Counſel that may 'determine. That which was particular on this 'Occaſion was, that there being a Rupture betwixt 'the two Crowns, the Queen would be obliged to 'make War with her own Brother, the Catho-'lick King. Mean time, Lewis XIII. had here-'tofore upbraided her, that ſhe could not forget 'her Country, and ſeemed too much intereſſed in 'the News of the Affairs of Spain (g).

(X) There was no Body even to the Dauphin, but gave him the Spleen without the leaſt ill Meaning or Deſign.] Mr. Pourſault having ſaid, that Kings are ſo nice, that the leaſt thing wounds 'em, and that they who are moſt dear to 'em, ſometimes by the leaſt thing diſguſt 'em, gives an Inſtance of it. 'One Day, as I was with the Preſident Perrault in 'his fine Gallery, Monſieur de la Vrilliere, Secre-'tary of State, came to ſee him, and from him I 'have the following Story. The King, who was 'then but Dauphin, was baptized at St. Germain 'the 21ſt. of April 1643, being Four Years of 'Age, Seven Months and ſome Days. Lewis XIII, 'could not aſſiſt at that Ceremony; he was ſick 'and died Three and Twenty Days after. The 'Dauphin, as he came from Baptiſm, was brought 'to the King, to whom he told that he was juſt 'baptized. I am glad of it, my Son, ſaid the King, 'but what's your Name? My Name, replied the 'young Prince, is Lewis XIV. without thinking 'on what he ſaid, and perhaps even without 'knowing the meaning of it. And yet this An-

'ſwer

(a) Pag. 130.

(b) Ibid. pag. 127.

(c) The King died at St. Germain.

(d) Aubery ubi ſupra, liv. 2. pag. 149.

(e) Aubery ubi ſupra, pag. 152. 153.

He once received an Elogy (A) from him, which at the ſame time was a good Proof of this Profeſſor's Modeſty. Our Lubbert had an Offer of being Subſtitute to Urſinus in the Logick Profeſſorſhip, with the Promiſe of a better Imploy in due Time and Place; but he modeſtly anſwered, that he did not think himſelf qualified to fill a Place, in which this Illuſtrious Profeſſor had gotten ſo much Glory. Nevertheleſs, Urſinus found none amongſt his Diſciples beſides him, fit to be recommended to this Function. It was given to Fortunatus Crellius. As ſoon as Lubbert found himſelf qualified to be promoted to the Miniſtry; he had a Call from the Reformed Church of Bruſſels, and from that of Embden; he preferred the latter, by the Advice of Zachary Urſin. He was called into Friſeland in 1584. to be Preacher to the Governour and Deputies of the States of the Province, and to read Divinity Lectures in the Univerſity of Franeker, the Foundation whereof was at that time. He had for his Collegues in the Divinity Profeſſorſhip, Martin Lydius, and Henry Antonides Nardenus; and tho' they were of much longer ſtanding than he, he far excell'd them. He took his Doctor of Divinity's Degree at Heidelberg, when he ſaw himſelf honour'd with a Profeſſorſhip in that Faculty at Franeker. He exerciſed this Imploy above Forty years, and in this long Interval, was ſeveral times imploy'd in (B) important Affairs. He was one of the Deputies at the Synod of Dort; and one of the ſoundeſt Heads in the Aſſembly. His great Induſtry and ſtrong Conſtitution, gave him opportunities (C) of compoſing ſeveral Books, which were much eſteem'd. He preached not 'ſwer afflicted the King: In the Condition he 'was, he took it for an ill Omen, and turning of 'the other ſide: Not yet, ſaid he, not yet. Some 'Flatterers (for Princes have the Misfortune to have 'em before they can ſpeak) had already poſſeſs'd 'this Royal Infant with the great Name he was 'ſoon to bear; which was the cauſe of the little 'Mortification he innocently gave the King his 'Father. (a)

(a) Bouvſault lettres nouvelles, pag. 384, 385. Edit. de Holl.

(A) An Elogy——which at the ſame time was a good Proof of this Profeſſor's Modeſty.] He had miſ-quoted David Kimchi in a publick Lecture, and being admoniſhed of it by our Sibrand, he acknowledge his Fault in the next Lecture, and pointed to the Auditor who had ſet him right. You'll find a larger account of this in the following Latin: (b) Accidit aliquando, ut D. Urſinus in lectione publica Kimchium citaret, quem noſter quoque antea ad eundem locum conſuluerat. Deprehendebat adoleſcens, D. Urſinum, Kimchii authoritatem, ſive errore μνημονικῷ, ſive quod locum obiter inſpexiſſet, malè allegaſſe. Monuit hac de re præceptorem modeſtè & verecunde. Is miratus juvenis in Ebraïſmo peritiam, introduxit eum in Muſæum, inſpectoque Kimchii Commentario, rem ſeſe ad eum modum habere deprehendit. Tantum abeſt ut offenderit clariſſimum Theologorum hac diſcipuli libertas, ut poſtridie in lectione publica errorem illum ſuum retractaverit, monſtrato D. Sibrando, quem ſibi ejus indicium feciſſe profitebatur. Eâ etiam occaſione D. Urſinus juventuti ſacra Ebraïſmi ſtudia, paremque diligentiam commendabat.

(b) Sixtin. Amama in orat. funebri Sibrandi Lubberti, fol. C 2. verſo.

Pulcrum eſt digito monſtrari & dicier, hic eſt.

It was more to Urſin's Honour thus to acknowledge his Fault, than to Lubbert's to be praiſed for diſcovering it.

(B) Several times imploy'd in important Affairs.] Count William of Naſſau, Governour of Friſeland, and the Deputies of the States of the Province frequently admitted him into their Council; and when in the Year 1594. the Towns of Groeningben and Ommelandes were added to the Body of the united Provinces, he was one (c) of the Three Miniſters who founded a Church at Groningben, and drew up the Statutes of it. Sometime after, a Quarrel aroſe between the Miniſters of Leuwarden, which was managed with a Paſſion ſo obſtinate, that the only Means of reſtoring Peace, was to diſmiſs 'em all; whereupon Sibrand Lubbert, Lydius, Nerdenus, and John Arcerius, were ſent to the Service of that Church, and continued in it till theſe Diſſentions were ended. He was deputed to the Hague in the Year 1606. to aſſiſt in a Preliminary Aſſembly, ad conventum præparatorium; and in the Year 1618. the States of Friſeland deputed him to the Synod of Dort (d). One of the Engliſh Divines, who aſſiſted at that Synod obſerves, that this Friſeland Deputy was eaſily fermented and heated, and contributed much more to perplex things, and to foment Diviſions, than to (e) compoſe 'em. I have ſpoken elſewhere (f) of his quarrel with Maccovius; and I add here, that he had ſome Differences with his Collegue, the learned Druſius (g).

(c) Monſ. Alting & Martin Lydius, were the Two others.

(d) Ex Sixtino Amama in orat. funebri.

(e) See the præſtant. ac eruditor. virorum Epiſtolæ Eccleſiaſt. & Theolog. pag. 549, 565, 568. & alibi Edit. in Fol. 1684.

(C) His great Induſtry and ſtrong Conſtitution, gave him opportunities of compoſing many Books.] He generally roſe at Three a Clock in the Morning or ſooner, neither Winter nor old Age interrupted this Cuſtom; and nothing afflicted him more in his Diſtempers, than to be deprived of the ſatisfaction of Studying. He was ſcarce ever ſick till the laſt years of his Life, his good Conſtitution having all along held out againſt the ill Effects of violent Study. (b) Robuſtâ & qualis paucis obtingit, valetudine ſemper uſus fuerat, magno Dei beneficio, in tantis adeoque aſſiduis laboribus. Poſtremis annis dolores nephritici ex aſſiduis ſtudiis contracti & catarrhi frequentiores per intervalla cum exercuêre. He publiſhed a Book againſt Bellarmine, upon the Queſtions about the Scripture, the Pope, the Church, and Councils, and replied to Greſerus, who had anſwered for Bellarmine. He had the laſt Blow in this Diſpute, for Greſerus did not reply. Theſe Works of Lubbert, procured him ſeveral Letters fill'd with Praiſes; and he was forced to notify one Part of 'em to the Publick, as a Buckler to the Blows of one of his Adverſaries. (i) Quanti autem hos μοχθους labores fecerit Eccleſia, liquere poteſt ex præclaris & honorificis Elogiis Præſtantiſſimorum ejus luminum, (1) quorum aliquot vulgationem effrenis adverſarii maledicentia modeſtiſſimæ animæ expreſſit. Obſerving that when the Socinian Hereſy began to creep into the Low-Countries, he publiſhed a Book againſt Socinus de Chriſto Salvatore. He wrote alſo againſt Arminius's Letter ad H. a Collibus, and againſt Peter Bertius, who had ingaged in the Defence of this Letter. Afterwards he writ againſt Vorſtius, and againſt a Book which Grotius intituled Pietas Ordinum Hollandia. Having thus declared himſelf an ardent Champion of the Conſtra-Remonſtrant's Cauſe, he was often obliged to take Pen in Hand; but the Author of his Funeral Oration, did not think it proper to inſiſt on this. He declared on the contrary, that he wiſhed all theſe things might be buried for ever, in the Grave of Oblivion. (a) De iis quæ poſtea ſuſecuta ſunt, malo tacere, quàm τὸ ἀόριστον ὕδωρ θολοῦν. Optem enim ex animo, quod ipſa quoque Synodus vovet, infauſta illa factionum nomina, quæ mihi hic cum cordolio & horrore uſurpanda eſſent, æternâ oblivione ſepulta eſſe. Si volumus coire Eccleſia vulnera & cicatricem ducere, cavendum ſedulo eſt, ne invectivarum unguibus imprudenti zelo reſodiantur. The laſt Work that Lubbert publiſhed, is his Commentary upon the Catechiſm of the Palatinate. He left an Anti-Bellarminus quite intire, which had coſt him infinite Labour, and 'twas thought he had Reaſons to deſire, that this important Compoſition ſhould not come out of the Preſs in his Life time (k).

(f) In the Article Makowski Remark C.

(g) See the præſt. ac eruditor. viror. Epiſt. pag. 415.

(b) Amama in orat. funebri.

(i) Id. ib. Fol. D 2.

(1) Epiſtolæ D. Bezæ, Rainoldi, Marnixii, Parsi, P. Bironis, Goulartii, vide Replic. Chriſt. Dogm. p. 8. & ſeqq.

(k) See at the 309. Page of the ſame Memoirs de la Chaſtre the recalling of other Exiles.

(l) See the Memoirs de Mr. de la Rochefoucaud, thoſe of Mr. de la Chaſtre. and the Anſwer of the Comte de Brienne to the Memoir of Mr. de la Chaſtre.

(D) He

with great Zeal, and was (D) instant in censuring Vice, and a severe Observer of the Statutes; he sometimes refused Rectorships, because he feared he could not (E) accomplish the Reformation of debauched Scholars. He refused a Chair of Divinity, which was offered him in the Palatinate, and became Vacant by the Death of Kimedontius [a] Professor at Heidelberg. The Governours of the University of Franeker opposed that Invitation; and his Wife being unwilling to leave her own Country, he thankfully refused his Electoral Palatine Highness Frederick IV. He died at Franeker the 21st. of January 1625 [b]. Scaliger himself (F) owned him to be a Learned Man. A Letter has been lately published, which informs us, that he was much in King James's Esteem.

LUBIENIETZKI (Stanislaus) in Latin Lubieniecius, a Polish Gentleman, was one of the famousest Ministers, the Socinians had in the XVIIth. Century. He was born at Racow the 23d. of August 1623. He was educated with a particular Care by his Father, who was Minister of Racow, and not satisfied to send him to the Schools, he took care that he should see the Diets of Poland, in order to introduce him to great Men, and instruct him in all Things agreeable (A) to his Birth. He afterwards sent him to Thorn, where the young Man settled for Two Years, and joined himself [c] to two Socinian Deputies during the Colloquy that was held in this City in the Year 1644, for the re-union of Religions. He drew up a Verbal Process of this Colloquy. Being made Governour to the young Count de Niemiryez, he travelled with him into Holland, and afterwards into France, where he acquired the Esteem of several Learned Men, with whom he conferred upon Points of Religion, without ever dissembling his own, or baulking any Opportunities of maintaining it. He lost his Father in the Year 1648, and returned into Poland. He married in 1652, the Daughter of a Zealous Socinian, and was made Coadjutor to John Chiachovius, Minister of Siedlisk; and as he quickly gave great Proofs of his Prudence and Learning, the Synod of Czarcow received him Minister, and made him Pastor of a Church of this Name. The Irruption of the Swedes made him quit it in 1655. and obliged him to retire to Cracow with his Family, the 6th. of April 1656. He there imployed his Time in [d] Fasting, and Prayer, and Preaching. The Town falling

[a] He died in 1596.

[b] Taken from his Funeral Oration, by Sixtinus Amama, and printed at Franeker in 1625.

[c] Joan. Slichtingio & Martino Ruaro, qui eò Ecclesiæ nomine venerant, adfuit. Vita Stanislai Lubienicii, in lumine Historiæ reformat. Poloniæ, fol. 2. ver. fo.

[d] Totum tempus Cracoviæ commorationis nostræ cum reliquis Ministris prædicatione verbi Divini, frequentibus jejuniis, precibusque transigebat, ipseque præterea ingratium Unitariorum Ungarorum, qui cum Principe Rakoci Cracoviam venerant, Latinè concionabatur, lacramque Eucharistiam administrabat. Ibid. fol. 2.

(D) He preached with great Zeal, and was instant in his Censures of Vice.] He had the Courage to despise the injust Resentment of those, who fell under his Censures, and he always went on his own way. The Word of God was so powerful in his Mouth, that when he pleased, he drew Tears from those, who were most hardened in their Crimes. He did not stand in his Sermons so much to confute Popery, as to reform the Looseness of Manners, Drunkenness, Luxury, &c. Let's hear the Author of his Funeral Oration. (a) Nec enim id solum agebat, ut Pontificias superstitiones in animis hominum veritatis flammâ exureret, sed illud vel maximè, ut qui se Evangelicos profitebantur, ab ebrietate, luxu, aliisque flagitiis avulsi, discerent (b) piè, sobriè & justè vivere. Explevit autem omnes sanctissimi muneris partes in utraque Frisia, ea libertate, ut multorum malorum odia hoc solum nomine sibi concilia verit. Quæ tamen animosus ille Christi pugil, sanctissimi propositi mutatione neutiquam placanda censuit. Quin contra audientior ibat, publicè peccantes, Tros Rutulusve esset, nullo discrimine publicitus arguens. Adfuit huic libertati (Deo laboribus ejus insigniter benedicente) admirabilis efficacia. Qui eum concionantem audivêre, supersunt autem adhuc plurimi, ajunt eum concionantem audivêre, supersunt autem adhuc plurimi, ajunt eum vel pertinacissimis & deploratissimis hominibus lacrimas, quoties volebat, expressisse. Devotæ autem & contritæ animæ vix unquam siccis oculis eum audivêre.

(a) Amama, ibid. fol. C. 3.

(b) Tit. 2. 12.

(E) He sometimes refused Rectorships, because he feared.] He even desired to be excused assisting at the University Assemblies, and upon that Condition obliged himself to Lectures (b) extraordinary; his Reason was, because he could not connive at the Relaxation of Discipline (c). He was grave, and used no sort of Complaisance to get the Love of the Scholars. He stoutly reprimanded those who took wrong Courses. They were vexed with him for the present; but the time came, when most of 'em acknowledged, that they were infinitely obliged to him. (d) In omnibus actionibus erat serius & gravis. Gratiam favoremque juventutis non alia ratione, quam privata publicaque industriâ, nec non salutaribus ad pietatem & diligentiam adhortationibus, captavè didicerat. Quæ ratione etsi subindè petulantes adolescentes, ut ea ætas solet monitoribus esse aspera, offenderit, eorum tamen plerosque, jam viros, eo nomine sibi avitus habuit obligatos. Could he have hoped that the antient Discipline would have been re-established (he would not have forsaken the University Assemblies, he'd have taken his share of the Government; but he chose rather wholly to absent himself, whilst he despaired of a Reformation. (e) Malebat à publico abstinere, quam illud committere, palam ut fieret, quibus flagitiis coercendis impar esset. Ajebat se boni publici casû nullas offensas unquam subterfugisse, sed inanes irritasque, quæ nec sibi nec collegio usui futuræ essent, constanter deprecabatur. A Year before his Death he was prevailed upon by dint of Sollicitations and Contrivance, to accept of the Dignity of Rector; and there was then a Probability, that the Authority of the Sovereign would intervene, to introduce good Discipline amongst the young Students at Franeker. He began the Exercise of his Office, with the Invocation of the Name of God, and by a noble Oration, in which he declaimed against the Drunkards and dissolute Scholars, and against the Debaucheries of the Universities, the Source of the ill State of the Church, and he menaced those with the severest Treatment, who shou'd deserve it: In Ebrietatem, juventutis irreverentiam, & qui dissolutis Academiarum moribus natales suos debet, miserum Ecclesiarum statum graviter dicebat. Disciplinæ necessitatem nervosè ostendebat, illudque tandem profitebatur sine ambagibus; se bonis fore Rectorem humanissimum, ac malos severiorem præ se non desideraturos. Here's an Example fit to be recommended to all Heads of Universities.

(b) On Aristotle's Logick and Ethicks.

(c) Id. ib. fol. D 3.

(d) Id. ib.

(F) Scaliger himself owned he was a Learned Man; A Letter has been lately published.] 'Sibrandus Lubbertus, who is Learned, and a 'good Writer, is very ugly and rustical in his Per'son. He is rich and covetous (g); he tells his 'Apples himself, and walks without a Cloak in 'querpo, as Felix de Nismes tells me. I want his 'Book de Conciliis. The Letter I speak of, is Casaubon's; you'll find it at the beginning of a Book published in 1699, by a famous Professor (h) of Franeker.

(e) Id. ib. verso.

(f) Scaligerana, p. m. 145.

(g) Compare with this these Words of his Funeral Oration. Auctoritatem, quam & canities & famæ celebritas ei conciliaverant, augebat vita, in lautissima re, frugalis, abstinens & sobria.

(h) Mr. Vander Wayen, Professor in Divinity. See his Discussio Limborgianæ responsionis, before the Treatise of Rittangelius de veritate Religionis Christianæ.

(A) Agreeable to his Birth.] The Family of Lubieniezki is very noble. The Person we speak of, was related in the Fourth degree to the House falling again into the Hands of the Poles in the Year 1657. he followed the Swediſh Garriſon together with Two other Socinians, to ſupplicate the King of Sweden that the Unitarians, who had put themſelves under his Protection, might be comprehended in the Amneſty, by the Peace that was to be concluded with Poland. He arrived at [illegible] the 7th of October, 1657. and was very well received by the King of Sweden. He eat at his Majeſty's Table; an Honour this Prince had done him before at [illegible]cow he got into the Acquaintance of ſome Swediſh Lords, in ſpite (B) of the Oppoſition of the Lutheran Divines, and diſcourſed of his Religion on ſeveral Occaſions. 'Tis ſaid too, that he was favour'd with a (C) Revelation, during the Siege of Stetin. He happened to be at Oliva while the Treaty of Peace was carrying on there, and had the Mortification to ſee the Unitarians excluded out of the Amneſty granted to other who were not Catholicks. Seeing himſelf thus deprived of the Hopes of returning into Poland, he bent his courſe towards Copenhagen; he arrived there the 28th of November, 1660. and endeavour'd to obtain of the King a Place of Retreat for his Brethren, who had been Baniſhed out of Poland. The Prince expreſs'd (D) a great Conſideration for him; but as this could not conclude in an Eſtabliſhment for that Sect, our Gentleman returned into Pomerania [a], and there made all the Motions he could in favour of his Party. His Adverſaries not ſuffering him to reſt, he was obliged to quit Stetin, and betake himſelf to Hamburgh, whither he ordered his Family the Year following [b]. He there frequently diſcourſed with Queen Chriſtina, upon the Subject of Religion, in preſence of ſome Princes. The Second Voyage he made to the Court of Denmark was favourable enough to him: The Magiſtrates of Friderichsburg conſented that the Unitarians ſhould abide in their Town, and have the Domeſtick Exerciſe of their Religion. But by the Endeavours of the Lutheran Superintendent, the Duke of Holſtein gave 'em Orders, ſome days after, to depart. Lubi-

[a] He arrived at Stetin the 1ſt of June, 1661.

[b] The Year 1661.

(a) This is wrote in 1695.

(b) Vita Stanisl. Lubieniecii, pag. 1.

of Sobieski, which at preſent Reign (a) ſo gloriouſly in Poland. (b) Secum ſolebat ad Comitia alioſque conventus Regni Nobilium ducere, vel mittere; notitiaque virorum in patria inſignium habere, omnibus iis imbuere qua & Chriſtianum & Polonia Regni indigenam decebant Nobilem, quippe qui ad Sereniſſimi Regis Poloniæ, qui hodie tanta cum gloria regnat, familiam quarto conſanguinitatis gradu remotus, pertinuerit. Andrew Lubieniezki appeared much at Court, when having imbib'd the Doctrine of the Unitarians, he reſolved to Sacrifice his Fortune to the Profeſſion of this Sect. He ingaged in it in ſuch a manner, that having exerciſed the Office of Deacon, he took upon him that of Miniſter, which he exerciſed in ſeveral Places at his own Expence. He died in 1623. about 72 years of age (c). He had Two Brothers who followed his Example; they renounced the Favour of their Prince to be Socinian Miniſters. One was called Staniſlaus, and the other Chriſtopher; the former died in 1633. having lived about 75 years, (d) the other died a Cracow, in 1624. and (e) left a Son called Chriſtopher, who was a Socinian Miniſter at Cracow and at Lublin, and died in the year 1648. (f) He was the Father of him who is the ſubject of this Article.

(c) Bibliotheca Antitrinitar. pag. 89.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Ibid. pag. 90.

(f) Ibid. pag. 142.

(B) In ſpite of the oppoſition of the Lutheran Divines.] 'Tis no wonder that the Swediſh Lords had more Complaiſance for our Socinian Miniſter, than the Miniſters of the Confeſſion of Augsburgh; for 'tis their Buſineſs, and not that of Courtiers, to take care that Hereſy does not ſpread its Poyſon, ne quid Religio detrimenti capiat. It was therefore a natural Conſequence that Lubieniezki ſhould be oppoſed by the Miniſters of the Confeſſion of Augsburgh, whilſt Perſons of Quality paid him Civilites. (g) Cum in Pomeraniâ commoraretur Tractatus pacis expectans, in Magnatum Sueciæ familiaritatem facile venit, aliorum antea contractam amicitiam renovavit, confirmavit, commercium cum iis litterarum habuit, ubique teſtimonium veritati, Rege Principibuſque ultro laceſſentibus, perhibuit. Non defuerunt præſertim Stetini Lubieniecio adverſarii, quorum odia Theologica expertus eſt, illaque Concionatores, etiam ad rudem plebeculam, propagare conabantur, inter quos primarius fuit Johannes Micrelius Vir Stetini celebris. Similia quoque Stralſundi expertus eſt noſter, ſimilia tamen ubique veritati dare teſtimonia non neglexit.

(g) Vita Lubieniecii, Fol. 3. verſo.

(C) Favour'd with a notable Revelation.] There is no Sect but, in ſome meaſure, aſcribes to it ſelf extraordinary and miraculous Graces. Here is an Example of it: Our Lubieniezki was at Elbing, whilſt the Troops of the Emperor and Brandenburgh beſieged Stetin. He had Two weighty Reaſons to induce him to pray earneſtly to God, that the Siege might be raiſed; for his Wife and Children were in Stetin; and a Swediſh Count had promiſed to turn Socinian, if Lubieniezki could by his Prayers prevail, that this Town ſhould not be taken. This Miniſter, moved by [illegible] of his Family, and by the Hopes of gaining an illuſtrious Proſelyte, ſpent Three Weeks in Faſting and Prayer, after which he went to wait upon the Count, and aſſur'd him, that the Town ſhould not be taken. The Count, and they who were with him, look'd on it as the Effects of a Delirium ſince Lubieniezki had no ſooner left 'em, but he fell ſick; but when at Six days End it was known that the Siege was really raiſed, the Count was much ſurprized; for no body could tell Lubieniezki the News he had declared. The Count was challenged upon his Promiſe, but he anſwered, that having inquired of God, whether he ſhould do well to embrace this Miniſter's Religion; God had confirm'd him in the Confeſſion of Augsburgh. To ſhew whether I have been a Faithful Tranſlator, or have romanced the Story, I ſhall ſet down the Words of the Original: (h) Accidit——ut Comes Slippenbachius polliceretur [illegible]aniſlai noſtri Religionem amplecti, modo ipſe [illegible]precibus obtineret, ut Stetinum urbs non ſatis munita nec rebus ad obſidionem toleradam neceſſariis inſtructa, de cujus liberatione propterea deſperabant, liberaretur ab hoſtibus. Lubieniecius imprimis ſuorum miſeriâ motus, tribus hebdomadibus & precibus ad Deum ardentibus & jejunio frequenti conſumptis, veniens ad Comitem, urbem extra periculum eſſe affirmavit, bonoque eos eſſe animo juſſit. Comes adſentatoſque inſanire eum putabant, præſertim quod ab iis reverſus, in morbum incideris. Ejus vero aſſertio poſt ſex dies literis Stetino liberato datis confirmata, graviter pertervefecit Comitem. Id enim temporis Lubieniecius à nemine certus hac de re fieri potuit. Promiſſum cum Lubieniecitus, pro ſua cum Comite familiaritate, aliquando repoſceret, dixit ille, ſeſe in genua procubuiſſe, Deumque oraſſe patefaceret ſibi num Religio Lubieniecii ſuſcipienda eſſet, nec ne, ſed à Deo in confeſſione Auguſtanâ confirmatum eſſe.

(h) Fol. 4.

(D) The King of Denmark expreſs'd a great Conſideration for him.] Lubieniezki kept a great Correſpondence by Letters, which was of ſingular Advantage to him, and introduced him to the Company of great Men, who were glad to underſtand by his means many Particulars relating to other Countries. The King of Denmark, to whom (i) ſome of his Accounts had been read, was ſo pleaſed with 'em, that he beſtowed a Place upon Lubieniezki, which was to copy for his Majeſty Letters he received, for which he was to have an annual Penſion (k). This Prince declared to [illegible] privately, that he could grant the Unitarians a Settlement at Altona only by Connivance. He never ſaw him at Court, but he call'd to him

(i) Quæ etiam (relationes) [illegible] varias [illegible] Regi [illegible] ſermoni [illegible]ctæ, officium illas Regi perſcribendi ipſi peperunt. Ibi. fol. 4. verſo.

(k) Oblatum eſt à Rege honorarium, rogatuſque ut quæ in Europa geruntur per literas aulæ regiæ referret, certus de annuo Regis ſalario. Ibid.

Lubienietzki disputed the Ground (E) along time with the Hamburg Ministers: At last the Magistrates gave him punctual Orders to depart. He was then sick, and promised to obey 'em; but he died some Days after (F) very devoutly. He was Poysoned. His Two Daughters died of the same Poyson the 16th of May, 1675. He had time to lament 'em in Verse; for he died not till the 18th of the same Month. He was buried at Altena, notwithstanding the Opposition (G) of the Lutheran to hear him discourse of Matters of Religion; which exposed the Polish Minister to Envy, it being feared that the King of Denmark would embrace Arrianism. Solebat Rex, quotiescunque Lubieniecium in Aulâ conspexit, relictis cæteris, cum propius ut accederet compellare, & de Religionis capitibus imprimis colloqui. Quæ res invidiam etiam creavit Lubieniecio, timentibus Theologis, ne Rex fieret Arianus (a). This Prince set his Confessor and our Lubienietzki to dispute, and assisted at it. Cum M. Erico Gravio Aulico concionatore & confessionario suo Rex eum commisit, ipseque disputationi adfuit (b). He endeavour'd to prevail with the Magistrates of Hambourgh, to let him be at quiet; but his Intercession was not potent enough. (c) Cum iterum iterumque instaret, ut antea fecerat, Magistratus, urbeque per nuntios Lubieniecio interdiceret, frustra Secretariatum Regis Poloniæ obtendenti, nihilque proficientibus ejusdem Regis intercessoriis, in lethalem incidit morbum. His Friends had obtained for him the Title of Secretary to the King of Poland, because they hoped that that would oblige the Magistrates of Hambourg, to let him be at peace; but their Hopes were frustrated.

(E) He disputed a long time against the Hambourg Ministers.] They so frequently and instantly sollicited the Magistrate to make Lubienietzki depart, that he received frequent Orders to retire; and 'twas in vain to say, that his Danish Majesty honour'd him with his Protection, or that he was innocent; for he was forced to yield to the Storm (d). However some Years after, he return'd to Hambourgh, believeng no body would think of him more; but he was mistaken: One of the Faculty of Divinity was so vigilant and vehement, as to renew the Instances with the Magistrates; and the People had been so exasperated, by representing Lubienietzki as a publick Pest, that he durst hardly stir out of his Lodgings. (e) Post annos aliquot consilio amicorum, credentium jam de furore remisisse adversarios, ob commoditatem dirigendarum litterarum Hamburgum se contulit cum familia, sed nimis vigilantem expertus est Dominum Edsardii Licentiatum Theologiæ, qui indefesso studio id agit, ut cum collegis suis magistratum incitaret ut Lubieniecius urbe ejiceretur. Dignus qui hic nominetur, gloriatur enim, se authore Lubieniecium cum familia urbe exactum. Imo propter Ministrorum zelum, qui etiam ex cathedrâ in templo cum absente Lubieniecio disputabant, eumque hæreticum, deterrimamque civitatis pestem proclamabant; ut ex Lubieniecii manuscripto colligi potest, quod jam fecerant cùm primâ vice per Hamburgum Hafniam transiret anno 1667. Lubieniecio ante migrationem, domo exire non semper tutum fuit. What the Sieur Edsardius did in this Town, was practiced at Fridericsbourg by the Sieur Reinbobt, who stirred up the Duke of Holstein to banish the Socinian Refugees. (f) His pactis discessit Hafniâ, venitque Fridericopolim, ibique à Magistratu urbis obtinuit ut exules in communionem & sacram & civilem reciperentur, privatumque in ædibus more Polono exercitium Religionis perageretur; quod etiam per literas Fratribus significavit. Lubieniecius in id laboravit, nec sumptibus pepercit & damnum rei familiaris subiit, quo posset eò fratres deducere, deductis succurrere, donec ex urbe secedere jussi sunt à Principe Holsatiæ, quod debent partim Domino Superintendenti Lutherano Joanni Rembotto. Mr. Mollerus witnesses the same thing. Socinianis, says he, (g) ab oppidi Fridrichstadiensis Magistratu, & incolendi istud potestatem, & sacrorum exercitii libertatem, a. 1662. obtinuit Staniſl. Lubienitzius, promachus sectæ istius non incelebris, sed incassum. Sereniſſ. enim Dux Holsato-Gottorpiensis, quo ignaro hæc erat gesta, edicto publico, suasu Johan. Reinbobtii, Theologi audici, promulgato, & civitate ipsa, & ditionibus suis universis, non multo post iisdem interdixit (i). Lubienitzius ipse, quem singulari Rex Daniæ, Frid. III. favore dignabatur, urbe, quam per aliquot lustra, connivente Magistratu, incoluerat, Humburgensi a. 1675. Edzardi & Pastorum ordinariorum instinctu, jussus excedere, antequam obsequi Senatui posset, veneno, cibis, ipsius inmixto, cum biga filiarum d. 18. Maji periit. There is hardly a Catholick or Protestant, but will praise this conduct of the Lutheran Ministers. If you alledge to 'em, that it is expressing too much diffidence of their Cause, they have good Answers ready. They will tell you, that Diffidence is the Mother of Security, and when Jesus Christ promised his Church, that the Gates of Hell should not prevail against her, he meant not to exclude humane means, which are most proper to preserve Orthodoxy: I mean the Edicts of Princes, which stop the Mouth of the Heterodox, and stifle the Knowledge of Objections, which might be made against the Holy Doctrine: If you reply, that after all they behave themselves, as if they had not read the Book (h) of Esdras, in which the force of truth is represented superior to all others, whether that of Wine, or a King, or of Women; and that on the contrary, they believe it unable to subsist in the places where it sways, if it be left exposed to the Attacks of Three or Four Fugitives; they'll answer you, that the Heart of Man is more inclined to ill than good, and that therefore Error is more capable of seducing him, than truth of undeceiving him, so that Christian Prudence does not suffer us to allow Heretics the proposing their Arguments. I question whether there ever was any Subject more fecund in Replies an Answers; it may be turned several ways in every Sense, and hence an Author will maintain to you to Day, that truth need only shew it self to confound Heresie; and to morrow, that if Heresie be suffered to expose its Subtilties, it will quickly corrupt the People. One Day you shall have truth represented as an immoveable Rock, another you shall be told, that it ought not to be hazarded in dispute as being a Rencounter, in which it would dash it self in Pieces with respect to the Hearers. What are we to do (i) in this Volubility of Reasoning? There are some who preserve Truth as they do a piece of China, and seem to be convinc'd, that as it has the Transparency, so it has the Brittleness of Christal (k).

(F) He died very devoutly.] These are the Words of his Historian: (l) Commendato spiritu in manus Jesu salvatoris sui, cui fideliter servierat, excessit è vita: Toto tempore ægrotationis ad extremum ferè halitum, sermones habuit plenos in Deum fiducia & interni gaudii, domesticorum benedictionis, admonitionis, nominis Divini invocationis. It is not said how he was poysoned, but 'tis denied that his Domesticks were guilty of that Action; and a Divine is complained of for blackening them, and imputing this Accident to Lubienietzki's Heresies. (m) Causa morbi fuit venenum, ignotum (n) ubi infusum; non ut confidenter affirmat ad denigrandos Lubieniecii domesticos adversarius ejus Edsardius, (qui hujus infortunii seriem occasione datâ enarrare voluit,) quod vitio religionis Lubieniecii adscribit, non cogitans multos tam ex Lutheranis Reformatisque quam Pontificiis pejori, non tantum simili, fato animam exhalasse, quasi hujus cladis ipsa conjux filiaque occasionem per imprudentiam dedissent. Sed nimis injurius est veritati. Venenum enim ambas filias confecit. Uxor etiam quod tantillum de cibo sumsisset vix à limine mortis revocata. Note that a Socinian Author confesses that Lubienietzki was poysoned by his own Servant-maid (o).

(G) He was buried at Altena notwithstanding the opposition of the Ministers.] We have been just considering the Practice of the established Religions, for they have their State-politicks, as well as temporal Princes. One of the Aphorisms of Ecclesiastical Policy, is always to find some Signs of

(a) Vita Lubieniecii, ib.
(b) Ibid. Fol. 5.
(c) Ibid. fol. penult.
(d) Magistratus Hamburgensis ad importunam Sacerdotum instantiam ut urbe excederet denunciavit, idque Magistratu sæpius repetente, Lubieniecio frustra innocentiam suam & Regis protectionem opponente, ad Regem profectus est Hafniam. Ib. Fol. 6.
(e) Ibid.
(f) Ib. Fol. 5. verso.
(g) Mollerus; Isagoge ad Historiam Chersonesi Cimbricæ, parte 3. pag. 105.
(i) V. Vitam Lubientzii, ejus Historia Reformationis Polonicæ, Freistadii, A. 1685. excusa, præfixam, & Ant. Heimreichii Hist. Eccl. Slesv. l. 4. c. 3. pag. 227, 228.
(h) III. Book of Esdras ch. 3. & 4.
(i) Quo teneam vultus mutantem Protea nodo. Horat. Epist. 1. lib. 1.
(k) See Commentaire Philosophique on the Texte Compel 'em to come in, in the Supplement, pag. 303, 304.
(l) Vita Lubieniecii, Fol. 6. verso.
(m) Ibid.
(n) A little lower the same Author says, Quis autor mortis fuerit non facile divinare, imo ne cui fiat injuria; nec divinare licet.
(o) Veneno ab ancilla subornata à nefariis hominibus è medio sublatus. Histor. Reformat. Polonicæ lib. 3. c. 17. pag. 278.

theran Ministers *. I shall say something (H) of his Writings. He had a great Correspondence by Letters † all over Europe. I forgot to say that he obtained a Retreat ‡ for his Brother at Manheim, a Town of the Elector Palatine, the most Latitudinarian Prince in the World.

LUBIN (Eilhard) born at Westerdeden, in Ammerland, in the [illegible]ty of Oldenburgh, the 24th of March, 1565. and Son to the Minister of the Pl[illegible] studied with very great success at Leipsic, Cologn, Helmstad, Strasbourgh, Jena, M[illegible]rg, and Rostoch. He became a great Critick in the Greek Tongue, could make [illegible] Verses, was an Orator, Mathematician and Divine. He was made Professor of [illegible]etry, in the Universtty of Rostoch, in the Year 1595. and Professor of Divinity Ten years after §. He Publish'd (V) several Books, and one amongst the rest, in which he thought he could (X) explain the [illegible] of Sin by a new Hypothesis. He was attack'd upon it (Y) by some Divines. He Married

* Taken from his Life, printed before his Historia Reformationis Polonicæ, printed in 1685.

† See the Remark D.

‡ In the same Life, Fol. 5. verso.

§ Freher. in theatro pag. 410.

God's Anger in the Death of Hereticks. Tho' it be never so true, that the same kind of Death has been common with them and the Orthodox; yet that signifies nothing, it must nevertheless be said, that God has manifested a most particular Judgment in the Catastrophe (a) of their Lives. The Reflections that are grounded on this Foundation, fortify the Persuasion of the Orthodox, and give 'em a greater Aversion to Heresie, which is well worth the trouble that's taken in it. Another Aphorism, or State Policy, is to brand a Heretick's Corps with some Infamy. The Hambourgh Divines did not forget this; tho' they could not prevent this Unitarian Minister's being buried in Altena Church, they at least hindered the Masters of the Schools, attended with their Scholars, from assisting, according to custom, at the Funeral. (b) Fu[illegible] teravium Hamburgo deductum legitimo prohibuissent Concionatores sepulcro, nisi jam in templo Altenaviensi emptum fuisset; nihil tamen omiserunt quo impedire possent, quod potuerunt effecerunt, ne, ut ibi moris est, in exsequiis Scholarum Rectores cum discipulis funus comitarentur. Sit ipsis benignior Deus quam illi fuerint proximo suo, ob Religionem duntaxat & Conscientiam gravissimè vexato. The Two Aphorisms before-mentioned, and some others which might be added to 'em, are of so great use, that we can't but praise the Prudence of those who imploy 'em. They are means so proper to cherish the Faith of the People, and prevent 'em from falling off from the Body, that the best managed Arguments, and subtillest Books of Controversy have not half the Vertue. The Taste and Capacity of the Vulgar must be suited to, that's to say, recourse must be had to machnal Impressions, which excite the Passions. If all Men were Philosphers, there would be no need of any thing but good Arguments; but in the State Societies are in, something else besides Reason is necessary to maintain 'em, and to preserve the Preheminence they have once acquired.

(a) This was what had been published of Luther, & Calvin.

(b) Vita Lubieniecii sub finem.

(H) I shall say something of his Writings.] He writ several Books, but most of 'em were never printed. You'll find the Titles of 'em in the Unitarian Bibliotheque, (c) the most considerable of those that have been published, is his (d) Theatrum Cometicum, divided into Three Parts, quarum prima continet communicationes de cometis anno 1664. & 1665. cum viris per Europam clarissimis habitas, eorumque Observationes tabulis æneis expressas. Secunda est historia Cometarum à diluvio ad annum Christi 1665. Historia Universalis synopsin quandam continens. Tertia agit de significationibus Cometarum scitis quorundam amicorum objectionibus, responsionibus autoris, & judiciis virorum clarissimorum. The Editors of it played some Tricks, which obliged (e) the Author to take a Journey into Holland. He was engaged in the History of the Reformation of Poland; but died before the Book was finished. What was found of it amongst his Papers, was printed in Holland, in 1685, in 8vo. The Printers have committed several Faults in that Work, and few things are found in it, which bespeak the last Hand of the Author.

(c) Bibliotheca Antitrinitar. pag. 165. & seq.

(d) Printed at Amsterdam, 1667. in Fol.

(e) Eodem anno Hollandiam abire coactus est, ob iniquitatem & versutiam eorum per quos Theatrum Cometicum imprimi curavit. Vita Lubien. Fol. 6.

(V) He published several Books.] These are the Titles of the chief of 'em: Antiquarius, sive priscorum & minus usitatorum vocabulorum brevis & dilucida interpretatio, ordine alphabetico digesta, in 12o and in 8vo. Clavis Græcalingua, sive vocabula Latino-Græca, in 12o and in 8vo. He published Anacreon, Juvenal and Persius, with Notes; Horace and Juvenal with a Paraphrase; the Anthologia with his Latin Version, and the Epistolæ veterum Græcorum Græcè & Latinè. Commentaries upon St. Paul's principal Epistles. Monotessaron, sive Historia Evangelica ex 4. Evangelistis in unum corpus redacta (f). His Latin Verses are in the Three Tomes of the delitiæ poetarum Germanorum. We shall [illegible] in the following Remark the Title of some [illegible] of his Works.

(f) Taken from Paulus Freherus in theatro, pag. 410.

(X) In which he thought he could explain the Origin of Sin by a new Hypothesis.] He established Two co-eternal Principles, not Body and Vacuum, as Epicurus, but God and Nothing; God in Quality of good Principle, and Nothing in Quality of evil Principle. He added, that Sin was nothing but a Tendency towards nothing, and that Sin was necessary, that the Nature of [illegible] might be known. He applied to this Nothing, all that Aristole had said of the first Matter (g). 'Tis not hard to perceive that all this is chimerical, and wholly unable to lessen the Difficulties about the Origin of Evil; for who is so stupid as not to see, that nothing is not capable of producing any thing, either as an Efficient Cause or a Passive Subject, and 'tis as impossible for Sin to proceed from Nothing, as it is for the Sinner: Consequently it is as necessary to give a positive Cause to the one as the other. 'Tis no wonder then, that this Hypothesis of Lubin shou'd not pass. The Professor Grawerus, who confuted it, had no hard Task on't. He had the Suffrages of Mylius, Hutterus, (h) Piscator, Schlusselburgus, Major, and Petræus, and many others (i).

(g) Taken from the memorabilia Eccles. sæculi XVII. lib. 1. cap. 32. pag. 109, 110.

(h) Professor at Jena, & quite a different Ma[illegible] from the [illegible] taught at Herborn.

(i) Ibid. They are Hieronymus Kromajer in hist. Eccl. 1649. it. Theologia positivo-polemica 296. pag.

(Y) He was Attack'd upon it by some Divines.] I'll give Mr. Baillet's acco[illegible] it. "(k) Eilhard Lubin —— had com[illegible] Book more than Metaphysical upon th[illegible]gin and Nature of Sin, in which he sufficiently discover'd himself to be of the Number of the Lutherans of the old Stamp, concerning Election, Reprobation, Justification, and the Liberty of Man, &c. His Book was printed at Rostoch, in the Dutchy of Mecklenbourgh, in 1596, and re-printed in the same Town Four Years after, in 8vo and in 12o, with the Title of Phrosporus, de prima causa, & natura mali Tractatus Hypermetaphysicus, in quo multorum gravissima dubitationes tolluntur. Grawer —— made an Outcry at Lubin's Phosphorus, as if it had been some strange Comet. He accused him of running into the most exorbitant Paradoxes, and wrote against him a little after. Lubin answered him, to let him see that his Accusations were pure Calumnies, and printed a New Book at Rostoch, in the Year 1600. with the Title of Apologeticus quo Alb. Graw. calumniis respond. &c. which was re-printed in 1605, in 4to in the same Town. Grawer hereupon was obliged to make his own Defence, [illegible] he did in the Anti-Lubin, printed at [illegible]rg, in 1606. in 4to. with the Title of [illegible] Lubinus, sive, Elenchus Paradoxorum Lubini & Emblematum Calvinisticorum, &c. De prima causa, & natura mali. This was only an Answer to Lubin's Phosphorus, but Grawer made another to it [illegible] Apologetick, which was printed by way [illegible]endix, with the Anti-Lubin, under the [illegible] Responsio Ad elumben Lubini Apologeticum. I don't know whether Lubin appealed to the Divines of the Confession of Augsbourg, against Grawer's ill Treatment, and whether with that Intention he writ the Book intitul[illegible] ried (Z) twice, and died the 2d of June, 1621. after Ten Months Sickneſs of a Quartan Ague.

‘ Tract[illegible]

LUCILIUS (Caius) a Roman Knight, and Latin Poet, was Born at Sueſſa (A) in the Country of the Aurunci in Italy, towards the Beginning of the Seventh Century of Rome. He bore (B) Arms under Scipio Africanus in the Numantine War, and had a great ſhare in the Friendſhip (C) of this famous General, and in that of Lælius. He compoſed Thirty Books of Satyrs, in which he cenſured by Name (D) and in a Cutting manner, ſeveral Perſons of Quality. Some will have him to be the firſt Author of this ſort of Poetry; but others are of a different Opinion. He uſed to ſay, that he deſired to meet with Readers who were neither too (F) ignorant, nor too learned. It

(a) Eu Prebero ubi ſupra.

(b) Auſon. Epiſt. 15. v. 9. pag. m. 626.

† Conſult the Remark E.

(c) Juvenal. Sat. 1. v. 20.

(d) Briet. de Poëtis Latin. p. 6. He was deceived by Voſſius de Poët. Lat. pag. 12.

(e) Cluver. Ital. Antiq. l. 3. c. 8. p. 589. Epitomes Bunonis.

(f) Britannicus, Barnabius, [illegible] Africano bello Numantino. Briet. ibid.

(b) Voll. Paterculi. lib. 2. cap. 9.

(i) Scalig. Animadverſ. in Euſebium, n. 1914. p. m. 149.

(k) Scipio Africanus & Lælius [illegible] familiares & amici Lucilio, ut quodam tempore Lælio circumlectos triclinii ſugienti, Lucilius ſuperveniens eum obtorta mappa quaſi feriturus ſequeretur. Vetus Commentator Horatii.

(l) Horat. Satira 1. lib. 2. v. 62.

'Tractatio Theologica de cauſa pe[illegible] Theologos 'Auguſtanæ Confeſſionis in Ger[illegible] which was 'Printed the Year following at [illegible], in 4to; 'but I can affirm that all theſe Works have not 'hindered Poſterity from believing him a better 'Humaniſt than Divine.

(Z) He married twice.] His firſt Wife, Widow to James Backmeiſter, Profeſſor of the Hebrew Tongue at Roſtock, lived Seven Years with him, and brought him no Children. The ſecond gave him Nine. She was Daughter to William Laurenberg, a famous Pl[illegible]n (a).

(A) Was born at [illegible] in the Country of the Aurunci, towards the [illegible] ning of the Seventh Century of Rome.] Euſebius's Chronicle places the Birth of Lucilius, in the 1ſt. Year of 158th. Olympiad, which is the 605th. of Rome. Auſonius ſpeaks of this Poet, when he ſays, (b) Rudes Camenæ qui Sueſſæ pravenis: Juvenal alſo mentions him [illegible] Verſe, (c) Per quem magnus equ[illegible] Auruncæ [illegible] alumnus. And therefore that [illegible] cilius's [illegible] try which I give him, and not Sueſſa Pometia, as Father Briet will have it. C. Lucilius, ſays he (d) Romanus Eques ex Sueſſa Pometia urbe Auruncorum non procul à Pomptina palude ortus fuit. If he had conſulted Cluverius, he would have found Sueſſa Pometia in the Country of the Volſci, and not of the Aurunci. Cluverius diſtinguiſhes two Towns, called Sueſſa; one (e) Sirnamed Pometia, was in the Country of the Volſci, the other ſirnamed Aurunca, was in Campania, beyond the Liris. Some (f) Commentators on Juvenal, by a notable Blunder, ſay, that Lucilius was born at Arunia, or Aurunca, a Town of the Rutuli. The Time has been worſe miſtaken than the Place of his Birth, by Father Briet. Natus, ſays he, Olymp. cxxxviii. obiit Olymp. cxlix. ætatis 46 Neapoli publico elatus funere, ut ſcribit Hieronymus. St. Jerome does not ſay this; and if he had, this Jeſuit would have c[illegible], or forſaken him, ſince according to him, the Poet Lucilius bore Arms in the N[illegible] War, Fifty Years later than the 140th. O[illegible] piad.

(B) He bore Arms——in the Numantine War.] Vellejus Paterculus tells us this. Celebre, ſays he (b), & Lucilii nomen fuit, qui ſub P. Africano Numantino bello eques militaverat. Quo quidem tempore juvenis adhuc Jugurtha ac Marius ſub eodem Africano militantes in iiſdem caſtris didicere quæ poſtea in contrariis facerent. It muſt be confeſſed, that this does not well agree with Euſebius's Chronicle; for when Scipio made War with the Numantines, Lucilius by this Chronicle was but Fifteen Years Old. Did any one liſt in the Cavalry before he took on the toga Virilis? Scaliger (i) obſerves, that the Fathers ſometimes brought their Sons to the Army, before the taking this Garment; but this was not what they called militarem equitem. Yet this is what Paterculus affirms of our Lucilius.

(C) A great Share in the Friendſhip of Scipio and Lælius. They honoured him with ſuch a Familiari[illegible] to droll and play the Fool with him. See H[illegible] Scholiaſt (k), upon theſe Words of the 1[illegible] Satyr of the 2d. Book.

Quin, ubi ſed vulgo, & ſcena, in ſecreta remorant
Virtus Scipiada, & mitis ſapienti a Lælio
Nugari cum illo, & diſcincti ludere, dum[illegible]
Decoqueretur olus, ſoliti. . . ..

(D) In which he cenſured by Name——ſeveral Perſons of Quality.] Let's hear what Horace has ſaid of it.

(l) Quid cum eſt Lucilius auſus
Primus in hunc operis componere carmina morem,
Detrahere & pellem, nitidus qua quiſque per ora
Cederet, introrſum turpis? num Lælius, aut, qui
Ingenio offenſi? aut læſo doluere Metello?
Famoſiſque Lupo cooperto verſibus? atqui
Primores populi arripuit, populumque tributim,
Scilicet uni æquus virtuti, atque ejus amicis.

Perſius (m) witneſſes the ſame thing in fewer Words. See Juvenal, who relates how Lucilius made the guilty tremble with his Pen, as much as if he had purſued 'em with Sword in Hand.

Enſe (n) velut ſtricto, quoties Lucilius ardens
Infremuit, rubet auditor cui frigida mens eſt
Criminibus, tacita ſudant præcordia culpa.

(E) The firſt Author of Satyr;——others are of a different Opinion.] They who make him the Inventer of it, ground themſelves on theſe Words of Horace: Quid cum eſt Lucilius auſus PRIMUS in hunc operis componere carmina morem? alledge alſo a Paſſage of Quintilian, and theſe Words of Pliny: (p) Si hoc Lucilius qui PRIMUS condidit ſtyli naſum, dicendum ſibi putavit. Quintilian's Teſtimony is thus: (q) Satira quidem tota noſtra eſt, in qua PRIMUS inſignem laudem adeptus eſt Lucilius. But notwithſtanding theſe Authorities, Mr. Dacier has maintained with greater Probability, that Lucilius had only given this kind of Poetry a juſter Turn, and ſcattered more Salt in it than his Predeceſſors Ennius and Pacuvius (r).

(F) He deſired neither too ignorant Readers, nor too learned.] There's ſomething in this Deſire, that diſcovers a deal of good Senſe. Theſe two kinds of Readers, are ſometimes equally formidable; the former ſee not enough, and the latter ſee too much; the one kind has not Senſe enough to underſtand what is good, there's no Juſtice to be expected from him; and there's no concealing from the other what's imperfect. One of Cicero's Interlocutors in the Second Book of the Orator, mentions this Thought of Lucilius, and approved it, and makes Application of it to himſelf; I mean, he deſires the ſame thing. Here's what he ſays. (f) Quod addidiſti tertium vos eos eſſe qui vitam inſuavem ſine his ſtudiis putaretis; id me non modo non hortatur ad diſputandum, ſed etiam deterret. Nam ut Cajus Lucilius homo doctus, & perurbanus dicere ſolebat, ea quæ ſcriberet, neque ab indoctiſſimis, neque ab doctiſſimis legi velle, quod alteri nihil intelligerent, alteri plus fortaſſe quàm ipſe de ſe, quo etiam ſcripſit: Perſium non curo legere. Hic enim fuit, ut noramus, omnium fere noſtrorum hominum doctiſſimus. Lælium Decimum volo, quem cognovimus virum bonum & non illiteratum, ſed nihil ad Perſium. Sic ego, ſi jam mihi diſputandum ſit de his noſtris ſtudiis, nolim equidem apud ruſticos, ſed multo minus apud vos. Ælo enim non intelligi orationem meam, quàm reprehendi. Cicero in another Book, where he ſpeaks in his own Name, declares himſelf to be far from this deſire of Lucilius; he requires the moſt penetrating Readers, and fears no Colours. Nec enim ſays he (t) ut noſter Lucilius recuſabo quo minus omnes mea legant. Utinam eſſet ille Perſinus, Scipio vero, & Quintilius multo etiam magis, quorum ille judicium reformidans, Tarentinis ait ſe, & Conſentinis, & Siculis ſcribere: facete is quidem ſicut alias, ſed neque tam docti tunc erant ad quorum judicium elaboraret, & ſunt illius ſcripta leviora, ut urbanitas ſumma appareat, doctrina mediocris. Ego autem quem timeam lectorem, quum (u) ad te ne Græcis quidem cedentem, in philoſophia audeam ſcribere? He had in another Book mentioned this Thought

(m) Secuit Lucilius urbem Te Lupe, te Muti, & genuinum fregit in illis Perſ. Sat. 1. v. 115.

(n) Juven. Satira 1. v. 165.

(o) Horat. ubi ſupra, v. 48.

(p) Plinius in præfat.

(q) Quintil. inſtit. Orat. lib. 10. c. 1.

(r) See the Preface to the 6th Tome of Mr. Dacier's Horace.

(f) Cicero de Oratore, lib. 2. Fol. m. 72. B.

(t) Id. lib. 1. de finib. circa init.

(u) He ſpeaks to Brutus.

It is not probable he died (G) at Fourty-six years of age, as some affirm. Of all his Works we have only (H) some Fragments of his Satyrs remaining. 'Tis a Misfortune; for if we had all his Works, we should doubtless learn a great many things by 'em. Cicero has (I) contradicted himself about Lucilius's Learning. I don't think Horace cou'd reasonably be blamed (K) for the Judgment he gave of this Satyrist. Pompey, by the Thought of Lucilius, and approved and espoused it, as appears from Pliny's Preface, who after so great an Example, doth himself the Honour to espouse it. Praterea est quadam publica etiam eruditorum rejectio. Utitur illa & M. Tullius, extra omnem ingenii aleam positus, & (quod miremur) per advocatum defenditur. Nec doctissimis: Manium Persium hæc legere nolo, Junium Congum volo. Quod si hoc Lucilius, qui primus condidit stylinasum, dicendum sibi putavit: si Cicero mutandum, præsertim cum de Republica scriberet; quanto nos cautius ab aliquo Judice defendimus? Father Hardouin has expunged Lalium Decimum out of this Passage of Pliny, to incert Junium Longum, agreeably to the Manuscripts. He observes, that Lucilius more than once made use of this Thought, and named one while some Persons, and another while others; and therefore 'tis a mistake, to pretend, that it was Lælius Decimus in Pliny, because this Name is found in Cicero's Second Book, de Oratore. Pliny had not this Passage of Cicero in view, but another in his Book de Republica. See the Margin (a).

(a) Videntur porro hæc afferri ex præfatione Ciceronis in libros suos Plinius respicere se plane mox significat. Inde Luciliani versus, qui trochaicus est, finis citatur, Nec doctissimus, ut subintelligatur, hæc scribo: Quem alter trochaicus integer mox sequatur, Manium Persium hæc legere nolo, Junium Congum velo Ubi metri causa in Manio Persioque iota coit. Harduinus not. in lib. 1. Plinii, n. 4. p. 14.

(b) Cajus Lucilius satyrarum scriptor Neapoli moritur, ac publico funere effertur, anno ætatis 46. Euseb. in Chron. ad ann. 2. Olymp. 169.

(c) Aulus Gellius lib. 2. c. 24.

(d) Nonius voce Eugium cites the epodos hymnos of Lucilius. He cites also his Comedy intituled Nummularia. See Vossius de Poët. Latin. p. 12.

(G) That he died at 46 Years of Age.] Eusebius's Chronicle makes him no Elder, which places his Birth in the first Year of the 158th. Olympiade, and his Death (b) in the 2d. Year of the 169th. which is the 651st. of Rome. Glandorp ought not to be accused of making him 64 Years old; it being a Fault of the Press, which transposing the Figures, gives 64 for 46. Such Faults are common. To prove Eusebius in an Error, we need only consider, that Lucilius has mention'd the Licinian Law, made against the Expences of Feasts, in the 656th. Year of Rome, or thereabouts. Lex deinde Licinia rogata est——Hujus legis Lævius poeta meminit in his verbis, Legem citemus Licini (c). He therefore lived Five or Six Years after the Time 'tis pretended he died at Naples; and if on the other Hand, we consider that he must be born before the 605th. Year of Rome, since he bore Arms before Numantia in the Year 620. We shall find, that Horace might well call him an old Man, without a Figure. 'Tis in the place where he says Lucilius committed all his Secrets to his Books, so that we find in 'em his Life, as in a Votive Table.

——Me pedibus delectat claudere verba
Lucili ritu, nostrum melioris utroque.
Ille velut fidis arcana sodalibus, olim
Credebat libris; neque, si male gesserat usquam
Decurrens alio, neque si bene, quo fit, ut omnis
Votiva pateat veluti descripta tabella
Vita SENIS.

These Words of Horace are in the 1st. Satyr of the 2d. Book.

(H) Of all his Works, we have only some Fragments of his Satyrs remaining.] For Five or Six Words, which remain of his other (d) Pieces, deserve no Consideration, besides, that 'tis not agreed these Pieces were his. See Douza the Son's Notes upon Lucilius's Fragments, at the 99th. Page. Some say, that he writ the Life of the same Scipio Africanus, whose Victories were sung by Ennius. Douza denies it, for a Reason which I think very weak; he takes it from Scipio and Lucilius's living at different times, a very bad proof; for may not a Poet, who lives an Hundred Years hence, write the particular Life of the Prince of Condé, or the Mareschal de Turenne. However, I believe with Douza, that Lucilius wrote the Life of the Scipio Africanus, with whom he intimately conversed. Ejusdem Scipionis, it's Douza the Son speaks in his Notes upon the Fragments of our Poet, at the 98th. Page. Vitam privatam postea descripsit, in quo Pseudoporphyrionem manifesti erroris convincit Pavens meus, qui Lucilium vitam privatam Scipionis, Ennium verò bella descripsisse annotat: ubi male nomina Scipionem inter se confusa. Ennium enim Scipinis majoris res gestas cecinisse constat. Lucilius autem ut ejusdem vitam privatam describerit, ratio temporum plane vetat. Mr. Dacier must have believed this Argument to be good, since he speaks thus: '(e) Lucilius besides his Satyrs, wrote a particular Book, concerning the 'Life of the young Scipio Africanus, Son to Paulus Æmilius, in which he spoke of his Justice 'and Valour. Such as have thought, that Lucilius treated of the great Scipio, and that 'tis he 'Horace mentions here, confound Chronology. 'The great Scipio was dead above Thirty five 'Years before Lucilius was born. If Lucilius had died before Scipio was born, this had been an invincible Confutation of those who attributed to him the History of this Roman General: But to go and confute 'em by this Reason, that he was born Thirty five Years after the Death of this Hero, must proceed from Distraction of Thought. It is not only possible, that this Poet might write the History of Scipio Africanus the Elder, but very probable; and that at the Request of Scipio Africanus, the Younger, his good Friend, who might furnish him with Variety of good Materials. I don't however contradict my self in what I have advanced; how many Things are there not true, which are yet most probable? Lucilius's Fragments were collected with great care by Francis Douza, and published at Leiden with Notes in the Year 1597. They stand greatly in need of being better illustrated by some learned Critick.

(e) Dacier to. 7. p. 27. commenting these Words of Horace, Sat. 1 l. 2. Attamen & justum poteras & scribere fortem Scipiadem ut sapiens Lucilius.

(f) Sunt plurima vera quidem, sed parum credibilia; sicut falsa quoque frequenter verisimilia. Quinctil. lib. 4. cap. 2. pag. m. 182.

(g) With the Horace of Cruquius.

(I) Cicero has contradicted himself about the Learning.] In his Book De Oratore, he acknowledges Lucilius to be a Learned Man; his Words are worth relating. Sed ut solebat C. Lucilius sape dicere homo (b) tibi subiratus, mihi propter eam ipsam causam minus quam villebat familiaris, sed tamen & doctus & perurbanus, sic sentio neminem esse in oratorum numero habendum, qui non sit omnibus iis artibus quæ sunt libero homine digna perpolitus (i). He gives him the same Elogy of Learned, in the 2d. Book (k) of the same Work, but robs him of it in the first Book (l) De Finibus. Quintilian gives it him, without ever retracting. I'll cite him in the following Remark.

(b) That's to say, to Mutius Scevola

(i) Cicero de Orator. lib. 1. Fol. 62. A

(k) See the Remark F.

(l) See the Remark F.

(K) Horace could reasonably be blamed for the Judgment he gave of Lucilius.] The Criticks murmured, and he justified himself. Let's see his Words, which begin with a Criticism, and end with an Apology.

Eupolis, (m) atque Cratinus, Aristophanesque poëta,
Atque alii, quorum comœdia prisca virorum est:
Si quis erat dignus describi, quod malus, aut fur;
Quod mœchus foret, aut sicarius, aut alioqui
Famosus: multa cum libertate notabant.
Hinc omnis pendet Lucilius, hosce secutus;
Mutatis tantùm pedibus, numerisque facetus:
Emunctæ naris, durus componere versus.
Nam fuit hoc vitiosus: in hora sæpe ducentos,
Ut magnum, versus dictabat stans pede in uno:
Cum flueret lutulentus, erat quod tollere velles:
Garrulus, atque piger scribendi ferre laborem:
Scribendi rectè: nam ut multum, nil moror.

(m) Horat. Sat. 4. l. 1.

Now we shall see how he justifies himself.

Nempe

...e Mother's side was (L) Grandson, or rather great Nephew to Lucilius. I shall observe the Faults of Mr. Moreri, and (N) of some other Writers, and particularly (O) a Piece of false Chronology in Stephen Pasquier. There are ancient Verses extant,

(a) Horat. Sat. 10. lib. 1.

Nempe [illegible] incomposito dixi pede currere versus
Lucili : [illegible] tam Lucili fautor inepte est,
Ut non hos [illegible] scatur ? at idem, quod sale multo
Urbem defricuit, charta laudatur eadem.
Nec tamen hoc tribuens, dederim quoque cætera, namsic
Et Laberi mimos, ut pulchra poëmata, miner.

He afterwards answers Lucilius's Censurers concerning the mixing Greek with Latin Words, and professes he does not design to rob him of the Crown so justly due to him.

(b) Ibid. v. 46.

Hoc (b) erat, experta frustrà Varronia Musa,
Atque quibusdam aliis, melius quod scribere possem,
Inventore minor : neque ego illi detrahere ausim
Hærentem capiti multa cum laude coronam.

He demands the same Liberty with respect to Lucilius, which every one takes with respect to the greatest Poets, and which Lucilius himself took with respect to Ennius; and maintains, that if the Author he censures were alive, he would correct his own Works, and write with greater Exactness.

(c) Ibid. v. 50.

At dixi (c) fuere hunc lutulentum, fæpe fluentem
Plura quam [illegible] tollenda relinquendis, age, quæso,
Fu[illegible]nagno doctus reprehendi Homero ?
Nil simile Tragici unquam Lucilius Acti ?
Non videt versus Furi gravitate minores,
Cùm de se loquitur, non ut majore reprensi ?
Quid vetat, & nosmet Lucili scripta legentes
Quærere, num illius, num rerum dura negarit
Versiculos natura magis factos, & euntes
Mollius ? . . . . . .
. . . . . .

(d) Ibid. v. 64.

Fuerit (d) Lucilius, inquam,
Comis & urbanus : fuerit limatior idem,
Quàm rudis, & Græcis intacti carminis auctor,
Quamque Pœtarum seniorum turba : sed ille,
Si foret hoc nostrum fato dilatus in ævum :
Detereret sibi multa : recideret omne, quod ultra
Perfectum traheretur & in versu faciendo
Sæpe caput scaberet : vivos & roderet unguis.

I thought my self obliged to set down all these long Passages, because they acquaint my Reader with Lucilius's Character, and 'tis an uneasiness to be sent out of the Way by References, in reading the Life of a famous Man. Mr. Dacier never gave a better proof his Judgment, than when he declared himself (e) for Horace against Quintilian, 'tis strange, that eloquent Rhetorician should not applaud this Poet's Judgment. His Words will let us see the prodigious Prejudice of many in Lucilius's Favour. (f) Satira quidem tota nostra est, in qua primus insignem laudem adeptus est Lucilius, qui quosdam ita deditos sibi adhuc habet amatores, ut eum non ejusdem modò operis auctoribus, sed omnibus poëtis præferre non dubitent. Ego quantum ab illis, tantum ab Horatio dissentio, qui Lucilium fuisse lutulentum, & esse aliquid quod tollere possis, putat. Nam & eruditio in eo mira, & libertas, atque inde acerbitas, & abunde salis.

(e) On Horace's Sat. 4. l. 2. p. 311. du 7. tome.
(f) Quintil. l. 10. cap. 1. pag. m. 472.
(g) Horat. Sat. 1. l. 2.
(b) Apud Franciscum Douzam, notis in reliquias Lucilii, p. 97. col. 2.

(L) Pompey [illegible] was Grandson, or rather great Nephew to Lucilius.] Porphyrion upon these Words of Horace, (g) quidquid sum ego, quamvis infra Lucilium ingeniumque, observes, that Lucilius was [illegible]ther to Pompey's Grandmother, and consequently his great Uncle by the Mother's side. Acron (i), another old Interpreter of Horace, says that Lucilius was Pompey's Grandfather. This Opinion is less probable than the former, for if Lucilia (i) Pompey's Mother, had been Lucilius's Daughter, I don't think that Velleius Paterculus would have forgotten to mention it. We must therefore believe she was Daughter to Lucilius's Brother, and consequently, that Porphyrion mistakes the true degree of Relation. Thus the learned Antonius (k) Augustinus, and Francis Douza reason and conjecture:

(i) Fuit hic (Pompejus) genitus matre Lucilia stirpis senatoriæ. Paterculus l. 2. c. 29.

(M) I shall observe the Faults of Mr. Moreri.] I. Lucilius was not a Native of Suessa Pometia. II. This Town was not in the Country of the Aurunci. III. 'Tis not certain, that he was the first Satyrist in Latin Verse. Mr. Dacier shews the contrary: See above the Remark E. IV. And he should in no case have pretended, that besides this, he was the Author of a kind of Verse unknown to the Greeks; from Græcis intacti carminis auctor; for if these Words (l) of Horace concern Lucilius, they only ascribe to him the Invention of Satyr. V. But the best Criticks (m) have long since observed, that these Words relate to Ennius, and not to Lucilius. VI. 'Tis not true, that the 169th. Olympiade falls in the 651st. Year of Rome: an Olympiad includes Four Years.

(k) In libro de familiis Romanor. apud Douzam, ib.
(l) Satyr. 10. l. 1. v. 66.
(m) Casaubon & Theodore Marsius. apud Dacier on Horace, to. 6. p. 640.

(N) The Faults of some other Authors.] See above (n) those of Father Briet, Gesner's Abridger is grossly mistaken about Lucilius's Age, where Lucilius, as he calls him, Floruit, says he, (o) secundi belli Punici temporibus: Glandorp [illegible] was of Opinion, that he whom Cicero [illegible] of, as an Author, who desired neither [illegible] ignorant nor too learned Readers, is not the same Lucilius, who composed the Satyrs. 'Tis an Error. Charles Stephen has committed the same Fault. Lloyd and Hofman have adopted it, and moreover pretended, that our Lucilius was Born in the Fifty-third Olympiad, and that he died in the Sixty-ninth, Forty-six years of age; the Absurdity it self is manifest. They cite Quintilian 17. 21. which is a Chimerical Citation.

(n) In the Remark A.
(o) Epit. Biblioth. Gesneri, pag. 550. Edit. 1583
(p) Onomast. pag. 552.

(O) A Piece of false Chronology of Stephen Pasquier.] His Words are these. This it was (q) that the Advocates of Rome sported their Wits with most, when they had a mind to awaken their Judges. See this Piece of Cicero in his Oration for Milo. Est enim hæc, Judices, non scripta, sed nata lex, &c. You will find it may compare with the finest Verses of all Antiquity; which afterwards grew into such an Affectation and Abuse, that Lucilius, a Satyrical Poet ridiculed it very handsomly in one of his Satyrs whose Verses Aulus Gellius relates in the Thirteenth Book of his Lucubrations (r). Garasse has not pardoned him this Mistake; let's hear him. (s) " Where I say, Mr. Pasquier ' has very handsomly expos'd himself to the ' Laughter of all Men, moderately versed in ' Chronology; for how con'd Lucilius, who ' was about an Hundred Years before Cicero, ri- ' dicule what was done an Hundred Years after his ' Death? 'Tis just as if I should say, speaking ' of that nice, polished, and accurate Poetry, ' which came in with Berthaud and Malherbe, ' that Marot and St. Gelais were disgusted so ' much with it, as to ridicule and satyrize it ' in their Writings. Such was the sufficiency ' of that old Blade mention'd by Severinus ' Boetius in his Book de Disciplina Scholarium, ' who asked whether Æneas was not Julius ' Cæsar's Wife. Such was the Impertinence of ' that Minister noted by Horace Dolabella, in ' the 6th Chapter of his Apology, who being ' asked, Uter fuerit prior secundum Annales Ec- ' clesiæ Constantinus an Nero? came off very ' ingeniously by these Words of our Saviour, ' Non est vestrum nosse tempora vel momenta, ' Acts 1. Verse 7. And yet I believe these ' Men, tho' very ignorant, if they had seen the ' difference of Style, between Lucilius and Cicero,

(q) That's to say, [illegible] similiter desinentia.
(r) Pasquier, Recherches de la France, liv. 7. chap. 1. p. m. 565.
(s) Garasse Recherche des Recherches, pag. 565.

tant, which ſhew what a mighty Hazard a Man run, who ventur'd to ſpeak ill of Lucilius's Poems (P).

LUCRECE,

'cero, would never have called in queſtion, 'Whether Lucilius had been before Cicero; as a 'Man need not be very much verſed in Chro- 'nology, to be able to ſay a Hundred Years 'hence that Alain Charretier, Froiſſard, and 'Monſtrelet, were before Monſieur du Vair; 'and it would be a horrid Ignorance, to ſay 'that Alain Charretier, or Monſtrelet, improved 'the Style, the Diction and Figures of Amiot, or 'du Vair. 'Twas hard to make a good An- ſwer to this Cenſure; and therefore we find, that the learned Paſquier's Sons defended him but ill upon this Point: Here's what they an- ſwer, (a) Garaſſe ſays that Lucilius was an Hundred Years before Cicero, which is falſe for Cicero and Pompey lived at the ſame time; but Lucilius was Pompey's Uncle: So that it is eaſie to judge, that our Calumniator is vaſtly out in his Computation. In the ſecond place he ſays, this might be known by the difference of Style. This Ignorance is more inſupportable than the former; for Pliny expreſly obſerves, that primus fuit Lucilius qui ſtylum acuiſſe dicitur. Horace calls him emunctæ naris, and ſays he made Two Hundred Verſes in an Hour, and Quintilian calls him principem Satyricorum, inſomuch that Adrian the Emperor prefer'd him before Virgil. Obſerve, I pray, into how many Abſurdities a Man runs from the Itch of Criti- zing, There's nothing good in this Reply, but the Remark on the Hundred Years Garaſſe puts betwixt Cicero and Lucilius. This Jeſuit pre- tending to Criticize one Fault in Chronology, falls into another; for 'tis not true, that Lu- cilius was an Hundred Years before Cicero, he died ſome Years after Cicero was born. It was eaſie for Paſquier's Apologiſts to vouch this; but inſtead of good Proofs, they were con- tented to alledge, that Lucilius was Pompey's Uncle, Cicero's Cotemporary. They were miſta- ken; Lucilius (b) paſſes for the Grandfather, or Great Uncle to Pompey. They are groſly out, to pretend that there is no Diſtinction to be obſerved betwixt Lucilius and Cicero's Style; whereas they differ more than Mr. Flechier, and Clement Marot. To be ſoon convinced of it, we need only caſt an Eye on the Frag- ments of the Latin Satyriſt, and upon Cicero at the bare opening his Book. To oppoſe to Father Garaſſ, Pliny's (c) and Quintilian's (d) Words, both ill cited, is to pretend that be- cauſe Regnier was the firſt who writ good French Satyrs, his Style differs not from that of Mr. Patru, or Mr. Deſpreaux. Horace's emunctæ naris proves nothing; this may be ſaid of Clement Marot, and Regnier, with a great deal of juſtice, and yet What difference is there between their Language, and Mr. Pa- tru's, and Boileau's? Conſider Horace's whole Verſe, emunctæ naris DURUS componere Ver- ſus. Has not he been forced miſerably to mu- tilate his Teſtimony, that he might be able to make uſe of it? If he had given it intire, Would he not have furniſhed Arms to his Ad- verſaries? But that proof from Horace is much leſs ridiculous than that which follows, and is taken from the ſame Author. Lucilius, as Ho- race ſays, made Two Hundred Verſes in an Hour, therefore he writ as well as Cicero. What a monſtrous Conſequence is here, and more amazing ſtill, when we conſider that Ho- race relates this as a Fault of Lucilius (e), and immediately compares this Author's Poems to muddy Streams! the laſt Proof which Ste- phen Paſquier's Apologiſts bring, is no better than the others. It is founded upon a falſe Fact, the Conſequence whereof would make a- gainſt 'em, if it were true. 'Tis not to Lu- cilius, but to Ennius, Adrian gave the Prefer- ence before Virgil; and all that this proves, is, that Ennius's Style was more ruſty and mouldy; for this was Hadrian's Taſte, as his Hiſtorian obſerves. (f) Amavit Præterea genus dicendi ve- tuſtum . . . . . Ciceroni Catonem, Virgilio En- nium, Salluſtio Caliun prætulit.

(a) Defenſe pour Etienne Paſquier contre les impoſtures & calom- nies de Franſois Garaſſe. pag. 791, 792.

(b) See the Remark L.

(c) Pliny has ſaid, primus condicit ſtyli na- ſum, and not primus fuit Lucilius qui ſtylum acuiſſe dicitur.

(d) Quin- tilian ſays in ſatyra primus inſignem laudem adeptus eſt Lucilius, and not ſo, fuit princeps ſatyrico- rum.

(e) Nam fuit hoc vitioſus in hora ſæpe ducentos, Ut magnum ver- ſus dictabat, ſtan- pede in uno. Quum flueret LUTU- LENTUS Horatius, Sat. 4. l. 1. v. 9.

(f) Spar- tian. in Hadriano, cap. 16. p. m. 158. tom. 1.

(P) Ran a mighty Hazard, who ventured to ſpeak ill of Lucilius's Poems.] It's a long time ago ſince I read what I am going to copy. 'Our little Doctor does (g) much the ſame. 'And indeed a Man of that Humour, is in a 'fair way of being pounded in a Mortar (I mean as 'far as the Pen and Tongue goes) for we don't 'live in an Age of ſo much Liberty, as was 'that of theſe young Romans of Quality, who 'walked the Streets all Day, concealing long 'Whips under their Garments, to chaſtiſe the 'Inſolence of thoſe who did not approve the 'Poet Lucilius, if they had the Misfortune to 'meet 'em in their way (h). I° fancy'd in reading this over, that ſince Coſtar cited no- body, he did not know the Source of this matter, and I put my ſelf upon the enquiry. I light of it in ſome Verſes which have paſs'd for Ho- race's, and have been prefix'd (i) to one of his Satyrs in ſome Editions. Mr. Dacier has inſerted 'em in his Notes upon this Poet; he cites all he has ſaid upon it; by which we ſhall ſee, that Mr. Coſtar magnifies Objects, and that his Imbroidery is too much raiſed.

(g) That's to ſay, Ge- rac like Diogenes' acts in e- very thing counter to the People.

(b) Coſtar, Suite de la defenſe de Voiture, pag. 40.

(i) La 10. du 1. livre,

'(k) We may ſay of Lucilius, that he 'had the good fortune of ſome Women, who 'with very little Beauty have created violent 'Paſſions. Amongſt his Partiſans, there were 'ſome ſo extravagant as to run along the Streets, 'with Whips under their Garments, to laſh ſuch 'as durſt ſpeak ill of Lucilius's Verſes.

(k) Dacier ſur la 10. ſatyre du 1. livre d'Horace p. 603. du 6. tome.

'Lucili, quam ſis mendoſus, teſte Catone
'Defenſore tuo pervincam, qui male factos
'Emendare parat verſus. Hoc lenius ille
'Eſt quo vir melior. Longe ſubtilior ille
'Qui multum puer & loris & fœnibus udis
'Exornatus ut eſſet opem qui ferre Poëtis
'Antiquis poſſet contra faſtidia noſtra,
'Grammaticorum Equitum doctiſſimus.

'I'll ſhew you Lucilius, how full they are of 'Faults, even by the Teſtimony of Cato, your 'great Patron. He has a Deſign to poliſh your 'ill turned Verſes. As he is a better Man 'than moſt others, he has taken the gentleſt 'and ſofteſt Method. But he is not quite ſo politick 'as that learned Knight, who armed himſelf with 'good Strops and moiſtned Cords, to revenge our 'diſlikes of the ancient Poets. Theſe Verſes 'have been placed at the Beginning of this 'Satyr, as Horace's Proem to it. Caſterus Lil- lius, and Gyraldus, have been deceived by 'em. 'Tho' they are not Horace's, yet they are not 'bad, and they ſerve to ſhew, that Lucilius's 'Verſes were not always univerſally eſteemed.

(l) And

LUCRETIA, a Roman Lady, famous for her Beauty and (A) Noble Extraction, but much more for her Vertue, was married to Collatinus, a Relation to Tarquin King of Rome. Every one knows the Reaſon that induced her to kill her ſelf. I ſhall however relate the Circumſtances of that Tragical Hiſtory. Tarquin not being able to make himſelf Maſter of the City Ardea, as ſoon as he thought he ſhould, reſolved on a formal Siege. The Siege was drill'd on a long Time, and did not hinder the young Princes from taking their Pleaſure pretty often. Sextus happening to give an Entertainment to his two Brothers and Collatinus, the Diſcourſe fell upon the Fair Sex; and a Diſpute aroſe, not about the Beauty of their Miſtreſſes, as it would in our Age, but the Beauty of their Wives. Each maintain'd that his was handſomeſt; the Controverſy growing hot, Collatinus propoſ'd a Means of deciding it. To what end are ſo many Words, ſays he, we may in a little Time have viſible Proofs of my Lucretia's Pre-eminence; let's take Horſe, and go and ſurprize our Wives; the Determination of the Queſtion will by this means be eaſier, than if they were prepared to receive us. Wine having heated 'em, they readily embrac'd the Propoſition, and rode to Rome full ſpeed. They found * Tarquin's Daughters-in-Law at Table, enjoying themſelves with ſome Perſons of their own Age. They afterwards went to Collatium; and, though it was very late, they found Lucretia, in the midſt of her Maids, buſily employed about ſome Wollen Manufacture. They agreed, that ſhe excell'd all the Competitors, and return'd to the Camp. Sextus, tranſported with a Paſſion for her, return'd a few Days after to Collatium, without ſaying a Word to any Body. He was received with all the Civility, that was due to a near Relation, who was the King's eldeſt Son, and who was not ſuſpected of the leaſt diſhoneſt Thought. After he had ſupped, he was conducted to the Chamber deſigned for him. He went not to ſleep, but when he thought the Houſe all quiet, he ſlipp'd, with his Sword in his Hand, into Lucretia's Chamber, and threatning to kill her if ſhe made the leaſt Noiſe, he declared his Paſſion to her; he uſed all the tend'reſt Entreaties, and the moſt terrible Threats, and all imaginable Artifices to touch a Woman's Heart. It was all to no Purpoſe, Lucretia continued firm; the Fear of Death did not ſhake her, but ſhe could not reſiſt the Menace that Sextus at laſt made of expoſing her to the laſt Degree of Infamy. He declared, that after having kill'd her, he would kill her Slave, and lay him in her Bed, and make it believed, that both the Murthers were the Puniſhment of the Adultery, in which he had ſurprized her. Having thus accompliſh'd his infamous Deſign, he retir'd as content and proud of his Conqueſt, as if it had been gain'd in a fair Struggle, and conſiſtent with the niceſt Laws of Gallantry. The Lady, ſeiz'd with the deepeſt Melancholy, ſent to entreat her Father, who was at Rome, and her Huſband, who was at the Siege of Ardea, to come immediately to her. They did ſo: She acquainted 'em with her Misfortune, and conjur'd 'em to revenge it. They promis'd they wou'd, and ſaid all they cou'd think of to comfort her; ſhe would by no means be comforted, but drawing out a Dagger, ſhe had hid in her Cloaths, ſtruck it into her Heart. Brutus, who was preſent at this Spectacle, found the Occaſion he had long ſought for of delivering Rome from Tarquin's Tyranny, and ſo far improved this Occaſion, that the Kingly Power was aboliſhed †: Thus Lucretia's Death was the Cauſe of the Liberty of the Roman People, which has given a great heightning to the Immortal Memory of this Lady. Hiſtorians relate her Adventure (B) differently. The Epitaph which is ſeen in Italy, and is pretended to

* Pergunt inde Collatiam: ubi Lucretiam haud-quaquam ut regias nurus, quas in convivio luxuque cum æqualibus viderant, tempus terentes, ſed nocte ſera; deditam lanæ inter lucubrantes ancillas in medio ædium ſedentem inveniunt. T. Livius, lib. 1. pag. m. 35.

† Taken from Livy at the end of the firſt Book, pag. 35 & 36.

(A) And noble Extraction.] Lucretia's Family was doubleleſs Patrician, ſince we find Conſuls in it, at a time when the Plebeians were not admitted unto the Conſulſhip. It made a noble Figure in the Reign of Tarquinius Superbus; for this Prince (n) gave the Government of Rome to Spurius Lucretius Tricipitinus, our Lucretia's Father, married to a Prince of the Blood. There are Authors, who ſay (o), that Numa Pompilius, being choſen King of Rome, married a Wife call'd Lucretia. If ſhe was of the Family I here ſpeak of, as 'tis probable ſhe was, what Proofs ſhould we deſire greater of the famous Antiquity of this Houſe? Spurius Lucretius, after his Daughter's Death (a), was created Interrex, and named Brutus, and his Son-in-Law, Collatinus, to the Conſulſhip. The latter was ſoon after forced to reſign his Office, and retire to Lanuvium (b), where he ſpent the reſt of his Life, which was very long. Valerius (c) being choſen in his Room, took Spurius Lucretius for his Colleague, after Brutus had been kill'd; but this Colleague died in a few Days (d). I find (e) a Titus Lucretius, who was Conſul the following Year, and a few Years after; and a Publius Lucretius (f), Colleague to Valerius, when he was Conſul the third time. This (g) Titus Lucretius is thought to be the Father of Lucius Lucretius Tricipitinus, Conſul in the Year of Rome 291. I paſs over ſeveral Lucretius's, who were afterwards in the principal Employs of the State, before it was determined, that the Plebeians ſhould be admitted to 'em. But there is no need of all this Compaſs to prove, that the Lucretii Tricipitini were of a Patrician Family. What I relate is ſufficient. 'Tis not certain that this can be ſaid of the Lucretii, ſir-named Veſpillo, or Ofella, or of thoſe of any other Sir-name: There are ſome Lucretius's, whoſe Sir-name I am ignorant of, who were of a Plebeian Family; for we ſee a Marcus Lucretius, Tribune of the People (h) in the ſecond Punick War. Note, That Quintus Lucretius, the firſt who was ſir-named Veſpillo, had this Sir-name, for caſting Tiberius Gracchus's Body into the Tiber: (i) Cujus Corpus Lucretii Ædilis manu in Tiberim miſſum; unde ille Veſpillo dictus. Cicero (k) ſpeaks honorably of one Quintus Lucretius Veſpillo, a good Lawyer and Advocate. There was one Quintus Lucretius Veſpillo a Senator (l), who followed Pompey's Party, and whom the Fidelity of his Wife preſerved (m) from the Fury of the Triumviri, who had proſcrib'd him. This is probably the ſame who obtained the Conſulſhip (n) in the 734th Year of Rome. Cicero ſpeaks of Lucretius Ofella, as an Orator, who was better at making Harangues to the People, than at pleading Cauſes: (o) Aptior concionibus quam judiciis. Mr. Moreri has wretchedly tranſlated this. He was fitter, ſays he, to make Speeches than pronounce Judgments. Another (p) affirms, that Cicero repreſents him fitter to be a Judge than a great Orator. 'Tis believed (q), that Lucretius Ofella, is the ſame who quitted Marius's Party, and joined Sylla, and retook Præneſte, where he forced Marius the Younger to kill himſelf. This Piece of Service hinder'd not Sylla's putting him to Death in the midſt of the Forum, becauſe he had demanded the Conſulſhip againſt Sylla's Intention (r).

(n) Livius, lib. 1. ſub fin. pag. m. 36.
(o) See Plutarch in Numa, p. 74. A.
(a) Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. 4. cap. 80.
(b) Id. lib. 5. cap. 12.
(c) Id. ib. cap. 13.
(d) Id. ib. cap. 19.
(e) Livius, lib. 2. pag. 42, & 46.
(f) Id. ib. pag. 46.
(g) See Sigonius in faſtis ad ann. 245.
(h) Livius lib. 27. pag. 464.
(i) Aurelius Victor de viris illuſtr. pag. m. 177.
(k) Cicero in Bruto, p. m. 291.
(l) Cæſar de bello civili lib. 1. p. m. 237. & lib. 3. pag. 307.
(m) Valer. Maxim. lib. 6. cap. 7.
(n) Dio lib. 54.
(o) Cicero ubi ſupra.
(p) The Baron des Couteurs in his Life of Lucretia.
(q) See the Onomaſticon of Glandorp, pag. 557.
(r) See Livy in epit. lib. 88, & 89. & Paterculus, lib. 2. cap. 27.

(B) Hiſtorians relate Lucretia's Adventure differently.] Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, and Livy, have given the largeſt Deſcriptions of it. They lived at the ſame time, and exactly conſulted the preceding Authors. Nevertheleſs, they agree but in three or four general Facts: 1. That Sextus entered by Night into Lucretia's Chamber: 2. That this Lady, reſiſting the Menaces of Death, Intreaties and Promiſes, was overcome at laſt by to have been ſet up by (C) Collatinus her Huſband, is, doubtleſs, a ſuppoſititious Piece. Her Raviſher was not long expoſed to the Remorſes of his Conſcience, or the ſevere Reproaches of his Family, whoſe total Ruin he had occaſion'd. He retired to a Town of the Gabii, where he had formerly commanded †, and there periſhed a little after. The Reflections which have been made by ſome Writers, are not only falſe. Wit, but (D) vain Cavilling by the Fear of Infamy: 3. That ſhe kill'd her ſelf next Day: 4. That Brutus laid hold of this Occaſion to change the Government. The firſt of theſe two Hiſtorians gives the more particular and large Account: As for Inſtance, he particularizes (f) that Sextus promiſed Lucretia to marry her; by which means ſhe would immediately be Queen of the Gabii, and afterwards of Rome, upon Tarquin's Death, whoſe Succeſſor he would infallibly be, as being his eldeſt Son. Livy contents himſelf with theſe general Expreſſions. (t) Stricto gladio ad dormientem Lucretiam venit, ſiniſtraque manu mulieris pectore oppreſſo, Tace Lucretia, inquit, Sex. Tarquinius ſum, ferrum in manu eſt: moriêre, ſi emiſeris vocem. Cùm pavida è ſomno mulier nullam opem, propè mortem imminentem videret, Tum Tarquinius fateri amorem, orare: miſcere precibus minas: verſare in omnes partes muliebrem animum. But to know the Difference between theſe two Hiſtorians, we need only remember, that Livy relates the Story, as we find it in the Text of this Article; and at the ſame time take notice of the following Facts: I collect 'em from Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus. Sextus being ſent to Collatia by King Tarquin upon Affairs relating to the Siege of Ardea, lodged at his Relation's Collatinus, who was then at the Camp, and found a proper Seaſon to ſatisfy the Paſſion he had conceived for Lucretia in the former Viſit. The Hiſtorian does not ſpeak of the Diſpute of the young Princes, concerning the Beauty of their Wives, which obliged 'em to go to Rome and Collatia, to end the Difference. This Circumſtance, however, was ſingular enough to merit a Place in Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus's Story; and was an Incident very capable of embelliſhing the Narration. Lucretia, over-whelm'd with Melancholy, took Coach at break of Day, as ſoon as Sextus was withdrawn: She took a Mourning Habit, and a Dagger under her Robe, and went to Rome with a Countenance dejected, and bath'd in Tears, without telling any one the Reaſon of her Sadneſs. When ſhe came to her Father's Houſe, ſhe threw her ſelf upon her Knees; ſhe cryed without ſaying a Word, and at laſt deſired him to ſend for her Relations and Friends: As ſoon as they were come together ſhe told 'em her Adventure; and, praying the Gods (a) to take her quickly out of this World, ſhe ſtabbed her ſelf. Valerius was immediately diſpatch'd to the Camp to carry this News to Collatinus, and to joyn with him in raiſing an Inſurrection amongſt the Soldiers. He met Collatinus and Brutus not far from Rome, who had heard nothing of what had happen'd. Thus you ſee Variations ſomewhat ſurprizing; and which prove, that the firſt Hiſtorians, the Sources of Livy and Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, did not take the neceſſary care to have an exact Information. Here are more Variations. Servius ſays, that 'twas Aruns violated Lucretia; other (aa) Hiſtorians call him Sextus, and give the Name of Aruns to another Son of Tarquin. The ſame Servius ſuppoſes, in order to avoid all Diſputes, that he went firſt to Lucretia at Aruntia, and then to Rome; and ſays, that the Slave he took with him into Lucretia's Chamber was a Black (bb). I ſay nothing of Ovid, who has related (cc) Lucretia's Misfortune with ſeveral Circumſtances; of which no Hiſtorian makes mention. He took a Poetical Licenſe, and has invented what he thought moſt proper to adorn his Story. Nay, he has inſerted what the Greeks ſaid of Polyxena (dd), that ſhe took care ſo to ſettle her Cloaths, that, as ſhe fell, nothing might be ſeen that Modeſty would have concealed.

† Sextus Tarquinius Gabios tanquam in ſuum regnum profectus, ab ultoribus veterum ſimulatum quas ſibi ipſe cædibus rapiniſque conciverat, eſt interfectus. Livius, lib. 1. in fine.

Nec (ee) mora, Celato figit ſua pectora ferro:
Et Cadit in Patrios ſanguinolenta pedes.
Tunc quoque, Jam Moriens, ne non procumbat honeſtè,
Reſpicit; hæc etiam Cura Cadentis erat.

But as he brings no Authority to ſhow that this Raviſher was Tarquin's youngeſt Son, we muſt believe that he followed Tradition. And thus the Hiſtorians are divided on this particular Point; moſt ſay that the Adulterer was eldeſt Son to that Prince, and ſome take him for the Youngeſt.

(f) Dionyſ. Halic. lib. 4. cap. 73.

(t) Titus, Livius, lib. 1. pag. 35. C.

(a) Θεοῖς τε ἠξίωσεν εὐξαμένη τιμωρίαν τοιαύτην αὐτῇ δῦναι ἢ ἀπαλλαγὴν τοῦ βίου. Comprecataque deos & dæmonas ut ſe cito è vita eximerent. Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. 4. pag. 263.

(aa) Take notice however, that Florus, in lib. 1. cap. 10. ſeems to call him Aruns.

(bb) Ex ſervio Æneid. lib. 8. v. 646.

(cc) In the ſecond Book of the Faſti.

(dd) See the Remark G. of the Article Olympias.

(ee) Ovid. Faſtor. lib. 2. p. m. 49.

(b) Glandorp. Onomaſt. pag. 555.

(C) The Epitaph that is .... pretended to have been ſet up by Collatinus.] Theſe are the Words of it: (b) Collatinus Tarquinius dulciſſimæ conjugi & incomparabili, pudicitiæ decori, mulierum gloriæ, vixit annis XXJJ. menſ. iii. d. vi. proh dolor, quæ fuit [illegible]na: 'Tis ſaid, that this Inſcription is ſeen at [illegible], and in the Dioceſs of Viterbo (c).

(c) Id. ib.

(D) Not only falſe Wit, but vain [illegible].] A modern Author, fancied himſelf, no doubt, very witty in obſerving that Lucretia killed her ſelf too late; and that, if ſhe reſolved upon parting with her Life, it was not till ſhe had taſted the Forbidden Fruit. This is the falſeſt Raillery in the World; and there is no reaſonable Man, but will agree, that, on ſuch a Subject as this, to quit a grave Air, and in any wiſe to aim at Jeſting, is not only an audacious Miſdemeanor, but even Stupidity and Brutiſhneſs. Lucretia's Action ſhou'd only excite the Senſe of Pity and Admiration. Her Conduct was exempt from all Tincture of Impurity; ſhe was a bright Sacrifice to the Love of Virtue and Glory: And it would be as ridiculous to ſay, that he is guilty of Prodigality, who throws away his Cloaths to ſave his Life by ſwimming, as to ſay there was any thing of Immodeſty on Lucretia's Part; for this illuſtrious Lady was paſſive only to ſave her Reputation. But if [illegible] ſhould ſee the Efforts of Cavilling, have the Patience to read this long Paſſage of Henry Stephens "(d) And yet the poor Lucretia did "not paſs a right Judgment on her ſelf, when, being "thus violated, ſhe ſaid ſhe had loſt her Chaſtity; "ſince 'tis certain, that Virtue can't be raviſh'd by "any Humane Force: And therefore, what ſhe adds, "that her Body was violated, but not her Thought "(or her Mind) was not culpable, contradicts what "ſhe had been ſaying, namely, that ſhe had forfeited her Honour, it being certain, that the Seat of it "is the Mind, and not the Body; which yet the "Heathens ſeem not well to have conſidered, who have "not only excus'd this Woman's Act, in being her "own Murtherer, but have taken occaſion from it "to extoll her to the Skies, as being a Woman of "Courage, and of a great Soul, in that ſhe revenged, "by her Death, the Out-rage done to her Chaſtity. "Before I anſwer 'em, as to the Out rage they pretend was done her Chaſtity, I would deſire 'em to "tell me, what they mean by the Word Revenge; "Becauſe to me it ſeems a thing againſt all Reaſon, "that the Injury ſhould be revenged, by the Death of "the Perſon who received it, and not of him that "gave it. Whereupon I ſhould alledge to 'em, that "ſhe her ſelf did not ſay, Mors ultrix erit, or vindex, "my Death ſhall revenge it; but Mors teſtis erit, "that is, my Death ſhall witneſs it: As if ſhe had ſaid, "my Death ſhall witneſs to the Eyes of the World, what "I can't diſcover, it being a Secret in my own Conſcience; to wit, that the Pleaſure was ſo far from "making me conſent to ſuch an Act, that my Life is "hateful to me for having committed it. But, to "come to the Anſwer of the other Point, I ſay, that "ſuppoſing this Death to import Revenge, it muſt be "the Revenge of an Out-rage done to the Body, and "not to the Mind, the Seat of Chaſtity. Which a "certain Author (whoſe Name St. Auſtin has thought fit to conceal) conſidering in a Declamation, has "this fine Sentence, concerning Lucretia's Misfortune: "A wonderful Thing! Here are two Perſons in the "Act, and yet only one commits Adultery. But St. "Auſtin afterwards argues thus; if it is not Unchaſtity "to be forced, ſhe is unjuſtly puniſhed, ſince ſhe is "Chaſte. For 'tis certain, that the more the Adultery "is excuſed, the more the Murther is heighn'd; & "vice verſa: (It being once ſuppoſed lawful for a "Perſon to kill himſelf.) And the ſame St. Auſtin, "who praiſes this Rhetorician's Saying, ſeems alſo to "have ſucceeded well in that other Argument, (if it "be his) Si adultera, cur laudata Romulida, cur occiſa? That is, if ſhe be an Adulteſs, why is ſhe "praiſed? If Vertuous, why was ſhe kill'd? Upon "which Words, a Friend of mine (e), a Learned "Perſon, whom God has bleſs'd with many Graces, "the Fruits whereof are ſcattered in many Parts of "Chriſtendom, has lately made an Epigram, with "which I am willing to gratify the Reader.

(d) Henry Stephens Apology for Herodotus chap. 15. p. m. 135, 136.

(e) This was René Laurent. [illegible]

" Si tibi fortè fuit Lucretia gratus adulter,
" Immeritò ex merita præmia cæde petis:
" Sin potius caſto vis eſt allata pudori,
" Quis furor eſt hoſtis crimine velle mori?

villing. It has been ſaid in another Place, that Religion had no ſhare in this Action of Lucretia

Fruſtra igitur Laudem captat Lucretia: namque
"Vel furioſa rüis, vel ſcelarata cadis."

(f) Louis Guyon, diverſes leçons, Tom. 3. liv. 4. chap. 14.

Lewis Guyon (f) ſtole all theſe Things from Henry Stephens, without the leaſt Alteration; and without citing him; which Plagiariſm is cuſtomary with him. A Spaniſh Jeſuit has amuſed himſelf with the ſame Quirks: But, as we ſhall ſee in the following Remark, he has mixt ſome good Things with 'em. He approves the Latin Verſes we have ſeen above; and maintains, that Lucretia ſhewed neither Chaſtity nor Courage, and, from a cowardly Spirit, feared her Husband's Knife more than her own. (b) Ni deſcubrio lo uno ni lo otro: no lo primero, pues conſintio: y como dize Sant Ambroſio a otra de ſu manera. (1) Facilius oportuit ſanguinem cum ſpiritu fundere, quàm perdere caſtitatem. Ni tampoco moſtro lo ſegundo, pues por flaqueza de animo temio mas el cuchillo de Colatino, que el ſuyo propio: y por eſto ſe mato con deſeſperacion, la qual (2) pone Santo Thomas por hija dela luxuria. All this is falſe and unjuſt: She manifeſted a reſolved Chaſtity, and a great degree of Courage. When a Man has the Courage to loſe his Life to ſecure his Reputation, do's not he chuſe to die, rather than loſe his good Name? And is there in this the leaſt Symptoms of Cowardize? If it be acting againſt the Rules of true Religion, it is at leaſt conforming to the Ideas of Heathen Heroiſm. But let us reflect a little upon Henry Stephens's Words.

(1) Lib. de virg.

(2) S. Tho. ad Coloſſ. c. 3. lect. 1.

He accuſes Lucretia of Contradiction and Ignorance: She did not know the true Name of Things, ſince ſhe believed ſhe had loſt her Chaſtity, notwithſtanding the Reſiſtance of her Will. She contradicted her ſelf, becauſe ſhe immediately added, that her Body only had been violated. (a) Quid ſalvi eſt mulieri amiſſa pudicitia? Theſe are her Words; Veſtigia viri alieni Collatine in lecto ſunt tuo. Cæterum corpus eſt tantum violatum, animus inſons: mors teſtis erit: ſed date dextras fidemque, haud impunè adultero fore. I am ſurprized, that Henry Stephens, who was ſo good a Grammarian, had ſo little conſidered, that, in the Uſage of all Languages, the ſame Words, without any Impropriety, are taken in different Senſes, more or leſs comprehenſive. Did he think he could read lectures to Livy about the Signification of the Word Pudicitia? I ſay Livy; for 'tis he to whom our Lucretia's Expreſſions belong. The Latin that was ſpoke at Rome, when this Lady was alive, was not like the Latin of this Eloquent Hiſtorian; and there's no Probability, that he any where had found the very Words which Lucretia uſed: Each Hiſtorian turn'd 'em to his own way of ſpeaking; the moſt exact were content to retain the Senſe and Force of 'em. 'Tis probable ſhe complain'd, ſhe had loſt her Honour; that ſhe had been diſhonour'd, or that Sextus had violated her Honour, &c. Thus an Engliſh Woman would expreſs her ſelf in the ſame Caſe, though ſhe perfectly underſtood the Language; and though, in ſpite of her Affliction, ſhe took care not to break the Rules of Grammar. They who ſteal away a Maid, and enjoy her by Force, are reckon'd Raviſhers of her Honour: And if the Parents confin'd their Proſecutions to the forcing him to marry her, the Proceſs is moſt properly called, a Proceſs in Reparation of Honour. The ſame Phraſes would be uſed, though the Violence had not been ſo extreme; I would ſay, in caſe the Raviſher had obtain'd (b) ſome ſort of Conſent; as that having propoſed to her Choice, either the acquieſcing to his Paſſion, or elſe Death, the Rack, Famine, or ſome other Pain, able to intimidate the moſt Reſolute, ſhe ſhould chuſe the firſt part of the Alternative, without any kind of inward Approbation. Now, if Lucretia could properly ſay, her Honour was loſt, ſhe might very well uſe Words equivalent to pudicitia amiſſa. Note, That Ovid (c) uſes the Words pudor raptus to ſignify the forc'd Enjoyment of a Maid; and Plautus (d) expreſſes Deflowering, by the Words pudicitia pulſa. Thus the pretended Contradiction, imputed to Lucretia, falls to the Ground; for thoſe Maids or Wives, who would at this Day complain of having been violated, diſhonoured or robbed of their Honour, in the Storming of a Town or otherwiſe, would add, without Contradiction, that their Soul had no ſhare in the Pollution.

(a) Livius, ubi ſupra, p. 36. F.

(b) Note, That this would not prevent his Actions being conſtrued a true Rape.

(c) Tenuitque fugam rapuitque pudorem. Ovid Metam. lib. 1. v. 600.

(d) Plane hic ille eſt qui mihi in Epidauro primus pudicitiam Perpulit. Plaut. in Epidico, Act. 4. ſc. 1. v. 14.

Henry Stephens underſtands not what he ſays, when he affirms, that the Heathens prais'd Lucretia, for having reveng'd, by her Death, the Out-rage done to her Chaſtity. 'Tis falſe, that they gave this Turn to their Praiſes: All therefore that he advances to confute 'em, is a Deception, a Fallacy, which we call ignoratio elenchi The Heathens, who praiſe Lucretia, grounded their Panegyricks upon her extream Senſe of Glory, and the Reputation of a chaſt Wife, and her great Delicacy as to this Point of Honour; which was ſo very great, as not to permit her to ſurvive the Affront that had been offer'd her. What our Critick borrows from St. Auſtin, whoſe Senſe he has not rightly taken, is ſubject to the ſame Cenſure: 'Tis ſtill a falſe Suppoſition, that Lucretia kill'd her ſelf to puniſh her own part in the Crime. 'Tis an Ignorance of the State of the Queſtion. This Lady knew her ſelf innocent (e), and yet would die, that no lewd Woman ſhould have the Face to live, under Pretence, that Lucretia had the Cowardize to ſurvive her Rape.

(e) Ego me, & ſi peccato abſolvo, ſupplicio non libero. Nec ulla deinde impudica exemp'o Lucretiæ vivet. Livius, ubi ſupra.

The Examination of an Objection of St. Auſtin.

One of the moſt reaſonable Objections of St. Auſtin, is, that Self-Murther is a Crime; and he ſtrengthens his Argument by the Encomiums that are given to Lucretia. He Reaſons ad hominem, againſt the Heathens, and alledges to 'em the Laws of their own Tribunals. Theſe Laws would have obliged them to puniſh a Man, who had kill'd Lucretia. You would therefore be obliged, continues he, to puniſh her, if ſhe was accus'd before you, of having kill'd her ſelf. But if ye anſwer, that 'tis impoſſible to puniſh her, ſince ſhe is not in Being, why do you accumulate ſo many Praiſes upon the Murtherer of a vertuous Perſon? (f) Sed quid eſt hoc, quod in eam graviùs vindicatur, quæ adulterium non admiſit? Nam ille patriâ cum patre pulſus eſt: hæc ſummo eſt mactata ſupplicio. Si non eſt illa impudicitia, quæ invitæ opprimitur; non eſt hæc juſtitia, quæ caſta punitur. Vos appello, Leges judicesque Romani. Nempe poſt perpetrata facinora, nec quemquam ſceleſtum indemnatum impunè voluiſtis occidi. Si ergo ad veſtrum judicium quiſquam deferret hoc crimen, vobiſque probaretur, non ſolùm indemnatam, verùm etiam caſtam & innocentem, interfectam eſſe mulierem; nonne eum qui id fecifſet, ſeveritate congrua plecteretis? Hoc fecit illa Lucretia, illa, illa ſic prædicata Lucretia innocentem, caſtam, vim perpeſſam Lucretiam inſuper interemit. Proferte ſententiam. Quid ſi propterea non poteſtis, quia non adſtat quam punire poſſitis, cur interfectricem innocentis & caſtæ tanta prædicatione laudatis? I don't pretend to juſtify thoſe who would ſay, in Favour of this Lady, that St. Auſtin has condemn'd her by Principles ſhe did not underſtand; for ſhe was ignorant of the Axioms of the Chriſtian Religion, which forbid the attempting our own Lives: She might therefore have complained of being brought before ſuch a Tribunal: She might have declined the Juriſdiction, and appealed to her Natural Judges, to thoſe Ideas of Grandeur and Heroical Glory, which have perſuaded ſo many People, that it is better to die, than to live in Diſgrace. But, as I have already ſaid, this is an Anſwer, which I ſhan't concern my ſelf with; I chuſe rather this other Reflection. The Roman Magiſtrates, whom St. Auſtin turns to, and demands for Judges of the Queſtion, might have quickly undeceiv'd him, by ſhewing that, the Laws, which give no Authority to private Perſons over one anothers Lives, debar not any one the Priviledge of diſpoſing of his own. Don't you know, they might have ſaid, in what Admiration the Cato's, the Brutus's, and Caſſius's, and ſo many other illuſtrious Romans, have ever been, who preferr'd Death to a Life, that would have made 'em Witneſſes of the Oppreſſion of Liberty, or expos'd 'em to the Diſcretion of their Enemies, or a Languiſhing Condition? Are you ignorant with what Elogies the Courage of (g) Porcia, and (h) Arria have been crown'd? Are you ignorant, that we have ſeen, with ſome diſlike, that Cleopatra, who had diſhonour'd her ſelf by her Debaucheries, had the Glory ſhe did not deſerve of preferring Death before the Diſgrace of being led in Triumph?

(f) Auguſt. de civit. Dei lib 1. cap. 19. p. m. 68.

(g) See Valerius Maximus, lib. 4. cap. 6. n. 5.

(h) See Pliny, epiſt. 16 lib. 3.

(i) Horat. od. 37. lib. 1.

(i) Quæ generoſius
Perire quærens, nec muliebriter
Expavit enſem, nec latentes
Claſſe citâ reparavit oras.
Auſa & jacentem viſere regiam
Vultu ſereno fortis, & aſperas
Tractare ſerpentes, ut atrum
Corpore combiberet venenum,
Deliberatâ morte ferocior:
Sævis Liburnis ſcilicet invidens,
Privata deduci ſuperbo
Non humilis mulier triumpho.

In a word, are you ignorant how the Reſolution of private Perſons has been admired, or even of whole Towns, in periſhing by Precipice or Fire, rather than falling into their Enemies Hands? The Nation, cretia. A Learned Man (E) has oppoſed this Opinion by Reflections, which will deſerve whom you look upon as the Favourite People of the True God, blam'd not Saul, its firſt King, and one of the valianteſt Princes of his Age, for having prevented, by killing himſelf (k), the Diſgrace of falling into the Hands of the Conqueror. His Succeſſor, one of your greateſt Prophets, failed not (l) to give him the greateſt Praiſes. Don't the Books of the ſame Nation give the ſame Praiſes (m) to a Heroe, who imitated the Action of King Saul? And after this, will you tell us, Whoever ſhould have killed Lucretia, would have been puniſhable; and therefore ſhe is puniſhable for having killed her ſelf? Learn to reaſon better, and remember, that the Maxims of the nobleſt and auguſteſt Sect (n) that ever was among the Greeks, countenanced this Lady's Proceeding.

(k) I. Book of Samuel, cap. 31. v. 4.

(l) II. Book of Samuel, chap. 1.

(m) IId. Book of the Maccabees chap. 14. v. 42. See alſo in Joſephus de bello jud. lib. 7. cap. 34, & 35. The Speech of Eleazar, and its Effect.

(n) That of the Stoicks.

'Tis certain, St. Auſtin was out of his Element in recurring to the Maxims of the Heathens, as a Rule for the Condemnation of Lucretia. I know well enough, that they were not all of the Opinion of the Stoicks, and there were ſome great Philoſophers, who condemn'd Self Murther. I know alſo, that it has been ſaid, that it was rather Cowardize, than a Proof of Courage, to forego Life, to be rid of Trouble and Pain; and that a Man, who reſolves to ſtruggle long with his ill Fortune, diſcovers as much Conſtancy as he who kills himſelf, ſhews Weakneſs. I know, I ſay, there have been many among the Heathens, who have been of this Opinion; but they wanted on their ſide Glory and Luſtre: They were only conſidered as the Populace: The other Faction was the Nobility, the diſtinguiſh'd Party, the School of Heroiſm; and might have repreſented to 'em, that, like counterfeit Bravo's, they aſſumed honourable Names, and gave the Names of Conſtancy and Intrepidity an exceſſive Love of Life, to an exceſſive Fear of Death. They were ſo fond of Life, that nothing was able to give 'em a diſguſt of it: Diſhonour, Poverty, the moſt ſtinking Dungeons, the moſt (a) inveterate Diſeaſes, did not diſfigure it in their Eyes; It appeared amiable even in this Equipage. Death was not able to put on any Maſk that could conceal the leaſt Feature of its aggly Face. Thus you ſee what the Principle of this pretended Courage might be ſaid to be, and what made Lucretia's Action conſidered as the Effect of Cowardize: Flaqueza de animo, ſaid the Jeſuit, John de Torrez, above-mention'd.

(a) See the Verſes of Mecænas in Seneca epiſt. 101. p. m. 414.

(b) Auguſt. ubi ſupra. pag. 69.

A Confutation of St. Auſtin's Dilemma.

Let us now examine St. Auſtin's Dilemma. (b) Ita hæc cauſſa ex utroque latere coarctatur, ut ſi extenuatur homicidium, adulterium confirmetur; ſi purgatur adulterium, homicidium cumuletur: nec omnino invenitur exitus, ubi dicitur, Si adultera, cur laudatur? ſi pudica, cur occiſa? He pretends, that this Lady's Murder can't be extenuated, without aggravating the Adultery, nor her Adultery extenuated, without aggravating her Murder. But to ſhew that he had not diligently examined this Matter, it ſuffices to ſay, that his Argument proves too much; for by a like Reaſoning, he might blame a Perſon, who deſerved great Praiſes. It ſometimes happen'd, that, in the firſt Ages, very pious young Women, who were conſecrated to Celibacy, for the Service of God, were violated. This is but too common a Caſe at preſent; and we daily hear the Story of an Abbeſs, who with her Society, had paſs'd thro' the Hands of an Iriſh Company in Piedmont, and who made her Complaints to Monſieur Catinat. Let us ſuppoſe, that a Nun ſhould, in this caſe, contract ſuch a Melancholy, as might bring upon her a mortal Diſtemper. Let us ſuppoſe the Teſtimony of her Conſcience, fortified with the ſtrongeſt Conſolations that a Divine could give, unable to relieve her. Let us ſuppoſe ſhe had conceiv'd ſuch a Paſſion for the Purity of Body and Mind, that the bare Idea, of the moſt involuntary Defilement, ſhould caſt her into an inſupportable Diſcontent; of which ſhe ſhould die: would not this be a convincing Proof of an exquiſite Chaſtity? Would not her Innocence and Virtue ſtand in a clear Light? Whereas, if we follow St. Auſtin's Dilemma, as much as you give to her Affliction, you take from her Chaſtity, ſi pudica, cur mœrtua? You ſee then, that there's more Subtilty, than Solidity, in this Father's Argument: And thus you ſee Lucretia perfectly ſcreen'd from St. Auſtin's Attacks, except in reſpect of the Murther; for if ſhe had died of Grief, both he, and the other Fathers of the Church, had, by this kind of Death, confirmed the Praiſes of her incomparable Chaſtity.

(c) Balzac p. m. 88, 89. du Barbon

Another unfortunate Thought, which Balzac gives his Barbon, is this: "(g) Another Word, miſunderſtood in the Hiſtory of Dion, made him calu-

" mniate Lucretia's Chaſtity; that is, throw Dirt on " the fineſt Flower of Antiquity, and ſully the chief " Ornament of growing Rome. And although the " Reputation of ſo honeſt a Lady has come down " pure to our Times, this Accuſer of [illegible] had the " impudence to oppoſe his ſingle [illegible] to the " Teſtimony of ſo many Ages: [illegible] that " Heroin's poſſeſſion of her Glory, [illegible] Proceſs be- " gun, mal a Propos. He pretends, that Turquin be- " gan indeed by Force, but [illegible] by Perſwaſion; " that Lucretia would not give her Conſent to the " Crime, but ſhewed ſome Reſpect to his Quality; " and that, after ſhe was enjoy'd, the Remorſe of " Conſcience, for the Sin ſhe had committed, as much " as a Reflection of the Affront, made her reſolve " not to ſurvive her Diſhonour."

The Impudence, that the Hiſtorian Dion might furniſh theſe ill-natured People with, conſiſts in his ſaying, Lucretia, was work'd upon to ſuffer voluntarily his enjoying her. (b) Η'ναγκασεν αὐτὴν ἑκοῦσαν πάθειν: Coegit eam NON INVITAM ſtuprum pati.... (i) Καὶ ἀδὶ τὸ ταῦτ' ἐκόντα δὲ ἐμιάνθη, Eam igitur ob Cauſam NON INVITA adultero Ceſſit. The Learned Critick, who has publiſh'd ſeveral fine Fragments of Dion's (k), blames him for offering ſo cruel an Injury to Lucretia, as ſaying, that ſhe was not diſhonoured againſt her Will; he affirms it's ruining all that was ſerious [illegible] in the Narration of this Adventure: And that ſuch a Fact, having brought on a famous Revolution in Rome; and being, as it were, the Hinge on which the Hiſtory of the Roman People turns, it ought to have been treated in a very ſerious way, that it might appear, that the Romans, who had lived under Kings ever ſince the Foundation of their City, did not aboliſh that Form of Government without a very juſt Provocation. So that he muſt not have ſaid, that Lucretia voluntarily ſuffered Sextus to ſatisfy (l) himſelf, for this was next Door to the Crime; but that ſhe was forced, by having a Dagger clapt to her Breaſt. This Critick adviſes us to compare the Narrative of Dion with that of Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, which he thinks much inferior to that of Diodorus Siculus (m); but, adds he, the beſt of all is Livy's.

(b) Dio in excerptis a valeſio editis, pag. 574.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 576.

(k) Graviſſima infamia Lucretiam affecit Dio qui eam minime invitam cum adultero commiſtam eſſe ſcribit. Valeſius not. in excerpta Dionis, p. [illegible].

Whatever Admiration I may have for the profound Learning and Judgment that appears ſo eminently in the Writings of Henry Valois, I cannot be of his Mind in this Place. It ſeems to me that nothing is wanting in Dion's Relation, as to the Point of Gravity; and I think Lucretia's Chaſtity is as well ſet forth there as in any other Hiſtorian, and in all the Circumſtances that can raiſe our Idea of it. The Words, ἑκοῦσαν ἐν ἄκρᾳ, ſignify nothing but what Livy and Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus give us clearly to underſtand. They only ſerve to ſhow a Circumſtance which no Hiſtorian has omitted, viz. that Sextus did not make uſe of direct Force, as when a Woman would defend her ſelf to the laſt with her Hands and Feet and Teeth, &c. But Dion gives us to underſtand, that there was ſomething voluntary in Lucretia's Suffering, juſt as a covetous Man's throwing his Marchandizes over-board, when there is no other Way of ſaving his Life, may be ſaid to be voluntary. All the World judges, that he who enjoys a Woman after he has threatned to kill her, or to put her to the Rack, or to ſome other terrible Puniſhment, has effectually forced her; and that he ought to be puniſhed as a Raviſher; and no Body can ſay, that this Woman ſuffered willingly: The Conſent on her part was no other than that of a Man, who delivers his Purſe when a Sword is held cloſe to his Breaſt.

(l) Hoc enim proximum Culpæ eſt. Id. ibid.

(m) Diodorus Siculus in iiſdem excerptis, pag. 253.

(E) That Religion had no ſhare in this Action of Lucretia. A Learned Man has oppoſed.... by Reflections which deſerve to be diſcuſs'd.] Three Obſervations have been made in the Thoughts upon Comets. 1. That (c) for the three firſt Ages of Antient Rome, the Modeſty, Frugality and Chaſtity of Women were very Illuſtrious; and there were ſome who manifeſted a great Senſe of Honour. 2. That this [illegible] Honour (d) could not be inſpired into the Roman Women by the Religion they profeſs'd; ſince it was neceſſary, to that end, that their Religion ſhould teach 'em, that Immodeſty was diſpleaſing to the Gods: But far from that; it taught 'em the contrary, that the Gods themſelves were [illegible] Lewd. 3. That (e) if Lucretia had lo- [illegible] from a Principle of Religion; or, which is the ſame thing, if ſhe had lived in Obedience to God, ſhe would never have conſented to Sextus's Deſires; but have rather choſen to proſtitute her Reputation to Calumny, than her Body to Adultery. However this ſhe did not do. She courageouſly reſiſted this Prince's Purſuits, though be discuss'd. Father le Moyne will furnish me with some thing to my Purpose: He is one of though he threaten'd to kill her. But when he threaten'd to expose her Reputation to eternal Infamy, she granted his Desires, and afterwards kill'd her self. This is an evident Proof, that she loved nothing in Virtue, but the Glory that [illegible]; and that she had not in view the pleasing of [illegible]; for they who would please God, would chuse rather to be reckoned Infamous by Men, than commit a Crime. It must therefore necessarily be confess'd, that Lucretia [illegible] contributed nothing to her Chastity; and that, in that respect, she had been the very same, though she had never heard there were any Gods at all. Mr. du Rondel in 1685, publish'd (f) some Reflections upon a Chapter of Theophrastus, which I have read over and over-again with great pleasure. The Place where he makes the Elogy and Apology for [illegible] more especially charm'd me, as having always been an Admirer of this illustrious Lady: And if the Subject could have suffer'd it, I would have pleaded her Cause no less in the Pensées diverses, than in the preceding Remark. I therefore heartily applaud all that Mr. du Rondel alledges in her Justification, except what relates to the Motives of Religion. He makes two Learned Reflections upon this Point; one (g), that the Lewd Gods were not those who were worshipp'd (h) in old Rome; the other, That if Lucretia (i) was willing for some Moments, to survive her Dishonour, it was, because she was forced to it by her Religion, and was accountable for her Reputation, before the Eumenides. (k) She could not discharge her Duty without calling her Husband, her Father, and the rest of her Relations, and exposing her Misfortune to 'em to the least Circumstances; and then killing her self before 'em, in Confirmation of the Truth of what she had said. A Poet, whose Name I don't know, has hit upon this Thought.

(c) Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes, chap. 18*c. pag.* 557.

(d) Ibid. pag. 559.

(e) Ibid. pag. 560.

(f) See it in the Extract of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Dec. 1685. Art. 5. pag. 1341. & seq.

(g) Du Rondel Reflections upon a Chapter of Theophrastus, p. 94. & seq.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 96.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 97.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 99.

Quum fodit infesto castum Lucretia pectus,
Sanguinis & sorrens egrederetur, ait:
Accedant reges, me non faviſſe tyranno
Ante virum sanguis, ſpiritus ante Deos.
Quàm benè, producti pro me poſt fata, loquentur;
Alter apud Manes, alter apud Superos.

But I must fill up here what I say, concerning the Tribunal of the Eumenides. This is the Account of it. According to the Antient Theologists: Man was composed of a Soul, a Body and a Shade. At Death the Soul was restored to Heaven, where the Thoughts were examin'd before the Diræ; the Body was restored to the Earth, where the Actions were examin'd before the Furiæ; and the Shade was restored to Hell, where the Reports that had been spread of us were to be accounted for, and that before the Eumenides. Ne Lucretia, says an Antient Author, Castitatis famam deperderet, quippe quam ſine Purgatione futuram eſſe cernebat, invita turpibus imperiis paruit, There were to be Witnesses and Blood to clear the Party from Calumny, in order to appear with Impunity before the Eumenides, or resolve to be damn'd to all the Serpents of Infamy, which was one of these Goddesses, certis Pœnarum Infamia. Thus, Sir, Lucretia has satisfied her Religion, and is more commendable than has hitherto been imagin'd; since with the Stab of the Dagger, she made an expiatory Sacrifice, which stopp'd the Mouth of Infamy, and cleared her a glorious Way to the Elysian Fields.

Nothing can be more properly alledged, to confirm the first of these Observations, than what is found in Dionysius Halicarnaſſeus, concerning the Laws of Romulus. This Prince, the Founder of Rome, borrowed from the Greeks all that was proper in their Theology, for Divine Service, but rejected the Fables, the Antients had divulg'd, concerning the Crimes of their Gods, and suffered not any thing to be ascribed to the Divine Nature unbecoming the Supreme Felicity. (l) Τὰς ὑπὸ παραδόξων περὶ αὐτῶν μύθους, ἐν οἷς βλασφημίαι πολλαὶ κατ' αὐτῶν ἢ κατορθώσεις, πονηρὰς ἐργασαμένων ἢ ἐκ γάμους παρανόμους γεγενημένων, ἢ ὑπ' ἄλλων θεῶν ἢ ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων ἡττηθέντων ἔξωθεν, ἢ πεφυκέναι τινὰς ἐκ θεῶν λόγον τῷ ἢ φαῦλον, [illegible] φύσεως. Ceterum fabulas de ipsis a majoribus traditas, probra eorum continentes ac crimina, improbas censuit, inutilesque ac indecentes, & ne probis quidem viris dignas, nedum diis superis: repudiandas his omnibus, ad bene ac præclare de diis sentiendum lapsendum cives suos induxit, nihil eis affingi posse quod beatæ illi naturæ parum esset consentaneum. He expressly observes, that the Romans did not teach, that Cælus was castrated by his Children, or that Saturn devoured his; or that Jupiter, having dethroned Saturn, threw him into Tartarus, or that the Gods had been at Wars, or had been wounded in them, or that they had been Slaves among Men. This whole Passage of the Historian is very remarkable: For we see, that Romulus establish'd his Religion, not as a Man educated amongst Shepherds, but as an excellent Philosopher, and a thousand times a better Theologist, than the Magistrates of Greece. Nevertheless, the other Historians, even they, who, like Livy, were more interested than Dionysius, in Romulus's Glory, have been silent upon this Article; which Silence is surprizing and unaccountable. But be it observ'd, that this Author, who particularizes so many Things, rejected by the first King of the Romans, do's not observe that he had banish'd what concern'd the Adulteries of the Gods. Let us also say, that he falsly advances, that they did not speak of the Castration of Cœlus, or the Dethroning of Saturn, &c. How durst he affirm things so false? Did he not know, that the Romans (a) had adopted all the Chimera's of the Greek Mythology? Why did he not content himself with saying, that, during the first Ages of Rome, they gave no credit to 'em? Be it how it will, though we grant what he says of Romulus, we can't thence infer, that our Lucretia was persuaded, that the Gods were very Chast.

(l) Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. 2. cap. 18. pag. 90.

(a) See Cicero de Natura Deorum.

The Tradition, that Romulus was the Son of Mars, and of the Vestal Sylvia, was, doubtless, very antient in Tarquin's Time; for this Vestal had declared, when she was with Child (b), that a God was the Father of it. 'Twas Romulus's Interest that this Fable should be believed, in order to screen the Honour of his Mother, and give himself a Cœlestial Origin. This was moreover well suited to the Temporal Interests of the City he had built; which is probably the Reason why he, rejecting the other Fables of the Greeks, did not intimate, that the Amours of the Gods were to be excluded. Let us then be persuaded, that, in Lucretia's Time, one of the Articles of the Roman Faith, was, That Mars got Sylvia with Child, when (c) she went to fetch Water, for the Divine Service, to the Wood consecrated to this God. So that Lucretia must be so far from fearing to offend the Gods, supposing she had committed Adultery, that she ought to fear the being alone in some Consecrated Wood, and imagine that her Honour would run a great Risk there, the God of the Place being very likely to fall in Love with her, and to force her, with so much the less Scruple, as she had never been (d) a Vestal, as the Mother of Romulus had. Note, That, during the Wars that Tarquin made with the Romans (e) they built a Temple to Castor and Pollux; that is, to two Bastards of the same Jupiter, when they worshipp'd in the Capitol; which is a Justification, even in Respect of old Rome, of what is said in the Pensées diverses, that Religion did not teach, that Impurity was displeasing to the Gods. Note also, That the first King of Rome, by forbidding to impute to 'em the Scandals of Greece, intimated, that there ran evil Reports concerning their Conduct. This, doubtless, would occasion at least the Curiosity of informing themselves what these Scandals were; and we know, that in Tarquin's Time, the Oracle of Delphi (f) was very well known at Rome. They had therefore a just Account of the Religion of the Greeks; they knew the Stories concerning the Love-Intrigues of the Gods; and, as People easily believe what gratifies their Passions, they easily gave Credit to these Discourses, authorized by a Learned and Ingenious Nation; and which furnish'd the Dissolute with so many Apologies. We only imitate the Gods, said they, in the Beginning; they were bolder afterwards, as the Law of Romulus grew obsolete. We know, from the Experience of those last Ages, that the forbidding a Book, wherein the Amours and Corruptions of a Court are exposed, prevents indeed the Inhabitants of the Country from dispersing these Scandalous Stories, but not from thinking and believing them any more than before. Apply this to the Subjects of Romulus, with respect to the proscribing the Grecian Fables: Add too, that the Building of the Temple of Castor and Pollux, was, as it were, an Authentick Declaration of Jupiter's Adulteries, and Derogatory to Romulus's Law. The Husband, to the Mother (b) of these two Deities, was, by this Edifice, as solemnly declared a Cuckold, as by a Decree of the Amphictyones, or the Senate. Whence we must conclude, that the Virtue and good Morals, so conspicuous among the Romans for the 3 or 4 first Centuries, did not depend on the Heathen, but only on Natural Religion, &c.

(b) Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. 1. cap. 78. pag. m. 61.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) That is to say, a Maid who had consecrated her Virginity to the Goddeſs Veſta.

(e) Florus, lib. 1. cap. 11.

(f) Dionyſ. Halicarn. lib. 4. cap. 75. pag. 254.

(b) Leda the Wife of Tyndarus of thoſe who havewrit an Apology for this Lady, and who ſays (F), ſhe ſurpaſſed the Pagan Deities. Let us not forget to obſerve, that as ſoon as Sextus * perceived his Paſſion for Lucretia, he reſolved to have recourſe to Force. This ſhews, either that, in thoſe Times, married Women were not uſed to be Carreſs'd, or elſe that her Virtue ſhone ſo in her Face and Conduct that no Body durſt hope for a Favour. This manifeſts farther, how the Times change; for at preſent, Princes, great Lords, and all Gallants in general, think firſt of declaring their Sentiments, and begin by Wheedling. They think on nothing leſs than offering Violence, as imagining they ſhall have no need of it. And if the worſt come to the worſt, this is their laſt Shift; whereas it was the firſt that Tarquin's eldeſt Son took, a potent King at that Time. He made his firſt Declaration of Love, with a Sword in his Hand, and with the Threats of Death in his Mouth.

But

* Ibi Sextum Tarquinium mala libido Lucretiæ PER VIM ſtuprandæ capit. Livius, ibid. pag. 35. B.

LUCRE-

But then here's a Dilemma. The Religion, eſtabliſhed by Romulus, and which repreſented God as a moſt perfect Being, ſubſiſted intire in Lucretia's Time; or was already corrupted by the Fables of Greece. In the firſt Caſe, Lucretia did not govern her ſelf by the Principles of her Religion, ſince ſhe ſtood more in fear of a (i) What will the World ſay, than of God himſelf. In the ſecond Caſe, ſhe govern'd her ſelf by the Ideas of Virtue, and the Love of Chaſtity, which the Notion of her Gods did not give her. Let's now ſee what relates to the ſecond Obſervation of our Learned Friend.

(i) Succubuit famæ victa puella meru. Ovid faſtor. lib. 2.

He muſt give me leave to ſay, that the Learning he has ſhewn upon the Diſtinction of the Diræ, the Furiæ, and the Eumenides, and ſo on, was above the comprehenſion of Lucretia and all the other Women of Rome or Athens. 'Twas a Piece of the moſt Myſtical Theology then in Being: The Women had not the leaſt Notion of it; the Initiates did not aſpire to it: Only the o'd Adepti were to be inſtructed in this Article. I queſtion whether Varro, the moſt Learned of the Romans, or the Pontifex (k) Caius Cotta penetrated ſo far. But moſt certainly Lucretia did not know, that her acquitting her ſelf in Heaven and Earth, before the Diræ and the Furiæ, was to no Purpoſe, unleſs ſhe was furniſhed with the Certificates, which the Eumenides demanded in Hell. She did not therefore dye, to provide her ſelf with an Anſwer to an Examination, which ſhe had no Idea of. The bare Intereſt of her Reputation, without the leaſt Regard to Religion, induced her to kill her ſelf, as has been ſaid in the Thoughts upon Comets.

(k) One of Cicero's Interlocutors in his Books de Natura Deorum.

St. Auſtin underſtood very well this Truth, and hath juſtly concluded, that Lucretia's Conduct does not equal that of Chriſtian Women, who having ſubmitted to a like Violence, comfort themſelves in God, the Witneſs of their inward Purity; and are far from refuting the Suſpicions of Men, by tranſgreſſing the Laws of God. (l) Quod ſeipſam, quoniam adulterum pertulit, etiam non adulterata occidit, non eſt pudicitiæ caritas, ſed pudoris infirmitas. Puduit enim eam turpitudinis alienæ in ſe commiſſæ, etiam ſi non ſecum: & Romana mulier laudis avida nimium verita eſt, ne putaretur, quod violenter eſt paſſa cum viveret, libenter paſſa ſi viveret. Unde ad oculos hominum mentis ſuæ teſtem illam pœnam adhibendam putavit, quibus conſcientiam demonſtrare non potuit. Sociam quippe facti ſe credi erubuit, ſi quod alius in ea fecerat turpiter, ferret ipſa patienter. Non hoc fecerunt Fœminæ Chriſtianæ, quæ paſſa ſimilia vivunt. Tamen nec in ſe ultæ ſunt crimen alienum, ne aliorum ſceleribus adderent ſua; ſi, quoniam hoſtes in eis concupiſcendo ſtupra commiſerant, illæ in ſe ipſis homicidia erubeſcendo committerent. Habent quippe intus gloriam caſtitatis, teſtimonium conſcientiæ: habent autem coram oculis Dei ſui; nec requirunt amplius, ubi quid rectè faciant, non amplius habent, ne deviant ab auctoritate legis divinæ, cùm malè devitant offenſionem ſuſpicionis humanæ. If inſtead of maintaining the Roman Spirit, which thirſted after (m) the Praiſe of Men, ſhe had conformed to the Precepts of ſound Religion, ſhe had choſen to dye by the Hand of Sextus, rather than ſuffer'd him to do what he did. She cannot therefore be juſtified at the Bar of Religion; but it ſhe's judged at the Tribunal of Humane Glory, there ſhe'll come off with Flying Colours. For, if on one Hand, Life was leſs dear to her than Chaſtity; ſhe ſacrificed, on the other, to a fair Reputation, what ſhe preferred before Life it ſelf. All this center'd in Self-Love; but had ſhe been a Chriſtian, I ſay, a thorow Chriſtian, ſhe would have acted otherwiſe, and from a Principle of Divine Love. The Spaniſh Jeſuit, above-cited, ſtates her Duty aright, and oppoſes to her the Answer of Lucia, a Chriſtian Woman. (a) Mal je eganno Lucrecia, y ſi turviera tanto valor de animo como hermoſura, con el primero repararael danno que la hizo la ſegunda. No ſon violadas, dize (1) Sant Baſilio, hablando de las virgines: Quæ vim paſſæ ſunt non conſentiente ad voluptatem anima, imo integram atque incorruptam ſponſo ſuo & fide & virginitate inclytam, majori cum gloria & laude obtulerunt. Eſto no ſabia Lucrecia, y ſi lo entendia, cegoſe con el puntillo de la honra, y todo lo perdio. Le manera, que por medio de la muerte, quedo muerta: y por temor de la honra quedo deſhonrada.... Quanto mas, que reſpondio muy bien otra no Lucrecia Romana, ſino Lucia Chriſtiana, al Preſidente Paſchaſio, que ſobre el meſmo punto dixo, la pondria en el lugar de las mugeres rameras, para que qualquiera la infamaſſe, y el Eſpiritu divino de que ſe preciava la deſamparaſſe: Si invitam juſſeris violari, caſtitas mihi duplicabitur ad coronam. There's one thing more, in which the Chriſtian Women St. Auſtin ſpeaks (b) of, excell'd her. She had her Choice of Death or Conſenting: They were not allowed this Option. Tyrants, Perſecutors and Soldiers made uſe of Violence, without propoſing the Alternative. Being reduc'd to this Condition, all the Defence they had was a Denial of Conſent, and Repugnance of Will; for what would the Reſiſtance of Arms and Hands have ſignified? For any thing further, we muſt preſume as much in favour of Lucretia, as in favour of them, and reject the Surmizes St. Auſtin has ſuggeſted of this Heathen Lady. Who knows, ſays he, but ſhe was Conſcious of ſome kind of Conſent, which might be the Reaſon of her killing her ſelf? (c) Quid ſi enim, (quod ipſa tantummodo noſſe poterat,) quamvis juveni violenter irruenti, etiam ſua libidine illecta conſenſit, idque in ſe puniens ita doluit, ut morte putaret expiandum? Quamquam nec ſic quidem occidere ſe debuit, ſi fructuoſam poſſet apud deos falſos agere pœnitentiam. Verumtamen ſi fortè ita eſt, falſumque eſt illud, quod duo fuerunt, & adulterium unus admiſit, ſed potius ambo adulterium commiſerunt, unus manifeſta invaſione, altera latente conſenſione, non ſe occidit inſontem. Theſe are unreaſonable Suſpicions. 'Tis to be believ'd, that her Soul loſt nothing of its Purity; and that (d) ſhe was violently robb'd of an immaculate Chaſtity, according to the Literal Meaning of Brutus's Words in Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus. Note, That we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, no Body had ever known young Tarquin's Exploit, if Lucretia had not reveal'd it.

(b) Chriſtianis fœminis in captivitate compreſſis alieni ab omni cogitatione ſanctitatis inſultant. Auguſt. ubi ſupra.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 68.

(d) Τὴν ἐμιαίνετον ἀφαιρεθεῖσαν αἰδῶ μιᾶς βίας. Impolluta pudicitia per vim ſpoliata. Dionyſ. Halic. lib. 4. cap. 86. pag. 274.

(l) Auguſt. de civit. Dei lib. 1. cap. 19. pag. 69.

(m) Vincet amor patriæ laudumque immenſa cupido. Virgil. Æn. lib. 6. v. 824

(a) Juan de Torres, ubi ſupra.

(1) S. Baſil. lib. de vera virg.

(F) Father Le Moyne.... has writ an Apology for this Lady, in which he ſays ſhe ſurpaſſed the Pagan Deities.] I have ſeen, ſays he, (o) the Examination of this Caſe, " and the Sentence which is annexed to it in St. " Auſtin, de Civitate Dei. I have ſometimes heard, in " Declamations, that one of the moſt Heroick and ſtrict " Ladies of her Sex (p) had pleaded againſt her: " And I confeſs, that if ſhe were to be judged by the " Chriſtian Diſpenſation, and Laws of the Goſpel, ſhe " would very difficultly juſtify her Innocence.. But " if ſhe be removed from this ſevere Tribunal, where " Pagan Virtue finds no Footing, ſhe is out of Danger " of being condemn'd: If ſhe is judged by the Laws " of her own Country, and the Religion of the Times " ſhe will be found to be the Chaſteſt of thoſe who " then lived, and the moſt Reſolute of all the Heathen. " The noble and virtuous Philoſopher, who accuſes " her ſo often, would pardon her Misfortune, and re" concile her to her ſelf; and every Body muſt con" feſs, that the Crime was leſs her Fault, than the Im" perfection of the Roman Law, which had not regu" lated it rightly; and the Scandals of her Religion, " which had afforded ſo many evil Examples: And " truly the Law of that Country, in thoſe Times, was " only ſuperficial and ſide.... As the Ro" man Religion exalted Ladies of Pleaſure to the " Rank of Goddeſſes, and offered Sacrifices to Adulte" rers, it could not expect to keep Women either Vir" tuous or Chaſte. In this therefore Lucretia, nay, " the raviſhed Lucretia, was above the Gods of Rome. " 'Twas not the Love of Pleaſure, or the Fear of " Death

(o) Father Le Moyne Jalerie des Femmes fortes, pag. 188, 189. Dutch Edition.

(p) I ſhould be glad to know who this Perſon is that Father Le Moyne means here.

LUCRETIUS, commonly called, Titus Lucretius (A) Carus, was one of the beſt Poets of his Age. He was born, according to Euſebius's Chronicle (B), in the ſecond Year of the 171 Olympiad, and kill'd himſelf in the 44th Year of his Age; that is much as to ſay, that he kill'd himſelf in the 702 Year of Rome. He had a Philtre given " Death that should remove her: 'Twas the Love of Ho" nour, and the extreme Apprehenſion, that ſhe had

" loſt it. And if ſhe had not the Reſolution of Suſannah, " who neither felt nor fear'd the Pains of Death, or the In" famy; 'tis [illegible] to ſay in her Excuſe, that ſhe
" did not believe [illegible] God: And the Miracle
" had been too great, if a Pagan had equall'd one of " the ſublimeſt Virtues of the Faithful: Were it not " for the Law and Grace, what could the Faithful do?
" We need not feign any thing to praiſe Lucretia....
" (q) Not being able with her Hands to reſiſt an ar" med Force, ſhe repulſed it in Thought, and her " Soul oppoſed as much as poſſible the Stain of Impu-
" rity, with which her Body was defiled."

(A) Titus Lucretius Carus.] Lambinus conjectures, that our Poet was either of the Family of the Lucretii ſir-named Veſpillo, or of that ſir-nam'd Oſella; and that Carus his Sir-name, was a fourth Title, denoting (c) either his admirable Genius, or the Sweetneſs of his Temper, or ſomething of this kind. He produces ſome Inſtances of others, who had two Sir-names. The Baron des Coutures (f) goes farther; and affirms, as an undoubted Fact, that Lucretius was ſir-named Veſpillo or Oſella; becauſe, in all Appearance, he derived his Pedigree from one of theſe two Families. The ſame Lambinus conjectures, that Lucretius was either Brother or Couſin-German to the two Orators, Cicero ſpeaks of, one ſirnam'd Veſpillo, and the other Oſella; or elſe to Lucretius Veſpillo, mention'd by Julius Cæſar. This laſt Lucretius was a Senator, but that hinders not but he might be a near Relation to our Poet; for there were Families, out of which ſome were choſen to the Senatorial Dignity, whilſt others remain'd in the Rank of Knights. To prove this, Lambinus makes uſe of a falſe Suppoſition: He ſays, that if Cicero's Brother had not aſpir'd to great Employments, there would have been an Inſtance of two Brothers, one of which was a Senator, the other a ſimple Knight: but he owns, that Cicero's Brother never did. (g) Finge ex his duobus fratribus alterum ſe ad honores petendos, & Remp. gerendam contuliſſe: alterum luce populari carere, ſuum negotium agere, intra pelliculam ſe continere voluiſſe (quod tamen ſecus factum eſt) ſed finge ita eveniſſe, procul dubio is qui ædilitatem majorem, præturam, conſulatum adeptus eſſet, ut Marcus, Senatorii ordinis factus eſſet: ille alter qui nullum Magiſtratum geſſiſſet, in equeſtri ordine manſiſſet. The Baron des Coutures goes ſtill farther, and affirms, that our Lucretius always continued in the Equeſtrian Order; and that Cicero, who enjoy'd the moſt conſiderable Dignities of the Republick, had a Brother, Quintus Tullius, who never roſe higher than the Degree of a Knight.

(B) In the 2d Year of the 171 Olympiad.] 'Tis a pretty Current Opinion (b), that Lucretius was born twelve Years after Cicero, in the Conſulſhip of Lucius Licinius Craſſus, and Quintus Mutius Scevola, in the 658 Year of Rome. The Baron des Coutures (i) is the firſt I know of, who places the Birth of Cicero twelve Years later than that of Lucretius: And yet he places the Birth of each under the Conſulſhips fix'd upon by other Writers. Here Lambinus falls into three Errors. He ſays, that Euſebius has plac'd Lucretius's Birth in the 171 Olympiad; that is, in the Conſulſhip of Cn. Domitius Ænobarbus, and Caius Caſſius Longinus, in the 657th Year of Rome; and that others place it in the 272d Olympiad; i. e. in the Conſulſhip of L. Licinius Craſſus, and L. Mutius Scevola, in the Year 658: From whence it follows, ſays he, that this Poet was eleven or twelve Years younger than Cicero, who was born in the Conſulſhip of Q. Servilius Cepio, and C. Attilius Serranus. 1. Euſebius places Lucretius's Birth in the ſecond Year of the 171 Olympiad. Now Domitius Ænobarbus and Caſſius Longinus were Conſuls the Year before 2. Their Conſulſhip, and that of Licinius Craſſus, and Mutius Scævola don't belong to the 172, but to the 171 Olympiad. 'Tis ſomewhat ſtrange, that Lambinus ſhould ſo carelesly diſtinguiſh theſe two Olympiads by the Years 657 and 658 of Rome. 3. Since the Conſulſhip, in which Cicero was born, fell in with the 647th Year of Rome, he ought to have ſaid, that Lucretius was Ten or Eleven Years younger than Cicero, and not Twelve or Eleven. Giſanius, and his Copyer (k), Daniel Pareus, placing Lucretius's Birth in the 658th Year, are in the wrong to make him precede Cicero by twelve Years.

I have reckon'd up eight Faults in eighe Lines of Father Briet (l). He will have Lucretius born in the ſecond Year of the 175th Olympiad, and that Year to be the 543d of Rome. He will have Lucretius die in the 584th Year of Rome, at thirty-ſix Years of Age, or rather forty in the Conſulſhip of Pompey and Craſſus; and that this was the Year, in which Virgil aſſum'd the Toga Virilis: Laſtly, he Fathers upon St. Jerom the Saying, that Lucretius kill'd himſelf at forty Years of Age. Let's ſumm up his Faults. I. He ſhould have placed the Birth of Lucretius in the 171 Olympiad, and not in 175. II. The Olympick Year he denotes, anſwers to the 674 Year of Rome, and not to the 543. III. 'Tis abſurd to ſay, that a Man, who was born in the Year 543, and died in 584, died at thirty-ſix Years of Age; and it's ſtill abſurd, though it be corrected by theſe Words, or rather at the Age of forty; for beſides that he ſhould ſay forty-one, ſuch a Diſjunctive ought never to be uſed, as at thirty-ſix or forty, when 'tis certain that the firſt part of the Propoſition is falſe. This is Father Briet's Caſe. He poſitively fixes Lucretius's Birth to the 543d Year of Rome, and his Death to the 584: He ought not therefore to have advanced two different Opinions concerning his Term of Life. IV. As Craſſus and Pompey were twice Conſuls together, 'tis a Fault, ſimply, to obſerve, that ſuch a thing happen'd in the Conſulſhip of theſe two Men: He ſhould have ſpecified under which Conſulſhip. V. Craſſus and Pompey were Conſuls the firſt time in the 683 Year of Rome, and not in 584. VI. He ſhould either not have mention'd Virgil at all, or have ſaid, as Donatus does, that this Poet took the Toga Virilis the ſame Day that Lucretius died. The Point of Singularity conſiſts in the jumping of the Day: And this Father Briet enervates, by barely obſerving, that Virgil took the Toga Virilis the ſame Year Lucretius died. VII. 'Twas (m) in the ſecond Conſulſhip of Craſſus and Pompey, that Virgil took this Robe, and in the 698 Year of Rome; he ought not therefore to have placed Lucretius's Death in the 584th Year. VIII. St. Jerom has plainly ſaid, that Lucretius kill'd himſelf in the 44th Year of his Age. (n) Propria ſe manu interfecit anno ætatis quadrageſimo quarto. Add to theſe eight Faults that which he has committed a little after, in ſaying, that Ovid gave Lucretius the Epithet Divine,

Carmina divini tunc ſunt peritura Lucreti,
Exitio terræ cum dabit una dies.

'Tis Sublimis, and not Divini in Ovid (o). Gaſſendus was ſtrangely miſtaken about the Paſſage of St. Jerom: He thought the Year of his Death had been ſpecify'd in it, and not that of his Birth; which (a) made him conclude, that Lucretius was older than Zeno the Epicurean, whoſe Auditors Cicero and Atticus had been. Mr. Creech has placed Lucretius's Birth in the 659th Year, and his Death in the 702; and pretends, that Virgil was born the ſame Day Lucretius died; which would make a Pythagorean believe, that Lucretius's Soul tranſmigrated into Virgil's Body. (b) Vix abſoluto opere moritur, eo ipſe die quo natus eſt Virgilius; & aliquis Pythagoreus credat Lucretii animam in Maronis corpus tranſiiſſe, ibique longo uſu & multo ſtudio exercitatam Poetam evaſiſſe. This is a conſiderable Fault; for we muſt hence conclude, that Virgil wrote his Eclogues at eight or nine Years of Age. Thus you ſee how the moſt Learned Men confound their Notions. They change the Day that Virgil took his Toga Virilis, into that of his Birth. Lamlinus (c) had made the ſame Blunder.

To judge by the Style, we ſhould eaſily conclude, that Lucretius was older than Cicero; but that Rule would be fallacious. How many Authors have we younger than Balzac, who writ in old French, whilſt Balzac writ eloquently and politely? However, I have read in ſome Moderns, that Lucretius preceded Cicero. Paulo antiquior fuit, (d) ſays Crinitus, Terentio Varrone, & M. Tullio, ut quidam ſcripſerunt. Charles Stephens, Lloyd and Hofman have exactly copied him; but Decimator copying him without well-placing the Comma's, has uttered a groſs Falſhood. Lucretius, ſay he (e), Poeta latinus paulo antiquior Terentio, Varrone & M. Tullio. In another Book (f) he had ſimply ſaid, that Lucretius was antienter than Terence and Cicero. A famous Engliſh-Man, whom I frequently cite, will have Lucretius to be con-

(q) Id. ib. pag. 190. [illegible] Cum [illegible] familiæ cognomen aut Veſpillonis, aut Oſellæ, cognomen Cari acceſſiſſet, vel propter ingenii magnitudinem ac præſtantiam, vel propter morum ſuavitatem, & comitatem, vel propter aliquid tale. Lambinus in vita Lucretii.

(f) In the Life of Lucretia, before his French Tranſlation of this Poet, printed at Paris, 1685.

(g) Lambinus, ubi ſupra.

(b) Lambin. Giſanius, Daniel Pareus, in vita Lucretii, approve it.

(i) In the Life of Lucretius.

(k) The Dauphin's Scholiaſt, having printed before his Lucretius, the Life of this Poet by Daniel Pareus, ought to have known, that, baſing ſome few Defalcations, its Word for Word, that which was compoſed by Giſanius.

(l) De Poetis latinis pag. 9.

(m) Decimo ſeptimo anno ætatis virilem togam cepit, illis Conſulibus iterum quibus natus erat. Evenitque ut eo ipſo die Lucretius poeta diſcederet. Donatus in vita Virgilii.

(n) In Chronic. Euſebii.

(o) Ovid. amor. lib. 1. eleg. 15.

(a) Aliquanto Veruſtior, ſed Romæ fuit. T. Lucretius Carus (obiit enim juxta Euſebium Olympiade 171. cum ageret annum ætatis quadrageſimum tertium. Gaſſend. de vita Epicuri, l. 2. c. 6.

(b) Thom. Creech in præfat. Lucretii.

(c) See the end of this Remark.

(d) De Poetis Latinis, l. 2. p. m. 657.

(e) In Theſauro linguarum voce Lucretius.

(f) In 2 parte ſylvæ vocabulorum imprimis à Francfort in 8vo. in 1591.

(g) Pope Blount, Cenſura Authorum, pag. 39.

given him, which threw him into a Phrenzy. During this his Madneſs he had (C) ſome lucid Intervals, in which he compoſ'd his ſix Books de Rerum Natura, where he Learnedly explains Epicurus's Phyſicks. The ſame Chronicle informs us, that this Work was corrected (D) by Cicero after the Death of the Author. Never any Man denied (E) the Divine Providence more hardily than this Poet; and yet he has acknowledged ſome unaccountable Cauſe (F) which ſports it ſelf in the Over-throw of Humane Greatneſs.

contemporary with Cicero, but ſomewhat older. He puts in the Margin, that Lucretius flouriſhed 105 Years before Jeſus Chriſt. Now, according to him, Our Lord was born (b) in the 751 Year of Rome; he believes therefore, that Lucretius flouriſhed in the 646. He muſt therefore fix his Birth about the Year 600. In which he deviates far from the common Opinion, and from that of St. Jerome. Lambinus's Life of Lucretius, in the Edition I make uſe of (i), imports, that he died in the forty-third Year of his Age, in the third Conſulſhip of Pompey, in the 751 Year of Rome, the Day that Virgil was born. Of the two Faults, which are notorious in this Account, one is, doubtleſs, a Fault of the Preſs, and the other of the Author. Lambinus, inſtead of the Day that Virgil took the Toga Virilis, has put his Birth-Day; and, though we ſhould rectify him thus far, yet we could not clear him of an Error, it being in Pompey's ſecond Conſulſhip that Virgil took the Toga (l) Virilis, in the 698 Year of Rome.

(h) See what he ſays, of the Death of Cicero, pag. 40.

(i) It's that of the Dauphin's Scholiaſt on Lucretius.

(l) Donatus in vita Virgilii.

(C) During this Madneſs he had ſome lucid Intervals, in which he compoſ'd.] They who ſhall read in Thuanus (m), that Taſſo was ſubject to great Fits of Madneſs, which hinder'd not his writing excellent Verſes, won't think incredible what we here ſay of Lucretius. (n) Amatorio poculo in furorem verſus, quum aliquot libros per intervalla inſaniæ conſcripſiſſet. Some believ'd, that Statius had an Eye to this Madneſs, in Saying (o), & docti furor arduus Lucreti; but others think, that he only meant his Poetick Enthuſiaſm, and that he alluded to theſe Words of Lucretius's firſt Book: Sed acri Percuſſit thyrſo laudis ſpes magna meum cor. See Barthius upon theſe Words of Statius.

(m) Thuan. Hiſt. lib. 113. pag. 686. ad ann. 1595.

(n) Chron. Euſebii.

(o) Stat. Silv. 7. l. 2. v. 76.

(D) Was corrected by Cicero.] Father Briet ſeems inclin'd to believe it, ſince he uſes theſe Words: In ſuis verſibus, duris quidem, ſed valde latinis, & Tullii lima dignißimis. Some think (p), he only meant, that Lucretius's Poems had need of Cicero's File; but others believe his Meaning to be, that they do Honour to Cicero, by whom they were corrected; or that it plainly appears, they received the finiſhing Stroke from this great Man.

(p) See Baillet, Jugemens ſur les Poetes, Tom. 2. pag. 89.

(E) More hardily denyed the Divine Providence.] He ſets out with this impious Exordium.

(q) Lucret, lib. 1. v. 59.

Omnis (q) enim per ſe Divûm natura neceſſe eſt
Immortali ævo ſummâ cum pace fruatur,
Semota à noſtris rebus, ſejunctaque longè.
Nam privata dolore omni, privata periclis,
Ipſa ſuis pollens opibus; nihil indiga noſtri,
Nec bene promeritis capitur, nec tangitur irâ.

He goes on, with giving infinite Praiſes to Epicurus, who courageouſly attack'd Religion, and triumph'd over it.

(s) Ibid. v. 64.

Humana (t) ante oculos fœdè cum vita jaceret
In terris oppreſſa gravi ſub religione:
Quæ caput à cæli regionibus oſtendebat,
Horribili ſuper aſpectu mortalibus inſtans:
Primum Græjus homo mortaleis tollere contrà
Eſt oculos auſus, primuſque obſiſtere contra:
Quem nec fama Deum, nec fulmina, nec minitanti
Murmure compreſſit cælum: ſed eo magis acrem
Virtutem incitat animi, confringere ut arcta
Naturæ primus portarum clauſtra cupiret.

. . . . . .

Quare religio pedibus ſubjecta viciſſim
Obteritur; nos exæquat victoria cælo.

(t) Primum quod magnis doceo de rebus, & arctis, Religionum animos nodis exſolvere, pergo. lb. p. m. 30. v. 930.

He ſays, in the ſame Book, that one of the things that moſt encouraged him, was the Praiſe he hoped to deſerve, in treating of a Subject quite new, and in breaking the Shackles of Religion (v).

(v) Idem lib. 5. v. 1225.

(F) He has acknowledged ſome unaccountable Cauſe, which ſports it ſelf in the Over-throw of Humane Greatneſs.] Having deſcribed the Fear which ſeizes Admirals at the Approach of a Tempeſt, their Vows, he tells 'em, are all in vain: So true it is, that a hidden Force ſeems to ſport with the Dignities of the Earth.

Summa (w) etiam cum vis violenti per mare venti
Induperatorum claſſis ſuper æquora vertit,
Cum validis pariter Legionibus, atque Elephantis:
Non Divûm pacem votis adit? ac prece quæſit
Ventorum pavidus paces, animæque ſecundas?
Nequicquam: quoniam violento turbine ſæpe
Correptus nihilo fertur minùs ad vada lethi:
Quique adeo res humanas VIS ABDITA quadam
Obterit, & pulchros Faſceis, ſævaſque Securis
Proculcare, ac LUDIBRIO SIBI HABERE videtur.

(w) Idem lib. 5. v. 1225.

See here a Philoſopher, who preſumptuouſly denies a Providence, and the Power (x) of Fortune; who attributes all things to the neceſſary Motions of Atoms; a Cauſe which knows not whither it tends, nor what it does: Yet all to no Purpoſe, ſince Experience forces him to acknowledge, in the Courſe of Events, a particular Deſign of over-turning thoſe exalted Dignities which appear amongſt Men. 'Tis hardly poſſible not to diſcover this Deſign, when we attentively ſtudy Hiſtory, or only the Tranſactions of the Countries within our own Knowledge. A Life, of any moderate length, ſuffices to ſhew us, how Perſons, raiſed to the higheſt Stations, by a ſwift Courſe of good Succeſſes, fall back again into their Primitive Nothing, by a Reverſe of unproſperous Events. All proſper'd with 'em ſome time ago, but Nothing at preſent: They are daſh'd by a Thouſand Scorms, which ſpare moderate Conditions, tho' ſtanding, as we may ſay, in the ſame Road with 'em. 'Tis againſt them that Fortune ſeems exaſperated; 'tis their Ruin ſhe ſeems to have conſpired, whilſt ſhe ſuffers others to eſcape. I don't wonder then, that Lucretius perceived ſuch an Affectation as this, inexplicable by his Principles, and very hard to be explain'd by any other Syſtem. For it muſt be confeſs'd, that the Phænomena, in the Hiſtory of Men, caſt the Philoſophers into no leſs Perplexity, than thoſe in the Hiſtory of Nature. That which is moſt conſpicuous in Humane Hiſtory, is (y), that Viciſſitude of Exaltation and Debaſement, I elſewhere (z) ſpoke of; and which, as Æſop ſays, is the ordinary Exerciſe of Providence. How ſhall we reconcile this with the Ideas of a God, infinitely Good, infinitely Wiſe, and Diſpoſer of All Things? Can the infinitely perfect Being delight to raiſe a Creature to the higheſt Pinnacle of Glory, on Purpoſe to hurl it, ſon e time after, to the loweſt Degree of Infamy? Would not this Conduct reſemble that of Children, who no ſooner have built a Caſtle of Cards, but they undo and over-throw it again? This, you'll ſay, is neceſſary, becauſe Men abuſing their Proſperity, grow ſo inſolent, that their Fall is but a juſt Puniſhment of the ill uſe they have made of the Favours of Heaven: A Conſolation to the Miſerable, and a Leſſon to thoſe whom God ſhall Favour hereafter. But were not it better, will another ſay, to mix with ſo many Favours, the Grace of not abuſing them? Inſtead of ſix great Succeſſes, only give four; and add, as a Compenſation for the two others, the Ability to uſe 'em well. It will no longer be neceſſary either to puniſh the Inſolent, or comfort the Miſerable, or inſtruct the Man deſign'd to Exaltation. The firſt thing a Father would do, if it were in his Power, would be to ſupply his Children with the Gift of rightly uſing all the Goods he ſhould beſtow on 'em; for without this, all his Bounties are rather a Snare than a Favour. when 'tis conſidered, that they ſhall produce a Conduct, the Puniſhment whereof muſt be exemplary to others: Beſides that, the Uſefulneſs of theſe Examples is not obſerv'd: All Generations hitherto have had need of this Leſſon; and there is no Probability that future Ages ſhould be more exempt from this Viciſſitude, which Æſop ſpoke of, than the preceding. Thus this Checker of Good and Evil, bears not the Character of a Being, infinitely Good, Wiſe and Immutable. I know a Thouſand Reaſons may be thought on to ſolve theſe Difficulties, but we may invent as many Replies: The Mind of Man is more fruitful in Objections, than Anſwers: So that it muſt be acknowledged, that, without the Lights of Revelation, Philoſophy can't unravel the Doubts that are drawn from the Hiſtory of Humane Affairs. 'Tis the Province of Divines, and not of Philoſophers, to explain this. The Heathen Poets had recourſe to an Hypotheſis, which paſs'd very well with the People: They pretended, that among that Multitude of Deities, who (x) You muſt underſtand by Fortune a Deity which acts with Knowledge, but is whimſical, malicious, unjuſt, imprudent.

(y) Quidquid in altum Fortuna tulit ruitura levat modicis rebus longius ævum eſt. Seneca in Agam. Polyanthea at the Word, Fortuna, is full of ſuch Sentences.

(z) In the Article of Æſop, Remark K.

Greatneſs. And no one can deny, but his Work is ſprinkled with many (G) fine Maxims againſt Evil Manners. Had he as attentively conſidered the Events which befell private Perſons, as he did thoſe which happen to the Great, he might perhaps have diſcovered who had a ſhare in the Government of the World, there were ſome who envied the Happineſs of Man; and who, to aſſwage the Gnawings of this Envy, left no Stone unturn'd to ruin their Happineſs. Hence Paganiſm was particularly careful to appeaſe theſe invidious Gods; and the Goddeſs Nemeſis, who was repreſented at the Head of 'em, had as great a Share as any other Deity, in the Worſhip and Honours of Religion: And even when a Man was thought to be humbled, as much as theſe envious Powers could wiſh, he (a) ſtill moſt humbly beſeech'd them to ceaſe their Perſecution. If this Hypotheſis were once admitted, it might eaſily be explain'd, how Humane Grandeur is more expos'd to the Inſults of Fortune, than Moderate Conditions; and every one might underſtand the Cauſe of that Affectation, which Lucretius himſelf could not deny. Now, of all the Syſtems of Philoſophy, there is none ſo irrecoverably over-whelm'd with the Difficulties I ſpeak of, as that of Epicurus. Lucretius did not know what to fix upon; he could neither employ the Hypotheſis of the Poets, nor any kind of Morality; for he allow'd not the Gods any Share in the Government of the Univerſe, nor acknowledged in our World any inviſible Being, which underſtood or will'd any thing; conſequently his vis abdita quædam is a convincing Argument againſt himſelf. By it he over-threw his own Principles.

(a) Vos quoque Pergameæ jam fas eſt parcere genti, Dique Deæque omnes, quibus obſtitit Ilium & ingens Gloria Dardaniæ. Virgil. Æn. l. 6. v. 63.

Epicurus ſhould have allowed Spirits, if he had reaſon'd conſequentially.

Let me ſay, by the way, that it had been very eaſie for him to reconcile the Exiſtence of what People call'd, Fortune, Nemeſis, good and evil Genius's, with his own Syſtem. He might have left the Gods in the State, in which he conceiv'd 'em, content with their own Condition, and enjoying a Supream Felicity, without concerning themſelves with our Affairs, either by puniſhing Evil, or rewarding Good, &c. and have ſuppoſed, that certain Collections of Atoms, which he might give what Name he pleaſed to, were capable of Jealouſy, with reſpect to Man; as alſo of labouring, inviſibly, in ruining exalted Fortunes. I have often wonder'd, that neither Epicurus, nor any of his Followers, ſhould conſider, that the Atoms, which form a Noſe, two Eyes, a Brain, have nothing more excellent in 'em, than thoſe which go to the making a Stone (b): And therefore 'tis very abſurd to ſuppoſe, that every Rendezvous of Atoms, which makes not a Man or a Beaſt, ſhould be deſtitute of Knowledge. He who denies the Soul of Man to be a Subſtance diſtinct from Matter, reaſons childiſhly, unleſs he ſuppoſes, that all the Univerſe is animated; and that there are every where ſome particular Thinking Beings; and that, as there are ſome, which don't equal Men, ſo there are others which exceed them. On this Suppoſition, Plants and Stones, would be Thinking Subſtances. 'Tis not neceſſary, they ſhould have a Senſation of Colours, Sounds, Smells, &c. but 'tis neceſſary, they ſhould have other Notices: And, as theſe would be ridiculous to deny there were any ſuch Beings as Men, who do 'em a deal of Miſchief, who pluck 'em up by the Roots, who cut and break 'em in Pieces: As, I ſay, they would be ridiculous to deny this, under Pretence that they did not ſee the Arm or Ax which ſmote 'em; ſo the Epicureans are in like manner moſt ridiculous, in denying, that there are Beings in the Air, who know us, who do us ſometimes Evil, ſometimes Good, or who are inclined ſome to deſtroy, others to protect us: I ſay, the Epicureans would be very ridiculous to deny this, under Pretence, that we ſee no ſuch Beings. They have no good Reaſon to deny Conjuration, Magick, Larvæ, Spectres, Lemures, Hobgoblins, Familiars, and other Things of this Nature. It's more allowable in thoſe who believe the Soul to be diſtinct from Matter, to deny 'em; and yet I know not by what prepoſterous Turn of Mind, they who believe the Mind of Man to be Corporeal, are the readieſt to deny the Exiſtence of Dæmons.

(b) Compare this with what has been ſaid in the Article Hobbs, Remark M.

(c) Giſanius in vita Lucretii. (d) Sed de vitæ hujus annis ſcriptores minus conveniunt, de inſania omnes & turpiſſimis moribus, quos nimis prodidit in verſibus. Philippus Brietius de Poet. Latin., p. 10.

(G) Fine Maxims againſt Evil Manners.] A Learned Critick, who has laboured upon this Poem, as much as any Man whatever, gives it this Teſtimony: (c) Ambitionem etiam ſuæ ætatis graviſſimis verſibus libro tertio & quinto reprehendit (Lucretius). Quam ſanctis denique fuerit moribus Poeta teſtis eſt locupletiſſimus opus gravissimum, multiſque præclaris ad bonos mores conformandos adhortationibus illuminatum. So that we know not what to think of that Jeſuit, who has ventured to maintain (d), that all the World is agreed, concerning Lucretius's ill Morals; which, adds he, are but too manifeſtly expos'd in his Book. Upon the Teſtimony of this Jeſuit, Mr. Baillet (e) had Reaſon to ſay, that ſome have found Fault with Lucretius for not diſſembling, more than he did, his own corrupt Morals, and ſo much the more, as he had leſs need to expoſe 'em. But 'tis certain this Jeſuit is in an Error; and that there is nothing in the Poem de Rerum Natura, whence it may be reaſonably inferr'd, that the Author was a Man of a diſſolute Life; ſo far is he from glorying in the Corruption of his own Morals. I confeſs, he explains ſome things, concerning Generation, in very rank Terms: But don't our moſt eſteem'd and moſt vertuous Phyſicians do the ſame, at leaſt in the Books where they treat of theſe Matters? Read Mr. Menjot's Diſſertations, who was a Proteſtant, and a perfectly honeſt Man: Read, I ſay, his Diſſertation de Sterilitate, where you'll find Lucretius's Verſes preceded by an Explication; which, to ſay no worſe, comes not behind the Verſes themſelves. (f) Cauſis etiam ſterilitatis annumeratur incompoſitus inter coeundum motus, dum ſcilicet clunibus & coxendicibus ſublevatis lumborum criſitudine fluctuat, ſive, ut dixit Martialis, (1) vibrat ſine fine pruriens laſcivos docili tremore lumbos fœmina σφόλις (Latini criſſare, Græci ἀσφυγιζειν appellant) unde bellua à naturâ edoctæ in congreſſu citrà σόβησιν quietæ perſtant. Lucretius, (2) quem neſcias utrumne inter Poetas an inter Philoſophos numeres, hanc rationem reddit;

Nec molles opus' ſunt motus uxoribus hilum,
Nam mulier prohibet ſe concipere atque repugnat,
Clunibus ipſa viri Venerem ſi læta retractet
Atque exoſſatâ ciet omni pectore fluctus.
Ejicit enim ſulci rectâ regione viâque
Vomerem, atque locis avertit ſeminis ictum.
Idque ſuâ cauſâ conſuerunt ſcorta moveri
Nè complerentur cebrò, gravidæque jacerent.

There's a great Difference betwixt the Poets, who publiſh Obſcenities in the way of Catullus and Ovid, and thoſe who are forced to uſe obſcene Words, in explaining the Effects of Nature. Lucretius muſt be reckon'd in the latter Claſs; and conſequently his Poem can't be brought as a Proof againſt his Morals. The Caſe is quite different as to Catullus, and ſuch as he, who deſcant in Bawdery only to give the Hiſtory of their Amours, or excite People to the moſt filthy Debaucheries. In a word, Lucretius is a Phyſical Poet, and the others are the Authors of Gallant-Verſes: 'Tis lawful for him to make uſe of the Phyſicians Style. But Obſcenity is intolerable in Love-Verſes. I mention not the Poem, in which the Abbot Quillet (g) gives Rules for getting handſome Children. I am not ignorant what Ruffles Mr. Baillet (h) gives him; therefore I forbear ſaying, that, if a Chriſtian Poet, an Eccleſiaſtical (i) Poet, is not excluded from the Number of Men of Probity, on Account of the Deſcriptions he has given upon the Subject (k) of Generation, Lucretius ought not to be excluded.

I won't take Advantage of Dionyſius Lambinus's Teſtimony. He is an Author, who deſigning to prove by Examples (a), the Modeſty wherewith the ancient Poets deſcribed what concerns the Venereal Exerciſe, alledges, amongſt other Paſſages, that of Lucretius above-cited. Ad genera verecundiora redeo. Pindarus Apollinis cum Cyrena concubitum narrans, ita tectis verbis utitur, ut ne virginales quidem aures eis offendi poſſe videantur hoc modo, Ἦρα δ' οὐ λαχόν κῆπον μαλίνα πόλαν, &c. id eſt, licet ne ex ejus cubili ſuavem herbam tondere? & ibid. de Antei filia, quam pater optimè currenti præmium propoſuerat. Χρυσοκόδρου δ' οἱ ἅβας ἀμφὶς ἀθύρουτ' ἀπαλᾶς ἄνθεα ὄρθιον; id eſt, curſores autem florentem ei pubertatis aureæ fructum decerpere volebant. Lucret. lib. 4 in extr. de muliere motum adhibente in concubitu. Ejicit enim ſulci recta regione, viaque Vomerem, atque locis avertit ſeminis ictum (†). The Reaſon why I reject this Teſtimony, is, that Lambinus had no very nice Taſte upon this Subject: For at preſent we ſhould think ſuch Expreſſions, as he cites, to be very groſs. One of Pindar's Examples, contain'd in the Words I have copied, anſwers this Engliſh Expreſſion; They would rob her of the Flower of her Virginity. The Inſtances he cites from Homer (c) are for the moſt part as ſtrong as the Expreſſions of Carnal Copulation, and Cohabitation; which the Country-Notaries do now make a Scruple of inſerting in the Contracts of Marriage, as was done heretofore. He moreover alledges theſe Words of Horace,

(e) Jugemens ſur les Poetes, Tom. 2. pag. 95.

(f) Antonius Menjotius, Diſſertat. Partholgicarum, parte 3. pag. 41. See alſo his Diſſertation de furore uterino.
(1) S. Epigr. 79.
(2) L. 4.
(g) See Mr. Baillet Jugem. ſur les Poetes, Tom. 5. pag. 6. This Poem of the Abbé Quillet is intitled, Callipædia.
(h) Ibid. & p. 62.
(i) This, according to the Suppoſition of Mr. Baillet. See the Article Quillet.
(k) Baillet, ibid.
(a) Libet huc annotare quam verecunde quamlectis verbis ſoleant poetæ rei venereæ turpitudinem ſignificare. Lambinus, in Horat. Ode 5. lib. 2.
(†) Lambin. ibid. pag. m. 128, 129.
(c) Εὖνῆ δ' ὑπὸ μιν ἔθηκε. Lecto cum ea nunquam commiſcebatur. Μίγη φιλότητι καὶ εὐνῇ. Cum eo lectum habuit communem. Lambin. ibid.

covered some thing unaccountable (GA) that took a Pleasure in molesting meaner Conditions; but perhaps too, he would have rejected this Hypothesis, and set himself in earnest about a Physical Explication of this Affair. They who have written his Life * maintain, that he was a very honest Man. Some will have the Invocation at the Begin-

* See the Remark G.

(d) Robert & Antoine le Chevallier d'Agneaux, Brothers.

Inachiam ter nocte potes; where, says he, verbum, in quo turpitudo & obscenitas inest, tacetur. But tho' (d) two Poets, Natives of Vire in Normandy, have used the like Suppression, as Horace, in translating these Words, yet is the Translation obscene. I omit to say, that the Ode, whence Lambinus has taken this Example of a vertuous Conduct, furnishes us with a quite contrary Instance presently after.

(e) Horat. epod. 12.

Inachiâ (e) langues minùs, ac me.
Inachiam ter nocte potes: mihi semper ad unum
Mollis opus: pereat malè, quæ te
Lesbia, quærenti taurum, monstravit inertem!
Cùm mihi Cous adesset Amyntas,
Cujus in indomito constantior inguine nervus,
Quàm nova collibus arbor inhæret.

We shan't therefore trust to Lambinus, as not being a competent Judge. What he calls Chaste and Modest Expressions, are intolerable, at present, in Love-Verses, in a Book of Wit, in a Sermon, or a Speech. None but Physicians, or Advocates, or Historians or Dictionary-Writers, &c. can justifiably employ 'em.

Let's conclude this Head, by a fine Encomium, which an excellent Commentator on Lucretius has lately given him. Nothing can better prove what I have affirmed in the Text of this Remark.

(f) Thom. Creech in præfatione Lucretii, Oxonii, editi è Theatro Sheldoniano, 1695. in 8vo.

(f) Huic calumniæ ita profligatæ succedit alia elatior aspectu, & voce truculentior; clamitans vesanum esse, immodestum, impium voluptatis magistrum, omni denique spurcitie, quæ decet porcum ex Epicuri grege, inquinitatum esse. Ego vero nunquam animum meum inducere potui ut [illegible] Pomponii Attici, castissimi viri familiarem, Ciceronis delicias, & eximium suæ ætatis ornamentum tot vitiis (de impietate aptior enim dicendi locus) fœdatum: Testes igitur quæro, sed nullibi inveniam; scripta evolvo, at in illis omnia longè dissimilia; multa adversus metum fortiter, intemperantiam severè, libidinem castè disputantur, quæ hortari ad virtutes, ab avaritia, ambitione, luxuria possint deterrere plurima: & qui ad illius præcepta vitam moresque componit, illum privati habebimus integerrimum amicum, civem Reipublicæ.

The Jesuit Possevin, full, as he is, of Scruples, and as earnest as he has been, in advising (g) not to suffer Students to read some Places of Lucretius, is yet of Opinion, that they ought to be shewn the fine Precepts of Morality, which are in this Poet, upon the Contempt of Death; the avoiding of Love, and upon the Means of bridling the Passions, and of procuring a Tranquillity of Soul.

(g) Possevin. Bibliothec. selecta, Tom. 2. lib. 17. c. 23. pag. 432.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 433.

Non negaverim perlegi posse (h) in Lucretio quæ de morte contemnenda, de amore fugiendo, de coercendis cupiditatibus, de sedandis animorum motibus, de mentis tranquillitate comparanda .... disputat.

(GA) He might perhaps have discovered something unaccountable, which took a Pleasure in molesting meaner Conditions; but perhaps too.] There are few but take notice how the World generally complains, that Infirmity and Death seize the dear Objects of their Love, more commonly than indifferent or hated People. See such a one, say they, he loved his Wife and had good Reason for it; he lost her the 2d. Year of their Marriage, and is not to be comforted: And, whilst he laments this dismal Separation, many a Husband has passed after a Score of Widowhood for twenty Years together, and is still threaten'd with the long Life of his Mate. Observe this Widow, how she mourns, Night and Day, her good Husband carried off by Death in the Flower of his Age: A 100 other Husbands enjoy a perfect Health for a great many Years together, and shall live on several Years longer, and persist in abusing their Wives, without Rime or Reason. Should they happen to dye, Patience would be no Vertue in their Houses. Comfort, Repose, and good Housewifery would there agreeably reign together; and therefore 'tis to be fear'd they live to prevent it. A Child is lately buried, an only Son, the Joy of his Father and Mother's Heart: He was a Youth of promising Hopes, and worthy to succeed to the great Estate he was born to; Death has singled him out, amidst a hundred others, whom she has spar'd, and who are a burthen to their Families. That worthy Man, who made so good use of his Parts, and Riches, is lately dead. His Life was very short; he never enjoy'd a Day of Health: And, if his Constitution had been stronger, he would have done more Service to the World. He is dead, an[illegible]'s in the Neighbourhood are perfectly well, [illegible]ever knew what Sickness is; who seek only [illegible]urb all the World besides, and who abuse th[illegible]h, their Wit, and their Riches, to the oppressi[illegible]nocence, and scandalizing the Publick by a v[illegible]ife. Observe yon Rogue, a Vagabond, and Prof[illegible]te; he fell from the third Story, and never hurt himself. A Gentleman's Son, an only Son, an honest Man, would have dash'd his Brains to Pieces. My Readers will all own, that such Complaints are daily heard; and 'tis even a common Thing. That the Wishes of the Publick, for a wicked Man's Death, have a particular Virtue to prolong his Life. It would be easie to explain this, from the Hypothesis of these Jealous, Envious, and Malignant Powers, which the Heathens admitted. Good Divinity may reason solidly hereupon; but what could Lucretius say?

If there were really Deities, who repin'd at the Prosperities of Men, and delighted to mortify 'em, they would doubtless affect to destroy an only Son in the Flower of his Age, [illegible]band tenderly beloved, a Wife, who was the [illegible]ness of her Spouse; and, at the same time, [illegible] over a Villain, who was a Heart-breaking to h[illegible]er and Mother, and preserve a Husband and Wife, [illegible]no were Plagues to one another. Were they to put a Family in Mourning, they would chuse out a Child of the greatest Hopes, and most beloved; and were they to [illegible]ute a Parish, they would reduce to Affliction su[illegible]were the Support of it, by their Charity and [illegible]ense: They would consign 'em to the Bed of [illegible]ss, and afterwards to the Grave; and protect the Wicked from all Harm and Danger. They would delight in mortifying the Publick, by preserving the Objects of their Curses, and speedily destroying the Objects of their Hopes, the Delights of Mankind, the Marcellus's and Germanicus's. Consider what Tacitus says, in describing Germanicus's Triumph, and the Disturbance that glorious Day bred in the Mind of those, who remember'd, that the Favour of the Roman People imported Misfortune.

(i) Tacitus Annal. lib. 2. cap. 41.

Augebat (i) imaginem ejus eximia ipsius (Germanici) species, currusque quinque liberis onustus: sed superabat occulta formido reputantibus, haud prosperum in Druso patre ejus favorem vulgi, avunculum ejusdem Marcellum flagrantibus plebis studiis intra juventam ereptum, breves & infaustos populi Romani amores. Every one knows Virgil's Reflection, that Marcellus died young, that the Fates were content just to shew him to the World, because the Gods thought that Rome would be too potent, if she long enjoy[illegible]

Ostendent (k) terris hunc tantum fata; neque ultra
Esse sinent: nimium vobis Romana propago
Visa potens, Superi, propria hæc si dona fuissent.

(k) Virgil. Æn. lib. 6. v. 870.

'Tis probable, Virgil had an eye to the Jealousy attributed to the Gods; but our Divines reason on Principles infinitely more solid. They don't deny in general the Distinctions, which a prophane and impious Heathen would call a studying to vex Men, a Respect of Persons, or even pure Malice, and Envy of Fate: They find in these Distinctions, a Providence full of Goodness, Wisdom and Justice. God weans us from those whom we love most tenderly: He does it with a Design to dis-unite us from the Earth, and to teach us, that the true Good ought to be sought after in Heaven above. He suffers us to be long exposed to Domestick Miseries, in order to prove our Patience, and to purify us in this Crucible. He lengthens out the Days of the Wicked, in order to punish the Sins of Men. They are the Scourges of his Justice; and no Body suffers more than he has deserv'd. Thus good D[illegible] finds nothing inexplicable in all this; but [illegible] Lucretius nor Epicurus could have easily solved [illegible] Difficulty. They might perhaps have denied the Fact, and maintain'd, that the Authors of the Murmurs, Complaints and Observations, we have seen above, compute a-miss. 'Tis customary for a Man not to reckon enough on [illegible], and to reckon too much on the other. Let a [illegible]ed Man, or a wicked Husband dye suddenly; [illegible]bserved for the present, but a Man quickly forgets his Reflection upon it. But if an honest Man, or a good Husband be nipt in the Bud; this is attentively considered, and never forgotten, the Memory being a lasti-

Beginning (H) of his Poem to be a good Argument of his contradicting himself, and for-taking his Syſtem at the very firſt Line of his Book. They would have Reaſon, if (I) this Invocaa faithful Regiſter. Perhaps as many hated Children die, according to the Wiſhes of their Parents, as only idolized Sons. The Death of the former makes no Noiſe, 'tis but lightly reflected on; but the Death of the other raiſes a thouſand Out-cries and Reflections. Beſides this, we muſt know, that Men are naturally more inclin'd to complain of their Deſtiny, than commend it; and falſly imagine, on a thouſand Occaſions, that their Neighbour's Proſperity exceeds (a) their own. There are ſome ſo ungrateful, and impertinent, as to ſay, My Son is dead of his Wound; if he had been another's, he would have recovered. Add, that Lucretius would have recourſe to his Phyſicks. Wonder not, he would have ſaid, that a Son, tenderly beloved, ſhould die ſooner, than another, who has lived unregarded; the latter grows robuſt, he hardens himſelf in all Weathers: The other is ſoftned by his effeminate Education, and the leaſt Indiſpoſition carries him off. A young Man of extraordinary Parts is ſickly, and dies before he is thirty Years old: A Sot, a Booby is never ſick, or at leaſt recovers from the violenteſt Diſtemper, and lives to be very old. Have you kept a Regiſter, would Lucretius anſwer, of all the Learned of the firſt Rank, who have lived to eighty; and of all the Block-heads who have not attained to Man's Eſtate? Reſume your Counters, and calculate better, you'll find your Accounts are wrong. But after all, what wonder is it, that a great Wit ſhould not be of a ſtrong Complexion. His Contexture is of a finer Web of Atoms, and of the ſlighteſt Wale; and therefore his Reſiſtance to extraneous Bodies muſt be very feeble. A luſty Clown is compounded of more maſſy and ſtrong wrought Parts; and therefore muſt laſt the longer. If the Atoms of Imagination are in a very rapid Motion, they diſorder and diſplace ſeveral Parts of the lucid Train, opening Breaches, by which there evaporates abundance of other Atoms, which are neceſſary to the maintaining of other Organs. The Machine muſt therefore neceſſarily exhauſt it ſelf, and the Principles of Life quickly corrupt. So much for the Explication of the Axiom.

(a) Fertilior ſeges eſt alienis ſemper in agris, Vicinumque pecus grandius uber habet. Ovid de arte amandi, lib. 1. pag. m. 165.

Immodicis (b) brevis eſt ætas, & rara ſenectus.
Telle (c) eſt la loi du Ciel, nul excés n'eſt durable,
S'il paſſe le commun il paſſe promptement.

(b) Martial. lib. 6. epigr. 29.

(c) See the Letters of Buſſi Rabutin, part 4. letter 369. pag. 479. Dutch Edit.

Theſe Anſwers, which I ſuppoſe Lucretius would have given, ought to ſatisfy as to all that is contained in the Beginning of this Remark.

(H) The Invocation at the Beginning of his Poem.] The Baron des Coutures (d) obſerves, That this Invocation has ſurprized a great many of the Learned, as being contrary to Epicurus's Doctrine. Lambinus, adds he, cites a Florentine, who pretends to have found the Reaſon of it, becauſe this Philoſopher having maintain'd, that our Crimes provoked not the Anger of the Gods, nor our good Actions their Benefits, admitted however our Prayers, and owned, that they heard thoſe of Men. I don't examine, whether, from Epicurus's profeſſing to honour the Gods, we may be allowed to conclude, that he profeſs'd alſo to invoke 'em, and to expect a Return to his Prayers. There is no Conſequence between theſe two Things, We may eſteem, reſpect, and venerate a Being on the account of the Perfection of its Nature, without addreſſing our Prayers to it; as perſuaded, that it concern'd it ſelf in nothing, and diſpens'd neither Good nor Evil. Nor yet do I trouble my ſelf to enquire, whether Epicurus might not pretend to honour the Deity, only to ſecure himſelf from the Puniſhments eſtabliſh'd againſt Atheiſm. I refer my Reader (e) to a Tract of the learned Mr. du Rondel. But I venture to affirm, that Lucretius did not invoke the Goddeſs Venus, in conforming to the Principles this Florentine aſcribes to Epicurus, that the Gods are worthy of our Prayers, though they do not govern the World. I am not of Lambinus's Opinion, ('tis the Baron des Coutures that ſpeaks) who applauds this Florentine; nor does he himſelf explain the thing better, by adding, that Lucretius, perhaps, addreſs'd himſelf to Venus, according to the Cuſtom of the Poets: And that it was not as a Philoſopher that he pretended, her Charms could obtain Peace of Mars, as the Romans deſired; or, becauſe Epicurus placed the Supreme Good in the Abſence of Pain, that he addreſs'd himſelf to the Miſtreſs of Pleaſures; or, laſtly, becauſe ſhe was the Mother of Æneas, from whom deſcended the Founder of Rome: For my part, I maintain, that Lucretius did not deſert the Notion of Epicurus, in the Invocation of Venus, it being neither a Sally of Poetry, nor a Roman Acknowledgment, but a Reflection of Philoſophy. He did not look upon the Miſtreſs of Mars to be a Goddeſs, ſince he himſelf in the ſecond Book ſays, that Bacchus and Wine, Ceres and Corn, are the ſame Thing: Nor did he any more imagine, that Mars was a God; but, as he was writing a Poem concerning the Nature of Things, could be better addreſs himſelf, than to Generation, which he means by the Mother of the Loves; and whom all the Naturaliſts have acknowledged for that ſecret Appetite, which is given every Species for its Propagation. This removes not the Difficulty; for 'tis certain Lucretius conſidered Venus after their Ideas, who took her for a Goddeſs. He does not conſider her as the Natural Paſſion, which induces Sexes to unite: For in that Notion, Venus is no more the Mother of Æneas, than Epicurus, and yet he firſt Characterizes her by the Epithet of Æneadum genetrix. That which, in my Opinion, is moſt reaſonable to believe, is, that all this is only a Sport of Wit. Lucretius ſeeing all the Poets invoke the Muſes at the Beginning of any great Work, was not willing his Poem ſhould be deſtitute of an Ornament of this kind: He therefore ſets out with an Invocation of Venus, as the propereſt Deity for a Naturaliſt. But he no ways pretends, that this was an Act of Religion; or that Venus, whom he celebrates with ſo many Praiſes, was an Intelligent Being: He has not therefore acted againſt his Principles. I ſhould ſooner accuſe Lipſius, of committing an Act of Heathen Idolatry in the Verſes (b) he addreſs'd to the Planet Venus, in behalf of his Garden, than aſcribe to our Lucretius an Act of Religion, from the Prayer he Addreſſes to the Mother of Æneas. Note, That abundance of Chriſtian Poets, infinitely greater Enemies to the Heathen Gods, than Lucretius was, ſolemnly invoke the Muſes, or Bacchus in their Poems. This is imitating the Ancients, and not performing any Act of Religion; for they have not a thought of invoking the Deity. Note alſo (i), That this Invocation of Lipſius ad ſtellam Venerem, and Lucretius's Invocation have been parallell'd, with a Deſign to convict Lipſius of an Impiety; but this it could not be, unleſs we ſuppoſe his Prayer ſomething more than a Sport of Wit. But 'twas no more.

By the way, the Florentine, mention'd by the Baron des Coutures, is the Learned Peter Victorius. Mr. Minutoli writ me Word of it in 1693. Here are his Words ſomewhat more at large than I gave 'em in the Article of Epicurus. "There's in the ſame (m) Col-"lection, at the 19th Page, a Letter of Petrus Victo-"rius to John della Caſa, Arch-biſhop of Benevento, "which turns upon the Queſtion, whether the Poet "Lucretius, who, in the Beginning of his Poem, in-"vokes Venus, does not in that contradict the Doctrine "of his Patron Epicurus; and whether this is conſi-"ſtent with the Inactivity aſcribed to the Gods, by "this Philoſopher. Doth Mr. du Rondel, whoſe "Work I have not read, and who endeavours to "make an Apology for Epicurus in this Point, men-"tion this Difficulty, or cite this Letter?" Tycho Brahe was conſulted upon this Queſtion by Iſaac Pontanus in the Year 1596, and gave this judicious Anſwer. Ad queſtionem illam jocoſam, ſays he (n), & nonnihil Criticam antiqui Lucretii, cum is ſectam Philoſophorum Deos eorumque providentiam inficiantium profiteretur, Venerem nihilominus, Æneadum genitricem, primordio ſui operis, ejuſque opem imploret, non habeo ſerio dicere, quomodo hæc reſolvenda ſit, ſi quidem non ad Veneris ſidus cæleſte, quod nos una cum cæteris ſubinde ſcrutamur, ſed ad terreſtrem illam Venerem, Æneadum, uti fingebant Poetæ, matrem, & aliorum quoque hominum genitricem pertineat.... (a) Si quid tamen in his noſtri valent luſus, crediderim Lucretium ad imitationem aliorum Poetarum ſic exorſum eſſe, non quod revera aliquam Deam, quæ Venus appellaretur, aut ulla alia numina ſtatueret. Ideoque ſub hoc nomine voluptatem corpoream, quam etiam Deum ſubinde noncupare non veretur, intelexiſſe arbitror.

(I) They would have reaſon, if...: this Invocation were any thing more than a Sport of Wit.] Before we quit this Subject, we muſt ſay, that had Lucretius invoked either Venus or Calliope, in a Perſwaſion, that his Prayer would procure him any Aſſiſtance, he'd have contradicted himſelf in a manner not only unworthy of a Philoſopher, but even of a Man any way capable of Reaſoning. For he ſcarce has finiſhed this pretended Invocation to Mars's Miſtreſs (b), when he

(d) Remarks on the firſt Book of Lucretius at the Beginning pag. 340.

(e) Jacob Rondellus, de vita & moribus Epicuri, Amſtelod. 1693. in 12°. See the Article Epicurus, Remark K.

(f) Ubi ſupra, pag. 343.

(b) You'll find 'em at the end of the 27 Letter of the firſt Miſcellaneous Century.

(i) Georgius Thomſon. in vindice veritatis, pag. 3.

(k) Aut ergo tu ludis in precibus, & votis ad Venerem: aut Venus eſt tibi verus Deus. Id. ibid, pag. 2.

(m) This is the Volume of Letters collected by John Michael Brutus.

(n) See the Letters publiſhed by Mr Matthæus, at Leiden, in 1695. in 8vo. pag. 162.

(a) Ibid pag. 163.

(b) Nam tu ſola potes tranquilla pace juvare Morraleis: quoniam belli fera munera Mavors Armipotens regit; in gremium qui ſæpe tuum ſe Reficit, æterno devinctus vulnere amoris. Lucret. lib. 1. v. 32.

Invocation were any thing more than a Sport of Wit, by which he meant to accommodate himself, in some sort, to a Poetical Custom. It is easily shown, that he has, [illegible] several Occasions, adapted his Style to the (IΔ) common Language, and to the Opinions he lays down as a Principle, that the Gods concern not themselves, nor intermeddle with any kind of Affair (c); and throughout his whole Book he makes it his chief Business to explain the Phænomena of Nature, by the Motion of Atoms, and to confute those who account for 'em by the Ministration of the Gods. It can't be hence inferr'd, either that he did not believe their Existence, or had no Respect and Veneration for 'em: For, according to his Principles, it is not absurd, there should be Beings formed much more perfect than Man, content with their own Conditions, and no way curious either about knowing or reforming the Actions of others. And as it is most certain, that we admire, with great Veneration, the Merit of some great Men, though we never received any Benefit from 'em nor expect any Favour in Reversion, nor fear any evil Office, nothing hinders, but that Epicurus's Followers might have had an actual Veneration for the Gods. But it may very well be inferr'd from Lucretius's System, that he could not seriously invoke them; and that he look'd upon all the Worship, practis'd at Rome, the Vows, Sacrifices, Feasts, &c. as wholly insignificant. A Reflection offers here upon the Conduct of the Athenian Priests, with respect to Epicurus. They had several Times brought the Philosphers to Punishment, whom they accused of Atheism, and they vigorously prosecuted Anaxagoras for one simple Act of Profanation (d). How comes it then that they did not teaze Epicurus? Was it because he had no Personal Quarrel with 'em, as those they prosecuted sometimes had, and whom perhaps they would not have accus'd of any Irreligion, if it were not to gratify their private Passions, under the Cloak of Piety? Was it because Epicurus politickly conformed to the Religion of the Publick, and openly approved it? I believe indeed, they were capable of being satisfied with the Exterior, as the World is at present, without desiring to canvass the Thoughts: But was it not necessary, as at present, that this Exterior should be observed, even in Books and Lectures? Would they suffer a Man to dogmatize in the Schools, contrary to what he profess'd in the Streets or Temple? It's hard to imagine this. Nevertheless, Epicurus's System formally and clearly opposed the Worship of the Gods as practised by the Athenians: He could only compromise with the Esteem, the Respect, and Praises of the Gods; but no ways with the Prayers, Sacrifices, and Acts of Repentance. Thus all the Inconveniences, that were to be feared from Atheism, the Destruction of our Confidence in the Protection of Heaven, the Ruin of our Hopes of Happiness by living well, and of our Fears of Misery by living ill: All these Inconveniences, I say, without one Exception, flowed as naturally and as necessarily from Epicurus's Doctrine, as from that of the Atheists. The least discerning Head must easily comprehend, that all the Practices of Religion are founded not upon the Doctrine of the Existence of God, but upon that of his Providence: Since therefore Epicurus was tolerated in a City, which punish'd Atheists, it follows, that there was with them, respect of Persons, and that they had double Weights and double Measures: Or else, that the Athenians, so Politick and Delicate in other Respects, were very stupid in Point of Religion. They suffer'd themselves to be play'd upon like Children; not perceiving, that in dogmatizing, like Epicurus, a Man laugh'd at 'em, if he profess'd, that he approved the Use of Sacrifices, and Prayers, and all the other Parts of Publick Worship. This Reason I should think very strong to prove, that this Philosopher taught the Providence of God, as Mr. du Rondel pretends, did I not see Lucretius manifestly comparing Providence, without any Subterfuge of Equivocation, or leaving any room for such Apologies as are made for Epicurus, and yet living in an entire Tranquillity at Rome, a City no less Jealous of Religion, nor less severe against Atheists, than Athens. Note, by the way, that the good Morals of a Man, who owns, with Lucretius, the Existence, Holiness, Goodness, Immortality of God, without acknowledging his Providence, are as good a Proof of this Position, Atheism is not necessarily joined with bad Morals, as the Proof drawn from the good Life of those, who should deny the Providence of God, and his Existence all at once: For 'tis plain, that the Belief of the Existence, without the Belief of a Providence, can be no Motive to Vertue, nor Restraint to Vice.

(c) See the Remark E.

Whether Epicurus could possibly have reconciled his System to the publick Worship, and deceived the Athenians.

(d) Miror cur Anaxagoras reus factus sit quia solem esse dixit lapidem ardentem, negans utique Deum, cum in eadem civitate gloria floruerit Epicurus, vixeritque securus; non solum solem vel ullam syderum Deum esse non credens, sed nec Jovem nec ullum deorum omnino in mundo habitare contendens, ad quem preces hominum supplicationesque perveniant. August. de Civit. Dei, lib. 18, c. 41.

(IΔ) He has accommodated his Style to the common Language.] I'll give only two Examples. He believed, that Heaven and Earth would [illegible] for ever; and he declares to him, to whom he dedicated his Book, that the Destruction of the World might perhaps happen in their Days; and adds, Fortune, which governs all things, avert this Evil far from us.

(e) Dictis dabit ipsa fidem res
Forsitan, & graviter terrarum motibus orbis
Omnia conquassari in parvo tempore cernes:
QUOD PROCUL A NOBIS FLECTAT (f) FORTUNA GUBERNANS:
Et [illegible]us, quàm res persuadeat ipsa,
Succlamare [illegible]risono posse omnia victa fragore.

(e) Lucret. lib. 5. v. 105. p. m. 255.

(f) Some Manuscripts have Natura: It's the same thing as to the Sense. See the Commentary of Lambinus in hunc locum, pag. m. 593.

'Tis plain, that the Vow, or Wish, or Prayer he puts up here, proceeded only from a Habit he had got of speaking like other Men. He daily convers'd with People, whose Language was fill'd with Parentheses, which might have been call'd Religious, if they had not been an Effect of Custom rather than an act of Reflection. His Wife, his Maid, his Friends, and all the Romans in general, were accustom'd to lumm in a solemn Wish in the relating any ill Presage, or sad Accident. Deus [illegible], God avert, said they; if any Misfortune should happen, quod abominor, which God forbid. Authors likewise made use of these ways of Speech, (g) Di, prohibete minas, Di, talem avertite casum. I question not, that Lucretius, being used from his Childhood to these Forms of Discourse, used 'em in familiar Conversation, without any Reserve, or only substituting the Term Natura or Fortuna in the room of Deus. Thus the Protestants have substituted the Parenthesis, God receive his Soul, instead of that, God absolve him. The Roman Catholicks use the latter, when they mention their deceased Relations; but as this could not agree with those who denyed a Purgatory, the Protestants have not admitted it; but however have accommodated themselves to Custom by a Phrase placed like the other, and turn'd according to the Maxims of their Religion. Lucretius being accustom'd by his Reading and Conversation to this kind of Parenthesis, inferred the Vow or Wish we have seen above. Nothing was more vain than this in the Hypothesis he maintain'd; and it can't be pretended, that he was ignorant of the Inconsistency of such a Wish, with the Doctrine of Atoms: He very well knew, that That Nature or Fortune, which shov'd 'em on, was unable to change or suspend their Course, or even to hear the Desires of Men. If the Trains of their Motion were such as must speedily bring on the Dissolution of the World; this Dissolution was inevitable; the devoutest Prayers of Mankind, Sacrifices and Processions, could not give the least Delay. How then comes Lucretius to invoke Nature or [illegible] to put off to another time the Destruction of the Earth? 'Twas because he sometimes spoke according to the current Style. Note, That the Doctrine of Fatality did not exclude all Wishes; for, without departing from his Principles, Epicurus might be allowed to wish, that the Disposition of Atoms might be favourable to his Health. He could not have desired that it should alter, but only have wish'd, that their Nature might incline 'em to such or such Purposes. Lucretius goes farther, as appears by his Expressions. So much for the first Point.

(g) Virgil. Æn. lib. 3. v. 365.

The second is not very different from it, since immediately after the six Verses, I have related, we find this.

(a) Qua (a) prius aggrediar quàm de re fundere fata
Sanctius, & multo certa ratione magis, quàm
Pythia quæ tripode è Phœbi lauroque profatur;
Multa tibi expediam dictis solatia dictis.

(a) Lucret. ubi supra. v. 111.

Here he promises much more certain Oracles, than those of Delphi, and he made use of the same Comparison, in another Place, to heighten the Importance of the Doctrine of the ancient [illegible] Philosophers.

(b) Quamquam (b) multa bene ac divinitus invenientes
Ex ambiguo tamquam certa responsa dedêre
Sanctius, & multo certa ratione magis, quàm
Pythia quæ tripode ex Phœbi, lauroque profatur.

(b) Id. lib. 5. v. 737. pag. 40. 41.

Is not that, in both these Passages, he expresses himself according to the Ideas of the People, and not according to the Principles of his Sect? For, in his Notion, the Answers of Apollo's Priestess were only the Dreams of a distempered Brain; or an ignorant Impostor. He acknowledged no Divinity in the Oracles:

It

[illegible], which he reckoned vulgar Errors. It's pretended, that he was (K) a Diſciple of Zeno. They who have criticized this, have not ſucceeded the beſt in the World. As we confute (L) Mr. Moreri, and ſome other (M) Writers, we ſhall ſay ſeveral Things concerning Lucretius. They who deſire to know the Elogies, that have been given him, need only conſult the Authors, whom Barthius * points out to us. Mr. Creech who, in 1695, [illegible] an Edition † of this Poet, accompanied with an excellent Paraphraſe, and fine No[illegible]d before publiſhed an Engliſh Tranſlation of it. 'Tis pity ſo good an Author had no[illegible]nger Life ‡, and that his End was, in ſome meaſure, like that of the Roman Author, whom he had tranſlated and paraphras'd. I am certain, the Abbot of Marolle's French

* Comment. in Statium Tom. 1. pag. 261.
† Printed at Oxford in 8vo.
‡ He died in 1700, before he was full 40. See the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres Sept. 1700 pag. 331.

it was not therefore giving the higheſt Idea of a Philoſophical Doctrine, to affirm it excell'd the Delphick Oracles. 'Tis as much as if we ſhou'd affirm, that Deſcartes's Notions deſerve more to be minded, than the Prophecies of your ſtrolling Gypſies, [illegible] Fortune-Tellers. 'Tis plain then, that Lucretius [illegible] his Language to popular Opinions: And it [illegible] ridiculous cavilling to maintain, that the Force [illegible] Truth ſometimes drew Expreſſions from him, which overturn'd his Syſtem, and convicted him of groſs Contradiction; for Example, where he owns in two Places of his Poems, that there was ſomething Divine, Super-natural, and Prophetical, in the Oracles of Apollo.

(K) A Diſciple of Zeno.] If we once admit their Opinion, who ſay, that Lucretius was ſent to Athens to ſtudy, it can hardly be [illegible]ed, but he was one of Zeno's Diſciples, the [illegible]us's School at that time. Accordingly we ſee, that Lambinus and Gifanius joined theſe two Opinions together. (c) Credibile eſt Lucretium.... ſeſe Athenas contuliſſe ibique Zenonem illum Epicurorum Coryphæum audiviſſe. This is what Lambinus ſays: The following Words are Gifanius's. (d) Præerant hortis eo tempore Zeno acriculus ille ſenex, & Phædr[illegible]homo, ut Cicero ait, humaniſſimus, itaque his vi[illegible] præceptoribus Titus, quos etiam Atticus paulo lice[illegible] poeta grandior audivit. The Baron des Coutures has trod in the ſame Steps. 'Tis probable, ſays he (e) that Lucretius went to Athens, where Zeno, who was the Honour of the Epicurean Sect, had procured a general Eſteem. A Letter has been inſerted (f) in the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, containing ſome Reflections againſt this Baron. The laſt is this: Laſtly, the fifth Blunder is, that Zeno is ſaid to be the Honour of the Epicurean Sect, whereas he is acknowledged to be the Head of the Stoicks. The Critick did not obſerve, that there were more Zeno's than one: He thought the Founder of the Stoicks was meant, and upon this Foot he ſhould have found in the Words he cenſured a notable Fault in Chronology, which he does not mention. Zeno, the Chief of the Stoicks, died the firſt Year of the 129 Olympiad: So that his Death muſt have preceded the Birth of Lucretius above 160 Years. He ought therefore to have ſuſpected, that the Author he cenſured, h[illegible] in view, different from the Founder of the [illegible]. And if this Suſpicion had put him upon the Inquiry, he would probably have found, that there was a famous Epicurean, named Zeno (g), who taught at Athens in Lucretius's Time.

(c) Lambinus in vita Epicuri.
(d) In vita Epicuri.
(e) In the Life of Lucretius.
(f) Tom. 22. pag. 185, [illegible]
(g) He was of Sidon. See Laërtius de [illegible] vo[illegible] Rh[illegible] p.g. [illegible]

(L) We confute Mr. Moreri.] I. He ought not to have ſaid, that our Poet was called T. Carus Lucretius. Carus was not his Name, but his Sir-name, Cognomen. II. By theſe Words, Roman by Nation, Moreri doubtleſs meant, that Lucretius was born at Rome. This is ill expreſſing his Thought; for where is the Author ſo exact as to ſtick to ſay, that Cicero and Livy were Romans by Nation, as Demoſthenes and Thucydides were Greeks by Nation? III. We have no Proof that Lucretius was born at Rome: Mr. Moreri therefore ought not peremptorily to have given him this Birth-place. IV. Much leſs ought he to have ſaid, that Lucretius himſelf declares, he was a Native of Rome: I have found in Lucretius but one Paſſage, which gives any ground to ſay, that he calls it his Native City: [illegible] this Paſſage is of no Force. 'Tis this.

(b) Lucret. lib. 1. circa init.
(i) Lambinus & Gifanius in vita Lucretii. Thomas Creech Præf. ad Lucretii Oxonii editi 1695.

Funde, [illegible]s placidam Romanis inclita pacem,
Nam neque [illegible]gere hoc patriâ tempore iniquo
Poſſumus æquo animo.

Cicero, Livy, Florus, Seneca, who were all born out of Rome, would have ſpoke juſt the ſame way. All the Inhabitants of a Country might ſay, in the time [illegible] Civil War, that their Country is afflicted, though the particular Place of their Birth was exempt from the publick Calamity. Learneder Men (i) than Moreri have affirmed what he affirms. Mr. Morhofius ſomewhat wiſer, you'll ſay, than the reſt, has uſed the Particle, Perhaps; but 'tis certain, that his Forte relates to another Doubt: Threfore we can't reckon him amongſt thoſe who poſitively ſay, Lucretius was born in Rome (k) it ſelf. V. He ſhould not have affirmed, that Lucretius's Relations ſent him to ſtudy at Athens. 'Tis, I confeſs, very probable, but yet, ſince there is no Proof of it, he ſhould have mention'd this by way of Conjecture; or at moſt have been content to ſay, as Gifanius has done, that no one doubted it. (l) Adoleſcentulus autem, ſays he, quin à parentibus, ſeu propinquis, conſiderata ejus ad bona artes nata pene divina indole, Athenas more patrio ſit miſſus, Athenas non ita pridem à P. Sulla crudeliter vaſtatas, non dubito, poſtulat hoc Romanorum conſuetudo, ac doctrinæ ratio. VI. 'Tis not true, that Velleius Paterculus and Cicero have ſaid, that Lucretius's Eloquence rendred him the ſublimeſt of all the Poets of his Time. Cicero ſpeaks of him but once; nor is it certainly known whether the Praiſes he gives him, are great or moderate; for the Learned are divided about the reading of his Paſſage (m): Some (n) will have it, that there was not ſo much Wit in Lucretius's Poem, though there was a great deal of Art: Others (o) will have it, that this Work ſparkled with a great many bright Thoughts, [illegible]at, nevertheleſs, there was a great deal of [illegible]t. Take the moſt favourable Reading you [illegible] Cicero won't be found to ſay, what Mr. Moreri aſcribes to him. As for Velleius Paterculus, he is content to place Lucretius in the Liſt of great Wits; (p) eminentium ingeniorum notare tempora: He has ſaid nothing particular of him. VII. 'Tis no ſmall Fault to ſay, that a Woman, named Lucilia gave Lucretius a Love-Philtre, which threw him into a ſtrange Phrenzy. This is omitting one Capital Circumſtance, to wit, that Lucilia is ſaid (q) to be Lucretius's Wife. VIII. Cicero, Velleius Paterculus, and Cæſar, don't ſpeak of another, who was probably Brother or Uncle to the Poet. 'Tis very true, that he whom Cicero and Cæſar ſpeaks of, the former in his Letter (r) to Atticus, the latter in the Civil War, is the ſame Man: But he whom Velleius Paterculus ſpeaks of, is another, and probably the ſame who harangued better than he pleaded.

(k) Words are applied. Livia virum ſuum occidit quem nimis oderat, Lucilia ſunm, quem nimis amaverat. Lloyd aſcribes 'em to Seneca, but wrongfully. (l) Epiſt. 4. Lib. 8. (m) Lambinus in vita Lucretii, ſub fin. See alſo his Notes on Horace. (n) Paſſing by Florence I happened to meet with a Commentary of Victorius, on a Book of Ariſtotle; in which this peeviſh Commentator taxes Virgil, good God! what a Raſhneſs! what an Attempt! with miſtaking one Word for another, and with being leſs pure and genuine, in his Diction, than Lucretius. Balzac 3. defenſe a Menandre p. m. 405. des œuvres diverſes. (o) Morhof. de Patavin. [illegible], p. 150. (p) Lib. 2. c. 36. (q) Tu to her theſe

* Comment. in Statium Tom. 1. pag. 261.
† Printed at Oxford in 8vo.
‡ He died in 1700, before he was full 40. See the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres Sept. 1700 pag. 331.
(k) Ecques ergo in tota hac aureæ ætatis claſſe qui perſpicuum hac cenſeri debebat urbanitas, Romanos habebimus præter duos forte Lucretium & J. Cæſarem. Morhofius de Patavinitate Liviana, p. 156.
(l) Ubi ſupra.
(m) Lucretii poemata, ut ſcribis, lita ſunt multis luminibus ingenii, multa tamen artis. Cicero ad Quintum fratrem l. 2. fol. m. 105. A. Some pretend it ſhould be non ita, and not lita.
(n) Charles Stephens, Glandorp, Lloyd, Hofman, Baillet, Pope Blount, &c.
(o) Tanquillus Faber, le Baron des Coutures, &c.
(p) Lib. 2. c. 36.
(q) Tu to her theſe

(M) And ſome other Writers.] See above the Remark B. The Baron des Coutures makes Lambinus ſay, that Lucretius's Elocution is preferable to that of Cæſar or Cicero. He muſt have uſed a different Edition from that I have conſulted, where I have found theſe Words. (t) Hoc non dubitanter affirmabo nullum in tota lingua latina ſcriptorem Lucretio Latine mellius eſſe locutum: non M. Tullii, non C. Cæſaris orationem eſſe puriorem. Some thing like this might be imputed to Peter Victorius; for he boldly preferr'd (u) Lucretius before Virgil. 'Tis ſurprizing, after the fore-going Paſſage, to find Lambinus accuſ'd of ſaying, that Lucretius's Latin was bad. (b) Quo reſpexit forte Dionyſius Lambinus cum Lucretium malum latinitatis autorem vocat, qua tamen cum ſententia ille minime audiendus eſt. Borrichius ſuppoſes, that Cicero, Aulus Gellius, and Scaliger, had praiſed Lucretius for writing the pureſt Latin. (c) Certe puriſſima latinitatis eſſe omnia in confeſſo eſt.... laudatumque hoc nomine Ciceroni, Gellio, Scaligero, alias. We have ſeen above, that Cicero's Elogy had no relation to the Purity of Style. Glandorp (d) is miſtaken in ſuppoſing, that Lucretius followed Empedocles's Opinions: If he had conſidered the firſt Book de rerum Natura, where Empedocles is confuted, he would not have ſaid this.

(t) Lambinus in vita Lucretii, ſub fin. See alſo his Notes on Horace. (u) Paſſing by Florence I happened to meet with a Commentary of Victorius, on a Book of Ariſtotle; in which this peeviſh Commentator taxes Virgil, good God! what a Raſhneſs! what an Attempt! with miſtaking one Word for another, and with being leſs pure and genuine, in his Diction, than Lucretius. Balzac 3. defenſe a Menandre p. m. 405. des œuvres diverſes. (b) Morhof. de Patavin. [illegible], p. 150. (c) Borrichius de poetis Latinis, p. 45. (d) Onomaſt. [illegible]

(M△)

French Tranſlation would not have met with the Fate it did (Mδ), had it been as good as this Engliſh Verſion.

It will not be unſeaſonable to examine a falſe Reaſoning and Contradiction, that Lucretius is reproached with. The falſe Reaſoning relates to one of the Arguments he uſed to ſhew, that Death was to be deſpis'd. Epicurus had employ'd it before, but in ſuch a manner that Plutarch (N) ſeverely cenſured him for it. The Contradiction relates to Lucretius's (Mδ) The Abbot de Marolles's .... Tranſlation would not have met with the Fate it did.] Queen Chriſtina would have thanked him for the Dedication of ſo fine a Book. Her Silence, doubtleſs, mortified the Abbot, who nevertheleſs continued well ſatisfied with his Performance. Let us hear what he ſays himſelf: (e) When my Verſion of Lucretius was Printed, the Noble Mr. du Mortier, for whom I have always had a great Eſteem, adviſed me (f) to make a Preſent of it to Chriſtina Queen of Sweden: However it ſignified nothing; nor do I ſo much as know, whether ever ſhe received the Book, which Mr. Herauld, who managed her Affairs here with ſo much Care and Fidelity, aſſured me he had ſent her. At leaſt I received no Anſwer; contrary to the Cuſtom of this Princeſs, who was then liberal of her Compliments to Men of Letters. However it be, the Book has not failed of a good Reception from the Publick: And ſome Learned Men, the Count de Pagan, the late Mr. le Palleur, the Learned Mr. d'Aviſſon, Mr. de la Courvée, Phyſician to the Queen of Poland, and ſome others, have given me Thanks, in the Name of the Publick, for having, in ſome meaſure, ſatisfied the Difficulties that might be formed from the Doctrine of this Poet, in his third Volume, where he treats of the Nature of the Soul. I have ſince much corrected it, and put it in a better ſtate for a ſecond Edition. The Abbot de Marolles did not underſtand the Latin Tongue, or Epicurus's Phyſicks thorowly enough to ſucceed in ſuch a Verſion. Yet it has bore two Editions, the firſt in the Year 1650, dedicated to the Queen of Sweden; the ſecond in the Year 1663, inlarged with the Tranſlation of the tenth Book of Diogenes Laertius, and dedicated to the firſt Preſident.

(e) Marolles Memoires, p. 186, 187. ad ann. 1650.

(f) That's to ſay, that I ſhould dedicate it to her.

(N) That Plutarch ſeverely cenſured him for it.] To comment theſe Words in order, we muſt firſt ſet forth the Driſt of Epicurus and Lucretius. They propos'd to prove, that Death is not to be fear'd, that Death is nothing, that we have no Part nor Lot in it; and that it does not at all concern us. (g) Nil igitur mors eſt, ad nos neque pertinet hilum. Their Proof was taken from hence, that Things diſſolved or ſeparated have no Senſe; and that Things which have no Senſe are nothing with regard to us. Epicurus's Words are theſe. (h) Ὁ θάνατος οὐδὲν πρὸς ἡμᾶς, τὸ γὰρ διαλυθὲν ἀναισθητεῖ, τὸ δ' ἀναισθητοῦν οὐδὲν πρὸς ἡμᾶς. Plutarch (i) obſerved, that this Philoſopher made a very bad Syllogiſm, and that there was a neceſſary Propoſition wanting; namely this, Death is the Separation of the Body and Soul: Ὁ θάνατος ψυχῆς καὶ σώματος διάλυσις. Aulus Gellius taking Epicurus's Part, agrees, that the Syllogiſm, to be in form, ought to have contain'd this Propoſition: But he maintains, that Epicurus, being not obliged to adapt his Reaſoning to Syllogiſtical Rules, ſuppreſs'd it on Purpoſe, as being ſufficiently Self-evident. And it ſhould not be thought ſtrange, that the Concluſion was placed not at the End, but at the Beginning of the Argument; the Philoſopher Plato, frequently arguing after the ſame manner; that is, inverting the Order of the Propoſitions of a Syllogiſm. This is what Aulus Gellius anſwers to Plutarch's Cenſure: He miſtook the Point, and has been ſeverely criticiz'd in the XVIth Century. He was accus'd of having betrayed his own Folly by endeavouring to cover another's, and of being ignorant of the State of the Queſtion. (k) Nactus autem eſt patronum (Epicurus) tali prorſus cliente dignum Gellium: qui dum alienam ſtultitiam tegere vult, prodit ſuam. Tantum enim abeſt ab eo defendendo, ut ne intelleziſſe quidem videatur, quid in eo reprehenderetur. It might have been added, that he did not know in general, what a Syllogiſm was; for he ſuppoſes, that That of Epicurus is really conformable to the Rules, and that there is nothing wanting, but the Propoſition ſub-underſtood by the Author to make it formally ſo. Now to ſee what this Syllogiſm would be, by adding what Epicurus has wilfully omitted.

(g) Lucret lib. 3. v. 842. p. m. 172.

(h) Diog. Laert. lib. 10. n. 139. Aulus Gellius lib. 2. cap. 8. p. m. 55.

(i) Plut. lib. 2. de Homero apud Gellium ibid.

(k) Mureus variar. lect. lib. 11. cap. 16. p. m. 1080.

Death is the Diſſolution of Soul and Body:
That which is diſſolved is inſenſible, and what is inſenſible do's not affect us:
Therefore Death do's not affect us.

This Syllogiſm is good for nothing, as manifeſtly † conſiſting of four Terms. We muſt therefore believe, that Plutarch's Objection was not founded on the Suppreſſion of the Major, as Aulus Gellius pretends, but upon this, that the Major, which was ſub-underſtood, was no ways a Principle from whence the Concluſion could be deduced. This is aſſuredly the Caſe of this Principle; and you clearly ſee, that, after having granted the Major and the Minor of the Syllogiſm, juſt now produced, the Conſequence muſt ſtill be denied. Muretus is very angry with Epicurus hereupon, and treats him as an impertinent Logician. (l) Illius artis (Dialectices) ignoratione ruebat in dicendo: ſæpeque aliquid probare aggreſſus, ea ſumebat, quibus datis ac conceſſis, id tamen quod probare inſtituerat, non concluderetur. Quale eſt, quod cum docere vellet, mortem nihil ad nos pertinere, ita ratiocinabatur: Ὁ θάνατος οὐδὲν πρὸς ἡμᾶς. τὸ γὰρ διαλυθὲν ἀναισθητεῖ. τὸ δ' ἀναισθητοῦν οὐδὲν πρὸς ἡμᾶς. Neque enim ſequitur, ſi id quod diſſolutum eſt, ſenſu vacat; idcirco ipſam quoque diſſolutionem non ſentiri. Neque mors eſt τὸ διαλυθὲν, ἀλλὰ αὐτὸ τὸ διάλυσις. Meritoque Plutarchus ſecundo librorum, quos de Homero compoſuit, imperfecte, atque præpoſtere, atque inſcite ſyllogiſmo uſum eſſe eum dixerat: non quod prætermiſiſſet illud λῆμμα, ὁ θάνατος ψυχῆς καὶ σώματος διάλυσις: ſed quod, ſtupiditate quadam, & craſſitudine ingenii, non pervidiſſet, quantum inter id, quod diſſolutum eſt, & ipſam diſſolutionem intereſſet. And to convince us that the Fault Plutarch has taxed Epicurus with, conſiſts not in barely ſuppreſſing the Major; he produces a Paſſage (m) of Alexander Aphrodiſeus; in which Epicurus's Argument is cenſur'd juſt as he ſuppoſes Plutarch had criticiz'd it. I can't think Plutarch would have troubled himſelf to cenſure that which the beſt Logicians might have done. Nothing hinders their employing an Enthymeme, which is a Syllogiſm wanting either the Major or Minor. 'Tis made uſe of in the Schools at this Day, whilſt the greateſt Slaves to the Formalities of Diſputation have nothing to ſay againſt it, provided the Propoſition, underſtood, be right: But what Out-cries would they make, if found to be as defective as this before us? Let us unfold the Fallacy.

† See Gaſſendi's Notes on the tenth Book of Diogenes Laertius. Oper. Tom. 5. p. 131.

What Turn might be given to this Argument of Epicurus?

(l) Id. ib. pag. 1079.

(m) Ex commentario in primum Topicorum.

Epicurus and Lucretius ſuppoſed, that Death is a thing that do's not concern us, and in which we are not at all intereſs'd. They conclude this from the Suppoſition of the Mortality of the Soul, and conſequently of the Inſenſibility of the Man, after the Separation of the Soul and Body.

Nil (n) igitur Mors eſt, ad nos neque pertinet hilum,
Quandoquidem natura Animi mortalis habetur:
Et velut anteacto nil tempore ſenſimus ægri,
Ad confligendum venientibus undique Pœnis;
Omnia cum belli trepido concuſſa tumultu
Horrida contremuere ſub altus æthëris auris:
In dubioque fuit ſub utrorum regna cadendum
Omnibus humanis eſſet, terraque marique:
Sic ubi non erimus, cum Corporis, atque Animai
Diſcidium fuerit, quibus è ſumus-uniter apti,
Scilicet haud Nobis quidquam, qui non erimus tum,
Accidere omnino poterit, ſenſumque movere:
Non ſi terra mari miſcebitur, & mare cœlo.

They are in the right to ſay, that nothing concerns a Man, which happens to him in a State of Inſenſibility: For 'tis the ſame thing to the Statue of Socrates, whether its ſelf, or the Statue of Cæſar, be broke to Pieces. Since the breaking then of Cæſar's Statue, does in no wiſe concern the Statue of Socrates, the latter is by no means intereſted in its own Deſtruction: It neither ſees nor feels any thing of it any more than it would the burning of a Tree under the South-Pole. But ſtill they fall into a Fallacy two Ways? They cannot deny, but that Death happens, whilſt a Man is yet indued with Senſe; 'tis therefore a thing which concerns a Man. And from the Inſenſibility of the ſeparate Parts, they are in the wrong to inferr, that the Accident, which ſeparates 'em, is imperceptible. (o) Thus their firſt Inconſequence conſiſts in their concluding from the Parts ſeparated to the Act of Separation: The latter, ſince it may be painful, and attended with a Thouſand Sorts of troubleſome Senſations, is an Evil which properly and really belongs to Man; and (n) Lucret. lib. 3. v. 842. pag. 172.

(o) Epicurus .... negavit mortem ad nos pertinere; quod enim diſſolvitur, inquit, ſenſu caret, & quod ſenſu caret nihil ad nos. Diſſolvitur autem & caret ſenſu non ipſa mors, ſed homo qui eam patitur. At ille ei dedit paſſionem cujus eſt actio. Quod ſi hominis eſt pati mortem, diſſolutionem corporis & peremptionem ſenſus, quàm inepcum, ut tanti vis ad hominem non pertinere dicatur? Tertull. de Anima.

Lucretius's Doctrine concerning the Soul of Man. He maintains, that this Soul dies with the Body; and yet he obſerves, that it returns to Heaven when the Man dies. They

...ſame in Virtue of their own Principle; that if the Dead are not at all intereſted in their Condition, 'tis becauſe they are nothing. The ſecond Defect of theſe Philoſophers Reaſoning, is their ſuppoſing, that Man fears not Death, but becauſe he imagins it attended with a great poſitive Miſery. They are miſtaken, and afford no Remedy to ſuch as look on the bare Loſs of Life, as a Grand Evil. The Love of Life is deeply rooted in the Heart of Man; and this is a Sign that it is conſider'd as a very great Good: From whence it follows, that Death is feared as a very great Evil, merely for robbing us of this Good. What ſignifies it, againſt this Fear, to ſay, You'll feel nothing after you are dead? Will you not quickly be anſwered, 'Tis unhappy enough to be deprived of a Life I love ſo well; but if the Union of my Body and Soul is a State which at preſent belongs to me, and which I paſſionately deſire to preſerve, it can't be pretended, that Death which breaks this Union, is a thing which does not concern me. Let us conclude, that Epicurus and Lucretius's Argument was not juſt, and could only be concluſive againſt the Fear of Pain in another World. There was another ſort of Fear, which they ought to have aſſaulted; to wit, the Fear of the Deprivation of the Pleaſures of this Life. They might ſay, that, taking all together, the Inſenſibility of the Dead is a Gain rather than a Loſs, as being a Deliverance from the Evils of this Life. Now whether theſe Evils ſurpaſs the Goods, as many have believed, or whether they only equal 'em, 'tis an Advantage to be inſenſible; for there's no Man who rightly underſtands his own Intereſts, but would prefer four Hours of good Sleep, before two Hours of Pleaſure, and two Hours of Pain, ſuppoſing 'em equal in degree (a).

(a) See Lucretius, ubi ſupra, v. 913. & ſeq.

Let us ſee a new Paralogiſm of Lucretius. He pretends, that Death would not concern us, even though Senſation ſhould remain in the ſeparate Parts, or tho' Chance ſhould again in time produce a Re-union of Soul and Body. His Reaſon is, that we are compounded of a Soul and Body; and therefore nothing concerns us, but what belongs to us, as we are this Compound. As therefore the Soul, ſeparate from the Body, is not the Man, its Senſations in that State would not be thoſe of the Man; and it would not be true to ſay, that Scipio would be unhappy, under Preſence that Scipio's Soul was unhappy after Scipio's Death. I make uſe of this Example, though it is not contained in theſe Words of Lucretius;

(b) Lucret. ubi ſupra. v. 855. p. m. 173.

Et (b) ſi jam noſtro ſentit de Corpore, poſtquam
Diſtracta eſt Animi natura, Animæque poteſtas:
Nil tamen hoc ad nos, qui cœtu, conjugioque
Corporis atque Animæ conſtiterimus uniter apti.

He thinks it poſſible, that the ſame Atoms a Man is compos'd of, and which are diſſipated by Death, may take in time the ſame Situation, and reproduce a Man: But he will not allow, that the Events which happen to this new Man, ſhould any wiſe concern the former. The Interruption of Life, adds he, prevents our having any Intereſt in what ſhall happen hereafter, in caſe the Ages to come ſhould reſtore us the ſame Humane Nature we had before. The State we were formerly in, is at preſent a thing intirely indifferent to us; and we may ſay the ſame of the States we may be found in, in the time to come.

(c) Id. ib. v. 859.

Nec, (c) ſi materiam noſtram conlegerit ætas
Poſt obitum, rurſumque redegerit, ut ſita nunc eſt;
Atque iterum Nobis fuerint data lumina vitæ,
Pertineat quidquam tamen ad Nos id quoque factum,
Interrupta ſemel cum ſit repetentia noſtra
Et nunc nil ad Nos de Nobis attinet, antè
Qui fuimus, nec jam de illis Nos afficit angor.
Quos de materia noſtra nova proferet ætas:
Nam cum reſpicias immenſi temporis omne
Præteritum ſpatium, tum motus Materiai
Multimodi quam ſint; facilè hoc adcredere poſſis,
Semina ſæpe ſtupri, ut nunc ſunt, ordine poſita:
Nec memori tamen id quimus deprendere mente.
Inter enim jecta eſt vitai pauſa, vagéque
Deerrarunt paſſim motus ab Senſibus omnes.

A Confutation of Lucretius as to what he ſays of the Senſation which might remain after Death.

If Lucretius expected to convince, of theſe two Points, any of his Philoſophy, ſuch as know how to go to the bottom of a Queſtion, he made little uſe of his Underſtanding. Here's an inſtance that will ſet this Matter in a clear Light, though I ſuppoſe it at Pleaſure. Let us fancy a Watch, and let us ſuppoſe it to be animated, to be ſenſible, and capable of Underſtanding what the Maker ſays to it. Let us after this ſuppoſe, that he tells it, he is going to take it to Pieces; that he won't leave two Wheels of it together; that all the Pieces ſhall be ſeparated, and laid each a-part in a Box; that the Senſe ſhall remain, notwithſtanding this Diſſolution; and that the Soul or Principle of Life ſhall retain its Faculties, as to Grief and Joy, &c. Is it not certain, on this Suppoſition, that the Watch will intereſt it ſelf in theſe Senſations, which it is told the Diſperſion of its Parts will put an End to? It will be no longer affected as a Watch: But 'tis ſufficient, for its Miſery, that, as a Senſitive Subſtance, it ſhall feel Heat, Cold, Pain and Trouble, &c. It will certainly be the ſame Subſtance, which had been expos'd to theſe Evils in the Watch; and the Evil it ſhall ſuffer after the Deſtruction of the Compound will only be a Continuation of the Evil it had ſuffer'd, whilſt the Compound ſubſiſted. Apply this to the Soul, and you ſhall ſee, that, if ſhe remain ſenſible after Death, it would be moſt true to ſay, that the ſame Nature which had ſuffer'd Hunger, and Cold, the Fever, and Stone, &c. in a Humane Body, ſuffers other things out of the Humane Body; and that Lucretius's Conſolation is chimerical and ridiculous. What ſignifies it, ſays he, if your Soul be miſerable after Death, you are a Man; the Soul will not be a Man in a ſeparate State; and conſequently the Miſeries of the Soul won't belong to you. A ſilly Conſequence! 'Tis as if Pythagoras had ſaid to a Man, at the Point of Death, your Soul ſhall go into the Body of an Ox; which ſhall be almoſt all its Life yoak'd to the Plough, and ſuffer'd to dye of Hunger at laſt; but that Suffering will not concern you, ſince an Ox is not a Man. Would not this be a wonderful Comfort? People don't ſufficiently attend to this Maxim, That the Subject of the Accidents remains always Numerically the ſame, in all the Tranſformations of Bodies. The ſame Atoms that compoſe Water, are in the Ice, in the Vapours, in the Clouds, in the Hail, and in the Snow: Thoſe which compound the Wheat paſs into the Meal, the Paſte, the Bread, the Blood, the Fleſh, the Bones, &c. If they were Miſerable under the Form of Water, and under that of Ice, it's the ſame Numerical Subſtance, that is to be pitied in both theſe Eſtates; conſequently all the Diſaſters that are to be feared, under the Form of Meal, concern the Atoms which compoſe the Wheat: And nothing ought ſo much to intereſt it ſelf about the Lot and Condition of the Meal as the Atoms of Wheat, tho' they are not to ſuffer in the State and Compoſition of Wheat.

A Confutation of Lucretius, as to what he ſays concerning the Reproduction of the ſame Man.

Let us now confute another Fallacy of Lucretius, and reſume the Example of a Watch. If the Watch-maker ſhou'd ſay to it, I'll keep your Parts diſperſed for three or four Years, but at that Period of Time I'll re-joyn 'em, and make you up again. During the Separation, no Part ſhall feel any Pain; they ſhall all be in a perfect Sleep, but as ſoon as they are reſtor'd to their former Situation, their Labour, their Conſtraint, and State of Suffering ſhall return. Would not a Watch, that ſhould give credit to theſe Words, be fully perſuaded, that it ſelf and no other ſhould be the Watch, that he would put in order at 3 or 4 Years end? It would have the greateſt Reaſon in the World to believe it, and to intereſt it ſelf in this new Watch's Fate and Deſtiny, as its own. In the mean time its firſt Life would have been interrupted. Let us ſay then, that Lucretius too lightly examin'd this Matter, when he affirmed, that Death introducing a long Interval between the firſt and ſecond Life of the ſame Atoms of a Humane Body, would cauſe this firſt and ſecond Life to belong to different Men. I know indeed, that, though we ſuppoſe this kind of Reſurrection, yet we may ſay, that the Miſeries we had ſuffer'd at Rome in Marius and Sylla's Time, don't at all enter into our preſent Fortune. A total Oblivion will ſeparate us from thoſe Times; nevertheleſs we ſhould have been thoſe Miſerable Perſons; and we ſhould be the ſame Men, who had formerly undergone ſo many Misfortunes: From whence it reſults, that, if we ſhould return again into the World a Thouſand Years hence, all the Miſeries we were to ſuffer in that new Life would properly belong to us; and the certain Knowledge of ſuch a Futurity muſt neceſſarily give us Diſturbance. Lucretius therefore has not reaſoned juſtly. There are but two ways a Man can take to calm, in a reaſonable manner, the Fears of another Life. One is to promiſe the Happineſs of Heaven,

They who pretend, that he could not ſay this without contradicting himſelf (O) have but ſlightly read his Work, or but ill comprehended his Thought. This Objection would have given him no trouble: He (P) would have been infinitely harder put to it, to maintain the Attributes of his Gods: For he himſelf lent Arms to thoſe who would attack them; and 'tis in this Part, that his Syſtem appears to be the Production of a Mind that could not reaſon conſequentially.

LUGO

Heaven; the other is to promiſe a Privation of all kind of Senſe. Note, That the Spinoziſts had no Pretence to either of theſe two Conſolations. All their Refuge conſiſts in preparing themſelves for an infinite Circulation of Forms, ever accompanied with Thought, but without knowing, whether they ſhall be more happy or more miſerable than under the Humane Form.

(O) They who pretend, that he could not ſay this without contradicting himſelf, have .... but little comprehended his Notions.] Lactantius charges this Contradiction upon him, and imagines, that the Force of Truth over powered him, and inſinuated it ſelf into his Soul without being perceived. (a) Denique idem Lucretius oblitus, quid aſſereret, & quod dogma defenderet, hos verſus poſuit;

(a) Lactant. lib. 7. cap. 12. p. m. 480.

Cedit item retro de terra quod fuit ante
In terram, ſed quod miſſum eſt ex ætheris oris
Id rurſus Cœli fulgentia templa receptant.

Quod ejus non erat dicere, qui perire animas cum corporibus diſſerebat; ſed victus eſt veritate, & imprudenti ratio vera ſurrepſit. A Dominican, who has lately written concerning the Chineſe Idolatry, perfectly approves this Obſervation of Lactantius, and makes uſe of it to corroborate his Proofs againſt the Jeſuits. " (b) It would be no wonder that the Chineſe ſhould " contradict themſelves, ſince Lucretius one of the " learnedeſt Philoſophers of the Epicurean Sect, who " durſt openly attack the Doctrine of the Soul's Immortality, confeſs'd, notwithſtanding, that if it " diſperſs'd it ſelf after Death, the groſſer Parts were " loſt in the Earth; and the more Subtil and Cœleſtial Parts re-aſcended into the third Region of the " Air, or into Heaven. Thus, ſays Lactantius, he fell " into a manifeſt Contradiction upon the Subject of " the Soul .... (c) The Notion of the Learned of " China, upon this Point, perfectly reſembles that of " Lucretius, and they explain themſelves much as he " did. This Philoſopher maintains, that the Soul " Periſhes with the Body: Nevertheleſs he confeſſes, " that its ſubtileſt Parts aſcend and re-unite in Heaven, " from whence they came. He contradicts himſelf, " though he was a very ingenious Man: And you mention (1), as a great Abſurdity, that the Chineſe who " are a People of a very indifferent Underſtanding without Subtilty, Penetration, and almoſt without Principles, as you declare in your Memoirs, ſhould contradict themſelves, if they believed, that the Pictures " of the Dead were the Seats of their Soul." If the Contradiction of the Chineſe be no groſſer than that which Lucretius is accus'd of, the Adverſaries of the Jeſuits will get little by it; for 'tis certain Lactantius had no reaſon to believe, that Lucretius contradicted himſelf. See the Verſes I have cited in the Remark G of the Article Jupiter, they immediately precede thoſe recited by Lactantius, and ſignify no more than this, that the Earth, impregnated with Atoms which fall from Heaven along with the Rain, produces Plants, and Beaſts, and Men. Lucretius would prove in this Place, that two Kinds of inſenſible Matter may compoſe one entire ſenſible Being. The Earth is inſenſible, the Seeds it receives into its Boſom, and which drop from Heaven, are inſenſible; and yet the Earth, impregnated by thoſe Seeds, produces and nouriſhes Bodies that have Life and Senſe. Death diſunites the Parts of theſe Bodies, but deſtroys nothing of their Subſtance. Thoſe that the Earth ſupply'd are reſtor'd to the Earth; and thoſe which deſcended from the Region of the Æther, aſcend thither again. This manifeſtly means, that the ſubtil Parts which compoſe the Soul, according to Epicurus's Syſtem, evaporate, and exhale, when the Man dies, and diſperſe themſelves in the Air, juſt as we ſee Bodies do in the Chymical Analyſis of Compounds, when the Spirituous Parts gain the Top, and the earthy remain at the Bottom of the Veſſel. Lucretius does not pretend, as the Dominican ſuppoſes, that the Parts of the Soul, go and re-unite in Heaven from whence they came; ſo as to perſevere in a State of Soul, and Thinking Subſtance. He ſuppoſes them † diſſipated, and inſenſible, as they were before the Life of the Animal; and therefore does not believe, that the Soul, quatenus Soul, ſurvives the Man: There is therefore no Contradiction in his Doctrine, and he cannot be alledged for an Example of the Contradictions which the Chineſe would fall into, if they affirmed, on one hand (e), that the Soul is nothing but the ſubtileſt Parts of Thi Kie, or Matter; and pretended on the other, that it deſcends into the Pictures of the Dead from the uppermoſt Region of the Air, where it had re-aſcended.

(b) Lettre d'un Docteur de l'Ordre de S. Dominique ſur les ceremonies de la Chine, au R. P. le Comte de la compagnie de Jeſus, pag. 43, 44. edit. de Cologne, 1700.

(c) The Author ſets down the Words of Lactantius in this Place which we have ſeen juſt before.

(1) Memoires du P. Le Comte Lettre 8.

† Et Nebula ac Fumus quoniam diſcredit in auras: Credo Animam eoque diffundi, multòque perire Ocius, & citiùs diſſolvi corpora priſca, Cum rem lamnibus membris ablata receſſit, &c. Lucret. lib. 3. v. 437. pag. 222.

(P) He would have been infinitely harder put to it, to maintain the Attributes of his Gods. A perfect Tranquillity, and compleat Bliſs, were the principal Qualities (f) attributed to the Gods. He maintain'd on the other hand, that the Nature of Things contain'd nothing but Void and Body;

(e) Lettre d'un Docteur ...: au Pere le Comte ubi ſupra, pag. 43.

(f) See the Remark E.

Omnis (g), ut eſt, igitur, per ſe, Natura, duabus
Conſiſtit rebus; nam Corpora ſunt, & inane.

(g) Lucret. lib. 1. v. 420.

He aſſigns his Reaſons and then concludes,

Ergo (h) præter Inane, & Corpora, tertia per ſe
Nulla poteſt rerum in numero natura relinqui;
Nec, quæ ſub ſenſus cadat ullo tempore noſtros,
Nec, ratione animi quam quiſquam poſſit apiſci.
Nam, quæcunque cluent, aut his conjuncta duabus
Rebus ea invenies: aut horum eventa videbis.

(h) Id. ib. v. 446.

It's eaſily, without an extraordinary Penetration, perceived, that theſe two Doctrines of Lucretius are very inconſiſtent. It's poſſible then that I my ſelf might have diſcovered the Difficulty, which we ſhall ſee by and by; but I had not the Leiſure to conſider it: I have found it, ready to my Hand, in a Book of the Sieur Cotin, before I had conſidered this Subject. And, as it is but juſt to give every one his Due, I ſhall ſet down the Words of this Writer. The Gods (i) have Bodies, or as it were Bodies, ſince betwixt Void and Body, and what reſults from their Union, we cannot ſo much as conceive any other Nature. This Epicurus poſitively teaches;

Rien n'eſt dans l'Univers que le Vuide & les Corps, Et ce qui ſe fait d'eux par diſcordants accords;

ſays the Interpreter of this Philoſopher, who, moreover, believes, that, if the Soul were Incorporeal, it could neither do nor ſuffer any thing. What Felicity then would the Gods have, if they were Incorporeal? ..... (k) Their Bodies are compoſed of Atoms .... and there is a Vacuum betwixt the Parts compoſing theſe Divine Bodies .... ſince Vacuum and Atoms are the Principles of all Things. Every Body .... may be reſolved into Parts which compoſe it; and the Heap of Atoms .... can't eternally ſubſiſt in the ſame manner; they are too volatile, and moveable, to remain always at reſt. Cotin infers from all this, " That Epicurus's Gods, though diſ" charged from Humane Affairs, are not ſo happy " and quiet as he imagins: They are not without " Apprehenſions and Fears of that laſt Separation of " Atoms, which being once diſpers'd through the " Void, will never unite again. Thus, ſays this Phi" loſopher, the Parcels that compoſe the Soul being " once diſpers'd, can never re-unite throughout all " Ages: Otherwiſe we might be, after we had ceaſed to be; that is to ſay, the Reſurrection would " be naturally poſſible. An Hypotheſis, however, " which may be inferr'd from Epicuriſm: Why " may not Chance, which had once united the little " Bodies, that compoſed Pythocles and Metrodorus, " be able to re-unite 'em once again? .... (b) Be" ſides .... the Epicurean Gods having ſettled their " Manſions amidſt thoſe innumerable Worlds, which " fall foul of one another, and make a dreadful Havock, " how can they ſuſtain, without extream Diſturbance, " ſo many ponderous Maſſes falling round about 'em, " and perhaps about their Ears? For Chance knows " 'em not, and conſequently can pay 'em no Reſpect." Note, That this Writer obſerves (c), that moſt of the Epicureans have ſaid, that the Gods .... are not compoſed of Atoms. What I offer hereupon may be ſeen in the Remark F of the Article Epicurus. They perceived, that eternal Felicity, which they attributed to the Gods, was not conſiſtent with the Contex-

(i) Cotin Theoclee, ou la vraye Philoſophie des principes du monde, dialogue 3. pag. 54.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 55.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 57.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 58.

ture

LUGO (FRANCIS de) elder Brother to the Cardinal of this Name, of whom I ſpake before, was born at Madrid in 1580, and became a Jeſuit at Salamanca in 1600. He ſo affected to humble himſelf, that, after having taught Philoſophy, he begg'd of his Superiours the Employ of explaining the Rudiments of Grammar, and obtain'd it. Having afterwards taught Divinity, he deſir'd he might be ſent to the Indies, to teach the Infidels their Catechiſm and Grammar. But they employ'd him to higher Purpoſes: They gave him a Profeſſorſhip of Divinity in the Cities of Mexico and St. Fé. Finding that the Employs given him in this Country did not agree with that Humility in which he deſign'd to live, he deſir'd to be re-call'd to Spain. In his Return he loſt (T) the greateſt Part of his Commentaries upon Thomas Aquinas's Summs. He was deputed to Rome by the Province of Caſtile, to aſſiſt at the eighth General Aſſembly of the Jeſuits, and ſtaid there after the breaking up of this Aſſembly for the Exerciſe of two Employs; that of Cenſor to the Books publiſhed by the Jeſuits, and that of Theologiſt to the General: But finding his Reputation encreaſe daily, after his Brother was made a Cardinal, he return'd into Spain, where he was choſen Rector of two Colledges. He died the 17th of December 1652*. He is the Author of ſeveral (Z) Books. If any one refuſes to believe what I have been ſaying of this Jeſuit's Humility, I ſhan't proſecute him for Incredulity.

* Taken from Nathanael Sotuel, Bibl. Socier. Jeſu pag. 255.

LUGO (JOHN de) a Spaniſh Jeſuit and Cardinal, was born at Madrid the 25th of November 1583; but he always writ himſelf of Sevil, becauſe his (A) Father kept his ordinary Reſidence there. He diſcovered his Parts at three Years of Age, for he could, by that time, read printed Books and Manuſcripts. He maintained ſome Theſes at fourteen, and was ſent ſoon after to Salamanca to ſtudy the Civil-Law. He became a Jeſuit the ſixth of July 1603, in Imitation of his elder Brother, and notwithſtanding the Oppoſitions of his Father. He performed his Courſe of Philoſophy with the Jeſuits at Pampelona, and ſtudied Divinity at Salamanca. After the ture of Atoms. It was neceſſary therefore to give 'em another Nature; but hereby they ruined the Fundamental Article of their Syſtem, that Capital Principle which is the Baſis of their Phyſicks, that Atoms and Void are the Principles of all Things. I don't think Lucretius could ever get clear of this Difficulty. He muſt either have given up the Bleſſed Eternity of his Deities, or his two-fold Principles, there being no Way to retain both theſe Doctrines at the ſame time. Hence we may judge, that the Hypotheſis of the Exiſtence of the Gods; which is the richeſt Jewel in the Syſtem of Anaxagoras, and ſome other Philoſophers, and the nobleſt and moſt excellent Piece of the whole Machine, is the weakeſt part of the Epicurean Syſtem. Their Founder, having deliver'd himſelf from all Fears, with Reſpect to the Divine Juſtice, found himſelf, in other Reſpects, more embarraſs'd by his Gods, than if he had aſcrib'd to 'em a Providence. He durſt not deny them Exiſtence, and yet he knew not what to do with 'em, or where to place 'em. Whatever he could ſay of 'em, made a Breach in his Syſtem, and expoſed him to invincible Objections. See how Cicero has turn'd him into Ridicule, as well (e) upon the Subtilty of the Divine Bodies, as their Humane (f) Shape, &c.

(e) Cicero de Natura Deor. lib. 1. ſect. 68. pag. 95. & lib. 2. ſect. 59. pag. 313.

(f) Id. ib. lib. 1. ſect. 91. pag. 132.

Whether Epicurus own'd a Providence.

The Sieur Cotin taxes him with a palpable Contradiction, upon the Chapter of Divine Providence. "(g) What will you ſay, if I ſhew you, by a preciſe and formal Paſſage of Epicurus, that he not only believed a Deity, but alſo owned his Providence? .... This Paſſage is in his Epiſtle to Meneceus (1); 'Tis certain there are Gods: But we muſt have a care of attributing to God, [Mark this] who is an Immortal and moſt Happy Being, any Quality repugnant to his immutable Felicity. No, he is not impious, who does not believe that Croud of Gods, which the greateſt part of Men imagine and never ſee; but he who believes things too mean and unworthy of 'em. The Gods ſhower upon theſe Profane Wretches, who diſhonour them by their falſe Opinions, innumerable Calamities; and, on the contrary, heap Benefits upon the Wiſe and Good. The Reaſon whereof is this; becauſe they love their Like, and think that what is not agreeable to Vertue, is neither agreeable to their Nature. Seneca, Epictetus and Plato could not ſpeak more Divinely. Epicurus, thou, at the bottom of thy Soul, art Religious, becauſe Nature can't wholly deny it ſelf: The Misfortune is, that thou canſt not ſay what thou ſayeſt without contradicting thy ſelf." Here you ſee an Apoſtrophe, and a Piece of Morality, which had been very well placed, if the Author had brought 'em into one of his Sermons. But if he had, they had been ill-grounded; for 'tis not true that Epicurus ever writ to Meneceus, what Cotin aſcribes to him. Let us ſee the Greek Words, with the learned Gaſſendus's Latin Tranſlation, which will clearly ſhew, that Epicurus's Notion is as remote from Cotin's Senſe, as Heaven from Earth. (h) Ἀσεβὴς ὃν ἐχ' ὁ τοὺς τῶν πολλῶν θεοὺς ἀναιρῶν, ἀλλ' ὁ ταῖς τῶν πολλῶν δόξαις θεοῖς προσκείμενος. Οὐ γὰρ προλήψεις εἰσὶν, ἀλλ' ὑπολήψεις ψευδεῖς αἱ τῶν πολλῶν ὑπὲρ θεῶν εἰσφοραί. Ἔνθεν αἱ μεγίσται βλάβαι ἄνωθεν, παῖς περιοῖς ἐκ θεῶν ἐπιγίνονται, καὶ ὠφελίαι παῖς ἀγαθοῖς. Ταῖς γὰρ ἰδίαις οἰκειούμενοι διὰ παντὸς τὰς ὁμοίας ἀποδέχονται, πᾶν τὸ μὴ τοιοῦτον, ὡς ἀλλότριον νομίζοντες. Impius eſt proinde, non is, qui vulgareis multitudinis Deos tollit; ſed is, qui multitudinis opiniones, Diis adhibet. Non enim germanæ prænotiones ſunt, ſed ſuſpiciones falſæ, ea, quæ de Diis ab hominibus è vulgo traduntur. Arbitrantur quippe & malis detrimenta maxima; & bonis præſidia à Diis advenire: ſiquidem propriis virtutibus, ſeu affectibus immutati, ſimileis ſui Deos admittunt, & quicquid affectuum ſuorum non eſt, id exiſtimant ab ipſis alienum.

(h) Diog. Laert. lib. 10. (n. 122, 124.) pag. 46 Tom. 5. operum Gaſſendi.

But this Contradiction would in no caſe concern Lucretius; and, if I have mention'd it, it's only to ſhew the beſt and the worſt Side of the Criticiſms on him.

(g) Cotin, ubi ſuppra. pag. 59.

(1) Diog. Laert. in the Life of Epicurus.

(T) The greateſt Part of his Commentaries.] He was like to have been taken himſelf by the Hollanders. Dum renavigat in Hiſpaniam claſſe ab Hollandis interceptâ, ipſe quidem in terram evaſit in Inſula Cuba, ſed maximâ partis commentariorum ſuorum in totam ſummam Theologicam Sancti Thomæ jacturam ſecit (i).

(i) Nathanael Sotuel Biblioth. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 255.

(Z) He is the Author of ſeveral Books.] The Titles are theſe which follow; and which ſhew, that he wrote upon the ſame things as his Brother. Commentarii in primam partem S. Thomæ de Deo, Trinitate, & Angelis, at Lions in 1647, two Volumes in Folio. De Sacramentis in genere, baptiſmo, confirmatione, & Sacra Euchariſtia, at Venice in 1652, in 4°. Diſcurſus prævius ad Theologiam moralem, ſive de principiis moralibus actuum humanorum, at Madrid 1643, in 4°. Quæſtiones morales de Sacramentis, at Grenada in 1645 in 4° (k).

(k) Taken from Sotuel, ibid.

(A) Becauſe his Father kept his Ordinary Reſidence there.] He had a very honourable Employ there: I would name it, if I knew how it was called (l) in Spaniſh: But not knowing it, I ſhall uſe the Latin Words of Don Nicolas Antonio. (m) Joannes de Lugo, Joannis filius civis & Jurati (quamvis ſecundi ſubſellii decurionas vocant) Hiſpalenſis. The States of the Kingdom being called to Madrid, he aſſiſted there (n) as Deputy of his Country: He married in the ſame City Tereſa de Quiroga, and had (o) the Son by her, who is the Subject of this Article. This Son might have been more rightly ſirnamed Hiſpalenſis than Madritenſis; for when a Woman lyes in, in a Journey, 'tis not uſual to make that the Child's Birth-

(l) I believe they are called Jurados.

(m) Bibliotheca Scriptor. Hiſpan. Tom. 1. pag. 356.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Nath. Sotuel, Biblioth. Scriptor. Societat. pag. 475.

the Death of his Father, he was sent by his Superiours to Sevil, to take possession of his Patrimony which was very considerable. He divided it with his Brother's Consent betwixt the Jesuits of Sevil and Salamanca. He taught Philosophy † for five Years and afterwards was made Professor of Divinity at Valladolid. The Ability with which he discharged this Employ, made him esteem'd worthy of a more eminent Chair: Accordingly in the fifth Year of his Professorship he received Orders to go to Rome, to teach Divinity there. He set out in March 1621; and, having escaped several Dangers in crossing the Provinces of France, he arriv'd at Rome in the Beginning of June the same Year. He profess'd Divinity there 20 Years together, with a mighty Reputation; for he thoroughly understood the School-Men: He made a good Choice ‡ of the Opinions he defended, and was admirable for joining Brevity with Perspicuity. He minded only his own Business, without losing time in making Court to the Cardinals, or frequenting Ambassdors Houses. He never affected to be an Author, but having received a Command to publish some of his Works, his Vow of Obedience did not permit him to dispense with it. He printed seven large (B) Volumes in Folio; the fourth of which he dedicated to Urban VIII. [redacted] Pope made him a Cardinal the 14th of December 1643. Some very singular Things are related concerning (C) the little Ambition of this Jesuit. Whilst he was Cardinal he shew'd himself very charitable to the Poor: He liberally distributed the (D) Quinquina to such as were troubled with Agues. He died the twentieth of August 1660, leaving all his Substance to the Jesuits of the Profess'd Colledge at Rome, and would be buried at the Feet of Ignatius Loyola, the Founder of the Order *. He invented the Hypothesis of (E) turgid Points, to solve the unsurmountable Objections, both against the Divisibility † Nicolas Antonio, Biblioth. Scriptor. Hispan. Tom. 1. pag. 56. says, that de Lugo taught Philosophy at Medina del Campo.

‡ Erat quippe in seligendis melioribus sententiis præstantis judicii, in explicandis iisdem eximiæ claritatis, & cum perspicuitate, quod rarum est, conjungebat congruam brevitatem. Nat. Sotuel Bibliotheca Scriptor. Societ. Jesu, pag. 471, 472.

* Id. ib.

Birth-Place where he was born, but where his Parents lived. This is the Case of Children of Ambassadors, born in the Places of their Embassy. They are reckon'd Natives of the Places where their Father would reside, were they not Ambassadors: And because they are absent upon the publick Account, Reipublicæ Causa, their Children have the same Privileges as those who are born at Home. Thus it [redacted] with Cardinal de Lugo's Father; he only so[redacted] Madrid, as Deputy of Sevil, to the Assem[redacted] States of the Kingdom.

(B) Seven large Volumes in Folio.] The Ist treats de Incarnatione Dominica, and was printed at Lions in 1633 and 1653. The IId treats de Sacramentis in genere & de ven. Eucharistiæ sacramento & sacrificio, at Lions 1636. The IIId treats de virtute & sacramento pœnitentiæ, at Lions 1638, 1644 and 1651. The IVth, and Vth, de Justitia & Jure, at Lions 1642 & 1652. The VIth de virtute divinæ fidei, at Lions 1646 and 1656. The VIIth is a Collection responsorum moralium, at Lions 1651 & 1660. Besides this, he wrote Notes, in privilegia viva vocis oraculo concessa societati, printed at Rome in 1645 in 12°; and he translated the Life of the Blessed Lewis de Gonzague (a) out of Italian into Spanish. The fourth of these Volumes was dedicated to Pope Urban VIII. The Author hereupon was obliged (b) to go and pay his Respects to this Pope, whom he had never spoke to. He was favourably received by him; and from that time Urban employ'd him on many Occasions, and express'd a particular Affection for him. De Lugo seeing himself obliged to be an Author, employ'd no Amanuensis, nor any other Person to fit his Manuscripts for the Press. He himself underwent all this great Labour (c). Father Maimbourg has made use of a Thought of this Cardinal; which perhaps, will not be improper here, and may assist the Reader in understanding the Principles of this Spanish Doctor. The Church, says Father Maimbourg (d), has not yet thought it necessary to determine any thing essential concerning the immaculate Conception of the Holy Virgin. It has not used this Method concerning her Exemption from venial Sin, having decided that Point as being an Appurtenance of Faith.... She has consulted the Scriptures, and Apostolical Tradition, and the Sense of the Holy Fathers, upon the Quality of the Mother of God, to discover the whole Extent of it. (1) And as hereupon she found the Exemption from Venial Sin to be comprehended in this Supreme Dignity, as a necessary Consequence in its Principle, she has defined it as a Point of Faith (2), revealed in the Word of God which implies it. This is the Remark of the learned and subtle Cardinal de Lugo (3), in his excellent Treatise concerning Faith, which I had the Honour to receive from him at Rome, when I was his Disciple.

(C) Concerning the little Ambition of this Jesuit.] He was created a Cardinal without his Knowledge, or the least thought that the Pope had any such Design. Hearing the News of his Creation, he was almost confounded [redacted] not give the Messenger, who brought the [redacted] the Present due to him on such Occasions: The Reason he gave for it was, that this News was disagreeable to him; and he would not suffer the Colledge of Jesuits to give any Testimonies of Joy, or Play-Days to the Scholars. He look'd on the Coach, that Cardinal Francis Barberini [redacted] him, as his Coffin; and, [redacted] was in the [redacted]pe's Palace, he declared to the [redacted], that were preparing to put on his Cardinal's [redacted], that he desir'd above all things to represent to his Holiness, that the Vows he had made, as a Jesuit, forbad him to accept the Cardinal's Cap. He was answer'd, that the Pope dispens'd with those Vows: Dispensations, replied he, leave a Man to his natural Liberty, which if I am permitted to enjoy, I shall always refuse the Cardinalship. They were forced to introduce him to the Pope: To whom he exposed his Reasons and ask'd him, whether his Holiness commanded him, in Vertue of Holy Obedience, to accept this Dignity: The Pope answer'd, he did; whereupon de Lugo humbly acquiesc'd, and stoop'd to receive the Hat. The Purple did not hinder his retaining a Jesuit constantly near him, as a perpetual Witness of his Actions: He continued to Dress and Undress himself without the Assistance of any of his Domesticks. He would have no Tapestries spread in his Palace; and he settled [redacted] regular Orders in it, that it was a kind of Semin[redacted] This is a good part of Father Sotuel's Story (e) [redacted] very one may believe of it what he pleases.

(D) He liberally distributed the Quinquina.] This Febrifugous Drug came from Peru. 'Tis brought to Rome in 1650, by the Jesuits; from whence it is called in some Places Jesuits Powder. There was an Attempt to cry it down, which made Father (f) Fabri publish a Book at Rome in the Year 1655, intitled Pulvis Peruvinus Febrifugus vindicatus. This Powder was then very dear, as the Librarian Sotuel affirms. By this he heightens the Cardinal's Charity. (g) Quibusque (pauperibus) corticem Peruanum non levis pretii contra febres benigne & liberaliter distribuebat. It's observed, in Furetiere's Dictionary, at the Word Quinquina, that this Drug was called at first, Cardinal de Lugo's Powder.

(E) He invented the Hypothesis of turgid Points.] To speak more exactly, I think it ought to be said, that finding this Hypothesis almost d[redacted]'d, he adopted it, and gave it a vogue. It d[redacted] remedy the Difficulties that are propos'd ag[redacted] thematical Points: And besides it manifest[redacted] des an inconceiveable Absurdity; which is, that a Corpuscle, which in it self has neither Parts nor Extension, should swell at such a rate, as to fill many Parts of Space. The ordinary Doctrine of the School-Men, co[redacted]ing Rarefaction, occasion'd John de Lugo's attempt to evade the great Inconveniencies of that [redacted]y. The School-Men teach, that a rarefied Bo[redacted]es up more Space than it did before, without acquiring any new Parts of Matter: The same Body, lay

(a) Taken from Sotuel, ubi supra.

(b) Ea occasione necesse habuit adire suam Sanctitatem, quam nunquam antea fuerat allocutus. Id. ib. p. 472.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Maimbourg, Methode pacifique, pag. 60 of the 3*d Edition, which was in* 1682.

(1) Aug. lib. de nat. & grat. c. 36.

(2) Conc. Trid.

(3) Disp. 3. sect. 5. n. 73.

(e) Ubi supra. Nicolas [redacted]nio, [redacted]ra, [redacted]e- [redacted] same things.

(f) He disguised himself in the Title-Page of this Book, under the Name of Antimus Coningius. Sotuel ubi supra, pag. 550.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 472.

ry of Parts ad Infinitum, and againſt Mathematical Points. A Fragment of one of his (F) Letters has open'd a pretty curious Myſtery; which is, that there has ſometimes been a nice Piece of Policy in the Devotion to the Holy Virgin. He is ſaid to be the firſt Author of the Diſcovery of the Philoſophical Sin (FΔ).

LUPERCALIA, a Feaſt celebrated by the Romans, on the 15th of February. [redacted]ius † was not the Inventer of it, but Evander, who introduced it into Italy β, [redacted]er he retired ſixty Years before the Trojan War. As Pan was the great Divinity of Arcadia, Evander, a Native of that Country appointed the Feaſt of the Lupercalia γ in Honour of this God, to be celebrated in the Place where he built Houſes for the Colony he brought with him; that is, upon the Palatin Mount. He there built a δ Temple to this God; and ordained a ſolemn Feaſt, which was celebrated by Sacrifices offered to him; and by the Races of naked People, with Whips in their Hands, wherewith they laſh'd all they met in their way. Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus cites Ælius Tubero, whoſe Exac[redacted] he commends, to ſhew, that this Feaſt was celebrated, according to Evander's [redacted]ution, before Romulus and Remus thought of building Rome. But, as it's pretended, that they were nurs'd by a Wolf, in the very Place which Evander had conſecrated to the God Pan, no doubt this determin'd Romulus to continue the Feaſt of the Lupercalia, and to render it more famous. The Luperci (which was the Name of the Prieſts, who officiated in this particular Worſhip of Pan) were divided into two Claſſes; one of which ζ bore the Name of Quintilians, the other that of Fabians, to perpetuate, as is ſaid, the Memory of Quintilius and Fabius, the Heads, one of Romulus's Party, and the other of Remus's. A long time after was added to 'em the College or Society η of Julians, in Honour of Julius Cæſar. Mark Antony (A) got himſelf [redacted]ter'd into this Society. Though the Celebration of the Lupercalia was only fit [redacted]isgrace Religion, yet Auguſtus θ perceiving, that it had been diſcontinued for ſome Years, gave Orders for the re-eſtabliſhing it (B). This is infinitely β Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, l. 1.

† Valerius Maximus, l. 2. c. 2. goes no higher than Romulus.

γ In hujus (montis Palatini) radicibus templum Lyceo quem Græci Pana, Romani Lupercum appellant conſtituit. (Evander) Ipſum Dei ſimulacrum nudum caprina pelle amictum eſt, quo habitu nunc Romæ Lupercalibus decurritur. Juſtinus, l. 43. c. 1.

δ Called Lupercal.

ζ See Ovid Faſtor. l. 2.

η Dion, lib 44. (Hofman cites 24.) Sueton. in Cæſar. c. 76.

θ Sueton. in Aug. c. 31.

[redacted] (b) Roder. de Arriaga diſput. tom. XVI. phyſica, ſect. 9. pag. 421. & ſeq. edit. Pariſ. 1639. (a) Morale Pratique des Jeſuites Tom. I. pag. 270. (aa) A la pag. 119, 120. (1) Dices ſaltem illo bene tempore, quo ſine culpa ignoretur Deus, poſſet aliquis mori ante cognitionem Dei. Quid igitur fieret de illo adulto ſine peccato mortali? Reſpondeo f[redacted] cilè .... in noſtro caſu dicendum pertinere ad eandem providentiam Dei, ut nullus infidelis adultus moreatur, donec vel cognoſcat Deum, vel ſaltem dubiter, [redacted] culp[redacted] ter [redacted] tat [redacted] queſti[redacted] nem, vel, non obſtante illo dubio committat alia peccata gracia: quæ quidem jam eum omnino mortalia, cum opponat ſe periculo offendendi illum Conditorem, de quo dubitat an ſit. De Lugo Tract. de Incarnat.

ſay they, ſometimes poſſeſſes a greater Space, and ſometimes a leſſ[redacted]t as this Doctrine is abſolutely incomprehen[redacted]and contradictory, it could be[redacted] but of very ſmall advantage to this Jeſuit. See how Arriaga (b) confutes him without naming him.

(F) A Fragment of one of his Letters.] The Jeſuits teach the immaculate Conception not out of Piety, but out of Hatred to the Dominicans, and to render 'em odious to the People. The Cardinal de Lugo, a [redacted]it, writ this Letter to one of their Fathers at Ma[redacted]. I deſire your Reverence may be pleas'd to take [redacted], that your Society diligently apply themſelves in [redacted]r Quarters, to enforce the Devotion of the Concep[redacted]tion, which the People of Spain are very fond of, to ſee if, by that means, we can give the Dominicans a Diverſion, who preſs us hard here in defending St. Auſtin: And, I believe, if we can't oblige 'em to employ themſelves upon ſome other Subject, they will conquer us in the principal Points de Auxiliis (a).

(FΔ) That he is the firſt Author of the Diſcovery of the Philoſophical Sin.] See the Book intituled, The Philoſophiſm of the Jeſuits of Marſeilles, there you'll find the following (aa) [redacted]s: "That which em- "baraſſe's de Lugo, in [redacted]ing actuall Sins, purely "Philoſophical in a Savage, at leaſt during the ſhort "time in which he ſuppoſes and maintains, that "he may be inculpably ignorant of God, is, that this "Savage may poſſibly die, within this ſmall time, "in his Philoſophical Sins; and that he does not "know what God may think fit to do with, nor "what Judgment he may paſs upon ſuch a Sinner, "nor in what Rank he may diſpoſe of him for Eter- "nity. Others of the Jeſuits conſign him to the "Limbo of Still-born Infants after a Temporal Pu- "niſhment, proportion'd to the Philoſophical Sin, "of what Nature ſoever it be, whether Parricid, "Inceſt, &c. But de Lugo chooſes rather to eſta- "bliſh a new Order of Providence.... In this "new Order, God, rather than baniſh out of the "World the Philoſophical Sin, which is ſo neceſſa- "ry in it, or be puzzled what to do in the next, "with this ſort of Sinners, will work a Miracle "ſooner than let 'em die in this State. He will af- "ford 'em [redacted]fore they leave this World, juſt as "much K[redacted]e of the true God, as ſhall be ne- "ceſſary t[redacted]ly 'em for ſinning Theologically, or "at leaſt a[redacted]much Light as may be neceſſary to "create a Doubt in their Minds, concerning the Ex- "iſtence of a God, and wait and prolong their "Life till they have committed, with this Know- "ledge or under this Doubt, ſome Sin which [redacted] "may proceed againſt as a Mortal Sin, and pu[redacted], "as eternally puniſhable; becauſe, that, by Sinning "in this State, they expoſe themſelves to the Danger "of offending him, who has given them their Being. "The Thought is wholly new, and worthy of him, "who appears to be the firſt Jeſuit, who made the "Diſcovery of the Philoſophical Sin." One eaſily ſees that the Author, who thus ſets forth the [redacted]this Jeſuit, mixes ſome Touches of Rail[redacted]in what he ſays: But after all, it is not ſtrange that a Doctor ſhould be at a Non-Plus, when he endeavours to reconcile the eternal Damnation of a Man to thoſe natural Ideas, which clearly diſcover to us, that, in order to an Action's having on it a Character of Morality, it's indiſpenſably neceſſary, that a Perſon, committing this Action, know whether it be good or bad, or at leaſt is ignorant through his own Fault. Let's conclude that it's no great wonder one ſhou'd ſtumble in ſuch a Way, ſince one can hardly avoid making ſome falſe Steps, even when he propoſes to acquit the Judgments of God, of whatever ſeemingly makes them appear not ſo equitable. The Suppoſition of our de Lugo does not tend to diminiſh the Number of the damn'd, but to render 'em more notoriouſly damn'd.

(A) Mark Antony got himſelf enter'd into their Society.] Cicero, in his ad Philippick, tells him, Ita erat Lupercus, ut te conſulem eſſe meminiſſe deberes; whence we may reaſonably conclude, that he was a Julian Lupercus; for ſo great a Flatterer of Julius Cæſar, as he, would have been far from entering into either of the two ancient Societies, whilſt there was a new one eſtabliſh'd in Honour of Julius Cæſar. But, without any need of drawing Concluſions, we find the Fact clearly in Cicero's Oration againſt Mark Antony, as Dion (b) Caſſius relates it. Τὰ δὲ Λουπερκάλια ἃ πρότερον ἐν τῷ ἰανουαρίῳ τῷ Γενάλι ἐτέλουντο; that is, according to Xylander's Tranſlation, Nimirum agenda ei erant Lupercalia uni ex Collegio Julio. Father Abram (c) has tranſlated this Greek more exactly, thus, Lupercalia enim erant, & ipſe in ſodalitate Julia erat conſtitutus. After Julius Ceſar's Death, the Revenues were taken away from the Luperci, which he had beſtowed upon 'em. Mark Anthony complains of it, in his Letter to Hirtius and Octavius, which is ſo exactly confuted by Cicero in the thirteenth Philippick. Manutius reading thus the Paſſage, Veſtigalia Juliana Lupercis ademiſtis, is (d) in Pain to know whether Ceſar's Liberality extended to all the Colleges of the Luperci, or only to that which was conſecrated to himſelf; but Father Abram (e) is in no Doubt, ſince he follows this reading, Veſtigalia Julianis Lupercis ademiſtis. See Nonius's (f) Citation of Cicero's Letter to the young Ceſar.

(B) For the re-eſtabliſhing it.] Moreri makes Suetonius ſay, that Auguſtus reſtor'd the three Societies of the Luperci. This ſuppoſes they had been all ſuppreſs'd, but Suetonius has no ſuch thing: He only ſays, that Auguſtus re-eſtabliſh'd the Lupercalian Ceremonies, ſacrum Lupercale, which had been by degrees aboliſhed. How many Eccleſiaſtical or Civil

(b) Lib. 45.

(c) Commentar. in 2 Philipp. pag. 704.

(d) In Philipp. 13.

(e) In Philipp. 13. pag. 703.

(f) Voce Conſtat. The Letter is cited in the ſecond Book.

nitely less strange, than to see it continued under Christian Emperors, and to find, that when, at last, Pope Gelasius, in the Year 496, would tolerate it no ‡ longer, there were Christians found amongst the Senators themselves, who endeavour'd to maintain it, as appears by † the Apology which the Pope writ against them. Not only the Luperci ran like mad Men along the Streets, during the Lupercalia, having only a little Girdle to cover their Pudenda; but several young People of Quality, and some (C) of the principal Magistrates, * ran along with them in the same Posture, anointed (D) with Oil of Olives, and lash'd the People who came in their Way. In Augustus's † Time, no Beardless Youth was permitted to run with the Luperci. The Women were so far from fearing these Stripes, that, on the contrary, they voluntarily § expos'd themselves to them, in hopes of being impregnated, if barren, or being more easily deliver'd, if with Child: But I much doubt what Pope Gelasius says, that * the Roman Ladies receiv'd the Whip stark-naked, and publickly on these Occasions: I believe they only reach'd out their Hands (E), as a Boy does ‡, who receives the Ferula from

‡ See Baronius, Tom. 6 ad ann. 496. n. 28. & seq.

† Baronius, ubi supra, sets it down in-tire.

* Plutarch, in the Life of Cæsar, and in that of Mark Anthony. See also Festus in voce Crepi.

† Lupercalibus vetuit currere imberbes. Sueton. ubi supra.

§ Plut. in Cæsare & in Romulo.

* Apud illos nobiles ipsi currebant & matronæ, nudato publice corpore, vapulabant. Apud Baronium, ubi supra. n. 38.

‡ Plut. in Cæsare.

(g) De Divinat. lib. 2. fol. m. 318. verso.

(b) In vita Antonii.

(i) In vita Cæsar.

(k) Ibid.

(l) In vita Antonii.

(m) In vita Cæsar.

(n) Apud Dion. lib. 45.

Customs are there, which fall insensibly into disuse, though the Bodies or Societies, which ought to practise 'em, subsist with all their Incomes? Do's not Cicero say somewhere (g), that the ancient Custom of the Auspices was hardly any longer observ'd? And yet the Colleges of the Augurs, Pontiffs, &c. subsisted as before.

(C) And some of the principal Magistrates.] This we learn from Plutarch: Διεθουν δ', says he (b), τῶν εὐγενῶν υἱοὶ πολλοὶ καὶ τῶν ἀρχόντων. Discurrunt autem & ex nobilibus juvenes multi & ex Magistratibus. He says the same in another Place (i), and uses the Word, ἀρχόντων. They who translate it, those who have the greatest Magistracy for that Year, or who are then in the Magistracy, hit it, in my Opinion, not a-miss: For a Parenthesis, which Plutarch uses in another Place (k), clearly shews, that he believed the Consuls were obliged to run naked with the Luperci. Ἀντώνιος δ' τῶν θεόντων ἦν ἱερεὺς ὑπατεύων (ἦν γὰρ αὐτῶν καὶ ὑπατεύων.) Antonius autem unus eorum erat qui sacrum cursum peragebant (gerebat enim Consulatum.) But 'tis very probable, that Plutarch imposes upon his Readers; For if the Custom was such (I'll set down his own (l) Words as they are in our English Translation) that on this Day, there were many young Noblemen, and even those who had the greatest Magistracies that Year, who ran stark-naked through the City, anointed with Oil of Olives, &c. If (m) Anthony was one of those that ran this sacred Course (of the Lupercalia) as being then Consul, how is it that Cicero ventured to say, in a full Senate (n), that, from the Foundation of Rome, not only no Consul, but no Prætor, no Tribune of the People, no Ædile, ever did what Mark Anthony dar'd do? Now, what was that Action of his? 'Twas this, that, being Consul, he went naked, and greas'd with Ointments, to the publick Place, under pretence of the Lupercalia, got into the Pulpit, and harangued the People. Mark Anthony endeavoured to justify this Conduct by his Quality of Lupercus: But he was answer'd, that the Quality of Consul, which he then bore, ought to take place of that of Lupercus; and that every Body knew, that the Consulship was a Dignity of the whole People, whose Majesty ought ever to be preserv'd, and not exposed or rendred contemptible in any respect whatsoever. Let no Body tell me, that Cicero do's not blame this Consul, for his haranguing the People naked; for besides, that the contrary appears from the Citations before-mentioned, we must know, that Cicero made use of a Figure, which manifestly contains this Maxim, The Lupercalia might be celebrated in all the Ceremonies belonging to it, without the Consuls dishonouring the whole City, by his Nudity and Postures. 'Tis certain therefore, that Plutarch is deceived: For Cicero, more worthy of Credit than he, in what concerns the Dignity of the Consulship, takes it for granted, that the Lupercal Races were inconsistent with this Dignity; and that never any Consul, or any of the principal Magistrates of Rome, bore a Part in 'em before Mark Anthony: But Plutarch pretends, that the Consul, and the other Magistrates, were always Parties in 'em.

Who would not be surpris'd to find Father Abram (a) draw this Consequence from the Principles and Reasoning of Cicero, That one and the same Person was to be Consul and Lupercus; unum & eundem & consulem & Lupercum fieri debuisse. 'Twas easy for him to confute this Consequence by the Words in which Plutarch affirms, as we have already seen, that the young Roman Nobility and Magistrates, ran the Races in the Lupercalia. He adds, in Confirmation, the Passage of the same Historian, in which 'tis said, that, because Mark Anthony was Consul, he was one of these Runners; and thence concludes, that Plutarch meant to insinuate, that they who were not Magistrates were excluded from these Races. A Man would almost think of renouncing Study, to see ingenious Men entangled in such Absurdities, upon Things as clear as the Sun. He ought at least to have refuted Plutarch, by the long Passage of Dion, which he has partly cited, and partly referr'd to.

Britannicus (b) affirms, that 'twas lawful for all, whether Men or Women, to celebrate this Feast: Whence Plutarch writes, that Mark Anthony, in celebrating it, was carried along the Streets stark-naked in a Coach, by Women and Maids stark-naked (c). This Commentator has but ill expres'd his Meaning; For how could a Man, that was carried by Women, ride in a Coach through the City? But this is not the worst of it; 'tis hardly to be doubted, but he has erroneously father'd this upon Plutarch; and that at bottom, it's false. Were it true, Cicero's Philippicks, which don't mention it, would, doubtless, have thundred against it.

(D) Anointed with Oil of Olives.] I have followed the Translation of Xylander. Others translate Plutarch's Greek, ἀλειμμένος λίπα, by unguento delibuti. The Difference is small; Cicero speaking of the Lupercalia (d) of Mark Antony, makes use of the Words unguentis oblitus. Lloyd fancies he says a thing but little known, when he tells us, that he had learnt from a Passage of Appian, that the Luperci anointed their Bodies. Nudum etiam corpus tunc illis unctum nescio an vulgo notum sit, sed erudo ex Appian. lib. 2. Bell. Civil. He neither cites Plutarch; nor Dion, nor Cicero; but confines himself to the citing Appian, who has only copied Plutarch, except in the (e) Parenthesis in the Margin, where 'tis expressly observed, that this Unction was a customary thing.

(E) I believe they only reach'd out their Hands, as a Boy.] I don't pretend to censure, as false, what Charles Stephens, and several of his Transcribers or Originals say, viz. that the Luperci, running naked through the City, lash'd the Women on their Hands and Bellies: Nudi per urbem currebant mulierum palmas uteraque caprina pelle ferientes. But I maintain, that this does not justify Pope Gelasius; for it must be, undoubtedly, supposed, that the Blows upon the Belly were given with the Cloaths on. As for the little Story which Ovid tells, and which seems to make against me; I answer, 1. That it only relates to the particular time, in which the Oracle was given; and that it must not be believed, that any Women, but those who were then married, and at the Age of Child-Bearing, submitted to the Sentence of the Oracle. I say, 2dly, that Ovid does not explain how or by whom they were lash'd; whether naked, or in their Cloaths; whether by their Husbands, or the Luperci. Take what way you please, you'll never find the Proof of Pope Gelasius's Assertion; for their Husbands were far from whipping 'em publickly, since the Oracle did not command it; or from suffering the Luperci to whip 'em, otherwise than under a Guard: And as the Grand (f) Pontifex whipp'd the Vestals, who had suffer'd the Sacred Fire to go out. This manner of Execution fulfill'd the Sense of the Oracle; and 'tis to be believ'd, that the Husbands went no farther, and, perhaps too, stood ready at Hand to prevent the Luperci's using one sort of Rod for another.

(a) In Philipp. 2. pag. 704.

(b) Britannicus in Juvenal. Satyr. 2. v. 142. pag. 83. edit. Paris. 1613. in 4°.

(c) Præter Sacerdotes licebat omnibus tam viris quam mulieribus ludos celebrare, unde scribit Plut. M. Antonium nudum in Lupercalibus curru per urbem fuisse vectum à matronis & virginibus omnia membra nudatis. Id ibid.

(d) Philipp. 13.

(e) Ἀγρίῳ ὑπεπτέον ἀν αὐτῷ καὶ σκεπτέον ἐν διαφόρῳ τέτε μυρὸς ἀλαλειμμένος (δεῖται γὰρ οἰδαμῶν οἱ ἱερεῖς ἰχρὸς) ἐπὶ τὸ ἅμαξαν ἀναβῆναι μέλλει ἐπιφανῶν διὰ τῆς πόλεως. Lloyd voce Lupercalia. The Passage of Appian doth say, Antonius ipsius in Consulatu Collega discurrens nudus & unctus. (ut mos est per id solemne Lupercis) conscendensque rostra diadema capiti ejus imposuit.

(f) Note, That this way of Whipping the Vestals was not then in use at Rome, since it was Numa and not Romulus, who instituted 'em. See Dion. Halicarn. l. 2. c. 66.

Ovid's

from his Maſter †. As to the Ceremonies the Luperci were to obſerve in Sacrificing (which were, doubtleſs, very ſingular, ſince amongſt other things, there were to be two Boys preſent who laugh'd aloud) ſee Plutarch in the Life of Romulus. And as for the Reaſons of theſe Prieſts being naked, during the Divine Service, and of their running along the Streets, ſee Ovid, who gives a great many of them, in his ſecond Book of Faſ[illegible] is taken from the ill Succeſs of Pan's Amours, which are pleaſant enough (F) [illegible] which have been wretchedly related by Du Boulai.

† Hence comes this Expreſſion of Juvenal, Niſi prodeſt agili palmas præbere Luperco. Satyra 2. v. 142.

LUTHER (MARTIN) a Reformer of Religion in the XVIth Century. His Hiſtory is ſo well known, and is found in ſo many Books, and particularly in Moreri that I ſhan't trouble my ſelf to repeat it. I ſhall principally inſiſt on the Falſhoods which have been publiſhed of him. No Regard has been had in this Point either to Probability, or to the Rules of the Art of Slandering: And yet the Authors of 'em have aſſum'd all the Confidence of thoſe who fully believe, that the Publick will implicitly eſpouſe all the Calumnies, be they ever ſo abſurd. They have dared to publiſh that an Incubus (A) [illegible] him on his Mother; and have falſified even the Day of his Birth, to have a Handle for making him (B) a diſadvantageous Horoſcope.

Ovid's Story is this. He ſays (g), that in Romulus's time, Women grew ſo hard to conceive, that this Prince cried out, it had been much better they (b) had never ſtole 'em. They had recourſe to Prayers; Husbands and Wives proſtrated themſelves in a Wood conſecrated to Juno. The Goddeſs's Anſwer caſt them into [illegible] Anxiety; for theſe Words were diſtinctly [illegible] That a Raſcally old Goat ſhould leap the Roman Wives. Italidas matres inquit caper virtus inito. By good Luck an Augur that was preſent, put 'em out of Pain: He ſacrific'd a Goat (i), and order'd, that the Skin ſhould be employ'd to [illegible] the Women; which they conſenting to, fail'd [illegible] Lye-in in ten Months Time. Thomas Bartholi[illegible] who has brought for his Purpoſe the general C[illegible] of their ſubmitting to be whipp'd by the Luperci, which Meibomius (l) had forgotten, would have found his Account better in the particular Adventure I have related.

(g) Ovidius Faſtor. lib. 2.

(b) Utilius fuerat non habuiſſe nurus. Id. ibid.

(i) Ille caprum mactat: juſſæ ſua terga mariræ Pellibus exſectis percutienda dabant. Id. ibid.

(k) In his Treatiſe De flagrorum uſu medico, pag. 22.

(l) In the Treatiſe de flagrorum uſu in [illegible] venen[illegible]

(m) [illegible] for [illegible] tiquités Romaines, pag. 237.

(n) That's to ſay, Ovid Faſtor. lib. 2.

(o) There Faunus is the ſame Deity with Pan.

(a) Aſcendit, ſpondaque ſibi propiore recumbit: Et rigido corpus durius inguen erat. Interea tunicas orâ ſubducit ab ima, Horrebant denſis aſpera crura pilis. Cæterea tenantem cubito Tirynthius Heros Repulit: è ſummo decidit ille toro.

(b) Conſult the Article of Hercules, Remark F.

(F) Which are pleaſant enough.... related by du Boulai.] As du Boulai (m) has related 'em with infinite Variations, I think my ſelf obliged to give a faithful Account of 'em, in order to give my Readers a juſt Miſtruſt of Writers, who tranſcribe one another, without recurring to the Original: Which gives the Story thus. (n) Hercules travelling upon a time with Omphale, was deſcried by Faunus (o), who immediately fell in Love with the Fair One, and ſought, without any loſs of time, to enjoy her. Hercules and Omphale lodg'd that Night in a Cave, where, whilſt Supper was getting ready, Omphale amus'd her ſelf with changing Cloaths with Hercules, dreſſing him in her Petticoats and Trinkets, and putting on her ſelf, inſtead o[illegible] the Lyon's Skin, the Club, and the Quiver. [illegible]p'd in this Equipage, and went to ſleep in it. [illegible] were to lye a-part that Night, becauſe in the Morning they were to Sacrifice to Bacchus, an Act of Religion which required Continence the preceding Night. Faunus, who had purſued his beloved Object, ſtole into the Cave, by Owl-Light, whilſt the Domeſticks were in a deep Sleep; not without Hopes that Hercules and his Miſtriſs were as faſt as they; and that, by this means he might perform his Exploit. He grop'd about ſometimes of one ſide, and ſometimes on the other, till at laſt he found Omphale's Bed: But he no ſooner touch'd the Lyon's Skin, but he ſtarted back in a great Fright. A little after, feeling about, he found Hercules's Bed, and judging, by the Fineneſs and Softneſs of the Cloaths, that it was Omphale, he (a) laid himſelf along, and with great Eagerneſs began to take up her Coats; and, without being diſcouraged by his briſtly Legs (b), thought to accompliſh his Deſign. Hereupon the Hero, giving him a Thruſt with his Elbow, ſent him out upon the Floor. This awaken'd [illegible]phale; ſhe calls up the People, a Candle is bro[illegible] Faunus found ſprawling on the Ground, hard[illegible] to riſe, and is made the Laughing-Stock to the [illegible]mpany. Ovid pretends, that this is one of the Reaſons of the Nakedneſs of the Luperci: Faunus, taking an Averſion for the Habits which had thus deceiv'd him, would not ſuffer his [illegible] to wear any at all, during the Ceremonies of [illegible]ſhip.

Let us now reckon up the Faults, which Mr. du Boulai has committed in the Space of twenty one Lines. I. He ſays, that Hercules was paſſing thro' the Quarters of Mount Palatin, when Faunus was ſmitten with his Wife: But if he had read Ovid (c), he would have found that Hercules was then in Lydia. II. He does not know whether the Wife, that attended Hercules, was Iole or Omphale. Ovid's Text, without leaving room for a Doubt, fixes us to Omphale. III. He ſays, that Hercules retir'd into a Forreſt, to avoid the ſcorching Heat of the Sun. Ovid makes him retire into a Cave, and only when it was late. IV. He ſays, that Omphale going to Bed, as being the more chilly and timorous, took the Lyon's Skin, which her Husband wore, to cover her, and the Club to defend her from the wild Beaſts. There's not one Word in Ovid concerning theſe Motives: And beſides, what Incohe[illegible] that, on one hand, the Seaſon ſhould be ſo [illegible]mently hot, as to oblige 'em to retire into a Forreſt; and, on the other, the Nights ſhould be ſo cold, that a young Wife muſt cover her ſelf with a Lyon's Skin to keep her from periſhing? V. He ſays, that Faunus obſerved every thing, except the change of the Cloaths: Ovid makes him take notice of nothing, nor does he ſend him into the Cave till Mid-Night, when all the Servants, and Hercules, were faſt a-ſleep. VI. He ſays, that Hercules awak'd his Wife, and made her light a Fire, whilſt he held the impertinent Fellow. In Ovid 'tis Omphale (d) cries out, and commands not the Fire to be lighted, (this not being the way of expreſſing one's ſelf on ſuch Occaſions) but a Light to be brought. Farther, Hercules only puſh'd this Inſolent out of Bed; he did not hold him. VII. He ſays, that Faunus was ſoundly bang'd: Of which Ovid ſays not one Word. VIII. He ſays, that this Adventure was the Reaſon of Hercules's riſing quite naked: But, on the contrary, as Ovid tells the Story, he had lain all Night in Omphale's Cloaths. What Likelyhood is there that he ſhould be undreſs'd to riſe upon ſuch an Encounter as this? IX. He ſays, that Hercules guarded his Wife from Violence. This is falſe; for the Spark, taking the Husband for the Wife, made no attempt at all upon her. X. He ſays, that, becauſe Hercules roſe quite naked, and had ſecured his Wife from Violence, he added the Ceremony of Nakedneſs to others, which were practis'd at the Feaſt of this God, to appeaſe him for the Treatment he had given him. All this is falſe and abſurd: The two Cauſes of the Augmentation of the Ceremonies are Chimerical, as we have ſeen; and it was not Hercules, but Faunus or Pan, that eſtabliſh'd the Ceremony of Nakedneſs.

(c) Jam Bacchea nemus Tmoli vinea tenebat.

(d) Inclamat comites, & lumina poſcit Mœonis, illaris ignibus acta patent.

(A) That an Incubus begat him on his Mother.] Hathet Maimbourg has been ſo equitable as to reject this ridiculous Story. He was born, ſays he (e), at Illeben in the County of Mansfeld, in the Year 1483, not of an Incubus, as ſome, to render him more odious, have written, without any Appearance of Truth, but as other Men are born, a thing never call'd in Queſtion till he became an Hereſiarch, which he might eaſily be, without any need of ſubſtituting a Devil in the place of his Father, John Luther, or diſgracing his Mother, Margaret Linderman (f), by ſo infamous a Birth. Such Fables are hardly to be pardon'd in thoſe who mention them only as the Sporting of Wit. This is what an Italian Theatin has done in a Poem, in which he ſuppoſes, that Luther, born of Megera, one of the Furies, was ſent from Hell into Germany. This is rather Monkiſh than Poetical.

(e) Maimbourg, hiſtoire du Lutheran. lib. 1. pag. 23, 24. See alſo Spondani Annales ad ann. 1517. n. 13.

(f) Seckendorf, Hiſtor. Lutheran. lib. 1. pag. 20. col. 2. owns, that this is the true Name of Luther's Mother.

(g) Cajetanus Vieeich, Thienidos, l. 1. See the Journal of Leipſick 1686, pag. 573. in the Extract of the Sacer Helicon of this Author. Thomas de Vio ſirnamed Caieran, is taken, in this Extract, for the Founder of the Theatins, and for the ſame with Cajetan Thiene. This is an Error.

(B) A diſadvantageous Horoſcope.] Martin Luther was born the 10th of November, betwixt Eleven and Twelve Scope. They accuſe him of having confeſs'd, that having ſtruggled for ten Years together (C) with his Conſcience, he at laſt became perfectly Maſter of it, and fell into Atheiſm. They add, that he frequently ſaid, he (D) would renounce his Portion in Heaven, provided God would allow him a hundred Years of pleaſant Life in this World. They impudently maintain, that he denied (E) the Immortality of the Soul.

They Twelve a Clock at Night, at Iſleben, where his Mother was come upon ſome Buſineſs to the Fair, not thinking ſhe was ſo near her time: For we muſt know, that her Husband, a Man of mean Condition, and who work'd in the Mines, did not then live at Iſleben, but in the Village of Mera (b). The good Woman, being examin'd by Melanchthon, about the Year ſhe lay-in of Martyn Luther, anſwer'd, That ſhe did not very well remember it; ſhe only knew the Day and the Hour (i). 'Twas out of pure Malice then, that Florimond de Remond choſe to place his Birth on the 22d of October. He thought thereby to confirm the Aſtrological Predictions of Junctin, who, by the Horoſcope of this Day, has defam'd Martyn Luther, as much as poſſible. This Aſtrologer was ſtrongly confuted by a Profeſſor of Strasburg, who ſhew'd, that, by the Rules of Aſtrology, Luther was to be a great Man. Nihilominus (k) Ramundus diem 22. Octobris præfert, utmalitioſæ Aſtrologi cujuſdam Junctini calumniæ fidem conciliaret, qui ex horoſcopo illius diei ingenium Lutheri miris modis infamare voluit. Hunc Iſaacus Malleolus Profeſſor. Mathem. Argentoratenſis anno 1617, edita diſſertatione de genitura Lutheri refutavit.

To illuſtrate theſe Words of Mr. Seckendorf, I ought to ſay, that Florimond de Remond followed Cardan's Hypotheſis more than Junctin's. He mentions both the Dates, that of the 22d of October, and that of the 10th of November. He prefers the firſt, which is that of Cardan, and inſinuates, that Junctin went by the latter. Luther, ſays he (l), was born at Iſleben .... 1483, the 22*d of* October, in the Afternoon, at Eleven a Clock, thirty-ſix Minutes .... Many ſay he was born the 10*th of* November, on St. Martin's Eve, which made his Parents name him Martin: This, it may be, has occaſion'd the Difference; for it is not probable, that Cardan and Junctin, who with ſo much Curioſity have calculated his Nativity, ſhould be both miſ-inform'd. But Cardan ſays he was born the 22*d of* October; this is Luther's true Birth-Day: The ſame ſays Junctin. And, though there be ſome Diverſity between theſe two Aſtrologers, upon Luther's Horoſcope, yet it is ſo ſmall that it deſerves not to be conſidered. For in both the Planets are ſituate in the ſame Houſes; the Moon, in both, is in the twelfth; Jupiter, Venus, and Mars, in the third; the Sun, Saturn, and Mercury, in the fourth. The Diverſity of theſe two famous Aſtrologers, was not ſo great as that of ſome others, who differ a whole Year about the Birth of Martin Luther. I ſhall cite my Author. " (m) There will be as many Themes or Figures (n) " as there are Spectators at different Hours; and " each Aſtrologer, by that means, will make his " own different from the reſt .... They'll certainly " meet, notwithſtanding all this; as heretofore two " of theſe Gentlemen did in Germany, who, in making Luther's Horoſcope, who was born the 10th " of November 1483, agreed as to all the Events of his " Life, and his Perſonal Qualities, though they diffe'r'd as to the Day of his Birth a whole Year: So " true it is, that this noble Science never fails to " diſcover all Events." The Difference between Gauricus and Cardan, is a compleat Year, being ſome few Hours. Gauricus places Luther's Birth the 22d of October 1484, one of Clock, ten Minutes in the Afternoon, and he finds by this Horoſcope the ſame Abominations as Cardan. (o) Hac mira ſatiſque horrenda. 5. Planetarum coitio ſub Scorpii aſteriſmo in nona cœli ſtatione quam Arabes religioni deputabant, effecit ipſum ſacrilegum hereticum, Chriſtianæ religionis hoſtem acerrimum, atque prophanum. Ex horoſcopi directione ad Martis coitum irreligioſiſſimus obiit. Ejus Anima ſceleſtiſſima ad Inferos navigavit, ab Allecto, Teſiphone, & Megera flagellis igneis cruciata perenniter. Say, if you pleaſe, after this, that the Aſtrologers have not a great Zeal for the Religion they profeſs. But note, that this laſt was a Prelate.

(C) That having ſtruggled for ten Years together with his Conſcience.] " (a) Martin Luther, who " had made ſuch Progreſs, as to arrive at the Perfection of Atheiſm, confeſſes, notwithſtanding, " that he had fought for ten Years together againſt " himſelf, to ſtifle or blunt that piercing Sting of " Conſcience, which his Atheiſm left in the inmoſt " Receſſes of his miſerable Soul." Such an Accuſation requir'd a Citation of Martyn Luther's own Words; and yet Garaſſe begs your Pardon, and does not ſo much as cite this Author's Works in an indefinite manner: But in the 968th Page of his Book, he has not ſo far forgot his Duty; he has cited ſomething: This is what he ſays, Luther, who was a perfect Atheiſt, owns, in his Table-Diſcourſes, related by Rebenſtock, that he had lain ten Years before his Conſcience, the Term the Greeks lay before the City of Troy; for that was his Compariſon: But that by his Diligence, he had maſter'd it, and reduced his Mind to ſuch a State, as to entertain no farther Scruples. He might, in my Opinion, apply the whole Story, and the taking of Troy, to the taking of his Conſcience: For, as Troy was taken by Means of a Wooden Horſe, ſo it was by a Wooden Horſe that Luther took his own Conſcience, and ſtifled all that Vermin of Scruples: For from that time he became a Horſe, if there ever was an Horſe in the World: And his Diſciple, Aurifaber, depoſes, as an Ear-Witneſs, that he had learnt it from Luther's Mouth from the Pulpit, that, thanks be to God, he felt no longer any Diſturbance of his Conſcience; and that he began to ſee the Fruits of his Goſpel amongſt his Diſciples; Nam poſt revelatum Evangelium meum, ſaid he, Virtus eſt occiſa, juſtitia oppreſſa, temperantia ligata, veritas lacerata, fides claudа, nequitia quotidiana, devotio pulſa, hæreſis relicta. I have fought with ſuch Succeſs that I have ſtifled the Seeds of Vertue, oppreſs'd Juſtice, extinguiſh'd Sobriety, rent Truth to Pieces, broken the Pillars of Faith, made Villany familiar, baniſh'd Devotion, and introduc'd Hereſy. There's no need to obſerve here, that all this is to be underſtood by the Rules of Contraries; the thing ſpeaks it ſelf: And I am certain, there's no honeſt Man, whatever Religion he is of, but will deteſt or pity the Extravagance of ſuch a Slanderer.

(D) That he would renounce his Portion in Heaven.] This Accuſation comes from the ſame Hand as the former. " (b) Quirinus Cnoglerus has obſerved, in " his Lutheran Creed, that he had ſeen a little German Book written in Praiſe of SAINT MARTIN LUTHER, which contain'd at large the Legend of this New Saint, canoniz'd by the Miniſters " of Germany, in which he had particularly read the " following Paſſage. Compoſiti ſunt duo verſus in honorem cariſſimi noſtri præceptoris SANCTI LUTHERI, debentque omnes Papiſtæ ferre, velint, nolint, ut veri verſus, & pia carmina ſint & maneant: ſunt autem hujuſmodi:

" IN VITA ÆTERNA.

" Chriſtus habet primas, habeas tibi Paule ſecundas,
" At loca poſt illos tertia, LUTHER habet."

See the Margin (c).

(E) That he denied the Immortality of the Soul.] " (d) Martyn Luther, who was a Man wholly carnal, " and compos'd of Fat and Greaſe, teaches, in ſeveral Places, that the Immortality of the Soul is a " meer Chimera; for behold his own Words in the ſecond Tome of his Works of the Wittemberg Edition, " in the Year MDLI, in the 27th Article of his Aſſertions. Quos Leo Pontifex definivit articuli fidei, de immortalite animæ, portenta ſunt: And in the ſame " Tome of the Edition of the Year MDLII. in the " Articles XXXI. and XLI. he clearly ſays; Nihil eſt quod dicitur, Anima rationalis creando infunditur, & infundendo creatur: melius hac in re vatis decernit & Poeta dicens, Patrem ſequitur ſua proles. 'Tis " better to believe (ſays this groſs Blockhead) what " the Poet ſays, than what the Church teaches: " Thus you ſee from what Fountain this Reformer " drew his Articles of Faith; from the lewd Poets, " who have acknowledg'd no other Deity than Venus, " nor any other Pleaſure than Senſuality." The firſt of theſe two Paſſages is ſo mutilated, that no Judgment can be paſs'd upon it. 'Tis no ſtrange thing for a moſt Orthodox Man to call thoſe Thoughts Chimera's, which another entertains concerning the Immor-

(b) Seckendorf, ubi ſupra.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) Seckendorf, ibid. See alſo a Book (of John Frideric von der Scraſs, Miniſter near Scrasbourg) intituled, Memoria Thaumaſandri Lutheri renovata.

(l) Florim. de Remond hiſt. de l'hereſi lib. 1 chap. 5. p. m. 25.

(m) Petit diſſertation ſur les Cometes, pag. 104, 105.

(n) That's to ſay, touching the Hour of the firſt appearing of a Comet.

(o) Lucas Gauricus in tractatu Aſtrologico de præteritis multorum hominum accidentibus per genituras examinatis fol. 691. verſo edit. 552.

(a) Garaſſe, Doctrine curieuſe, pag. 214.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 889, 890.

(c) The moſt material Point in this Paſſage of Garaſſe is this. To this I anſwer ſays he, that the Lutherans are much in the wrong ... becauſe Luther often proteſted, as Rebenſtock informs us, in his Table-Talk, that he wou'd freely renounce all Pretenſions and Proſpects, and provided God would be pleaſed to grant him a hundred Years of good Living in this World, he would give him an Acquittance for his Share of Paradice.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 877, 878.

charge him with having (F) groſs and carnal Ideas of Heaven, and with compoſing Hymns in Honour of Drunkenneſs, a Vice to which (G) they make him much addicted.

immortality [illegible] Soul. He would not call the Doctrine of Im[illegible]ity it ſelf thus, but the abſurd Reaſons it m[illegible]e built upon, and the extravagant Conſequences [illegible]duc'd from it. As to the ſecond Paſſage, what can be more abſurd than to pretend a Man teaches the Mortality of the Soul, upon Pretence, that he ſuppoſes it produc'd by another Soul? May he not be perſuaded, with the Fathers of the Church, that the Soul is immortal, and produc'd by way of Propagation, ex traduce? But, what do I ſtand on? A Man would be as ridiculous to take Pains to prove, that Luther believ'd the Immortality of the Soul, as he who accuſes him of believing it Mortal.

But, to ſhew what Streſs is to be laid upon Garaſſe's Citations from Martin Luther's Table-Talk, let me here obſerve how he cites Prateolus. Calvin's Doctrine, ſays he (e), holds, and muſt hold the Mortality of the Soul, if it will be at all coherent, and du Preau very well perceived this in his Book of Hereſies, verbo Athei; for he there obſerves, that a general Aſſembly being held at Geneva of all the States to deliberate concerning Purgatory, one of the moſt ingenious, and moſt conſiderable, ſaid expreſsly, when it came to his Turn to give his Voyce, Purgatorium cum Miſſâ & Romano Pontifice melius abolebimus quàm ſi dicamus, ſimul animam [illegible] corpore extingui, ſuch was the Opinion of this [illegible]man. And then afterwards, to confirm this [illegible]ne, came out publick Theſes, printed and diſputed in Geneva, in the Year MDLXVIII, wherein were theſe Words: Quicquid de animarum habetur immortalitate, ab Antichriſto ad ſtatuendam ſuam culinam excogitatum eſt. All that is ſaid concerning the Immortality of the Soul, ſaid this Proponent, is nothing elſe, but an Invention of Antichriſt, to make the Pot boil. Du Preau (f) has only cited Lindanus, who ſaid, that the Italian Proteſtants, who fled to Geneva, deliberating one Day concerning the Means of aboliſhing Purgatory, the Papacy, and other Doctrines of the Catholick Church; one of 'em gave his Opinion, that the beſt Way was to ſay, the Soul died with the Body. By this means, ſaid he, we ſhall deſtroy Purgatory, the Maſs, and the Pope all at once. Lindanus (g) cites he Acts of Valentine Gentilis's Trial. 'Tis a Book wherein the Calviniſts complain of ſome Members of the Italian Church of Geneva who were infected with Arianiſm, and were expell'd for their Errors. Judge if this be proper to ſtain the Calviniſts, or fix any Blot upon the Orthodoxy of the Geneveſe. But eſpecially admire Father Garaſſe's Raſhneſs, who has converted a Meeting of ten or twelve Italians into a general Aſſembly of all the States; and an Opinion advanced by ſome inconſiderable Perſons in a Chamber, into Theſes publickly [illegible]bded. If this Jeſuit thus Abuſes Prateolus'[illegible]rity, what Credit can we give him, when he [illegible] Martin Luther's Table-Talks? I ſhall only confute him in this general Way; for having not the Book it ſelf, I can't confront the Words with Garaſſe's Allegations. I add, that he has related a thing quite otherwiſe than one of his Fraternity. Articulus ille, ſays an Iriſh Jeſuit (i), quo creditur animam eſſe immortalem, Luthero judice eſt portentum in Romano ſterquilinio Decretorum quod Papa condidit ſibi & ſuis fidelibus. To give us juſt Suſpicions that this is ill cited, we need only caſt an Eye upon the reſt of this Jeſuit's Diſcourſe. Si dubites, continues he, an fortè contagio hujus portentoſi Paradoxi alios à Reformatione abſtraxerit, Reſpondit Joannes Brentius (i): Etſi inter nos nulla ſit publica profeſſio quod anima ſimul cum corpore intereat, & quod non ſit mortuorum reſurrectio: tamen impuriſſima & profaniſſima illa vita quam maxima pars hominum ſectatur, perſpicuè indicat quod non ſentiant eſſe vitam poſt hanc. Nonnullis etiam tales voces tam ebrii inter pocula excidunt, quàm ſobriis in familiari[illegible]oquiis. Quibus declarat, licet non publica, ſa[illegible]uata perſuaſione, & licentia vitæ, hanc invaluiſſe ſententiam, eamque vel ipſos ſobrios profiteri. Can any thing be more aſtoniſhing? A Paſtor deplores the Corruption of his Flock. Though there be not amongſt us, ſays he, any Formulary of publick Faith, by which we declare that the Soul [illegible] with the Body, and that the dead riſe not again; the impure and profane Life that moſt People lead is a manifeſt Sign, that they believe not the Immortality of the Soul. Some even drop ſuch Diſcourſes not only when they are drunk, but when they are ſober, in common Converſation with their Friends. Hereupon they accuſe a whole Church of diſ-believing the Immortality of the Soul, and repreſent 'em as only ſtopping at the making it an expreſs Article of their Religion. Who can bear Conſequences, in which the Blindneſs of Paſſion, is ſo ſcandalous? See the Margin (a).

(F) With having groſs and carnal Ideas of Heaven.] Let us ſtill cite Father Garaſſe. Luther, (b) ſays he, being arrived to perfect Atheiſm, was ſtill more ridiculous, for having deviſed intolerable Fooleries, according to the Confeſſion of his own Diſciple Rebenſtock; for he one Day preach'd publickly, that God, to pleaſure his Elect, was reſolved to create, after the laſt Judgment, little Cats, and Lap-Dogs, Quorum cutis erat aurea, & pili de lapidibus pretioſis, and beſtow 'em on the Bleſſed to uſe 'em for Play-Things, as the Ladies do who put 'em in their Muffs. He adds, that there will be Serpents, Toads, and Caterpillars in Heaven, but that they ſhall be of the fineſt Ducat Gold; and which is more there ſhall be, ſays he, Piſmires, Lice, ſtinking Inſects, and Buggs in Paradice, but they ſhall be all made of precious Stones, and ſhall all ſmell much better than Civet (c); for theſe are his very Words. Ibi formicæ, cyniphes & omnia fœtida, & male olentia animalia, meræ delitiæ erunt, & optimum odorem ſpirabunt. All the Excuſe I can make to cover the Impiety of this groſs Man, is, that when he ſaid and wrote theſe Things, he was drunk, for it was, In Sermonibus CONVIVIALIBUS titulo de vitâ æterna, pag. 454.

(G) In Honour of Drunkenneſs, a Vice to which they [illegible]uch addicted.] " (d) Martin Luther, in [illegible]ome of his Works, in the Chapter of [illegible]ſs, after having authoriz'd this Vice, " and ſhewn, as well as he could, that it was inci- " dent to all the great Perſons that ever were, at " laſt remembring the Eccleſiaſtical Hymns, he was " wont to chant in the Cloyſters, made one in Ho- " nour of Drunkenneſs, which conſiſts of two Stan- " za's; the firſt whereof is this:

" Si vino te impleveris
" Dormire ſtatim poteris,
" Et poſt ſomnum, ventriculum
" Vino implere iterum,
" Nam Alexandri regula
" Præſcribit hac remedia.

" ....(e) We ſee in a Book called Concordia Proteſtantium, that Luther is dignified with thoſe Elogies, " Divus Lutherus zelo plenus: And, as the Painters " uſed to repreſent our Saints by their Perſonal Signs, " St. Jerom by a Lyon, (though this be a Fault of " the Painters, authoriz'd by Antient Cuſtom; for " 'tis not St. Jerome, but St. Geraſimus that ought " to be repreſented by a Lyon) St. Ambroſe by a " Swarm of Bees, St. Auſtin by a young Child, St. " Gregory by a white Pidgeon; ſo 'tis a Cuſtom, " throughout all Germany, to paint this new Pro- " teſtant Saint with this ſpecifick Mark; name- " ly, a great Glaſs full of Wine; which, as " I have ſhewn before, and related from Reben- " ſtock, he called Poculum Chatechiſticum: Such are " Luther's Arms; and John Matheſius adds, that " he boaſted no Body could drink off his Glaſs in a " Breath but himſelf; as no Body could manage " Hercules's Club but himſelf." The Paſſage Garaſſe refers us to, concerning the Catechiſtical Goblet, is in the 50th Page; and is this: The moſt frolickſome of all was Martin Luther, as Rebenſtock, and Matheſius relate in his Life; for this huge Blunderbuſs, being at Table, uſed to have his great Goblet brought him, which he called Poculum Catechiſticum, which held about two Pints, and which he ſwallowed at a Draught, boaſting that no Body could do it but himſelf: As Ulyſſes, ſaid he, had a Bow, which no Body could bend and draw up to the Arrows Point but himſelf. Now when he was heated with Wine, having three or four times conſulted his Catechiſtical Goblet, he told the pleaſanteſt Stories in the World; for, falling upon the Drapery of the antient Doctors, he uſed to illuminate [illegible]m with the fineſt Colours, Let's here refute what we [illegible]d in Fitz Simon's Works: I place his Citations in the Margin: (g) Ait de ſe Lutherus, nihil ſingulare in vita mea eminet. Poſſum jocari, potare, frontem exporrigere, ridere, ſumque commodus & facetus con-

(a) Not having the Acts of the Tryal of Valentin Gentilis by me at this time, I can't tell whether Lindanus has faithfully quoted what he alledges from it; or whether there really was any Italian, who believed as Lindanus ſays.

(b) Garaſſe ubi ſupra. pag. 320.

(c) Compare what has been ſaid in the Article Loyola, Remark T.

(d) Garaſſe ibid. pag. 772.

(e) Garaſſe ibid. pag. 773.

(g) Fitz-Simon, Britannomachia, lib. 1. cap. 11. pag. 95, 96.

(e) Ubi ſupra, p. 379.

(f) Iſtiuſmodi complures eſſe Geneveæ in eccleſia, quàm dicunt, Italica, unum illud ſatis ſuperque arguit, quòd cum iſti Calviniſtæ de abolendo ſemel pontificatu Romano, Purgatorio extinguendo, aliiſque Catholicæ Dei eccleſiæ dogmatibus delendis, inter ſe conſulterent, unus præ cæteris eximie ſui magiſtri mendaciorum partis afflatu raptus: Dicamus animam, inquit, una cum corpore extingui, ſic Purgatorium cum Miſſa & Romano Pontifice ſemel abolebimus.... Hæc [illegible]dan[illegible] Præ[illegible] in Elenchu hæreſ. voce Athei, pag. m. 72.

(g) In Dubitantio. dialoge 2. p. m. 247, 248.

(i) Henricus Fitz-Simon, in Britannomachia Miniſtrorum, l. 1. cap. 12. pag. 112.

(i) Brentius, Homil. 35. in cap. 20. Lucæ.

addicted. They affirm, that he vomited a Thousand Blasphemies against the Holy Scripture, and particularly (H) against Moses. They go so far as to maintain, that he got (I) Amadis translated into good French to put People out of Conceit with the Scripture, and all Books of Devotion. They observed so little Measures in the Calumnies they publish'd against him, as to accuse him of having said, that he believed nothing (K) of what he preach'd; and that he should be glad to find that other Ministers resembled him in this. Most of these Calumnies are grounded upon some Words in a certain (L) Book published by Luther's Friends; to which they give a horrid convivator, cumque unum birræ, sive cervisiæ cantharum teneo (verbi gratia vitrum illud monstrum, horrendum, informe, ingens, ex Apostolorum symbolo, Dominica oratione, & decem præceptis constans quod uno hausu Lutherus exhaurire consuevit.) Scatim dolium ipsum totum concupisco, sepiusque benè bonum haustum facio in Dei gloriam. Pro ea itaque quod prius macerabam corpus meum, mox cùm mortuus & in capulo repositus fuero, vermibus venericosum benéque crassum Doctorem escam dabo (1). Venericosum & benè crassum Doctorem Discipuli Reformati, Evangelistamque jocosum, bibacem, commedum & facetum convivatorem, proprii oris confessione Evangelici nostri Reformatores nacti sunt. In another place (h) of his Book we find these Words: Quasi vero Lutherus in immani suo vitro catechistico, quod solus ille exhaurire potuit, unam aquæ guttulam instillari tulerit? Mr. Juncker, at Page 195, and 220 of his Vita D. Martini Lutheri Nummis atque iconibus illustrata, maintains, that all that is said of this pretended Catechistical Rummer, is an Imposture and gross Fiction; and he cites two or three Works, which prove, that we ought not to take any notice of what is found upon it in the Colloquia Mensalia. This Book of Mr. Juncker is very curious, and shews, that the Author apply'd himself, with great Diligence and Success, to a Research into every thing that was fit to clear the Matter which he was upon.

(1) Luth. in colloq. Francof. 1571, f. 445. Matthesius de ritu bibendi super sanitate, lib. 1. c. 9.

(h) Fitz-Simon, ib. lib. 3. cap. 2. p. 270. He cites Joann. Fredericus Matenes. de ritu bibendi super sanitate, pag. 76.

(H) And particularly against Moses.] "(i) "Martin Luther had hardly any thing frequenter "in his Mouth, particularly in the Intervals of his "Cups, than that the Commandments of the Decalogue, were the Source and Fountain of all the "Villanies in the World, as Rebenstock has related "in his Colloquies, in Page CCCLXIX. and in the "2d Tome of his Works of the Wittemberg Edition, "Page 112, he makes a Vow to God, almost of the "same nature of that of the miserable Theophilus, "in the first Sonnet of the Satyrical Parnassus; for "his part, he solemnly and devoutly promises ne-"ver to keep any of the Ten Commandments: And "in fine, being in the Exercise of his Devotions, he "says, Tollantur è medio omnia Dei præcepta & cessa-"bunt omnes Hæreses. To suppress Heresies, talk not "to me of Disputes, nor Conferences, nor War, "nor the Command of Princes: I know a shorter "Expedient than all this, which is, to throw the "Decalogue into the Fire, and there will be no more "Heresies in the World.... (k) But if you would "more clearly understand and discover Luther's Opi-"nion concerning the Decalogue, and the Law of "Moses, observe how he speaks of them in the first "Tome of his Works of the Wittemberg Edition "MDL. Pag. CCXV. Vide ut sis prudens, & Mo-"sem cum suâ lege, quam longissimè amoliri, & in ma-"lum vam abire jubeas; neque quicquam illius terrore "ac minis moveris, sed, subjectum eum habeto, ut "pessimum hæreticum anathematizatum & damnatum "hominem, malleoque detestandum Papæ & Diabolo. Be "prudent, says he, and stand upon your Guard; "and when the Question shall be about Moses, send "him to the Devil, with all his Old Testament, and "be not concerned at his Menaces; for as much as "he is an Heretical Miscreant, an excommunicated "Wretch, and a damned Soul. In a word, a more "cursed Villain than the Pope, and the Devil." I have already said before, that (l) Luther having, by Gerasse's own Confession, arrived to Atheism, held also the like great Industry, as that of Rebenstock relates, in his Table-Talk. Discourse; as Rebenstock relates, in his Table-Talk. Ego non-plurio facio sanctum Joan Scripturæ, quam pertidem sucum. Avulsa sex Hundred Places of the Bible, if they should be urged to me, no more than a rotten Nut. Lastly, he advances, that (m) Luther used to say after Dinner, that he knew a good Way to prevent sinning mortally against God; which is, said he, to throw the Decalogue and the Bible into the Fire.

(k) Ibid. pag. 562.

(l) Ibid. pag. 237.

(m) Ibid. pag. 881.

(n) Intitled, Lectiones morales in Jonam Prophetam. It comprehends three Volumes in Fol. printed at Antwerp, the two first in 1680, the last in 1683. See the Journal of Leipsick, 1684, pag. 443.

(I) That he got Amadis translated.] This fine Lye is found in the Books of an Italian Dominican (n), called Brother Angelo Paciuchelli. His Book, written in the Italian Tongue, has been translated into Latin by Charles de Marimont, a Lorrain Theatin. The Leipsick Journal mentions it. In which I have found the following Passage; (o) A veritate maxime alienum est, quod Lectione statim prima, qua S. Scripturæ & Asceticorum librorum necessitatem & utilitatem commendat, de B. Luthero tradiderit: seelaratum scelicet illum virum, cum Germaniam execrabili hæresi contaminare decrevisset, profanis eam libris corrupisse, curavisseque ut lingua Gallica liber quidam donaretur, Amadis dictus, & quidem omni elegantia exornatus, per Principum aulas spargeretur; sicque paulatim sacrarum paginarum spiritualiumque librorum nausea curiosorum aulicorum animis instillaretur. Cujus ineptissimæ calumniæ, quæ nobis quidem non indignationem sed risum movet, non potuit non cordatiores ex Romano-Catholicis pudere, quos minime fugit quanto zelo ad sacra Scripturæ, quæ ipsi tunc clavo tantum non fordebat, laicorum usu manibus extorta plane erat, frequentissimam lectionem, omne hominum genus, summos, mediocrimos, infimos Lutherus noster revocaverit, sacris in vernaculam fiscum Bibliis (non Amadis) in vernaculam linguam inæredibili labore atque studio traductis. What is not a Man capable of, in point of Calumny, diametrically opposite to all Probability, when there are those who dare affirm, that Luther desired to bring the Scriptures into discredit: Luther, I say, who had no greater Reproach to bear, from all the first Reformers, than that of too much recommending to Lay-Men the reading of the Bible in the vulgar Tongue?

(o) Journal of Leipsick. ibid. pag. 444.

(K) That he believ'd nothing of what he preach'd.] "(a) There are a great many Christians, who are "Christians in appearance, who make an outward "Profession of believing in God, in a Perfunctory "manner, and by way of Compliment, that they "may not be thought Atheists. Erasmus reproach'd "Beza with being of this Class, and applied to him "the Saying of Socrates, Hoc unum scire scio, quod "nihil scio, by a gentle Transposition, Hoc unum me "credere credo, quod nil credo. Of this Humour was "the late Moral, Martin Luther, who thank'd God, "that he was not singular in his Fraternity: For I "believe nothing, said he, of what I preach; and, "God be blessed, there are many who are infected "with the same Distemper amongst our Ministers; "as John Mathesius has written in his Life: This is "what I call, believing in God in appearance, and "these are the Christians in Appearance, who be-"lieve in God by way of Compliment, Ne nihil cre-"dere videantur." Compare this with Mathesius's Latin, cited by Henry Fitz-Simon, you'll find how Gerasse has amplified it. (b) Joannes Mathesius in vitam Lutheri plures concionas composuit, quas tandem in lucem emisit. In earum vero duodecima sic ait: Magister Joannes Musa Praedicans Roehlinensis narravit mihi, se quodam tempore admodum dolenter Luthero questum esse, quod ipsemet ea credere non posset quæ aliis prædicabat. Tum respondisse Lutherum: Respicibus ergo sic Deus, cum idem aliis quod mihi usu venit. Adhuc enim mihi soli id usu venire credidi.

(a) Gerasse ubi supra, pag. 109, 110.

(b) Fitz-Simon ubi supra, l. 1. c. 11. pag. 100. He cites Joan. Mathes. de vita Luth. conc. 12. fol. 147.

(c) Voss. Disput. Theolog. Thes. 4. pag. 698.

(d) Seckendorf, apud Beauval, hist. des Ouvrages des Savans, Feb. 1692, pag. 262. The Words of Seckendorf hist. Lutheran. lib. 3. pag. 643, are these Libro colloquiorum mensalium minus quidem caute compositio & vulgato.

(I) Of a certain Book published by Luther's Friends.] According to the present Mode, it would have been called Lutheriana or Lutheyana. But the Title that was given it of Sermones Mensales, or Colloquia Mensalia is better; for Luther's Table-Talk is the Subject of the Book. It was published in 1569, by Henry Peter Rebenstock, Minister of Eischerim. Andrew Rivet, if I mistake not, says some where, that this Book is a Forgery: But Gilbert (e) Voetius, as zealous against Popery as himself, acknowledges the contrary. Mr. Seckendorf has not attempted to prove this Book suppositious, but is content to observe, that these Table-Discourses (d) were collected with Indiscretion, and ungroundedly Printed by a Person.... who absurdly idolized Luther. The Controversists of the other Side took Advantage of it, as appears by Gerasse's Passages above.

rid Meaning, and very remote from this Miniſters Thoughts. Not but it muſt be confeſs'd, that it was the higheſt Imprudence to publiſh ſuch a Collection. It was the Effect (M) of an inconſiderate Zeal, or rather of an exceſſive Prepoſſeſſion, which hinder'd their diſcerning the Faults of this great Man. It can't be denied, but the impetuous [redacted] of his Temper forced from him ſuch Sayings, as highly deſerve to be condem[redacted]s when he declared his Opinion (N) upon St. James's Epiſtle. There were above-cited, and by the Notes of Feuardent upon St. Irenæus (e). They have made the ſame Uſe of Luther's Letters, publiſhed with little Prudence and Diſcretion. See Mr. Gaſtineau's Controverſial Letters, who cites a great many Pieces from them, diſhonourable to the Memory of the Author. See what Mr. Salden has anſwered to Bellarmine, who would prove, from Luther's Table-Talk, that he diſcarded Job out of the Canon of Scripture. Impegit Luthero quod Jobi etiam Libro divinam auctoritatem detraxerit, argumento è convivalibus ejus Sermonibus deprompto, at ludicro plane & calumnioſo; cum neque Libri illius Autor unquam fuerit Lutherus, neque eo vivente vel approbante editus ſit. See the Margin (g).

(M) It was the Effect of an inconſiderate Zeal.] Voiture's Apologiſt makes uſe of a Thought which may be properly applied in this Place: I ſhall relate the Paſſage at length, as containing ſeveral curious Matters. "(h) It were to be wiſhed, that the Publick had receiv'd from Mr. Voiture's own Hands "the Preſent that has been made it of his Verſes "and Letters. He would, doubtleſs, have retrench'd "ſome things to have made it perfect..... He would "not have appeared before the World as he has "done in ſome of his Letters, in Diſorder, Undreſs'd, in his Morning-Gown; he would have "put on his Court-Cloaths or even a Ceremonial and "Feſtival [illegible] He would have kept up in all "points to the ſtricteſt Laws of Decorum; with the "Rules of which he thought he might lawfully diſpenſe, in a free and ſecret Correſpondence with "his Friends and Confidents. They who have publiſhed his Works.... are fallen into a Fault, which "is ſeldom avoided on the like Occaſions, having "choſen to employ their Diligence in heaping up all "the ſcattered Pieces of our Author, rather than "their Judgment in making a good Choice of 'em. "And indeed, it's no wonder, that ingenious Men, "of ever ſo fine and delicate a Palate, ſhould be miſ-led in this manner. That beloved Freed-Man "of Cicero, whom he ſome-where calls the Reformer "and Rule of his Writings; and who, particularly "by the Beauty of his Wit, had merited his tendereſt Affections, did ſomething worſe than this. "After the Death of his Maſter, he publiſhed a "Collection of his Railleries, wherein, through an "Exceſs of Paſſion and Zeal, not venturing to leave "out any thing, he inſer[illegible]many ſo cold and inſipid, that Quintilian, a Supreme Judge of theſe "Matters, thinks 'em unworthy of ſo famous an "Orator. The meaning of which, Sir, is, that as "Piety conſecrates the vileſt Things, when they have "touched the Bodies of Saints, or only their "Bones and Aſhes; ſo Love and Admiration idolize whatever bears the Name of thoſe extraordinary Men, who have been raviſh'd from them; and, "as if every one was capable of the ſame Devotion "and Worſhip, propoſe 'em to the Veneration of all "the Earth, and of all Ages. The leaſt important "and moſt neglected Letter cannot eſcape 'em, "their Paſſionate Admirers look upon 'em, as precious Relicks of theſe great Wits, worthy to be "engraven on Braſs and Marble, and to be handed "to lateſt Poſterity... In the mean time theſe, whatever elſe may be ſaid of 'em, are not vitious "(i) Extreams; for, proceeding from the Violence "of a Friendſhip nobly plac'd, this ſort of Exceſs is more to be eſteem'd, than the Moderation of oth[illegible]ues; and deſerves not only Excuſe, but [illegible]endation. Your ridiculous Curioſities are [illegible]ondemned; ſuch as that of the Greek, who bought Epictetus's earthen Lamp, which "he uſed in his Lucubrations, at the Price of "Three Thouſand Drachma's; or of that extravagant Prince, who gave I know not how many "ſeſterces for the Poet Æſchylus's Table-Book; or "other, who corrupted the Prieſts of Delphi, to "Orpheus's Lyre out of their Hands, though he "not how to touch it, or even to put it in Tune." I have ſeen a Preface (k) in an Edition of the Scaligerana, containing the ſame Thoughts in fewer Words. La plaiſanterie eſt en iſtos literaturum heroas præpoſtera vulgi religio & quædam velut idolomania, ut ne verbulum quillem illis excidere patiatur quod non avide colligat, & inter pretioſiſſima monumenta ſedulo recondat. Pene quemodo hodierni ἁγιολάτραι diverum cineres, ungues, pilos, oſſium fragmenta, veſtium fimbrias aut lacinias, & cætera quæ reliquiarum nomine cenſent venerabundi ſeruant. Sic Virgilii ſpeculum, & quidem inter ſacra monumenta, Dionyſiani in agro Pariſienſi Monachi non ſine riſu viſendum præbent. Sic Italos Petrarchæ ſui non modo tumulum adeſque, ſed & urceum & ſedile, imo & domeſtica felis ſceleton cadaver aliaſque neſcio quot ejuſdem farinæ quiſquilias magna pompa peregrinantibus oſtentare refert Jo. Philippus Thomaſinus, libro quem de divini poetæ rebus compoſuit. Theſe Things fairly repreſent to you the State of the Compilers of Martin Luther's Diſcourſes.

(N) His Opinion upon St. James's Epiſtle.] He called it a Work of Straw, in Compariſon of St. Paul's and St. Peter's Epiſtles. The Catholick Controvertiſts have hereupon made a Thouſand Outcries, without being aſſured, by their own Ears, that ever Luther ſaid ſo. Edmund Campian's Adventure is remarkable; he had accuſed Luther of uſing this Expreſſion: He had the Lie given him, and afterwards the Confuſion of not being able to make good what he had ſaid, though he was furniſhed with the Books he cited (a). This, which in reality was but a vain and imaginary Triumph, was, however, a ſubſtantial one, on account of the Shame it gave the Jeſuit, and the Joy it occaſion'd among the Proteſtants for that time. The learned Whitaker, if we believe (b) Mr. Daillé, enjoy'd a great Satisfaction from it all his Life long: He maintain'd, that Luther had not ſpoken in that manner, and that Campian ſlander'd him. Let Mr. Daillé ſpeak. "(c) Mr. Cottiby taxes Luther with ſaying, "that this Epiſtle is a Work of Straw; but he does "not ſhew the Book, nor Place of Luther, where theſe "Words are found; which makes me ſuſpect, that, "without having ſeen them, he truſted to Edmund "Campian the Jeſuit, or ſome ſuch Author, who, "hurry'd on by a furious Hatred againſt our Religion, make no Scruple to accuſe us of whatever "comes in their Head, be it ever ſo falſe or incredible. I cannot reſolve upon reading Luther's "ſeven or eight great Tomes, to know whether he "writ theſe Words, which your Diſciple charges "upon him. I'll only tell you, that reading over "again what William (1) Whitaker, a grave and learned Man, anſwered to your Campian, who ſaid the "ſame thing of Luther, I have found, that he accuſes "him of a notable Falſhood; and ſays, that having "carefully ſought for the Preface of Luther to this "Epiſtle, from whence Campian cited theſe Words, "he had at laſt found it, and that it began thus: "Though this Epiſtle of St. James has been rejected by "the Antients, yet for my particular I praiſe it, and "look upon it to be uſeful and advantagious. He "adds, that the ſame Perſon in the Book, concerning the Babyloniſh Captivity, ſpeaks of it farther "in theſe Words: I omit, ſays he, what many affirm, with great Probability, that this Epiſtle is not "the Apoſtle St. James's, nor worthy of the Spirit of "an Apoſtle. But for this Work of Straw, of which "your Father Campian, and your new Diſciple "ſpeak, he proteſts he has no where met with it in "Luther." It is, however, true, that this is found in a Preface of this Reformer. Let us hear Mr. Daillé on. "(d) Afterwards Mr. Rivet, anſwering the "Jeſuit Sylveſter de Pierre Sainte who alſo advanced "the ſame Calumny, adds, that ſome have diſcovered to our People, that Luther had written in a "German Preface upon the firſt Edition of the Bible, "that St. James's Epiſtle, as to its Worth, can't "be parallell'd with thoſe of St. Paul, and St. Peter, and that, in Compariſon of theſe, it is "an Epiſtle of Straw. We don't approve (ſays "Mr. (2) Rivet) this Judgment of Luther; and "'tis certain, he was afterwards better inform-"ed: Theſe Words being not to be found in "any of the Editions made after the Year 1526." To ſhew how Authors copy one another, without conſult-

Lib. 3. cap. 20. You there find ſeveral Scraps of the Collection of Rebenſtock, as Garaſſe obſerves ubi ſupra. p. 60. You find ſome ſo in the Theomachia Calviniſtica of the ſame Feuardentius.

(f) Salden in otiis Theolog. pag. 489. He cites Bellarm. de verbo Dei, lib. 1. cap. 5, 7.

(g) Mr. Junker at page 193, 194. of the Life of Luther nummis illuſtrata, refers us to two or three Writers who have examined what ſtreſs we are to lay on theſe Sermones convivales.

(b) Coſtar, Defenſe des Ouvrages de Voiture, pag. 10. & ſeq.

(i) Coſtar is miſtaken, they are vicious almoſt always.

(k) It's aſcribed to Mr. Daillé, and I think, not without Ground, I have ſeen ſome who attribute it to Mr. le Moyne. This Edition is of Cologn (as the Title imports, but I believe its of Roan) in 1667.

(a) Qui fronte id auſus es abſolute aſſerere, poſtquam ante multos annos, Edmundus Campianus è ſecta tua pſeudomartyr, ſuper ea re falſi convictus fuiſſet in Anglia, ubi cum id objeciſſet, prolatis libris, nihil unquam tale reperire potuit? Rivetus Caſtigat. notar. in epiſt. ad Balzac. c. 9. n. 6. Oper. Tom. 2. p. 524.

(b) We ſhall ſee in the following Remark that we ought not to rely on him.

(c) Daillé Replique à Adam & à Cottiby, part. 3. cap 23. p. m. 295.

(1) Whitaker Reſp. ad Rat. Camp. ad l. p. 7 col. 2.

(d) Daillé ib. p. 296.

(2) A. Rivet. Jeſ. Vapul. c. 9. §. 6. p. 188.

were ſome Proteſtants, who maintain'd, that he had not ſpoken ſo harſhly as was alledged; and at the bottom they were in the right, but they denied ſome things which they ought (NA) to have granted. If he actually ſaid all the things he is accus'd of uttering

(c) That of Luther on the Epiſtle of St. James.

(f) Fitz-Simon ubi ſupra, pag. 135.

(g) Hiſt. des Variat. lib. 3. n. 48. pag. m. 129.

(3) De capt. Babylon. T. II. 86.

(h) Fitz-Simon ibid. pag. 132.

(4) Luth. in 2. prooemio Novi Teſt. 1. edit.

(5) Vide Sixt. Senenſ. præf. in Bibliothecam Sanctam.

(i) Campian. ratione 1. He cites Lucherus præfat. in epiſt. Ja. vide etiam li. de capti. Babi. cap. de extr. unct. & cent. 2. Magdeb. pag. 58.

(k) See the Jeſuit Paul Bombinus in the Life of Campian, c. 46.

(l) Vita Campiani cap. 46. pag. 260. edit. of Antwerp. 1618.

(m) Hic vero quaſi deſperatæ jam cauſæ Campianus ſerum patronum inde uſque à Germania advocaret, effuſi in perulantem riſum Miniſtri dicentem adhuc illudere. Ib. pag. 258.

(n) Whitak. in reſponſ. ad rationes Campiani defenſione contra confutationem Duræi, p. 21, 22. edit. Londin. 1583.

conſulting the Originals, I obſerve, that Fitz-Simon, renewing the Accuſation which his Brother-Jeſuit Campian could not prove, cites the ſame Preface (e) that Campian had cited. (f) Idem Deo de Epiſtola Sancti Jacobi quam Lutherus non tantùm ut dubiam, ſed ut contentioſam, tumidam, aridam, ſtramineam, & apoſtolico ſpiritu indignam appellavit. Mr. de Meaux do's not ſpeak of this Epithet Straminea, nor cite any of theſe Prefaces, but another Book of Luther. "(g) The bold Reformer retrench'd from "the Canon of the Scripture, whatever did not "comport with his Notions; and 'twas with re- "gard to this Unction, that he writ, in the Captivity "of Babylon, without any Teſtimony of Antiquity, "that this Epiſtle (3) does not ſeem to be St. James's, "nor worthy of an Apoſtolick Spirit." Fitz-Simon has ſaid, in another place, that Luther rejected the three firſt Evangeliſts. (h) Judicare quoque oportet ejus (Lutheri) animum ergà vetus teſtamentum, ex odio ergà precipuam partem novi teſtamenti in his verbis expreſſam. (4) Non imeritò igitur admonui (inquit) in prologo novi teſtamenti lectores, ut hanc falſam aboleant opinionem, quod ſcilicet quatuor ſint evangelia, & quatuor tantùm Evangeliſtæ. Dixi autem Joannis evangelium eſſe unicum, pulchrum, verum ac principale evangelium, aliiſque tribus longè ac longè præferendum, ac anteponendum: adeò ut etiam Pauli ac Petri epiſtolæ longè præcedant tria illa evangelia, Matthæi, Marci, ac Lucæ. Delevit ergo (5) Lutherus pro virili tria ſimul integra evangelia, ut aſcititia, deformia, falſa, vilipendenda.

Since the firſt Edition of this Dictionary, I have diſcovered, that Mr. Daillé and Mr. Rivet have not purſued Campian and Whitaker's Diſpute, ſo exactly as I thought they would have done. I imagined, that theſe two French Miniſters, who were both Men of prodigious Reading, had ſaid all that could be ſaid upon the Subject; but I had no Reaſon for thinking ſo. This we ſhall ſee in the following Remark, with a ſmall Cenſure of the Paſſage from Mr. de Meaux.

(NA) They denied ſomething which they ought to have granted.] Campian's Accuſation was contained in theſe Words: (i) Quid Luthero (cauſis ſuis) ut Epiſtolam Jacobi contentioſam, tumidam, aridam, ſtramineam, flagitioſus Apoſtata nominaret, & indignam ſpiritu cenſeret Apoſtolico? Deſperatio. He pretended then, that Luther ſaid, that St. James's Epiſtle was contentious, bombaſtick, dry, and ſtrawy Piece, and unbecoming an Apoſtolick Spirit. This was one of the firſt Points that was diſcuſs'd in the verbal Diſpute, that Campian was to maintain at the Tower of London (k). He was furniſhed with Luther's Works that he had cited; he was ordered to find out the Words of his Accuſation; he did ſeek, and found only this, Affirmant nonnulli epiſtolam Jacobi Apoſtolico ſpiritu indignam (l). He had ask'd leave to ſend for the Editions, publiſhed by Luther himſelf, from Germany: He had proteſted, that he had read the Words in queſtion in Luther; and that before him many famous Writers had accus'd Luther of the ſame Crime. But he was laugh'd at (m), as a Man who would ſend to Germany for an Advocate in a deſperate Cauſe. Whitaker, ſome time after, took Pen in Hand againſt this Jeſuit, and treated him as a Liar, as we have ſeen in the preceding Remark, in the firſt Paſſage of Mr. Daillé. But he afterwards own'd, there was ſomething of Truth in the Accuſation; for obſerve his Reply to John Duræus, a Scotch Jeſuit, who had written in Defence of Campian: (n) Cum viderem accuſatum à Campiano Lutherum, ut ego putabam, injuſtè, levuit mihi falſum crimen verbo notare. Itaque Jacobi epiſtolam eſſe his contumeliis, quas Campianus commemorat, à Luthero affectam negavi, quia in Lutheri libris nihil tale potui reperire. Tu jam verba ipſa profers, quæ tamen nec vidi unquam, nec qui ſe vidiſſe diceret, convici. Utcunque ſe res habet non magni refert. Mihi enim Lutheri quidque dicta minimè præſtanda ſunt. Quamquam mihi plànè ſuſpectam eſſe fidem tuam profiteor, & te aliorum fidei auctoritatique nimium tribuiſſe ſuſpicor. Primùm enim vidi quandam Lutheri præfationem antiquiſſimam, anno 1525. Wittenbergæ, in qua Jacobi epiſtolam pro Petri ac Pauli epiſtolis ſtramineam vocat. Sed hoc cum tuis conferendum non eſt. Deinde tibi affirmaſti vo- luiſſe oſtendere Jacobi epiſtolam à Lutherò ſtramineam eſſe dictam, hanc ipſam præfationem, atque hæc verba proferunt, de tuis nullam mentionem faciunt. Denique cùm viderem in quadam præfatione hanc epiſtolam pro alteris ſtramineam dici, non exiſtimavi in eadem præfatione dixiſſe, & tumidam & aridam, & contentioſam, & ſtramineam, & ſpiritu Apoſtolico indignam nominari. Quare dum novam hanc editionem tuam video, male, quàm aliquid temerè in alterutram partem affirmare. Obſerve, he confeſſes, that, ſince the Publication of his Book againſt Campian's Reaſons, he had found a Preface of Luther printed at Wittemberg in 1525; in which it was ſaid, that St. James's Epiſtle, is an Epiſtle of Straw, compared with the Epiſtles of St. Peter and St. Paul; but that not finding the Epithetes contentioſa, tumida, arida, indigna Apoſtolico ſpiritu, alledged by Campian, and repeated by Duræus, he will not aſſent to the Truth of the Citations, till the Copy be produc'd, that contains 'em. He declares that, in the mean time, he'll ſuſpend his Judgment betwixt the Affirmative and Negative. Campian's Apologiſts got ſome Ground by this Confeſſion of Whitaker; but, to have juſtified him perfectly, they ſhould have produced the Piece before the Eyes of the Publick, in which the Epithetes of contentioſa, tumida, &c. were contain'd. It does not appear, that they were able to do it; and therefore Whitaker, in anſwering a new Antagoniſt, maintain'd, that Campian ſtill lay under the Charge of a Slanderer, ſince nothing more could be proved than the Epithete Straminea. Conſider well the following Paſſage, in which Whitaker talks to his Adverſary William Rainoldus: (a) Cum copioſam & amplam hujus rei defenſionem ſuſceperis, quare in ea re maximè deficis, ad quam maximè auxilio tuo opus eſt? Nam quod affers de ſtramine, antea fatebantur totum illud, quod verum fuit: tua itaque partes fuiſſent copioſiùs confirmaſſe, Lucherum etiam Epiſtolam illam vocaſſe contentioſam, tumidam, aridam, indignam ſpiritu Apoſtolico; quorum omnium ea in loco illum Campianus accuſavit. Sed cum nihil ad hanc rem probandam afferre poſſis, coactus es fateri Campianum gravius Lutherum, quàm meritus eſt, de hac Epiſtola accuſaſſe: ita ut ſi uno aliquo verbo Jeſuitæ tui, cujus cauſam agis, exiſtimationem defenderis; pluribus tamen eum verbis condemnaſti; quæ tu interim veteratorie omittis, quaſi nec ea unquam dixiſſet Campianus, nec tua res ageretur. Fateor ſanè parum referre, quid de Luthero Campianus finxerit nequiter: at qui eum defendendum ſuſcepiſti, ne putes te officio tuo ſatisfeciſſe, ſi ex multis, quæ ille protulit, in una aliqua re eum defenderis, & in pluribus defeceris. Quare vel deſine tandem de eo iſto verbo litem movere, vel reliqua teſtimoniis confirma. Let us cite another Paſſage ſtill, in which he tells us, that he had not ſuppreſs'd the Diſcovery he had made, ſince the Publication of his Anſwer to Campian's ten Reaſons. He examin'd, with all poſſible care, as many Copies as he could find, whether German or Latin, of this Reformer's Works, and having at laſt met with that which concerns the Epithete Straminea; he publiſhed it in a Preface to his Anſwer to Sanders's Tract. (b) Si Lutherus hoc ſcripſerit, miquè ego Campianum falſi reum peregi: ſi non ſcripſerit, turpiſſimè Lutherum Campianus infimulavit. Ut veritatem iſtius rei cognoſcerem, in omnibus exemplaribus, quæ comparare potui, tàm Germanicis quàm Latinis examinandis ſummam induſtriam collocavi: cum autem nulla verba ejuſcemodi, ſed diverſa potiùs, invenirem; credebam, optimè impulſus ratione, totum iſtud excogitatum fuiſſe; itaque falſiſſimum eſſe pronunciavi. Evenit verò poſtea, ut in vetus Germanicum Teſtamentum à Luthero converſum incíderem præfixis ipſum præfationibus, in quibus inveni quiddam, quod aliqua ex parte referret illud quod objecerat Campianus. Cum autem illud legiſſem, non rem diſſimulavi, ſed fatebar in reſponſione mea ad Gregorium Martinum. In illa quidem præfatione ſcribit Lutherus, S. Jacobi Epiſtolam non poſſe dignitate certare cum Epiſtolis S. Petri & Pauli, ſed Epiſtolarum Canonicarum eſſe, ſi cum illis comparetur. Quam ejus ſententiam non probo; atque in recentioribus editionibus eum feciſſe ſua illa verba, opinor ipſum poſtea Lutherum hanc ſuam ſententiam improbaſſe. Non profectò dubito, quin aliquis lector fatebitur inter hoc, quod ſcribit Luthe-

(a) Whitaker, reſpon. ad Rainold. refutationem, pag. 105, 168.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 103, 104.

rus uttering againſt this Epiſtle, it was, doubtleſs, (NΔΔ) before the Year 1525. I ſhall give ſome Reaſons for this * below. The World was long ignorant of the Raſhneſs he had been guilty of in conſenting, that the Landgrave of Heſſe ſhould have (O) two Wives at the ſame time. But at laſt it became Publick: The Roman Catholicks made a great Noiſe about run, atque illud, quod ei objicit Campianus, diſcrepantiam eſſe. Etenim aliud eſt loqui planè & ἀνατύπως, aliud uſi comparatione. Lutherus, inquit Campianus, Epiſtolam S. Jacobi ſtramineam vocavit. Lutherus ait præ Pauli & Petri Epiſtolis ſtramineam eſſe. By all this it appears, that Mr. Daillé and Mr. Rivet, were ignorant of a great many Things relating to this Controverſy. They did not know, that Whitaker retracted Part of his Indictment; nor that he himſelf found out the Preface which inform'd him of Luther's bold Expreſſion. The Jeſuits quickly laid hold of it; they made their Boaſts, and exaggerated the Thing, pretending, that he own'd the whole Truth of the Accuſation. We ſhall cite the Author of Campian's Life, in the Place where he gives us the Hiſtory of the Conference, held at the Tower of London. (c) Is matutini certaminis ordo exituſque fuit, viſique hæretici eo lætiores è certamine abſcedere, quòd Lutherum calumnia ſuo judicio exemiſſent: quamquam id quoque gaudium ut vanum ita non diuturnum fuit. Paulo poſt ad inquiſitionem tantæ rei omnium ſtudiis converſis, incorrupti Lutheri codices inſpecti, inque iis inventa ipſa, quæ carpſerat abominis Apoſtatæ Campianus verba. Et quoniam res aperta erat, ipſi hæreſis magiſtri, inter quos Whitakerus fuit, Lutheri inſanas illas voces in vetuſtis exemplaribus legi palàm paſſi; perſonam triumphanti penè jam mendacio, vel invitis ſuis ipſi manibus detraxere. The more we examine, theſe things, the more we find it an Herculean Labour, to diſ-entangle Truth in the midſt of ſo many Diſguiſes and Juggles.

* In the Remark NΔΔ.

(c) Vita Campiani ubi ſupra, pag. 261, 262.

What I have to ſay againſt the Biſhop of Meaux won't detain my Readers long. He affirms, that Luther has written, without any Teſtimony from Antiquity, that this Epiſtle appears not to be St. James's, nor worthy of an Apoſtolical Spirit. This Obſervation is falſe; you need only compare it with theſe Words of Mr. Daillé: 'Origen, many Ages before Luther, writ, that ſome rejected this Epiſtle, which (2) Euſebius equally teſtifies, and ſays, there were but few of the Antients who had mentioned it; and (3) St. Jerome after him relates, that it was affirm'd, That it was not the Apoſtle himſelf, but ſome other Perſons, who had writ it under his Name, tho' by little and little, in Track of Time, it had been receiv'd, and authoriz'd (e).' Whitaker, in his Anſwer to Duræus, proves, at large, that St. James's Epiſtle was ſuſpected by a great many in the Antient Church.

(1) Orig. in Joann. Tract. 2ª. p. 372.
(2) Euſeb. Hiſt. l. 2.
(3) Hieron. de ſcript. Eccl. in Jacob.
(e) Daillé reponſe à Cottibi, part. 3. pag. 296.

(NΔΔ) It was, doubtleſs, before the Year 1525.] We have ſeen, that the Epithete, Straminea, is found in a Preface printed this Year. But 'tis certain he had been leſs circumſpect ſome Years before. We may therefore preſume, that, cooling by Degrees, he ſoftened and temper'd, in 1525, what he advanc'd too ſcandalouſly in that Paſſage, for Inſtance, which Campian, and Duræus, and Fitz-Simon, &c. charge upon him; and which was intirely effac'd in the Editions after the Year 1525. I have obſerved, that Cochlæus, in the Year 1522, accuſes him of having publiſh'd extravagant Prefaces, with reſpect to ſome Books of the Scripture-Canon. (g) Optimis quibuſque videbatur Lutherus, nimis malitioſè graſſari in ſacram literam novi Teſtamenti. E quorum Canone, audaci cenſura reiciebat Epiſtolam ad Hebræos, Epiſtolam Jacobi, Epiſtolam Judæ, & Apocalypſim Joannis. Quas ſanè & atrocibus infamabat calumniis in ſuis præfationibus. In præfatione verò generali, etiam in ſacratiſſima Evangelia audaciſſimè manum mittebat: volens in primis repudiandam eſſe vetuſtiſſimam hanc & omnibus Chriſtianis notam ac receptam opinionem & ſententiam, Eſſe ſcilicet Quatuor tantum Evangelia, totidemque Evangeliſtas. Be pleaſed to remember, that this Cochlæus had been one of his moſt violent Adverſaries: But, in fine, ſince it can't be denied but the Straminea ſubſiſts, 'tis probable, that Campian's whole Paſſage was in ſome antient Preface: For, in reality, the other Epitheres are not more, nor indeed ſo injurious as this. Whitaker, like a Cunning-Man, took Advantage of this Jeſuit's Apologiſt's not being able to produce the Edition they wanted. He made good uſe of his Advantages, and skilfully profited by Luther's Reſtriction, though it has not all the Force that is imagined, and be only a palliative Remedy: for whoever ſays, that St. James's Epiſtle is an Epiſtle of Straw, in Compariſon of St. Paul's, really ſays, that it is not Canonical, or the Production of an inſpired Writer. It would be abſurd to pretend, that Writers, inſpired by God, have not an equal Authority, or that ſome are more credible than others. Would not this be to ſay, that the Holy Spirit neglected ſome of 'em, and left 'em to their particular Opinions, true or falſe? This can't be admitted; and conſequently there is a Neceſſity of Saying, they are all, as to us, of equal Authority: So that when a Man affirms, that a Writing, compared with St. Paul's Epiſtles, is a Piece of Straw-Work, he can conſider it no otherwiſe than as a Humane Writing. And upon this foot he thinks it lawful to paſs ſuch a Judgment on it, as the Laws of Criticiſm authorize; and to take to Task the Style, the Turn, the Thoughts, as if he were judging of the Works of a Tertullian, or an Arnobius. This, however, does not excuſe Campian's not mentioning Luther's Reſtriction, if he had found it in the Edition, upon which he proceeded; otherwiſe he fell into the Sophiſm, a dicto ſecundum quid, ad dictum ſimpliciter. Still reſerving a Liberty to ſay, that the Reſtriction on that occaſion was only an Appearance of Reſerve, without the Reality; ſince St. James's Epiſtle ſtill remained actually and fully degraded from its Canonical Character, as a Work divinely inſpired.

(g) Joannes Cochlæus de actis & ſcriptis Lutheri, fol. m. 83.

(O) That the Landgrave of Heſſe ſhould have two Wives at once.] Mr. Varillas has ſpoken of this Matter at large. '(a) Philip, Landgrave of Heſſe, was 'of ſo vigorous a Conſtitution, that one Wife was 'not ſufficient for him, and the Surgeons, who o-'pened him after his Death, found a natural Cauſe 'of it, which the Modeſty of our Tongue will not 'permit me to explain (1).... He perſuaded him-'ſelf, that his Infirmity diſpens'd with the Goſpel-'Rigour, and permitted him to have two Wives at 'the ſame time. Nothing diſturb'd him in the Noti-'on he had conceived, like the Novelty of the Thing: 'But he ſuppos'd, that the Approbation of Luther, 'and others of the moſt famous Divines of his Sect, 'would juſtify his Action. He aſſembled 'em 'at Wittemberg, in form of a Council, in the Year '1539. The Affair was there examined with all the 'Precautions that were thought neceſſary to prevent 'their Deciſion's being turned into Ridicule. They 'foreſaw the unlucky Conſequences of what they 'were going to do: But, in fine, the Fear of diſo-'bliging the Landgrave, carried it for Luther's Opi-'nion, and his chief Diſciples, againſt the Law of 'Jeſus Chriſt, Conſcience, Reputation, and all other 'Humane and Divine Conſiderations. The Reſult 'of the Aſſembly of Wittemberg, was written with 'Melanchton's own Hand, and ſigned by Luther 'and by the other moſt famous Divines of Saxony. 'Is was expreſs'd in very pathetical Terms, to leave 'no Doubt or Ambiguity, and was ſent to the Land-'grave in the following Form.' Mr. Varillas gives the Act intire in Latin and French. We there find an expreſs Permiſſion granted to this Landgrave to marry a ſecond Wife, provided, that as few Perſons as poſſible were made privy to it. We there alſo find, that in certain Caſes of Neceſſity, any other Man might marry again in his Wife's Life-Time; and two of theſe Caſes are ſpecified by theſe Doctors. 1. If a Man that is a Captive, in a foreign Country, can't preſerve, or recover his Health, without the Uſe of a Woman. 2. If a Man be married to a leprous Woman. (b) Certis tamen caſibus locus eſt diſpenſationi, ſi quis apud exteras nationes captivus ad curam corporis & ſanitatem inibi alteram uxorem ſuper induceret, vel ſi quis haberet leproſam; his caſibus alteram ducere cum conſilio ſui Paſtoris, non intentione novam legem inducendi, ſed ſuæ neceſſitati conſulendi, hunc neſcimus, qua ratione damnare liceret. Mr. Varillas ſets down in Latin and French the Landgrave's Contract of Marriage with Margaret de Saal; to which Marriage this Prince's firſt Wife gave her Conſent. This Hiſtorian makes many Reflections hereupon, tending to ſhew, that

(a) Varillas, hiſt. de l'Hereſie, l. 12. p. m. 87.
(1) Thuanus, lib. 41. ad ann. m. 1567. Addam, quod plerisque riſu dignum mihi ſilentio minime prætermittendum viſum eſt, ipſum tam inexhauſti ad venereos uſus ſucci fuiſſe, ut cùm uxore ſola uteretur, & illa teries illum admittere non poſſet, vir alioquin caſtus quique vagis libidinibus minime oblectabatur ex ejus permiſſu, negotio cum Paſtoribus communicato, concubinam unam ſuperinduxerit, cuius conſuetudine ardore aliquantum perdomito, parcius ac moderatius cum uxore verſaretur. Tandem hoc anno, qui illi climactericus fuit, poſtridie Paſchæ mortalitatem exuit. Inſpecto à Medicis corpore Triorches repertus eſt.
(b) Apud Varillas, lb. pag. 93.

about it; and there have been some Ministers, who have not had all the neces[illegible]
(P) Prudence in answering for Luther: They have advanced Principles manifestly [illegible] permithe Reasons of these Casuists open a very large Passage to Polygamy, and observes, that the two (c) Acts, inserted in his History, (d) have been faithfully transcribed and collated by the Imperial Notaries with the Originals, which are preserved in the Archives of Ziegenhain, belonging equally to the Branch of Hesse Cassel, and to that of Hesse-Darmstadt.

But after him came a more refined Controvertist (e), who has drawn another Piece out of the same Sack, and has made many subtle Reflections upon all this Matter. This other Piece is the Instruction the Landgrave gave to Martin Bucer. In this we find on one hand the Reasons which induc'd this Prince to a second Marriage; and, on the other, those by which he would induce the Divines to consent to it. He shews, that he never lov'd the Princess his Wife; and that she was so disgustful, and so subject to Drunkenness, that he neither could, nor ever would abstain from other Women, whilst he had no other Wife but her; and that, nevertheless, he would not incur the Penalties, which the Scripture denounces to Fornicators and Adulterers. (f) Cum videam quod ab hoc agendi modo penes modernam uxorem meam nec possim nec velim abstinere. The Physicians, adds he, know the Force of my Constitution; besides, I am often obliged to assist at the Diets; they last a long time, in which there is high Feeding; how then can I preserve my Continence? For I can't always take my Wife along with me, with all her Retinue. (g) Primo quod initio, quo eam duxi, nec animo, nec desiderio eam complexus fuerim. Quali ipsa quoque complexione, amabilitate, & odore sit, & quomodo interdum se superfluo potu gerat, hoc sciunt ipsius [illegible] Præfecti; & Virgines; aliique plures: cumque ad ea describenda difficultatem habeam, Bucero tamen omnia declaravi. Secundò, quia valida complexione, ut Medici sciunt, sum, & sæpe contingit ut in fœderum & imperii comitiis diu verser, ubi lautè vivitur & corpus curatur; quomodo me ibi gerere queam absque uxore, cùm non semper magnum Gynæceum mecum ducere possim, facile est conjicere & considerare. He adds to all this I know not how many Threats and Promises, which put his Casuists to their Trumps; for there is great Probability, that if a private Gentleman had consulted 'em upon the like Case, he would have been disappointed of his Desire. It may therefore reasonably be imagined, that they were Men of little Faith; they had not a due Confidence in the Promises of Jesus Christ: They believ'd, that if the Reformation of Germany was not maintain'd by the Princes who profess'd it, it would soon be extinguished. The Experience of the Past made 'em timorous; they saw, that the Violence of Persecution and Arms, employ'd by Catholick Princes against the Deserters of the Roman Communion, had ever destroy'd the Reformations in the Birth. It was natural to fear a like Fate, unless Force were repell'd by Force. However it be, it can't be denied, generally speaking, but Luther's Book (h) contain'd several Things favourable to Polygamy. The Sieur Lyserus gives (i) several Instances of it. See the Remark S. I'll finish this with the Words of the Bishop of Meaux. At present, says he (k), all this Mystery of Iniquity is discovered by the Pieces, which the Elector Palatine, Charles Lewis, lately deceas'd (l), has caus'd to be printed; and whereof, the Prince, Ernest of Hesse, one of Philip's Descendants, has reveal'd a part, since his turning Catholick. The Book, which the Prince Palatine caused to be printed, is intitled, Conscientious Considerations upon Marriage, with an Explication of Questions hitherto discuss'd, concerning Adultery, Divorcement, and Polygamy. The Book came out in Germany in 1679, under the borrow'd Name of Daphnæus Arcuarius, under which was conceal'd that of Laurentius Bæger, one of this Prince's Counsellors.

It must here be observ'd, that Thuanus was ill inform'd of the Circumstances of this Affair. The Landgrave, according to him, was, on one hand, so vigorous in the Conjugal Exercise, that his Wife could not admit his Embraces as often as he desired; and, on the other, so chaste, that he did not love to stray abroad: And therefore the Princess consented to the Diversion which a Concubine might give to the Forces of her Husband: And the thing having been communicated to the Ministers, they gave the Landgrave a Concubine, who tamed him a little, and obliged him to be m[illegible]derate towards his Wife. This was not tho[illegible]; he had never lov'd her; he married her again[illegible] his inclination: And beginning three Weeks after his Marriage to make use of other Women, he continued the same Course (n) till his second Marriage. 'Tis very probable, that she was ignorant of his Ardour, or knew it only by Hear-say. Away with these scurvy Jesters, who might be able to criticize. Thuanus, on his supposing, that the Princess, finding her self unable to bear so fre[illegible] Attacks, called in a Concubine to her Assistance. Montagne were a very likely Man to rally this Histo[illegible] upon it, but his Authority is suspected. See here a [illegible]ge of his Essays. (o) We have farther read of a Difference that happen'd in Catalonia, between a Woman, complaining of the too constant Efforts of her Husband; (not that, in my Opinion, she was so much incommoded by them; for I believe no Miracles, except in Faith; as under this Pretence, which is the Fundamental Action of Marriage, to re-trench and bridle the Authority of Husbands over their Wives; and to shew, that their Lust and Naughtiness pass beyond the Nuptial-Bed, and trample under Foot the Charms and Pleasures of Venus:) To which Complaint, a Man truely brutal, and unnatural, answered, that even on fasting Days, he could not dispence with less than ten Times. From whence proceeded that notable Decree of the Queen of Arragon; by which, after mature Deliberation of the Council, this good Queen, to give a Rule and Example to all A[illegible] the Moderation and Modesty required in a just [illegible]ge; determined, for the Legitimate and Nec[illegible] Bounds, six Times a Day; abating and quitting much of the Occasions and Desires of her Sex, to establish, as she said, an easy Form, and by Consequence permanent and immutable. Whereupon the Doctors cry out, what must be a Woman's Appetite and Concupiscence; since their Reason, their Reformation, and their Virtue is defined at this rate? See the Remark D of the Article Gleichen, and remember that Abundance of Authors, who relate the same thing as Montagne, and make their Jests upon it, do this rather to exercise their Wit, than to express their Thoughts. Some of 'em are at least persuaded, that such Things have been told them in a very sincere manner, that's enough:

(a) Claudite jam rivos, pueri, sat prata biberunt.

(P) Some Ministers, who have not had all the necessary Prudence.] The only Answer that should have been given the Bishop of Meaux, was to say, as Mr. Basnage has prudently done [illegible]) 1. That Luther ought not to have grante[illegible]grave of Hesse the Permission to marry a seco[illegible] whilst his first was alive; and that the Bishop of Meaux had reason to condemn him upon that Article. 2. That the Popes have run into more Criminal Excesses; from whence it follows, that Luther's Fault, censured by the Papists, has no weight; for if this Fault were a just Impediment to his being an Instrument in the Hands of God to declare the Truth, and reform the Church, the Roman Catholicks are to blame in believing that the Popes, who have been guilty of more crying Sins than this, continue, however, living Oracles to the Church, and the Vicars of Jesus Christ. 'Tis certain the Catholicks can infer nothing from this Action of the Reformers, nor from any other to invalidate the Reformation, without destroying a Principle absolutely necessary for their own Support; to wit, that the greatest Crimes don't hinder the Pope pronouncing ex Cathedra, from declaring a Truth, the Belief of which is obliging on all the Faithful.

Had the Author of the Pastoral Letters been as judicious as Mr. Basnage, he would not have expos'd his Cause to Objections, he could nev[illegible]ver. First, he would have confess'd the Fac[illegible]t be permitted to doubt of the Acts, whi[illegible]lector Palatine, Charles Lewis, caused to be published, with an Attestation of a Publick Notary, declaring they were copied from the Original, in the Archives of the House of Hesse, there will be no Possibility of pro[illegible]s: The most authentick Declarations of So[illegible]Courts, the Privy-Seal, the Great-Seal, and all [illegible]t judicial Testimonies imaginable, will be a feeble Barrier against the Obstinacy of a Disputer. Therefore Prudence required, that it should not be called in Question, whether the Landgrave Philip ob[illegible]

(c) The Consultation of Divines on the Contract of Marriage.
(d) Varillas, ib. p. 86, 87.
(e) Mr. de Meaux, hist. des Variations, lib. 6. n. 1. & seq.
(f) Ibid. p. m. 259.
(g) Ibid.
(h) Luthero erroris hujus dicam scripsit Bellarminus haud uno loco. At patrocinium Luthero præstare conatus est Johannes Gerardi, etiamsi (ne quid dissimulem) maculam illam tam pleue eluere non potuerit, quin concedendum sit, Virum illum magnum imprudentiusculè nonnunquam de materia hac locutum esse. Saldenus in otiis Theolog. pag. 363.
(i) Polygamia triumphatrix.
(k) Hist. des Variat. lib. 6. n. 1. p. m. 227.
(l) It's a Mistake, the Son and Successor of Charles Lewis was dead when Mr. de Meaux wrote this.

(n) Initi[illegible] quo eam duxi, nec animo nec desiderio eam complexus fuerim... Si porro diceretur quare meam uxorem duxerim, vere imprudens homo tunc temporis fui, & ab iniquibus meorum Consiliariorum, quorum potior pars defuncta est, ad id persuasus sum. Matrimonium meum ultra tres septimanas non servavi[illegible] sic [illegible]nner exercui. Apud Hist. des Variat. lib. 6. pag. 259. d
(o) Montagne Essays, lib. 3. chap. 5. pag. m. 121, 122.
(a) Virgil eclog. 3. v. ult.
(b) Basnage, hist. de la Religion des [illegible] Rom[illegible] Tom. pag. 443.

pernicious: And the moſt tolerable of what they offer is of ſuch a Nature, that they had much better have (Q) ſaid nothing. Mr. Claude's Manner of obtained [redacted]er, and ſome other Miniſters, a Diſpenſation [redacted]ry two Wives. I ſay further: The Reſpect that is due to the moſt illuſtrious Houſe of Heſſe, and to the Memory of a Reformed Elector, do's not ſuffer us to doubt of it: Nevertheleſs, the Author (c) of the Paſtoral Letters has expreſsly declared he doubts of it. But his greater Fault lies here; that, to extenuate the Submiſſion of theſe Miniſters, he expatiates upon every thing, that can ſhew the Law of Marriage, of one with one, to be ſubject to a Thouſand Exceptions; [redacted] would particularly have it ſacrificed to the imperio[redacted]wer of a laſcivious Conſtitution. There's no [redacted] of Compariſon, ſays he (d), between theſe two Evils; to wit, the having Recourſe to the unhappy Remedy of a ſecond Marriage, and the launching out into a Thouſand Impurities; which are the undoubted Conſequences of Celibacy in Perſons, whoſe Complexion is not turned to Continency. This raiſed him up Adverſaries, both among the Catholicks and Proteſtants. The Author of the Hiſtory of Variations anſwer'd, that this Principle would carry him too far. (e) The perpetual 'Indiſpoſition of a Husband to his Wife, is as invincible an Impediment, as Impotence, or Captivity it ſelf: The married Couple therefore muſt unmercifully leave one another in theſe ſad States; beſides, an Unſuitableneſs of Humour, one of the moſt 'incurable Diſtempers, will be a no leſs neceſſary 'Impediment.' This Miniſter found, in his own Commmion, Advocaries enough both Lay-Men and Divines. The Bi[redacted] of Meaux (f) produces him a Letter from an[redacted] Miniſter, who bluſhes for his Brother, on the Score of theſe Neceſſities, alledg'd againſt the Goſpel, and theſe inevitable Impurities.... and who perceives the Inconvenience of this impure Doctrine, which introduces Divorce, and even Polygamy, when-ever either of the Parties labours under Diſtempers, I ſay not, incurable, but long; or where any other Impediment may be found, which obliges 'em to live ſeparately. This Miniſter is not named; but another has attack'd this Doctrine above-board, in order to have it cenſured; and, in fine, has publiſh'ed, that 'tis a Principle naturally (g) productive of this Concluſion, That a Man, who has a ſick Wife, may marry a Second. There is nothing more certain, adds he; an equal Neceſſity gives an equal Privilege; and if an Husband is as much hinder'd from Cohabitation by his Wife's having a dead Palſie, as by his own Captivity among Barbarians, he is equally at Liberty to ſeek a Remedy to his Incontinence, in a ſecond Marriage. Mr. de Beauval, a[redacted]n, has urged this (h) ſtill more ſtrong[redacted]ther Lay-Man has maintain'd, that this Ma[redacted] (i) opens a Gate to the ſtrangeſt Diſorders; it authorizes an Incontinent Perſon, whoſe Wife is long ſick, to marry another; and ſo another and another, without end, if Providence will have 'em all unhealthy. Thus you ſee a Turkiſh Polygamy breaking in by this Gap, into Chriſtianity, and defiling it with its brutal Luſts: You ſee this beſides in Chriſtianity, which was never ſeen in antient Heathenſm, nor is, at this Day, to be found in Mahometiſm; to wit, Women authoriz'd to have ſeveral Husbands at the ſame time, when not having the Gift of Continency, they happen to be joyned to a diſtemper'd Husband: For 'twere ridiculous to pretend, that it's a leſs evil in them, to give way to promiſcuous Luſts, which are, according to this Miniſter, the infallible Conſequence of Celibacy in ſome Conſtitutions, than to recur to the Remedy of a ſecond Husband. We ſee then that his Maxim is a Source of the moſt ſcandalous and filthy Liberties, that ever were ſeen in the World; and that nothing will expoſe our Communion to more mortifying Reproaches, than this Do[redacted]e of Mr. Jurieu, unleſs our Synods condemn it. A[redacted]ws which Decency and the Prudence of Magiſtr[redacted]e introduced to binder Widows from marrying a[redacted] time before ſuch a certain Term fall to the Ground, are only a Tyrannical Impoſition, which makes thoſe of a certain Complexion launch into a Thouſand Impurities. The Author of the Paſtoral Le[redacted] had found out a hundred Expedients (k) to [redacted] himſelf off, with reſpect to ſome other Difficu[redacted] that were propos'd to him concerning Divorce, [redacted] ſecond Marriages; but it was utterly impoſſible for him to diſ-engage himſelf from this. All he could do was to calumniate his Accuſers; for 'tis a Calumny for a M[redacted] to complain, that he has been accuſed of a thing, of which he has not been accus'd (l). Thus you ſee how much it concerns thoſe who anſwer a Book of Controverſy to keep a ſtreight Rein; for if they give way to the impetuous Raſhneſs of their own Thoughts and Temper, they ſpoil the beſt Cauſe.

What I have ſaid of the Reſpect due to the moſt illuſtrious Houſe of Heſſe, and to the Memory of the Reformed Elector, would not be underſtood by every Body, if I did not explain it: The Acts of this ſecond Marriage were taken (m) from the Archives of Ziegenhain, common to the Branch of Heſſe Caſſel, and to that of Heſſe Darmſtadt, Prince Erneſt of Heſſe Rhinfelds, having embrac'd the Roman Faith, was over-joy'd at their being publiſh'd, becauſe he thought this would fix a Blemiſh on the Church he had quitted (n); and 'tis manifeſt, they were a great Diſgrace to Luther, Melanchthon, Bucer, &c. There is therefore no Appearance, that the Landgraves of Heſſe Caſſel, and the Landgraves of Heſſe Darmſtadt, the former Calviniſts, and the latter Lutherans, would have been ſilent, if there had been any Suſpicion, that theſe Acts were forg'd. Theſe great Princes could not be ſufficiently blam'd, if, having any Suſpicion of this, they had done nothing to oppoſe Landgrave Erneſt, a Catholick Proſelyte's Deſign. 'Tis therefore denying 'em their due Reſpect to doubt, whether theſe Acts be genuine; its inſinuating that they ſuffer under the Authority of their Archives, the Reformers to be publickly aſpers'd, and moſt unjuſtly ſlander'd, and a Diſhonour brought upon the Proteſtant Church. As they are not [redacted] a Lukewarmneſs, ſo injurious to either, 'tis moſt certain their Silence clearly proves the Validity of theſe Acts. And as for the Elector Palatin, how would he be confounded with Shame, ſhould it be proved, that he order'd one of his Counſellors to publiſh falſe Acts of this Nature? I know indeed, that it was his Intereſt they ſhould be moſt genuine, becauſe he did all that was poſſible to legitimate his Marriage with a Lady he had entertain'd, whilſt his Electreſs was alive; which occaſioned this Princeſs's leaving him, and refuſing to be call'd his Wife any longer: But, in fine, he had too much Honour, and Prudence, to go about to juſtify himſelf by a ſuppoſititious Fact, the Falſeneſs whereof might have eaſily been prov'd by Madam the Electreſs's Relations (u).

(Q) They had much better have ſaid nothing.] The Author of the Paſtoral Letters has much enlarged (b) upon the Practice of ſome States. This was giving a Handle for three preſſing Inſtances: For 1. His Adverſary (c) fail'd not to take the Advantage, as if the Civil Laws of Proteſtants left a Man too great a Laxitude in Matrimonial Caſes; and, as if only a ſmall Number of private Perſons had diſapproved it, whilſt he had the general Practice on his ſide. 2. All the Examples he produces, or could produce, are of a different kind from the Matter in Debate; they being not Marriages of a Man with two Wives in the ſame Houſe at the ſame time, as were thoſe of the Landgrave. 3. Laſtly, a Caſuiſt ought not to regulate himſelf upon a Practice tolerated by Sovereigns. Who is ignorant what extreme Abuſes National Laws have authoriz'd or tolerated in Chriſtianity (d) for many Ages together, with reſpect to Marriage? The Church has ſtood out; and, by its Oppoſition, has at laſt cauſed thoſe things to be changed, which were not reconcilcable with the Goſpel. What a fine Caſe ſhould we be in then, if the Caſuiſts would approve of all that Sovereigns permit? Do they not almoſt every where ſuffer Fornication to go (e) unpuniſh'd? If any Suit happens betwixt a Woman and him who has got her with Child, the moſt ſhe has to fear, is (f), that the Man will not be condemn'd to pay her a Sum of Money: As for Cenſures or other Penalties, ſhe's in no Apprehenſion of 'em. The Judges refer all this to her Confeſſor, her Relations, or her Conſiſtory. And are not Comedies not only tolerated, but even protected by the Sovereign? Have not the Actors of Opera's at Paris a Guard allow'd 'em, detach'd from the Troops of the King's Houſhould? Nevertheleſs, do the Preachers ceaſe to roar againſt theſe Diverſions? And if any Eccleſiaſtical Author dares to write in Favour of Plays, is he not immediately over-whelm'd with oppoſite Writings, and forc'd to recant (g)? So that a good

(a) See the Paſtoral Letters of 1688. pag. 166. in 12. and the 6th Letter of the Tableau du Socinianiſme, pag. 302.

(b) VIII Lettre Paſtorale de 1688, pag. 176. in 12°.

(c) Mr. de Meaux, IV. Avert. pag. 131. Dutch Edition.

(d) Ibid. pag. 136.

(e) See the Book of Elias Saurin, Paſtor of the Walloon Church at Utrecht, intitl'ed, Examen de la Theologie de Mr. Jurieu, pag. 801.

(f) See his Anſwer to the Avi[redacted] Pamp[redacted] entit'l'd Declaration de Mr. Bayle, pag. 18.

(g) This happned at Paris in 1694, on occaſion of a Book in Favour of Comedy, which Father Francis Caffaro was ſuppoſed to be the Author of. See the Journal of Hamburgh 1694, pag. 24, 62, 65.

(h) See the 6th Letter of the Tableau du Socinianiſme, pag. 300, & ſeq.

(i) See Saurin, ubi ſupra.

(k) See the 6th Letter of the Tableau du Socinianiſme, pag. 300, & ſeq.

(l) See Saurin, ubi ſupra.

(m) Varillas, ubi ſupra, pag. 87.

(n) See Varillas, ibid. & Mr. de Meaux hiſt. des Variat. lib. 6. n. 1. ſub. fin.

(a) She was of the Houſe of Heſſe.

(b) See the ſixth Letter of the Tableau du Socinianiſme, pag. 303, & ſeq.

(c) Mr. de Meaux Defenſe de l'hiſt. des Variations.

(d) See the Article Lambert.

(e) See the Remark AAAA. of the Article Ales.

(f) I don't ſpeak of thoſe who are got with Child upon Promiſe of Marriage by Perſons of their own Quality: Theſe often obtain Decrees, which condemn the Man to marry 'em.

of (R) Speaking of this great Reformer is very judicious. He has justified him among other Things upon a Point, which has given occasion to several Writings; 'tis that concerning (S) his Dispute with the Devil upon the Subject of Private Masses. Luther died the a good Moralist will not regulate his Opinions by the Practice of Civil Laws, in a Point concerning Relaxation.

Whoever would see as good an Answer as could be given to the Bishop of Meaux, concerning the Marriage of the Landgrave, may be pleased to read Mr. Seckendorf (b).

(R) Mr. Claud's Manner of speaking of Luther.] These are his Words. "(i) I confess it were to be "wish'd, that Luther had been more temperate in "his Way of Writing; And that with his great and "invincible Courage, with his ardent Zeal for the "Truth, with that unshaken Constancy he ever ma-"nifested, he could have discovered a greater Re-"serve and Moderation. But these Faults, which "are most commonly Complectional, prevent not "our Esteem of Men, when, in other Respects, we "perceive in 'em a good Fund of Piety, and Vertues "perfectly Heroick, such as were seen to shine in Lu-"ther. For we can't refuse to praise the Zeal of Luci-"fer, Bishop of Cagliari, or to admire the great Qua-"lities of St. Jerome, though we discover too much "Keenness and Out-rage in their Style. And per-"haps too, there was some particular Necessity at "the Time of the Reformation, to employ the strong-"est Expressions, the better to awaken Men from "that profound Slumber, in which they had lain so "long. However, I grant, that Luther ought to "have been more reserved in his Writings; and "that if the Author of the Prejudices would have "concerned himself to complain of the Acrimony "of his Style, we should have been content to ans-"full Answer, to desire him, for the future, not to "imitate himself what he condemned in another." All this is good and solid. I shall only observe, that a general Method of justifying People from hence, that their ill Qualities were very proper, considering the Posture of Affairs, to produce good Effects, is a great Source of Delusion. No Body doubts, that Providence knows how to chuse the most effectual Means to arrive at its Ends: But as the ill Qualities of Men are, at some Seasons, more proper than their brightest Vertues, to execute God's Decrees, it would be very ill Reasoning to conclude, that Violence and Fury are commendable upon Pretence, that the Corruption of the World needs the harshest Treatment. The Wisdom of God, I confess, is eminent in employing such Instruments; but the Instruments may very well be extremely vicious. I have observed above, that Cardinal Palavicini has excused Julius II. upon the Need the Church then had of a War-like Pope.

(S) 'Tis that concerning his Dispute with the Devil, upon the Subject of private Masses.] There are some Objections, which the great Controvertists leave to the Disputants of the lower Forms; but there are others which are employ'd by all Authors, great and small (l), by those who preach Controversy from a Bulk in the Streets, and those who dictate from the highest Pulpits: The Objection I speak of, is of this number. The lowest Country Missionary has not fail'd to speak to it: Mr. Nicolle has opposed it with a very grave Air. Never any one, says he (m), but Luther durst boast, in a printed Work, that he had had a long Conference with the Devil; that he had been convinc'd, by his Reasons, that private Masses were an Abuse; and that this was the Motive which induc'd him to abolish 'em. But common Sense has ever made all others conclude.... that it was an Excess of Extravagance, to take the Devil for the Master of Truth, and become his Disciple. Mr. Claude answers (n) this Objection very well. This is one of the four Places of his Book, which the Jansenists replied to, in a Work intituled, A Confutation of the Answer of a Lutheran Minister, concerning the Conference of Luther and the Devil. And they fail'd not to insert this Part of their Reply in the second (o) Edition of the Prejudices. To see a compleat Answer to this Objection, we need only read a Piece, an Extract whereof has been given in the News from the Republick of Learning, in the Month of February 1687. This (p) Writing is a solid Confutation of a little Book of the Abbot de Cordemoi. The Bishop of Meaux (q) forgot not this Reproach against Luther; but see how Mr. Basnage (r) answer'd him.

The Advantages the Roman Controvertists pretend to draw from hence are, doubtless, imaginary; but there's no Ground to take this Story of Martin Luther for a kind of a Figure or Parable, as Mr. Claude pretends. For Luther vouches, in several Places of his Works, that he well knew the Devil's way of Disputing; and that it had cost him many a bitter Night: (s) Multas noctes mihi satis amarulentas & acerbas reddere ille novit. He disputes, says he, with that Force, that 'tis sudden Death to a Man; he believes this was the Fate of Oecolampadius and Emserus. The only Pleasure, according to him, that is found in these Disputes, is, that the Devil quickly dispatches 'em, and suffers 'em not to be spun out to any length, when he finds a Man alone in his House. Diabolus sua argumenta furtiter figere & urgere novit. Voce quoque gravi & forti utitur. Nec longis & multis meditationibus disputationes ejusmodi transiguntur, sed momento uno & quæstio & responsio absolvitur. Sensi equidem & probè expertus sum, quam ob causam illud nonnunquam evenire soleat, ut sub auroram quidam mortui in strato suis inveniantur. Corpus ille perimere vel jugulare potest: Nec id modo, verum & animam disputationibus suis ita urgere, & in angustum coarctare novit, ut in momento quoque illi excedendum sit, quo sanè me quoque non semel tantùm non perpulit:... Credo equidem quod Emserus & Oecolampadius, aliique horum similes, ejusmodi ignitis Satanæ telis & hastis confossi subitaneâ morte perierint. Nemo enim mortalium citrà singulare Dei auxilium ac robur illas sustinere & perferre potest. Jucundum equidem sese disputando prabet, scilicet. Brevibus enim transfigit omnia, nec diu moras nectit, siquidem virum solitarium domi suæ invenerit (t). Add to this these Words of Luther's 7 Tome at Page 230 of the Wittemberg Edition. Urget (Satan) in immensum corda, nec desinit nisi repulsus verbo Dei: & ego plane perfusus sum, Emserum & Oecolampadium & similes, his ictibus horribilibus & quassationibus subitò extinctos esse; nec enim humanum cor horrendum hunc & ineffabilem impetum, nisi Deus illi adsit, perferre potest, &c. See the second Edition of Mr. Nicoll's Prejudices, Pag. 366. 'Tis pretended, that Luther said, that if the Sacramentarians understand not the Scripture, 'tis because they don't dispute with the Devil, the best Opponent in the World; and that, without carrying him, hung about one's Neck, as he had done, a Man could be nothing more than a Speculative Divine. Quod Sacramentarii (inquit Lutherus) sacram Scripturam non intelligunt, hac causa est, quia verum opponentem, nempe diabolum non habent, qui demum benè docere eos solet. Subdit: Quando diabolum ejusmodi collo non habemus affixum, nihil nisi speculativi Theologi (unus (a).... Ego Diabolum intus & in cute novi, quippe quocum plus uno salis modio comederim (b).... Diabolus multo frequentius & propius mihi in lecto accubare solet, seu condormit, quam mea Catherina. Mecum in dormitorio deambulare solet.... Ego Diabolum collo meo affixum habui (c). Hence I conclude, that Mr. Claude ought not to have suspected that this Dispute of Luther was only a Parable.

He has applied another Objection of the Author of the Prejudices, founded upon this, that Luther seems to have encouraged his Followers to commit Massacres. Mr. Nicolle accuses him of it, but Mr. Claude acquits him. I thought he had repell'd another Attack; to wit, that founded on the famous Words, Si nolit uxor, veniat ancilla; but having read over, in some haste, his Defense of the Reformation, and Book of Prejudices, I met with nothing relating to it. The Bishop of Meaux has not omitted this Reproach of the Missionaries. His Words are these: "(d) I "have always been afraid to speak of those inevitable "Necessities, which he had discovered in the Union "of the two Sexes, and of the scandalous Sermon he "preach'd at Wittemberg upon Marriage: But since the "Sequel of this Story has once obliged me to break "thro' the Restraint that Modesty had imposed, "I can no longer dissemble what is found print-"ed in Luther's Works. 'Tis true then, that in a "Sermon he preach'd at Wittemberg, he blush'd not "to pronounce these infamous and scandalous "Words: (1) If they are so obstinate, (he speaks of "Wives) 'tis fit their Husbands should tell them, If "one won't another Will: If the Mistress won't come, "let

(b) Histor. Lutheran. lib. 3. n. 79. addit. 3.

(i) Claude Defense de la Reformation. 2 partie, chap. 5. pag. 331. Dutch Edit. in 12°.

(l) One might here apply Juvenal's Thought: Exspectes eadem à summo minimoque poeta. Sat. 1. v. 12.

(m) Prejugez legitimes contre les Calvinistes, ch. 2. p. 17. édit. of Brussels 1682. He cites Luther, Tom. 6. vide Hospin. part. ult. fol. 131.

(n) Claude Defense de la Reformation, ubi supra, pag. 333. & seq.

(o) That of 1682; the Title Page says it was printed at Brussels by Eug. Henry Frix.

(p) Mr. Seckendorf is the Author of it. See the Index of the 10 first Tomes of of the Journal of Leipsick, & the 8th Tom. p. 70.

(q) Hist. des Variat. lib. 4. n. 17.

(r) Basnage ubi supra pag. 431. & seq.

(s) Luther ubi infra, apud Hospinianum ubi infra.

(t) Lutherus de Missa privata, Tom. 6. Jen. fol. 81, apud Hospinianum hist: Sacrament. parte 2. fol. 220. edit. 1681:

(a) Fitz-Simon, ubi supra, pag. 90. He cites Luth. in colloquiis Isleb. de verbo Dei fol. 23. in colloq. Francofurt. fol. 18.

(b) Idem Fitz-Simon ibid. p. 353. He cites Emserus & Cocleus de Luth. conciones Dom. reminiscere inter 27. conciones Witebergæ & Argentinæ impressas in 4°. fol. 19.

(c) Fitz-Simon, ib. pag. 353, 354. He cites the Colloquia mensalia.

(d) Histor. des variat. l. 6. n. 11. pag. 235.

(1) T. V. Serm. de mistrim. f. 123.

the 18th of February 1546. Infinite Fables have been vented (T) concerning his Death. Nor did they forbear publiſhing Lyes (V), upon this Subject, till ſuch time as he had left the

" let the Maid be call'd.... However, the Husband " ought firſt to bring his Wife before the Church, " and admoniſh her two or three times; after that " divorce her, and take Eſther inſtead of Vaſti." The Biſhop of Meaux expreſſes himſelf thus in another place: (e) Luther explained himſelf againſt Monaſtick Vows, in a terrible manner, ſo far as to ſay of that of Continence (ſtop your Ears, chaſte Souls) that it was as impoſſible to keep it, as to diveſt one's ſelf of his Sex (2). It would put Modeſty out of Countenance, ſhould I repeat the Words he uſes, in ſeveral Places upon this Subject, and ſhew how he explains the Impoſſibility of Continence: I can't imagine how he can reconcile this to that Life, which he ſaid he had led, without Reproach, all the time of his Celibacy, till he was 45 Years old. He is accus'd of having preach'd, That 'tis a Miracle (f), if five Maids, and as many Men, be found in a whole City, who have preſerv'd their Chaſtity to twenty Years of Age; and that this would exceed the Purity of the Apoſtolick Age, and the Ages of Martyrs: And that a Man, who diſpenſes with Women, as much tranſcends the Powers of Nature, as if he lived without eating. Theſe are Things which we muſt not attempt to juſtify. They are Exceſſes, and firſt Motions, which Luther, doubtleſs, retracted before his Death. What can be ſaid more Satyrical againſt the Laws Canonical and Civil, which force no Body to marry, and which prohibit any more than one Wife? Theſe Principles of Luther are inconſiſtent with Monogamy. I doubt not but theſe ardent Sallies of his Zeal, againſt Monaſtick Vows, gave grounds to the Accuſation that was formed againſt him. George, Duke of Saxony, complain'd, that ſo many Adulteries had never been known, as ſince Luther's teaching; that a Woman, who conceived not by her Husband, might apply to another Man; and that if ſhe happen'd to be brought to Bed, her Husband was to take care of the Child, whilſt a Husband, whoſe Wife was barren, might uſe the ſame Priviledge. This Prince charged this on Luther himſelf (g), in a Letter he writ to him in the Year 1526. Quando tam numeroſa perpetrata ſunt adulteria quam poſtea quam tu ſcribere non dubitaſti: ſi mulier à viro ſuo concipere nequeat, ut ad alium ſe transferat à quo poſſit fœcundari, & maritus prolem inde natam alere teneatur: Itidemque vir faciat (h). This was carrying the Point higher than Lycurgus.

(e) Ibid. l. 3. n. 49. pag. 130.

(2) Ep. ad Velſ. T. VII. f. 305, &c.

(f) Benè cum Republica agi, ſi in aliqua una civitate vel quinque virgines & quinque mares annum vigeſimum caſti attigerint; idque plus eſſe quàm tempore Apoſtolorum, & Martyrum, acciderit.... Demum non minus vires naturæ tranſgredi hominem cælibem, quàm ſi nihil omninò comederet vel biberet. Luther. Serm. de tribus regibus, p. 198. Colmariæ an. 1523, apud Fitz-Simon ubi ſupra, pag. 155.

(g) Malfondé: See Seckendorf Hiſtor. Luther. l. 2. p. 39.

(h) Surius Commentar. pag. m. 195.

(T) Infinite Fables have been vented concerning his Death.] Some have ſaid, that he died a ſudden Death; others that he kill'd himſelf; others that the Devil ſtrangled him; others that his Carcaſs ſtank ſo abominably, that they were forc'd to leave it in the High-Way. Nor are they People of mean Figure and Credit, who vent theſe Calumnies, but the moſt famous Writers; which reflects on the whole Body of Popery; for ſuch Fables ought not to paſs the Preſs: The Cenſors of Books ought to expunge 'em, unleſs they ſaw 'em judicially proved. We ſhall ſee who theſe Authors are, that have publiſhed theſe Impertinencies. (i) Pontificii.... aſſerunt mortem Lutheri fuiſſe malam & infelicem, ſed de mortis genere non unam eandemque fovent ſententiam. Quidam contendunt, Lutherum ſibi ipſi violentas manus inſuliſſe, ita Lutbero αὐτοχειρίαν tribuit Thomas Bozius de Signis Eccleſiæ T. 2. lib. 23. c. 8. Quem locum etiam adducit Cornelius à Lapide, qui ad cap. 15. poſt Epiſt. Petri ſcribit. Lutherum cum veſpere lautè cœnaſſet, noctu deſperatione & furiis Dæmonum actum ſibi injecto laqueo necem inſuliſſe, aſſeruit ejus famulus poſtea ad orthodoxam fidem converſus. Quidam calumnientur, Lutherum morte repentinâ obiiſſe. Ita Bellarminus, l. 4. de Eccleſ. c. 17. § Lutherus, ex Cochlæo de vita Lutheri hæc adducit: Lutherus morte repentinâ ſublatus eſt. Nam cum veſpere opiparam Cœnam ſumſiſſet, lætus & ſinus, & facetiis ſuis omnes ad riſum provocaſſet, eadem nocte mortuus eſt. Quidam eò impudentiæ progrediuntur, ut eum à Cacodæmone ſubitum fuiſſe calumnientur. Ita Guilielmus Beſſous Jeſuita Gallus in Conclave. Theol. Stobæch. Poſt cineres, p. 102. de morte Lutheri diſſerit: Lutherus benè potus, & cibis diſtentus abſque ullo Pœnitentiæ ſigno cubitum ſecedens apud inferos pernoctavit. Unde & Cellarius in venenato ſuo carmine de morte Lutheri ita canit:

(i) Joh. Alamus Oſiander, in tractatu Theologico de Magia, pag. 271. & ſeq.

Infelix ex alvo animam diffudit ARIUS;
Hunc ſequeris nimiè, vane Luthere, mero.

His omnibus pollicem premit Fabianus Juſtinianus, qui in Comment. in cap. VI. Tobiæ ita ſcribit: Ipſummet Lutherum ſubitaneâ & improviſâ morte à ſuo Cacodæmone ſublatum, peremptumque plurimi cenſent, quòd vocati ad eum Medici morbum vel ignorare ſe fatcrentur, vel apoplexiam fingerent.... Extat hiſtoria de morte Lutheri à viris fide dignis, qui ipſi agonizanti adſtiterunt, deſcripta videlicet à Juſto Jona, Michaele Celio, Johan. Aurifabro Vimarienſi, qui coram Deo & in confeſſu Chriſti teſtantur, quòd ſanctâ fide & bonâ conſcientiâ hiſtoriam obitûs Lutheri referant, quæ habetur Tom. 8. Jenenſ. Germ. quam videat lector veritatis amans eique addat B. M. Johan. Matheſii concionem XIV. de vita Lutheri. Sleidan. l. 16. Comment. imò ipſum Jacob. Auguſt. Thuanum Hiſtoricum Pontificium, l. 2. Hiſt. p. 30. Quæ omnia Pontificiorum mendacia de morte Lutheri effuſa, facili negotio diſſipare, & in jugulum calumniantium redigere poſſunt... Mortuo Luthero nondum quieſcunt Pontificii, ſed denuò fluctus irarum ſuarum evomunt, & cæno calumniæ poſt mortem ipſius corpus adſpergunt. Fabulantur enim, corpus electi Dei organi ob intolerabilem fœtorem in itinere fuiſſe relictum. Some there are that have publiſhed, that Luther died like Arius. Theſe are Simon (k) Fontain's Words: Some Catholicks, who had Opportunities to know how the thing truly happen'd, have written, that, riſing to caſe Nature, he fell down dead. Father Maimbourg has rejected all theſe ſottiſh Stories, but he has been miſtaken in a notable Fact. The Elector of Saxony, ſays he (l), cauſed his Body to be convey'd with a moſt magnificent Pomp to Wittemberg, where he erected for him a Monument of white Marble, ſurrounded with the Statues of the twelve Apoſtles, as if he had been the thirteenth, with reſpect to Germany. Mr. Seckendorf (m) has ſhewn, that this Monument, and theſe Statues, are Chimera's.

(k) Ubi infra, fol. 230.

(l) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Lutheran. lib. 3. Tom. 1. pag. 301, 302, Dutch Edit.

(m) Seckendorf, hiſt. Lutheran. lib. 3. pag. 645.

I ſhall here ſet down a Paſſage of an old Paris Divine, who reproach'd the Lutherans with acting againſt their Principles. They had always condemn'd, ſays he (n), the Pomp with which the Catholicks buried their Dead, to pay 'em the laſt Honour of Sepulture, blaming the Sermons that were preach'd in Honour of the Deceas'd: And ſaying, that it were much better to have charitably beſtow'd on the Poor what was thus ſpent in theſe Funeral Pomps and Honours. On the whole, that it was all one, and equally Chriſtian, to be buried in a Dunghill unſeen, as to be depoſited in Holy Ground, with all this Apparatus. If what they ſaid before was true, why did they employ ſuch expenſive and coſtly Pomps to lay their Luther in his Grave? Why did they not give this Money to the Poor, which was ſpent in conducting him from Iſleben to Wittemberg? Which could not be done for a ſmall Summ. Why did they not bury him in a Dunghill, where he might have rotted as well as at Wittemberg? In ſhort, if this Veneration is condemned by the Holy Scriptures (as they falſly think) why have they uſed it? It's certain, Reformers don't always conſider, that there are ſome Abuſes, which ſhould not be ſpoken againſt for fear of condemning themſelves before-hand; theſe being Things into which they quickly Relapſe.

(n) Simon Fontaine, Hiſtoire Catholique, lib. 17. fol. 232.

(V) Nor did they forbear publiſhing Lyes upon this Subject till he had left the World.] A Writing was publiſhed (a) at Naples, and in other Places; the Subſtance whereof was this. Luther, being dangerouſly ſick, deſired to communicate, and died ſoon as he had received the Viaticum. As he was dying, he deſired that his Body might be laid upon the Altar; but that Requeſt being neglected, he was buried. There aroſe a furious Tempeſt at his Interrment, as if the End of the World was at Hand. The Terror was Univerſal. They who lifted up their Eyes to Heaven, perceived, that the Hoſt, which the Deceaſed had preſumed to take, was ſuſpended in the Air. It was gathered up with great Veneration, and laid in a Sacred Place, and the Tempeſt ceaſed. It renewed the Night following with ſtill greater Fury, and fill'd all the

(a) Seckendorf, ubi infra.

Town

the World. I have ſaid nothing of his Marriage, becauſe I had ſpoken largely of it in (VΔ) another Place. His greateſt Enemies could not deny, that he had eminent Qualities, and Hiſtory affords nothing more ſurprizing than his Exploits: For a ſimple Monk to be able to give (X) Popery ſo rude a Shock, that there needed but ſuch another intirely to over-throw the Roman Church, is what we can't ſufficien[illegible] admire. Some attribute the Revolution, brought about by his Miniſtry, (XΔ) to ce[illegible] Poſitions of Town with Conſternation. Next Day Luther's Sepulchre was opened, and found empty, and a Sulphurous Scench proceeded from it, which no Body could bear. The Aſſiſtants fell ſick of it, and many of them repented, and returned into the Pale of the Catholick Church. This Pamphlet was (b) written in Italian, and 'twas remark'd in it with an Air of Triumph, that it contain'd a Miracle in Honour of Jeſus Chriſt, for the Terror of the Wicked, and the Conſolation of the Good; and that this Event was known by Letters from the French Ambaſſador. Luther, having read this Relation the twenty-firſt of March 1545, cauſed it to be re-printed, and added a Poſtſcript to it. Some Roman Catholicks, put to Confuſion by this Impoſture, endeavour'd to ward off the Infamy, by another Fraud. They labour'd to perſuade the World, that Luther, or ſome of his Friends, were the Authors of this Romance; but there are very authentick Proofs to the contrary. (c) Fuerunt ex adverſa parte, quos protervi figmenti puduit, & ideo inventorem ejus ipſum Lutherum ſubſtituere voluerunt, vel aliquem ex ſuis; impudenter utique & vane. Extant enim.... litera Landgravii ad Electorem Saxoniæ d. 12 Mart. authentica, in quibus ei relationem iſtam Italicam miſit, ſignificans, ſe eam ab Auguſtano quodam, cujus literas etiam adjunxit, accepiſſe, ex quibus percipitur typis excuſam ſchedam [illegible] lam Neapoli & multis alin locis fuiſſe. W[illegible] Scandal is it to thoſe who underſtand the Nature of Scandal, to find ſuch Effects of a falſe Zeal for Religion?

(VΔ) I had ſpoken largely of Luther's Marriage in another Place.] To wit, in the Article Bore. I have but one Obſervation more to make, and 'tis deſigned for the correcting a Fault of the famous Joſeph Hall, Biſhop of Exeter (d). He ſays, that a malicious Apoſtate (1) affirms, That Luther had been the Day before a Monk, the next Day promiſed, the Day after a Husband, and the next Day after a Father. My (e) Detector, continues he, maintains this laſt by the Teſtimony of Eraſmus (2), who, in one of his Letters to his Friend, Daniel Mauchius of Ulm, mentions the ſame Story more at large. Pray, Reader, look over all this vaſt Volume of Eraſmus's Epiſtles, Retur. pag. 28, 29. and if there be no ſuch Perſon (as indeed there is none) nor any ſuch Letter; judge you what we are to think of the Veracity of theſe People. He is to blame to cenſure the Perſon, who alledg'd Eraſmus's Teſtimony; and he would not have cenſur'd him, if he had known what is found in the 278 Page of Chytræus's Annals. We there find that Luther's Adverſaries alledg'd a certain Letter of Eraſmus (f), not printed indeed; wherein he makes mention of the too haſty Lying-in of Luther's Wife. So that Joſeph Hall ought not to have inſiſted on this Letter's not appearing in the vaſt Volume of Eraſmus's Letters. If he meant to treat it as a Forgery, he was much to blame. See above the ſame Fact, in another Letter of this Author. That which might be very juſtly ſaid, is, that Eraſmus had acknowledg'd the Falſity of this News. From hence we may learn how hard a Task it is to confute a Man in a Matter of Fact; for we muſt know almoſt an infinite Number of 'em to oppoſe with Safety any thing that an Adverſary affirms or denies.

(X) For a ſimple Monk to be able to give Popery ſo rude a Shock.] How many States and People did he induce, in a little time, to ſeparate from the Roman Communion? This was repreſented very happily, though in ſomewhat a Burleſque Manner on a Piece of Tapeſtry. Read this Paſſage, taken from a Letter of Coſter. The laſt Time the King was at Chalons, a very rich Piece of Tapeſtry was hung in his Chamber, which came from the late Queen of Navarre; in which were repreſented Luther and Calvin, who gave the Pope a Glyſter, which put the good Man into ſuch Commotion, that he was ſeen in another Place taken with a great Vomiting and Looſeneſs, and evacuating abundance of Kingdoms and Sovereignties, Denmark, Sweden, the Dutchy of Saxony, &c. Wicliff, John Huſs, and ſeveral others had attempted the ſame Thing, but did not ſucceed. This was, you'll ſay, becauſe they were not favour'd with a Concurrence of Circumſtances: They had no leſs Merit nor Abilities than Luther; but they undertook the Cur[illegible] e Diſeaſe before the Criſis; and, as we ma[illegible] the increaſe of the Moon. Luther, on the o[illegible]ry, attack'd it at a Critical Time, when 'twas arrived to the higheſt Pitch; when it was impoſſible it ſhould grow worſe; and therefore, according to the Courſe of Nature, muſt either ceaſe or diminiſh; For when Things are arrived to the higheſt Point of their Aſcenſion, they commonly (k) begin to decline. He ſow'd in the Full Moon, when the Wane was juſt drawing on: He had the ſame good Fortune, as thoſe Remedies have which are employ'd laſt, and which carry away the Glory of the Cure, be[illegible]e applied when the Diſtemper has diſcharg'd [illegible] Malignity. You may, if you pleaſe add, that [illegible] Concurrence of Francis I. and Charles V. was f[illegible] this Affair. I anſwer, that all this notwithſtan[illegible], there muſt have been eminent Gifts in Luther to produce ſuch a Revolution as he has done. Here's an excellent Thought of Father Paul. " (l) If there was any Thing, in the " ſetting up of this (m) Novelty, tha[illegible]ave Scandal, " 'tis well known, that Leo's P[illegible]ſſors made " many like Conceſſions, and fro[illegible]honeſt Motives, and had carried their Av[illegible] and Extor- " ſions farther. But frequently good Occaſions of " doing great things are loſt for want of knowing " 'em (3), or knowing how to make uſe of " 'em. Beſides that, we muſt wait the time, " that God has appointed to puniſh the Sins " and Corruptions of Men. All concurred under " Leo's Pontificate, of whom we ſpeak at preſent. " It muſt be acknowledged, that ſeveral Circumſtances [illegible] concurr'd to favour Luther: Good Letters raiſed their Head among the Laity, whilſt Church-Men would not renounce their Barbariſm, and perſecuted the Learned, and ſcandalized all the World, by an unbridled Luſt. See the Margin (n). It was ſaid, with Reaſon, that Eraſmus, by his Railleries, prepared the way for Luther. He was his Fore-Runner. Dr. Simon Fontain complains, that (o) occaſionally Eraſmus did more Miſchief than Luther, becauſe Luther did only open the Door wider, after Eraſmus had pick'd the Lock and half opened it.

(XΔ) Some there are who attribute .... to certain Poſitions of the Stars.] Paulus Jovius runs ſo far into this Profane Thought, as to impute to a Malignant Conſtellation, not only what happen'd in Germany, by means of Luther; but alſo the Converſion of the Indians in the Eaſt and Weſt: And when he conſiders, that the Faith of People changed almoſt at the ſame time, in the four Corners of the Earth, ſome embracing Mahometiſm, others Chriſtianity, and others Lutheraniſm, he could not believe but the Influences of the Stars had brought this about by their occult and pernicious Qualities. Nec multo poſt exarſit in Germania, ſays he (a), authore Luthero dira hæreſis, quæ populis, ut in Perſide accideraf, ad inſaniam verſis, Chriſtiani dogmatis placita, & veteres ſacrorum ritus vehementiſſimè conturbavit. Ita ut facilè crediderim ab occulta cœli poteſtate, malignoque ſyderum concurſu proveniſſe, ut religiones toto terrarum orbe exactis ſæculis, uno tempore ſcinderentur, quando non [illegible] modo Chriſtianique, ſed & remotiſſima ge[illegible] aut ſydera aut portenta pro Diis venera[illegible] India quæ ad Orientem vergit, tum in [illegible] Occiduam plagam reperto, novas ſacrorum opiniones induerint. Florimond de Remond ſeems to applaud this Notion: He gives it in French, and complains of a [illegible] Tranſlator, who had paſs'd theſe W[illegible]ct in Silence. " (b) Almoſt at the ſame " [illegible] ſays Jovius, that Iſmael ſeized upon the " Empire of the Perſians, and chan[illegible]e Re- " ligion, blending it with the ne[illegible]ſtan " Superſtition, there aroſe in Ger[illegible]er Lu-

(b) Natæ forte hinc eſt immanis illa de ejus obitu fabula, quæ Tom. VIII. Alt. fol. 415. & ſeq. lingua Italica, & in Germanicam verſa, legitur. Scribunt autem cum magna quidem exultatione & gratulatione, tanquam de miraculo à Deo, in honorem Chriſti, terrorem malorum, & ſolatium bonorum, ut impie nugantur, edito, ex Legati Regis Galliæ literis innotuiſſe, quod Lutherus periculoſe ægrotans, &c. Seckendorf, hiſtor. Lutheraniſmi, lib. 3. pag. 580. col. 1.

(c) Id. ib. col. 2.

(d) Joſeph Hall's Apology for the Marriage of Eccleſiaſticks, pag. 48.

(1) Juſtus Baronius, formerly call'd Calvinus.

(e) That is, he who had wrote againſt Joſeph Hall.

(2) Tom. 2. Lat. Colloq. Tit. de morbo Lutheri.

(f) See Seckendorf hiſt. Lutheran. l. 2. pag. 18.

(k) Invida fatorum ſeries, ſummiſque negatum Stare diu, nimioque graves ſub pondere lapſus, Nec ſe Roma ferens. Lucanus l. 1. v. 71.

(l) Fra. Paolo hiſt. du Concile de Trente, lib. 1. pag. 4. according to the Tranſlation of Amelot de la Houſſaie.

(m) That's to ſay the [illegible] Indulgences.

(n) Add to this the falſe Steps that Popery made in this Conjuncture. I ſhall ſpe[illegible] ma[illegible]

(o) Simon Fontaine, Doctor of Divinity at Paris, hiſtoire Catholique de nôtre tems, t. 7. fol. 91. édit. of Paris 1562.

(a) Jovius Hiſtor. lib. 13. fol. m. 239. verſo.

(b) Florim. de Remond hiſt. de l'hereſie lib. 1. c. 4. p. m. 24.

of the Stars. What ſome affirm that his Enterprize has introduced (T) a Contempt of the Chriſtian Religion, is all falſe. He, who would be throughly inſtructed in the Hiſtory of this great Man need only read Mr. de Seckendorf's large Volume *. 'Tis, in its kind, one of the beſt Books that has come out a long time. I ſhould adviſe him alſo to read the Lutherus Defenſus of a Hambourgh † Miniſter; for there all the Perſonal Reproaches are anſwer'd.

I was amaz'd to find, that Cardinal (Z) Perron had the Hardineſs to ſay, that Luther believ'd the Mortality of the Soul. Should Francis Garaſſe vent ‡ a Thouſand ſuch Calumnies, I ſhould not have wonder'd at it; and if I had found it in Luther's Life, publiſhed at Paris in 1577, by the Monk Noel † Talepeid, or in Nicholas Grenier's

* Hiſtoria Lutheranismi. See the hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans, Fevrier 1692. Art. 3.

† Call'd John Mullerus.

‡ See the Remark E.

† A Cordelier of Pontoiſe.

"ther's Authority, that monſtrous [illegible], which "endeavour'd to deſtroy the Ca[illegible] Religion, "and all that Antiquity had recei[illegible]; as the "People, enraged and bigotted with their new "Follies and Superſtitions, had done in Perſia: "By which means, ſays he, I willingly admit, "that, by a Secret Power of Heaven, and "a malignant Influence of the Stars, all the "Religions in the Univerſe began to change their "Face; ſince not only Mahometans, but alſo Chriſtians, nay, Idolatrous Nations, the moſt remote, "who worſhiped Idols, both [illegible] the Eaſt-Indies and in "the Weſt, fell into new [illegible]ions and Opinions at "the ſame time. This is [illegible] the Latine Jovius, "ſays. But in his French Tranſlation, the Reform-"ed Sincerity, the ſcrupulous Conſcience of his "Tranſlator is remarkable, who paſſes over all "that Jovius ſays of this Change of Religions, "and this monſtrous Lutheran Hereſie ſprung up "in Saxony: This grieved him at the Heart. "With what Fidelity do they handle Holy and "Sacred Books, when they thus impudently mu-"tilate the Ancient Hiſtorians to deſtroy one "Sentence [illegible]ing to Luther." The Delicacy of ſuch Tranſlators can't be approv'd. If there be Zeal in their Conduct, it is a Zeal ſo blind, ſo ſuperſtitious, ſo mean and childiſh, that it deſerves to be ſubmitted to their Adverſaries Indignation. Note, That Lipſius attributed alſo to the [illegible]s the Fondneſs of the XVIth Century for Diſputes in Religion. (c) Fatalis iſta eſt ingeniorum rabies, ut omnes diſputare malint, quam vivere.... (d) Ita loquor, quia velut à cælo, & ut dixerim, aſtro aliquo eſt hæc peſtis. Atque ut corporum quidam morbi certis temporibus interveniunt; ſic nunc iſte animorum. Viri, fœmina, ſenes, pueri, quæſtiunculis ludunt & laſciviunt: eoque ventum, ut pro parum ſano ſit, qui non ſic inſanit. Myſterium Theologia erat, facta eſt populare oblectamentum. He pretends, that the Soul is ſubject, as the Body, to ſome Diſtempers, which return from [illegible] time; and he reckons, in the number of theſe Diſeaſes of the Soul, the Spirit of Diſputing, and the Change of Religion, which reigned at that time. He relates a Paſſage of Nicephorus Gregoras, containing a Deſcription of the like State: All Places rang with Theological Diſputes; even thoſe that knew not what was to be believed, nor what they themſelves pretended to believe, talked of nothing, but Matters of Religion, in the Markets and Theatres. "(e) Vis "imaginem claram horum temporum? Nicephori Gre-"gore iſta lege. (f) Apud nos etiam opificibus "effuſa ſunt arcana Theologiæ, atque ita omnes "inhiant ratiocinatiunculis & ſermonibus ſyllogi-"ſticis, ut herbæ & paſcuis armenta. Et illi, qui "de rectâ fide ambigui ſunt, & qui nec quomodo "credendum ſit ſciant, nec quid ſit illud quod "credere ſe dicunt; illi inquam & foris & pon-"ticus & theatra omnia Theologiâ compleverunt." Without recurring to Conſtellations, the ordinary Sanctuary of Ignorance, ſecond Cauſes might have been diſcovered on Earth, which God made uſe of to effect the Change that happened in Germany in the [illegible] Century.

(c) Lipſius de civil. doctrina, lib. 4. cap. [illegible] pag. m. 65. per. tom. 4.

(d) Idem adverſus Dialogiſtam, pag. 310. ejuſd. tomi.

(e) [illegible]

(f) Hiſtor. lib. XI.

(T) Has introduced the Contempt of the Chriſtian Religion.] If Coeffeteau had ſaid, that Luther made Abundance of People damn themſelves by the Profeſſion of Hereſy, he'd have ſpoken according to the Spirit of his Prejudices, and we ſhould have pardoned him; but this is not the Evil he deplores. Let's hear him. "Mean time, [illegible] "(f), inſtead of repreſenting to us here the "Sallies of the furious Spirit of Luther, whoſe "Impiety diſpleaſed the Calviniſts them-"ſelves, [illegible] du Pleſſis ought to have medi-

(f) Coeffeteau, Reponſe au Myſtere d'iniquité, pag. 1237.

"tated on the Horrour of his Crime, and repreſented to himſelf the great Loſs of Souls, with "which he is chargeable before God and his Angels, "for having been the Author of all the Diſputes that are ariſen in Chriſtendom. God ordained in the Antient Law (a), that if it happened, that any having a Controverſy with another, ſhould ſtrike a Woman with Child, ſo as to deſtroy her Fruit, his Life ſhould go for "the Life of the Child. What then will the "Divine Juſtice appoint againſt thoſe, who, by "their Ambition, and by the Diſputes, which "they have excited in the Church, have occaſioned the Death of ſo many Millions of Souls "who are diſguſted at the Chriſtian Religion, to "ſee thoſe, who profeſs themſelves Miniſters of it, "ſo ill agreed upon the principal Points of the "Holy Goſpel." We may affirm, that the Number of thoſe who were luke-warm, indifferent, or diſguſted with Chriſtianity, diminiſh'd much more than it increas'd by the Diſturbances Europe felt at the Occaſion of Luther. Every one choſe his Side with Warmth; ſome remained in the Roman Communion, others embrac'd the Proteſtant: The firſt conceiv'd a greater Zeal for their Religion than they had before; the latter were all on Fire for their new Belief. It was impoſſible to ſhew thoſe who, as Coeffeteau ſays, rejected Chriſtianity, upon Account of ſo many Diſputes. Had he ſaid, that the Diviſions of Chriſtians, and their Conduct towards one another, after having formed themſelves into Sects, are moſt proper to bring the Goſpel into Diſ-credit, I ſhould have agreed with him; but he muſt have ſuppoſed, at the ſame time, a Thing which very few practiſe. He muſt have ſuppoſed, that there are a great many without double Weights; that is, who examine, without Prejudice, what happens at Home and Abroad. But where are theſe to be met with? Where are thoſe, who, by the Force of Cuſtom, do not judge the ſame things to be moſt juſt, when they make others ſuffer them, and moſt unjuſt when they ſuffer 'em themſelves? In ſuch a Diſpoſition as this there's no Danger that the Multiplicity of Sects ſhould create many Pyrrhoniſts: Every one, happen what will, will ſtick faſt by the Party he has choſen. The Antiperiſtaſis, which the new Philoſophers have baniſh'd from Nature, takes place in Religion. Zeal cools, when it is not obſerved, and ſurrounded with other Sects, and rekindles when it is. We may here apply the Verſes that were made upon (g) Menelaus, and ſay, that Coeffeteau is mightily miſtaken: He has taken that for granted, which muſt happen only in caſe Men reaſon'd after ſuch a certain manner.

Religious Controverſies make few Pyrrhoniſts.

(g) He was weary of Helena while he had her in an undiſturbed Poſſeſſion, and was all on Fire when ſhe was ſnatched away from him.

(Z) That Cardinal Perron had the Hardineſs to ſay, that Luther believed the Mortality of the Soul.] See in what Words he affirms it: "(h) Luther "denied the Immortality of the Soul, and ſaid, "that it died with the Body; and that God af-"terwards raiſed both again: So that, in his "Opinion, no one enjoyed the Viſible Preſence of "God; whence he drew an Argument againſt "praying to Saints, ſhewing, that the Saints hear "not our Prayers. The Church believes that the "Souls of the Saints, and of the Bleſſed enjoy the "Preſence of God as ſoon as they are dead; and "Luther reckons this amongſt the Impieties of the "Roman Church, that ſhe believes the Immortali-"ty of the Soul." You ſee he is not charged with abſolutely denying the Puniſhments and Rewards of another Life, but only with deferring 'em, till after the final Reſurrection of all Men. This is diminiſhing much of the Heinouſneſs of the Accuſation, with which others proſecuted him, but 'tis

(h) Perroniana at the Word Luther pag. 202. edit. 1669.

Grenier's Book (AA), of which we ſhall ſee a long Paſſage by and by, or in the Books of ſuch like Writers, who have no Reputation to loſe, I ſhould not have been ſurpriz'd: But I could not but think it ſtrange, that a Cardinal, of ſo great a Name, ſhould be guilty of ſo much Raſhneſs. The Curious will not be diſpleaſed to hear of a ſmall Ruffle that had been given Mr. Arnauld on (BB) occaſion of a Citation from Luther. It was impoſſible for him to verify it by the Original Books. This leads me to make this Reflection, that nothing would be more convenient for thoſe who are accus'd of miſ-quoting this Reformer, than the Liberty of the moſt curious Library (CC) of Prince Rodolphus Auguſtus, Duke of Brunſwick. Luther's Life, in Medals nor avoiding the Crime of Lying and Slandering. 'Tis a common Saying, that all Romances are founded upon ſome Hiſtory: I have therefore ſuſpected, that Cardinal Perron built this Fable upon ſome Words of Luther, ill underſtood, and found in Quotations; and, I having not the leiſure to turn over all the great Volumes of this Miniſter, have conſulted a Divine of the Confeſſion of Augsburg, and deſired him to inform me if there were any Pretext that could occaſion this Cardinal's ſpeaking thus. The Sum of the Anſwer, he had the Civility to ſend me, is as follows. Luther never taught that the Soul died, and was to riſe again with the Body. It can never be proved by his Works that he was of this Opinion; and he has very clearly ſhewn, that he believed the quite contrary. Conſult what he has written upon the eighth Verſe of the fourth Chapter of Geneſis, where he ſpeaks of the Death of Abel. The Origin of the Calumny is in a Letter he writ at Amsdorf in the Year 1522; in which he appears much inclined to believe, that the Souls of the Juſt ſleep to the Day of Judgment, without knowing where they are, &c. He do's not pretend to ſay, that they are dead in this Interval, but only caſt into a profound Reſt and Sleep; in which Opinion he followed many Fathers (1) of the Antient Church. He rectified this Opinion, in Proceſs of Time; and though he ſeems in his later Writings to attribute Reſt to the Souls of the Predeſtinate, he does not mean thereby ſuch a Reſt as profound Sleep, which deprives them of the Viſion of God and the Angels. See his Commentary upon the twenty-fourth Chapter of Geneſis, where he ſpeaks very largely of the State of Souls departed.

(1) Origen, St. Chryſoſtome and Theodoret, among the Greeks: Tertullian and Lactantius, among the Latins.

(AA) In Nicolas Grenier's Book, whereof we ſhall ſee a long Paſſage.] This Book is entituled, The Shield of Faith, by Way of Dialogue, extracted from the Holy Scripture, and Fathers, and moſt antient Doctors of the Church. The Author, a Regular Canon of St. Victor, dedicated it to Henry II. I can't tell in what Year he publiſhed it the firſt Time. La Croix du Maine, and du Verdier Vau-Privas, mention only the Edition of Paris 1566, and 1567. They ſay nothing of that of Avignon 1549, which I uſe, and which is not the firſt; for the Title imports, That the Book was reviewed and augmented by the Author. The Edition mention'd by du Verdier Vau-Privas contains an Apology againſt the Lutheran Hound, which attempted to gnaw the Shield of Faith. I ſuppoſe he means Bartholomew Cauſſe, Miniſter of Geneva, Author of a Book entit'led, The true Shield of the Chriſtian Faith; in Form of Dialogue, demonſtrating, from Holy Scripture, the Errors and falſe Allegations of a Book entit'led, The Shield of Faith; formerly written by a Monk of St. Victor at Paris, calling himſelf the Bicamillane. My Edition is of Geneva 1563, reviſed and amply enlarged. Let this be ſaid in favour of Bibliographers. Let us now come to the Fact, and relate what the Canon of St. Victor tells of Luther. (b) Luther's Ambition, and Deſire of Glory and Honour, was ſo great, that, though he was but a ſimple Preſbyter, and an Auguſtine, an Apoſtate, and an excommun'd Monk, yet he took upon him the Office and Dignity Epiſcopal. But being once in the City of Lisbon ‡ he preſum'd to ordain two Preſbyters in St. Andrew's Church, impoſing Hands upon them, and ſinging the Anthem, Veni Sancte Spiritus. Moreover, he cauſed himſelf to be carried in a pompous Chariot or Litter, as a great Prince, ſurrounded and attended with Gentlemen and Guards. And, in his Entrance into Towns, there were Volleys of Shot, and firing of Cannons. This was not imitating Jeſus Chriſt his Apoſtles, and the Holy Doctors of the Church, who, by their Preaching and Example, ſhewed all Humility and Simplicity. Very different is the Life of true Chriſtians, and Heretical Antichriſts. The Life of the Apoſtles, and Holy Doctors of the Church, was humble, ſober, chaſte, modeſt, and devout: But the Life of the falſe Doctor and Apoſtate, Luther, was proud, gluttonous, laſcivious, infamous, and corporal: For 'tis notorious and evident to all, that, having violated his Religious Vows, and Eccleſiaſtical Continence, he took for his Wife or Whore a Nun, by whom he had three Baſtards and Illegitimates. His Gluttony was the Cauſe of his great Incontinency; For, as St. Jerome ſays, Venter mero æſtuans, facilè deſpumat in libidinem. And, to ſay true, Luther ought rather to be called the Prince and Doctor of Drunkards and Gluttons, than of Saxons and Germans. He was a ſecond Epicurus or Sardanapalus, ſince its commonly read of him, that at every Dinner and Supper, he drank two Gallons of luſcious, rich Wine; and eat of the moſt exquiſite and delicate Diſhes; which he continued till the laſt: For he died ſuddenly, full-glutted, after having ſupp'd plentifully, and ſtuff'd his Paunch. But let's leave this Wretch. It's for the Intereſt of the Lutherans, and all Proteſtants in general, to re-publiſh the fabulous Impertinencies their Adverſaries publiſhed againſt the Reformers of the XVIth Century. They ſhew, that they were wholly conducted by a blind Prejudice; a Prejudice which is to their reproach and diſadvantage. Here you have a Canon of St. Victor of ſo little Judgment, as to employ an Objection, which ruines Pope, Cardinals, and all the Prelacy, whoſe Train and pompous Equipages are diametrically oppoſite to the Life of the Apoſtles.

(b) Nicole Grenier, bouclier de la foi, pag. m. 784. & ſeq.

‡ The Author, if I miſtake not, would have ſaid Illebene, but by an inexcuſable Negligence he did not well inform himſelf of the Names of Towns, and fell into a ridiculous Equivoque, there being in Portugal a City call'd Lisbone, where Luther never was.

(BB) A ſmall Ruffle that had been given Mr. Arnauld, on occaſion of a Citation from Luther.] Mr. le Fevre, Doctor of Divinity, of the Faculty of Paris, has publiſhed this Fact in a Book printed (c) at the Hague, in 1685. Do's not he remember, ſays he (d), ſpeaking of Mr. Arnauld, that about four Years ago, a Miniſter writing to him, that he had falſly cited ſome Paſſages from Luther to ſhew, that he denied the Neceſſity of good Works, and amongſt others this; Let's beware of Sin; but, above all, let's beware of the Law, and good Works, and fix only on the Promiſe of God and Faith: Words which he cited as from a Sermon of Luther, upon a Text in the New Teſtament; he found himſelf obliged to take the trouble of ſearching for this Paſſage in all the Luther's of Paris, and not finding it could give no other Anſwer to the Miniſter, who had writ to him, than confeſſing he had taken, this Paſſage from Bellarmine, and, at the ſame time inſiſting on this Cardinal's Fidelity.

(c) And not at Liſle, as is ſaid in the Title-Page.

(d) Le Fevre, replique à M. Arnauld pour la defenſe du livre des motifs invincibiles, cap. 18. The Pages are not figur'd; 'tis in the laſt Leaf of the Sheet b i.

(CC) The moſt curious Library of Prince Rodolphus Auguſtus, Duke of Brunſwick.] This Prince, who has joyned the Love of Letters, to all other Qualities worthy his illuſtrious Family, was not ſatisfied with the magnificent Library of Wolfembuttle; he ſet up another private One, which he ſtored with Abundance of rare Books. Here we find all the Writings that Luther publiſhed from the Year 1517 to his Death: The Editions, I ſay, he gave and corrected himſelf, and which are preferable to the Original Manuſcripts, becauſe in reviſing the Proofs he corrected many things that had eſcap'd him. 'Tis a much certainer Way to have recourſe to theſe Editions, than to thoſe, in which all his Works have been reduced into a Body; for they who collected 'em took the Liberty to mend (e), and change what they thought fit: And hence, doubtleſs, it proceeds, that the Citations from Luther, upon which any Controverſy ariſes, are ſo hard to be verified. We can hardly have any Recourſe now, except to the Volumes in Folio, publiſhed ſince his Death. The compleat Editions of all his Works have made the particular Editions of his Books neglected; and

(e) See the following Citation.

Medals *, publiſhed in the Year 1699, ſupplies an infinite Number of † Particulars, and affords an infinite Number of Authors, who have ſpoken of this illuſtrious Perſon. We find, in the Advice to the Reader, a Liſt of all thoſe who have compoſed either his Elogy or his Hiſtory. We there likewiſe find a Confutation of the Falſhoods of an anonymous Author, whoſe Dialogues were printed in the Year 1694, with the Title of Lucien en belle Humeur. This I only touch upon, to have an Opportunity of ſaying, that there's no Ground to think ɣ, that Mr. Fontenelle is the Author of theſe Dialogues. We may poſitively affirm, that he is not; and that he is not capable of ſo imperfect a Production. In the Vatican Library at Rome is ſhewn * a Bible, which is ſaid to be of Luther's Tranſlating, and written with his own Hand. But this is not probable, conſidering the extravagant Prayer ‡ at the End of it, and which appears to be of the ſame Hand with the reſt. Whilſt the Troops of Charles V. quarter'd at Wittemberg in the Year 1547, there was a Soldier ‡, who gave Martin Luther's Effigies in the Caſtle-Church two Stabs with his Dagger. The Emperor did a very generous Action at that time: He would not ſuffer the Tomb of this pretended Hereſiarch to be demoliſhed; and he forbid the attempting any thing of that Nature (DD) upon Pain of Death. Luther had made a great Progreſs in Scholaſtick Learning, and had even followed the Sect of the Nominals; which ſpun the Thread fineſt in all Abſtract Queſtions; yet no one fell ſo foul as he upon the Method of Philoſophizing at that time; nor was any Man more vehemently bent againſt the great Ariſtotle. You'll ſee the Proofs of this in the Extracts I ſhall give (EE) of an Invective of Father Gretſer, deſign'd to prove this Propoſition, Luther do's not underſtand Scholaſtick Divinity. One of their Arguments to prove this, ɣ Num ſit & hujus auctor de Fontenelle qui les nouveaux dialogues des morts publicavit Pariſiis.. non habeo. affirmare. Juncker, ubi infra in pref. § 17.

* The Author calls himſelf Chriſtianus Junckerus.

† See above the Remark G, at the End.

* Miſſon l'voage d'Italie, Tom. 2. page 134. edit. 1698.

‡ Mr. Miſſon, ibid. tells it in High-Dutch and in French.

‡ Andreas Sennertus in Arhenis Wittenbergenſib. apud Junckerum in vita Lutheri nummis illuſtrata, pag. 216.

and hereby almoſt all the Copies of theſe particular Editions are loſt, which is a Misfortune. (f) Libelli à Luthero ipſo editi diligentius quam factum eſt, aſſervari debuiſſent, non tantum, quod commodius legi poterant, quam in magnis, in quos poſtmodum redacti ſunt, voluminibus, ſed & quia genuini & ab interpolatione aut incuria, quæ compilatoribus tomorum dudum imputata eſt, ſecuri erant. The Prince I ſpeak of employ'd a Profeſſor of Helmſtad (g) to publiſh an Account of his Library. See the Book entituled, Antiqua Literarum monumenta, autographa Lutheri aliorumque celebrium virorum ab A. 1517, uſque ad annum 1546 reformationis ætatem & hiſtoriam egregie illuſtrantia, &c. The firſt Tome of it was printed at Brunſwick (h) in 1690, and the ſecond (i) in 1691. The Overſeers, even of Publick Libraries, which are the beſt endowed, ſometimes uſe a blameable Oeconomy. They part with the particular Tracts, when they have once all an Author's Works reduced into a Body: And thus it comes to paſs, that there's no proving from theſe great Libraries, whether an Author, who has cited Paſſages, from the firſt Editions, which differ from the latter, have acted ſincerely.

(f) Acta erudit. Lipſienſ. 1690. pag. 627.

(g) Mr. von der Hardt.

(h) See Journal of Leipſick, for Decem. 1690, pag. 625 (wrong figured 601) & ſeq.

(i) See the ſame Journal for Septemb. 1691, pag. 422.

(DD) He would not ſuffer Luther's Tomb to be demoliſhed.... and forbid.... upon Pain of Death.] The Spaniards inſtantly ſollicited him to pull it down, and would have even his Bones dug up and burnt: But the Emperor very wiſely anſwered, I have nothing farther to do with Luther; he has henceforth another Judge, whoſe Juriſdiction it is not lawful for me to uſurp: Know that I make War, not with the Dead, but with the Living, who have ſtill Arms in their Hands againſt me. (a) Violari autem ſepulchrum vetuit Carolus V, Imperator, Wittebergam expugnatam armis miniſque ingreſſus, contra quam urgebant Hiſpani omnes, eo uſque infenſi Luthero, ut & oſſibus ejus inviderent quietem, eaque perinde, ut Huſſo factum fuerat vivo, mallent cremari; quos laudatiſſimus tamen Imperator græviſſimo ſermone caſtigavit, quando dixit: Nihil mihi ultra cum Luthero, alium ille judicem jam habet, cujus Juriſdictionem invadere noſtrum non eſt, neque mihi cum mortuis bellum eſſe ſciatis ſed cum ſuperſtitibus in nos armatis. Cumque animadvertiſſet, Hiſpanos Duci Albæo & Epiſcopo Atrebatenſi, ſuadentibus ejus Indignitatem facti, conſentire, ſevere tandem atque etiam vitæ capitiſque periculo ſanxit, inviolatum Lutheri ſepulchrum ut eſſet.

(EE) In the Extracts I ſhall give of an Invective of Father Gretſer.] I don't believe I am miſtaken, in aſcribing to him (b) the Harangues which were pronounced in the Academy of Ingolſtad, the 14th of November 1606, when he preſented two Licentiates in Divinity for their Doctor's Degree. One of them made a long Declamation, intitled, Utrum Lutherus fuerit Scholaſticus Theologus, wherein he undertook to prove the Negative, and ſomething more. Lutherum non modo non fuiſſe Theologum Scholaſticum, ſed omnium ſubtiliorum ſcientiarum hoſtem & calumniatorem impudentiſſimum. The Proof of the firſt Part of this Theſis was reduced to a Syllogiſm, which the Candidate pronounced with a very audible Voice; Ut autem, ſaid he (c), rem ipſam ſtatim, cunctis ambagibus omiſſis aggrediar; elata voce proclamo; Scholaſticus non eſt, qui craſſiſſimos, ſtupidiſſimos, &, ut ſic appellem, decumanos, prorſuſque aſininos contra Theologiam & Philoſophiam, commiſit errores. Lutherus tales errores commiſit; non eſt igitur Lutherus Scholaſticus. He afterwards went upon the Proof of the Minor, for the Major was ſelf-evident. He had already obſerv'd, that Luther boaſts of a thorough Knowledge of all the Secrets of the niceſt School-Divinity; and that Melanchthon hereupon has beſtowed great Encomiums on him. (d) Lutherus non ſemel teſtatur, omnia Scholaſticæ Theologiæ myſteria ſibi probè eſſe cognita: omnia adyta perluſtrata: omnes excuſſos angulos. Credatis forſitan Magiſtri noſtri eximii (ſic loquitur Lutherus Doctores Lovanienſes & Colonienſes compellans.) (1) Luthero eſſe notam Philoſophiam & Theologiam veſtram, in qua non peſſimo ingenio, nec ultima ſocordia verſatus ſit plus duodecim annis, interque Sympalæſtritas veſtros detritus. Et ne ignoraremus, in quam Scholaſticæ Theologiæ familiam nomen dederit, alibi nobis exponit cùm dicit, ſe (2) Occami caſtra ſecutum; cujus ſectatores, tempore Lutheri, vulgò TERMINISTÆ audiebant, longeque ac latè in ſcholis regnabant, teſte ipſo Luthero; qui palam ſcribit: ſe (3) Occanicæ ſeu Modernorum ſectæ placita & dogmata non tantum à limine ſalutaſſe, aut primoribus labris ſolummodo deguſtaſſe; ſed penitus imbibita tenere; his enim verbis ſuam in Scholaſtica Theologia peritiam decantat Lutherus; de qua etiam perpetuus Lutheri encomiaſtes Melanchthon: (4) Gabrielem & Cameracenſem (duos inſignes ex Occami gymnaſio Theologos) pænè ad verbum memoriter recitare poterat Lutherus. Diu multumque legit ſcripta Occami. Hujus acumen præferebat Thomæ & Scoto. The firſt Proof of the Minor is taken from Luther's having maintain'd, that this Propoſition, The Word was made Fleſh, is true in Divinity, and abſolutely impoſſible and abſurd in Philoſophy. (e) Omne verum vero conſonat. Tamen idem non eſt verum in diverſis profeſſionibus. In Theologia verum eſt, Verbum eſſe carnem factum. In Philoſophia ſimpliciter impoſſibile & abſurdum. The Author diſplays here the common Diſtinctions of Divines, to maintain, that the Philoſophical Arguments, which Luther alledges, do not oppugn the Myſtery of the Trinity and Incarnation; and adds, (f) Simili ſtoliditate dicit (Lutherus) Syllogiſmos prædictos non eſſe malos vitio formæ ſyllogiſticæ; ſed virtute & majeſtate materiæ, quæ in anguſtias rationis ſeu ſyllogiſmorum includi non poſſit. Quaſi verò nullus ſyllogiſmus & forma & mate- this, is his Teaching that one and the ſame Doctrine is falſe and true at the ſame time, falſe in Philoſophy (FF), and true in Divinity; falſe in Natural Philoſophy, and true in Morality, &c. Their next Argument was his Outrage againſt [redacted] Univerſities, materia probus formari queat de re Cæleſti & Theologica; & divinitus nobis revelata. He forgets not that Maxim of Luther, That Divinity claſhes with the Principles of Philoſophy, but that Philoſophy, in its Turn, claſhes much more with the Rules of Divinity: (g) Impingit Theologia in Philoſophiæ regulas, inquit Lutherus, ſed ipſa viciſſim magis in Theologiæ regulas. He takes notice of Luther's Indignation at the Sorbonne, which had defined, that what was true in Philoſophy, was ſo in Divinity; and he declares he muſt be a Beaſt, who diſapproves this Determination. (b) Vehementiſſimè ſtomachatur Scholaſticus noſter in Pariſienſem Theologorum Scholam, quam Sorbonam vocant. Qua de cauſſa? Sorbona, mater errorum, peſſimè definivit, idem eſſe verum in Philoſophia & Theologia. Non tantùm Sorbona optimè & ſanctiſſimè hoc definivit; ſed & Concilium Lateranenſe ſub Leone X. Et certè tam eſt hoc evidens, ut fungum eſſe oporteat, qui diſſentiat: Nam ut album eſt album, ubicunque ponatur; & aqua eſt aqua, ubicunque collocetur; ita & verum eſt verum ubicunque conſtituatur, ſive in Theologia, ſive in Philoſophia. The Critick's Aſſertion upon the Doctrine it ſelf, I think unqueſtionable; but he is to blame to look upon the contrary Opinion, as Stupidity of Mind; for there have been very ſubtle and penetrating Doctors who maintained Luther's No[redacted]tion in this Matter. (l) Conſidera & hoc [redacted] Lutherani indicium, (this Critick goes on) [redacted] eſt verum in una parte philoſophiæ, quod tamen falſum eſt in alia parte philoſophiæ. Nimirum naturam eſſe principium motus & quietis, verum erit in Phyſica: falſum in Metaphyſica & Ethica. Humor humectat, inquit Lutherus, eſt veritas in Sphæra aeris, ſed manifeſta hæreſis in Sphæra ignis. Fortè propterea, quia in Sphæra ignis concreſcit in glaciem. Nam ſi non congelaretur; quomodo non madefaceret Lutherum, ſi integro aquæ dolio perfundcretur? If the Jeſuit had been a good Natural Philoſopher, he would have been more equitable in this laſt Cenſure; he would have contented himſelf with ſaying, that Luther had not clearly enough explained his Thought. I believe Luther had a Glimpſe of what the new Philoſophers have a clear and diſtinct Notion of. They (a) ſhew, that what the Peripateticks call Humidity, one of the four Elementary Qualities, ought to be called Liquidity: And in this Senſe Luther ſaid rightly that Humidity wets in the Air, but not in the Fire; for Flame is a liquid Body, and does not wet; conſequently 'tis true, that the Liquid moiſtens in the Elementary Air, and not in the Elementary Fire. I know this Example, at bottom, makes nothing at all for Luther's Hypotheſis; but we may, however, believe, that his Thought was not well underſtood. I meddle not with the other Proofs of the Minor of the Syllogiſm.

(a) Chriſtianus Junckerus in vita Lutheri nummis illuſtrata, pag. 218, 219. He cites Joh. Sleidanus de ſtatu religionis & reipublicæ in Germania l. XIX, pag 665 & 668, and Michael Piccartus in obſervationibus hiſtorico-politicis, decade vi, cap. 6. I have found nothing like it in the 19th Book of Sleidan.

(b) They're aſcribed to him in the Bibliotheque d'Alexandre, pag. 200, col. 2.

Now for a Storm of his Reproaches againſt Ariſtotle. (b) Niſi caro fuiſſet Ariſtoteles, inquit Lutherus (1), verè diabolum eum fuiſſe, non puderet aſſerere. Eidem Luthero eſt Ariſtoteles, Proteus, hiſtrio, qui Græca larva Eccleſiam luſit, vaferrimus ingeniorum illuſor, calumnioſiſſimus calumniator, ſycophanta impiiſſimus, princeps tenebrarum, triceps Cerberus, tricorpor Geryon, verè ἀπωλλύων (2), id eſt, perdens, & vaſtator Eccleſiæ; merus logodædalus, & logomachus, vaſtator piæ doctrinæ, beſtia, caligo hominum, & quidem teterrima. Momus, imo Momus Momorum. (3) Beſtia gentilis, ſimilis hydræ in Lerna. In quo fere nihil eſt Philoſophiæ. Impiiſſimus eſt. Publicus veritatis, & ex profeſſo hoſtis. Gentilis animarum carnifex. Hircus, vel potius hircocervus. Bis ſacerrimus Ariſtoteles. In cute perfectus Epicurus. Non mihi perſuadebitis, inquit Lutherus, Philoſophiam eſſe garrulitatem illam de materia, motu, infinito, loco, vacuo, tempore, quæ ferè in Ariſtotele ſola diſcimus: talia quæ nec intellectum, nec affectum, nec communes hominum mores quidquam juvent: tantùm contentionibus ſerendis, ſeminandisque idonea. Quod ſi maximè quid valerent, tot tamen opinionibus confuſa ſunt, ut, quo quis certius aliquod ſequi propoſuerit, hoc incertior feratur, & faces Ebolcas ſpectetur; & ſero tandem cum Proteo ſibi fuiſſe negotium, pœnitet. It cannot be ſaid, that he did not fly out at this rate againſt the Head of the Peripateticks, till after he was embroil'd with Popery; for it may be proved, that he was of the ſame Mind before he had done any thing to diſpleaſe the Court of Rome. Read this Paſſage of Gretſer: (c) Neque unquam bene erga [redacted]ſtotelem affectus fuit; quod diſces ex his, quæ anno [redacted]mini 1516, ad Langum Auguſtinianum prius ſcripſit, quàm apertè inſaniret: (4) Mitto has literas ad eximium D. Jodocum Iſenacenſem, plenas quæſtionum, adverſus Logicam, & Philoſophiam, & Theologiam, id eſt, blaſphemiarum, & maledictionum contra Ariſtotelem, Porphyrium, Sententiarios, perditæ ſcilicet ſtudia noſtri ſeculi. Sic enim interpretabuntur, quibus decretum eſt, non quinquennio cum Pythagoricis, ſed perpetuò, & in æternum cum mortuis ſilentium tenere, omnia credere, ſemper auſcultari, nec unquam ſaltem levi præludio co[redacted]riſtotelem, & Sententias velitari, & muſſ[redacted] Quid enim non credant, qui Ariſtoteli credi[redacted], vera eſſe, quæ ipſe calumnioſiſſimus calumniator aliis affingit & imponit tam abſurda, ut aſinus (Lutherus) & lapis non poſſint tacere ad illa? Nihil ita ardet animus, quàm hiſtrionem illum (Ariſtotelem) qui tam verè Græca larva Eccleſiam luſit, multis revelare, ignominiamque eius cunctis oſtendere, ſi oc[redacted] eſſet. Habeo [redacted] manus commentariolos in [redacted]orum, quibus [redacted]bu'am Ariſtei denuò agere ſ[redacted] meum iſtum Protea (Ariſtotelem). Pars crucis meæ vel maxima eſt, quod videre cogor fratrum optima ingenia, bonis ſtudiis nata, in iſtis cœnis vitam agere, & operam perdere. This Jeſuit produces a great many other Paſſages, injurious to Ariſtotle, taken from Luther's Writings.

(FF) His teaching, that one and the ſame Doctrine is falſe... in Philoſophy, and true in Divinity.] I have ſpoken of this in the fore-going Remark. But here I add, that the moſt rigid Followers of Luther have deſerted him upon this Article; and have, with ſo much Force, oppoſed their Brethren, who revived this Notion, that they have obliged 'em to retract it. Let us ſay alſo, that ſome Miſunderſtanding may mix in this Diſpute, and much Controverſy about Words; and that Luther's Doctrine would be wrongfully blamed, if he had [redacted]ſſed himſelf after this manner, The ſam[redacted]s which appear falſe and impoſſible, whe[redacted]dge of 'em by Natural Light, are true and [redacted]in when we judge of 'em by the Revelation of the Word of God. But to pretend, that even after Revelation has certified that a Doctrine is true, it continues to be falſe in Philoſophy, is a groſs Miſtake. It's much more reaſonable to own, that Philoſophical Light, whoſe Evidence hath ſeemed to be a ſure Guide to us in our Judgments of Things, was fallacious and illuſive; and that it muſt be rectified by the new Diſcoveries communicated to us by Revelation. Affirm, as long as you pleaſe, according to the Notions which Logick teaches us, in the Chapter de oppoſitis, that a Man is not a Stone; but beware of affirming, as Ariſtotle would have done, that its impoſſible a Man ſhould be a Stone: Would not Ariſtotle have affirm'd, that it's impoſſible God ſhould be born of a Woman; that God ſhould ſuffer Cold and Heat; that God ſhould dye: In a Word, that God ſhould become a Man? And would he not be miſtaken in th[redacted]ertions? Now ſince we are inform'd, that [redacted]poſition betwixt the Idea of God, and the [redacted] of Man, hinders not that one of theſe Beings may be truly affir[redacted]d of the other, ought we not to ſay that n[redacted] hinders but a Man and a Stone may be [redacted] Subject, and the other the Predicate of [redacted]rmative, and moſt true Propoſition? Let [redacted]ſay then, that the Jeſuit, who exclaims ſo heavily againſt Luther, perplexes him[redacted] wretchedly, and keeps a heavy ſtir about [redacted]. One would think he affirm'd it abſol[redacted]poſſible for two created Beings to be [redacted]poſtatically; and can't he ſee, that [redacted] once allow'd impoſſible, the ſame [redacted]onc[redacted]-

(g) See Gaſſendi at the firſt Section of his Phyſicks, l. 6. c. 7. pag. 402. Tom. 1. Oper.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 13.

(l) Gretſer ibid. pag. 14.

(a) See Gaſſendi at the firſt Section of his Phyſicks, l. 6. c. 7. pag. 402. Tom. 1. Oper.

(b) Gretſer. ubi ſupra, pag. 43.

(1) Luth. Tom. 1. Epiſt. 9.

(2) Luther. Tom. 1. epiſt. 33.

(3) Hæc omnia ſumpta ſunt ex Luthero in explicat. oct. præcepti, Tom. 1. lat. Witeb. & in Reſpon. ad condemnat. Lovanien. & Colon. Tom. 2. lat contra. Obeliſcos Eckij. Tom. 1. lat. Witeb. Lib. contr. Lat. Diſput. Deum ſimplicimiſſimè eſſe unum.

(c) Gretſer, ibid. pag. 44.

(4) Luth. Tom. 1. epiſt. lat. epiſt. 8.

ſtries, and the (GG) burleſque Expreſſions he made uſe of to turn them and their Doctors to ridicule. This burleſque Way of his might, doubtleſs, be cenſured, but it was not unuſeful at that time; and we know it has been ſaid *, that Eraſmus by his Railleries, ſerved for a Fore-Runner to Martin Luther. But if it be true, that Eraſmus prepared the Way, 'tis alſo true, that this Way was more and more enlarged, and laid open by the wrong Meaſures, that were taken with this Refor-

* See the Remark X.

gainſt the Myſtery of the Incarnation; for which he is ſo angry at Luther? Audite, ſays he (c), & obſtupeſcite, vel potius exacramini; non tantùm imperitiam, ſed & intolerabilem blaſphemiam. Nec minus, inquit Lutherus, imo magis [illegible] rata eſt prædicatio; Deus eſt homo; quàm [illegible], homo eſt aſinus. An non hac Lutheri impia [illegible] totum incarnationis myſterium ex imis fundamentis evertit? Si magis diſparata eſt illa, Deus eſt homo; quàm iſta, Homo eſt aſinus: tunc magis erat falſa illa, Deus eſt homo, quàm iſta; Homo eſt aſinus, quæ ſimpliciter falſa eſt: cujus falſitas oritur ex diſjunctione Prædicati à Subjecto; quia enim nullus penitus nexus eſt Prædicati cum Subjecto; ſic, ut Prædicatum non niſi mendaciter de Subjecto affirmetur. Si igitur in illa; Deus eſt homo; tanquam in majore, eſt Subjecti à Prædicato, & vice verſâ diſjunctio, &, ut ſic loquar, diſparatio; falſa evidentiſſima propoſitio; Deus eſt homo; ſic ut & hac; Homo eſt aſinus; quia diſparata non poſſunt de ſe mutuò affirmari, quamdiu nullo communi nexu copulantur. Si autem ſubjectum & Prædicatum illius Propoſitionis, Deus eſt homo, vero, reali, ſubſtantiali & hypoſtatico vinculo colligantur; ſequi [illegible] mentiri Lutherum, cùm Subjectum [illegible] & Prædic [illegible] æquè, imò magis, ac Subjectum & Prædic [illegible] hujus, Homo eſt aſinus; diſtare & diſparari prætendat. Qualis ergo Lutherus Scholaſticus Theologus; qui ſtupiditate & fatuitate ſua totam divini verbi œconomiam ſubruit & proſternit; imò Turcicè prorſus, inficiatur; & inficiari volentibus non rimam, ſed ipſas fores latiſſimè aperit? We need only conſider this Paſſage to ſee the Unfairneſs and blind Paſſion of the Writer.

(c) Greſſer, ubi ſupra. pag. 6, & 7.

(GG) The burleſque Expreſſions he made uſe of to turn the Univerſities and Doctors into ridicule.] He jeſted upon their Titles, and the Badges of their Doctorſhips. (f) Habent Doctores in Academiis, ritu veteri, certa quædam inſignia & digmata: Habent titulos & ſuas quaſdam appellationes, honoris & reverentiæ cauſſa. Vocantur Magiſtri noſtri; itemque eximii Magiſtri noſtri. In certam facultatem, velut in tribum quandam collecti ſunt, ſuos habent loquendi modos; ſuas formulas & voces. Hinc arepta ſcurrandi occaſione Theologica facultas eſt Lutheri Feculas à fece & Vaccul [illegible] vacca. Doctores facultatis Theologicæ (5) [illegible] ſtrolli, noſtrolli, ſeparatim, conjunctim, Magiſtrolli noſtrolli, Theologiſtæ, Theologaſtri, Liripipiati, Magiſtrolliter, Liripipia, qui tria habent Sacramenta Magiſtrollica, Birretum, Talarem, Liripipium, ſeu relipendium.... Sed recitemus ipſa, Lucianica prorſus in Scholaſticos ſcommata ex ludo Lutheri (1) à Sorbona damnati, cujus proculdubio auctor Melanchthon, ut intelligas quam leves, futiles & ſcurriles fuerint Lutherus & Philippus; & quàm ab omni gravitate Scholaſtica averſi. Decanus noſter almæ Facultatis, inquit leviſſimus ille Ludio, eſt Sanctus Petrus in alma Facultate. Et ipſe habet tria ſigna, quæ cogunt eum ſic ſentire, ut non poſſit errare; quæ ſunt, Regiſtrum, Sigillum, & Almutium. Unde patet, quod valde arroganter, & frontoſè ſcripſit iſte hæreticus contra almam Facultatem. Communia autem ſigna ſunt hæc. Et ſic ſic.... Signum autem eorum primum, & maximum, eſt Liripipium, ſeu, ut eruditi dicunt, Relipendi [illegible] quod eſt evidentiſſimum, & notiſſimum ſig [illegible] per quod concluditur ſic: Iſte habet Liri [illegible], ergo eſt Magiſter noſter in fide illumina [illegible] ergò habet Spiritum Sanctum. Aliud ſignum eſt, quod ſedent in ſuperiore cathedra, quando diſputant, & legunt. Per hoc ſignum arguitur ſic: Chriſtus dicit; Super Cathedram M [illegible] ſederunt; quæcunque dixerint, ſervate. Ergo [illegible] cunque dixerint, ſunt vera. Sed illi ſedent in C [illegible] dra, & docent ſic; ergo, non poſſunt errare. A [illegible] ſignum eſt, quod comprehendit multa. Et ſunt inſignia illa Doctoralia; annulus, pyrrhetum, liber, oſcul [illegible] becæ, & pyrrheta diſtributa in aula Doctor [illegible] candelæ ardentes; & ſuper omnia [illegible] Te [illegible] damus, quod in fine canitur. Ul [illegible] gare [illegible] vivium Doctorale. Ultimum

(f) Ibid. pag. 38. & ſeq.

(5) Lut. lib. de miſſa privata abrog. Tom. [illegible] Lat. [illegible] 2. [illegible] Witeb.

& fortiſſimum ſignum eſt introitus Domini Decani in Sorbona, quando Bedelli cum ſceptris præcedunt, & voce magna clamant: Tranſeat ſpectabilis, & eximius Magiſter noſter, Dominus Decanus almæ Facultatis Theologicæ cum magiſtris noſtris eximiis. Tranſeat ille, tranſeat. Et hoc ſignum eſt valdè bene maſticandum; quia formaliter concludit; Magiſtros noſtros non poſſe errare, &c. Pudet pigetque plura referre; adeò vana, profana, & Lucianica ſunt, ut quidvis iſtos potius fuiſſe ſuſpicer, quàm Scholaſticos: quos, ut magis Lutherus irrijui exponeret, vocabula quædam ad eorum imitationem finxit, & ſcriptis ſuis, ut ſcurras ſuos oblectaret, inſeruit. Cujuſmodi ſunt Diſſolutio (2) Catharinitiſſima & Romaniſſima, Thomiſtates, Italitates, magiſteria noſtraliſſima; magiſtraliſſimæ determinationes, Sylveſtraliter, Thomiſtraliter, Colonialiter, Lovanialiter, Catharinaliter, Latomialiter. Thomiſticiſſimè, Thomaſticiſſimè, Henriciſſimè.

(2) Luth. cum. Cathar. Lat. Reg. Angl. Sylveſt. & in lib. de Miſſa privata abrog.

Francis Garaſſe has diverted himſelf with this facetious Humour of Luther. This fat Fellow, ſays he (a), 'writing againſt the Sacred Faculty of 'Divinity, in the ſecond Tome of his Works, 'propoſes certain Concluſions againſt the Faculty, 'and then condemns 'em, as in the Name of the 'whole Univerſity, impertinently playing the Fool 'in a thing of Conſequence. The Title of the 'Tract is this. Apologia Philippi Melanchthonis adverſus furioſum decretum Theologiſtrorum pro Luthero, &c. The three firſt Concluſions are theſe. In 'Libro Joannis Majoris ſunt PLAUSTRA nugarum. The ſecond, Quondam fuerunt ſtrenui Mileſii. The Third, Spectabilis Domine Decane nos eſtis iratus. To theſe three Propoſitions he anſwers in the Name of all the Divines of France. 'As to the firſt, which ſays, that in Major's Books, 'there are Cart-Loads of Fooleries. Hæc Propoſitio eſt ſtultè aſſerta, in eo quod intendit nugas 'plauſtris vehi: cùm nugæ ſint res ſpirituales & Plauſtra 'res corporales. Having formed this Chimera out 'of his own Brain, he fights it, to obtain a falſe 'Triumph, like that of Caligula. To the ſecond, 'which ſays, that the French Divines were formerly Valiant, as the Mileſians: But that they 'have degenerated, he makes our Divines Anſwer, 'Hæc propoſitio eſt ſuſpecta, quia ſcriptura eſt Græca: '& Græci ſunt hæretici: Hoc eſt noſtrum ſentimentum. 'To the third, which ſays, Venerable Dean of the 'Faculty, you are angry: He makes all the Divines 'Anſwer. Hæc præpoſitio eſt deriſoria & ſcandaloſa, in eo quod dicit, vos eſtis iratus, eſt enim 'incongrua ſicut ego currit, & à nobis olim damnata: & in eo quòd dicit Decane vos eſtis, intendendo quod ſumus ex cane nati, eſt contumelioſa.'

(a) Garaſſe doctrine curieuſe, pag. 520, 521.

'Tis certain, that a very ſerious and a well-argued Anſwer, would not have been ſo proper at that time, as theſe burleſque Pieces, to expoſe the Univerſities to the laſt Contempt, with a great Number of People. But it might be queſtioned, whether it became Luther and Melanchthon, thus to divert and amuſe themſelves with Quirks and Conundrums. They ought, you'll ſay, to have been wholly taken up with the important Affair they were engag'd in; and if they had well weighed the great Characters of their Miſſion, they would not have had leiſure for Banter. They knew what Perſecutions their Cauſe was expoſed to in other Countries: They ought therefore ſo to have laid it to Heart, as to have no Deſire to make merry by humorous and burleſque Compoſitions. I don't offer theſe as Objections of weight, and am perſuaded, that they whoſe Intereſt it is to find 'em weak, will eaſily give 'em an Anſwer. For which Reaſon I ſhan't ſtand to diſpute about 'em. I ſhall only ſay, there are a great many Perſons who have not diſapproved the Reflections at the end of Mr. Bruys's Book: "In Truth, ſays he (b), I "can't believe, that the Proteſtants of this King-"dom, who are really ſerious Men, whatever E-"ſteem they have for Mr. Jurieu's Wit and Learning

(b) Bruys, défenſe du culte exterieur de l'Egliſe Catholique, pag. 340. & ſeq. Dutch Edition.

Reformer. Eraſmus obſerved ſeven grand Faults in 'em (HH). See a Book of the Sieur † Richard, Prior of Beaulieu St. Avoye, a Catholick Author.

† Intit'led, Sentimens d' Eraſme, and printed in 1688.

LUTORIUS PRISCUS (CAIUS) a Roman Knight, was puniſhed with Death, for an Offence that can hardly be thought (A) Capital. * After having received a good Reward of Tiberius, for a Poem he made upon the Death of Germanicus, he was accus'd of having compos'd another, on the Death of Druſus, whilſt this Prince lay ill *; and 'twas affirmed, that he kept this Poem ready to be produced, with Hopes of a greater Recompence, in Caſe Druſus ſhould dye †. The

* Tacitus, Annal. lib. 3. cap. 49. ad ann. 774.

† Corripuit delator, objectans ægro Druſo compoſuiſſe, quod ſi extinctus foret, majore præmio vulgaretur. Tacitus ubi ſupra.

" ning, can approve that affected Character of a Humouriſt and Droller in all the Works of this Miniſter, who has forſaken them, and fled into a " Foreign Country, whilſt he daily hears at a diſtance, of the Ruin and Deſolation of his Party. " Methinks if we conſider the Diſpoſition which becomes a Perſon of his Character, the Joy he expreſſes in all his Writings, at his being out of the " Reach of the Danger his Sect is expoſed to, is " not very natural nor warrantable. It ill becomes " him, in my Opinion, to be merry in Security, " whilſt thoſe he has deſerted groan under the " juſt Chaſtiſements, which the Church, as a good " Mother, mixes with the Kindneſſes and Benefits " ſhe employs to reduce 'em to her Boſom: In my " Opinion 'tis acting counter to the Goſpel, to " laugh with thoſe who weep; and I think the " Works of this Author, how fine and delicate " ſoever in other Reſpects, ought to have ſome " Taſte of the Bitterneſs of his Soul, if he were " really more affected with the Affliction of his " Brethren, than with the Tranquillity which he " himſelf enjoys in particular. Inſomuch, as we " may ſay, that if the Calumnies and Reproaches " with which this Author's Works are fill'd, induce " the Catholicks to believe, that a Man, whoſe " Thoughts are ſo remote from Charity, cannot " be a good Chriſtian, though he ſpoke with the " Tongue of Angels: So that ill-natur'd Joy, which " he manifeſts in his Writings, thoſe Strokes of " Raillery and Ridicule, by which all the World " immediately diſcovers the Productions of his " Pen, ought to perſuade all the Pretended Reformed, who have any Judgment, that 'tis impoſſible " for him, who ſo miſ-times his Raillery, whatever Zeal he expreſſes in their Defenſe, to be a " good Proteſtant."

(HH) Seven grand Faults in the Meaſures taken with Luther.] I have mentioned the Book, in which there is a large Account of this Matter; and 'tis a Book that may be eaſily had at the Booksellers; ſo that I ſhall be very ſhort on this Head, and only ſhew in groſs the capital Point of each of theſe Faults. The firſt conſiſted (c) in their Suffering a Controverſy about the Gatherings among the begging Monks, and upon the Theſes of Indulgences to be diſcuſſed before the People in Sermons. The ſecond, in (d) their oppoſing to Luther only ſome Mendicant Monks, who were no more than Declaimers and Organs of Slander. The third, in this (e) That they did not impoſe Silence on the Preachers of both Parties, and chooſe out prudent, learned, and peaceable Perſons, who might have inſtructed the People, without any Contention, and enclined 'em to Peace and the Love of the Goſpel. The fourth in (f) this; That they would abate nothing on either ſide. The fifth in (g) this; That great Cruelty was exerciſed againſt the Lutherans, at the Inſtigation of ſome Mendicant Monks. The ſixth in (h) this; That the Biſhops of Germany, who were MARTIAL Men for the MOST PART, did not do their Duty. The ſeventh in (a) this; That they did not bethink themſelves of appeaſing the Wrath of God by publick Prayers, and by a Converſion, truly penitent and ſincere. The Catalogue of Faults of the Romiſh Party might, perhaps, be enlarged: But that we leave to the Speculative, and content our ſelves with ſaying, that moſt of theſe, ſpecified by Eraſmus, could not well be avoided, conſidering the State and Poſture of Affairs the Church was then in. Hence it may be concluded, that Luther's Deſign was hatched in a favourable Juncture of Time. The Prudence of the Court of Rome plaid its Part well enough; but it could not prevent the marring the Affair in ſeveral Inſtances, by a Defect in its Inſtruments; and I am certain, Numbers of Proteſtants are convinc'd, that their Party maintain'd it ſelf by the falſe Meaſures of the oppoſite Side, as much as by the Goodneſs of its Cauſe. On the other hand, a great many fancy, that there were ſeveral Faults committed on the part of the Reformation, and that theſe were Incidents favourable to Popery. Thus great Quarrels are generally fed and fomented; each Party makes falſe Steps (b), which reciprocally ſerves to ballance and ſupport each other.

(c) Sentimens de Eraſme, pag. 251.
(d) Ibid. pag. 258.
(e) Ibid. pag. 274.
(f) Ibid. pag. 277.
(g) Ibid. pag. 284.
(h) Ibid. pag. 287.
(a) Ibid. pag. 293.

(A) For an Offence that can hardly be thought Capital.] It is not eaſy to fix the Species of this Action. Very ingenious Men believe (c), that Lutorius's Crime conſiſted in deceiving Tiberius, by preſenting him an Elegy on the Death of Germanicus, which had been made before for the Death of Druſus, who had recovered from a Diſtemper, which 'twas thought he would dye of. Others believe, that he had made a Sacyr upon Druſus. This is the Opinion of Theophilus Raynaud: (d) Ex ea item lege, ſays he, Lutorius Priſcus apud Dionem, lib. 57. quod in Druſi agrotantis mortem, famoſum carmen ſcripſiſſet, mori juſſus eſt Senatus decreto (e). Theſe two Opinions I think falſe, and ſhould chuſe rather to ſay, that Lutorius was accus'd of the Boldneſs of reckoning on Tiberius's Son as Dead, and even compoſing Verſes upon it before the Time. The Author of the News from the Republick of Learning, from whom I borrow theſe Words, immediately adds: (f) It's certain, a Man expoſes himſelf to the Rigour of Juſtice, who ventures, on ſome Occaſions, his unlucky Opinion upon the Sickneſs of Kings. The Phyſician, du Val, was ſent to the Gallies, becauſe there was found in his Cloſet a Paper, in which he had predicted, that Lewis XIII would dye before the Dog-Days, in the Year 1631. This Particular is found in ſome Memoirs of the Duke of Orleans, which came out in the Year 1685. The Words of Manius Lepidus do not oppoſe the Opinion I eſtabliſh ſo much as is imagined: For in an Age of Flattery no Difficulty is made of advancing, that a Poet, who inſtead of making Vows, and confiding in the Fortune of the Republick, whilſt the Preſumptive Heir to the Crown is ſick, ſings the Death of his Prince, and communicates to his Friends the black and diſmal Ideas of ſo lamentable a State, not yet arrived; That ſuch a Poet, I ſay, is poſſeſs'd with an execrable Thought, and poſſeſſes his Hearers with the like. (g) Si, patres conſcripti, unum id ſpectamus quam neſaria voce Lutorius Priſcus mentem ſuam & aures hominum polluerit, neque carcer, neque laqueus, ne ſerviles quidem cruciatus in eum ſuffecerint? Theſe are the Words of Manius Lepidus. Conclude we then, that the Crime this Poet was accus'd of, was anticipating, in his Poem, the Death of Druſus, the Emperor's Son. There was, doubtleſs, more Imprudence than Crime in this Action.

I deny not but the Laws have treated thoſe as guilty of a Capital Crime, who conſult the Stars about the future Events of a Prince's Life: (b) Capitale eſt de ſalute principis vel de ſumma Reip. reſpondere aut conſulere. I know ſeveral have ſuffered Death for ſuch a Curioſity. (i) Valens imperator ſub uno proloquio juſſit occidi omnes qui de ſuo ſucceſſore ſpiritus conſuluerant, nec modo qui conſuluerant, ſed omnes qui aliquid ea de re inaudierant, nec ad ſe detulerant. The Emperor Julianus Didius (k), ordain'd by a Law, that all thoſe ſhould be burnt, who conſulted the Diviners upon the Emperor's Fortune. The Canon Laws have excommunicated thoſe who engage in Intrigues about the Succeſſion in a Prince's Life-time. This is what the Learned John Beloi repreſented to the Leaguers in Henry IIId's Reign. " (l) By theſe Means they ſeem to conſpire his " Death, which, in effect, is revoking againſt Nature, good Manners, Chriſtian Piety, and the " Good-will we owe to our King; for whom we " are conſtantly obliged to pray, to wiſh, and pre-

(b) See in the Penſées ſur les Cometes, pag. 793, a fine Paſſage from the Memoirs de la Rochefoucaut.
(c) Ameſot de la Houſſaie. Morale de Tacite, de la flaterie, n. 17. pag. m. 30, 31. He has chang'd his Opinion in his Verſion of the Annals of Tacitus.
(d) That's to ſay the Law in famoſos libellos.
(e) Theoph. Raynaudus de malis & bonis libris, n. 113. pag. m. 72. 73.
(f) For June 1686, pag. 632.
(g) Tacitus Annal. lib. 3. cap. 50.
(h) Jul. Paulus V. Sentent. 21. apud Fornſterum in Tacit. Annal. l. 2.
(i) Forſterus ibid. citant Ammien Marcellin, l. 29. It's Treaſon to conſult Fortune-Tellers about the Death of the Prince.
(k) Libanius Orat. 12. apud Harduinum not. in Themiſtium pag. 490
(l) Beloi, Apologie Catholique 1 partie, fol. 12. verſo.

The Prince's Recovery ſhould have obliged this Poet to ſuppreſs his Piece; yet he had not the Power to deny himſelf the Glory of his Performance, but read it to ſome Ladies; all of whom, except one, durſt not deny the Fact ‡. All his Judges, except two, gave their Votes for his Death. Tiberius, who was then abſent †, practis'd (B) his uſual Artifices, when he underſtood that the Sentence was executed, and made ſome Regulations for the Time to come. Manius Lepidus, who voted only for his Baniſhment, gave (C) a very ingenious Turn to his Opinion. We ſhall ſee how the Advocate Arnauld, who employ'd it in pleading againſt the Jeſuits, was (C△) reſage well: So that to act upon the Preſumption of any unlucky Accident or Misfortune to him, would be againſt all Laws, Civil and Natural; and therefore good People can't approve, that, againſt their King's Deſire, and in his Life-Time, his Succeſſion ſhould be diſputed, and called in Queſtion, which is a thing not in being as long as it pleaſes God to continue him in the World. Therefore, by a Decree in the fifth Council of Toledo in Spain, which was held in Honorius the Firſt's Time (1), about the Year 622, in the Reigns of Heraclius the Emperor, and Chintillius King of Spain: All thoſe were excommunicated, who inform'd themſelves, or preſumed to be ſollicitous and inquiſitive, who ſhould be their King, after him who holds the Scepter. Therefore, ſays the Text, becauſe it's contrary to Piety, and dangerous for Men to think of future Things, of a forbidden Nature, and to inform themſelves about the Accidents of Princes, or to provide for the Future, with Relation to 'em; foraſmuch as it is written, It is not for you to know the Times or the Seaſons, which God has reſerved in his own Power: We ordain, by this Decree, that if there be any Enquirer about theſe Things found, who, in the King's Life-Time, has reſpect to another from a Proſpect of his ſucceeding to the Kingdom, or draws others to him on that Account, he ſhall be expell'd the Society of Catholicks by the Sentence of Excommunication. (2) The ſame Decree was repeated in the ſixth Council, held in the ſame City of Toledo; to which is added a moſt pertinent Reaſon, by which the Authors of theſe Diſcourſes are blamed, as aiming at the Knowledge of Futurity, which God perhaps will never ſuffer 'em to arrive at." I have read in the French Mercury, a Story I am going to relate: (m) Noel Le Morgard, Maſter Almanack-Maker ... affirm'd in his Almanack, for the Year 1614, "that the State of France would change, threatned the Perſon of the King, and ſhew'd the Time, the Months and Quarters, in which he ſpoke of ſeveral great Princes, whom he denoted, only tranſpoſing the Letters of their Name. This Almanack being in Sale the firſt Day of the Year, there was an extraordinary Demand for it among the Curious, who ſaid, it was a Prophecy: And that which gave vogue to it was, that Morgard, having ſignified in the firſt Quarter of January, that a Soldier ſhould play his Son an unlucky Trick, it happen'd, that an old Man, of the Suburbs of St. Germain, and who had formerly been a Soldier, kill'd his Son, deſigning to kill a Woman he kept. The Noiſe that theſe new Predictions cauſed among the People, coming to the Ears of their Majeſties, and the Council, Morgard was, on the 8th of January, clapp'd in the Baſtile, by the Archers of the Grand Provoſt: Nine Days after he was removed to the Common Goal; the tenth of January, he was condemn'd by a Decree of the Court, for nine Years to the Gallies; and the ninth of February he was put in Chains, to be carried to Marſeilles, where he tugs at the Oar in the King's Service."

‡ Ut delator exſtitit, ceteris ad dicendum teſtimonium exterritis, ſola Vitellia nihil ſe audiviſſe adſeveravit. Id ib.

† Dion, l. 57. pag. m. 707.

(1) 2 Volum. Concil. cap. 4. fol. 739.

(2) Idem cap. 17. fol. 74.

(m) Mercure François. Tom. 3. p. 304.

Every one may have read ſeveral Things of this Nature, but I venture to ſay, that this was not Lutorius's Caſe. All the Enquirers into Futurity have no other End but to raiſe Conſpiracies, or diſturb the Publick Tranquillity; or, in general, they are ill-minded People, as Tertullian obſerves. (n) Cui enim opus perſcrutari ſuper Cæſaris ſalute niſi à quo aliquid adverſus illum cogitatur, vel optatur, aut poſt illam ſperatur & ſuſtinetur? non enim ea mente de carne conſulitur qua de dominis. Now what is there like this in a Poet's Impatience, who, during his Prince's Sickneſs, prepares a Copy of Verſes to produce 'em in caſe the Prince ſhall dye? There was nothing [illegible] Conduct of Lutorius; but Want of Diſcretion. He ought not to have read his Poem: He ſhould not have regaled the Ladies with it, to be regaled in his Turn by their Commendations.

(n) Tertull. apud Lipſium, in Tacit. Annal. lib. 3. pag. m. 140.

(B) Made uſe of his uſual Artifices.] He praiſed the Zeal the Senate had expreſſed in the Puniſhment of the leaſt Offence committed againſt the Emperor, but deſired they would not be ſo haſty in puniſhing 'em. He praiſed Lepidus, and did not blame Agrippa. The latter was Conſul deſigned, and voted for Death, Lepidus only for Baniſhment. It was reſolved, for the future, that the Decrees of Death ſhould not be executed till the tenth Day after Sentence. (a) Id Tiberius ſolitis ſibi ambagibus apud ſenatum incuſavit, cum extolleret pietatem, quamvis modicas principis injurias, acriter ulciſcentium; deprecaretur tam præcipites verborum pœnas: Laudaret Lepidum, neque Agrippam argueret. Igitur factum S. C. ne decreta patrum ante diem decimum ad ærarium deferrentur; idque vitæ ſpatium damnatis prorogaretur. Some (b) attribute all this to Tiberius's Ambition; they pretend, that he was diſpleaſed not that they had put Lutorius to Death, but that they had condemned him to Death without his Advice. They add, that, to make himſelf Maſter of all Sentences of this Nature, even in his Abſence, he got a Decree paſt, that the Execution ſhould be ſuſpended.

(a) Tacit. Annal. lib. 3. cap. 51.

(b) Dion, lib. 57. pag. 707.

(C) Gave a very ingenious Turn to his Opinion.] I have already related (c) the Beginning of his Diſcourſe; here's another Piece of it. (d) Vita Lutorii in integro eſt, qui neque ſervatus in periculum Reipub. neque interfectus in exemplum ibit. Studia illi ut plena vecordiæ, ita inania & fluxa ſunt: nec quidquam grave ac ſerium ex eo metuas, qui ſuorum ipſe flagitiorum proditor, non virorum animis, ſed mulierculorum adrepit: cedat tamen urbe, & bonis amiſſis aqua & igni arceatur. There is nothing to be fear'd, ſaid he, by ſuffering Lutorius to live; nor will the taking away his Life be any great Example. He's an idle Fellow, who ſpends his Time in Trifles; all his Ambition is to get into the Womens good Graces; we need not fear any ſerious Enterprize, or any thing conſiderable from him.

(c) In the Remark (A)

(d) Tacit. ibid.

(C△) Was reflected on by Father Richeome.] Arnauld, pleading againſt the Jeſuits in the Year 1594, amongſt other things has this; (e) They ſay, That they came into France for our great Advantage; Experience has ſhewn, that they have been our Ruine. What need of any longer Tryal? Let them go and advantage our Enemies the ſame way: There's to this purpoſe an excellent Paſſage in Tacitus, Si, patres conſcripti, unum id ſpectamus quàm nefaria voce aures hominum polluerint, neque carcer, neque laqueus ſufficiant: eſt locus ſententiæ, per quam neque impunè illis ſit, & vos ſeveritatis ſimul ac clementiæ non pœniteat: aqua & igni arceantur. Thus you ſee the Jeſuits Sentence. Some Years after he employ'd the ſame Thought in a Writing call'd, Franc & libre Diſcours: "Gentlemen, if ye conſider the horrid Wickedneſs of theſe People, hanging will not be ſufficient for 'em; but I know a Means, by which you'll never repent of, either being too gentle, or too ſevere; baniſh 'em all." Richeome (g) anſwers, that theſe Words are not ſuch in Tacitus; and that therefore this Diſcourſer is a wonderful bold Forger, writing to his Prince.... With theſe Words then he condemns us, in Mercy, to Baniſhment..... more cruel and deceitful, by half, than the Heathen, who firſt ſpoke 'em. For in this Place of Tacitus, Marcus Lepidus, a Roman General, adviſed the Senate to Clemency towards Lutorius a Knight, convicted of many great Crimes. Wherein this Man metamorphoſes his Words into an Exhortation to Cruelty, to perſuade the Ruin of many Innocents. After this he relates a Tranſlation of Tacitus's Sentence, cut off with an Et cætera; and complains of his Boldneſs in producing it (h) egregiouſly diſguiſed, and confronts the (e) Pladoie d'Arnauld p. m. 75.

(g) Richeome, plainte apologetique, n. 48. pag. 180.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 181.

reflected on by Father Richeome. Mr. Moreri has committed (D) ſome Fault

LUXEMBOURG, the Capital City of the γ Province of that Nam was only a Caſtle in the Emperor Otho χ the Great's Time. Gilbert, Son to Ricuin of Ardenne, having obtain'd it of the Abbot de St. Maximin, enlarged it, and founded the County of Luxembourg, with the Conſent of Bruno, Duke of Lorrain, Brother to the Emperor Otho the Great. This Country was made a Dutchy, by the Emperor ξ Charles IV, for Venceſlaus his Uncle *. The City of Luxembourg is very ſtrong. 'Tis not true (A) that it was never taken by the French, before the Year 1684. Hither the Miraculous Image of our Lady of Conſolation, Patroneſs to the Dutchy of Luxembourg, and County of Chini, was brought as to a Place of Security; but 'twas carried back to her Chapel the 20th of May 1685. The Advice ‡ that was given to the Jeſuits about the Proceſſion, they cauſed to be made that Day, has been publiſhed. We find many Foot[illegible] (B) of Roman Antiquities in this Province, which makes all the Curious [illegible]ly deſire the Publication of Father Wiltheim's Book †.

γ This is one of the Provinces of the Low-Countries.

χ His Reign begins from the Year 936.

ξ His Reign begins in 1346.

* Taken from the Itinerarium per nonnullas Galliæ Belgicæ partes of Abraham Ortelius, and John Vivien, pag. 36. edit. 1584.

‡ See the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, Oct. 1685. Art. 10.

† See the Remark B.

the Innocence of the Jeſuits, with Lutorius's abominable Crimes. He commits two Faults at leaſt; for his Complaint of the pretended Falſification of the Paſſage of Tacitus is ill-grounded; and he ought not to have ſuppoſed, that Lutorius was actually a deſperate Criminal, guilty of Abomination and Numberleſs Crimes. He ſhould have regulated himſelf, not by the Phraſes of the Senator Lepidus, but by the real Nature of the Fact. He might have found the Quality of the Offence in the very Words of this Senator, I mean in thoſe he ſuppreſs'd by his Et cætera.

(D) Mr. Moreri has committed ſome Faults.] He has only conſulted Dion, who has too much abrid[illegible] the Matter, not in the 27th Book, as Mo[illegible] but in the 57th. Tacitus ſhould have b[illegible] ed, whoſe Narrative is larger and cl[illegible]. But Moreri's great Fault lyes in ſaying, that Lutorius was accuſed of having written a Poem againſt Druſus. Would he have ſaid this, if he had known, that this Poet was accus'd of deſigning to publiſh this Poem, in caſe Druſus ſhould die, and believing he ſhould receive a greater Reward for it, than for that he had made upon Germanicus's Death.

(A) 'Tis not true that it was never taken by the French before the Year 1684.] When the French beſieged it in 1684, I heard People ſay, that it was then a Virgin; a Name vulgarly given to Towns that were never taken. It was not hard to undeceive 'em; for we find in Hiſtory, that the French took Luxembourg in 1542; and that being recovered by the Emperor's Arms, they retook it in 1543. They loſt it the Year following. Note, That they blockaded it in 1682; they bombarded it in 1683; and took it in 1684. They reſtored it by the Treaty of Ryſwick in 1697.

(B) Many Foot-Steps of Roman Antiquities.] The Inhabitants of the Dutchy of Luxembourg believe, [illegible] to it in this Country; and that anciently the Town of Arlon was an Altar of the Moon. Several Images of the falſe Gods have been found there, and many Medals and Inſcriptions (k). Peter Erneſt, Count of Mansfeld, removed 'em to Luxembourg, for the Ornament of a Fou[illegible]n he conſecrated to the Memory of his Wife, [illegible] cauſed a magnificent Houſe to be built near it. [illegible] Inſcription of this Foun tain will, perhaps, not be unacceptable here. 'Tis a notable Monument of Conjugal Affection. (l) Porticus in primis amplas mirabamur, quas .... ſe ad id deſtinaſſe dicebat ut in eis reponeret, quæcunque nancifci poſſet antiquitatis monume[illegible] quorum magnam [illegible]am habet copiam, ex diverſis loc[illegible] Arlunio in pri[illegible]is .... pietatem .... Sunt au[illegible]ximæ ex parte ſimulacra deorum gentilium, & epi[illegible]ia, quæ in crepidine fontis illius pulcherrimi, ac claritudinis eximiæ, quo dilecta quondam conjugis Mariæ de Montmorenci memoriam ſanctè conſervat, crebrò ad Mariæ fontem, (ſic eum nuncupavit) adventando ſic ſunt.... diſpoſita ut .... Ipſam prius inſcriptionem, qua Illuſtriſſ. Princeps fontem hunc ſuum decoravit, audiamus.

(k) Itinerar. Abrah. Ortelii, & Joh. Viviani, pag. 32.

(l) Ibid. pag. 33, 34.

Quiſquis huc accedis ſi te æſtus ſitiſve urget. Hic æſtum quietus vitato. Sitim pronus extinguito. Aquam manu haurito. Os lavato. At pede [illegible] turbato. Nudo corpore ne polluito. Quieſce[illegible] bus enim cariſſimæ uxoris manibus tranquillam [illegible] dam ſacravit. Mariæ de nomine Mariæ fontem nuncupavit. Æterni ſui amoris teſtes latentes väſtæ ſub rupe lymphas erui. Vivo lapide cingi. Æternaſq; fluere juſſit.

P. E. C. M.

This is taken from a Relation (m) dated at Antwerp, the 7th of October 1575. [illegible]r. Baudelot informs us (n) that Mr. de Balen[illegible] Nephew to the Reverend Father Wilfheim, ſhe[illegible]wn, in Manuſcripte, the Antiquities of Luxem[illegible] written by this Father.

(m) It was printed by Plantin, in 1584, in 8vo. the Edition of Leiden, which is the third, was printed in 1667, in 12°.

(n) In his Diſſertation on Ptolomæus Auletes.

M.

MACCIUS (Sebaſtian) a learned Humaniſt, flouriſhed in Italy at the beginning of the XVII. Century. I ſpeak of him with reſpect only to thoſe things that Moreri has forgotten. Maccius was a very laborious Man, and compoſed Verſes with a wonderful Facility; whereof he publiſhed a great number. He apply'd himſelf ſo much to Writing, that he made a great Cavity, † in two Fingers, with which he uſed to hold his Pen. He loſt a Son, who was but 18 Years old, and was already a Doctor ♣. 'Tis not true that his (A) two Daughters were Nuns. His Definition of Hiſtory, (B) contains a Contradiction.

MACCOVIUS, a Proteſtant Divine, ſee MAKOWSKI.

MACEDO, (Francis *) one of the moſt fruitful Writers of the XVII Century, was born at Conimbrica in 1596: and was made a Jeſuit in 1610. He taught Rhetorick many Years, Philoſophy one, Chronology a great while. He made Profeſſion of the Fourth Vow in the Year  1630. Nevertheleſs, he quitted the Jeſuit's Order, and entred into the Cordeliers, in the Year---- but he continued to labour for the (A) Glory of St. Ignatius. He hotly eſpouſed the Intereſt of the Duke of Braganza, promoted to the Crown of Portugal, and publiſhed (B) many Books for the Juſtice of that Cauſe. He accompanied that Prince's Embaſſadors into France and England. He was called to Rome for honourable Employs; being made Profeſſor of Polemical Divinity in the College, de propaganda fide; afterwards of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory in the College della Sapienza, as alſo Cenſor of the Holy [illegible]. He went from Rome to Padua about the Year 1670. to teach Divinity there +. [illegible] a fervent Wit, and pretty univerſal, and had many (C) Quarrels. 'Tis a Wond[illegible] that with ſo much Learning and Memory, he grew grey under the Cowl, (cΔ) and was not promoted to a Biſhoprick. He has not failed to complain, that he was much neglected. The Biliotheques of the Jeſuits have mentioned none of his Works, (D) but

(a) And not Eritheus, as Moreri ſays.

(b) Nicius Erythræus pinacoth. 1. p. 279.

(c) Voſſius de [illegible] cap. 4.

(d) Nicius Erythr. lib. pag. 277.

(e) Moreri ſays Urbenia.

(f) In Deſcriptione Italiæ, p. m. 436.

(g) See the Giornale di Letterati, of the 29*th of* December 1669. pag. 235.

(h) The Ruſtick Hexameron, p. 29.

(i) John Patricius taught Father Mabillon this. See the Muſæum Italicum of this Father.

(k) See the Article Anglus remark E.

(l) Leti, Italia vigente parte 3. p. 193. 194.

(A) That his Daughters were Nuns.] To ſhew [illegible] del noſtro Secolo, quando morrè, ſi potrà di lui [illegible] quello che eſſo medeſimo ſcriſſe à carte 12. del dottiſſimo Abate Ilarione Rancati. Et tamen, tantus hic Vir domeſticis duntaxat inſignitus honoribus occubuit, & Monaſtico indutus habitu ſepelitur. Ogni uno poi vede à chi ſpeſſe volte ſi danno i Vſcouadi, e l'altre dignità. Benche Modeſtiſſimo, non hà potuto far di meno tal volta di non ſi dolere della ſua cattiva fortuna, onde per tralaſciare diverſi altri luoghi, nella Prefatione al Lettore del ſuo primo tomo delle Collationi della Dottrina di S. Tomaſo, e di Scoto. Scribo procul à fuco, longè ab ambitione: omni ſpe honoris non modo abjecta, ſed etiam amiſſa: victima veritatis non macta, ſed mactata. Contigit mihi jactare in Schola, quod ille alter in acie.

Diſce, legens, doctrinam ex me verumque laborem
Fortunam ex aliis: nam te mea Penna Minervæ
Addictum dabit, & nulla inter præmia ducet.

E nella ſeconda Prefatione all' Apologia per ſan Vincentio Lirinenſe, intendendo del P. M. Noris, e di ſe medeſimo. Scias, mi Lector, hujuſmodi Auctoribus nihil eſſe invidendum, præter fortunam. In aliis nihil deſiderari præter eandem. We cannot ſee greater Marks of a preſence of Mind, and a rich Treaſure of Knowledge, than thoſe which Father Macedo gave, when for three Days together he maintained a Theſis upon all ſorts of Subjects. Here are the Particulars of it (m). Has Theſes ſumma omnium expectatione, & admiratione exceptas ſuſtinuit Pater Macedo, eventu feliciſſimo, præſentibus multis excellentiſſimis D. D. Procuratoribus S. Marci, & compluribus Senatoribus, & Nobilibus Venetæ Reipublicæ, & magno numero Doctorum, ac Religioſorum Virorum, etiam alienigenarum quos fama exciverat. Interrogarunt, & probarunt hominem innumeris quæſitis, & argumentis Doctores, ac Magiſtri omnium Ordinum quibus ipſe ad votum reſpondit: ac ſi præmeditata omnia habuiſſet. Tanta felicitate, ut nunquam titubarit, nunquam dubitarit, nunquam hæſerit, nunquam cunctatus fuerit. Imo ſæpè accidit, ut arguentibus quæ objiciebant, aut obliviſcentibus, aut male recitantibus, ipſe dicenda ſubminiſtraret, & corrigeret. Inter quos fuit unus qui Sacræ Scripturæ locum male citarat: & alter cui locus Virgilii memoriæ excideràt: & tertius qui nonnullos Autores ſuſpectos pro ſua Sententia allegaverat. Primo igitur teſtimonium Sacræ Scripturæ correxit. Secundo verſus Virgilii ſuggeſſit. Tertio ſubtraxit ſuſpectos Auctores, & idoneos ſubminiſtravit. Add to this, theſe Werds of Count Julius Clement Scotus (n). Romæ commorans, cum omnium profectò digna admiratione, non ſolùm in S. Auguſtini, cujus doctrinæ eſt addictiſſimus, Templo, trium ſpatio dierum anno 1658. de omni planè ſcibili theſes expoſuit, ac reſpondit; verùm & ex improviſo de quacumque re ſibi propoſita, copioſum, concinnumque ſermonem habet, oppoſitaſque, ne dum diverſas Doctorum opiniones Catholicorum ingenioſiſſimè diſſudit.

(m) Il Padre Arcangelo di Parma à carte 16. e. 17. della ſua Riſpoſta al Padre Noris, apud Leti ubi ſupra pag. 209. 210.

(n) Pag. 3. of his Notæ ad Hiſtoriam Concilii Tridentini Patris Sfortiæ Pallavicini apud Leti Ibid. p. 208.

(D) Work,

I am multa in ſcribendo opera fecit; ut in dexteræ manus pollicearqueindice qua parte calamus adſtringitur, ex aſſidua illius tractatione, duo quaſi ſulci alte impreſſi conſpicerentur. Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. 1. p. 278.

♣ Taken from Nicius Erythræus Ibid.

* After he became a Cordelier, he was called, Franciſcus à Sancto Auguſtino.

 Nathan. Sotuel Biblioth. Scriptorum Societ. Jeſu. p. 235.

† Taken from Don Nicolas Antonio, Bibliothecæ Scriptor. Hiſpan. to. 1. p. 336. Note, that in many Books which Father Macedo publiſhed, whilſt he was Profeſſor at Padua, he entitled himſelf, Profeſſor of moral Philoſophy.

† In his Italia regnante. You will find the Extracts of 'em, in Morhofius's Polyhistor lib. 1. c. 22. p. 269. & Seq.

(D) but thoſe he publiſhed before his entring among the Franciſcans. Don Nicolas Antonio gives (E) the Titles of ſome others. Macedo was living in the Year 1676. and was more than a Jubilate Lecturer. The Elogies Mr. Leti beſtows on him, may very well aſtoniſh all Readers.

MACEDO, (Anthony) Brother to the former, was born at Conimbrica in the Year 1612. and became a Jeſuit in the Year 1626. He taught humane Learning and Morality; he preach'd, and afterwards went into Africa a Miſſionary; and at laſt he was choſen by John IV. King of Portugal, to accompany the Embaſſador, that he ſent into Sweden to Queen Chriſtina. He ſo pleaſed this Princeſs, that ſhe ſecretly opened to him the Deſign ſhe had of changing her Religion. She ſent him to Rome, with Letters to the General of the Jeſuits, in which ſhe deſired, that two of their Society might be diſpatch'd to her, Italians by Nation, and learned Men, who might take another Habit, and with whom ſhe might confer at her eaſe upon Matters of Religion. Her requeſt (T) was granted her; but Anthony Macedo returned no more into Sweden. He lived at Rome in Quality of Apoſtolical Penitentiary to the Vatican Church, from the Year 1651 to 1671. after which he returned into Portugal, and had * ſeveral Employs at Lisbon. He compoſed (Z) ſome Books.

*Modoeſt Ulyſſipone Rector domus probationis, & Magiſter Tironum. Setuel ubi infra.

MACEDONIA, (Alexander the Great King of) has been the moſt extraordinary Man in the World; and if all that Books relate of him be true, he was not ſo much a Man, as an Incarnate Intelligence. One would ſay that Providence made choice of him to demonſtrate to the Earth, how far the Powers of an humane Inſtrument can reach, when the time of the moſt wonderful Revolutions is come. Poets and Orators are not Alexander's beſt Panegyriſts; Kings who pretend to Wars and Conqueſts, make (A) his Elogy much better, than Writers can do. Let it not be ſaid, that Opportunities (B) were favourable to him; and that ſuch a Prince, who in a long War, gets but little ground, would have ſubdued a great Empire, if he had had to do with the Perſians. Theſe are poor excuſes and Conſolations. That rapid ſpeed wherewith Alexander employ'd the Occaſion, and uſed his Advantages, would have given him a Harveſt of Triumphs, where many other Kings can do nothing. 'Twas to him it might be ſaid after his firſt Victories, I expect you in two Years upon the Banks of Euphrates. I will not pretend to give the Abridgment of his Life, for beſides that other Dictionaries are prolix enough (f) This Apology is an Italian work, printed at Verona, in 1673. in folio. Tomaſo Mazza the Author of it is a Jeſuit. The Italian Journal of the 28*th of* February 1674. ſpeaks largely of this work.

(g) Giornale de Letteratiſ the 28*th of* Jan. 1675. pag. 13.

(h) Or rather 1663. as Nicolas Antonio obſerves, tom. 1. p. 112.

(i) Ex Natan. Setuel ubi Supra.

(k) See the Article, Henry II. Remarks, G. and H.

(l) See the diverſe Thoughts upon Comets, n. 213.

(m) Above p. 876. 877.

(Z) He compoſed ſome Books.] Theſe are the Titles of 'em: Luſitania inſulata & purpurata, ſeu Pontificibus & Cardinalibus illuſtrata, at Paris by Sebaſtian Cramoiſi (h) 1673 in 4°. Vita P. Joannis de Almeida Societatis Presbyteri in Braſilia. Theſes Rhetoricæ variis eruditionis referta: elogia nonulla & deſcriptio coronationis Sereniſſimæ Chriſtinæ Reginæ Suetiæ, in proſe and in verſe at Stockholm, 1650 (i).

(A) Make his Elogy much better than Writers can do.] There is nothing more proper to fill us with Admiration of Alexander, and make us aſcribe to him Qualities beyond all imagination, than to ſee ſo many great Princes in all Ages, with all their Courage, Intrigues, Politicks and good Succeſſes, yet not much aggrandize themſelves. They know how to Conquer, but not to reap the Fruits of their Victories. See the Remark A of the Article Ceſar. To what purpoſe were ſo many Advantages that Charles V. obtained over France? Did they augment his Patrimony? Was it not a great deal, after the great Victory that was gained at St. Quintin, by his Succeſſor, to recover what France had taken from the Duke of Savoy, an Ally of the Houſe of Auſtria? And was he not fain to obtain this by the Folly or Infidelity of (k) Henry the IIth's Favourites?

(B) Opportunities were favourable to him.] I pretend not to deny it; my meaning is only, that they who would by this leſſen his Merit, and juſtify the Princes, who have vainly ſpent all their Life in attempting Conqueſts, are under a Deluſion. I believe indeed, that Alexander's great Deſigns would have totally wreck'd againſt a Seſoſtris, a (l) Cyrus, and a Ceſar; but how many great Kings have there been, who, with more numerous and better diſciplin'd Troops than thoſe of [illegible] would have done Darius but little harm? [illegible] did not depend upon Opportunities. [illegible] upon Julius Ceſar.

(D) Works but thoſe he publiſhed.] They are Theſes of Rhetorick which he maintain'd at Madrid, and Lyrick Poems upon the Apotheoſis of Francis Xavier, and St. Elizabeth Queen of Portugal, or Elegies upon the Death of Francis de Mendoza, and beſides this, an Abridgment of Chronology from the beginning of the World to the Year 1633. A Treatiſe concerning the Art of Poetry, and the Life of Don Lewis de Ataide, Viceroy of the Indies. This laſt Book is in Spaniſh.

(E) Don Nicolas Antonio (a) gives the Titles of ſome others.] The two I ſpeak of in the Remark B; the Elogia Gallorum, at Aix in Provence in 1642. in 4°. The Teſſera Romana authoritatis pontificiæ adverſus buccinam Thomæ Angli & Litum Luſitanus, hoc eſt Apologia mentis Innocentii X. adverſus Thomam Anglum, London 1654, in 4°. The Scrinium Divi Auguſtini de prædeſtinatione gratiæ, & libero arbitrio, at Paris 1648. in 4°. The Mens divinitus inſpirata Sanctiſſimo P. N. Innocentio X. ſuper quinque propoſitionibus Cornelii Janſenii, London 1643. in 4°. The Schola Theologiæ poſitivæ ad doctrinam Catholicorum & refutationem hæreticorum aperta, at Rome 1664 in folio, and many others. I don't warrant for Don Nicolas Antonio's marking well the Place and Year of the Impreſſion. Conſult Konig (b) who will tell you that Macedo publiſhed 47 Volumes; he gives us the Title of ſome, and refers us to the Italia Regnante of Mr. Leti. The 13th Giornale de letterati of the Year 1676 informs us, that the Schema ſacræ Congregationis S. Officii Romani, printed at Padua in 1676, was the 47th Tome of Father Macedo's Works. The Inquiſition is extoll'd to the Clouds in this Book, why do I ſay the Clouds? He places the firſt Inſtitution of it in the Terreſtrial Paradice, and pretends that God began to perform there the Office of Inquiſitor, and that he continued it out of Paradice againſt Cain, and the Builders of the Tower of Babel, and that St. Peter acted in the ſame Capacity againſt Ananias and Sapphira, and that he tranſmitted it to the Popes, who inveſted St. Dominic and his Succeſſors with it. 'Tis thus that Macedo proves by Scripture the Juſtice of this Tribunal. (c) I'le make mention below (d) of his anſwer to the Critick who wrote againſt the Apologiſt of Annius Viterbienſis.

(T) Her Requeſt was granted her.] Two Jeſuits were immediately ſent her, namely, Francis Malines, who taught Divinity at Turin, and Paul Caſatus, Profeſſor of Mathematicks at Rome (e). Theſe accompliſh'd what Anthony Macedo, the firſt Confident of this Queen's Deſign, began. I call him the firſt Confident, tho' I know that Heuſchenius and Papebroch aſcribe this Glory to another: but Setuel is againſt 'em, and Father Francis Macedo has entirely confuted 'em. He took the thing ſo much to heart, for the ſake of his Brother's Intereſts, that he made an Appendix to maintain 'em in a Work that had no Relation to this. This Work is Intituled, Reſponſio ad notas nobilis Critici anonymi in (f) Apologiam F. Thomæ Manzæ prodit is a Jo. Annio Viterbienſe, and was printed at Verona, in 1674. See what the Italian Journaliſt has ſaid of the Appendix. (g) Si aggiugne nel fine una ſcrittura dove l'Autore prova che il P. Antonio Macedo Gieſuita fù il primo al qual la Regina di Suetia communicaſſe il penſiero della ſua converſione, e non il P. Gottofredo Frankenio, come hanno ſcritto Heuſchenio & Papebrokio nella vita del Bollando.

(a) Bibliotheca Scriptor. Hiſpan. to. 1. p. 337.

(b) Konig. Biblioth. vet. & nov. p. 14.

(c) See the 13*th* Italian Journal, 1676. p. 201. 202.

(d) In the 1*ſt Remark of the following Article.*

(e) Setuel Biblioth. Societat. pag. 77.

enough upon this Subject, there is nothing more known by all ſorts of Readers, than the Hiſtory of Alexander the Great. It ſeems moreover, that it would be a ſuperfluous Labour (Bᗅ) to give his Character. 'Tis Sufficiently known, and no body is ignorant, that it was equally compos'd of great Vertues and great Vices. There was nothing moderate in his Perſon, but his Stature; all the reſt, whether good or bad, was in extreams. His Ambition (C) proceeded even to Madneſs. He look'd upon it as a Crime (D) that any one ſhould doubt of the Succeſs of his Deſigns. On one hand he was impious enough (E) to deſire to be thought a God; and on the other he was Superſtitious (F) even

(a) Plutarch in Alexander pag. 667.

(b) The Horſe Bucephalus.

(c) Plut. de tranquilitate animi p. 466.

(d) Satyra Juven. 10. v. 168.

(e) Archicoraçon, pues cupo en un rincon del todo eſte mundo holgadamente, dexando lugar para otros leis. Lorenzo Gracian.

(f) Ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, εἰ γε πιστεύσατε ἐμοὶ περὶ ἐμῆς ἀνδρίας καὶ πόνων ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἀναλώσεως ἐνεκα ἢ πρὸ ὑμῶν συνουσίας; Quis credat, Athenienſes, quanta pericula veſtri præconii cauſa ſubeam? Plut. in Alexand. p. 698. E.

(g) Juvenal Sat. 10. v. 166.

(h) Lucianus, quomodo conſcribenda ſit Hiſtoria, Oper. to. 1. p. 694. Salmur. edit.

(i) Quint. Curtius, lib. 8. ſub fin.

(k) Quum omnia profana ipoliaſſent, ne ſacris quidem abſtinuerant: virgines que & principes fœminarum ſtupra perpeſſæ, corporum ludibria deflebant. Id. lib. 10. c. 1.

(Bᗅ) It would be a ſuperfluous Labour to give his Character.] Let us refer to a Book that every Body may eaſily conſult, and is mightily Sold. See, I ſay, Mr. de St. Euremont, in the Judgment upon one of Mr. Racine's Tragedies, called, Alexander the Great, in the 1ſt Tome of his Miſcellany Works, and in his Compariſon of Cæſar and Alexander in the ſame Tome. See him alſo in the 2d Tome at the 97th Page of the Holland Edition, 1693.

(C) His Ambition proceeded even to Madneſs.] His Father was not miſtaken in believing (a) Macedonia too little for his Son. He ſaid this, when Alexander, being about 16 Years of Age, had broken one of the moſt terrible (b) Horſes in the World. How was Macedonia likely to ſuffice him, when the whole Earth did not ſeem a Kingdom large enough for him? He wept when he heard the Philoſopher Anaxarchus ſay, there were infinite Worlds; (c) his Tears proceeded from his Deſpair of conquering them all, ſeeing he had not yet conquered one. Juvenal expreſſes this Ambition after a very lively manner; he repreſents Alexander ſweating in ſo ſtrait a Lodging, as a Kingdom no bigger than the Earth:

Unus (d) Pellæo juveni non ſufficit orbis:
Æſtuat infelix angusto limite mundi,
Ut Gyaræ clauſus ſcopulis parvaque Seripho.

The World was to Alexander, what a little Iſland was to Malefactors confin'd in it. If they were ſtraiten'd for Out-lets, Alexander for his part looked upon the Poſſeſſion of the whole Earth, as the Miſery of being reduced to a little Corner. A Spaniſh Author goes higher than Juvenal; he calls Alexander's Heart (e) an Archicor, in a Corner of which the World was ſo unſtraitned, that there was room for ſix more. But does it not ſeem, that ſo vaſt a Heart terminated its laſt end upon a very little thing, when it propos'd only to be praiſed by the Athenians? 'Tis ſaid that the extraordinary pains he took to paſs the Hydaſpes, forced him to cry out, (f) O Athenians, could you believe, what Dangers I expoſe my ſelf to, to be praiſed by you? Is not this, you'll ſay, to be at once inſatiable, and yet contented with the leaſt thing in the World? Is it not a Madneſs to expoſe a Man's ſelf to ſo much pain and trouble for the ſake of an Oration?

---(g) I demens, & ſævas curre per Alpes,
Ut pueris placeas & declamatio fias.

Say what you will, for me, upon the Contradictions of the Heart of Man, upon its Follies and Extravagancies; Nevertheleſs I ſhall believe that the End Alexander propoſed to himſelf was very conſiſtent with the vaſt and immenſe extent of his Ambition. He had a Mind to reach to all future Ages, to the moſt remote Poſterity, and he hoped not this from one or more conquered Worlds, but from Books. He was not miſtaken, for if Greece had not furniſhed him with good Pens, he had been for a long time as little talked of, as thoſe that commanded in Macedonia, before the Birth of Amphitryo. He concern'd himſelf ſo much with what ſhould be ſaid of him after his Death, that he wiſh'd (h) he might return into the World for ſo long time, as was neceſſary to know how much his Hiſtorians were read. By this inſatiable Deſire of Praiſe, he did more Juſtice to the Valour of his Enemies, than to that of his Captains, for what he took from the latter, and gave to the former, returned to himſelf with Uſury. Simplicius ſamam æſtimabat in hoſte quam in cive; quippe à ſuis credebat magnitudinem ſuam deſtrui poſſe, eamdem clariorem fore quo majores fuiſſent quos ipſe viciſſet (i).

(D) That any one ſhould doubt of the Succeſs of his Deſigns.] They that by his order had kill'd Parmenio, came not to give him an account of that important Service without ſome ſubject of Diſturbance; for [illegible] followed by the Deputies of the P[illegible] they had governed, who had O[illegible]hem of many Crimes. They [illegible] Pillages of theſe Governours, the Sacrileges they had committed, and their Attempts upon the Honour of the Ladies. Alexander having examined this Accuſation, declared, That the Deputies had forgotten the greateſt Crime of all; which was, that the accuſed believed, he would never return from his Expedition to the Indies; for if they had believed it, ſaid he, they would not have dared to commit theſe Violences. Rex cognita cauſſa, pronunciavit ab accuſatoribus ſuum & id maximum crimen eſſe prætermiſſum, diſperationem ſalutis ſuæ, nunquam enim talia auſuros, qui ipſum ex India ſoſpitem aut optaſſent reverti aut credidiſſent reverſurum. Igitur hos quidem vinxit, DC. autem militum qui ſævitiæ eorum miniſtri fuerant, interfici juſſit (l).

(l) Id. ib.

(E) Impious enough to deſire to be thought a God.] Refined Politicks obliged him to make it believed that he was the Son of Jupiter, and to admit the Honours of Adoration. He had experienced, that this brought the Barbarians to Submiſſion; and indeed, who had ventured to take up Arms againſt a Conqueror who was look'd upon to be a God? It was therefore his Intereſt, the World ſhould have this advantageous Opinion of him; and he dexterouſly encouraged it. He was more reſerved (m) hereupon towards the Greeks than the Barbarians; becauſe the Greeks were wiſer, and leſs oppoſite to his deſigns; he one Day publickly confeſs'd, that his Affairs required, that he ſhould be thought a God, and that he wiſhed the Indians would take him for one. (n) Illud pene dignum riſu fuit, quod Hermolaus poſtulabat à me ut averſarer Jovem cujus oraculo adgnoſcor. An etiam quid Dii reſpondeant, in mea poteſtate eſt? Obtulit nomen filii mihi: recipere ipſis rebus quas agimus haud alienum fuit. Utinam Indi quoque Deum eſſe me credant. Fama enim bella conſtant, & ſæpe etiam, quod falſo creditum eſt, veri vicem obtinuit. I could eaſily perſuade my ſelf, that by often ſaying this to others, and hearing his Flatterers upon this Topick, he came ſometimes to believe that he was a God, or to doubt whether he was not. For there are hardly (o) any Thoughts ſo vain, but extraordinary Proſperity and Power, with the Addreſſes of an unlimited Flattery, will be able to infuſe; but I don't believe that this Opinion or Doubt could ever take root in his Soul. He ſaid that two things hinder'd him from believing that he was Immortal, Sleep, and the Enjoyment of Women. Ἔλεγεν ἡ μάλιστα συνιέναι ἀνθρώπους ὄντας ἐν τῷ καθεύδειν καὶ συνουσιάζειν ὡς ὑπὸ νόσου ἐγγινόμενον ἀσθενείας τῇ φύσει καὶ τοῦτον καὶ τὸν ἡδόμενον (p). Dicebat mortalem ſe eſſe intelligere ſe potiſſimum ex ſomno & concubitu, quod ab eadem imbecillitate naturam inceſſat laſſitudo & voluptas. He reaſoned well, tho' not very conſiſtently with the Principles of the Heathen Theology, that talk'd ſo much of Jupiter's Amours and his good Fortune with the Female Sex: But as the two things that ſerved him for a Proof againſt his being a God, frequently recurr'd, I don't ſee, how the Belief of his pretended Divine Nature could ſtrike anchor in his Soul: I ſhall produce many things upon this Subject in the Remarks of the Article Olympias.

(m) Τοῖς μὲν Ἕλλησι μετρίως καὶ σωφρονικῶς ἐπεδείκνυτο τὸν ἐξαθανατισμόν. Ad Græcos vero divinitatem uſurpabat modice & parcius. Plutarch. in ejus vita pag. 681. A.

(n) Quint. Curtius, lib. 8. cap. 8. Conſule Freinſhemius's Commentary.

(o) Nihil eſt quod credere de ſe Non poſſit, cum laudatur Diis æqua poteſtas. Juvenal Sat. 4. v. 70.

(F) He was Superſtitious (q) even to a womaniſh Weakneſs.] This never appeared ſo much as in the Year of his Death; which could not be attributed to the decline of his Age, and the malignant Influences of grey Hairs, ſince he was not 33 Years old when he died. This notable increaſe of Superſtition proceeded from ſome Events, which he was made to think ſo much the more unlucky Preſages, becauſe he had gone to Babylon againſt the Advice that was given him by Nearchus not to go, in the Name of ſome Chaldean Soothſayers. This Repetition of ill Omens ſtruck him in ſuch a Manner, that he diſtruſted both the Gods and Men. He believed the Divine Protection had forſaken him, and that his Friends were grown treacherous. This Diffidence ſo diſquieted his Mind, that the leaſt extraordinary thing, that happen'd to him, ſeemed a Prodigy; His Houſe was never free from even to a Womaniſh Weakneſs. Whatever Praiſe (G) he deſerved on ſome Occaſion with reſpect to Continence, it muſt be owned, that his Life was not (H) regular, o

(p) Plut. in Alexan. p. 677. B. See alſo de diſcrim. adulat. & amici pag. 65. F.

(q) See the Article, Ariſtander Remark A.

(a) Ὁ δὲ Ἀλέξανδρος οὐδὲν ἧττον τότε πρὸς τὰ δεινὰ τῆς ψυχῆς πάθη ἢ τὰ τοῦ σώματος ἀσθενὴς καὶ ἀνδροβάτης τῶν διὰ γυναῖκα, εἰ καὶ μικρὸν ὕστερον ἐκ τοῦ ἐναντίου ἢ ἐκείνων ἐπὶ τὸ σωφρονέστερον, ἀλλὰ δυσμιάν τε καθαρόν τινα καὶ μανιώδη τὸν μετὰ τοῦ βασιλικοῦ. ὕστερος δὲ ἐκεῖνος ὑπὸ τῶν Χαλδαίων ἐπὶ τὰ θεῖα καὶ καταφρονήσεις αὐτῶν· ὃν ἡ μὲν πρώτη τῶν Σούσων ἐπιδημία ἐκείνου μὲν ἀπέκλεισε τὴν τῶν μάντεων ἀπάτην· ἐπὶ δὲ τὸν Ἀλέξανδρον ἐπεσκίασε μᾶλλον. Plutarch. in Alex. pag. 706.

Prieſts and Soothſayers; he only ſpent his time in Sacrifices, Expiations, and Auguries. Let us hear Plutarch, who relates not the Thing without adding his Reflection; (a) Alexander igitur poſtquam ſemel religione obſtrictus eſt tumultuante & trepidante animo præditus, nulla res inſolita & aliena tam oblata exigua eſt quam non verteret in prodigium & oſtentum, ſed ſacrificentium, expiantium, & vaticinantium erat regia referta. Adeo res eſt horrenda incredulitas & contemptio deorum, horrenda item ſuperſtitio, quæ aquæ modo vergit ad demiſſa impleſque abſurdis opinionibus & metu mortales, ut tunc Alexandrum. Such Force, I uſe Amiot's Verſion, and Confidence on one hand, has Incredulity and the Impious Contempt of the Gods, when once it takes root in Mens Hearts; and on the other hand, Superſtition, flowing always, like Water, downwards, into Souls debaſed and dejected with Fear, as it then filled Alexander with Madneſs, when once Terror had ſeized him. I muſt obſerve, that the Advices of the Chaldeans, imparted by Nearchus, made ſo much Impreſſion upon Alexander, that he durſt not enter Babylon, till the Greek Philoſophers, knowing the Foundation of his Scruples, went to viſit him, and by the Force of their Arguments made him own the Vanity of Divinations: He then made his Entrance into Babylon. (b) The ill Auguries which his Head was full of, effaced the Impreſſions theſe Philoſophers had given him. He returned to the great Eſteem he had conceived for the Science of the Caldeans; he deteſted the Philoſophers, that had perſuaded him to enter into City, and he was in a Paſſion with all thoſe, attempted to make him hear Reaſon. (c) See Things concerning Alexander's Superſtition in the Remarks of the Article Ariſtander, his Soothſayer. I have put them there for fear of making this Article too long; I have uſed a like Method with reſpect to many other Facts, and ſhall ſtill uſe it as Occaſion requires.

(G) Whatever Praiſe he deſerved . . . . with reſpect to Continence.] In the firſt heat of his Youth he appeared ſo indifferent with reſpect to Women, that his Mother feared that this might go too far, and that it proceeded from Impotence; for which reaſon, by the Conſent of her Husband, ſhe gave Alexander a moſt beautiful Courteſan of Theſſaly for a Bed-fellow, in order to melt the Ice, and kindle Love in this young Man. Callixena (this was the fair Theſſalian's Name) did her beſt over and over again to make him careſs her, and obtained nothing (d). If this Story be true, we muſt believe that Nature, that in all other things had been very diligent for this Prince, was ſluggiſh, and roſe a little too late upon this Point. 'Tis ſaid, (e) that he carried his Virginity into Aſia, and that Memnon's Widow (f) was the firſt Woman that had it; and that he had had nothing to do with any other till he married: Parmenio was forced to provoke him to careſs her, as capable as ſhe was of enamouring a Man. If this be true, they who ſpeak of Alexander's Complaiſance to Apelles are miſtaken. They ſay, that having ordered Apelles to draw the handſomeſt and beſt beloved of his (g) Concubines naked, and perceiving that Apelles fell in Love with her, he made a Preſent of her to him. This Story and that of Plutarch are inconſiſtent; for Memnon's Widow was not taken, till Alexander made himſelf Maſter of Damaſcus; and it was at Epheſus that he knew Apelles, a long time before the taking it. Theſe two Stories might be reconciled, if we ſuppoſe Alexander had not enjoyed his Concubine, when he gave her to the Painter, or that he ordered her Picture to be drawn after the taking of Damaſcus. But the firſt of theſe two Suppoſitions is againſt the Hiſtory in Queſtion; for Pliny (h) who relates it, is not content to obſerve that this Miſtreſs was very (i) handſome, and moſt beloved of all Alexander's Concubines, but he further ſays, that he reſigned his Bed and his Affection to the Painter. Ælian, who relates the ſame Story, notes this Circumſtance, that the Concubine in queſtion (k) was of Larriſſa in Theſſaly, and the firſt Woman that had given Alexander the Senſe of Venereal [illegible]. The Second Suppoſition has no ſhadow of [illegible]ability would he have ſent to Epheſus, a [illegible]man of ſo great Beauty, and whom he ſo [illegible]erly loved, would he have ſent her ſo far, [illegible] to have her painted ſtark naked? And if he [illegible]nt for Apelles, ſhould we not have ſeen that C[illegible]nſtance in the Authors, that have preſerved the [illegible]emory of this fine Preſent? Beſides, that this Second Suppoſition does not remove the Inconſiſtence betwixt Ælian and Plutar[illegible]Hitherto then, this laſt Author has hardly pro[illegible]e Continence of his Heroe; but what he ſa[illegible]reafter, has a greater Force. The Mother, t[illegible]Wife, and the Daughters of Darius were Alexa[illegible]s Priſoners; the Wife was a perfect Beauty, and her Daughters were like her; the young Prince, who had 'em in his Power, not only paid 'em all the Honours that were due to them, but alſo took care of their Reputation to the utmoſt Punctilio. They were kept as in a Cloiſter, out of the ſight of the World, and out of the reach of every unworthy Object. "Ὥσπερ ἐν στρατοπέδῳ πολεμίῳ, ἀλλ[illegible]ιγείοις καὶ ἀγλώσσοις φυλαττομένας παρθένῶσιν, ἀπ[illegible]ἔχειν καὶ ἀφεγγὲς ἱστίησιν ἁλίσεων (l). Quaſi non in hoſtium caſtris, verum in ſacris & ſanctis Veſtæ templis ſervatæ, in abdito extra aliorum oculos agerent. His Viſits, his Reſpects, his Diſcourſes gave no Occaſion for reproach; and in reſpect of the other Perſian Ladies, who were alſo Priſoners, and whoſe Beauty and Shape were very charming, he contented himſelf to [illegible]y way of (m) Raillery, when he ſaw them, (m) [illegible] Perſian Women made his Eyes ake, and h[illegible]ed by 'em as by handſome Statues. He was angry in earneſt (n) more than once with thoſe, who to make their Court to him, would ſend him handſome Boys; and he ſaid in a Letter, that he had neither ſeen Darius's Wife, nor thought of ſeeing her, and even that he would not ſuffer Diſcourſes to be made him about this Queen's Beauty; (o) Ἐγὼ γὰρ οὐχ ὅτι ἐωρακὼς ἂν εὐρεθείην τὴν Δαρείου γυναῖκα ἢ βουλευμένος ἰδεῖν, ἀλλ' ὅτε τῶν λεγόντων πρὸς με εὐμορφίας αὐτῆς περὶ διελεγόμην. Egonim non ſolum non vidiſſe inveniar Darii uxorem aut videre cogitaſſe, verum nec verba facientes de ejus decore ſuſtinuiſſe audire. 'Tis eaſie to reconcile Plutarch with Q. Curtius; this latter Hiſtorian ſays, (p) that Alexander never ſaw Darius's Wife but once, and that by accident, becauſe ſhe was with her Mother-in-Law, whom he viſited the Day they were taken. Upon this ſcore Alexander might [illegible]ſer to have ſeen, that is, not to have viſited [illegible] Wife. This is certainly one of the fineſt [illegible]ages of his Life, as to Morality, and I don't [illegible]nder that Darius admired it; Darius, I ſay, who was in ſuch Alarms for his Wive's Honour. Conſider the Viciſſitudes of his Paſſions upon the News that his Wife was Dead. Firſt he ſuſpected, that the Meſſenger came to tell him, that her Honour had been violated, and he looked upon this as the greateſt of all Puniſhments. Afterwards, underſtanding his Wife was Dead, he believed ſhe was kill'd for reſiſting the impure Deſires of the Victor. That Thought inſpired him with abundance of Grief and Rage: he afterwards underſtood, that Alexander had been extreamly afflicted for this Death, and lamented it as much as Darius himſelf. This was a cruel Attack; his Grief and Rage abated, but he fell into a diſmal Diſturbance, imagining that Alexander bewailed the loſs of her Favours, that had been granted him. At laſt he was aſſured to the contrary, and prayed the Gods, that if they would not reſtore him, they would give hi[illegible]dom to ſo honeſt a Conqueror. Ludi[illegible] ciaturus es mihi, &, ut credo, ipſis [illegible] viorâ ſupplicio . . . . . Nec dubitavit D[illegible] quin interfecta eſſet, quia nequiſſet contumelium pati. . . . . Ob hæc ipſa amantis animus in ſollicitudinem ſuſpicionem[illegible] eſt; deſiderium captivæ profecto à conſue[illegible] ori ortum eſſe conjectans. . . . . Dii patrii pri[illegible] habilite regnum: deinde ſi de me jam tranſ[illegible] actum eſt, precor ne quis Aſiæ rex ſit quam iſte tam juſtus hoſtis, tam miſericors victor (r).

(H) Was not regular on this Head.] [illegible] which his irregular Conduct [illegible] marrying three or four Wives [illegible] Widower, and cauſing his Con[illegible]

(f) She was called Barſina, See Memnon's Article.

(g) Ælian calls her Pancaſte, and Pliny, Campaſpe.

(h) Se viri, nec torum tantum ſuum, ſed etiam affectum donavit artifici. Plin. l. 35. c. 10.

(i) According to Pliny the Picture of Venus coming out of the Waves, was drawn by Campaſpe's.

(k) Ταύτην καὶ τρώτην φασὶν ὁ Ἀλέξανδρος ἐπιλαβέσθαι. Cum qua primum Alexander rem habuiſſe dicitur. Ælian

(l) Plutarch. in Alexand. pag. 676.

(m) Id. ib.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) I ſpeak of [illegible] in the Article Roxane.

(p) Semel omnino eam vidit quo die capta eſt, nec ut ipſam, ſed ut Darii matrem videret. [illegible] que [illegible] chri[illegible] nen[illegible] mæ ejus non libidinis haberet incitamentum, ſed gloriæ. Q. Curtius lib. 4. cap. 10.

(q) 'Tis thus Diodorus Siculus, lib. 17. judges of it.

(r) Quint. Curtius lib. 4. c. 11.

this Head. His Intemperance in Wine was (I) prodigious. The Cruelty he ſhewed to the (K) Inhabitants of Tyre is inexcuſable. Notwithſtanding all thoſe Vices, he was after his Death honoured as a God, and even in the times of the Roman Emperors, there were ſome Families, that choſe him for (L) their tutelar Deity. Flattery had no Hand

(a) Paſcit amore avidos in te Dea viſus. Lucret. l. 1. v. 37.

(b) Diod. Sicul. l. 17. Q. Curtius l. 6. Says they were in Number 360.

(c) Exilis domus eſt ubi non & multa ſuperſunt, et dominum fallunt, & proſunt furibus. Horat. epiſt. 6. l. 1.

(d) Pellices 360. totidem quot Darii fuerant, regiam implebant; quas ſpadonum greges, & ipſi muliebria pati ſolliciti, quebantur. Hæc luxu & peregrinis infecta moribus veteres Philippi milites, rudis natio ad voluptates, averſabantur. Q. Curtius l. 6. c. 6.

(e) Id. l. 5. c. & l. 6. c. 2.

(f) Idem l. 6. c. 5.

(g) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 603.

(h) Q. Curtius l. 8. c. 1.

(i) Idem l. 5. c. 7.

(k) Eumenes Cardianus, & Diodotus Erythræus, apud Athenæum, l. 10. c. 9. pag. 434.

(l) This was a Macedonian [illegible] Curt. ibid.

drawn na[illegible]. The Pleaſures of Touch did not content hi[illegible]on, he would moreover feaſt his Eyes with t[illegible]akedneſs of his Miſtreſs in her Picture; an[illegible]t ſign that he fed them likewiſe with the original Nakedneſs: he fell therefore into exceſs, and ſuch a one as the God Mars, Venus's Gallant, did not know, if we judge of it by Lucretius's Words. (a) This corrupt Pl[illegible]ure of the Eyes would be more eaſily pardone[illegible]e, who, when they can have no other, Paſcun[illegible]di ſguardi. But this Lewdneſs of Alexander, [illegible]minal as it was, is nothing in compariſon to w[illegible]he did after his great Proſperities. I don't ſpeak of the Concubines he would have in the ſame Number as Darius, that is as many as there are Days in the Year, for the Hiſtorian (b) who relates that theſe Concubines preſented themſelves every Evening to the King, that he might chuſe one to ſpend the Night with, declares that Alexander ſeldom made this choice: It is certain that the Eaſtern Princes, and Solomon in [illegible]imitation, who pretended to Seraglio[illegible]omen, did not lie with 'em all, they [illegible]t with 'em almoſt like the preſent Sultans, they drew great Numbers of 'em together to have the better Choice of ſome, the others ſerved only to ſhew their Magnificence, like ſo many uſeleſs Moveables in opulent Houſes which are never employ'd, and perhaps (c) are not ſo much as known. The Kings who make an O[illegible]ſtentation of the fineſt Stables, ride but a few [illegible] their Horſes; the greateſt part are ſuffered to [illegible] and die without trying them. Some furniſh Magnificent Libraries, and never touch a Book. It would therefore be but an uncertain Proof of Alexander's Incontinence, to alledge the great Number of his Concubines, tho' 'tis certain, that this (d) Train, and the reſt of the Baggage belonging to 'em, juſtly ſcandalized his ancient Subjects, and is a blot upon his Memory; but here are more formal Teſtimonies againſt his Reputation. He had abundance of Proſtitutes (e) to ſit at his Table, and he accepted Bagoas, who had been Darius's Minion. (f) Naharnanes accepta fide occurrit, dona ingentia ferens inter quæ Bagoas erat ſpecie ſingulari ſpado, atque in ipſo flore pueritiæ, cui & Darius fuerat adſuetus, & mox Alexander adſuevit. His Extravagance cannot be repreſented in more expreſs Terms than in theſe of Athenæus. (g) Φιλόπαις ἦν ἐκμανῶς καὶ Ἀλέξανδρος [illegible] βασιλεύς. Διαπαίσαι δὲ καὶ γῦν ἐν τῷ πότει [illegible] δυσὶ βασιλεῦσι τοῖς ἐυτυχῶς ἔτως αὐτὸν φησὶν [illegible] ὡς ἐν ὀλιγοστέτῳ ὅλα καθαιρεῖν αὐτὸν ἀνακλάσαι. καὶ περὶ Θαΐδων ἐπαφανησάντων μὴ κρίνω ἐν ἀπιθάνοις πάλιν ἀνακλάσας ἐρίλησον. Alexander Rex ad inſaniam amore puerorum exarſit. Dicæarchus libro de ſacrificio quod ad Ilium peractum eſt, eunuchum Bagoam adeo ipſum deperiiſſe ſcribit, ut reſupinus in conſpectu theatri totus cum ſuaviaretur, acclamante vero cum plauſu ſpectatorum turba, & tanquam ad iterandæ oſcula invitante, paruiſſe, atque rurſum inflexa cervice baſia congeminaſſe.

(I) His Intemperance in Wine was Prodigious.] He wou'd be drunk, and when in that Condition was guilty of a Thouſand Diſorders. Wine was the Cauſe of his (h) killing Clitus, who had ſaved his Life; and burning Perſepolis, one of the fineſt Cities of the Eaſt. The Courteſan Thais, who was equally practiſed in drinking, and Venereal Debaucheries (i), drove him on to that horrid Exploit, which Circumſta[illegible]n't chuſe but render the Action more inf[illegible] They (k) that made the Journal of his Li[illegible]ſerved, that he ſlept out his Debauch ſo[illegible]es for two Days and two Nights. If a few Glaſſes would have intoxicated him, he had been the leſs to be condemned for falling ſometimes under that Infirmity, but he ſwall[illegible]owed twenty Cups of a prodigious Bigneſs, befor[illegible] made him drunk. Thus he died of drink[illegible] much; 'twas the Bed of Honour he expired in. He would drink a Health to the (l) greateſt Drinker of hi[illegible]e, and he was to empty a Veſſel (m) of va[illegible] ſoon as he had drank it, he faint-ed[illegible]d with the Diſtemper which [illegible]d duos congios capiebat. Q. Curtius he died of. (n) Plutarch confutes this: He (o) ſays, that Alexander had not turned off Hercules's Cup, nor did he immediately feel a great Pain in his Back, as if he had been wounded with a Lance; theſe are, ſays he, Inventions deſigned for the Imbelliſhment of a mournful and tragical Scene. Ταῦτα τινὲς ᾠήθησαν δεῖν γεγράφειν, ὥσπερ διεφθαρμένῳ μεγάλῳ τραγικὸν ἔξοδον καὶ πεπονθὸς πλασάντες. Hæc putaverunt quidam ſcribenda quaſi magnam fabulæ tragicum exodium & lamentabile fingentes (p). But he confeſſes this Prince did nothing but drink that Day that his Diſtemper ſeized him; which is Confeſſion enough for this general Propoſition, that Alexander kill'd himſelf with Drinking. Who would believe, that ſo venturous a Warriour ſhould receive his mortal Wound at Table? Let us hear Seneca hereupon: (q) Alexandrum tot itinera, tot prælia, tot hyemes per quas, victa temporum, locorumque difficultate, tranſierat, tot flumina ex ignoto cadentia, tot maria tutum dimiſerant, intemperantia bibendi, & ille Herculeanus ac fatalis ſcyphus perdidit. Diodorus Siculus (r) relates, that Alexander having already drank too much, would drink off Hercules's Cup, which he had no ſooner done, but he was attack'd with a cruel Pain, as if he had received a great Blow. Thus you ſee the only Poiſon that kill'd him, and which made the Aſtrologers get the Day (s) which the Philoſophers had made 'em loſe: For as for actual Poi[illegible]was not talked of, till 16 Years after Alex-Death, and probably thoſe who were the [illegible]mothers, deſired only to cauſe Olympias to put a great many People to Death, as ſhe did. Ariſtotle was not concern'd in it, but upon the Word of one Agnothemis, who, as was ſaid, had heard Antigonus ſay, that Ariſtotle diſcovered the Poiſon to Antipater, that he was to uſe (t). Let us not forget, that Alexander cauſed Calanus's Funeral to be pompouſly Celebrated (v). There was a Funeral Oration, Tournaments, ſolemn Plays, and every thing: But conſidering the Indians Inclination for Wine, he bethought himſelf of ſetting up a Combat (w) of Dunkenneſs; there were three Prizes for the Conquerors; the firſt was worth a Talent. Of thoſe that entred the Liſt, there were 35 that died upon the Spot, and 6 that follow'd 'em quickly after. The Conqueror named Promachus drank four (x) Congii, and lived but three Days (y) after his Victory.

(n) Id. ibid.

(o) Plutarch in Alexand. pag. 706. See the Remark of the Article Hercules.

(p) Plut. ibid.

(q) Seneca epiſt. 83.

(r) Lib. 17. ſub fin.

(s) See what hath been cited from Diodorus Siculus in the Remark F.

(t) Plutarch. pag. 707.

(v) An Indian Philoſopher, who burnt himſelf with great Ceremony.

(w) Ἀνεγωνίζετο ἀγῶνα, μεθ' οὗ πολὺν οἶνον ἔπιον. Chares Mitylenæus in hiſtoriis de Alexandro, apud Athenæum l. 10. pag. 437.

(x) Ibid.

(y) Plut. in Alex. pag. 703.

(z) Apply to this theſe words Hinc ſive invidia Deûm, ſive fato, rapidiſſimus procurrentis imperii curſus parumper.. ſupprimitur. Florus l. 1. c. 13.

(aa) Q. Curtius l. 4. c. 4.

(bb) Id. ib.

(K) The Cruelty he ſhew'd to the Inhabitants of Tyre.] Alexander's Fortune, that hitherto had run with the Rapidity of a Torrent, found before this Place a ſtrong Bank, that check'd its courſe many Months. (z) This Prince underſtood but two well, the miſchievous Conſequences of ſuch an Interruption; he loſt the principal Wheel of his Machine, if he gave room to believe, that he could be ſtop'd. Finding therefore a thouſand Subjects of Diſcontent, both in raiſing the Siege and continuing it, he reſolved to make new Efforts againſt this City. (aa) Hic rex fatigatus ſtatuerat ſolutæ obſidione Ægyptum petere, quippe quum Aſiam ingenti celeritate percurriſſet circa muros unius urbis hærebat, tot maximarum rerum opportunitate dimiſſa. Cæterum tam diſcedere invitum quam morari pudebat. Fama quoque quæ plura quam armis everterat ratus leviorem fore, ſi Tyrum quaſi teſtem ſe poſſe vinci reliquiſſet. Igitur ne quid inexpertum omitteret, &c. His new Efforts ſucceeded, he forced the Place, but diſhonoured the Victory by his Cruelty. He commanded the Houſes to be fired, and all to be put to the Sword, that ſhould not retire to the Temples; and he cruciſied Two Thouſand Inhabitants, who had not ſo much eſcaped the Fury of the Soldiers, as their Wearineſs of killing. (bb) Triſte deinde ſpectaculum victoribus ira præbuit regis: duo millia in quibus occidendi deſecerat rabies crucibus adfixi per ingens litoris ſpatium pependerunt. There is no Prince in theſe Days, but would be degraded from all his Glory in a Thouſand Volumes, ſhould he do the 20th part of what Alexander did.

(L) That choſe him for their tutelar Deity.] I would not venture to affirm that his Doublet, which they boaſted to have at Rome, was reckoned a Pledge of ſome celeſtial Benediction; and we muſt not reckon much upon Caligula's wearing it on a ſolemn Day. Caligula was no Superſtitious Man, and if he had been

Hand in this, as when in his Life-time Divine Honours were paid him: but it was a true Superſtitious Worſhip. He died at Babylon about the 33d Year of his Age. Some ſay he was Poiſoned, but * more deny it. His Conqueſts were indeed broke into many Pieces after his Death, but theſe Pieces were large Ones, and for a long time render'd the Greek Nation Famous and Potent in Aſia. He had not much time to perform them in; for he paſſed the Helleſpont, the ſecond Year of the 111th Olympiad, and he died the firſt Year of the 114th. He was born the firſt Year of the 106th, and he began his Reign the firſt Year of the 111th †. He had one very particular good Fortune, which is, that it can't be ſaid to eclipſe the Luſtre of his Glory, that Treachery (L) had any great ſhare in his Triumphs. There is no need to ſay that Philip his Father deſcended from Hercules, and Olympias his Mother from Achilles, and thus his Extraction was as Glorious, as it could have been, if he had had the Liberty of chuſing it in Hiſtory. We ſhall not ſpeak here of his Wives and Children, referring them to the Article Roxana. According to the Nature of this Dictionary, I ſhould obſerve all the Faults relating to this Conqueror, yet I ſhall note but ſome of them. The (M) Jews pretend, that † Juxta Sethum Calviſium, who makes the Year of Alexander's Death coincident with the 430*th Year of* Rome and the 321*ſt, before* JESUS CHRIST.

* See Plutarch in Alex. ſub fin. p. 707. and above Remark I.

been a Chriſtian, I don't think he would have had much Faith for the Scapulary. Not that I pretend to deny, that great Villains have had childiſh Superſtitions. But be it how it will, I can ſay nothing of Caligula's Notion, ſince Dion ſays nothing (a) of it. Caracalla had a flaming Zeal for Alexander: This Emperor made uſe of Arms and Goblets, and Soldiers like thoſe of this Conqueror; he perſecuted the *Peripatetick*s, and would burn all the Books of their Maſter, becauſe of the Report that was ſpread, that he was an Accomplice in the Poiſoning of Alexander. He teſtified by a Hundred other things his Veneration for him, but I ſhall take care of imitating a learned (b) Critick, who makes uſe of theſe Facts to prove, that a Religious Worſhip was paid him. What he cites from Trebellius Pollio, and Lampridius, has quite another force. The firſt of theſe two Hiſtorians tells us it was believed, that Alexander's Effigies engraven in Silver or Gold, imported Proſperity to whoever wore it. The other Hiſtorian tells us, that there was in the City of Arcena a Temple conſecrated to Alexander the Great. (c) Alexandri nomen accepit (Alexander Severus) quod in templo dicato apud Arcenam urbem Alexandro magno natus eſſet, quum caſu illuc die feſto Alexandri pater cum uxore patriæ ſolennitatis implendæ cauſa veniſſet. Cui rei argumentum eſt quod eadem die natalem habet hic Mammææ Alexander, qua ille Magnus exceſſit è vita. This Paſſage ſhews that the Inhabitants of Arcena kept Alexander's Feaſt every Year the Day that he died. Which is the ſame that is done at preſent in reſpect of many Saints, whoſe Feaſt falls on the Day of their Death. As for Trebellius Pollio's Paſſage, I'll relate it at large, in favour of thoſe, who ſhall read this Dictionary, without having many other Books, or who don't care to ſtir from their Place to conſult this Author. (d) Videtur mihi non prætermittendum de Macrianorum familia, quæ hodieque floret, id dicere quod ſpeciale ſemper habuerunt. Alexandrum Magnum Macedonem viri in annulis & argento, mulieres in reticulis & dextrocheriis, & in annulis, & in omni ornamentorum genere, exſculptum ſemper habuerunt: eo uſque ut tunicæ & limbi & penulæ matronales in familia ejus hodieque ſint quæ Alexandri effigiem de lxciis variantibus, monſtrent. Vidimus proxime Cornelium Macrum in eadem familia virum, quum cænam in templo Herculis daret, paterum electrinam, quæ in medio vultum Alexandri haberet, & in circuitu omnem hiſtoriam contineret ſignis brevibus & minutulis, pontifici propinare, quam quidem circumferri ad omnes tanti illius viri cupidiſſimos juſſit. Quod id circo poſui, quia dicuntur juvari in omni actu ſuo, qui Alexandrum expreſſum vel auro geſtitant vel argento. I don't alledge the Prayers Juſtin ſpeaks of; they are no Proof of a fixed Worſhip and Invocation. The Macedonians were then in the utmoſt Conſternation, they imitated drowning People, who catch at every thing they meet with. On ſuch Occaſions People Canonized thoſe who have neither Temple nor Feaſt. If you would however know, what Juſtin has ſaid, you may ſatisfy your ſelf without moving. (e) Hæc cum nunciata per omnem Macedoniam eſſent, portæ urbium clauduntur, luctu omnia replentur, nunc orbitatem amiſſorum filiorum dolebant, nunc excidia urbium metuebant, nunc Alexandri Philippique Regum ſuorum numina ſicuti Numina in auxilium vocabant. Sub illis ſe non ſolum tutos, verum etiam victores orbis terrarum extitiſſe, ut tuerentur patriam ſuam quam gloriarum geſtarum cælo proximam reddidiſſent, ac opem afflictis ferrent quas furor & temeritas Prolem Regis perdidiſſet, orabant.

(a) lib. 59.

(b) Barthius in Statium, tom. 1. p. 404.

(c) Lampridius in Alexandro Severo, p. m. 889. tom. 1.

(d) Trebellius Pollio in 30. tyran. pag. 295. Te. 2.

(e) Juſtinus lib. 24. cap. 5.

(L) That Treachery had any great ſhare in his Triumphs.] Read Pauſanias, where he ſhews what prejudice was ſeveral times done to the Liberty of the Greeks by the Practices of thoſe who ſuffered themſelves to be bribed; you'll there find that Philip King of Macedonia held thoſe Correſpondences to aggrandize himſelf, but that Alexander his Son had the good Fortune to fortify and augment his Power without theſe means. (f) Καὶ ὁ τὴν Φιλίππου βασιλείαν τῷ Ἀμύντᾳ, Λακεδαιμονίοις πόλεμον μὲν ἐκ προδοσίας τῶν ἐς Ἕλληνας οὔτε τις ἀν. εἰ ὁ ἄλλος πόλεμος εἰ ἐς τῷ Ἑλλάδι, ἀπὸ προδοσίας μᾶλλον, ἢ ἀπὸ νόου πρότερον ἐ λοιμώδους ἐφθάρησαν. Ἀλεξάνδρῳ δ τῷ Φιλίππου παραχὲν ἡ εὐτυχία μικρὰ ἐνδεῶν προδόσεων ἐς ἐν ἔξω λόγου ποιεῖσθαι. Philippo vero Amyntæ filio ad Græciæ imperium adſpirante unam invenias proditionis immunem Spartam: ceteras Græcorum urbes non magis peſtilentia ſuperiorum temporum, quam proditiones deleverunt. Alexandri felicitas effecit, ut nullum magnopere inſigne proditionis exemplum, quo res ejus adjutæ fuerint, poſſit commemorari. This Oppoſition betwixt the Father and the Son's Character has been very well deſcrib'd by the Hiſtorian Juſtin. (g) Nulla apud eum (Philippum) turpis ratio vincendi. . . . . Amicitias utilitate, non fide colebat. Gratiam fingere in odio, in gratia offenſam ſimulare, inſtruere inter concordantes odia, apud utrumque gratiam quærere, ſolennis illi conſuetudo. . . . . Huic Alexander filius ſucceſſit, & virtute & vitiis patre major. Vincendi ratio utrique diverſa. Hic aperte, ille artibus bella tractabat. Deceptis ille gaudere hoſtibus, hic palam fuſis. Prudentior ille conſiliis, hic animo magnificentior. Fortune has hardly any ways better teſtified the Prodigality of her Favours to Alexander; for in fine, all Men are naturally inclined to leſſen the Glory of a Conqueror, or rather intirely to efface it, when they know that he has corrupted the Generals of his Enemies, and the Governours of Places he deſigned to beſiege.

(f) Pauſan. lib. 7. cap. 10. p. 546. Lipſ. edit. 1696.

(g) Juſtin lib. 9. cap. 8. pag. m. 207.

(M) The Jews pretend that he determined many Controverſies.] They ſuppoſe, that three ſorts of People addreſſed Alexander, to demand of him the Reſtitution of the Goods, which the Jews unjuſtly detained from them. The Canaanites, which eſcaped the Arms of Joſhua came to complain of the Uſurpations of the Jews: The Egyptians came to demand the Houſhold Goods, which the Jews borrowed of 'em in leaving Egypt; the Arabians, or the Deſcendants of Iſhmael, and the Sons of Keithura, came to demand their part of the Succeſſion of Abraham. The Rabbi (b) Gibea Ben-Peſiſa pleaded for the Jews; the Plaintiffs cited ſome Paſſages of Scripture, and the Rabbi anſwering them in the like manner from Scripture, they knew not what to ſay and retired with Shame. Never Cauſe was more eaſily gain'd. I don't underſtand the Anſwer Gibea made the Egyptians; one would think that he uſed this Principle, that the Jews had laboured ſo much for the Egyptians, that what they borrowed, equall'd not the leaſt Salary of a Labourer. Tertullian has ſaid ſomewhere (i), that the Jews pretend there were ſome Conferences betwixt the Egyptian Envoys and theirs, and that the Egyptians renounced their Jewels, when they heard the Pretentions, which the Jews founded on their great Labours of Egypt. He ſeems in virtue of this reaſon to approve their keeping the Jewels that had been lent 'em; but 'tis certain, that this would be introducing the bad Morality of the modern Caſuiſts, to ground [illegible] ſuch a Right: How could one by th[illegible] a Servant who robs his Maſter, [illegible] of his Wages? 'Tis even tru[illegible] Iſraelites, ſince

(b) He was alſo called GibeaBen Koſan; he was a famous Lawyer, as Abraham Zacuth ſays in Sepher Juchaſin f. 13. apud Autorem Polygamiæ triumph. pag. 287.

(i) Adverſus Marcionem l. 2. c. 20. apud eundem.

that he determined many Controverſies they had with their Neighbours. Some ſay, that the Romans ſent (N) Embaſſadors to him. Livy (O) contradicts himſelf, in ſpeaking of this Prince. One of our moſt excellent (P) Poets ſeems to contradict himſelf on the ſame Subject. We ſhall ſee in another Place *, whether it be credible, that the Queen of the Amazons took ſuch a long Journey, to Lie with this King; and that the Sea † of Pamphylia deſerted its Banks, to facilitate the March of the Macedonian Army. If to Rally his Troops he uſed a Horn, the Sound whereof reached Two hundred Stadia, ſome of his Hiſtorians that remain would have ſpoken of it, and we need not have ſought for this in a ‡ Manuſcript of the Vatican. I don't reckon in the Number of Fables, what is related of the Contempt he had for a Man who gave him the Proofs (Q) of an extraordinary Skill.

* In the Article of Thaleſtris.

† In the Article Phaſelis.

‡ Father Kircher, in arte magna lucis & umbræ, l. 2. part 1. c. 7. ſays, That this Manuſcript treats de Secretis Ariſtotelis ad Alexandrum.

(a) Paraſch. 61. fol. 68. col. 21. apud Autorem Polygam. triumph. p. 283.

(b) Ad titul. Sanhedr. c. 11. f. 91. apud eundem Autor. p. 287.

(c) Joſeph. Antiquit. l. 11. c. 8.

(d) Clitarchi probatur ingenium fides infamatur. Quintil. l. 10. c. 1.

(e) Joan. Eiſenhart de Fide Hiſtorica, p. 130. ex Ruperto in Hiſtor. univ. Obſ. ad Synopſim min. Beſoldi, cap. 18. p. 678.

(f) T. Livius, l. 9. p. m. 248.

(g) Id vero periculum erat quod leviſſimi ex Græcis qui Parthorum quoque contra nomen Romanum gloriæ favent, dictitare ſolent, ne majeſtatem nominis Alexandri, QUEM NE FAMA QUIDEM ILLIS NOTUM ARBITROR FUISSE, ſuſtinere non potuerit populus Romanus. Livius ib. p. 249.

(h) It is in the 8*th Satyr.*

ſince they borrowed their Goods of thoſe, for whom they had not labour'd; their Labour was for the Prince, and they paid themſelves with the Goods of the Subject. 'Tis as if at preſent, the Proteſtants, whom the Perſecution has robb'd of their Eſtates in France, ſhould indemnifie themſelves upon their Catholick Fellow-Citizens, when they retire into Foreign Countries. There is therefore no juſtifying the Iſraelites, but by the expreſs Command of God, who being Abſolute Maſter of all Things, can tranſlate the Property of one Perſon to another, as he pleaſes. There is no need to ſay, that theſe Suits commenc'd againſt the Jews before Alexander, are Chimera's; it ſuffices to ſay, That this Story is told ſomething differently in the Bereſchith Rabba (a) than in the Gemara Babylonica (b). I ſhall be far from reckoning in the Liſt of Fables, Alexander's March to Jeruſalem; the Narrative Joſephus (c) has left of it, may be fabulous in ſome Points; but let who will ſay, it is ſo in all: The Silence of Heathen Writers, who have ſaid ſo many other things leſs conſiderable concerning this Prince, and that happen'd in Countries as obſcure at leaſt as Judæa, may be a ſtrong Argument for others, but not for me.

(N) That the Romans ſent Embaſſadors to him.] 'Tis doubted of, though affirmed by Clitarchus; becauſe he doth not paſs (d) for a faithful Writer. He was in Alexander's Train, and thereby might be well inform'd of Things; but this ſignifies nothing, when a Man has a mind to Lye. A modern Author (e) relates, That this Roman Embaſſy is reckon'd Fabulous; becauſe neither the Roman Hiſtorians, nor Ptolemy, nor Ariſtobulus, have mention'd it. Romanos Alexandrum M. Legatione veneratos eſſe contra Memnonem, c. 24. Plinium, lib. III. c. 5. negant cum Arriano, lib. VII. quod de ea re ſileant non ſolum ſcriptores Romani omnes, ſed & Ptolemæus & Ariſtobulus hiſtorici, uterque Alexandri Socius, alter etiam Dux & poſtea Rex Ægypti. I don't find in the 24th Chapter of the Extracts that Photius gives of Memnon, that Alexander receiv'd any Embaſſy from Rome: Nor does Pliny mention it; but only ſays, that Clitarchus has ſpoken of it.

(O) Livy contradicts himſelf.] He (f) ſeriouſly examines, what might have happen'd, if Alexander, after having Conquer'd Aſia, had brought the War into Italy, and he ſays, that the Romans had choſen Papyrius Curſor, to oppoſe him upon this Suppoſition. Haud dubie illa ætate, qua nulla virtutum feracior fuit, nemo unus erat vir quo magis immina res Romana ſtaret: quin eum parem DESTINARANT animis magno Alexandro ducem, ſi arma, Aſia perdomita, in Europam vertiſſet. This Hiſtorian's Digreſſion is not very long; and yet about the middle of it he declares, that he does not believe that the Fame of Alexander arrived ſo far as Rome. He ſays this, to Anſwer an Objection (g). The Greeks, envious of the Glory of the Romans, who had ſubdu'd them, ſo far as to become Flatterers of the Parthians, in order to obſcure it, ſaid, That Alexander, by the meer Majeſty of his Name, and by the bare Luſtre of his Glory, would have humbled the Courage of the Romans. Livy Anſwers, This Danger was little to be fear'd by People that had not ſo much as heard of him: How then had they deſign'd the Command of their Armies to Papyrius Curſor, in caſe Alexander, fluſhed with his Aſian Conqueſts, ſhould bring the War into Italy? Livy can't be excuſed; his diſtraction of Thought, his want of Attention, in a word, his Contradiction, fly in one's face.

(P) One of our moſt excellent Poets ſeems to contradict himſelf.] I have not at preſent the Reflections of Des-Marets of the French Academy, publiſhed againſt [illegible] about the Year 1674. but I have a co[illegible]rance, how this fine and ingenious [illegible]ticis'd (h).

MACHIAVEL

Quoi donc à vôtre avis, fut-ce un fou qu' Alexandre?
Qui? cet écervelé qui mit l'Aſie en cendre?
Ce fougueux l'Angeli qui de ſang altéré
Maître du monde entier s'y trouvoit trop ſerré?
L'orage qu'il étoit, né Roy d'une Province,
Qu'il pouvoit gouverner en bon & ſage Prince;
S'en alla follement & penſant être Dieu
Courir comme un Bandit qui n'a ni feu ni lieu,
Et traînant avec ſoi les horreurs de la guerre
De ſa vaſte folie emplir toute la terre.
Heureux! ſi de ſon tems pour cent bonnes raiſons
La Macedoine eût eu de Petites Maiſons;
Et qu'un ſage Tuteur l'eût en cette demeure
Par avis de Parens, enfermé de bonne heure.

The Critick, as I remember, founds himſelf, amongſt other things, upon Mr. Deſpreaux praiſing Alexander in another place, and comparing him to Lewis XIV. No Thanks to Des-Marets, that his Cenſure was not turn'd into a criminal Accuſation, capable of caſting the Accuſ'd out of his Prince's Favour. The Publick was ſo prejudic'd in favour of Mr. Deſpreaux, and ſo thankful for being diverted by the reading of his Satyrs, at many People's coſt, that no Notice was taken of Des-Marets Reflections. Tho' they had been never ſo ſolid and victorious, they would have been deſpis'd; the Seaſon was not favourable for 'em: which an Author ought to obſerve no leſs than a Gardener. To this may be applied what I cite (i).

(Q) The contempt he had for a Man ..... of extraordinary Skill.] We read this Fact in many Moderns. Obſerve how Mr. de la Mothe le Vayer uſes it, in his Inſtruction of the Dauphin: (k) There are Arts of ſo little Conſideration, and that conſiſt in ſuch uſeleſs Subtilties, that Princes may very commendably be ignorant of 'em; nor ought they ſo much as to eſteem or reward thoſe that have plac'd their Studies in 'em, except with Recompences as inſignificant as their Works. A Man preſented himſelf to Alexander (l), ſo dexterous at throwing a Chich-Pea through the eye of a Needle, as to caſt a great many of em, one after another, at a good diſtance, without miſſing. Alexander rewarded his Induſtry, by commanding a Buſhel of Chich-Peaſe to be given him. This Example ſuffices to preſcribe the like Occaſions. The Book and Chapter of Quintilian are well cited; but the Words are very ill tranſlated. Let us ſee 'em in the Original. M. [illegible] quoque eſt quadam, id eſt ſupervacua artis imitatio, quæ nihil ſane nec boni nec mali habeat, ſed vanum laborem: quales illius fuit qui grana ciceris ex ſpatio diſtante miſſa in acum continuò & ſine fruſtratione inſerebat, quem cum ſpectaſſet Alexander, donaſſe dicitur ejuſdem leguminis modio. Quod quidem præmium fuit illo opere digniſſimum. This Man's Art did not conſiſt, as Mr. de la Mothe le Vayer affirms, in caſting a Chich-Pea through the Eye of a Needle, ſtanding at a good diſtance. This was hardly any more practicable than what was propoſed by (m) Our Lord, as a thing impoſſible. But his Artifice was this; he put a Chich-Pea into his Mouth, and with his Breath fix'd it upon the Point of this Needle at a good diſtance. Naudæus, without uſing Quintilian's own words, has (n) happily expreſs'd the thing, and not miſtaken it as the Author I have cited. I don't remember ever to have read, that Alexander was blamed for the little Notice he took of this Pea-Blower. Plato would have judg'd as rationally of this Piece of Dexterity as Alexander; for he was the only Perſon, that did not admire one Anniceris (o) who

(i) Parcendum & maximè cariſtati hominum, ne temere in eos dicas qui diligunter. Cicero de Orat. l. 2.

(k) La Mothe le Vayer, Tom. 1. p. 226. publ. 1681.

(l) Quintil. l. 2. c. 12. ſ. 10.

(m) Εὐκόλως ἐστὶν ἐμβαλεῖν τὸν ἐλάχιστον κόκκον τοῦ ἐρεβίνθου διὰ τῆς τρυμαλιᾶς τῆς βελόνης ἢ τὸν ἐλέφαντα διὰ τῆς τρυπήματος τοῦ ῥαφιδίου (or rather, μᾶλλον) δὲ τὸ τυφλὸν τοῦ ἰαμβείου. Matth. c. 19. v. 24. It is eaſier for a Camel (or rather a Cable) to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God, Matth. ch. 19. ver. 24.

(n) Alexander Magnus hominem ſolo oris halitu cicera minutiſſima ex magno intervallo in acum certiſſime infigentem, cicerum modio, donari voluit, quo ſe ille nugator in tam ludicræ artis fatuitate diutius exerceret. Naudæus in Syntagmate de ſtudio liberali.

MACHIAVEL (Nicolas) a Native of Florence, was a Man of great Wit, and an excellent Pen: He knew but little † Latin; but he was in the Service of a learned Man, (A) who having ſhewn him many fine Places of the ancient Authors, gave him occaſion to inſert 'em in his Books. He made a Comedy upon the (B) Model of the Ancient Greeks, which admirably took, inſomuch that Leo X. would divert the City of Rome with it. He was Secretary, and afterwards Hiſtoriographer to the Republick of Florence. The Medicis procur'd him this laſt Employ with a good Sala[illegible] to appeaſe his Reſentment for having been put to the Rack *. This was done upon [illegible]picion of his being an Accomplice in the Conſpiracies of the Soderini, againſt the [illegible] of Medicis. He had ∴ the Strength to bear the Torments, and confeſs Noth[illegible] The Praiſes † he gave Brutus and Caſſius in his Diſcourſes and Books, made him vehemently ſuſpected ∴ Varillas to be the principal Director of the Villainy (C) that was diſcovered. Nevertheleſs there was

† In nullis vel certe mediocri Latinarum literarum cognitione. Jovius, eleg. c. 87. pag. 205.

* Jovius ubi ſupra pag. 206.

∴ Varillas Secret Hiſtory of Florence p. 247.

† Jovius ibid.

(a) Paul Jovius, eleg. c. 87. p. m. 206.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 205.

(c) Varillas Secret Hiſtory of Florence. p. 248.

(d) Paul Jove calls this Comedy Nicia. This piece is not inſerted amongſt Machiavel's Works. Only two Comedies are found there, the firſt is intituled Mandragola, and the ſecond Clitia.

(e) Balzacius, epiſt. ſelect. p. m. 202. 203.

(a) who was ſo good a Coachman, that he could drive his Chariot an hundred rounds, without deviating the leaſt in the world from the ſame track. Plato judged, that a Perſon who took ſo much pains to perfect himſelf in ſo uſeleſs an Art, was not capable of great Things. (b) Πλάτων, τὸν υἱὸν, Δίωνος αὐτῷ στρατὸν διέβαλεν, οἷπερ ἀδύνατον ἦν, ἢ εἰς μικρὸν ὕστερ, ἢ ἀδικὸν ἔξω τοιοῦτον φρονῆσαι μεταβάλλειν, ὑπὲρ μεγάλων πόνων σπουδαῖον. πᾶσαν γὰρ αὐτῷ τὴν διάνοιαν εἰς ἄσκησιν ἀνωφελῆ ἀνάλωκεν ἀνάγκην δὲ οὖσαν δαιμόνιον θαυμάζοντα. Plato nimiam ejus induſtriam reprehendit, inquiens, fieri non poſſe, ut, qui rebus tam nullius pretii operam navaret adeò diligentem, poſſit magnis & præclaris negotiis ullis vacare. Quum enim omnis cogitatio in iſta conferatur, neceſſum eſſe, ut ea negligat, quæ revera ſunt admiratione digna.

(b) Plutarch. in Dione.

(A) In the Service of a learned Man, who having ſhewn him.] It was Marcellus Virgilius; as we learn from Paul Jovius, who had it from Machiavel. Conſtat enim, ſicuti ipſe nobis fatebatur, à Marcello Virgilio [illegible] & notario, & aſſecla publici muneris fuit, Gr[illegible] Latinæ linguæ flores accepiſſe, quos ſcriptis [illegible] reret (a).

(B) A Comedy upon the Model of the ancient Greeks.] He brought many Florentines upon the Stage, who durſt not expreſs their Reſentments of it. (b) Comiter æſtimemus Etruſcos ſales, ad exemplar Comœdiæ veteris Ariſtophanis, in Nicia præſertim Comœdia; in qua adeò jucundè vel in triſtibus riſum excitavit, ut illi ipſi ex perſona ſcitè expreſſa, in ſcena induſti cives, quamquam præalsè commorderentur, totam inuſtæ notæ injuriam civili lenitate pertulerint: æſtimemque Florentiæ, ex ea miri lepidis fama Leo Pontifex, inſtaurato ludo, ut Urbi ea voluptas communicaretur, cum toto ſcenæ cultu, ipſiſque hiſtrionibus Romam acciverit. This Paſſage of Paul Jovius informs us, that the Pope, hearing what great Succeſs this Play had on the Stage of Florence, gave Orders that it ſhould be acted at Rome by the ſame Actors, and with the ſame Scenes. I know not where Mr. Varillas had ſo many other Particulars, which he did not read in Paul Jovius. Here is his Narrative: (c) "One Day as Machiavel mimick'd the "Geſtures and irregular Motions of ſome of the "Florentines, the Cardinal told him, they would "appear much more ridiculous on the Stage, in a "Comedy made in Imitation of Ariſtophanes. There "needed no more to put Machiavel upon writing "his Sanitia(d), in which the Perſons he deſign'd to "repreſent were ſo lively deſcrib'd, that they durſt "not ſhew their Reſentment, tho' they were preſent "at its firſt acting, for fear of increaſing the pub"lick Laughter, by diſcovering themſelves. The "Cardinal de Medicis was ſo charmed with it, that "after he was Pope, he cauſed the Scenes, the Ha"bits, and the Actors themſelves to be brought to "Rome, to divert his Court with it. Mr. Varillas not only relates Things that Paul Jovius had not ſaid; but he ſuppoſes, againſt the Narrative of this Author, that this Play was acted at the Theatre of Florence before Leo X. was Pope. Mr. de Balzac obſerves, that Machiavel's Clitia is a Copy of Plautus's Caſſina, and he juſtly blames this Florentine for following his Original, even in Things where Matters of Religion were ridicul'd. (e) Scriba quum nihil Florentinus .... è Latinâ bonâ Etruſcam fecit meo judicio non malam. Clitia ſiquidem illius, eadem eſt quæ Plauti Caſſina; ex quâ nonnulla interpres fidiſſimus penè ad verbum reddidit, quædam correxit cum arte, multa feliciſſimè imitatus eſt, aliqua verò aut imprudenter aut perverſè; velut illa Olympionis villici ad Stalinonem hæc:

Inimica eſt tua uxor mihi, inimicus filius,
Inimici familiares. Stal. Quid id refert tua?
Unus tibi hic dum propitius ſit Jupiter,
Tu i[illegible]nutos cave Deos flocci feceris.
Olym[illegible]ge ſunt iſtæ magnæ, quaſi tu neſcias,
Repen[illegible]at emoriantur humani Joves.
Sed tandem ſi tu Jupiter ſis emortuus,
Cùm ad Deos minores redierit regnum tuum,
Quis mihi ſubveniet, tergo, aut Capiti, aut cruribus?

Quæ ſit Thuſcus effinxit Scena ſexta Actus tertii, ubi Pyrrhus hunc cum Nicomacho ſermonem habet.

Nic. Ch'importa à te? Stà ben con Chriſto, & fatti beffe de Santi.

Pyr. Si, ma ſe voi morirſi, e Santi mi tratterebbeno aſſai male.

Nic. Non dubita[illegible]i farò tal parte, che i Santi ti pos[illegible]r poca briga, &c.

Hæc quod ad elegan[illegible]multò inferiora ſunt Plautinis; indigna verò homine Chriſtiano, qui ſanctiores Muſas colit, & in ludicris quoque meminiſſe debet ſeveritatis.

I ſhall here occaſionally ſay a Thing which I promiſed. (f) Leo X. forgetting the Dignity of his Character, was preſent one Day at a Comedy publickly in the Face of all the World. It was at the Requeſt of Cardinal Bibiena, who was a good Italian Poet, and writ a Stage Play in Honour of the Dutcheſs of Mantua. (g) Poëtices & Hetruſcæ linguæ ſtudioſus, comœdias multo ſale, multiſque facetiis refertas compenſabat: ingenuos juvenes ad hiſtrionicam hortabatur, & ſcenas in Vaticano ſpecioſis in conclavibus inſtituebat. Propterea quum fortè Calandrum comœdi[illegible] à mollibus argutiſque leporibus perjucundam in gra[illegible] Iſabellæ Mantuani principis uxoris per nobiles com[illegible] agere ſtatuiſſet, precibus impetravit, ut ipſe pontifi[illegible] conſpicuo loco deſpectaret. I could eaſily believe, that the Hiſtorian doth not ſay it, that Leo X. was preſent at the acting of Penulus. 'Tis a Piece of Plautus, that was acted in the Court of the Capitol with all kind of Pomp in the Year 1513. (h) Eodem quoque anno Julianus Medices Leonis frater ab Senatu populoque Romano civitate do[illegible]us eſt: in cujus gratiam, in area Capitolii tempor[illegible]heatrum extructum eſt omni picturarum varie[illegible]ficè cultum. Egere in Scena Plauti Pœnulum d[illegible]rabili, & priſca quidem elegantia Romana juven[illegible]epidiſſimi quique, variaque extra ordinem poëmata recitata, florentibus non alid, fœcundiore ſæculo poſtarum ingeniis. Famian Strada relates, that this Pope not only aſſiſted (i) at the Conferences of the Poets, but that he alſo approved their inſtituting publick Diſputes of which he was an Auditor. 'Tis true he placed himſelf in a Cloſet where he could not be ſeen by the Aſſembly. In Aulæ omnium ordinum frequentia, & Pontificiis pontificum aſſeclis referta, nullo exadversum, lecique diſcrimine conſidunt. Nam Leo Pontifex ratus inferius eſſe majeſtate Principis, ſi ſe in conſpectum concioni daret; in Aulæ receſſu, loculamento ſe ſuo ſublatus in ſpeculum inſerebat. (k) There is no doubt but the Fiction which Strada relates was founded upon ſome known Matter of Fact.

(f) In the Article Leo X. at the end of the Remark ℔.

(g) Paul Jovius in vita Leonis X. p. m. 189.

(h) Idem Hiſtoriar. lib. 11. ſub. fin. See him alſo in vita Leonis X. p. m. 334. ſee alſo p. 359. where he ſays, Fuit id Leoni perjucundum qui explorata haberet illorum ingenia, & ſolitus eſſet interdum ſeveritatem imperii atque acres generis humani curas eruditis hiſce voluptatibus temperare.

(i) Id. ib. prolaſ. 6. pag. 363.

(k) Strada Prolufion Academ. lib. 2. prolus. 5. p. m. 241. 242.

(C) Director of the Villainy that was diſcovered.] It coſt a Poet and one of the Guards, their Lives, if we believe Paul Jovius. Quum dicendo ſcribendoque Brutos & Caſſios laudaret ejus conjurati[illegible]rchitectus fuiſſe putaretur, in qua Ajacetus Poëta, [illegible]dalemanus ex ipſa turma prætoria leviſſimus eques [illegible]ti ſceleris capite pœnas dederunt. Theſe People had form'd a Deſign to kill Cardinal Julian de Medicis, who was afterwards Pope Clement VII. He that Paul Jovius calls Ajacetus, is call'd by others James Diacetin, or Jacetto, or Jacobus Jacetus. "He (l) often "[illegible]nted the Houſes and Gardens of Ruſcellay. "[illegible]rs, Citizens and Strangers were w[illegible]come "[illegible] and amongſt others, Zanobi B[illegible]ngui, "and Lewis Alamanni, and they comm[illegible]ur"fed before Coſimus Ruſcellay ... an[illegible] "who was carried as in a Cradl[illegible] "chaſe was Nicolas Machiavel[illegible] was no Profecution againſt him. From that time † he lived in Poverty, ridiculing every thing, and without any Religion. A Medicine he had taken, by way of Prevention, gave him his Death (D) in 1530. Some ſay that recourſe was had to the publick Authority, to force him to receive the Sacraments *. Others ſay that he died ‡ vomiting Blaſphemies. That of all his Books, that is moſt § oppoſed, is a Work of Politicks, (E) Intituled,

(l) Peter de Boiſſat's Genealogical Hiſtory of the Houſe of Medicis.

† See the Remark D.

* See Varillas it. pag. 248.

‡ Blaſphemans evomuit improbum Spiritum. Thuan. Raynaud. de malis et bonis libris n. 46. p. 29.

§ Theop. Raynaud. ibid. gives a Catalogue of many Authors, that have cenſured Machiavel.

works [illegible] dicated his Diſcourſes, a Work of "a new [illegible]ion to Coſmo. These Men of "Learning [illegible] Philoſophy enter'd upon a Project "of killing [illegible]ardinal, not for any Ill Will, but "to reſtore, [illegible]y ſaid, the Republick to its Liber-"ty. Diacetto [illegible]ſed it before the Judges, and "he and le Commis were condemned and executed. "Machiavel was much ſuſpected: Alamanni happen'd "to be in the Fields and eſcaped into the Dutchy of "Urbino: Buondelmonte was forced by his Wife to "leave his Houſe, and to get out of the City, and ſo "eſcaped to Carſignano, where the [illegible] Aridoſi "was Governour for the Duke of [illegible]ra, who "ſaved him. Mr. Varillas (a) ſuppoſes that Leo X. was alive at the time of this Conſpiracy; he is out in this, as much as in the Interval he puts between (b) Machiavel's Promotion to the Imploy of Hiſtoriographer, and the Exaltation of this Pope. But Paul Jovius's Faults are much groſſer. He ſuppoſes, that the chief Quality and diſtinguiſhing Character of his Ajaccetus was the being a Poet; which is not true (c). He ſhould have ſaid this of his Alamannus, inſtead of making him a Light Horſe-Guard; and he ought not to have put [illegible] in the Number of the beheaded. Aleſſo [illegible] a good Wit and a great Poet, was an Accom[illegible]ce of this Conſpiracy, but he was not puniſh'd for it: he eſcaped beyond the Alpes, and was very well received by Francis I. He publiſhed many Poems in this Prince's Praiſe, and on abundance of other Subjects, and he flouriſhed in France in the Year 1540. as Poccianti (d) has obſerved, and in the Year 1544. Thuanus is a Chapter (f) concerninghim in Boccalin's Ragguagli. He is there blamed for the exceſſive Praiſes, he had given the French in an Oration, and 'tis added, that he was quickly diſguſted with this Nation, becauſe the French gave him too plainly to underſtand, that they deſpis'd him. Here's a Paſſage of James Gohory: "(g) Final-"ly, he made pretty little Tracts, namely, the "Life of Caſtruccio Caſtracani (who, as I hear, has a "Relation, a very worthy Gentleman now in this "City) ſent by him to Luigi Alemanni, who writ a "Book of Agriculture, and tranſlated the Romance "of Giron the Courteous, by the great King Fran-"cis's Command very elegantly into Italian Verſe, "who left two Sons in the Court of France, one "the preſent Biſhop of Macon, a Man of very good "Learning, the other Steward of the King's Hou-"ſhold very expert in Arms.

(a) Secret Hiſtory of Florence. p. 249.

(b) Ibid. p. 248.

(c) See the Article Jaccetius.

(d) Floruit in maximo pretio in Gallia tranſalpina, 1540. Michael Poccianti in Catalogo Scriptorum Florentinorum p. 7. edit. Florent. 1589.

(f) 'Tis the 19th of the 2. Century.

(g) James Gohory in Machiavel's Life before his French Tranſlation of the Prince, and the Diſcourſes upon Livy printed at Paris in 1571.

(D) Gave him his Death in 1530.] See the Words of Paul Jovius (h) Fatum ejus eſt quum accepto remedio pharmaco, quo ſe adverſus morbos præmunivit, VITÆ SUÆ JOCABUNDUS ILLUDERET, paulo antequam Florentia Cæſarianis ſubacta armis, Medicees veteres dominos recipere cogeretur (i). He had ſaid a little before, Fuit exinde ſemper inops, uti irriſor & Atheos. He ſuppoſes then that the Medicis forſook him, as ſoon as they ſuſpected him to be in Dinecttin's Plot; but he is miſtaken. Clement VII. was not yet Pope; and we find, that Machiavel, dedicating his eight Books of the Hiſtory of Florence to Clement VII, confeſſes he ſubſiſted by the Bounties of this Pope. Io vengo allegro in campo ſperando che come io ſono dalla humanità di V. B. honorato e NUTRITO, così ſarò dalle armate legioni del ſuo ſantiſſimo giudicio ajutato e difeſo. This Circumſtance of time manifeſts a notable Falſhood of Varillas. He ſays, (k) "That Machia-"vel writ the Eight Books which we have of the "Hiſtory of his Country in ſo florid and correct a "Style, that it was accuſed of being too florid. "And 'tis pr[illegible]ly in this, that Boccacio's eaſineſs "and agree[illegible]berry is preferr'd before his Wri-"tings. [illegible]arration is ſometimes Malignant "and Sat[illegible]; and Mark Muſurus ſo clearly con-"victed him of it that he durſt not reply. Muſurus died in Pope Leo the Xth's time; he could not therefore criticiſe a Work of Machiavel, that came not out till Clement VII. Mr. Varillas ſtrangly [illegible] verts and falſifies theſe Words of Paul Jovius: Ped. ſtrem patrii ſermonis facultatem à Boccatii [illegible] vetuſtate diſſuentem novis & plane Atticis [illegible] aſtringeret, ſic ut ille caſtigatior, ſed non purior aut gravior [illegible] veteribus exiſtimetur. According to Paul [illegible] ſtyle is more correct than that of Machiavel, but it is not purer or graver. However, when I ſay that Machiavel dièd in the Year 1530. I accommodate my ſelf to Paul Jovius's Expreſſions; without knowing, whether it will be better to follow him or Poccianti (m) who places his Death in the Year 1526. The Feuillant Peter de St. Romuald puts it on the 5th of December 1530. See the 2d Tome (n) of his Cronological Journal. This doth not agree with Paul Jovius. See above Letter i.

(h) Varillas Secret Hiſtory of Florence pag. 248.

(i) Florence yielded the 9th of Auguſt 1530.

(k) Jovius, elog. p. 206.

(E) A Work of Politicks, Intituled, The Prince.] This Author's Maxims are ſtark nought; the World is ſo perſuaded of it, that Machiavelliſm and the Art of reigning tyrannically, are Terms of the ſame Import. This Work of Machiavel was tranſlated into French by Mr. Amelot de la Houſſaye. The Author of the News from the Republick of Learning, ſpeaking of the 3d Edition of this Verſion (o), makes the following Remark. The Preface "is "full of Reflections that drive the Nail home; we "there read amongſt other things this Notion of "Mr. de Wiequefort; (p) Machiavel generally ſays "what Princes do, and not what they ought to do. 'Tis "ſtrange there are ſo many People, who believe, that "Machiavel teaches Princes dangerous Politicks; "for on the contrary Princes have taught Machiavel "what he has written. 'Tis the Study of the World, "and the Obſervation of Tranſactions, and not a "fanciful Cloſet Meditation, that have been Ma-"chiavel's Maſters. Let his Books be burnt, an-"ſwered, tranſlated, and commented, 'twill be all "[illegible] with reſpect to Government. By a miſerable "[illegible]tal Neceſſity, Politicks muſt ſet themſelves "[illegible] Morality; they don't confeſs it, but yet "they do as Achilles, Jura negat ſibi nata. A great "Philoſopher of this Age can not ſuffer it to be ſaid, "that it was neceſſary that Man ſhould Sin: I believe "however, that he owns with reſpect to Sove-"reigns. Sin to be now a neceſſary Thing, ditho' "that does not make 'em excuſable; for beſides that "there are few who content themſelves with what "is Neceſſary, they would not be under this wretch-"ed Condition, if they were all good Men. To this may be added the Saying of an ancient Poet, that by the bare Exerciſe of Royalty, the moſt Innocent would learn to be guilty, without any Tutor: Ut nemo doceat fraudem & ſcelerum vias, regnum docebit (q). Every Body has heard that Maxim, qui neſcit diſſimulare neſcit regnare, and he that denies the Truth of it, muſt be very Ignorant of Affairs of State. Boccalin cunningly gives us to underſtand, that the Reign of ſome Popes taught Machiavel the Politicks of his Prince. Obſerve the Apology he lends this Writer. (r) Io in tanto non intendo diſcendere gli ſcritti miei, che pubblicamente gli accuſo, e condanno per empi, per pieni di crudeli, & eſecrandi documenti da governare gli Stati. Di modo, che ſe quella, che ho publicata alla Stampa, è dottrina inventata di mio capo, e ſono Precetti nuovi, dimando, che pur' hora contro di me irremiſſibilmente, ſi eſeguiſca la ſentenza, che a i Giudici è piaciuto darmi contro: ma ſe gli Scritti miei altro non contengono, che quei Precetti Politici, e quelle regole di Stato, che ho cavate dalle attioni di alcuni Principi, che ſe voſtra Maeſtà mi darà licenza nominerò in queſto luogo, de quali è pena la vita dir male, qual giuſtitia, qual ragione vuole, ch'eſſi, che hanno inventata l'arabbiata, è d.ſperata Politica ſcritta da me, ſieno tenuti ſacroſanti, io che ſolo l'ho publicata, un ribaldo, un atheiſta? Che certo non ſò vedere, per qual cagione ſia bene adorar l'originale di una coſa come ſanta, & abbrucciare la copia di eſſa come eſecrabile: è come io tanto debba eſſer perſeguitato, quando la lettione delle Hiſtorie, non ſolo permeſſa, ma tanto commendata da ogn'uno notoriamente hà vertù di convertire in tanti Machiavelli quelli che vi attendono con l'occhiale Politico. Obſerve theſe laſt words; Boccalin pretends, that ſince the reading of Hiſtory is both recommended and permitted, the reading of Machiavel is unjuſtly condemn'd. The meaning of which is, that the ſame Maxims are found in Hiſtory, as in this Author's Prince. There we ſee 'em put in practice, they are only here adviſed. 'Tis perhaps upon this Foundation, that Men of Sence judge, (s) that it were to be wiſh'd, no Hiſtories were to be Written. This does not excuſe Machiavel; he advances Maxims which he does not blame: But a good

o) News from the Republick of Learning January, 1687. p. 99.

(p) The Chancellor Bacon de augment. Scientiar. l. 7. c. 2. p. m. 397. had ſaid the ſame.

Eſt quod gratias agamus Machiavello & huſumodi Scriptoribus qui aperte & indiſſimulanter proferunt quid homines facere ſoleant non quid debeant.

(q) Seneca in Thyeſte, act. 2. v. 312. He had ſaid v. 317. Sanctitas, pietas, fides, privata bona ſunt; qua juvat, Reges eant.

(r) Boccalin, Ragguagli di Parnaſſo, centuria 1. cap. 89.

(s) See Maſcardi de arte hiſtorica

tled, The Prince. Many Authors have confuted him. Possevin, who had not (F) read him, was nevertheless the Cause of his being Condemn'd by the Inquisition. Machiavel publish'd Historian, who relates the Practices of these Maxims, condemns it. This makes a great difference between this Florentine's Book, and History; and yet 'tis certain, that, by accident, the reading of History, is very likely to produce the same effect, as the reading of Machiavel. There are ingenious People, who have made his (e) Apology, saying, That all those, who have attack'd him, declare their Ignorance in Matters of Policy. (a) Quicunque sunt hodierni Machiavellum sibi sumpsere confutandum, & quorum lices prætexti, suam civilis philosophiæ [illegible] nimis aperte prodiderunt. Ita vero cum Aristotele, summo dicendi Magistro, imperitissimi [illegible] (a) sive naturæ & insolis politicæ scientia ignorantiam. Enim verò omnes pene videas differere, quasi non aliæ sint Respublicæ, quam quæ primo ac per se, imò unicè, salutem populi spectent, aut verè affectent plenam quatenusque humanæ Vitæ felicitatem; eoque & politico Magistro de solis illis agendum esse: hinc sanè omnem doctrinam, quæ non est de Rebuspublicis, quas illi unicè cognoscendas hominibus arbitrentur, damnare solent, & contra limites politicæ methodi adjicere. You will find many Reflections of this nature, in the Preface that the learned Conringius has prefix'd to Machiavel's Prince. Observe, that our Florentine is accus'd of enriching himself with the Spoils of Aristotle. His Maxims therefore have for a long time been in Books. 'Tis the same Conringius that urges this Indictment: (b) Nicolaus Machiavellus cymbalum illud Politicorum artium nullum fere dominatûs arcanum crudelium Principum sumpsit docere, quod non dudum ante ad tyrannidem & dominatum conservandum facere Aristotelis sit libro V. (Politicorum) observatum. Quin sua omnia vaferrimus hic magister Doctor dissimulato plagio ex Aristotele fortasse transcripsit: eo tamen discrimine, quod hic impiè ac impudentissimè Principi commendet, quæ non nisi Dominis ac Tyrannis convenire longè rectius ac prudentius scripserat antè Aristoteles. Gentillet (c) accuses him of being Bordelotus's Plagiary. I wonder that they don't say, that he has stole his Maxims from the Angelick Doctor, the great St. Thomas Aquinas. See in Naudé's State-Politicks (d) a long Passage of Thomas Aquinas's Commentary upon the Vth Book of Aristotle's Politicks. Monsieur Amelot (e) proves, that Machiavel was but the Disciple or Interpreter of Tacitus, and he makes the same Reflection as Conringius. "Of all "those, says he, that censure Machiavel, (f) you'll "find that some confess, they never read him; and "the others who have read him, have never under-"stood him; as appears by the taking several "Passages in a literal Sence, which the Politi-"cians know how to interpret otherwise. So "that, to speak truth, he is censured only because "he is ill understood; and he is ill understood "by many, who are capable of understanding "him better, only because they read him with "Prejudice: Whereas, if they read him as Judges, "that is, holding the Balance even between him "and his Adversaries, they would see, that his "Maxims are for the most part absolutely neces-"sary to Princes, who, as the great Cosmo de Medicis "says, can't always Govern their States with their "Beads in their Hand" (i). He had been saying, (g) "That it needs not be wonder'd, that Ma-"chiavel is Censur'd by so many People; since "there are so few that understand the Reasons of "State, and consequently so few qualify'd to be "competent Judges of his Precepts and Maxims. "And I'll say by the way, That there are abun-"dance of Ministers and Princes, that Study 'em, "and even Practise 'em in every Point, who had "Condemn'd and Detested them, before they came "to the Ministry or the Throne. So true it is, "that a Man must be a Prince, or at least a Mi-"nister, to know, I say not the Use, but the ab-"solute Necessity of these Maxims." This is applying to Machiavel, what another had said of Tacitus; (h) "They that accuse him of holding im-"pious Maxims, and opposite to Good-manners, "must pardon me, if I tell them, That never "Politician handled the Rules of State more rea-"sonably than he; and the most Scrupulous who "have blamed them, whilst they were Private "Persons, have study'd and practis'd 'em, when "they were call'd to the Management of Publick "Affairs." Mr. Amelot, having cited those Words of Mr. de Chanvalon, immediately confirms them by an Example: "Germany, says he (i), has very lately "seen a notable Example of this in the late Bishop "of Vienna, who, when he was only Father Emeric "in purè naturalibus, inveighed in all his Sermons "against the Maxims of Policy, so far as to be-"lieve, there was no Salvation for those who pra-"ctis'd them; but who was no sooner introduc'd "to the Emperor's Court, and drawn into the "Ministry, but he changed his Opinion as his "Fortune, and practis'd himself (but more re-"finedly) whatever he condemn'd before in his "Predecessors, the Princes of Auersberg and Lobkowitz, whose Disgrace he had procured, and in "the Count Augustin of Waldstein his Competitor "for the Bishoprick of Vienna, and the Cardinal-"ship (a).

We must say something of the Work written by Innocent Gentillet, against that of Machiavel: 'Tis call'd, in the Edition I use, (k) A Discourse upon the Means of Well-governing and Maintaining a Kingdom, or other Principality, in good Peace: Divided into Three Books; to wit, concerning the Council, Religion and Policy that a Prince ought to use: Against Nicolas Machiavel a Florentine. 'Tis Dedicated to the Duke of Alençon, Brother to King Henry III. There is neither the Name of the Author nor the Printer to it, nor the Place where it was Printed, but only the Date 1576. This Book is commonly quoted, as if Inticled Anti-Machiavel. This Citation is shorter than that of the true Title, and that was the occasion of this Blame. Consult Mr. (l) Baillet.

I am persuaded, that what I am going to quote from the Sieur de la Popelinière, relates to Gentillet's Treatise. He blames the tolerating this Florentine's Books, filled with pernicious Maxims; and then he adds: "(m) Now since Christian Magistrates "connived at such prejudicial Writings, a general "Wit arose in France, to confute the Errors and "Impieties which he thought too open, and so "countenanc'd by the Generality, but with so "poor a success, that for grounding himself only "on Authorities, and improper Examples, (which "both Sides may use, and which the Florentine "calls ridiculous,) and shewing himself unprovided "of strong Reasons, which are the true Arms, "wherewith he challenges all the World to "combat; the poor Author could obtain no other "Recompense for so much Labour in Defending "the State, the Religion and Duty of All toge-"ther, but Injuries and Menaces, instead of Ho-"nours, and other worldly Salaries, that such a "well-meant and laborious Work deserved." If we judg'd of the Merit of a Book, by the multitude of Editions and Translations, that of Gentillet might pretend to a high degree of Glory; for it has been Translated into divers Languages, and Printed several times. The Edition of Leiden imports, that it had been augmented above One half. The Epistle Dedicatory has been retrenched from it. If we had all the Work Entire, a Part of which was publish'd in the Year 1622. perhaps we should have the best that has been Writ on Machiavel's Prince. This Part, full of Hiatus's, is call'd, Fragmens of the Examination, of Machiavel's Prince; in which 'tis discours'd of Confidants, Ministers, and Private Counsellors of a Prince, as also of the Fortune of his Favourites. 'Tis in 12°, and contains 339 Pages. I have quoted something out of it, in the Article of the Chancellor de l'Hospital. There is a New Latin Edition of Machiavel's Prince publish'd at Amsterdam, in 8°. 1690. Interprete Casparo Langenhert Phi-lologo, qui suas & Commentarios adjecit: He who gives this New Translation, (n) gave it only, because that, we had before, seemed to him to be imperfect.

(F) Possevin, who had not read him, was [illegible] the Cause [illegible] by the Inquisition [illegible] very Edition.

(e) Pro Machiavello inter alios Apologiam scripsit Gasp. Sciopp. in libello Pedia Politices, & Dissertatione adversus Paganinum Gaudentium. Rosius de temperanda prud. Civil. n. 93. apud Magirum Eponymol. p. 552.

(a) Conringius in Præfat. suæ libri de Principe editionis, apud Magirum, p. 554.

(a) Refer to this, these words of the Sieur Naudé, chap. 1. of State-Politicks: To speak of Politicks, as they are handled and practised at this day, without saying any thing of these State-Intreagues, is properly to be ignorant of the Discipline and Method which Aristotle teaches, in his Analytricks, to speak of all things pertinently, and according to the Principles and Demonstrations proper and essential to 'em: Est enim pedissequa insciantia nescire quorum oportet quærere demonstrationem, quorum vero non oportet, as he says in his Metaphysicks.

(b) Conringius Introduct. in Polit. Aristotelis, cap. 3. p. 583. apud Thomasium de Plagio literario, p. 223, 224.

(c) In Præfat. lib. 3. Commentarior adversus Machiavellum.

(d) In chap. 1. p. m. 16.

(e) In his Notes upon Machiavel's Prince.

(f) Amelot de la Houssaye, Preface to Machiavel's Prince.

(i) Che gli Stati non si tenevano con Pater-nostri. Machiavel Hist. 7.

(g) In the Epistle Dedicatory.

(h) Monsieur de Harlai Chanvalon's Preface to the Translation of Tacitus.

(i) In his Critical Discourse before Tacitus's Morals, Printed in 1686. He put it afterwards before his French Translation of the Six First Books of Tacitus's Annals.

(a) In a German Prince's Manuscript Account of the Court of Vienna.

(k) 'Tis in 8vo.

(l) In the 2d Tome of the Anti, p. 129, & seq.

(m) La Popelinière Hist. of Historians, Book 7. p. 405, 406.

(n) Journal des Sçavans, 15th of March, 1700. p. 211. Dutch publish'd Seven Books of the Art of War, which made him pass with the Duke of Urbino for a Man very capable of Drawing up an Army in Battalia; but he was so wise, that he never durst venture to try (G) his Theory, no, not so much as upon one Squadron. They publish'd, a little while ago, (H) a New French Version of the greatest Part of his Works. His Novel of Belphegor, a very ingenious Piece, was Publish'd by Mr. le Fevre of Saumur *, in the Year 1664. There is in the Continuation of the Menagiana † a very curious Remark, about the Trick that Machiavel us'd, in Writing the Life of Castrucio Castracani. This Life was Translated into French, by Monsieur Guillet. 'Tis alledged, (HΔ) That it was unfaithfully Written: And the same Judgment late, before this Tribunal thought of Condemning this Book. Machiavel's Prince was Publish'd about the Year 1515. and Dedicated to Laurence de Medicis, Nephew to Leo X. It did not prejudice the Author with this Pope, who nevertheless was the first that threaten'd those with Excommunication, that read a Prohibited Book. (a) Nec tamen à Papa istiusmodi liber ullo fuit sinistro verbo notatus (quamvis Leo omnium primus intenderit vim librorum prohibitoriam, vetitis legi diffidentium Scriptis omnibus sub excommunicationis pœna, quod hactenus carebat exemplo) vel auctor pristino gratiæ loco motus. Which I observe, to shew, that the Impunity of this Book of Machavel, ought not to be attributed to any general Remisness of Leo's Pontificate, with respect to bad Books. The Pope so little discontinu'd the Expessions of his Friendship to the Author, that he employ'd him in Writing a Book that required Secrecy. He order'd him to Write a Treatise concerning the Reformation of the Republick of Florence. Valuit in tantum apud Leonem, ut hujus jussu arcanam dissertationem concinnaverit de Reformatione Reip. Florentinæ, quam manuscriptam in bibliotheca Gaddiana superesse testatur Jacobus Gaddus (p). Hadrian VI. Successor to Leo X. left Machiavel's Book at rest. Clement VII. Hadrian VIth's Successor, did more; for he not only approv'd of Machiavel's Dedicating his History of Florence to him, but also granted a Priviledge (q) to Antony Bladus to Print this Author's Works at Rome. Clement VIIth's Successors, to Clement VIII. exclusively, permitted the Sale of Machiavel's Prince in all Italy, whereof there were frequent Editions and Translations. It was however known, that this Book did not please some Doctors; for a Book (r) of Ambrose Catharinus, Printed at Rome in 1552. has a Chapter against the Discourses and Prince of Machiavel. At last, under the Pontificate of Clement VIII. the Writings of this Florentine were Condemn'd, after the loud Complaints made at Rome, by the Jesuit Possevin, and a Priest of the Oratory call'd Thomas Bozius: Tho' 'tis certain, that this Jesuit had never read Machiavel's Prince; for if you look into the Judgment (a) he has publish'd of four Writers, Le Noue, Bodin, Du Plessis Mornai, and Machiavel, you will find, that he supposes the Prince, written by the fourth, to be divided into Three Books; which is plainly false: He charges Machiavel with such things as are not in the Prince. Conringius guesses very well, that the Occasion of these Mistakes, was, because Possevin never knew this Work, but by the reading of Gentillet. (b) 'In ea (Dissertatione Possevini) verò 'ita disseritur, quasi à Machiavello tres de Principe 'libri cómpositi sint: hinc statim initio, ubi de 'Machiavello agit, aliquot ejus sententiis enumeratis, 'hæc quidem, inquit ille, sceleratum illud Satanæ 'organum prioribus duobus libris, quibus de Principe 'agit, insipienti mundo obtrusit. Non multò post 'cum diceret: redeo ad easdem labes Machiavelli, 'ut cognita pestis magis caveatur. In margine libri 'notat librum tertium: quasi libro tertio Machiavellus doceat, belli justitiam in ea, quam sibi 'quisque putat esse necessitatem, collocari. At verò certò est certius, non nisi unicum, & quidem exiguum libellum de Principe Machiavello 'auctore esse conscriptum, & nusquam terrarum 'tres in partes illum fuisse sectum, nec in hoc 'libello reperiri ea, quæ inter alia criminatur 'Possevinus, religionem Ethnicam Christianæ præferendam, aut Doctores Christianæ Religionis 'nihili faciendos: ut nec quicquam hoc libro (quod itidem Possevinus conqueritur) inclementius dicitur in Romanam Ecclesiam, sed potiùs 'illud Cap. XI. ipsum principatum Pontificium 'non humanis consiliis atque artibus, sed quidam 'inu[illegible] & quidem solius Dei favore, salvum 'esse [illegible] quisquam Zelotici gregis affirmave[illegible]men longè petenda aut hariolanda [illegible] Possevviniani erroris, modò 'quis inspexerit volumen illud, quod Anti-Machiavelli titulo ἀνώνυμον oppositum, hinc inde ex 'variis libris Machiavellicis excerptis sententiis, 'Innocentius Gentilletus. Hoc enim tres in libros 'est distinctum, & in ejus duobus prioribus repre-'hensa sunt illa, quæ duobus prioribus de principe 'libris haberi Possevinus ridicule affirmat: in 'tertio etiam illorum librorum animadvertitur in 'ea, quæ ex tertio libro de Principe frustra re-'petit (c) Machiavellus. Ut liquidò appareat, ex 'illo volumine Anti-Machiavellico, non autem 'ex Machiavello ipso Possevinum sua accepisse, &c.' See in Marg. (d) the Reflection of Conringius.

* See the Journ. des Savans of the 12th of January, 1665.

† Pag. 96. of the Edition of Holland.

(a) He Wrote it by the Order of Innocent IX. and Publish'd it at Rome, in the Year 1592. He inserted Part of it in his Biblioth. Selecta. Conring. ib. in the same Magirus. ib.

(b) Conring. ib apud eundem, p. 549.

(c) It seems it should be Possevinus, and not Machiavellus.

(d) Et vero illud Possevini facinus luculente ostendit, non desse etiam eximiæ dignitatis atque existimationis viros, qui scripto publico ne inspectum quidem Machiavelli Principem sævo calculo abjecerint. Conring. apud Magirum ib. p. 550.

(e) He was the Son of Peter de Medicis, and Nephew to Leo X.

(f) Cardan. l. 3. de utilit. ex adversi capienda, citante Besoldo de arte jureq; belli, c. 1. p. 3, & 4. apud Thomasium Præfat. 21. pag. 118.

(G) He was so wise, that he never durst venture to try his Theory.] He that knows the War only by Reading, ought to keep only to the Theory; for if he should attempt to practise it upon one Regiment, he would expose himself to the Laughter of the meanest Soldier. Machiavel is to be commended, for refusing to comply with the Duke of Urbino's Will (e): Perhaps we might have been ignorant of this Particular, if Cardan had not mention'd it. Machiavellum sæculi superioris Doctorem quis tot & tanta de militari Romanorum disciplina disertissimè scripserat, ne unam quidem cohortem, quantumvis eum id ut tentaret, Urbini Princeps hortaretur, instruere ausum esse Cardanus testatur (f).

(H) A New French Version.] The Sieur Henry Desbordes, a French Bookseller at Amsterdam, Printed it in Six Volumes in 12's. The First appear'd in the Year 1691. and contain'd the two first Books of Discourses upon Livy. The third Book of these Discourses made the 2d Tome, and appear'd in the Year 1692. The Art of War was Printed in the Year 1693. The History of Florence was Printed in 2 Vol. in 1694. And the Prince, and some of the Tracts, in 1696. This last Book was Translated, tho' Mr. Amelot de la Houssaie had Publish'd it in French a few Years before: I say, that notwithstanding this, it was Translated, because it was believ'd, the Publick would be glad to have the whole Body of the Florentine's Work from the same Hand. They deserv'd to be Translated a-new into our Language, because the Old Version was grown obsolete. I have seen an Edition of Paris, later than the Year 1630. but it was a New Edition, for in it are found some French Verses written by Des Essars the Translator of Amadis. Mr. de Beauval (g) has told us the Name (h) of him who made the New Version of Machiavel, and who has prefix'd to the First Volume a Preface (i) which deserves to be read; it is an Apology for Machiavel, and it treats the Inquisition as it deserves. The Version wherein are the Verses of Des Essars, is doubtless James Gohory's. It contains the Treatise of the Prince, and the Discourses upon Livy, and was Printed at Paris in 1571. in 8vo. This was a 2d Edition, Revis'd very carefully, and much better than the former. The Author did not put his Name to the 1st but to the 2d, lest one of the two Translators of the Prince should rob him of the Translation of the Discourses upon Livy (k). 'Tis said, (l) That Machiavel's Prince was done into Turkish, and read by Sultan Amurath the Fourth, in that Language.

(HΔ) That the Life of Castrucio Castracani was Written unfaithfully.] Vossius touches upon this in

(g) Hist. of the Works of the Learned, Jul. 1691. p. 483.

(h) 'Tis Mr. Tetard a French Refugee and Physician at the Hague. He is of Blois, of the Family of Mr. Tetard Minister of Blois, who is often mention'd in the Synods of France, at the time of the Disputes of Saumur, about Universal Grace.

(i) See Mr. de Beauval, ib. and the Universal Bibliotheque, tom. 20. p. 328. Mr. Beughem Bibliographiæ Consp. 2. p. 192. is mistaken, when he says, the Translation mention'd in Bibloth. Univers. ib. is Mr. Amelot's.

(k) See the Epistle Dedicatory of the Prince, and that of the Discourses on Livy, Translated by Gohory.

(l) Sagredo, Historical Memoirs of the Ottoman Empire. This Book was Printed at Venice in 1673.

ment θ is made of his (I) History of Florence. You will find hereafter some Stories (IΔ) concerning his Impiety. There are some that say ∫ he serv'd Cæsar Borgia as his Favourite-Counseller β; and perhaps he was employ'd for him in France, when he had at Nants that Conversation with the Cardinal of Rouen, which he mentions in the 3d Chapter of his Prince.

θ Jovius, as above, p. 205.

∫ Bosius de Compar. Prud. Civ. n. 42.

β Conring. Præfat. Principis Machiavelli.

Those who say, that in that Work he design'd to represent (K) Charles V. [illegible] him grossly. 'Tis said, It was a Book that Catherine de Medicis made her peculiar Study, (L) and that she put it into the hands of her Children: Those who make this Observation, join with it many Words of Reproach both to this Queen and to Nicolas Machiavel. There are very few Authors who speak of him * without curs[illegible] his Memory. Some excuse him, and set up † for his Defenders; and there are also some who look upon him a few words: Machiavellus, says he (m), plane multa commiscitur in vita Castrucii: nempe quia is hostis fuisset Reipublicæ Florentinæ. Paulus Jovius complains briskly of the Fraud of Machiavel, in his Elogium of Nicolas Tegrimus a Lawyer and Historian of Lucca, who described very exactly the Actions of Castracani. (n) Sed Machiavellus Florentinus Historicus, patrii veteris odii memor, petulanti malignitate, non interituram memorabilis Ducis famam fabulis involvit, quum vitam acerrimi hostis Etrusco sermone scribere orsus, tam impudenti, quàm astuto illudendi genere, sacrosanctam rerum gesturum fidem corruperit.

* See Clasen in th. 9. of his Treatise of Politick Religion, pag. 162. edit. 1682.

† See the Remarks D & E.

(m) Vossius de Arte Histor. c. 10. p. 56.

(n) Jovius Elog. cap. 141. p. m. 283.

(I) Of his History of Florence.] I have already (o) mention'd this Work; and I add, That Jerom Turlerus a German Lawyer, Printed the First Book of it, in 1564. He rendred it into Latin: And because Machiavel, in the First Part of that Work, explain'd the Revolutions of the Roman Empire, by the Irruptions of the Barbarous Nations, the Translator takes an Occasion to Write an Epistle Dedicatory, stuff'd with Astrological and Numerical Mysteries, which make the Mahometan Religion to cease at the end of an Hundred Years, and points out the Time (p) of the End of the World. Lazarus Zetznerus a Bookseller of Strasburg, seeing that the Latin Version of the First Book sold well, and was often Reprinted, caus'd the rest to be done into the same Language, and Publish'd the whole History, with the Life of Castracani. The Edition that I use was in 1610. in 8vo.

(o) In the Remark D.

(p) Centro excentrici ad alterum terminum mediocrem pervenientes, speranus ad-fururum Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum, nam hoc loco circa creationem mundi fuit.

James Gohory says, "That this History of Florence "(q) was Written in such Perfection, that the deceased Milles Perrot, Treasurer, my near Kinsman, "(the most learned Person of his Time in this "Kingdom in divers Languages and Sciences) "having noted it more carefully with his own "Hand, than his Livy and C. Tacitus, told me, That "it was so fitted to the Humour of our Times, "that he esteem'd the reading of it more profitable, than of the great ancient Historians, so "different from our present Manners, Fashions "and Customs.

(q) Gohory Epist. Dedicat. of the Discourses upon Livy.

(IΔ) Some Stories concerning his Impiety.] If I should relate all those which are publish'd about it, I should have a large Field. Here follows one of those Stories: (a) "One comes to that detestable Point of Honour, as Machiavel did "when he drew near the time of his Death; for "he had this Illusion a little before he gave up "the Ghost: He saw a Company of poor People "like Beggars, tatter'd, half-starv'd, deform'd, "as being much disorder'd, and the Number was "but small: And it was told him, That those "belong'd to Paradise, of whom it was written, "Blessed are the poor, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. When these retir'd, there appear'd an "innumerable Company of Persons full of Gravity "and Majesty; they look'd like a Senate, where "State-Affairs and very serious Matters were "treated of: There was an Interview of Plato, "Seneca, Plutarch, Tacitus, and others of the same "Condition: He ask'd who these venerable Gentlemen were? and he was told, That they "were the Damn'd, and the Souls reprobated by "Heaven; for, the wisdom of the world is enmity "with God. This Vision being ended, he was "ask'd, which of these Companies he would be "of? He answer'd, That he would rather be in "Hell with these great Wits, to Consult with them "about State-Affairs, than be with this Vermin of "Beggars that had been shewn him. And presently "he died, and went to see how the State-Affairs "went in the other World." Spizelius (b) relates the same Story in Substance. There are some that tell this Story another way: They pretend that Machiavel said, in one of his Works, "That he "had rather be sent to Hell after his Death, "than go to Paradise; for, added he, I shall "find none in Paradise but Beggars and poor "Monks and Hermits, and Apostles; but in "Hell I shall live with Popes and Cardinals, and "with Kings and Princes. Francis Hotman (c) testifies, that this may be read in the Commentaries of Wolfius, upon the Quæstiones Tusculanæ of Cicero, and he is very sorry, that, notwithstanding these Blasphemies, and many others, an Impression of Machiavel's Works, Translated by a Professor call'd Stupanus, should be allow'd at Basil. He observes, That Perna, who had been many times Imprison'd by Order of the Magistrates, for having Printed divers impious and execrable Books, Printed this Translation. Hotman makes this, and some other curious Things, in a Letter dated December 25. 1580.

(a) Binet, of the Salvation of Origen, p. 359, &c.

(b) Spizelius in Scrutinio Atheismi Historico Ætiologico, pag. m. 132. He cites Jac. Marchant in Hort. Pastor. tract. 1. lect. 6. propos. 2.

(c) Franc. Hotoman. Epist. 99. p. 139.

(K) He design'd to represent Charles V. abuse him grossly. I am astonish'd that James Gohory has publish'd this Fancy. "Machiavel, says he (d), wrote "a Book of a Prince, in which he describes particularly all the Offices of a Lord that aspires to "Monarchy, and secretly represents Charles V. "then Reigning, as he declares in one Passage of "it." How came he to be ignorant, that this Book was Written, before it was known whether Charles V. should acquire a great Reputation? Had he not read in the 21st Chapter, that Ferdinand King of Arragon was alive when Machiavel wrote this Book? Had he not read in (e) another Place, that the Author speaks of the Emperor Maximilian, as a Prince then alive? Did he not know that that Emperor Died in January, 1519. three Years after Ferdinand, and that then his Grand-child Charles V. was not full Nineteen Years old?

(d) Gohory, in the Life of Machiavel, before his Translation of the Treatise of the Prince.

(e) [illegible] chap. 23.

(L) That Catherine de Medicis made it her peculiar Study, and put it into the hands of her Children.] The Author of the Alarm against Massacres, (f) observes, That Charles IX. had been very ill Educated, and that he was kept in ignorance of these Lessons in Scripture, (g) "That a King, who is set "over the People of God, ought not to lift up his heart "above his brethren, but should diligently observe the Law "of the Lord, and read and meditate on it all the days of "his life ——— (g) "On the contrary, the Queen "caus'd her Children to be instructed in those "Precepts that were more proper for a Tyrant "than a Vertuous King, and to be taught not "only the foolish Fancies of Perceforest, but chiefly "to study the Maxims of this Atheist Machiavel, "whose Design was rather to teach a Prince how "to make himself fear'd than belov'd, and to "Reign in Grandeur, rather than to Reign Well. "And indeed this Book may very well be call'd "the Gospel of the Queen-Mother; for tho' she "cloak'd her self with the Religion commonly "receiv'd, yet it appears by her Actions, that she "car'd for it no further than was necessary for "her own Defence. And so her chief Counseller "Morviliers had always this brave and Christian "Book in his Hand, to read a Lesson out of it "to his Mistress, and never forsook it, no more "than Alexander did his Homer. In short, 'tis probable, that this Institution of [illegible] was "taken in part from hence; and [illegible] Queen "drew hence her principal Arti[illegible] persuade "the King, that, notwithstanding all the Promises "of Peace and Friendship, and the Ties of Con[illegible]unity, he might take a furious Revenge of "[illegible] whom he esteem'd his Enemies, by "[illegible] hold of any slight Suspicion, [illegible] that "[illegible] be call'd a Suspicion, which a C[illegible]ny is "forg'd at pleasure) for a sufficient Proof." Davila relates, That Corbinelli re[illegible] the Prince and the Discourses of Machi[illegible]ke of Anjou, who was afterward[illegible] Third.

(f) Alarm against Massacres, p. 53.

(g) Deut. 17. 19, 20.

(g) Alarm, p. 54.

him as a Writer of great Zeal for the Publick Good (M), and think that he repreſented the Arts of Policy, for no other End but to inſpire Men with Horrour againſt Tyrants, and to excite all People to maintain their Liberty. If any Queſtion ſhould be made, what was his true Motive; it ought at leaſt to be acknowledg'd, that he ſhow'd himſelf, in his Co[illegible] (N) inſpired with a Republican Spirit. One of the lateſt of his Antagoniſts is [illegible]er Lucchefivi an Italian Jeſuit, a Conſultor to the Congregation of Rites. See his † [illegible]io della Sciochezza di Nicolo Macchiavelli, Printed at Rome in 1697. The Author of [illegible] Appendix to the Treatiſe de Literatorum Infelicitate, has plac'd Machiavel in his * Cat[illegible]e, and was not to blame for it, for this Florentine was perſecuted with bad Fortune [illegible]ell as others.

† See the Journal of Leipſick, 1698. p. 352. which has given us an Abſtract of it.

* See Cornel. Tollius in Append. ad Pierium Valerianum, p. 20, 21.

MACON, a City of France upon the Saone, in the Dutchy of Burgundy. Cæſar [a] mentions it, and calls it Matiſco. The Tables of Peutinger and the Itinerary of Æthicus mention it alſo; but Strabo and Ptolemy ſay nothing of it. About 500 Years ago, by an ordinary tranſpoſition of letters, Matiſco was chang'd into Maſtico, from whence came the Name Maſcon, which is now pronounc'd Macon [γ]. This City was treated cruelly, by the Tumults which the Wars about Religion produc'd in France in the Sixteenth Century. The Reformed ſet up there [δ] a Church in 1560, and they multiplied there ſo faſt, that they eaſily made themſelves Maſters of the City [ε], when the Maſſacre at Waſſi oblig'd them to look after their own Safety. It was about the beginning of May, 1562. that they made themſelves Maſters of it, without much Violence or effuſion of Blood. About three Days after, they heard, that the Images were broken down in the City of Lyons, and it was impoſſible for the Miniſters and Elders of the City to hinder the Common People from doing the like there, and from that time the Exerciſe of the Roman Religion was ſuppreſs'd there. Tavanes endeavour'd many times to retake this C[illegible] without ſucceſs; but at laſt, having got ſecret Intelligence, he ſurpriz'd it [ζ], A[illegible]. 1562. He made himſelf Maſter of it, after ſome hot Skirmiſhes

[a] De Bel. Gal. l. 7.

[γ] Hadr. Valeſius notit. Gal. p. 322, 323.

[δ] Bez. Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 3. p. 214.

[ε] Id. l. 15. p. 407.

[ζ] Ibid. p. 422.

(M) Who look upon him as a Writer of great Zeal for the Publick Good.] This ſavours a little of a Paradox, and therefore we muſt ſet down at ſome length, the very Words of a famous Civilian, who judg'd ſo advantageouſly of Machiavel's Deſign: To which I ſhall ſubjoin a kind of a Preface borrow'd from another learned Man, that ſo at once I may produce two conſiderable Witneſſes, Albericus Gentilis, and Chriſtopher-Adam Rupert. (i) Ego vero non poſſum hic præterire, qui cane pejus & angue odiſſe [illegible] conceptas de autoribus opiniones, accuratiſſimi illi [illegible]diguiſſimi cenſoris judicium, l. 3. de Legationib. [illegible]. ubi legatum ſuum ex Philoſophia inſtruens. Nec [illegible]ro, inquit, in negotio iſto vereor omnium præſtantiſſimum dicere, & ad imitandum proponere Machiavellum, ejuſque plane aureas in Livium obſervationes. Quod [illegible]unque hominem indoctiſſimum eſſe volunt & ſceleſtiſſimum, id nihil ad me, qui prudentiam ejus ſingularem laudo, nec impietatem ac improbitatem, ſi qua eſt, tueor. Quanquam ſi librum editum adverſus illum conſidero, ſi Machiavelli conditionem reſpicio, ſi propoſitum ſcribendi ſuum rectè cenſeo, ſi etiam [illegible]ioni interpretatione volo dicta ipſius adjuvare, non [illegible]idem video cur & iis criminibus mortui hominis [illegible] liberari non poſſit. Qui in illum ſcripſit (intelligit Innocentium Gentilletum Ictum Delphinenſem) illum nec intellexit, nec non in multis calumniatus eſt, & talis omninò eſt qualis, qui miſeratione dignißimus ſit. Machiavellus Democratiæ laudator & aſſertor acerrimus: natus, educatus, honoratus in eo Reip. ſtatu; Tyrannidis ſumme inimicus. Itaque Tyranno non favet; ſui propoſiti non eſt Tyrannum inſtruere, ſed arcanis ejus palàm factis ipſum miſeris populis nudum & conſpicuum exhibere. An enim tales, quales ipſe deſcribit principes, fuiſſe plurimos ignoramus? Eccur iſtiuſmodi principibus moleſtum eſt, vivere hominis operâ, & in luce haberi. Hoc fuit viri omnium præſtantiſſimi conſilium, ut ſub ſpecie principalis eruditionis populos erudiret. Hæc Albericus Gentilis. Let us lengthen out a little the Paſſage; for it ſeems to me, that Rupert has ſuppreſs'd one part of it, which deſerves to be known, which is as follows: (k) Et eam ſpeciem prætexuit, ut ſpes eſſet cur ferretur ab his qui rerum gubernacula tenent, quaſi ipſorum educator, ac pad[illegible] Cæterùm hæc diſceptatio ulterius haud ducitur [illegible] favere ſcriptoribus volumus, multa & in hoc [illegible]undabimus: aut illa ſaltem feremus in eo, quæ [illegible]Platone ferimus, & Ariſtotele, aliiſque, qui non diſſimilia commiſere peccata. Feremus autem, qui meliora deterioribus longe plurima & is habet. There are two things to be conſider'd in this laſt [illegible] of the Paſſage of Albericus Gentilis. 1. He [illegible], that Machiavel took this Courſe for inſtructing the People, that Princes might permit his Book to be Sold; which they would not have done, if they ha[illegible]ſider'd him as their Pedagogue, but a[illegible]r Liberty. 2. That this ought [illegible]iavel, which was excuſed [illegible]erve, that Leonclavius was very far from the Opinion of Albericus Gentilis. See the Epiſt. Ded. (l) which he prefix'd to the Diſcourſes of Princes, written by Beliſarius Aquaviva.

(i) Chriſtoph. Adamus Rupertus Differt. ad Valer. Maxim. l. 1. c. 2, 3. p. 50.

(k) Alberic. Gentilis de Legationibus, l. 3. c. 9.

(l) Keckerman alleges what is contain'd in it to the diſadvantage of Machiavel. See Mr. Crenius Method. Stud. part 2. p. 194.

(N) He ſhow'd himſelf, in his Conduct, inſpir'd with a Republican Spirit.] Mr. Amelot de la Houſſaie ſhall be my Commentator. (a) "I muſt ſay, that Machiavel, who paſs'd every-where for a Teacher "of Tyranny, deteſted it more than any Man of "his time, as may eaſily appear by the 10th Chap-"ter of the 1ſt Book of his Diſcourſes, where he "diſcourſeth very briskly againſt Tyrants. And "Nardi (1) his Cotemporary ſays, he made Pane-"gyricks upon Liberty, and upon Cardinal Julius "de Medicis, who, after the Death of Leo X. pre-"tended he would reſtore it to his own Country; "and that he was ſuſpected to be an Accomplice in "the Conſpiracy of Jacopo da Diacetto, Zanobi Buon-"delmonti, Luigi Alamanus, and Coſimo Rucellai, "againſt this Cardinal, upon the account of the "cloſe Correſpondence he had with them and other "Libertines. (So the Partizans of the Medicis (2) "call'd thoſe who would maintain the Liberty of "Florence) and probably this Suſpicion depriv'd "him of a Reward for his Hiſtory of Florence, "which he wrote by the Command of the ſame "Cardinal, as he obſerves at the very beg[illegible]ning "of his Epiſtle Dedicatory.

(a) Amelot. de la Houſſaie in his Preface to the Tranſlation of the Prince, towards the end.

(O) He was perſecuted with bad fortune as well as others.] If I ſet down a longer Paſſage of James Gohory than my Deſign ſeems to require, it is to obſerve in him a very groſs Miſtake. (b) "Thus "he was neither greatly ſupported, nor enrich'd "by the Princes and Lords of his Time, ſuch as "Pope Clement VII. to whom he Dedicated his "Hiſtory of Florence; nor by the Noble Laurence "de Medicis, to whom he ſent his Prince, who "reſtor'd the Golden Age of Learning in Italy, "being the Patron and Defender of all Learned "Men, ſuch as Marſilius Ficinus, who Dedicated "to him his Tranſlations and Commentaries "upon Plato, Angelus Politianus, Hieronymus Dona-"tus, and many others, whoſe Epiſtles may be "ſeen in the Collection, entituled, Epiſtolæ Viro-"rum Illuſtrium. Machiavel complains of it to him, "imploring tacitly his Aſſiſtance in the Dedi-"cation of his Prince, in theſe Terms: Et ſe "voſtra magnificenza d'all'apice della ſua altezza, "qualche volta volgera gli occhi in queſti luoghi baſſi, "cognoſcera quanto indignamente io ſopporti una grande "& continoua malignità di fortuna." Theſe words in Italick were thus tranſlated by Mr. Amelot: "And if you will look down ſome-"times from the high Station in which you are "plac'd, you may perceive how wrongfully I "ſuffer ſo great and ſo long a Perſecution of "Fortune." The groſs Error of Gohory was this, that he believ'd Laurence de Medicis the Patron of Poliſian,

(1) Hiſt. Flor. l. 3.

(2) Ibid.

(b) Gohory in the Life of Machiavel.

miſhes which he had with the Inhabitants in the Streets. Then (A) all ſorts of Rob-beries and Barbarities were committed, and the (B) Cruelties * of Macon, which I promis'd elſewhere † to diſcourſe of here. I will now perform my Promiſe; and at the ſame time it will appear why I mention theſe terrible Tumults in divers Places of this

* Call'd Sauteries, becauſe the Reform'd were forc'd to leap into the River Saone.

† In the Remark C. of the Artic. Beaumont.

Politian, &c. was the ſame Lawrence to whom Machiavel Dedicated his Prince; whereas this laſt Lawrence was the Grand-ſon of the other.

(A) All ſorts of Robberies.] After the Houſes of the Reform'd had been "ſo well gutted (c) that "there ſeem'd to be nothing left in them, Madam "de Tavanes knew ſo well how to diſcover the "hidden Treaſures in her cunning way, that for "her Part of the Spoil, ſhe had about 180 Trunks "full of it; beſides the Yarn Stuffs, all ſorts of "Linen, as Bed-Cloaths, Table-Cloths and Napkins, "wherewith Macon was reputed to be better fur-"niſh'd than any other City in France. As to the "Ranſoms, Rings, Utenſils, and other Trinkets; "the Value is not known, but only ſo far, that "thoſe who had the Management of ſuch Affairs, "ſaid to their Friends, That Tavanes got there, as "much as would have purchas'd 10000 Livres a "Year." After this it is not to be wondered, that the great Lords fomented the Diviſions, and encreas'd, as much as they could, the Flames of Perſecution; for it was their time of getting Money, and how-ever bitter to others, very gainful to them.

(c) Bez. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. lib. 15. p. 429.

(d) Bez. ib. p. 429.

(e) He had ſaid, pag. 424. That the Whores of the Prieſts, who had been driven away before, return'd the ſame day it was taken, and ſerv'd theſe cruel Men to ſhew them the Houſes of the Reform'd, and chiefly of thoſe who had driven them away.

(B) The Cruelties of Macon.] I ſhall uſe the very Words of the Hiſtorian, quoted in the preceding Remark. (d) "The Exerciſe of the Romiſh Reli-"gion was preſently reſtor'd there, and the "Prieſts and Monks return'd to their former "State, together with (e) the brothel Houſes. "To compleat all the Misfortunes, St. Poinct (f) "(a Man of a Sanguinary and cruel Temper, "whoſe Mother had declar'd in open Court to "clear her Conſcience, that he was the Son of a "Prieſt whom ſhe nam'd) was left by Tavanes, "Governour of the City, who for his Paſtime, af-"ter he had feaſted the Ladies, was us'd to ask "whether the Farce, which was call'd the Farce "of St. Poinct, was ready to be acted. This was, "as it were, the Watch Word, by which his Peo-"ple were wont to bring out of Priſon One or "Two Priſoners, and ſometimes more, whom "they carry'd to the Bridge of the Soane; and "when they had appear'd there with their Wives, "after he had ask'd them ſome pretty and pleaſant "Queſtions, he caus'd them to be thrown down "headlong and drown'd in the River. It was al-"ſo an uſual Thing to give falſe Alarms, and "upon that Pretence to drown or ſhoot ſome Pri-"ſoner, or any other whom he could catch of the "reform'd Religion, charging them with a De-"ſign to betray the City." He was kill'd by one Achon, with whom he quarrel'd, as he was return-ing from his Houſe near the City, whither he had car-ried about 20000 Crowns of Pillage. It was a little after the Pacification of the Month of March, 1563. D'Aubigne (g) admirably deſcribes the Bar-barity of the Man, under the Picture of a School, wherein, during the laſt Service at Table, while the Fruit and Sweet-meats are eating, the young Men and Maids were taught to ſee the Huguenots put to Death without Pity. He ſays elſewhere, (h) That St. Pont made himſelf merry at the execution of his Cruelties, and that when his Gueſts departed from the Feaſts he had made them, he entertain'd the Ladies with the pleaſure of ſeeing ſome part of a Bridge blown down. The Conduct of this Governour was much more cruel than that of Livius Flaminius, who (i) gave Order, during the time of Dinner, that a Criminal ſhould be put to Death in his preſence, to pleaſe the Object of his infamous Amours, who had never ſeen any Perſon kill'd. But on the other ſide, the Conduct of theſe Ladies was much more to be blam'd, than that of the Veſtals, whom a (k) Chriſtian Poet has ſo much cenſur'd, for the pleaſure they took in ſeeing the Gladiators kill'd. I doubt not but St. Poinct alledg'd in his excuſe, the drowning of the Soldiers (a) of Montbriſon by Des Adrets; as the latter excus'd himſelf, on the Cruelties that were exercis'd at Orange. And thus you ſee how one bad Example draws on ano-ther, almoſt without end: Abyſſus abyſſum invocat. Wherefore the greateſt fault is in thoſe who begin; they ſhould be puniſhed for all the Crimes which follow theirs. D'Aubigne had not well conſulted the Dates, when he ſays, (b) That the Baron des Adrets, being offended with the Sacking of Orange, and the throwing Men headlong at Macon, march'd to Pierrelate, made himſelf Maſter of many Cities, and at laſt came to Montbriſon. For it appears by Theodorus Beza, (c) that Pierrelate and other Cities had been ſubdu'd by des Adrets before the 26th of June, and that the Soldiers of Montbriſon were thrown headlong (d) the 16th of July, and that Macon was taken by (e) Tavanes the 19th of Auguſt.

(c) Lib. 12. p. 265, 269.

(d) P. 229.

(e) P. 422.

(f) Ma-ſcardi's Diſcourſe upon Hi-ſtory.

(C) Why I mention theſe terrible Tumults.] For the Honour of the French Nation, and of Chriſtianity, it were to be wiſh'd that the Memory of theſe Inhumanities had been utterly aboliſh'd, and that all the Books which mention them had been thrown into the Fire. Thoſe who ſeem to find fault with Hiſtories, becauſe (f) ſay they, they ſerve only to teach the Readers all ſorts of Crimes, have certainly much reaſon to ſay ſo, with reſpect to the Hiſtory of Religious Wars: For it appears extremely proper to nouriſh in the Minds of Men an irreconcilable Hatred. It aſtoniſhes me to ſee that the French of different Religions, have liv'd, ſince the Edicts, in ſo much Brotherly Love, though they had continually in their hands the Hiſtories of our Civil Wars, where they meet with nothing but Sacking of Towns, Profanation of Holy Things, Maſ-ſacres, Overturning of Altars, Aſſaſſinations, Per-juries, and furious Actions. This good Cor-reſpondence had been leſs worthy of Admira-tion, if all private Perſons had been ignorant of the Stories which each Party object to one ano-ther. May it not therefore be ſaid to me, That I ſeem to have a deſign to revive the Paſſions of Men, and to maintain the Fire of Hatred, by ſpreading every-where in my Work the cruelleſt Actions that the Hiſtory of the XVIth Age men-tions? An Age abominable, and, in Compariſon of which, the preſent Generation might paſs for the Golden Age, altho' it be much a Stranger to true Vertue. 'Tis fit that I ſhould ſatisfie this Ob-jection. I ſay then, That I am ſo far from having any Deſign to excite in the breaſts of my Readers theſe Storms of Wrath, that I ſhould willingly agree, that this ſort of Events ſhould never be remembred, provided that by this means every one would learn better things, and do his Duty better, without indulging his Paſſions. But I ought not to forget, that as every thing has two Han-dles, ſo it were to be wiſh'd, for three Reaſons, that the Memory of theſe terrible Tumults were carefully preſerv'd: Three ſorts of Perſons ought to view them every day, and conſider them well. Thoſe that Govern, ſhould employ a Page every Morning, to tell them, Torment no Body for his Opinions in Religion, and never draw the Sword againſt Conſcience. See what Charles IX. and his Succeſſor have got by it, 'tis a Miracle indeed, that the French Monarchy was not deſtroy'd by the Catholick Religion. Such Miracles do not happen every day; do not truſt to them. Some would not ſuffer the Edict of January to remain; and after more than thirty Years Deſolation, and a Tor-rent of Blood, and many Thouſand Perjuries and Con-flagrations, another more favourable was granted to them. Thoſe who Govern Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, are the Second ſort of People who ought to remember well the XVIth Century. When they hear any ſpeak of Toleration, they fancy they hear a moſt frightful and monſtrous Opinion; and to engage the Secular Power to juſtifie their Paſſions, they cry, That this is to de-prive the Magiſtrates of the beſt Flower of the Crown, if they are not allowed at leaſt to impriſon and baniſh Hereticks. But if they would duly conſider what is to be fear'd from a War for Religion, they would be more Mode-rate. You will not (may one ſay) that this Sect ſhould Pray to God in its own Way, nor Preach its Opi-nions; but take heed, if you come to an open War, leſt, inſtead of Speaking or Writing againſt your Opinion, they overturn your Temples, and endanger your own Perſons. What have you gain'd in [illegible] Holland, by adviſing Perſecution? That ſide is the great Numbers. Your Sovereigns have Neighbours, and conſequently

WHO thoſe are that ought carefully to conſider the Miſ-chiefs which are pro-duced by Civil Wars, for Religion.

(a) See the Article Beaumont, Remark C.

(b) Tome 1. p. 224.

this Work. The Memory of these Cruelties † have been render'd more immortal than those of the Isle of Caprea (D).

† In the Remark C. of the Article Beaumont.

MACRIN (Salmon) one of the best Latin Poets of the 16th Century, was of Loudun. What Thuanus has said of him, and Mr. Teissier in his Additions, is in every Body's hands since the Edition of Utrecht: Thither therefore I referr my Reader, and shall only take notice of one thing very singular (A), but a little doubtful, which Mr. Varillas had learned of Mr. Bouillaud. 'Tis said that Macrin (B) is not the Name of the Family of our Poet.

MACRO (Nævius Sertorius) purchas'd a great Authority under the Empire of Tiberius. He was one of the Chief Instruments of the Ruine of Sejanus, and was his Successor in the Office of Captain of the Guards ‡. He was excellent for Contrivance, and chiefly when he design'd (A) to destroy an Enemy. He refused the Honours which were decree'd him by the Senate after the Death of Sejanus *, and I think that ‡ Dio 58. m. 718.

* Id. ib. p. 722.

(g) Illi robur & æs triplex Circa pectus erat qui fragilem truci Commisit pelago ratem Primus, nec timuit præcipitem Africum Decertantem Aquilonibus, Nec tristeis Hyadas, nec rabiem Noti. . . . . Quem mortis timuit gradum, Qui siccis oculis monstra natantia, Qui vidit mare turgidum & Infameis scopulos Acroceraunia? Horat. Od. 3. lib. 1.

(h) 'Tis probable that the French and Spaniards would not have shed so much Blood of the Protestants, if they had not been enrag'd by the overthrowing of their Altars, Images, Reliques, &c.

(i) Suetonius in Tiberio, c 62.

(k) That's to say Marot.

consequently your Sectaries will not want Protectors and Assistants, tho' they were Turks. In fine, let these turbulent Divines, who take so much Pleasure in Innovations, continually view the Religious Wars of the 16th Century. The Reformers were the innocent Cause of them, for, according to their Principles, there was no Medium. They must either suffer the Papists to be damned eternally, or convert them to Protestantism. But that People who are perswaded that an Error does not damn at all, should have no regard to Possession, and had rather disturb the Publick Peace, than suppress their own private Opinions, is a Thing that cannot be too much detested. Let them consider the Consequences of their Novelties, and then if they can go about such a Thing without an absolute necessity, they must have the Soul of a Tyger; a more brazen Heart than he, who first ventured his Life in a Ship (g). There is no probability, that any Party should arise among the Protestants, to reform their Religion after the same Manner as they reform'd the Romish Church; i. e. upon such a foot, that if they will not reform Religion, it must necessarily follow, they will be damned: And so the Disorders that might be fear'd from any innovating Party, would be less terrible than those of the last Century; the Animosities would be less violent than at that time, especially, since none of the Parties could destroy any sensible Object of Superstition in the other; there would be no Topical Deities, nor Tutelar Saints, to be broken, or trampled upon; no Reliques to be thrown away, no Pixes or Altars to be overturn'd. (h) There might therefore be some differences between Protestant and Protestant, without fearing all the Outrages that appear'd in the Quarrels between Protestant and Catholick; but still the Mischief would be so deadly, as to deserve our Endeavours to prevent it, by representing to those who are too much addicted to Disputes, the horrible confusions they have produc'd, and that the most fatal Intolerance does not proceed from Sovereigns, who use the Right of the Sword, against Sectaries, but from those private Doctors who, without a very urgent Necessity, rise up against those Errors which have been by care and custom protected, and who obstinately fight against them, at the same time they see all actually in Flames.

(D) Of the Isle of Caprea.] And yet a famous Historian has inserted them in his Work; and the Place was shown as one of the Curiosities of the Isle. (i) Carnificinæ ejus (Tiberii) ostenditur locus Capreis, unde damnatos post longa & exquisita tormenta præcipitari coram se in mare jubebat, excipiente classiariorum manu & cautis atque remis elidente cadavera, ne cui reliqui spiritus quidquam inesset. But in short I do not believe that the Ancients are to be compar'd with the Moderns, in transferring the same things from one Book to another, and so the Cruelties of Nero are to be read in more Places, and have more Monuments for Pledges of their Immortality than those of the Emperor Tiberius. It was not for the Credit of those who made use of such a Punishment in the 16th Century, that they should follow the Steps of such a Tyrant. Some perhaps in reading this may remember the Remarks upon the Article Leucate.

(A) A Thing very singular, but a little doubtful which Mr. Varillas.] "His (k) great Friend of Loudun, who had chang'd his Name from Mitron to "Macrin, Valet de Chambre to the King, a Latin "Poet, and great Imitator of Catullus, as well as "he was, [illegible] unhappy. He was accus'd before the King of being of the new Religion, "and the King threaten'd to hang him, if he was "convicted of it. 'Tis not certain whether he "was guilty or no, but this may be said, that al-"most all the finest Wits inclin'd then to Calvi-"nism. His Majesty's Menace did so terrify Ma-"crin, that he went out of the Louvre, and seeing "at a distance, a Crane, an Instrument which "Wine-Coopers make use of to let down Hog-"sheads of Wine into Cellars, he took it for a "Gibbet, and so went mad and drown'd himself "in the next Pond he met with (a). The Autho-rity of Mr. Bouillaud, a Native of Macon as well as Macrin, and one of the Men that had the great-est Memory, and knew the best the History of Learned Men, gives a great weight to this Story, especially, if we suppose that Mr. Varillas writ down immediately what he had heard from him. On the other side, when I consider that Scevole de Sainte Marthe, a Native of Loudun, and nearer to that time than Mr. Bouillaud, affirms that Salmon Macrin died of old Age at Loudun, whither he retir'd a long while before; (b) 'tis not easy to believe the Account of Varillas; for who can believe that so tragical an Accident should remain unknown to all the Authors who have writ of Macrin, such as Scevole de Sainte Marthe his Countryman, who search'd for Memorials in all Parts, and Thuanus (c) who search'd no less? Let us therefore place this among those things which require a further Enquiry, since the best Authors are not only silent about it, but also give us a Narrative, inconsistent with it.

(a) Varillas Hist. of Heresy Tom. 5. B. 21. p. m. 50, 51. he puts in the Margin, I learn'd these Particulars from the learned Mr. Bouillaud.

(b) Vitæ cœlibis pariter & aulicæ pertæsus, uxorem duxit, ejusque mortua . . . . . amque suis & amicorum versibus . . . commendavit, susceptis ex ea utrisque sexus liberis, domui suæ senio plane confectus occidisset. Summarthanus in elog. lib. 1. p. m. 21. 22.

(B) Macrin was not the Name of the Family of our Poet.] We have already seen that according to Mr. Varillas, he chang'd his Name of Mitron into that of Macrin; but according to Mr. Baillet, (d) he was called John Salmon, and for his Leanness he was often call'd in jest Macrinus by King Francis the First; so that seeing that his Name John did not please his Wife, he laid it aside, and call'd himself always Salmonius Macrinus.

This is found in the Bibliotheque of Vau-privas, and after such a manner as more plainly denotes the Reason why our Macrin, having regard to his Wife, chang'd his Name: "John Salmon, leaving off his proper Name, which happened to be troublesom to him upon the Account of his Wife, took for a proper Name, Salmon, &c.

(d) Judgments on the Poets, To. 3. n. 1293. pag. 258.

(A) When he design'd to destroy an Enemy.] The hatred of Macro was very terrible: Mamercus Scaurus had a sad Experience of it. He was a Man of a bad Life, but Illustrious for his Birth, and a great Orator. Macro attack'd him upon Pretence, that he had written some Verses in a Tragedy which might concern the Conduct of Tiberius. Others accus'd him of Magick and Adultery. He prevented his Condemnation by killing himself, and was encourag'd to do it by his Spouse, who also kill'd her self. Read the Words of Tacitus. (f) Mamercus dein Scaurus rursum postulatur, insignis nobilitate & grandis caussis, vitâ probrosus, nihil hunc amicitia Sejani, sed labefecit haud minus validum ad exitia Macronis odium, qui easdem artes occultiùs exercebat: detuleratque argumentum Tragœdiæ à Scauro scriptæ, additis versibus qui in Tiberium flecterentur. Verum ab Servilio & Cornelio accusatoribus, adulterium Livia, Sexti uxore: quæ incitamentum mortis, & par-ticeps fuit. Dio furnishes us with some Circumstances, which give a light to what concerns the Tragedy wherewith the Emperor was offended. The Title of it was Atreus, and it contain'd the Words of Euripides, which advis'd a Subject (g)

(c) Thuan. lib. 19 sub fin. ad ann. 1557.

(e) Du Verdier, p. 754.

(f) Tacit. Annal. l. 6. c. 20. ad ann. 787.

that Policy had a greater Share in this Refuſal than Modeſty. He took upon him an odious Commiſſion in the Proceſſes which the Delators brought againſt the People; for he preſided when they were put to the Torture in order to diſcover thoſe that were guilty, and to get Witneſſes. After this, the Proofs which he had collected this way, were ſent to the Senate, and the Accuſations of the Delators, ſo that there was nothing left to the Aſſembly, but only the Care of pronouncing the Sentence [a]. It happen'd ſome times that none of the accus'd were abſolv'd; nay, [illegible] were even condemn'd without knowing either by the Letters of Tiberius, or the [illegible]ificates of Macro, about the Depoſitions of the Tortur'd, wherein co[illegible]d their Crime; and no other Rule was obſerv'd, but what ſeem'd to be a[illegible]ble to the Deſires of the Emperor and of his Captain of the Guards [b]. Every [illegible]y ſaw that Macro, uſing ſuch a Conduct, ſtood in need of the Life of the Emperor Tiberius, for he had cauſe to fear the worſt Things under a change of Government. This he was very ſenſible of, and hence it came to paſs, that aſſoon as he reflected upon the Age and Infirmities of the Emperor, he labour'd all he could to gain the good Grace of him who was to ſucceed to the Empire. He made his Court to Caligula, and the better to inſinuate himſelf into his Favour, he made uſe of the cajoling Tricks of his Wife Ennia. (B). He manag'd the Matter ſo well, that ſhe expreſs'd her Love for the young

[a] Id. ib. pag. 727.

[b] Id. ib. pag. 730.

(g) Ἵνα πρὸς τὰς ἀβουλίας αὐτοῦ. Ut ſtultitiam imperantis ferret. Dio lib. 58. p. m. 730.

ject (g) to bear the Folly of his King. Tiberius imagin'd that this piece of Raillery was meant againſt him, and that upon the Account of the Murders he had committed, he was pointed at under the Name of Atreus. I ſhall make of the Author an Ajax, ſaid he; and the Threatning was put in Execution; but inſtead of uſing this Pretence, he accus'd Scaurus of having lain with Livilla (h).

(h) Ex Dione ib.

Let us add another Example of the Power of the Malice of Macro: He bore an Ill-will to Lucius Arruntius, and ſeeing him involv'd in a Proceſs for a State Crime, he laid hold of the Occaſion; he preſided at the Examination of the Witneſſes, and at the Torture of the Slaves, and ſhow'd [illegible] plainly that the Effects of his hatred [illegible] not be avoided, that the Accuſed put [illegible]ſelf to Death without waiting for the deciſion of the Cauſe. Let us ſee what he anſwer'd to thoſe who adviſ'd him to diſpute the Ground. I have liv'd, ſaid he to them, long enough, and I have no good Proſpect from a longer Life: The times will be more unhappy under the Succeſſor of Tiberius, for every thing that's bad is to be fear'd from Caligula, being govern'd by Macro. Tacitus deſcribes this more largely and nobly; let us therefore ſet down here his Words, which will ſerve to know him who is the Subject of this Article. (k) Arruntius cunctationem & moras ſuadentibus amicis: 'Non eadem omnibus decora, reſpondit. 'ſibi ſatis ætatis: neque aliud pœnitendum, quàm 'quòd inter ludibria & pericula anxiam ſenectam 'toleraviſſet, diu Sejano, nunc Macroni, ſemper 'alicui potentium inviſus; non culpâ, ſed ut fla'gitiorum impatiens. Sanè paucos & ſupremos 'Principis dies poſſe vitari; quemadmodum eva'ſurum imminentis juventam. An cùm Tiberius 'poſt tantam rerum experientiam, vi dominatio'nis convulſus & mutatus ſit: C. Cæſarem vix 'finitâ pueritiâ, ignarum omnium, aut peſſimis 'innutritum, meliora capeſſiturum, Macrone duce? 'qui ut deterior ad opprimendum Sejanum dile'ctus, plura per ſcelera Remp. conflictaviſſet. 'Proſpectare jam ſe acrius ſervitium, eoque fugere 'ſimul acta & inſtantia, Hæc vatis in modum dicti'tans, venas reſolvit.' Note that Arruntius and 2 others (l) were accus'd as accomplices of the Conſpiracy of Albucilla, a Woman who was no leſs branded (m) for her unclean Luſts than were the Heroines of Buſſi about 40 Years ago. I believe the Accuſation was founded upon this, That theſe 3 Romans were known to be the Gallants n) of Albucilla; from whence it was probably concluded, That they muſt know of the Conſpiracy, who kept Company with her in a Way of Gallantry. For the moſt part, this way of reaſoning is very good: And if there are ſcarce any Women to be found in Proceſſes for State Crimes, who uſe not ſuch Gallantries; there are likewiſe few to be found, who do not communicate their Plot to their Gallants. The Reaſon of ſuch a Connexion of theſe Matters may be eaſily gueſs'd at, and ſo without much pains it will appear, why the Women who reſemble (o) Hippolita of Arragon Baroneſs of Alby, engage moſt frequently in a Conſpiracy. We muſt not forget that Albucilla would have kill'd her ſelf, but ſhe had not Srength enough to give her ſelf a Deaths-wound (p). Albucilla irrito ictu a ſemet vulnerata, juſſu Senatus in carcerem fertur. Tacitus who informs us, That the Senate caus'd her to be carried into Priſon, does not tell us what became of her. He obſerves, that 'twas ſuppos'd, that almoſt all the Proofs which were ſent againſt the 3 Perſons accuſed, were the Forgeries of [illegible], who was known to be the declared Enemy [illegible]rruntius. (q) Sed teſtimonum interrogationi, tormentis ſervorum Macronem præſediſſe, commentarii ad ſenatum miſſi ferebant: nullaque in eos Imperatoris litera, ſuſpicionem dabant, invalido ac fortaſſe igitur, ficta plerague ob inimicitias Macronis notas in Arruntium. 'Tis probable that Macro behav'd himſelf very unjuſtly in this Affair; but he could not, even by the exact Obſervation of the Methods of the Proceedings at Law, avoid the Suſpicion of having oppreſs'd the Innocent; for when a Monarch, or his Favourites, or Miniſters are hated by the People, 'tis ſcarce ever believ'd, that thoſe whom they puniſh are guilty. This was ſeen in France (r) under the Miniſtry of Cardinal Richelieu.

(l) Cn. Domitius & Vibius Marſus.

(m) Multorum amoribus famoſa Albucilla. Id. ib. cap. 47.

[a] Thus I write in the Year 1706.

(n) Connectebantur ut conſcii & adulteri ejus. Id. ib.

(o) See in the Collection of divers curious Pieces to ſerve for Hiſtory, the Conſpiracy of this Lady againſt the City of Barcelona in Favour of the Catholick King, in the Years 1645, 1646, 1647, & 1648. p. 43. &c. of the Holland edition. 1664.

(p) Tacit. ib. cap. 48.

(q) Id. ib. c. 47.

(r) See above the Remark (Ξ) of the Article Louis the 13th.

(a) Tacit. lib. c. 45. ad ann. 790.

(b) Sueton. in Calig. c. 3.

(c) We muſt read as Caſaubon very well conjectur'd, Nævii Macronis.

(B) He made uſe of the cajoling Tricks of his Wife Ennia.] This is the Opinion of Tacitus. (a) Supremi Tiberio Conſules, Cn. Acerronius, C. Pontius magiſtratum occepere, nimiâ jam potentiâ Macronis: qui gratiam C. Cæſaris numquam ſibi negletam, atriùs indies fovebat, impuleratque poſt mortem Claudiæ, quam nuptam ei retuli, uxorem ſuam Enniam immittendo, amore juvenem inlicere, pactoque matrimonii vincire, nihil abnuentem dum dominationis apiſceretur. But Suetonius tells the Matter in a different Manner: He thinks that Caligula made his Courtſhip to Macro's Spouſe, and that he engag'd her by a Promiſe of Marriage to procure him the good Offices of her Husband. (b) [illegible] (ſpem ſucceſſionis) quo magis confirmaret, amiſ[illegible]a ex partu, Enniam (c) Nævium Macronis uxorem [illegible] tum prætorianis cohortibus præerat, ſollicitavit ad ſtuprum, pollicitus & matrimonium ſuum, ſi potitus Imperio fuiſſet: deque ea re & jurejurando & chirographo cavit. Per hanc inſinuatus Macroni, veneno Tiberium aggreſſus eſt. Dion chooſes rather to follow the Narrative of Tacitus than that of Suetonius; for he ſays (d) that he was enticed by the Husband himſelf to make Love to his Wife. Turn to which ſide you pleaſe, you will meet every where with Probability: Neither will it deſtroy Probability, to ſay that Macro, being more Ambitious than Jealous, mov'd his Wife to catch Caligula in her Snares, and to refuſe him nothing which might be proper to captivate a young unchaſt Prince. If Macro did this, he acted a part which is very common among Courtiers, and thoſe who have a Mind to make their Fortune. One of their Maximes is that which Tireſias told Ulyſſes: (e) Scortator erit, cave te roget. Ultro Penelopen facilis potiori trade. [illegible] Days they would not make a ſhow of [illegible]g (f), but go into another Chamber, if [illegible]w their Mecenas diſpos'd to careſs their [illegible]s. This would be more decent, than what Galba did, who (g) having invited Mecenas, the Favourite of A[illegible] to Supper, and perceiving he began to wink [illegible]s eyes upon his Wife, and to caſt ſome amorous [illegible] upon her, ſuffe[illegible]m to take the Pleaſure [illegible]er, and made as if [illegible]r aſleep. Suppoſe on the other ſide, that [illegible]a, miſtruſting the Intentions of Tiberius, [illegible] being not yet ſure to ſucceed that Emperour, e[illegible] de-bauch the Wife of Macro. and [illegible]

(d) Ἐς ἐρασθῆναι αὐτὸν τῆς γυναικὸς Ἔννιος Θεσσαλικῆς περιποιήσεως. Eum in amorem uxoris ſuæ [illegible]ni[illegible]-ſy[illegible]l-le[illegible] Dio lib. 58. in fine.

(e) Horat. Sat. l. 2. p. m. 231.

(f) Doctus ſpectare lacunar, Doctus & ad calicem vigilanti ſtertere naſo. Juven. Sat. 1. v. 56.

(g) Plut. in Amatorio, p. 759. 760. of Amiot's Tranſlation.

oung Prince, and assur'd him of the Empire, provided he promis'd to Marry her. Tiberius was not ignorant of the Plot, and discover'd his mind sufficiently about it (C), by a Reproach he made to Macron; and indeed he had a mind to overturn the whole Project, but found himself engag'd in so many Difficulties, that he was forc'd to leave it to take its β chance. The Physician Charicles, having told Macro, γ that Tiberius would not live above two Days, he hasten'd to get all things ready to serve the Interest of Caligula. While these things were a-doing, a Report was spread abroad, that the Emperor was dead, and immediately Caligula march'd to take Possession of the Empire. He was encompass'd with many Courtiers, who came in Crowds to wish him much Joy: But all on a sudden the News came that Tiberius was recover'd of the Swooning Fit which was taken for his Death. This News struck the Courtiers of Caligula with a Consternation, so that some of them fled on one side, and others another way, and all of them dissembled as well as they could. As for him, he look'd upon himself as a dead Man, and waited in a profound silence for his last hour: But Macro was so far from being stunn'd at it, that he order'd Tiberius to be Stifled, and all the People to withdraw from him *. Yet neither he, nor his Wife, enjoy'd any long time the Favour they had promis'd themselves under the New Emperor, but were both forc'd to make-away with themselves (D). The Husband had obtain'd a very good † Government, but he knew not how to sweeten the fierce Humour of Caligula.

β See the Remark C.

γ Tacit. Annal. lib. 6. c. 50.

* Ex Tacito, ibid.

† That of Egypt. See Dio, lib. 59. p. 743.

MAETS

he could engage her in his Interest, by a Secret Promise of Marriage, she would oblige her Husband to serve him; is it not a Supposition very probable? The like Conduct has been observ'd a thousand times. Lastly, suppose that Ennia being perswaded that Caligula would succeed Tiberius, endeavour'd to gain his Love, and spar'd nothing which might nourish the Hope of being one Day an Empress, and still we find a great Probability. Nevertheless, I Believe that the Narrative of Tacitus is preferable to that of Suetonius, in spite of Philo who affirms (b), that Macro was ignorant of the Gallantries of his Wife.

(b) See Remark D.

(C) Tiberius - - - - discover'd his mind sufficiently about it, by a Reproach he made to Macro.] You forsake the Setting-Sun, (i) said he to him, and show Respect to the Rising-Sun. This is the way of the World, and 'tis one of the greatest Troubles that attends the old Age of Princes. I will not describe the particular Measures which Tiberius had a mind to take, when he knew the Intrigues of Macro; 'tis sufficient to relate the words of Tacitus: (k) Gnarum hoc Principi; eoque dubitavit de tradenda Republica primum inter nepotes - - - - - Mox incertus animi, fesso corpore, consilium, cui imperat, fato permisit: jactis tamen vocibus per quas intelligeretur providus futurorum: Namque Macroni non abdita ambage, Occidentem ab eo deseri, Orientem spectari exprobravit, &c.

(i) Dio, lib. 58. in fine.

(k) Tacitus, ubi supra, c. 46.

(l) Dio, lib. 59. p. 743.

(m) Tho. Xylander and Leunclavius have translated it; but it had been better translated, Objecto nimirum ei (Macroni) praeter alia eo crimine, quod stuprorum conciliator fuisset.

(D) Were both forc'd to make-away with themselves.] Dion Cassius relating those things which were blam'd in Caligula, does not forget the Ingratitude of the Emperor with respect to Macro and Ennia, which was great, that he reduc'd them to the necessity of killing themselves. He neither remembred the Love that Ennia had for him, nor the Services Macro had done him, which were of so great importance, that by them he was advanc'd to the Throne without a Collegue. And not content to take away his Life, he defam'd him, and made use of such an Accusation as reflected Disgrace chiefly upon his Person; for he declar'd that Macro had serv'd him as a Procurer: (l) Καὶ οἱ αἰσχύνην τινὰ ἐπ' αὐτοῖς τῷ πλήθει μᾶλλον, πρόσχημα πορισάμενος ἐπ' ἐκείνοις τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐπήγαγε. Et ea infamia oneravit cujus ipse maxima in parte futurus esset, objecto nimirum eo crimine quod stuprorum conciliatores fuissent (m). This is in the 59th Book of Dion Cassius: And take notice that this Historian has observ'd, that it is much harsher to force People to make-away with themselves, than to deliver them up to the Executioners. This Observation he makes against Tiberius, That to conceal his being the cause of the Death of the Accused, he obliged them by powerful Motives (n) to prevent their Condemnation, by putting themselves to Death. (o) Προσελάμβανε δὲ τούτου τοὺς ἀνδρώνας ὁ Τιβέριος αὐτοκτονίας γενέσθαι ἵνα μὴ αὐτὸς φανερὸς ἀποκτείνων ἦν. ἄσπερ ἢ πολλῷ δεινότερον ἦν αὐτοκράτορι τινὰ ἀναγκάσαι ἑαυτὸν ἀποθανεῖν ἢ τὸ δημόσιον αὐτὸν ἀποκτεῖναι. Alliciente per haec Tiberio homines ad cupiendam sibi ipsis mortem ne ipse occidisse videretur: quasi vero non longe gravius sit aliquem ad mortem sibi ipsi consciscendam, quam spiculatori eum tradere. Suetonius also relates the different Death of Macro and Ennia [illegible] times of the Emperor. (p) Et [illegible] em, ipsam Enniam adjuteres Imperii quibus - - - - pro meritorum gratia cruenta mors persoluta est. If we did not know Macro but by the Picture which a Jewish Author has given of him, he would be more pitied; for one would take him for a very honest Man, and none of those Ill-qualities which Tacitus and Dion Cassius attribute to him would be known to us.

(n) Those who were Condemn'd did the cruel Death, and all their Goods were confiscated; but the Goods of those who kill'd themselves before the end of their Tryal, were very seldom confiscated. See Dio, ubi supra.

(o) Dio, lib. 58. p. 723.

(p) Sueton. in Calig. c. 26.

Philo has given a Catalogue of the Crimes of Caligula, in which he sets in the first rank the Murder of the Grand-child of Tiberius; and in the second, the Death of Macro. He says, That Tiberius having discover'd, by his Sagacity and Sharpness of Wit, the corrupt Disposition of Caligula, had no desire to leave the Roman Empire to him; but that Macro applied himself so dexterously to remove all his Suspicions, and to make an Apology for this young Prince, that he always prevented the fatal Blow which might exclude him: And when his Reasons did not work powerfully enough, he offer'd himself to be Surety for all that he alledg'd in favour of Caligula. This Promise was of great weight, for he had given very great Proofs of his Zeal for the Imperial Family, and for the Person of Tiberius in particular, when he had a Commission to put Sejanus to Death. What he did for Caligula with Tiberius, equals or surpasses any thing that can be done for a Brother or a Son: And to do this, he was induc'd by two Motives, because he saw that his Friendship was cultivated by Caligula with the greatest Care; and because he had a Wife who continually solliciting him to lose no Occasion of serving and obliging this young Prince. The Author whom I abridge, observes, that the Reason which oblig'd this Woman to lay the Interests of Caligula so much to heart, was a thing kept secret (a); but he sufficiently explains it, when he adds, That a Woman, and chiefly one that is unchast, has great power over the Mind of her Husband; for being conscious to her self of her Guilt, she redoubles her Caresses and Flatteries. Macro, continues he, knew not of his Domestick Disgrace, and imagin'd that Conjugal Friendship render'd his Spouse so loving to him. (b) Δεινὸν δὲ γυνὴ γνώμην ἀνδρὸς παλαιὰν καταγαγεῖν, ἐμαλίσκε μαχλάς. ἔνεκα δὲ συνειδότος κολακικωτέρα γίνεται. ὁ δὲ τῷ διαφθορεῖ τὴν τοῦ γάμου καὶ τὴν οἰκίας ἀγνοῶν, τῷ δοκεῖν κολακείαν εὔνοιαν ἐκμισθοῦσαν εἶναι τοιῶν ἀπατᾶται. Est autem ad impellendum virum efficax impudica mulier, ut quae blandior sit propter conscientiam. At ille ignarus probri domestici, & ratus ab amore conjugali proficisci eas blanditias, decipitur. Now remembring that he had sav'd the Life of Caligula more than once, he very freely gave him Advice. Like a good Workman, he sought Credit from his Workmanship, by making it lasting; and therefore, by his good Admonitions, he did, as much as was possible, correct the Faults of the Emperor, whom he had created, and inform'd him of the Duty and true Glory of those who are in that Post. Caligula refus'd all his Instructions, and boasted openly, That he did not want such a Pedagogue. Thus Macro became odious to him. This wicked Prince thought only how to get rid of him, and for that end, to find out plausible Pretences against him. And he believ'd he had found such, when he alledg'd that Macro said, "Caligula is my Workmanship, and my

(a) Ἡ Μάκρωνος γυνὴ διὰ σωφροσύνην αἰτίας. Uxor Macronis propter quiddam tectum silentio. Philo de Legatione, p. 997.

(b) Id. ib. E.

MAETS (Charles de) a Miniſter and Profeſſor of Divinity at Utrecht, was born at Leyden, Jan. 25th, 1597. He was ſcarce two Years old when his Father tranſported him † to Middleburg, where our Charles ſtudied till the Year 1615. And then it was time to ſend him to the Univerſities, among which that of Franeker was preferr'd to that of Leyden, becauſe the latter was then the chief Field of Battle between the Remonſtrants and Contra-Remonſtrants. After he had continu'd long enough at Franeker, he went to ſtudy in the Academy of Sedan. He made his Tour into France, and then return'd home, where he was made a Miniſter in 1620. and ſerv'd the Church of Scherpeniſſe in Zealand, until he was Call'd to that of Middleburg in 1629. Five Years after, he was employ'd, with other learned Miniſters, to Reviſe the Dutch Tranſlation of the New-Teſtament, and the Apocryphal Books. In 1636. he was offer'd a Miniſter's and Divinity-Profeſſor's Place; which he would not accept of, becauſe the Magiſtrates and the Conſiſtory of Middleburg paſſionately deſir'd to retain him. But the ſame Call being offer'd him in 1639. he accepted of it. He was Inſtall'd the next Year, and exercis'd this double Employ until his Death, which happen'd in 1651. He marry'd (A) three Wives. He Publiſh'd (B) ſomething *, and very much oppos'd Mr. Des-Cartes ß.

MAGINUS (John-Antony) Profeſſor of Mathematicks in the Univerſity of Bologna, was of Padua. He Publiſh'd γ many Books of Aſtronomy, and wholly addicted himſelf to making Horoſcopes. 'Tis pretended, that he was wonderfully ſucceſsful in theſe ſort of Predictions (C), and that he was not miſtaken in Foretelling (D) his own Fate. The Emperor Rodolphus, not being able to allure him to Vienna, where he had a mind to give him a Profeſſor's Chair, did nevertheleſs honour him with a very good Penſion. Maginus was the firſt that ┼ made Maps, and Commentaries ſ on Ptolemy's Geography. He was ſo big and full of Humours, that it is no wonder he died of an Apoplexy, as he did on the 11th of February, 1617 when he was in the 62d Year of his Age. He had three Sons, and a Daughter, who became a Nun. Two of his Sons died while he was alive, and the third was a Jacobin ζ.

I ſhall

† He was driven out of Flanders, upon account of the Proteſtant Religion.

* Taken out of his Funeral Oration, ſpoken by Hoornbeck, Apr. 20. 1651. from whence we may certainly conclude, that Witt was miſtaken, when he plac'd, in his Diarium Biographicum, the Death of Charles Maets in Apr. 20.

ß See Mr. Baillet, in the Life of Des-Cartes, Tom. 2. paſſim.

γ Moreri has publiſh'd the Titles of the chief of them.

ſ He Publiſh'd them in the Year 1597.

ζ Taken from his Elogium compos'd by James-Philip Tomaſini.

┼ Ptolomæi Geographiam primis Commentariis & Tabulis illuſtravit, Tomaſ. p. 283. Note, This is an Error; for others before him publiſh'd Ptolemy with Maps and Commentaries.

" Creature, much more than he is the Creature of " thoſe that begat him. My Prayers have three " times ſtopt the Orders that Tiberius would have " given to kill him. I am the Cauſe why he alone " ſucceeded to the Empire after the Death of " Tiberius." Macro liv'd not long after, but was forc'd to kill himſelf with his own hand. His Wife was reduc'd to the ſame neceſſity, and found no relief by the Love that Caligula had had for her: For this Paſſion is not to be depended upon, it is liable to ſo many Diſguſts. (c) Λέγεται ὑπ' ἐνιαυτοῦ, ὁ Γάϊος, αὐτοχειρίᾳ ἐξενεγκεῖν ἑαυτὸν, ᾗ τὴν αὐτὴν ἀναλέξασθαι συμφορὰν ἡ γυνὴ, καίπερ πρότερον δεινὸν δὲ φανεῖσαν αὐτῷ γενέσθαι. βέβαιον γὰρ οὐδὲν φιλτρον εἶναι πρὸς τὴν τοῦ τυράννου ἀλλοίωσιν. Fertur miſer caſtus ſeipſum interficere, uxor quoque habuiſſe eundem exitum, quamvis putaretur conſtuprata à Cæſare: ſed negant in amore firmum præſidium, propter crebra ejus affectus inconſtantiſſimi faſtidia. The whole Family of Macro was deſtroy'd at the ſame time (d).

Three things, whereof any one was ſufficient, conſpir'd to ruine him. He had ſav'd the Life of Caligula, and procur'd him a great Empire: He boaſted of it; he cenſur'd him. There are few Great Men that can love thoſe to whom they are too much oblig'd (e); and 'tis ſeldom ſeen, that thoſe who advance a private Perſon to the Throne, do long preſerve his Favour. They become odious to him, either becauſe he loves not the Perſons who think they have a Right to demand every thing of him, or becauſe they boaſt too much of their Services, or complain that they are not ſufficiently rewarded. I leave you to conſider, whether Caligula, the worſt natur'd Man in the World, cou'd long endure a Benefactor, who publiſh'd his important Services, and allow'd himſelf the freedom to give him Advice like a Governour?

(A) He marry'd three Wives.] The firſt at Scherpeniſſe, the ſecond at Middleburg (f), and the third at Utrecht. He left Children by the two firſt; one of his Sons, call'd Charles, is become a Profeſſor in Phyſick and Chymiſtry in the Univerſity of Leyden, and has publiſh'd ſome Experiments. See the News from the Republick of Learning (g).

(B) He publiſh'd ſomething.] We have a Book in 4° of Charles de Maets, Printed at Utrecht in 1650. and entituled, Sylva quæſtionum inſignium. The chief thing he treats of, is a Queſtion which then made a great Noiſe, viz. Whether it be lawful for Men to wear Long Hair? A Divine, call'd James de Revet (h) had written for the Affirmative: De Maets put out ſome Theſes againſt him; and they were anſwer'd in a Book entituled, Libertas Chriſtiana circa uſum Capillitii defenſa: To which he replied in his Sylva quæſtionum, where occaſionally he treats of many Caſes of Morality. The Title of this Book was lately altered, which is a ſign that it did not ſell well.

(C) He ſucceeded wonderfully in Horoſcopes.] He flatter'd no body, for if he foretold to one a Cardinal's Cap, or an honourable Office; he forewarn'd others, that they ſhould be wounded, baniſh'd, or afflicted in divers manners: He declar'd ingenuouſly every thing which his Conjectures taught him to read in the Stars, to which, ſaid he, all things are ſubjected. (i) Urbis proceribus ex natalitia illorum figura multa feliciter divinabat: Equitibus tiarum, & purpuratas togas, hæreditates, & acceſſus ad magiſtratus & aulas principum: aliis vulnera, odia, exilia, domeſtica diſſidia, res adverſas quæ quoad ejus conjecturæ conſequi potuit, prædicebat. Idem aſtrologiam aliorum nugis & inanibus ac ſuperſtitioſis auſpiciis obtenebratam miris conatibus illuſtravit, & æmulis ac inſciæ plebi cuncta cœlo ſubjici, à cœlo cuncta moveri liquidò demonſtravit.

(D) That he was not miſtaken, in foretelling his own Fate.] Tomaſini obſerves, That Maginus being arriv'd at his 61ſt Year, was ſtruck with an Apoplexy, which ſent him into the other World; and that a long while before he had told Tomaſini and others, he was afraid of that Year. A little after, this Hiſtorian confutes himſelf, by the Epitaph he produces. This Epitaph teſtifies, That Maginus liv'd 61 Years, 7 Months, 28 Days, and an Hour. It ought not therefore to have been alledg'd as an Argument of the Aſtrological Skill of Maginus, that he found ſuch Malignities in his Horoſcope, relating to his 61ſt Year, for he liv'd almoſt eight Months after this terrible Year. His Diſciple, John-Antony Roſſenus, manag'd better the Honour of his Maſter, for, without mentioning the 61ſt Year, he ſaid only, That Maginus died under an Aſpect of the Planets, which, according to his own Predictions, was to be deadly to him. Infeſtis aſtrorum ſolis ad corpus Martis quos ſibi præsenſerat obtutibus, concedens. Roſſenus, in Epitaphio Magini. Obiit --- ſole currente prope diametrum Martis, & circa exagonum Saturni (a). John Goad (b) cites this Epitaph, to prove, by an Example of great weight, the Certainty of Judicial Aſtrology. He adds that Roſſenus knew alſo, by his Horoſcope, the Time of his Death; for, during the Sickneſs of which he died, he affirm'd for certain that he ſhould not eſcape, and that the Figure of his Nativity (h) In Latin, Revius.

(i) Jacob. Philippus Tomaſinus, in Elog. Virorum illuſtrium, p. 283, 284.

(a) Tomaſinus, ubi ſupra.

(b) In Aſtrometeorologia ſana, p. 129. There is mention made of this Book, in the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, Jan. 1691. p. 204.

(c) Id. ib. p. 1000. D.

(d) Taken out of Philo, in Libro de Legatione ad Caium, p. 997. & ſeq.

(e) Beneficia eo uſque læta ſunt, dum videntur exſolvi poſſe: ubi multum antevenere, pro gratia odium redditur, Tacit. Annal. lib. 4. c. 18. See in the Life of Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai, p. 257. a Tranſlation of that applied to the cold Reception he met with from King Henry IV.

(f) She was Siſter to the Wife of Boxhornius Profeſſor at Leyden.

(g) The Month of September, 1685. in the Catalogue, n. 8.

I ſhall here obſerve a groſs Fault in a Book of an Abbot (E) of the Confeſſion of Ausburg.

MAGIUS β (Jerom) was one of the learned Men of the XVIth Century. He was Born at Anghiari in Tuſcany (A); and having learn'd Claſſical Learning, and the firſt Elements of the Civil Law, under Peter-Anthony Cheti γ, he went to Bologna to improve himſelf by the Lectures of Robortellus. He made a conſiderable Progreſs in divers Sciences, and ſhow'd early, how well he was quality'd for Publick Employments, for he was δ deputed to Florence in the time of his Youth. He did not confine himſelf to any certain number of Studies, but applied himſelf almoſt to all; for, beſides his knowledge in the Belles Lettres and Civil Law, he ſtudied alſo the Military Art, and wrote ſome Books about it ζ; altho' the meanneſs of his Fortune, which oblig'd him to Correct in a Printing-Preſs θ at Venice, ſeem'd to reſtrain him from medling with this kind of Study: Yet he ſignaliz'd himſelf by it, when he was ſent to the Iſle of Cyprus by the Venetians, as a Judge to their Army; for the Turks having beſieg'd Famagoſta, he perform'd there all the Services which could be expected from an excellent Engineer. He invented ξ certain Mines and Fire-works, whereby he deſtroy'd the Works of the Turks, and overturn'd, in a Moment, what coſt them much Time and Pains. But they had too much Opportunity to revenge themſelves for the Delay he gave to their Enterprize; for the City at laſt falling into their hands in the Month of Auguſt, 1571. Magius became their Slave, and was cruelly treated by them. His Comfort, in this ſad Condition, was, that he now remembred thoſe Things he had formerly learn'd; and as he had a great Memory, he thought it was poſſible for him, tho' he was deſtitute of all ſorts of Books, to compoſe one full of Citations, out of what he had read. In this Work he employ'd the greateſt part of the Night (B), being oblig'd to Labour in the Day-time as the vileſt Slave. He conjur'd the Embaſſadors of the Emperor and of France to endeavour his Liberty: But whether it was that they laid not his Intereſt (C) much to heart, or that their good β I ſee his Latin Name, which ſome, as Du Ryer in the Verſion of Thuanus, have tranſlated Maggi, and others Maggio, as Pelletier in the Verſion of Gratiani of the War of Cyprus.

γ Magius Miſcel. l. 4. c. 1.

δ Idem de Tintinnab. c. 18.

ζ See what he ſays of it, Miſcel. l. 1. c. 1.

θ Ad hæc Venetiis, ubi Typographis Operam navaſſe fertur, &c. Fr. Swertius, in Elog. Magii, init. Lib. de Tintinnab.

ξ Ant. Maria Gratiani, of the War of Cyprus, l. 3.

tivity and his Climacterical Year condemn'd him to die. *Sic enim geneſim ſuam & climactericum annum requirere. Riccioli*us, who reports this, heard him ſay it.

(E) I ſhall here obſerve a groſs fault in a Book of an Abbot.] I have found there, that John-Antony Maginus, Firſt Profeſſor of the Mathematicks in the Univerſity of Bologna, died in 1629. and that we muſt reckon, among the Services he did to the Publick, the care he took at his death, to deliver into the hands of Cæſar Marſilius, his Friend, ſome Treatiſes of Bonaventura Cavalleri a very famous Mathematician, which had never been Printed, or were not ſufficiently known in the Republick of Learning: He recommended to him the Printing of them, and, by this means, was the cauſe that his Friend Marſilius obtain'd the Profeſſor's Chair. The Journal of Leipſick is quoted for this in the Month of December, 1691. p. 557. (c). And there is no fault in the Citation, but in the ſame Page of the Journal there is found quite another thing; for there we ſee, that Bonaventura Cavalleri, hearing that John-Antony Maginus was dead in 1629. had a mind to ſucceed him in the Profeſſion of Mathematicks at Bologna, and that for this end he gave Cæſar Marſilius, his Friend, two Treatiſes which he had written, one about Conic Sections, and the other about the Geometry of Indiviſibles. Marſilius communicated them to the Geometricians of the Univerſity of Bologna, who admiring them, ſpoke ſo effectually to the Senators on the behalf of Cavalleri, that in the Month of November, 1629 he obtain'd the Chair which he deſir'd. This is what the Journaliſts of Leipſick ſay in their Abridgment of the Life of Cavalleri, prefix'd to his Sphæra Aſtronomica (d) by Urbano d'Aviſo. I wonder the Abbot ſhould ſay, that our Maginus died in 1629. when his Epitaph mention'd by Tomaſini (e) places his Death on the 11th of February, 1617. And it is yet more aſtoniſhing, that the Latin of theſe Journaliſts ſhould have been ſo little underſtood, which is the cleareſt in the World. And beſides, does ſuch a thing anſwer to the Title of the Work in which it was inſerted? This Title promiſes us nothing but memorable Events about the Church.

(A) He was born at Anghiari in Tuſcany.] In Latin this Town is call'd Anglara, and it muſt not be confounded with that which is call'd in Latin Angleria or Anglaria, or in Italian Angiera, which is in the Milaneſe by the Lake Major. 'Tis a Miſtake in (f) Thuanus, Swertius, Aubertus Miræus, Quenſtedt, and many others, that they have aſſign'd this laſt Town for the Country of Maginus, for he himſelf tells us, that he was of Anghiari in Tuſcany. Mr. Trichet du Freſne has related two Paſſages which are ſo expreſs to the purpoſe, that Mr. Teiſſier (g) who cites him, ought not, methinks, to leave his Reader in ſuch uncertainty as he does by theſe words: Jerom Maggi was born at Anglaria in the Dutchy of Milan, or at Anghiari in Tuſcany according to ſome. One of the two Paſſages alledg'd by Mr. Trichet du Freſne is taken out of Book 1. ch. 2. de Admirandis Civitatibus; and the other out of Book 4. ch. 9. of Miſcellanies. He cites alſo the Teſtimony of Gratiani, which he found in the 3d Book de Bello Cyprio, p. 181. He might have cited the Place of the Miſcellanies, where Magius calls Tuſcany, Noſtram Hetruriam. It is in the 1ſt Book, chap. 20.

(B) He ſpent a good part of the Night in Writing Books.] He wrote in Priſon a Treatiſe of Bells (h), de Tintinnabulis; and another, de Equuleo. That which made him chuſe theſe Subjects, was partly, that he obſerv'd the Turks made no uſe of Bells; and partly, that in his Meditations on the divers kinds of Torments to which his Condition was expos'd, he remembred that no body had yet well explain'd the Equuleus. He Dedicated the firſt of theſe two Treatiſes to Charles Rym a Native of Ghent, Embaſſador of the Emperor to Conſtantinople; and the other to the Embaſſador of France in the ſame Place. Jungerman, in his Notes upon the Treatiſe de Equuleo, thinks that this Embaſſador of France was Francis de Noailles, Biſhop of Acqs: And Mr. du Freſne Trichet is of the ſame Opinion. See his Elogium on Magius, at the beginning of the Treatiſe de Equuleo, of the Amſterdam Edition. Theſe two Treatiſes of Magius were not Printed till many Years after his Death. His Manuſcript de Tintinnabulis was given by Philibert Rym to the Jeſuits (a), who permitted it to be Printed with the Notes of Francis Swertius, at Hanaw, in the Year 1618. The next Year, there was Printed with the Notes of Jungerman, in the ſame Place, the Treatiſe de Equuleo, the Manuſcript whereof (b) was left with Arnold Manlius by Magius himſelf. They were Reprinted at Amſterdam, in the Years 1664, and 1689.

(C) Whether it was, that they laid not his Intereſt much to heart.] I believe theſe two Embaſſadors to be wrong'd, when ſome affirm, they had no regard to the Prayers of Magius; and I cannot underſtand how Mr. Trichet du Freſne can accuſe them of being deaf (.) in this reſpect, ſeeing immediately after he cites the Journal of Manlius the Phyſician, from whom we learn, that the cauſe of Magius's Ruin, was that by an imprudent Oſtentation, he was brought to the Embaſſador's Lodging, and that he was unſeaſonably ſet at Liberty. Imprudenti ambitione in noſtram Carvaſſaram ductus - - - Conſtantinopoli intempeſtivè liberatus, ſtrangulari à Mahomete Baſſa in carcere juſſus. After theſe words, there is no room to doubt but the Price of his Ranſom was agreed upon; but that which ſpoil'd all, probably was this: Mahomet Baſſa underſtood that Magius had been with the

(c) Taken from a Book Printed at Tubingen, in 1697. written by Andreas Carolus Abbot of S. George, in the Dutchy of Wirtemberg, and entitled, Memorabilia Eccleſiaſtica.

(d) In the Edition at Rome, 1690. in 12*s. a Poſthumous Piece.*

(e) Jac. Philip. Tomaſinus Elog. Part 1. p. 287, 288.

(f) Obſerve, that Thuanus call'd it Anglara; and ſo he was not miſtaken in the Name, but in the Situation.

(g) Addit. to the Elogies, taken from Thuanus, Tom. 1. p. 381.

(h) I have more reaſon to give the firſt place to this, than the Journal des Savans of 4 Jan. 1666. has to give it to the Treatiſe de Equuleo.

(a) Swert. in Elogio Magii.

(b) Epiſt. Seghers ad Jungerm. & Jungermannus Not. in Tractat. de Equuleo.

(c) Fuit ea fata inclementia & atrocitas, ut Legati (dictu pudendum) ejus precibus ſurdi fuerint, barbarique immiſſo in collum laqueo eum in carcere ſtrangulaverint.

good Intentions were eluded by the Barbarity of the Turks, 'tis certain, that Magius was so far from recovering his Liberty, that he was Strangled in Prison, the 27th of March, 1572, (D) or 1573. as is known by the Journal of Arnold Manlius, Physician to the Embassador of the Emperor. I give you a Catalogue of the Books which he Publish'd before he went into Cyprus (E).

MAGNI (Valerian) a Capuchin of Milan, became famous in the XVII Century. He applied himself not only to Controversy (A), but also to Physical Experiments. 'Tis said, that he attributed to himself the Invention of those of Torricellius (B); that he was convicted of being a Plagiary. He wrote fiercely * against Aristotle: But I do not know that there is any thing that made him so well known, as the Use that was made of one of his Thoughts (C) in the Provincial Letters. He had great Quarrels with

* See the Remark B.

(d) Journal des Savans of Jan. 4. 1666.

(e) This is a Mistake; for he should have said Equuleo, and not Culeo.

(f) Trichet du Fresne, ubi supra.

(g) Hist. l. 49. ad An. 1571.

(h) Swert. in Elog. Konig. Biblioth. p. 494.

(i) 1572. 27 Martii, nocte diei Jovis necatur in carcere Hieronymus Magius.

(k) Hunc librum mihi reliquit D. Hieronymus Magius, paucis post diebus ab impio Mahomete Bassa strangulatus. Const. 1573. Ex Seghezi Epist. ad Jungerm.

(l) Swert. ubi supra.

(m) They are divided into Four Books. Gruterus has inserted them into the 2*d Vol. of his* Thesaurus Criticus. The Compendium of the Bibliotheque of Gesner impertinently distinguishes the Miscellanea from the Variæ lectiones.

(n) Trichet du Fresne.

Emperor's Embassador; he thought that he made too much haste; he remembred the Mischief occasion'd by this able Engineer; and this was to him a sufficient Motive for giving Order that he should be Strangled the next Night. Mr. Gallois is yet more positive in the Matter (d), in an Extract of the Treatise of Bells: "The Embassadors (says "he) treated of his Ransom; but while they "thought to procure him Liberty, they did only "promote his Death: For a Bassa, who had not "forgot the Mischiefs which Magius had done to "the Turks at the Siege of Famagosta, having "learn'd that he was carry'd to the House of the "Emperor's Embassador, sent to retake him, and "caus'd him to be Strangled the same night in "Prison.

Thuanus was not sufficiently inform'd about this Matter: He had heard that Magius wrote something in Prison; but, 1. He knew not what it was, and Moreri should not make him say, that it was a Treatise de Culeo (e), and another de Tintinnabulis. 2. He knew not that Magius had Dedicated some of these two Books to the Emperor's Embassador, and the other to the Embassador of France, and had pray'd them to use their Endeavours for his Liberty. 3. He knew not that they had us'd their Endeavours for that end. 4. He was ignorant, that he who caused Magius to be Strangled, was not his Master; the Author of that Cruelty being Mahomet Bassa, whereas the Master of Magius was only (f) the Captain of a Ship. 5. He knew not the reason why this illustrious Prisoner was put to Death, since he thought that it was done out of Covetousness: Quasi bos, says he (g), vetulus ab ingrato aratro fastiditus, ab immani hero sumptibus parcente strangulatus est. 6. In fine, he ought not to have said, that Magius was carried into Asia, (which many others (h) have affirm'd after him,) for he was carry'd to Constantinople, and remained there all the time of his Slavery. From all this I may be bold to conclude, that Moreri's Dictionary wanted muchto be corrected in this Article, which was transcrib'd from the words of Thuanus.

(D) The 27th of March, 1572, or 1573.] The reason of my describing the Year of his Death with such uncertainty, was, because on one side Manlius wrote in his Journal, (i) That Magius was kill'd in Prison on Thursday-night, March 27. 1572. and on the other he had written on the first Page of the Book de Equuleo, that Magius (k) having left him this Book, was Strangled a few Days after, by that wicked Wretch Mahomet Bassa at Constantinople, in 1573. If Manlius were now alive, it would concern him to remove the Ambiguity of this Date. Jungerman thought he had Light enough to encline him to believe, that the Tragical End of poor Magius happen'd in 1573. Mr. Teissier's Printer has put May 27. for March 27.

(E) The Books he had publish'd before he went into Cyprus.] Magius had Printed, de Mundi exitio per exustionem libri quinque, Basilæa, 1562. fol. Vitæ illustrium virorum, auctore Æmilio Probo, cum Commentariis, Basilæa, fol. Lambinus was accused of having taken many things out (l) of those Commentaries, without naming Magius. Commentaria in quatuor institutionum civilium libros, Lugduni, in 8°. Miscellanea (m), sive variæ Lectiones, Venetiis, apud Jordanum Zilettum, 1564. in 8°. He publish'd also some Books in Italian, as he says expresly in the Epistle Dedicatory before the Book de Tintinnabulis; and yet one of those (n) who has given us his Elogium, sets down only one Italian Book among those which have been publish'd, the Impression whereof, he says, was An. 1584. The Title of it was, della Fortificatione delle Citta. Magius wrote many other Books which never appear'd. Swertius (o) has given us a Catalogue of them: And yet [illegible] of them are mention'd by Simler, as if they had been Publish'd, and particularly that which was entitled Μισονυσία, Odium Padicorum, a Title far enough different from that which some think that John della Casa prefix'd to one of his Poems.

(o) Ubi supra.

(A) He applied himself - - - - to Controversy.] His Judicium de Acatholicorum regula credendi, publish'd in the Year 1628. expos'd him to a long Dispute, because he was oblig'd to Reply to many Writings of the Protestants. I shall give an Account of it elsewhere (p).

(p) At the end of the Dissertation upon Junius Brutus, at the end of this Volume.

(B) That he attributed to himself the Invention of those of Torricellius.] Mr. Baillet informs us of this Matter (q): "F. Valerian Magni did not "think of making the Experiment of Torricellius, "until after he had publish'd at Warsaw his Trea- "tise of the Atheism of Aristotle, which he Dedica- "ted (r) to Father Mersenne; and the Edition of "this Book was not only posterior to that Printed "by Mr. Pascal, but also to the Death of Torricellius. "Altho' the F. Capuchin did nothing but repeat "the Experiment of Torricellius, without adding "any thing new to it; yet he ascribed it to him- "self, in the Narrative he caus'd to be Printed the "next Year, as if he had been the Inventor of it, "without acknowledging that it had been try'd "in Italy and France before him. This Writing of "F. Valerian surpriz'd those that were skill'd in "such things, who discover'd his Usurpation, and "his Pretension was presently refuted by Roberval, "who alledg'd the Impression of Mr. Pascal as an "undoubted Proof against him. He plainly prov'd, "that Magni had made his Experiment from the Ac- "count he had seen of it, in the Writing Mr. Pascal "caus'd to be sent into Poland, and the other Parts "of Europe: And the Latin Letter which he wrote "to him about it, being deliver'd to him by means "of Mr. des Noyers, Secretary of the Orders of the "Queen of Poland, this good Father made no An- "swer to it, but, by his silence, desisted from his "Usurpation." I have [illegible]ok of this Capuchin, Printed at Warsaw in 16[illegible] tis a Collection of Philosophical Treatises, [illegible]icated to the Holy Virgin, de Peripatu; de Logica; de per se Notis; de Syllogismo Demonstrativo; Experimenta de Incorruptibilitate Aquæ; de Vitro Mirabiliter Fracto. There is added to it a Letter of a Jesuit, proving, Experimenta vulgata non vacuum probare, sed plenum & antiperistasim stabilire. He publish'd at Venice, 1639. Oculoris demonstratio loci sine locato, corporis successivè moti in vacuo, & luminis nulli corpori inhærentis; and at Rome in 1642. de luce mentium & ejus imagine.

(q) Baillet in the Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 2. p. 329. ad An. 1647.

(r) The Date of the Epist. Dedicat. is 19 Nov. 1647.

(C) The Use that was made of one of his Thoughts, in the Provincial Letters.] This Thought, is a certain Method of bringing to light Slanderers and Calumniators, who seek to hide themselves in general Terms. "Does it not seem, says Mr. Pascal (r), "that a Slander so undetermin'd, cannot be prov'd "to be an Imposture? Nevertheless, an ingenious "Man has found out the Secret of it. He is a Capu- "chin, call'd F. Valerian, of the Hou[illegible]e Counts "of Magni. You may learn, by this [illegible]tory, how "he answer'd your Calumnies. He ha[illegible]ppily suc- "ceeded in the Conversion of the Landgrave of "[illegible]mstadt. But your Fathers, as if they had been "troubled to see a Sovereign Prince Converted "without calling for their Aid, presently wrote "a Book against him, for you persecute honest "Men every-where) [illegible]ein fallifying [illegible]f his "Passages, they im[illegible]nto him an [illegible]- "trine. They also [illegible]rs'd a Letter [illegible]m, "wherein they told him, O what Th[illegible] to "discover, (without telling what) [illegible] you will with the Jesuits (D), and thereby lost his Liberty. He was one of those who Converted β Prince Ernest, Landgrave of Hesse. I think he has too far extended his Character, by calling himself Apostolical Missionary to the North Countries.

(r) Pascal's Provincial Letters, p. m. 252.

He was of a Noble γ, Illustrious and Numerous Family in the Milanese, and was Born about the Year 1587 δ. "When he took upon him the Habit of a Capuchin, he "assum'd the Name of Valerian. He was a long time Master of the Novices, and "was chief Guardian to the Houses of his Order. He profess'd also Philosophy and "Theology, and because he had great Experience in Controversy, Pope Urban VIII. "who had much Esteem and Consideration for him, made him Apostolical Missionary "for all Germany, Poland, Bohemia and Hungary, and Declar'd him the Head of the "Missions to the North. It was believ'd, that he was no less skill'd in Politicks than "Theology, which induc'd the Potentates of Europe to send him on several Embassies. "By these Advances, he came near to the Honour of a (E) Cardinal's Cap: But his "generous Contempt of the Pomps of this World, made him contented with the Fatigues "of the Mission," which were very great and dangerous. ζ He suffer'd also much from the Peripateticks, who look'd upon him as an Enemy to their Aristotle. He was thrown into a frightful Prison, under some Pretence of a New Enterprize; but was let out of it, to his Honour, by the Assistance of the Emperor Ferdinand III. Towards the latter end of his Life he retired to Saltzburg, where he Died at the Age θ of 75 Years, whereof he had liv'd 60 in the Order of the Capuchins. The History of his Death, is found in a little Book Printed in β He Disputed, for that end, at Rheinsfeld, with Haberkorn, a Lutheran Professor of Divinity at Giessen, in the Year 1651.

γ Baillet, in Tom. 1. of his Anti. p. 257, 259.

δ Id. ib. p. 259.

ζ Id. ib. p. 260.

θ In the Year 1661.

"will be much troubled! For unless you take care of "this Matter, we shall be oblig'd to acquaint the Pope "and Cardinals with it. What shall I do, answer'd "he (a), against these general and undeterminate "Reproaches? How shall I convict them of "these Slanders they do not declare? The only "way is this, to declare openly and publickly, to "all those who threaten me, That they are infa-"mous Impostors, and impudent Lyars, unless "they discover these Crimes to all the World. "Let my Accusers therefore appear and publish "these things upon the House-tops, which they "have falsly whisper'd into the Ear with great "Assurance." The Author of the Provincial Letters (b) observes, That the Jesuits having Answer'd nothing to this Challenge, did nevertheless, some Years after, attack F. Valerian after the same manner, upon another Subject. He defended himself again (c) in the same way. "There are few People, "says he (d), who are capable of opposing so "powerful a Tyranny; which yet I do: For I "have put a stop to their Impudence, and I shall "put a stop to it again by the same means. "I declare therefore, That they have Ly'd most "Impudently, MENTIRI IMPUDENTISSIME. "Let them prove the Things which they object "against me, or else let them pass for Men con-"victed of an impudent Lye. Their Proceeding "hereupon, will discover who is in the Right. "In the mean time, I desire all the World to ob-"serve, That this kind of Men, who will not en-"dure the least Reproach which they can refute, "appear very patient under those they cannot de-"fend, and disguise their want of Power, with "the Cloak of a false Vertue. Wherefore, I have "boldly attack'd them, and endeavour'd to bring "them to shame; that even the rudest People "may perceive, that if they hold their Peace, "their Patience is not the effect of their Meekness, "but of the Trouble of their Conscience." Mr. Pascal had no sooner related this Method of F. Valerian, but he made use of it on behalf of the Jansenists. "This Father, says he (e), hath found the Secret "of stopping your Mouths; and thus we must "do, every time you accuse People without "Proof. We need only answer to every one of "you, as the Father Capuchin did, Mentiris Im-"pudentissime." He renew'd that Imitation fifteen Days after: (f) "You must Speak-out, my Fa-"thers; you must Name him, or else you must "be content to be no more regarded than Lyars, "unworthy of any Credit. After this manner, "the good Father Valerian has taught us, to put "such Accusers to the Torture, and Expose "them by our Silence, in this Case, will be a "sufficient entire Conviction of a Diabolical Ca-"lumny. The Blindest of your Friends will be "forc'd to confess, that this is not the effect of your "Virtue, but of your Disability." Since that time, Mr. Arnaud has more than once made use of this Thought of the Capuchin, and at last it was made use of in some Books of Protestants. It appear'd in Numerical [illegible] (g), and produc'd no other Answer in the Book of its First Inventor; the Accuser of this Cabal could not Answer the Challenge, but was obstinately Silent. However that be, the Name of Father Valerian was every-where famous, upon the account of this Invention.

(a) In a Book Printed at Prague, in 1655. p. 112.

(b) Pascal, ib. p. 253.

(c) I think it was in his Book de Homine infami personato sub titulis M. Jocosi Severi medii. Dannhawer cites some Passages out of it, in his Vale Triumphale, p. 8, 9. 136. 188.

(d) Paschal, ib. p. 254.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Idem Paschal, Letter xvi. p. 275.

(g) Printed at Rotterdam, 1691. p. 357, 358. of the 2*d Edition.*

(D) He had great Quarrels with the Jesuits.] What I have quoted out of the Provincial Letters, will not suffer us to doubt of it; but we do not perceive that this Father reap'd any advantage by this Secret he had found out, of putting his Slanderers to silence; for tho' he discover'd their disability to Prove their Accusations, yet he was cast into Prison. It was (say some) because he granted to the Protestants, That the Primacy and Infallibility of the Pope, are not founded upon Scripture (h), but only upon Tradition (i). In æstu disputationis eò se abripi passus homo est, ut sua victa graviter cædens, quod res est, scriberet, Primatum & Infallibilitatem Romani Pontificis ex Scripturis probari non posse, sed sola traditione constare. Quod Majestatis Pontificiæ violatæ nefas interpretati Jesuitæ λεχθεν, effecerunt, ut Valerianus in vincula raptus, ex iisdem causam dicere coactus fuerit. His Quarrels with the Jesuits, did not always run upon Heterodox Opinions, but Pecuniary Concerns were also intermix'd with them. This Capuchin complains very much of the Snares that were laid for a Widow, his Kinswoman, to the prejudice of a Pupil. Est quoddam genus hominum grave, says he (k), & intolerabile Orbi Christiano, viduis vero pijs specialiter exitiale. ----- Neminem nomino, sed do in argumentum veritatis, si nemo omnium sit, qui nem intelligat quos designo: si nemo eorum sit, qui me postulet reum detractionis apud Judicem competentem. Huic genti, eorumque mancipiis imputo, quæ sub nomine meæ charissimæ cognatæ fiunt. Hos enim nec postulante, Vir omni exceptione major, ex meo scripto monuit, frustra tamen, de omnibus, quæ iniquissimè perpetrantur, velut ex sententia viduæ, in quam gravis artibus conantur devolvere jura hæredis minorennis, futuri hæredes ipsius viduæ, in præmium quòd eam irretierint iis artibus.

(E) He came near to the Honour of a Cardinal's Cap.] I shall cite the Words of a German Writer, who relates, 1. That this Capuchin made an Harangue at Rome, in the Congregation for Propagating the Faith, to prove, by strong Reasons, that the Society of certain Women and Maids, which took upon them the Name of Jesuitesses, ought to be abolish'd. It was abolish'd by the Bull of Urban VIII. publish'd in the Month of May, 1631. 2. That the Jesuits hindred him from being promoted to the Dignity of a Cardinal; tho' Uladislaus, King of Poland, had written on his behalf upon this Subject to Pope Urban VIII. (l) Ille (Kortholtus ait) coram sacra Congregatione de propaganda fide, gravissimam & nervosis rationum momentis instructam orationem Romæ habuit, quæ movit & pevicit, ut nova, & ad morum virtutumque confusionem Viennæ ac Pragæ propagata Jesuitissarum Societas, Pontificia autoritate dissolveretur, & everteretur. Sed eidem deinceps Lojolitæ, ne Cardinalitiam dignitatem impetraret, obicem posuere. Quæ Uladislao, Poloniæ Regi, de Valeriano fecerit sententia, testatum fecit vel una Epistola ad Urbanum VIII. scripta, qua prædictus Rex Valeriano Cardinalatûs dignitatem acquirere contendit; ac præter difficultatem (h) See the Passage of his Book de Homine infami personato, quoted by Dannhawerus, in Vale Triumphale, p. 288.

(i) Heideggerus Historia Papatus, p. 319. Note, That by a Passage in Memorabilia Ecclesiastica, l. 6. c. 12. ad An. 1651. I find Mr. Heidegger has not rightly related this Fact.

(k) In Comment. de Homine infami Personato, apud Dannhaw. ib. p. 136.

(l) Andreas Carolus, Memorabil. Eccles. Sæculi 17. l. 4. c. 9. p. 766.

in 1662. in 12°. under this Title, (F) Relatio veridica de pio obitu R. P. Valeriani. I ſhall give ſome account of (F) an Anſwer he made to a Book of Comenius.

MAHOMET, the Founder of a Religion which has been for a long time, (A) and is ſtill of a vaſt extent, was born at Mecca in Arabia in the VI. Century. The Year of his (B) Birth and the Condition (C) of his Family are not agreed upon; But no Body denies that Abdalla his Father and Emina his Mother were poor. Abdalla died * 2 Months before the Birth of Mahomet; Emina follow'd him 6 Years after; and Abdolmutleb the Father of Abdalla died two Years after her; and ſo this Infant muſt be educated by Abutaleb his Uncle. Abutaleb and † his Wife were well ſatisfied with the Behaviour of their Nephew; but not having ſufficient means to marry him, they thought fit to place him in the Service of a Woman who ſent Merchandizes into Syria. This Woman call'd Chadigha, fell in Love (D) with Mahomet, Driver of her Camels, and married him, when he was 25 Years old. He had by this Woman ξ three Sons who died very young, and four Daughters which were well married. Becauſe he was ſubject to the Falling Sickneſs, and had a Mind to conceal this Infirmity from his Wife, he made her believe, that he did not fall into theſe Convulſions (E), but upon the ſight of the Angel Gabriel, which he was not able to bear, who came to reveal to him many things in the Name of God concerning Religion. Chadigha * Elmacin apud Hotting. Hiſt. Orient. l. 2. c. 1. p. 205.

† Abunazarus p. 161. apud Hotting. Ibid.

ξ Id. apud eundem Hotting. ib. p. 210.

(a) Hottinger, ubi ſupra pag. 137.

(b) Poſtel in præfat. Grammat. Arabicæ. Ludovicus Regius de viciſſitud. rerum. l. 8. in fine, in Brerewood's Enquiries into the diverſity of Languages chap. 14. p. 203.

(c) Brerewood, Ib.

(d) Freherus in Chronologia ad Jus Græco-Romanum Leunclavii.

(e) Pfeiffer ubi infra pag. 267.

(f) Erpenius, Orat. 2. de ling. Arabica p. 42. apud Hotting. Hiſtor. Orient. pag. 145.

(g) Scindlerus in Lexico apud Hoornbeek Summa controverſ. p. m. 76.

(h) Vide Genebr. Chronolog.

(i) Joh. Andreas in confutione ſectæ Muhammedicæ, apud Hotting. ibid.

(k) Hiſtor. Orientat. pag. 145.

(l) Acta Erud'tor. Lipſ. 1689. pag. 377.

(m) Ludovicus Godefredus in Archontol. Coſmogr. apud Hotting. ubi ſupra pag. 136.

(n) Mahometis Arabis vitam qui deſcripſerunt multi fuerunt, qui etſi non uno modo illius res tradunt, in eo tamen conveniunt omnes quod eum è plebeio vilique genere ortum, pauperibus parentibus, patre Ethnico, matre Judæa affirmant. Mr. Mureri has follow'd this Opinion, which does not agree with the Arabian Authors: They do not pretend that Mahomet's Father was rich, but they maintain that he was of great Extraction, and that the Tribe of the Coreiſchites to which he belong'd, excell'd in Rank and Dignity all the other Tribes of the Arabians (n). Ibn Calican an Arabic Author ſays expreſly, that Emina was of that Tribe, and 'tis very probable, ſince the Arabians to this Day do ſtill exactly obſerve the Cuſtom of Marrying (o) with the Women of their own Tribe.

(o) Ibid. pag. 136.

(p) Compare what has been ſaid of Apuleius in the Remark I. of his Article.

(q) Chevreau's Hiſt. of the World B. 5. ch. 1. p. 10. of the 3d. Tome of the Dutch Edition, 1687.

(r) Samuel Schultetus in Eccleſia Muhammedana. This Theſis was maintain'd at Straſburg in 1667. under Dannhawerus.

(1) Zon. 3. p. 127. b.

(2) Zonaras l. c. Cedren p. 347. ad A. 21. Heracl.

(3) Eutrop. contin. rerum R. l. 18. p. 255.

(4) Zonaras To. 3. in Heraclio, p. m. 127. b. Cedren. p. 347.

(5) Cedren. anno 21. Heracl. p. m. 347. It. Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius & alii ap. Baron. ad A. 630. n. 2.

(6) Cedr. c. 1. Eutrop. contin. rerum Rom. l. 18. p. 255.

(7) Elmac. Hiſt. Sar. l. 1. c. 1. apud Hotting. l. 1. p. 257.

(t) In the Remark R.

(u) Mahumedes. . . dolo ſuarum uxorum periit an. Heraclii 22. Chriſti 632. Joannes Curopalata, Hiſtoriar. ſuo tempore mundi ſpatium, ſub Heraclio, p. m. 346. He cites Paulus Diac. l. 18. Ildeph.

(A) And is ſtill of a vaſt Extent.] We muſt not believe thoſe who ſay (b) that it poſſeſſes one half of the World or more; 'tis ſufficient to ſay, "That "if we divide the known Countries of the Earth "into 30 equal parts, 5 of them are Chriſtians, "6 of them Mahometans, and 19 of them Pagans. (c) Thus the Mahometan Religion is of much larger extent than the Chriſtian, for that exceeds it by one 30th part of the known World, which is a very conſiderable Country.

(B) The Year of his Birth is not agreed upon.] He was born according to ſome (d) in 560, or in 577. (e) According to others in 580 (f) or (g) in 593, or (h) in 600, or (i) in 620: But the moſt probable Opinion is, that he was born in 571, or 572. This is the Opinion of Elmacin: Thus you ſee, that tho' a Man adheres to one Author only, there is no avoiding variety. Elmacin if we believe Hottinger, (k) places the Birth of Mahomet in 571, but if we believe Reiskius he places it in 572. Cum nativitas Muhammedis inter Arabes & Chriſtianos hiſtoricos valde ſit controverſa, ex omnibus ſe Elmacinum ſequi profitetur Reiskius, tanquam antiquum in hiſtoria Saracenica ſcriptorem, & ex ſæculo poſt N. C. ſeptimo ſuperſtitem. Emergit vero ſic annus nativitatis poſt N. C. 572, dieſque 22. menſis niſan, h. e. Aprilis: Thus the Journaliſts of Leipſick (l) expreſs themſelves in the Extract of the Chronicon Saracenicum & Turcicum Wolfgangi Drechſleri, printed the 1ſt time in 1550, and in the laſt Place at Leipſick in 1689. Is it not a ſhame to take ſo little notice of the Year wherein a falſe Prophet was born, who made ſo great a Noiſe during his Life, and is become the Idol of many Nations after his Death?

(C) And the Condition of his Family.] An infinite Number of Authors have written that this falſe Prophet was of mean Extraction; and that his Father was a Pagan and his Mother a Jeweſs. (m) Mahometis Arabis vitam qui deſcripſerunt multi fuerunt, qui etſi non uno modo illius res tradunt, in eo tamen conveniunt omnes quod eum è plebeio vilique genere ortum, pauperibus parentibus, patre Ethnico, matre Judæa affirmant. Mr. Mureri has follow'd this Opinion, which does not agree with the Arabian Authors: They do not pretend that Mahomet's Father was rich, but they maintain that he was of great Extraction, and that the Tribe of the Coreiſchites to which he belong'd, excell'd in Rank and Dignity all the other Tribes of the Arabians (n). Ibn Calican an Arabic Author ſays expreſly, that Emina was of that Tribe, and 'tis very probable, ſince the Arabians to this Day do ſtill exactly obſerve the Cuſtom of Marrying (o) with the Women of their own Tribe.

(D) Chadigha fell in Love with Mahomet . . . and married him.] Some ſay that he made uſe of Enchantments to make the Woman (p) fall in Love with him; but others pretend that his youth and natural Vigour, which was very ſurpriſing, as we ſhall ſhow hereafter, was ſufficient for that end. Mr. Chevreau ſays one Thing which none of the reſt affirm, viz. That this Woman was married when Mahomet was a Domeſtick Servant to her. (q) "He was ſold or entruſted with Abdimenephi, the "richeſt Merchant of the Iſmaelites, to whom he "did very great Services: His Wife Cha- "digha fell in Love with him; the Factor per- "haps had ſome Qualities which the Maſter want- "ed. If we believe ſome Authors, he was thick set, "of moderate Stature, had a great Head, a dark "Viſage, a lively Colour, a modeſt Carriage, a "noble Air, a nimble and active Body, a civil "Addreſs, an inſinuating Converſation, a fine and "pliant Wit: he was Eloquent, and Strong, and "commonly deſpis'd the Dangers which others "fear." Here follows a Paſſage which teſtifies that he made uſe of Charms. (r) Tum verò animi æquè ac corporis dotibus . . . ornatus, Chadigham heram ſuam in ſui primum convertit amorem (præſtigiis illud factum ſcribit Zonaras (1), habitum eum pro mago teſtantur Richardus in Confuſione Alcorani, & non pauca Alcorani Azoarx) cujus potitus matrimonio, (2) & cum eâ divitiis ampliſſimis, (3) ingentia moliri cepit, & amplarum regionum Imperium tantùm non deglutire.

(E) He made his Wife believe that he fell not into theſe Convulſions.] He was 40 Years old when he begun to ſet up for a Prophet, and he would have his Wife to be his 1ſt Proſelyte. (s) Uxori ſuæ primum, (4) adjutus Monachi illius Byzantini opera, ſuas perſuaſit revelationes, Gabrielem Angelum à DEO miſſum ſecum colloqui fingens, & de diverſis ad religionem ſpectantibus rebus monere ac inſtruere, cujus aſpectum quod ferre nequiret, ſe oborta ex meru vertigine, collabi, & humi procumbere; hâc autem ratione comitialem morbum quo vexabatur, callidè excuſabat (5). Illa verò Chadigha circum curſitare, maritum ſuum ceu Prophetam deprædicare, in eundemque errorem alias gentiles ſuas pertrahere, pari (6) etiam munere fungente ſervo Zeido, aliiſque, (7) quos auro corruperat Muhammed. If he begun with ſeducing his Wife, he did it only in proſpect of uſing the common Artifice of Innovators, who affect to have ſome Women among their Devotees, and to employ their Intrigues and Zeal that they may ſucceed in their Deſign. But Mahomet, as we ſhall ſee hereafter (t) ſlighted this Stratagem. He had Wives and Concubines in a very great Number; but it was for a Natural Uſe, for the Cure of his Incontinence, in a Word, for Venereal Pleaſure and not for the Propagation of his Faith. He did not win the Affection of his Wives, (u) for 'tis ſaid, they took away

Chadigha being either deceiv'd, or feigning her self to be so, went about, and told ‡ from House to House, that her Husband was a Prophet, and by that means endeavour'd to procure him followers. His Servant and some others whom he employ'd, labour'd in the same Design, and that with so much Success, that the Magistrates of Mecca fear'd an Insurrection, and therefore to prevent the Disorders which the rise of a new Sect usually produces, they resolv'd to rid themselves of Mahomet. He was made acquainted with it and fled. The Time of (F) this Escape is the Epoch of the Mahometans, from whence they reckon the Years of the Hegira. He retir'd to Medina accompanied with a few People; but was afterwards joyn'd by many of his Disciples. He made haste to publish his Design, of planting his Religion by Arms. He gave a great Standard † to his Uncle Hamza, and sent him on a Party with 30 Men: This First Attempt had no Success, but the Second was Successful; for he charg'd with 319 Men, a Caravan of about 1000 Koreischites, and beat them. The Booty was considerable, and he lost but 14 Men, who were honourably plac'd (G) in the Mahometan Martyrology. After many considerable Battels, he made himself Master of Mecca, in the 8th Year of the Hegira ξ. He died Three Years after at Medina, at 63 Years of Age, according to some Historians *. 'Tis not easy to know the Detail of his Actions; for if the Writers of his own Sect have invented a 1000 Fables to honour him, 'tis no ways probable, that his Adversaries made any scruple of publishing Lyes against him. 'Tis very remarkable that he himself (H) says, that he wrought no Miracles, and yet his Followers attribute to him many. They pretend, that ξ Idem p. 271.

‡ See Remark (E).

† Hotting. ubi supra p. 269. ex Elmacino.

* Id. ib. p. 273. ex Elmacino & Patricida.

away his Life. He was unfaithful to them and beat them; and he even made a Law which permitted Husbands to beat their Wives, when it was necessary; he alledg'd that Edict when he had beat one of his own, and saw that others murmur'd at it, and for fear this Reason should not satisfy them, he joyn'd to it a pleasant Sophism, a ridiculous Distinction. I have not, said he, beaten her as she is my Spouse, but as she is a curs'd old Woman. (m) Licentiam verberandarum uxorum, ex proprio dabat exemplo, nam quum aliquando durius excepisset mulierum suarum aliquam, & cetera indignarentur, ipse tum legis patrocinio usus fuit, tum tali distinctione: quod illam verberasset, non quatenus uxor ejus, sed quod execranda esset vetula.

(m) Hoornb. Summa controvers. p. 162.

(a) Hotting. ubi supra p. 261.

(F) The time of this Escape is the Epoch of the Mahometans.] They call it Hegira, which Word signifies Flight; but that their Epoch might bear an honourable Name; they affected to use this Word in a peculiar Sense, (a) I mean, for an Act of Religion, which makes a Man quit his Country to avoid the Violence of those that persecute his Faith. The Koreischites look'd upon Mahomet as a Seditious Person, and an Impious Wretch who fled to avoid the just Punishment that was prepared for him. He on the contrary and his Companions, in Banishment, pretended that they were holy Pilgrims who fled for the cause of Religion, and of the true God. Mahomet had set up for a Prophet a long time before he abandon'd his Country, and had spent many Days in a Cave to prepare his Prophecies. (b) Quod autem seditionem hinc metuerent Mecchani, præveniendum his censuere motibus novis, Muhammedemque seditionis, sub religionis prætenu motæ, accusatum, convictum & condemnatum è medio tollere constituerant, nisi Muhammed de periculo admonitus solum ac civitatem vertisset, quod anno ætatis ipsius quinquagesimo quarto contigit, cum jam 15. per annos Pseudoprophetiam in spelunca Garherа (uti Numa cum Egeria) prope Meccham, in quâ multos ad crepusculum usque delituerat soles, partim constasset, partim in vulgus sparsisset. This Flight happen'd (c) on the 16th of July 622.

(b) Schultet. ubi supra.

(c) Hotting. ubi supra p. 262.

(G) In the Mahometan Martyrology.] These are a pleasant sort of Martyrs, who are kill'd for robbing a rich Caravan, while they practise the Trade of a Soldier and a Bandite. Elmacin relates, that Mahomet made this Incursion only to rob the Caravan. (d) Audiverat autem Abusophianum filium Harethi in Syriam cum magna caravana Koreischitarum OPIBUS onusta contendere. EGRESSUS EST IGITUR EAS DIREPTUM. ... Vicerunt Musimini occidentes infidelium 70. totidemque capientes. Ex Musliminis vero tanquam Martyres occubuerunt 14. The Arabian Authors have very much extoll'd this Flight; the Alcoran it self makes mention of it more than once (e) as an Affair wherein God and his Angels wonderfully protected a good Cause.

(d) Elmacin. p. 5. apud Hotting. p. 269.

(e) See Hotting. ib. p. 269, 270.

(H) He says himself that he wrought no Miracles, and yet his Followers.] Grotius makes use of this Confession to confute Mahometanism, after he has observ'd, that Mahomet does not deny the Miracles of JESUS CHRIST. (f) Jesus visum cæcis, claudis gressum, ægrotis sanitatem dedit, imo fatente Mahumete, etiam vitam mortuis. Mahumetes (2) se missum ait non cum miraculis, sed cum armis, Secuti tamen sunt, qui ei & miracula attribuerunt, at qualia? Nempe quæ aut arte humanâ facilè possunt effecta reddi, ut de columba ad aurem advolante: aut quorum nulli sunt testes, ut de camelo noctu ei locuto: aut quæ sui absurditate refelluntur, (3) ut de magnâ Lunæ parte in manicam ipsius delapsa, & ab ipso remissa ad reddendam fideri restituendam. I wonder that Mr. Simon forgot this fine Miracle mention'd by Grotius, that a part of the Moon fell into Mahomet's Sleeve, which he sent back again into Heaven, lest that Star should lose its roundness. The Words of Mr. Simon are these. (g) " The Mahometans attribute some Miracles to their Legislator. They " affirm that he made Water come out of his " Fingers; and that by pointing at the Moon with " his Finger, he clave it asunder. They say also, " that the Stones, Trees and Beasts own'd him " for a true Prophet of God, and saluted him in " these Words. You are the true Ambassador of God. " They affirm moreover, That Mahomet went one " Night from Mecca to Jerusalem, from whence " he ascended into Heaven; that he saw Paradise " and Hell, that he spoke with God, tho' this is " reserv'd for the Blessed after their Death; and " lastly, that he descended from Heaven the same " Night, and was in Mecca before Day." But we must not leave this Subject before we set down the Remark of a learned German: He says, that some Christians prompted by a false Zeal against Mahomet, accuse him of boasting of certain Miracles, which the Arabian Writers never attributed to him. (h) " There are some Arabian writers " who attribute Miracles to Mahomet, but others " deny them. As for Instance, the former say, " That the Moon drawing near to Mahomet, he clave " it in two. Mr. Pfeiffer observes after Beidavi, " that Mahomet never said this, but only that be- " fore the last Day, that Prodigy shall be seen in " Heaven. They make him say, that at the ta- " king of the City of Chaibar, a Jewish Woman " having presented him with a poyson'd Lamb, " the Lamb being roasted warned him not to eat " it. But Abulfeda relating the Story does only " say, That Mahomet having tasted a bit of it, " and perceiving that it was poyson'd, and having " spit it out upon the Ground, he said, this Lamb " tells me that it is poyson'd, meaning, I find " that it is poyson'd. In effect he confesses often " in the Alcoran, that he could not work Mira- " cles. Wherefore I look upon it as a Fable what " some tell us of a Pigeon that came to eat in his " Ear, and of a Bull that would eat nothing but what " he gave him with his own Hand. Mr. Pfeiffer (4) " acknowledges, that the Arabians never wrote " any thing like it, and that these Stories are the " Effects of a distemper'd Zeal of some Christians " against this Impostor."

(2) Azoara, 3. 15. 17. 30. 71.

(3) Azoara 74. Vide latius hanc fabulam ex capite Ceramur, apud Cantacuzenum Orationem in Mahumetem n. 23.

(g) Simon's Critical History of the belief of the Eastern Nations, chap. 15. pag. 167.

(h) Augustus Pfeiffer in vol. 6. of the Universal Bibliotheq. p. 247. The Book an Extract whereof is to be found in that vol. is intitul'd, Theologiæ ... Judaicæ atque Muhammedicæ principia fabulosa & fructus pestilentes.

(4) Pag. 272. 273.

We might represent to Mr. Pfeiffer, that the Christians have us'd the Mahometans in this respect as the Reform'd have us'd the Catholicks: for there are in some Legendary Writers many Miracles, which are not mention'd by grave Authors of the Roman Communion, and which they even laugh at. Does it follow therefore, that the Protestant Writers that even his Birth (I) was attended with Circumſtances ſo miraculous, as cannot be ſufficiently admir'd. There are ſome People who imagine that he might believe (K) himſelf in what he ſaid, and who diſapprove what is given out by others, That he drew Writers are Calumniators, or tranſported with too much Zeal, becauſe they object to Catholicks ſuch kind of Miracles? And why may not we ſay, That the Chriſtians who have ridiculed the Mahometans for ſuch Miracles, as are not now to be found in Arabick Writers, had read them in ſome mean Writers, who took the liberty to tell them to the Honour of that Falſe-Prophet, as the Legendary Writers have done to the Honour of Saints. If all that Mr. Chevreau tells us, is not to be found in grave Authors, perhaps it may be found in Writers of a bad Character, who are like thoſe who publiſh Stitcht Pamphlets which the Hawkers ſell about the Streets. Let us hear what Mr. Chevreau ſays: (i) "When the Koreiſchites "of Mecca (k) deſired him to work a Miracle, "that they might know who he was, he devided "the Moon into two pieces, between which they perceiv'd "a Mountain. Having call'd upon two Trees, they "join'd together to come to him, and parted again as "they went back, by virtue of his Command. In all "Places where he went, the Trees and Stones ſaluted "him with great Reſpect, and ſaid, Peace be upon "you, the Apoſtle of God. He made Fountains "ſpring forth from between his two Fingers, which in "the greateſt Drought furniſhed Water to all his Sol-"diers, and to all the Beaſts of Burthen in his Army, "which was numerous. With a Kid, and four "little Meaſures of Barley, he ſatisfy'd the Hunger "of Eighty Men; he fed a great many more with "a few Loaves, and at another time all his Troops "with a few Dates which a young Maid [illegible] "him in her Hand. The Trunk of a Palm-tree [illegible] "fore which he was went to Pray unto God, had ſo "great a Paſſion for him, that in his abſence it was "heard to Cry louder than a Camel, and it never Cry'd "after the minute he came near it. - - - If we ſhould "reckon up all his Miracles, they would amount "to a Thouſand, according to ſome, and to Three-"thouſand, according to others."

(i) Chevreau's Hiſtory of the World, Tom. 3. Book 5. p. 8.

(k) i. e. Mahomet.

I will not deny, but in ſome reſpects the Zeal of our Diſputants is unjuſt; for if they make uſe of the Extravagances of a Mahometan Legendary to ridicule Mahomet, they violate the Equity which is due to all the World, to the Wicked, as well as Good Men. We muſt not impute to any Body what they never did, and conſequently we muſt not argue againſt Mahomet from theſe idle Fancies which ſome of his Followers have fabled of him, if he himſelf has never publiſh'd them. We have ſufficient Matter againſt him, tho' we charge him only with his own Faults, and do not make him reſponſible for the Follies which the indiſcreet and Romantick Zeal of ſome of his Diſciples has inſpir'd them to write.

(I) That his Birth was attended with Circumſtances ſo miraculous.] "If we believe (a) ſome Arabians, "there were Miracles that preceded or accom-"panied the Birth of Mahomet, which aſtoniſh'd "the whole World. Emina, without any uneaſineſs, "carry'd this new Prophet in her Womb: She brought "him forth without Pain, and he fell, when he came "into the World, with his Face againſt the Ground, to "do honour to God. When he rais'd his Head up again, "he cry'd out, That there was only One God, and "he had choſen him for his Embaſſador. He was "born Circumciſ'd, as the greateſt part of the Jews be-"lieve of Adam, Moſes, Joſeph, and David; and "then the Devils were all driven out of Heaven. His "Nurſe Halima, or the Debonair Lady, who had no "Milk in her Breaſts, found it in them, when ſhe offer'd "her ſelf to this new-born Infant. Four Voices were heard "at the four Corners of the Caabah, and publiſh'd "theſe Wonders. The Fire of the Perſians, which had "always burnt, was extinguiſh'd. A barren Palm-tree "put forth Leaves, and bore Fruit. Some Midwives "of an extraordinary Beauty, were found preſent, with-"out being ſent for: And there were even Birds, "which had for their Bills Precious-ſtones, whoſe Splen-"dor ſhin'd from the Eaſt to the Weſt." There is nothing more ridiculous, than what they make the Guardian-Angels of Mahomet do. They (b) tranſported him to the top of a Mountain, they cleaved his Belly in two, and then they waſh'd his Entrails ſo well, that they made them whiter than Snow; they open'd his Breaſt, and took out of his Heart the black Kernel, or the blac[illegible] which is the Diabolical Seed, that tor[illegible] all o[illegible] Men: And all this they did to h[illegible] thout p[illegible] ting him to any Pain; and havi[illegible] waſh'd [illegible] clean'd the inner-part of his B[illegible] e return'd [illegible] himſelf to his Houſe. Note, Th[illegible] was then but Four Years old.

(a) Chevreau, ib. p. 7. See alſo Hotting. ubi ſupra, p. 149, & ſeq. & Hoornbeek, Summa Controverſ. p. 77, 78.

(b) Hoornbeek, ib. p. 78. He cites Joannes Andreas, in Confuſ. Sectæ Muhammed c. 1. & Alcoranum Germanicum, c. 4.

(K) That he might believe himſelf in what he ſaid.] They reaſon after this manner: All Chriſtians are agreed, that the Devil is the true Author of Mahometiſm, and that he only made uſe of Mahomet as an Inſtrument to eſtabliſh in the World a falſe Religion. We muſt therefore ſay, That Mahomet was delivered up to the Devil, by the Providence of God; and that the Power God gave to the Devil over this Wretch, was much more unlimited than that he had over Job; for God did not permit the Devil to pervert the Soul of Job, as he permitted him to make uſe of the Soul of Mahomet to deceive Mankind. The Devil having ſo great a Power over him, by the Confeſſion of all Chriſtians, as to inſtigate him to ſpread his New Opinions; could not he perſuade him, that God had eſtabliſh'd him a Prophet? Could he inſp[illegible]m with that vaſt Deſign, of planting a new R[illegible]ion; could he make him willing to endure a thouſand Troubles, that he might deceive the World: And could he not Seduce him? What reaſon can any one have, to admit the one, and deny the other? Is it more difficult to move the Will to great Deſigns, in ſpite of all the Light of Reaſon that oppoſes them, than to deceive the Underſtanding, by a falſe Perſuaſion, or to encline the Will to embrace a falſe Light, ſo as to acquieſe in it as a true Revelation? I muſt confeſs, that one of theſe things does not appear to me more difficult than the other: But if the Devil could Seduce Mahomet, is it not very probable, that he did effectually Seduce him? This Man would be the fitter to execute the Devil's Deſigns, if he were ſo perſuaded, than if he were not. This cannot be deny'd me; for all things being otherwiſe Equal, 'tis plain, that a Man who believes he does Well, will always be more active and earneſt, than he that believes he does Ill. We muſt therefore ſay, That the Devil guiding him with great dexterity in the execution of his Projects, did not forget the Wheel that was moſt neceſſary in his Engine, and which would beſt encreaſe the Motion of it, [illegible]. by Seducing this Falſe-Prophet. If he co[illegible]e would; and if he would, he did it; an[illegible]ave already prov'd, that he could do it. [illegible]ever, ſay theſe Gentlemen, the Alcoran is the Work of a Fanatick, every thing in it ſavours of Diſorder and Confuſion; it is a Chaos (c) of diſagreeing Thoughts. A Deceiver would have rang'd his Doctrines better; a Comedian would have been more polite. And let none ſay, that the Devil would never have perſuaded him to oppoſe Idolatry, nor to recommend ſo much the Love of the True God, and of Virtue; for this proves too much, ſince from thence we might conclude, that Mahomet was not at all his Inſtrument. Beſides this, we may anſwer, 1. That it was ſufficient for him to oppoſe a Falſe Religion to Chriſtianity, tho' it tended to the Ruine of Paganiſm. 2. That 'tis not poſſible to make any one believe that a Religion comes from God (d), if it does not teach good Doctrines of Morality. It would be to no purpoſe to alledge, that this Falſe Prophet boaſted of Converſing with the Angel Gabriel: For ſince the Scripture tells us, that the Devil tranſforms himſelf into an Angel of Light; Cannot we ſay, that he preſented himſelf to Mahomet under that Name, and in the Figure of the Angel Gabriel? But Mahomet would make People believe, that this Angel came and whiſper'd in his Ear, under the Figure of a Pigeon; tho' it was a real Pigeon, which Mahomet taught to come and [illegible] at his Ear. We ſhall quickly ſhow (e), that [illegible] a Fable, of which the Arabians make no [illegible]on. The famou[illegible]ibert Voetius does not at [illegible]oubt but Mahomet [illegible] an Enthuſiaſt, and one poſſeſs'd with a De[illegible] See his Wo[illegible]nd it will appear, that th[illegible]ave been [illegible]f the ſame Opinion. (f) Non video cur hoc [illegible] (epilepſiæ, & maniacis deliriis aut [illegible]imis

(c) Rudis indigeſtaque moles: Nec quic[illegible] quam niſi pondus inerſ, congeſtaque cõdem Non bene juncta-rum diſcordia ſemina rerum. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 1.

(d) See Divers Thoughts upon Comets, n. 190.

(e) In the Remark V.

(f) Voet. Diſputat. Tom. 1. p. 1057, 1058.

drew after him so many Followers, only by accommodating his Morals to the Corruption of Mens Hearts (L), and by promising them a Sensual Paradise (M). Without doubt, the principal Cause of the great Progress he made, was the Way he us'd, to Force diabolic[illegible]uhammedi adfuisse energema,) si vitam & actiones ejus intueamur. Et exserte de illo probat Joannes A[illegible]s Maurus in Confusione sectæ Mahometicæ, [illegible]. eum a Meccanis civibus pro fatuo & insano, & à [illegible] uxore pro Phrenetico & à Satanæ fœrationibus [illegible], fuisse habitum. Idem ibid. & Philippus Guadagnolo in apologiâ contra Achmedum Alabadin, c. 10. sect. 1. ex libris Saracenicis Agar & Assifa probant cum ex vita eremetica, & nimio jejunio factum fuisse insomnem & furiosum, & in spelunca commorantem audisse voces & sermones, loquentem autem neminem vidisse. Ita enim furiosis & dæmoniacis Enthusiastis, ac prophetis Monasteriensibus quos patrum nostrorum ætas vidit, in eo comparari posse.

How specious soever these Reasons may appear, I choose rather to concur with the common Opinion, That Mahomet was an Impostor: For, besides what I shall say elsewhere (g), his insinuating Behaviour, and dexterous Address in procuring Friends, do plainly show, that he made use of Religion only as an Expedient to aggrandize himself. (h) Facetus moribus, voce suavi, visitandi & excipiendi vices talionis lege suis reddens, pauperes muneraus, magnates honorans, conversans cum junioribus, petentem à se aliquid repulsa nunquam abigens, aut sermone facili non excipiens. Had a true Fanatick ever such a Character? Did he ever understand his Business so well? Could a Man believe that God did for some time send an Angel to reveal to him the true Religion, and not perceive the Delusion, when he could not justifie his Mission by any Miracle. In short, this was the Case of Mahomet: The Koreischites offer'd to embrace his New Religion, provided he wrought Miracles; but he never had the boldness to promise them any: He cunningly evaded their Proposal, by telling them sometimes, that Miracles were not necessary, and sometimes, by referring them to the Excellency of the Alcoran (i). Was not this sufficient to convince him, that he was not Extraordinarily Call'd by God to found a New Religion? See Remark (N), at the End.

(L) Accommodating his Morals to the Corruption of Mens Hearts.] As to that Point, I do not doubt but the Persons mention'd in the preceding Remark, have better Grounds than they had, as to the pretended Sincerity of Mahomet. I do not see that this False-Prophet has derogated (a) from the Morality of the Gospel; and, on the contrary, I perceive, that as to Ceremonies, he has considerably encreased the Yoke of Christians. He ordains Circumcision, which is a thing very harsh to Adult Persons: He requires them to abstain from certain Meats, which is a Slavery that does not well agree with Worldly Men: He forbids the Use of Wine, which is a Precept indeed that is not so very harsh to the Asiatick People, as to the Northern Nations, and which had certainly made Wilfred and Bonifacius miscarry in their Design: But yet 'tis inconvenient in all Countries where Wine grows; and we know by Ancient and Modern History, that this Liquor does not displease the Oriental People. Besides, Mahomet impos'd Fastings and Washings, which are very troublesome, and such a frequent Use of Prayers as is tedious and uneasie. He enjoins also Pilgrimages: And, in a word, you need only consider the Forty Aphorisms (b) of his Morals, and there you will find every thing opposite to the Corruption of Man's Heart, the Precept of Patience in Adversity, of not speaking Evil of our Neighbours, of being Charitable, of renouncing Vanity, of doing no Injury to Man; and, lastly, that which is the Epitome of the Law and the Prophets, (c), Do to your Neighbour, whatever you would that he should do unto you (d).

It is therefore an Illusion, to pretend, that the only reason why the Law of Mahomet was propagated so readily, and submitted to so great an Extent, was, because it eas'd Men of the Yoke of Good Works and Troublesome Observances, and allow'd them in Evil Courses. If I mistake not, the only things wherein it open'd the Gap, which the Gospel had shut, are Marriage and Revenge; for it admits Polygamy, and to return Evil for Evil: But the Jews and Pagans scarce gain'd any thing by this, for they were already in Possession of a Custom which did not much trouble them in this respect. Hottinger (e) has given us a long Catalogue of the Moral Aphorisms or Apophthegms of the Mahometans. We may say, without flattering this Religion, that the most excellent Precepts that can be given to Man, for the practice of Virtue, and avoiding of Vice, are contain'd in these Aphorisms. Hottinger (f) makes no scruple to exalt this Morality above that of many Monks. Mr. Simon has spoken no less advantageously of the Mahometan Religion, with respect to Morality: "It consists, says he (g), in doing Good, and "shunning Evil, and therefore they examine "carefully Virtues and Vices; and their Casuists "are no less subtle in these Points than ours." After he has related some of their Principles concerning the Necessity of Faith, and Trust in God, and Humility and Repentance, &c. he adds, (h) "I pass over in silence the rest of their Morals, "because what has been said, is sufficient to show "what they are; and I can assure you, that they "are not so loose as those of some Casuists in our "Age. I shall only add, that they have many "good Precepts about the Duties of Private Persons to their Neighbour, wherein they do also "give Rules of Civility. They have also written "of the Behaviour that's due to a Prince,; and "one of their Maxims is, That 'tis never lawful "to kill him, not even to speak evil of him, under "pretence that he is a Tyrant."

(M) And by promising them a Sensual Paradise.] It must be granted, that this Promise might be a Bait to allure the Pagans, who had none but confus'd Notions of the Happiness of another Life; but I do not know whether it was proper to entice the Jews, neither do I think that it could have any force upon Christians: And yet how many Christians have been drawn into Apostacy by this False-Prophet? Suppose what he says of the Pleasures of his Paradise, ought to be literally understood, (i) That each Person there shall have the Strength of 100 Men, to enjoy a full Satisfaction with Women, as well as to Drink and Eat. Yet this would not balance the Idea the Scripture has given us of the Happiness of another Life; for it speaks of it (k) as a State which surpasses all that Eyes have seen, or Ears heard, or hath entred into the Heart of Man to conceive. So that, if we believe the Scripture, the Happiness of Paradise is something that surpasses Imagination, and has no Bounds set to it. Endeavour to have a fixed Idea of it, you can never compass it, but your Hopes still carry you higher, and launch out further beyond all Bounds. Mahomet did not allow you this Liberty, but confin'd you within certain Bounds; he multiply'd a hundred times the Pleasures you have already try'd, and there he left you: But what is a Hundred times, in Comparison of a Number Indefinite? But some may say, The Scripture speaks only of Pleasure in general; and if it makes use of Corporeal Images, as when it promises, (l) that we shall be satisfied with the fatness of the house of God, and that we shall drink of the rivers of his pleasures, you are presently warn'd, that these are Metaphors under which Spiritual Pleasures are veil'd: But this does not move Worldly Souls like Sensible Pleasures. I answer, That the Souls which are most immers'd in Matter, will always prefer the Paradise of the Gospel before that of Mahomet, provided they give an Historical Faith to the Description of the Beatifick Vision, though they should give the same Faith to the Alcoran (m). I shall explain my Meaning, by this Supposition: Let us represent to our selves two Preachers, the one a Christian, and the other a Mahometan, Preaching before Pagans, each of them endeavouring to allure them to his Party, by laying open the Joys of Paradise. The Mahometan promises Feasts and Fine Women, and, the better to move his Auditors, he tells them, that in the other World the Pleasures of Sense will be a hundred times more delicious than in this. The Christian declares, That the Pleasures of Paradise will neither consist in Eating nor Drinking, nor in the Conjunction of the two Sexes, but

(g) In Remark T. & LL.

(h) Elmacin apud Hotting. p. 241.

(i) See Hotting. ubi supra, p. 302, & 303.

(a) See Hotting. Historia Oriental p. 247, & seq.

(b) You will find them in Hotting. ib. p. 248. & seq.

(c) Saint Matthew, chap. vii. ver. 12.

(d) Si tandem feceris alii quicquid gratum esset, si tibi fieret. Hotting. ib. p. 250.

(e) Hotting ubi supra, p. 315, & seq.

(f) Ipsi judicent adversarii ex illis quæ ex Arabum nunc monumentis afferemus. Nonne majus sæpe & virtutum studium & vitiorum odium præ se ferant Muhammedani, quam Pontificiorum plerique religiosi. Id p. 314.

(g) Critical History of the Levant, p. 173.

(h) Ib p. 175, 176.

(i) Chevreau, ubi supra, p. 14. See the Remark Q & GG.

(k) 1 Cor. chap. ii. ver. 9.

(l) Psalm xxxvi. ver. 9. See Gassendus, Æthicæ, l. 1 c. 2. p. m 679. who keeping close to the Hebrew, renders the Passage thus Inebriabuntur ab ubertate domus tuæ, & de torrente voluptatis tuæ potabis eos.

(m) Take Notice of the following Marginal Note.

force thoſe, by Arms (N), to ſubmit to his Religion, who would not willingly embrace it. By this means, the Chriſtian Religion (O) has one of the Proofs of its Divinity, viz. that which is drawn from its ſpeedy Propagation through the whole Earth but that they ſhall be ſo Subſtantial, that no Man's Imagination is able to reach them; and that all that can be conceiv'd, by multiplying the Pleaſures of this World a Hundred times, a Thouſand times, a Hundred Thouſand Thouſand times, &c. is Nothing, in Compariſon of the Happineſs which God imparts to the Soul, by ſeeing him face to face, &c. Is it not certain, that the moſt Unchaſt and Gluttonous Hearers would rather follow the Chriſtian Preacher, than the other, tho' we ſhould ſuppoſe that they ſhould give as much Credit to the Promiſes of the Mahometan, as to thoſe of the Chriſtian? They would doubtleſs do the ſame thing, which a Soldier would do to two Captains, who would hire him for a Price; for tho' he was perſuaded that they were both of them ſincere, and would give all that they promis'd, he would certainly Liſt himſelf with him that offer'd Moſt. So likewiſe theſe Pagans would prefer the Paradiſe of the Goſpel before that of Mahomet, tho' they ſhould be perſuaded that both of theſe Preachers would make good to their Diſciples the Reward they had promiſed (n). For it muſt not be imagin'd that a Voluptuous Man loves the Pleaſures of Senſe, merely becauſe they flow from that Source; he would equally love them, if they came from any other: Make him feel more Pleaſure by ſucking in the Air in a Cave, than by eating the beſt Ragou's; he will quit, with all his heart, the beſt Meals, to go into the Cave (o). Make him feel more Pleaſure in Examining a Geometrical Problem, than in Enjoying a fine Woman, he will readily quit the fine Woman for this Problem; and conſequently it would be unreaſonable to ſuppoſe that a Mahometan ſhould draw after him all the Hearers that are lovers of Pleaſure: For ſince they do not love the Pleaſures of Senſe, but only becauſe they can find none better, 'tis plain they would renounce them with eaſe, to enjoy a greater Happineſs. What care I, would they ſay, if the Paradiſe of Chriſtians does not furniſh me with the Pleaſures of good Eating, the Enjoyment of fine Women, &c. ſince it provides me with other Pleaſures that infinitely exceed all the Senſible Pleaſures of this World. I think therefore, that we muſt not imagine that the Hopes which Mahomet has given of the Happineſs of another Life, has allur'd to his Sect the Chriſtians that engaged in it. We may almoſt ſay the ſame thing with reſpect to the Jews; for it appears by many Pſalms of David, that they had a wonderful Idea of the Happineſs of another Life. The Pagans were more likely to be entic'd, becauſe their Religion left them in thick darkneſs, as to the Particulars of the Joys of Paradiſe: But is it enough to tell People, That after this Life they ſhall enjoy Senſual Pleaſures with much more Satisfaction than in this World? And who are you, might they ſay, that promiſe us that? Who told you ſo? Or how do you know it? We muſt therefore ſuppoſe, in the firſt place, that Mahomet, antecedently to his Promiſes of Paradiſe, ſet up for a great Prophet, and that before they were allured by theſe Pleaſures, they were perſuaded of his Miſſion from Heaven, for planting of the true Faith. And ſo the great Progreſs this Sect made, is not owing to the Promiſes of a Senſual Paradiſe; for thoſe who did not believe him ſent from God, did not value his Promiſes; and thoſe who believ'd him a true Prophet, wou'd nevertheleſs have follow'd him, though he had promis'd them only a Spiritual Happineſs in the other World. We muſt not give any Occaſion to the Libertines to retort this Objection againſt the Goſpel, as if it had never been ſo effectual to Convert the Pagans, but upon the Account of promiſing a Paradiſe, or an Happineſs which infinitely ſurpaſſes all the Pleaſures that can be imagin'd. And particularly let us abſtain from Raillery upon the Gold and Precious-ſtones, and ſuch-like other Ornaments of Mahomet's Paradiſe; for you will find ſuch things, and all kind of Precious-ſtones that the moſt famous Jeweller has in his Shop, in the Deſcription which the Revelation (a) gives us of Paradiſe. And let no Man tell me, that a Carnal and Brutiſh Soul will ſooner believe the Pleaſures that are Groſs, than thoſe that are Spiritual; for if any thing appear incredible to ſuch an one, it is chiefly the Reſurrection: Wherefore if Mahomet could perſuade him to believe the Reſurrection, Chriſtian might have convinced him of the Spiritual Joys of another World. See the Margin†.

(n) This is to be underſtood without regard to the Doctrine of Grace, according to which, we muſt ſay, That it is by the Gift of God, and the Favour of the Holy Spirit, that a Man chooſes the true Church. We ſpeak here upon a Suppoſition, wherein the only Motives of Intereſt or Self-love are conſider'd, whereby Men would be determin'd to the Choice of a Religion.

(o) Trahit ſua quemque voluptas. Virg. Eclog. 2. v. 65.

(a) In ch. xxi.

(N) To force thoſe to ſubmit to his Religion.] We need not ſearch elſewhere for the Cauſe of his Progreſs, for this was the ſole and entire Cauſe of it. I do not deny, but the Diviſions of the Greek Church, whoſe Sects were unhappily multiplied, the bad Eſtate of the Oriental Empire, and the Corruption of Manners, were a favourable Conjuncture for the Deſigns of this Impoſtor. But how could any reſiſt his Conquering Arms? Ask the Dragoons of France, who made Uſe of this Method in 1685; and they will tell you, that they'll be ſure to make the whole World ſign the Alcoran, provided they have Time to enforce that Maxim, Compelle intrare, Compel them to come in. 'Tis very probable, that if Mahomet had foreſeen he ſhould have ſo good Troops at his Command, he would not have taken ſo much Pains to have forged new Revelations, and to have put on an Air of Devotion in his Writings, and to join together ſeveral pieces of Judaiſm and Chriſtianity. Without engaging in this troubleſome Buſineſs, he might have been confident of planting his Religion where-ever his Arms were Victorious: And if any thing were capable of perſuading me, that he was much tainted with Fanaticiſm, I ſhould encline to believe it, from the infinite number of things in the Alcoran, which appear no-wiſe neceſſary, but in caſe he had no mind to uſe Force. Now there are many things in that Book, which are poſterior to the firſt Succeſs of Mahomet's Arms.

deny but Mahomet gave a ſtrong Bait to the Saracens, by allowing them Polygamy, for they were very much inclin'd to Venereal Acts. Incredibile eſt quo ardore apud eos in Venerem uſerque ſolvitur ſexus. Amm. Marcellin. lib. 14. cap. 4. p.m. 14.

(O) The Chriſtian Religion has one of the Proofs of its Divinity.] The Goſpel was preach'd by obſcure People, who were deſtitute of Learning and Eloquence, and of all Human Supports, and were cruelly Perſecuted; and yet in a little time it prevail'd over the whole Earth. This is Matter of Fact which no body can deny, and which plainly proves, it was the Work of God. But this Proof will be of no force, after it can be made appear, that a Falſe-Church was enlarg'd to the like Extent, by the like Means; and 'tis certain that this Argument would be ſpoil'd, if it could be prov'd, that the Mahometan Religion ow'd not the Suddenneſs of its great Progreſs to the Violence of its Arms. Since therefore there are two things equally clear in the Monuments of Hiſtory, whereof one is, that the Chriſtian Religion was Eſtabliſh'd without the help of the Secular Arm; the other is, that the Mahometan Religion was eſtabliſh'd by way of Conqueſt; no reaſonable Objection can be made againſt our Proof, upon pretence, that this infamous Impoſtor ſuddenly overſpread an infinite number of Provinces with his falſe Doctrines. 'Tis well for us, that we have the Three firſt Centuries of Chriſtianity ſecure from this Parallel; for elſe it would be a folly for us to object to the Mahometans, the Violence they us'd for the Propagation of the Alcoran: They would quickly put us to ſilence, for they need only cite to us theſe words of Mr. Jurieu (b): "Can any one deny, that "Paganiſm was deſtroyed by the Authority "of the Roman Emperors? We may be bold to "affirm, that Paganiſm would be ſtill in being, "and that Three-fourths of Europe would ſtill be "Pagans, if Conſtantine and his Succeſſors had "not employ'd their Authority to aboliſh that "Religion. ----- (c) The Chriſtian Emperors "have extirpated Paganiſm, by pulling down its "Temples, deſtroying its Images, forbidding the "Worſhip of its Falſe-Gods, by appointing "Preachers of the Goſpel, in the Place of Falſe-"Prophets and Teachers, by ſuppreſſing their "Books, and ſpreading ſound Doctrine." See the 8th Letter of the Picture of Socinianiſm, at Pag. 501. where the ſame Author affirms, "That doubtleſs, "without the Authority of the Emperors, the "Temples of Jupiter and Mars would ſtill be "kept up, and the Falſe Gods of the Heathens "would have a great number of Adorers."

We muſt freely declare the Matter as it is: The Kings of France have planted Chriſtianity in the Country

(b) Jurieu's Rights of two Sovereigns, p. 280. He ſays, p. 297, 298. That Popery will never be aboliſh'd but by the Authority of the Princes that eſtabliſhed it, and that Paganiſm would be ſtill kept up and reign under the cover of the Doctrine of Toleration.

(c) Ibid. p. 289.

Earth; but we loſe the Proof which is taken from its large Extent (P). We muſt not wonder that this Falſe-Prophet never had recourſe to the Artifice us'd by all the Heads of Country of the Friſons and Saxons by Mahometan Ways; and the ſame Force was made uſe of to plant it in the North. This appears horrible to Moderate Men, when they read it in the Book (d) of Mr. Ornhialms. The ſame Ways were made uſe of againſt the Sects that durſt condemn the Pope, and will be uſed in the Indies (e) whenever it can be done. And from all this Conduct it plainly appears, that we can no longer reproach Mahomet for having propagated his Religion by Force, I mean, by denying Toleration to any other. For he might argue thus ad hominem. If Force was evil in its own nature, it could never be lawfully made uſe of: But you have made uſe of it from the IVth Century, until this preſent Time; and yet you pretend you have done nothing in all this, but what is very commendable. You muſt therefore confeſs, that this Way is not evil in its own Nature, and conſequently, I might lawfully make uſe of it in the firſt years of my Vocation: For it would be abſurd to pretend, that a thing which was very Criminal in the Firſt Century; ſhould become Juſt in the Fourth; or that a thing which was Juſt in the Fourth, ſhould not be ſo in the Firſt. This might be pretended if God had made New Laws in the Fourth Century; but don't you ſound the Juſtice of your Conduct, ſince Conſtantine till this preſent Time, upon theſe words, Compel them to come in (f), and upon the Duty of Sovereigns? You ſhould therefore have us'd Force, if you could have done it, ever ſince the next Day after the Aſcention. Bellarmin, and many other Writers of the Romiſh Party, would grant him this; for they ſay, (g) "That if the Chriſtians did not Depoſe Nero and Diocletian, it was becauſe they had "not ſufficient Temporal Force to do it, but that "of Right they might have done it, being (i) no "ways oblig'd to endure a King over them who "is not a Chriſtian, if he endeavours to pervert "them from the Faith." And ſo they look'd upon themſelves as oblig'd to ſet up a Sovereign over them, who ſhould eſtabliſh the Goſpel, and extirpate Paganiſm, by the means of Authority. Mr. Jurieu does not differ much from the Opinion of Bellarmin, for he tells us, (i) That the greateſt part of the Chriſtians were Patient, only through their Weakneſs, and want of Power: And tho' he does not blame their Conduct, in not taking Arms againſt their Princes, yet he thinks they had Right to do it, and if they had done it, they could not have been blam'd. Doubtleſs he believes, that if they had had Power, they might have plac'd upon the Throne a Conſtantine or a Theodoſius, after the Time of Nero. Obſerve, I pray you, that he does not relate the manner of Aboliſhing Paganiſm, merely as a Matter of Fact, but as a Thing that was Juſt; for he compares it with the Conduct of the Proteſtants, and with that which the Catholick Princes will ſhew in a little time, as he pretends, to Ruine the Church of Rome. The Three Examples that he gives, of the Way that Authority may be lawfully employ'd, are, that of the Kings of Iſrael (k), that of the Chriſtian Emperors, and that of the Reformed Princes: "Theſe laſt, ſays he (l), have "aboliſh'd Popery in their States, by removing "its Profeſſors, by appointing Doctors of ſound "Doctrine and pure Morals, by burning the "Images, by burying the Reliques in the Earth, "by forbidding all Idolatrous Worſhip. They "were ſo far from doing any thing againſt the "Law of God, that they exactly obſerv'd his "Commands: For 'tis his Will, that the kings of "the earth ſhould ſtrip the beaſt, and break her image. "Never did any Proteſtant, to this day, blame "this Conduct, and never will any Man in his "right Mind apprehend the thing otherwiſe. "Things have always been thus, and, if it pleaſe "God, will always be ſo, in ſpite of ſome Liber-"tines and Inconſiderate Men." Conſult the 184th Page of his Book, and you will find there theſe memorable Words: "For the little Profit which (m) you "might draw from thence now, the Church would "ſuffer great Loſs, and perhaps you would be oblig'd "to retract in a few Years, and doubtleſs you would "do it. For if the Kings of France and Spain ſhould "come to uſe their Authority to drive Popery "out of their Dominions, as the Kings of England, "and Sweden have done, you would be ſo far "from blaming them, that you would think it "very well done. But you may be aſſur'd that "this is to come to paſs; for the Holy Spirit ſays, "That the kings of the earth who have given their "power to the beaſt, ſhall take it from her, and that "they ſhall make her deſolate, and eat her fleſh. The "ſame Authority of the Weſtern Kings who "erected the Empire of Popery, ſhall deſtroy it. "And this will be perfectly agreeable to the De-"ſign of God, and to his Will; wherefore we "ſhall find nothing in it to be reprov'd. And there-"fore, that you may be uniform in your Judg-"ment, follow the Truth, which never changes; "and do not govern your Opinions according to "Intereſts, which are changing every Day." You ſee therefore, that he lays it down as an immutable Principle which will hold in all Times, That 'tis lawful to make uſe of Authority, for the Propagation of the Faith. If therefore he enters into Diſpute with the Mahometans, he muſt renounce the Arguments which have been always us'd againſt them from the manner of propagating their Religion: For it was not, ſays he (h) by putting "a Sword to the Throat of Chriſtians, "to make them abjure Chriſtianity, and embrace "Mahometaniſm; but by the Poverty, Meanneſs, "Miſery and Ignorance, to which they reduced "Chriſtians;" which are Ways much leſs harſh, and more gentle, than thoſe which, he ſays, may be very juſtly made uſe of to extirpate Popery See the Remark AA, at the End.

(P) We loſe the Proof which is taken from its large Extent.] I cannot yet leave this Subject, until I have made one Obſervation of ſome moment. The Fathers have us'd an Argument, which is impertinently alledg'd againſt the Reformers of the XVIth Century. The Extent of the Goſpel furniſh'd the Fathers with an Argument againſt the Jews, and the Sects which were bred in the boſom of Chriſtianity; becauſe this diſcover'd the fulfilling of the Prophecies of Scripture, which foretold, that the Knowledge and Service of the True God, under the Meſſias, ſhould not be confin'd, as before, in one little corner of Paleſtine, but that all Nations ſhould become the People of God (c). This Reaſoning overthrew the Jews and Heretick, and continu'd in full Force until the time of Mahomet. Since that time we muſt forſake it; for conſidering only the Extent, the Religion of this Falſe-Prophet might claim to it ſelf the ancient Prophecies as well as the Chriſtian. We ought therefore to be ſurpriz'd, when we find the Bellarmines and other Writers of Controverſies affirm in general, That Extent is the Mark of the True Church, and pretend by this Method, to gain their Cauſe againſt the Proteſtants. Nay, they are even ſo imprudent (d), as to put Proſperity among the Marks of the true Church. It was eaſie to foreſee, that as to theſe two Marks they would be anſwer'd, That the Mahometan may more juſtly paſs for the true Church, than the Chriſtian. The Religion of Mahomet, is unqueſtionably of much larger Extent than the Chriſtian; its Victories, its Conqueſts, its Triumphs, are incomparably more illuſtrious than any thing the Chriſtians can boaſt of in this kind of Proſperity. The Exploits of the Mahometans are without doubt the moſt glorious things that Hiſtory can afford. What can be ſeen more admirable than the Empire of the Saracens, which extended from the Straits of Gibraltar, as far as the Indies? Has it fallen? See the Turks on one ſide, and the Tartars on the other, who preſerve the Grandeur and Renown of Mahomet. Find, if you can, among the Conquering Chriſtian Princes, any that can be put in the Balance with the Saladines, the Gingis Chams, the Tamerlanes, the Amuraths, the Bajazets, the Mahomets II. the Solymans. Did not the Saracens confine Chriſtianity within the Bounds of the Pyrenean Mountains? Did they not commit an hundred Outrages in Italy, and proceed as far as the heart of France (e)? Did not the Turks extend their Conqueſts to the Confines of Germany, and to the Gulf of Venice? The Leagues, the Croiſades, thoſe grand Expeditions, which drain'd the Latin Church of Men and Money, may be compar'd to a Sea, whoſe Waves flow from the Weſt to the Eaſt, to be broken when they

(d) Intitled, Hiſtoriæ Sueco-rum Gothorumq; Eccleſiaſticæ, l. 4. See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, for the Month of November, 1690. p. 109, &c.

(e) See in the Remark AA. the words of the Jeſuit Frois.

(f) See upon all this the Philoſophical Commentary upon Compel them to come in, part 1. ch. 7.

(g) Bellarm. de Rom. Pontif. l. 5. c. 7. § quod ſi, apud Daillé's Reply to Adam, part 2. chap. 21. p. 125.

(h) Bellarm. ibid. § probatur hujus, apud Daillé, ib.

(i) The IXth Paſtoral Letter of the Year 1688. p. 202. edit in 12°.

(k) The Rights of 2 Sovereigns, p. 289.

(l) Ibid.

(m) That's to ſay, from the Court of France being perſuaded that it muſt tolerate Falſe Religions.

(h) The IXth Paſtoral Letter of the Year 1688. p. 196.

(c) See Father Thomaſin, Of the Unity of the Church, Tome 2.

(d) Elmacin Hiſtoria Saracenica luculentiſſime quos brevi tempore Muhammedica peſtis habuerit progreſſus, quos contra Chriſtianos ſucceſſus Adeo ut mirari lubeat quid animi fuerit Bellarmino, cum ad ejuſmodi lapſus eſt nugas. Hotting. ubi ſupra, p. 339.

(e) See the Article of Abderame.

of Parties, in the Caſe * of Hereſies and Sects. He was not ſupported by the † Intrigues of Women; and he did (Q) in no-wiſe engage the Fair Sex in

* Conſer quæ ſupra in Gregorio I. Remark D.

† Except, if you will, the good Offices which Chadigha did him at the beginning, as I have noted above.

they encounter the Mahometan Forces, like one that ſplits againſt a ſteep Rock? At laſt the Chriſtians have been forced to yield to Mahomet's Star; and inſtead of looking into Aſia for Victory over him, they reckon it a great happineſs when they are able to maintain a running fight in the Centre of Europe. See hereafter (f) the eternal Monuments which Chriſtianity has erected to the Superiority of the Fortune of the Mahometans. We may apply to the Mahometans and Chriſtians, what Salluſt has obſerv'd of the Athenians and Romans. Athenienſium res geſtæ, ſicut ego exiſtimo, ſatis amplæ, magnificæque fuere, verum aliquanto minores tamen, quam fama feruntur: ſed, quia provenere ibi magna ſcriptorum ingenia, per terrarum orbem Athienſium facta pro maximis celebrantur. Ita eorum qui ea fecere, virtus tanta habetur, quantum verbis ea potuere extollere præclara ingenia. At populo R. nunquam ea copia fuit: quia prudentiſſimus quiſque negotioſus maxime erat. Ingenium nemo ſine corpore exercebat. Optimus quiſque facere, quam dicere; ſua ab aliis benefacta laudari, quam ipſe aliorum narrare, mallebat (g). The Mahometans, being more addicted to War than Study, have not written Hiſtories equal to their Actions; but the Chriſtians, having many great Wits, have wrote Hiſtories which excel all that they have done. But notwithſtanding this want of Hiſtorians, theſe Infidels can tell us, (h) That Heaven has at all times given teſtimony to the Holyneſs of their Religion, by the Victories they have obtain'd. The Chriſtians ought not to uſe that Sophiſm, and imitate them impertinently, as a Father of the Oratory did (i). His Book is Scandalous, and of pernicious Conſequence; for it is founded upon a falſe Suppoſition, That the True Church is that which God has moſt enrich'd with Temporal Bleſſings. If we determine Diſputes of Religion by this Rule, Chriſtianity would quickly loſe the Cauſe: But Prudence will not permit that they ſhould be decided, in that manner; they muſt be fortified by Confeſſions of Faith, and no regard muſt be had either to the Extent, or greater Number of Victories. I do not know whether we may venture to be try'd by our Morals; but if the Infidels ſhould agree to allow the Preference to Wit, Learning, and Military Virtue, we muſt take them at their Word, for they would infallibly loſe the Cauſe at this time; ſince they are much inferior to the Chriſtians in theſe Three things. A fine Advantage indeed, that we know better than they the Art (k) of Killing, of Bombarding, and Deſtroying Mankind! Obſerve, I pray you, that the Mahometan Religion had formerly a large ſhare in that Temporal Glory which conſiſts in cultivating Sciences; for they flouriſh'd under the Empire of the Saracens with great Luſtre (l), who then had fine Wits, good Poets, great Philoſophers, famous Aſtronomers, and moſt renown'd Phyſicians; to ſay nothing of many Califfs, who purchas'd a very good Reputation by their Moral Qualities, and thoſe Peaceable Virtues, which are no leſs valuable than the Military Virtues. There is therefore no kind of Temporal Proſperity wherewith that Sect has not been favour'd in a very diſtinguiſhing manner.

I have already ſaid, That it would not be very ſafe to judge of Chriſtians, whether they be a True Church, by their Morals. I do not pretend, that Chriſtians are more irregular, as to their Morals, than the Infidels, but I dare not affirm that they are leſs. The Relations of Travellers do not agree in this; for ſome of them very much commend the Probity, Charity and Devotion of the Turks, and repreſent the Turkiſh Women as Patterns of Modeſty and Shamefacedneſs: There are alſo ſome that ſpeak very ill of the Morals of that Nation. Hottinger quotes an Author that admires the Virtue of the Turkiſh Women, and oppoſes it to the Behaviour of the Chriſtian. (m) Certe mihi magna admiratio oritur quando honeſtatem quam vidi in fœmineo ſexu inter Turcos conſidere, & impudiciſſimos, improbos & damnatos mores fœminarum inter Chriſtianos conſpicio. The Turkiſh Women never ſhow their Face, ſtir out but little, and would account it a Diſgrace to ride on Horſeback. The Diſcourſe which a Husband holds with his Wife in his own Houſe is ſo modeſt, that nothing of Senſuality is to be obſerv'd in it, no more than in her Countenance. (a) Ita in domibus propriis viri cum uxore nunquam [illegible] motibus vel collocutione minimum indici[illegible] inhoneſtatis deprehendi poteſt. Sir John [illegible] informs us, That in Perſia they Marry without ſeeing one another; (b) "and that a Man does not ſee his "Wife, until he has conſummated the Marriage, "which he many times does not until ſome days "after he has brought her home; for the Woman "ſhuns him, and hides her ſelf among the "Women, being unwilling to let her Husband "do it. [illegible] things happen often among "Perſons of Quality, becauſe, in their opinion, "it favours Lewdneſs in a Woman to give the "Man ſo much the laſt degree of Favour. The "Maids of the Blood-Royal do more eſpecially uſe "this Way, and ſome Months paſs before they "can be brought to ſubmit." He ſpeaks quite otherwiſe of the Georgians, who make Profeſſion of Chriſtianity; for after he has mention'd all the Faults imaginable of the Georgians, he adds, (c) "The Women are no leſs Vicious nor Wicked; "they are eaſily overcome by the Men, and have "certainly a larger ſhare than they in this torrent "of Impurity which overflows all their Country." The Author quoted by Hottinger, does no leſs (d) extol the Morals of the Turkiſh, above thoſe of the Chriſtian Women, than the Behaviour of the Turks above that of the Chriſtians. Other Relations accuſe the Turks of extreme Lewdneſs, and do not forget the multitude of their Concubines, which they buy in the Market, and whom they ſearch and [illegible] over their Bodies before they agree the Price, juſt as the Butchers do when they buy Beaſts. (f) Verè ut Pius II. (l. 1. Epiſt. 131. & Boskhierus ex eodem Philip. 10. p. 362) de Turcis ſcripſerit, eſſe populum lambentem, fellatorem, Lesbiatorem, fœminarum omnium concubitum guſtantem & delibantem, addimus & verè fornicatorium, utpote, qui non tantum Virgines violant (ſcribente Bartholomæo Georgievitz.) (cap. 6. & 7.) etiam ante ora patrum, ſed etiam maſculos captivos, indomitæ libidinis hi homines ſibi ſubſternunt (Boskhier. p. 61. & 89.) In foro venales, nudoſque exponunt viros fœminaſque, videndos & coram omnibus contrectandos, etiam quâ pudor naturæ debetur, nudos currere, ſaltare jubent, quâ vitia, ſexus, ætas, corruptio vel integritas appareant. Thus a Pope accuſes the Turks of many Lewd Actions: But what the Catholick Writers have written of the Court of Rome, and what may be written of many Chriſtian Nations, is no better; inſomuch that it ſeems it may be affirm'd in general, that Chriſtians and Infidels cannot juſtly charge one another; and if there be any difference between them as to their bad Morals, that the difference of the Climate is rather the cauſe of it, than the diverſity of Religion.

(Q) He did in no-wiſe engage the Fair Sex in his Concerns.] The Permiſſion he granted to Men to have many Wives, and to (g) Whip them when they were not Obedient, and to Divorce them (h) upon any Diſpleaſure, was a Law very prejudicial to the Female Sex. He took care to deny Women the liberty of having many Men, neither would he allow them to part from their Husbands, though they were troubleſome, at leaſt unleſs they conſented (i). He ordain'd, That a Woman Divorc'd, could not Marry again, but only twice; and that if ſhe was Divorc'd from the third Husband, and the firſt would not take her again, ſhe ſhould never marry all her life-time (k). He was ſo far from permitting them to ſhow their Breaſt, or at leaſt their Neck, that he would not ſuffer their Feet to be ſeen, but only by [illegible] Husband. Mulieres itaque bonæ ſe curent, ne lumbos aſpiciant, ſuoque populo tegentes collum & pectus, [illegible]que ſuam pulchritudinem, niſi quantum apparere neceſſitas cogat, celent omnibus, ſpeciemque pedum etiam eundo, nili maritis ſuis (l). But 'tis true, that in this he only re[illegible] the Cuſtom obſerv'd in Arabia; for we le[illegible]om Tertullian, [illegible] the Women of that C[illegible] did thus co[illegible]eir Face, ſo that they co[illegible]ot make uſe but [illegible]e Eye (m). [illegible]unt vel Arabiæ fœminæ Ethn[illegible]ua non caput, [illegible]iem [illegible]que cuperetur ab eo. Ib. Surat. 3. (k) Ibid. [illegible] (l) Ibid. Surat. 34. (m) Tertul. de Virginibus velandis.

(a) News from the Republick of Learning, Oct. 1686. p. 1138. in the Abſtract of the Voyages of Sir John Chardin.

(b) Ibid. p. 1129.

(c) Septem-Caſtrenſis de Turcarum moribus, c. 8. p. 38. apud Hotting. ib. p. 304.

(d) Cornelius Uythagius in Antichriſto Mahometa, p. 276.

(e) Quæ ſi forte præcepta non obſervaverint, à vobis correctæ & caſtigatæ, in domibus lectiſve[illegible] tent[illegible] ver[illegible] tur, [illegible] quo v[illegible] ſtris nutibus & præcept pareant. Alcor. Surat. 9.

(h) Quando illæ non amplius tibi placent commutare eas licet. Ib. Surat. 8.

(i) Mulier ad fugam ſe præparans invito marito re-

(f) See the next Article, Remark D.

(g) Salluſt. in bell. Catalin. p. m. 14.

(h) See the next Article, Remark D.

(i) Thomas Bozius, de ruinis Gentium.

(k) See the Thoughts upon the Comets, n. 141.

(l) See the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Hottinger.

(m) Septem-Caſtrenſis, c. 12. apud Hotting. Hiſt. Oriental. p. 311. Septem-Caſtrenſis is a Monk who was a long time Priſoner among the Turks in his Concerns. He believ'd that the Valour of his Troops would be ſufficient to his quoque ita totam tegunt, ut uno oculo liberato contentæ ſint dimidiam frui lucem, quàm totam faciem proſtituere. I be[illegible] 'tis a Miſtake (n) to ſay, that Mahomet permitted Men to marry as many Women as they would; for he does ſo moderate and limit his Permiſſion, that it plainly appears he had no Mind they ſhould marry above 4, and that he allow'd them as many, provided they thought themſelves capable of keeping them peaceably. (o) Quotcunq; placuerit, duas ſcilicet, aut tres vel quatuor uxores ducite, niſi timueritis eas pacificare poſſe. But 'tis no miſtake to affirm that he ſet no Bounds to the Number of their Concubines. And indeed the Turks may have as many as they are capable of maintaining. It is not the Condition of the 4 Wives deplorable, under a Law which gives the Husband Power to divert what is their due to as many handſom Slaves as he can buy. Doth not this Diverſion of the matrimonial Stock reduce them to the greateſt want, and to an extreme Indigence. Let none tell me of the Proviſion the Law has made for them (p), by appointing the 4 Wives to lie once every Week with their Husband. "So that if any one be found "that has not enjoy'd this Privilege for a whole "Week, ſhe has a right to demand it on Thurſ-"day Night in the following Week, and ſhe "may proſecute her Husband in caſe of a Refuſal "in the Courts of Juſtice." For notwithſtanding this Privilege the Law is very harſh, a Law, ſay I, which reduces that to a ſmall Proportion, which would ſcarce ſuffice if it were entire. A fine Satisfaction indeed for the Party offended, to obtain ſo ſmall a thing as one Night in reparation for a Week loſt, beſides the Trouble of citing him before the Judges, and engaging in a Proſecution ſo nice and ſo contrary to Modeſty. And what Pleaſure can any one take in a Matter of this Nature, when it is not obtain'd but by the Execution of a Sentence from the Magiſtrate? This ought not to be a Work that is commanded, nihil hæc ad edictum Prætoris: when it is done only by way of Duty, perfunctorie, & dicis cauſa, there can be no great Satisfaction in it. We muſt therefore confeſs that Mahomet did not uſe the Sex well.

But as to Women he taught many other ſtrange Things: For he did not only make them miſerable in this World, but depriv'd them of the Joys of Paradiſe. He did not only exclude them from that Place, but he turn'd that Joy into an Occaſion of Sorrow to them: For 'tis pretended he taught, that the Pleaſures of Marriage which Men ſhall enjoy after this Life, ſhall be furniſh'd them by Virgins of a raviſhing Beauty, which God creates in Heaven, and which are deſtin'd for them from all Eternity: And as to Women, that they ſhall not enter into Paradiſe, nor approach nearer to it than is neceſſary to diſcover a-croſs the Paliſadoes what ſhall be done there. Thus their Eyes ſhall be Witneſſes of the Happineſs of Men, and of the Pleaſure they ſhall take with theſe Celeſtial Maids. What can be imagin'd more grievous? Is not this to be ingenious in mortifying our Neighbour? Lucretius tells us, (q) that 'tis pleaſant to ſee a Shipwreck when it is not fear'd.

'Tis Pleaſant when the Seas are rough, to ſtand
And view another's Danger (r) ſafe at Land,
Not 'cauſe he's troubled, but 'tis ſweet to ſee,
Theſe Cares and Fears from which our ſelves are free.

All things are quite contrary in Mahomet's Syſtem for Women; the ſight of a Happineſs of which they are depriv'd muſt needs afflict them, and it will be ſo much the more grievous to them, as well becauſe they diſcover the Pleaſures which another enjoys, as becauſe they'll ſee the Happineſs which they want; for the Torment of Jealouſy proceeds not ſo much from the want of a Thing, as from knowing that others enjoy it. I have heard many People ſay, and I think I have read it, that the Damned ſhall have a very exact Knowledge of the Happineſs of Paradiſe, that ſo the Conſideration of the great Joys which they have miſs'd, may augment their Torments (s) and that the Devil will make uſe of the Artifice to render them more miſerable. This is to underſtand very well the Art of heightning the Pains of the Miſerable, and therefore we may ſay in a Word, that Mahomet could not have diſcover'd his Cruelty more maliciouſly; for he would have Women ſee at a Diſtance, that which can only create unprofitable Temptations and inſupportable Grief.

But to declare the Matter as it is indeed, I muſt acquaint you, that the learned Mahometans do not ſay, that the Women are excluded from Paradiſe (t); yet I thought I might relate what I had read in many Authors. I ſhall cite one of them. (u) Hæſce mulieres ſtatuunt non humanas atque ex hominibus genitas, ſed ab æterno in hunc finem à Deo creatas, & cæleſtes eſſe; ſuas enim quas hic habuerunt Muhammedani mulieres ſtatuunt exſortes fore Paradiſi, atque extra eum foris conſtitutas, per cancellos eminus virorum gaudia, & cum aliis ſc. uxoribus congreſſus conſpecturas. Longe plures ibi credunt fore mulieres, quam viros, ſingulisque viris plures vel pauciores pro merito addendas, quibus non ad prolem, ſed unice ad lubitum & ſatietatem voluptatis uſuri ſint; quin & vires ut ſubminiſtrandas majores eum in finem, ut ſæpius coire poſſint, caſque eundem in finem fore mundas à menſtruis. This Author cites no Body, and had juſt before related ſome Paſſages of the Alcoran, which teach us only that the Dames of Paradiſe (a) ſhall have very ſparkling Eyes, of the bigneſs of an Egg, and that they ſhall be ſo modeſt, that they ſhall never look upon any Man but their own Husbands. It is not therefore in the Alcoran that we find what this Author relates concerning theſe Dames; viz. that they ſhall be more numerous than Men, that every Man may have 2 or 3, or more proportionably to his Merit; that they ſhall be given only for Pleaſure and not for bearing of Children; that they ſhall always be in a Condition to ſatisfy their Husbands, being never ſubject to the menſtrual Flux, as the Phyſicians call it, that they ſhall be ſo beautiful and bright, that one of them muſt needs illuminate the whole Earth in the Night-time; that if they ſhould ſpit into the Sea, they would quite take away its Saltneſs. (b) Tanta ipſarum puellarum dicitur præditura pulchritudo & gratia, ut ſi ipſarum modò una aliquando noctu in terrâ appareret, totam eam facilè eſſet collaturam; vel ſi in mare forte diſpueret, totam ejus ſalſedinem extinguere, inque mel dulciſſimum commutare. I have found a Part of theſe Things in a Letter of Clenard, but this is only the Opinion of a private Perſon, and ſo this cannot be juſtly charg'd upon the whole Body of Mahometiſm (c) Audi quæſo, they are the Words of Clenard, quod hic mihi narravit præceptor dum legeremus locum Alcorani de Paradiſo, ubi ſic ſcriptum eſt, & eo uxores habituri ſunt mundas inquit, id eſt, liberas à menſtruis, ſcilicet ut quovis tempore liceat coire. Quid inquam, an in paradiſo celebrabuntur nuptialia? Quid ni? Attamen non eſt futura proles, inquit. Nam voluptatis cauſa illic erunt uxores, non propagandis liberis, quin & ſingulis viris complures illic futuræ ſunt uxores, pro meritorum ratione. Deuſque huic plus, illi minus virium largiturus eſt, ut vel paucis, vel multis reddat debitum. Let us make the ſame Remark as to what I am going to ſay. It ought not at all to be imputed to Mahomet, as Peter Bellonius does. They are Fables or falſe Gloſſes, of ſome viſionary or Burleſquing Doctors (d)

"After the Turks have eaten and drunk their fill "in this Paradiſe, then the Pages being adorn'd "with Gold and precious Stones, and Rings upon "their Arms, Hands, Legs and Ears, ſhall come to "the Turks, each of them holding a handſom "Diſh in his Hand with a great Citron or Li-"mon in it, which the Turks ſhall take to ſmell "and feel, and on a ſudden, when each Turk ſhall "put it to his Noſe, there ſhall come forth a beau-"tiful Virgin well accoutred and adorn'd, who "ſhall embrace the Turk, as the Turk ſhall do her; "and thus they ſhall remain 5 Years in mutual "Embraces without ſtirring or parting from one "another, taking all ſorts of Pleaſure that a Man "can enjoy with a Woman. And after 5 Years "God will ſay unto them, ſince you have had "great Feaſting in my Paradiſe, I will now ſhow "you my Face. Then he ſhall take away the "Veil from his Face, but the Turks ſhall be "ſtruck down to the Ground by the Brightneſs "that comes from it; and God ſhall ſay unto "them: Ariſe you my Servants and enjoy my "Glory, for you ſhall never die, nor be ſad or "diſpleaſed any more. And lifting up their

Heads

(n) See the State of the Ottoman Empire, l. 2. chap. 21. and the Notes of Beſpier.

(o) Alcor. Surat. 8.

(p) Ricaut ib. p. 457.

(q) Suave mari magno turbantibus æquora ventis
E terra magnum alterius ſpectare laborem.
Non quia vexari quemquam eſt jucunda voluptas;
ſed quibus ipſe malis careas, quia cernere ſuave eſt. Lucret. lib. 2. init.

(r) Sentiments de Cleanthe p. [illegible] 36. [illegible] we apply theſe Verſes of Perſius Sat. 3. v. 36.
Magne pater Divum, ſævos punire Tyrannos
Haud aliâ ratione velis, cùm dira libido
Moverit ingenium, ferventi tincta veneno: Virtutem videant intabeſcantque relictâ.

(t) See the Article Hali Beig p. 1476. col. 1.

(u) Hoornbeck Summa Controverſ. p. 175.

(a) Fruentur fœminis quibus oculi clariſſimi grandesque utova quos non ad alios quam maritos ſuos erigent. Surat 48. Ductura virgines decentiſſimas cum oculis immenſis atque pudibundis nuſquam niſi tantum ad maritos ſuos flectendis. Surat. 62.

(b) Hoornbeck ubi ſupra.

(c) Clenard epiſtol. l. 1. pag. 42.

(d) Peter Bellonius ub. infra ch. 9. pag. 392.

his purpoſe. Perhaps he feared (R) the Perſian Women, becauſe he intended to eſtabliſh a Code full of harſhneſs againſt the Women. Nevertheleſs he had a moſt violent deſire to enjoy them, and ſome very notable Things are related of his Vigour in this reſpect (S). His Lewdneſs was doubtleſs the Cauſe why he permitted Polygamy within ſome bounds,* and Concubines without any Limits. He durſt not be the only Perſon who ſhould enjoy that Privilege (T), tho' as to Inceſt he had the bold-

* See the Remark (Q)

(q) Belon's Obſervations of many Rarities l. 3. ch. 14. p. m. 404. and not in ch. 9. as la Mothe le Vayer cites him let. 90. p. 272. of Tom. 11.

(r) See Remark G. G.

(s) By the Oath you have taken how many times do you commonly do it in a Day? Fr. ſix. Pan. and how oft by Night? Fr. 10. ſays Brother John, that Whore-Maſter counts it ſhameful to exceed 16 times. Rabelais. l. 5. c. 28.

(t) Balthaſar Bonifacius Hiſtor. ludicra l. 2. c. 7. p. 39. he cites Bonſinius deciſ. (probably he means decad.) 1. lib. 8.

(u) See Remark L. L.

(a) Hoornbeek ubi ſupra p. 117.

(b) Id. ib. p. 118.

(c) The Author refers us to John Andreas confuſ. Muham. c. 7. to Philip Guadagnol contra Ahmedam Perſam c. 5. ſect. 3. & c. 10. ſect. 2 and 3. and to Vincentius Lirinenſis ſpecul. Hiſtor. l. 24. he ſhould have ſaid Vincentius Bellovacenſis.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 116.

(e) Mothe le Vayer Letter 114. Tom. 12. p. 11, 12.

" Heads they ſhall ſee God Face to Face; and " then every one taking his Virgin again, ſhall " lead her into a Chamber in the Palace, where " he ſhall find Meat and Drink; and having feaſted and taken his Pleaſure with his Virgin, he " ſhall paſs away his time merrily without any " fear of Death. This is what Mahomet has related of his Paradiſe, with many other ſuch " like Fooleries; which makes us think that the " Original of the Turkiſh Seraglio's is deriv'd " from what Mahomet ſays of the Pages and Virgins of Paradiſe: For he ſays that the chaſt Virgins were thus created by God in Paradiſe, " and are well guarded and ſhut up within " Walls. And Mahomet ſays, that if one of them " ſhould go forth out of Paradiſe at Midnight, " ſhe would enlighten the whole World like the " Sun, and if one of them ſhould ſpit into the " Sea, the Water of it would become as ſweet " as Honey.

(R) He feared the Perſian Women.] A modern Author (e) without quoting any Body, informs me, that this Seducer confeſs'd, " That the ſole Apprehenſion of the Women of Perſia, was the Cauſe " that he did not go into that Country, ſince they " were ſo full of Charms, that the Angels themſelves might fall in Love with, and be overcome by them. Probably he fear'd leſt they ſhould regulate his Pen, and his pretended Revelations, and make him give out Laws very Effeminate (f), whereby he would have been much cried down; for he was very ſenſible that his unchaſt Actions gave great Scandal. See the Margin (g).

(f) i. e. too favourable to the Female Sex, as 'tis ſaid of ſome Laws of Juſtinian, that his Wife had a great hand in them.

(g) Theſe Words are to be found in Brantome, Damesgalant. Tom. 11. p. 304. The Moors have an an ancient and common Proverb, that their Prophet Mahomet would never go to Seiras, leſt if he ſhould ſee one of the beautiful Women there, his Soul ſhould never enter into Paradiſe after his Death.

(S) Some very notable Things are related of his Vigour.] Authors do not agree as to the Number of his Wives; but generally it is agreed that he had many at a time, and that he perform'd his conjugal Duty with great Vigour. (h) " You " may ſee in Abul-faragius, that he had, according to ſome, to the Number of 17 Wives, beſides Miſtreſſes which he entertain'd (i). It will " not be very difficult (k) to believe him a Saint " in their way, when you know that he married " but 14 Wives; and that this great Devotion " was little more than 3 Degrees below that of " Mahomet who had 17 Wives beſides Miſtreſſes, " who were exceeding glad to contribute to the " Diverſion of their great Propher. 'Tis true, " that Ali was leſs vigorous than his Father-in-" Law, who boaſted that he perform'd Marriage " Duties every Night, and that he had receiv'd " by ſpecial Privilege, the Strength of 40 Men " in this kind of Sport." Let us ſee the Note of Mr. Beſpier, upon what Mr. Ricaut has ſaid (l), That Mahomet had 9 Women and Ali 14. (m) " John Andreas in one and the ſame Page at the " Beginning of chap. 7. of the Confuſion of the " Sect of Mahomet, ſays, that Mahomet had Nine " Wives together, beſides Slaves; and in the ſame " Place he ſays, that he had 11 Wives, and proves " it by a Book which he calls Aſſameil, which is, " ſays he, the Book of the good Cuſtoms of Ma-" homet. The Words which John Andreas cites out of this Book, ſignify, that Mahomet was a Man of ſo great Vigour, that in an Hour's time he could know his 11 Wives. Robur ejus, ſuper eum pax, tantum erat ut viſitaret (circumiret) uxores ſuas unius horæ ſpacio, licet undecim forent. (n) Baudier has given 15 Wives to Mahomet, beſides Slaves. Elmacin ſpeaks only of 3 Wives of Mahomet, but he omits the 1ſt, who was dead before he married the other 3. (o) " I believe there is no certainty, ſays " Beſpier as to the Number of Mahomet's Wives, and " much leſs as to Ali's, of whom I have not " read to this Day, that he married another Wife " beſides the only Daughter of Mahomet, call'd " Fatima". Mr. Pfeiffer relates, that this falſe Prophet (p) " took 17 Wives according to ſome, " and 21 according to others". This would not be very ſtrange; but what Bellonius relates, and I have mention'd, is extraordinary. " It is written " in an Arabian Book, ſays he, (q) entituled, The " good Cuſtoms of Mahomet, which praiſes his " Vertues and his corporal Vigour, that he boaſted of lying with 11 Women in one and the " ſame Hour one after another (r). Many here will call to Mind Brother Fredon of Rabelais (s). I do not know what to think of the Tale, that Mahomet had to do with his Aſs. (t) Turcarum Legiſlator Mahumetes aſellam qua vehebatur ex indomito libidinis ardore compreſſit.

(T) The only Perſon who ſhould enjoy that Privilege; tho' as to Inceſt.] To colour his Incontinence, which mov'd him to marry many Wives, he forg'd a Revelation from God, that this was allow'd. He muſt therefore inſert this Article in his Alcoran; but becauſe his Servant Maids pleaſed him, and he lay with them, therefore he ſtood in need of a new Relation in favour of Concubinage, and ſo it was neceſſary he ſhould make a diſtinct Article of the Concubinage of Husbands. He had but 2 Wives, when Marina his Servant-Maid, a very merry Laſs, pleas'd him ſo well, that he lay with her, before ſhe came to an Age that was Marriagable: His Wives catch'd him in the very Fact, and were tranſported with Rage againſt him. He ſwore to them that he would never return to her any more, if they would keep ſilence; but becauſe he broke his Oath, they made a great Noiſe and went away from his Houſe. To remove this great Scandal, he feigned a Voice from Heaven, which inform'd him that it was lawful to have to do with his Servant-Maids. Thus this Impoſtor begun with committing a Crime, and finiſh'd with converting it into a general Law. This does not at all favour of mad Freaks; a good Touch-Stone to diſcover Mens Pretences to Inſpiration, whether by new Prophecies or by explaining the old, ſuch as the Apocalypſe is, that their Doctrine ſhould be examin'd by this Rule, whether it changes proportionably as the times change (u) and as their own peculiar intereſt becomes different from what it was before. (a) Id quoque notandum, (I make uſe of the Authority of a famous Divine) Leges iſtas in ſuorum facinorum patrocinium excogitatas ab ipſo ſemper fuiſſe poſt commiſſa illa, non ante; ut ita manifeſtiſſimè liqueat, iſta in criminum ſuorum excuſationem vel defenſionem ab eo commenta dolo peſſimo fuiſſe. . . . (b) Tale iſtud quod de Muhammede narrant, eum cum puellâ formoſâ ſed infra ætatem, Marinâ in adulterio deprehenſum fuiſſe, à conjugibus ſuis Aaſâ & Chadighâ juramento adactum promiſiſſe, modo tacerent, ab iſthac puellâ poſthac abſtenturum; verum quod non ſervarit: quare illæ eum deſuerint, & ad patrias reverſæ ſint ædes. Quem tumultum ut ſedaret iterum, more ſolito, divinum commentus hoc reſponſum fuit, quod eſt cap. de prohibitione, quo datur viris cum ancillis congrediendi poteſtas (ancilla quippe Muhammedis erat etiam illa Marina,) quando & quouſque libuerit, nequidquam reclamantibus & æmulantibus uxoribus. Sed jam ante hanc confictam legem id facinus commiſerat, & fidem de non committendo interpoſuerat, perjurus adulter & ſtuprator (c). With an Impudence that cannot be ſufficiently admir'd, he forg'd, that God forbid Inceſt to other Men, but allow'd it in him by a peculiar Grace. (d) ' Alius ſevere ipſe interdixit, cap. de mulieribus, ne quaſcunque & conſanguineas ducant: ne commiſceamini cum mulieribus, quæ cognitæ fuerunt à Patribus veſtris, quoniam turpe eſt & malum, & iniquum: prohibitæ ſunt vobis matres veſtræ, & filiæ veſtræ, & amitæ veſtræ, & patrueles veſtræ, & filiæ fratris veſtri, & filiæ ſororis veſtræ, &c. Sibi vero licentiam tribuit, quaſi ex oraculo divino, quam libet potiundi, Cap. de hæreſibus, vel ſectis. O Propheta, nos certe concedimus tibi, inquit ei Deus, poteſtatem in uxores tuas omnes quibus dederis mercedes ſuas, & quaſcunque acceperit manus tua, & filias patrui tui, & filias amitæ tuæ, & filias fratris matris tuæ, & filias materteræ tuæ, quæ peregrinatæ ſunt te-

(i) Ibid. pag. 19.

(k) i. e. Ali.

(l) The preſent State of the Ottoman Empire To. 2. p. 456.

(m) Beſpier's curious Remarks To. 2. p. 681.

(n) Of the Religion of the Turks l. 1. ch. 2. apud Beſpier Ibid. p. 682.

(o) Beſpier ibid.

(p) Pfeiffer in Theologiæ Mahommedicæ principiis ſubleſtis, in the Univerſal Bibliotheq. Tom. 7. p. 257.

boldneſs to forbid it to his Followers, and to allow himſelf in it by a ſpecial Privilege. Mr. Moreri relates a Story to which he forgot to add an eſſential Circumſtance, which is, concerning the Man that was ſmother'd with Stones in a (V) dry Well. One of the moſt impertinent Lyes that have been publiſh'd concerning Mahomet, is, that he was a Cardinal (X). There are ſome Doctors, even in the Communion of the Proteſtants, who have taken him for Anti-Chriſt (Y). I cannot believe that his dead Body

' cum, & quamcunque mulierem credentem, quæ ' ſe tibi Prophetæ proſtituere voluerit, idque tibi ' ſpeciatim, & ſingulariter conceditur ; non verò ' aliis quibuſcunque. Dignum certe Prophetâ privilegium! Et poſt : copulare cum quacunque ex ' illis tibi libuerit, & tecum fac inhabitare quamcunque volueris, & non erit tibi crimini, vel ad ' hanc accedere, vel ab illâ recedere. Hoc autem ' parum eſt : verum etiam gratum habeant ipſæ ' quicquid tibi libuerit, & non contriſtentur, & ' complaceant ſibi de quacunque re quam illis dederis. Propudium hominis! ſibi primas in promiſcuâ ' & turpiſſimâ libidine explendâ concedens partes.' He durſt not always ſtretch his Prerogative, for he ſaid he was forbid, for the future, to take away his Neighbour's Wife. He was contented to tell the World, That God approv'd what was paſt, provided he did not relapſe into it again. For the better underſtanding of this, we muſt know, that Mahomet had already married Nine Wives, and then eſpous'd a Tenth, which he took from his Servant ; who murmur'd at it, and cry'd out for this Injury The Falſe-Propher, to huſh up the Scandal, made a ſhew of deſiring to reſtore what he had taken, but becauſe he had not really a mind to it, he quickly found out a way to diſpenſe with it. He feign'd, that God had cenſur'd this Reſolution, and had order'd him to keep his Tenth Wife, without paying any Deference to Humane Scandal, to the prejudice of a Celeſtial Approbation. (e) Illam (uxorem ſervi ſui Zaidis) conſtupratam mox quaſi ex divino iterum oraculo deſponſavit in uxorem, quamvis novem alias ſtipatus. Quare ut, tum aliis hoc indignantibus factum, tum ſervo Zaidi ſatisfaceret, introduxit in Alkorano, capite citato, Deum ſe reprehendentem, quod cogitaſſet uxorem Zaidi reddere, ab offenſam, quam hinc nempe homines capiebant : ' Ut cum diceres illi, cui Deus ' beneficia contulit, & tu quoque contuliſti : accipe tibi uxorem tuam, & time Deum, & abſcondebas in corde tuo quod Deus operebatur, ' & timebas homines, & Deus dignior eſt ut ' timeas eum. Cum ergo Zaidus illam cognoverit, ' ſeu deſloraverit eam, nos copulavimus eam tibi, ' ne ſit fidelibus peccatum in uxoribus deſideriorum ' eorum, cum cognoverint eas, & imperium Dei ' complerum eſt : non eſt imputandum ad culpam ' Prophetæ illud, quod Deus ei ſpeciatim permiſit.' He perceiv'd very well that this would alarm all Husbands againſt him ; and therefore, to ſatisfie every Body, he publiſh'd, That for the future, by the Order of God, (f) he would let Husbands enjoy their own Wives, tho' he ſhould fall in love with them.

(e) Id. ib. p. 117.

(f) Non licebit tibi poſt hac, O Mahomet, ut auferas uxores à viris ſuis, etiamſi earum pulchritudine captus fueris. Apud eundem ibid.

(U) Smother'd with Stones in a dry Well.] This Adventure appears at the end of a long Paſſage, which is now to be ſet down, and which contains many Things concerning our Falſe Prophet. (g) " Seeing that he was very ſubject to " Fits of the Falling-Sickneſs, he thought fit " to make his Friends believe, that the moſt " violent Paroxiſms of his Epilepſy were ſo " many Ecſtaſies, and Signs of the Spirit of " God that deſcended on him : He perſuaded " them alſo, that a White Pigeon, which came to " eat Corn in his Ear, was the Angel Gabriel, " who came to declare to him, in the Name of " the ſame God, what he was to do. After this, " he made uſe of the Monk Sergius to compoſe an Alcoran, which he feign'd to be dictated to him by " the very Mouth of God. Laſtly, he drew in a famous " Aſtrologer, to diſpoſe the People, by the Predictions " he made, about the Change of Affairs that was " to happen, and the New Law that a Great Prophet was to eſtabliſh, the more eaſily to receive " his, when he came to publiſh it. But perceiving once, that his Secretary, Abdala Ben-Salon, againſt whom he had a groundleſs Pique, " begun to diſcover and publiſh ſuch Impoſtures, " he cut his Throat one night in his own Houſe, " and ſet fire to the four corners of it, with a " deſign to perſuade the People next morning, " that this happen'd by a Fire from Heaven, to " chaſtiſe the ſaid Secretary, who had attempted " to change and corrupt ſome Paſſages of the " Alcoran. Nevertheleſs, this Contrivance was " not thought ſufficient to his Purpoſe, he wanted " ſtill one to finiſh the Myſtery, which he did, by " perſuading one of his faithfulleſt Domeſticks to " deſcend to the bottom of a Well which was " near a great High-way, and then to cry a- " loud to the great multitude of People that " paſſed by, which commonly follow'd him, " Mahomet is the Well-beloved of God! Mahomet " is the Well-beloved of God! And this happening " to be done after the ſame manner as he had " propos'd, he preſently Thank'd the Divine " Goodneſs for a Teſtimony ſo remarkable, and " pray'd all the People that follow'd him, inſtantly to fill up this Pit, and build over it a little " Moſque, in memory of ſuch a Miracle ; by " which means this poor Domeſtick was preſently " kill'd, and buried under a ſhowre of Stones, " and ſo there was no poſſible way left of diſcover- " ing the Falſhood of this Miracle, Excepit ſed " terra ſonum, calamique loquaces(h)". Naudæus forgot to tell us, how the Publick was inform'd that Mahomet had ſuborn'd this Man. Why had he not the Wit to ſuppoſe, that this Wretch had reveal'd the whole Secret to his Wife, who did not fail to tell her Neighbours, and Paſſengers, after ſhe was made acquainted with the Tragical End of her Husband ? The Latin words which Naudæus cites, are only an ingenious Application of a Circumſtance of the Fable of Midas ; but it no ways clears this Matter, nay rather it inſinuates, that he was not able to find out how this Contrivance came to be diſcover'd. As to the Pigeon, mention'd by Naudæus, I muſt tell you, that Dr. Pocock, having read the Story in the 6th Book of Grotius, (i) de Veritate Religionis Chriſtianæ, deſir'd Grotius to acquaint him where he had ſuch a thing, which is not to be found in any Arabick Author He anſwer'd, That he had related it only upon the Credit of the Chriſtian Authors Grotius (k) nonnulla recenſens colombæ ad Mohammedis aurem adſolare ſolitæ momenta ; cujus cum nullam apud eos mentionem reperirem ac clariſſimorum eam de re conſulerem, ſe in hoc narrando non Mohammediſtarum, ſed noſtrorum hominum fide nixum, dixit, ac præcipue Scaligeri, in cujus ad Manilium notis idem narratur. See the Remark CC.

(h) The Hiſtory of this Man, who was ſmother'd with Stones in a Well, is to be found in another Book of Naudæus, viz. in the Apology of the Great Men accus'd of Magick, p. 232, 233.

(i) Pag. m. 202.

(X) That he was a Cardinal.] (a) " Benevenuto " of Imola has ſaid it expreſsly, in his Commen- " taries upon Dante." Which is no leſs abſurd, than what was ſaid by him who wrote the Gloſs upon the Canon-Law, That Mahomet was the Head of the Nicolaitans. (b) Gloſſatorem autem Corporis Canonici qui Nicolaum Mahometum fuiſſe dixit æque abſurdum eſſe notat ac Benevenutum Imolenſem, qui Mahometum Sanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ Cardinalem fuiſſe aſſerit.

(k) Edv. Pocockius Not. in Spec. Hiſtor. Arabum, p. 186, 187.

(a) Naudæus D. al. de Maſſurat p. 45.

(b) Thomas Ittigius de Hæreſiarchis ævi Apoſtolici apud acta eruditi. Leipſ. An. 1690. p. 307, 308.

(Y) Who have taken him for Anti-chriſt.] See a Diſſertation, entitled, Anti-Chriſtus Mahometes, ubi non ſolum per S. Scripturam, ac Reformatorum teſtimonia, verum etiam per omnes alios probandi modos & genera, plenè, fusè, invictè, ſolidèque demonſtratur MAHOMETEM eſſe Unum illum verum, Magnum, de quo in ſacris fit mentio, Anti-Chriſtum It was Printed (c) in the Year 1666. Cornelius Uythagius, a Doctor of Divinity, who is the Author of it, and ſhews very much Zeal againſt Popery, affirms in his Preface, That he does only lay open and prove the Opinion of ſome Reformers. Sunt ſemperque fuerunt, ſays he, qui Mahometem pro Ant.-Chriſto illo magno agnoverunt, & per Babylonem civitatem illam magnam Apoc. cap. 17. nobis deſcriptam, Conſtantinopolim, Romam Novam intellexerunt, inter quos ſunt, antiquiſſimus Theologorum Arethas Cæſareæ Cappadociæ Epiſcopus. Angelus Græcus, qui Conſtantinopoli anxit Cælum Secundas Curio. Wenceſlaus Budowec. Cæſaris conſiliarius, qui aliquandiu Conſtantinopoli degit : Boskiercus ; & inter noſtros Reformatos magnus ille Melanctlon, Butcerus, Muſculus, Zanchius : & ſi qui cum (c) At Amſterdam, apud Joannem Raveſteynium. in 12.

Body was eaten (Z) by Dogs, as many have affirm'd; and Father Louis Maracci had juſt Occaſion to obſerve, That the Chriſtians make ſome Reproaches againſt the Sect of Mahomet, which proceed from ſo great an ignorance of Matters of Fact, that the Infidels laugh at them, and grow more obſtinate in their Infidelity *. There has been publiſh'd a Teſtament (AA) under the Name of Mahomet, which has very much the Air of a Forgery: It is a Treatiſe of Mutual Toleration, recentiores, tum antiqui cum illis. The Biſhop of Meaux names other Writers who are of that Opinion: His words are theſe: (d) "If every thing muſt "be referred to the end of the World, and to the "time of Antichriſt, would ſo many learned Men "of the laſt Age, as Annius Viterbienſis, John Hau-"tenius of Mechlen, and our Doctors Jodocus Cli-"toveus, Genebrard, and Feuardentius, who praiſes "and follows thoſe grave Authors, have been "permitted to acknowledge the Beaſt and Anti-"Chriſt to be Mahomet, and Enoch and Elias to be "the Two Witneſſes of Sr. John?

* Eſſe etiam in illis dicit qui ex rerum Turcicarum ignorantia in medidium proferant quæ riſum potius Mahumetanis excitent, ac in errore eos obſtinatiores reddant. Lud. Maraccius è congregazione Clericorum Regularium Matris Dei in prodromo ad refutationem Alcorani apud Acta Erudit. Lipſ. 1692. p. 329.

(Z) That his dead Body was eaten by Dogs. ] Camerarius has inſerted this Story in Chap 1. of Book 3. of Tome 1. of his Hiſtorical Meditations (e). He quotes his Author. "Mahomet had foretold to "his Diſciples, That he would depart out of "this World in the Tenth Year of his Reign, but "that on the Third Day he ſhould Riſe again. "Whereupon one of his Diſciples, having a mind "to try whether he ſpake truth, poiſon'd his "Drink; and he having drunk it off, and finding "himſelf near his End, ſaid to thoſe that were "about him, By Water ye ſhall receive Remiſſion of "Sins; and then all on a ſudden he Died. His "Diſciples guarded the Body, expecting the "Iſſue of his Prediction; but his Body ſtunk "that they could not endure the ſmell of it, "ſo they threw it by, and returning again after "ten Days, they found it had been eaten by "Dogs. I was willing to tranſcribe this Story "from the Spaniſh Chronicle written by John Va-"ſæus, who ſays that he had it from an Author "call'd Lucas Tudenſis; becauſe I do not remember "that I had read it elſewhere." I find in Vaſæus that he relates this under the Year 628, and cites Lucas Tudenſis, with ſome Limitation; hæc ſive Lucas Tudenſis, ſays he. Baronius has inſerted in his Annals (f) a fragment of the Apology of Eulogius, an Author of the VIIIth Century. There are in this fragment many little Tales, and among the reſt, that which I have juſt now related; but it is there, with a Circumſtance that deſerves to be noted; which is, that Mahomet had aſſur'd his Diſciples, that the Angel Gabriel would come to raiſe him on the Third Day. They kept about the Body for all that time, and then they retir'd, imagining that their Preſence frighted the Angels; but when no body guarded the Body, the Dogs came and eat it, who left but very little of it, which was buried by the Diſciples of this Impoſtor; and in Revenge for this Affront, they put to death every year many Dogs. Baronius refers us to many Volumes that have been written about the Life of Mahomet; and he confeſſes, that he did the more eaſily refrain from making uſe of them, becauſe he found many Lyes in them. (g) Abſtinuimus libentius quod multa fabuloſa in eis poſita invenerimus. A Lutheran Author, whom I have cited twice or thrice, and who relates this Story, without believing it, has nam'd divers Authors who make mention of it. Take notice of his Citations. (1) Cadaver aliquot diebus manſiſſe inſepultum, quod tertio die ſe reſurrecturum dixiſſet, poſteà verò à canibus arroſum ſerbent Eulogius & Vincentius (2). Sed-cum parcum ſemper fuiſſe Mahammedem in jactandis miraculis, & ferro, non prodigioſâ virtute ſuam propagandam eſſe ſcripſ rit ſectam, hanc narrationem ſuis potius retinuimus autoribus. Father Maracci was not ſo incredulous; for he did not reject thoſe who ſaid, That the Diſciples of Mahomet, upon account of the difference among them about the Primacy, ſo neglected his Body, that the Dogs tore it in pieces. He goes upon this ground, that there are ſome Relations which ſay, That the Sepulchre of this Falſe-Prophet contains but a ſmall parcel of his Carkaſs. (i) Exiguam corporis portionem in illo invenire, colligit Auctor noſter non abſimile vero eſſe, quod graves ſcriptores prodiderunt, [illegible] pus Mahumeti de imperio proceres certantes, cadaver ejus, nomine in tumultu cuſtodiente, à canibus dilaceratum fuiſſe.

(AA) A Teſtament under the Name of Mahomet. ] There was Printed at Paris in Latin and Arabick, in 1630. a Book entitled, Teſtamentum & Pactiones initæ inter Muhammedum & Chriſtianæ fidei cultores. Father Scaliger, a Capuchin, brought the M. S. of it from the Eaſt. Gabriel Sionita is the Author of the Latin Tranſlation. John Fabritius publiſh'd this Teſtament in Latin at Roſtock, in 1638. Mr. Hinkelman, Miniſter of Hamburg (k), publiſh'd it in Latin and Arabick in 1690. The Criticks are of different Opinions upon this Queſtion, Whether this be a genuine Piece or no? Grotius believes it to be a Forgery. Edidit Gabriel Sionita, ſays he (l), ita diebus teſtamentum Muhammedis & [illegible] indultum potius ejus in gratiam Chriſtianorum, quod dubiè à Chriſtianis ſuppoſitum, ut ſub obtentu tanti nominis Muſulmanis æquioribus uterentur. Ille tamen genuinum eſſe affirmat, & perſuadet ita qui naſum non habent. Voetius (m), Hoornbeek (n), Beſpier (o), and many other Miniſters, embrace this Opinion. Hottinger (p), who had not ſeen the Arabick, durſt not determine the Queſtion. Salmaſius is of Opinion that it is a genuine Piece. (q) Vidi nuper teſtamentum Muhammedis. De veritate ejus nullus dubito. Sed nollem ita reddidiſſet interpres; nihil enim minus quam teſtamentum. Fœdus eſt & pactio qua ſecuritatem Chriſtianis dedit, cujus & mentionem facere videtur Almachinus in vita Muhammedis: ubi narrat ex hiſtoriis Chriſtianorum, additum fuiſſe Chriſtianis illum Impoſtorem & benevolum; & cum ad ipſum quidam Chriſtiani veniſſent petentes ſecuritatem, impoſuiſſe his tributum atque in fidem eos ſuſcepiſſe. Mr. Hinkelman is of the ſame opinion with Salmaſius; and ſo was alſo Sir Paul Ricaut, for endeavouring to prove, that Mahomet us'd Craft at the beginning, by making a falſe Shew of a ſincere Intention to live peaceably with the Chriſtians, he ſays, (s) That this Falſe-Prophet "made a Treaty with them, the Ori-"ginal whereof was found in the Monaſtery "of Mount Carmel:" And then he adds theſe words, (t) "'Tis ſaid, that this Original (u) "was carry'd from this Place into France, and "put in the King's Library. Since it is An-"cient and Curious, I think it will not be im-"proper here to give you the Interpretation of it." Having related the Tenour of it, he goes on after this manner: (w) "Altho' the Turks deny that "this Treaty is Mahomet's, yet there are very "good Authors who believe it to be genuine, "and that it was made at the Time ſet down at "the end of it, viz. when the Empire of Mahomet "was yet very weak, and in its Infancy; for at "this time he was at War with the Arabians, and "fear'd leſt the Chriſtians ſhould Declare againſt "him: Wherefore, to prevent his being attack'd "by two Enemies at once, he made this Treaty "with them (x) in the Monaſtery of the Monks "of Mount Carmel, from whence theſe auſtere "Regulars derive their Name." That which is certain, is that at the time (y) when it is ſuppos'd that Mahomet made this Agreement with the Chriſtians, it was good Policy in him not to provoke them. There is a Paſſage in the Alcoran, which promiſes Infidels Liberty of Conſci[illegible] Sir Paul Ricaut cites it (z). He might have [illegible] Paſſage of Elmacin, which informs us, that [illegible]ect treated very civilly a Troop of Chriſtians who came to deſire [illegible]is, ann. 1630. and at Roſtock in 1638. (w) Ibid. P. 316, (x) Beſpier make[illegible] here this Remark. This is not at all pro-[illegible] nay the Treaty[illegible]'d at Medina, as the Piece ſays, and therefore could not b[illegible] in the Monaſtery of Mount Carmel, which is more than 200 [illegible]gues diſtant fr[illegible]dina. (y) Viz. in the 4th Year of the [illegible]gyra. (z) Ib. 30[illegible] the Thoughts upon Comets, n. 244.

(k) See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, Octob. 1690. p. 80.

(l) Grotius Epiſt. ad Gallos, p. 239. apud Hotting. Hiſt. Orient. l. 2. c. 2. p. 237.

(m) Voetius, Diſput. Theol. Tom. 2. p. 668.

(n) Hoornbeek, ubi ſupra, p. 88.

(o) Beſpier's Remarks upon Ricaut, Tome 2. p. 623.

(p) Hotting. ibid.

(q) Salmaſ. Epiſt. 20. l. 1. p. 44.

(r) See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, ubi ſupra.

(s) Ricaut's State of the Ottom. Empire, l. 2. c. 2. p. 307.

(t) Ib. p. 308.

(u) He did not know that this Book was publiſh'd

(a) Ad. Ann. 632. n. 9, & ſeq.

(b) A Lutheran Author, ubi ſup. p. 17.

(c) P. 204, 205. I make uſe of the Tranſlation of Simon Goulart.

(d) Biſhop of Meaux, Preface upon the Apocalypſe n. 13. p. m. 32, 33.

(e) Camerar. Operæ Subſecivæ, Tom. 1. Cent. 7. c. 5. ſ. m. 364. Conſer. Acta Mahometis Francofurti cum iconibus Edita ann. 1597. p. 261. (f) Ludov. Marac. ejus in Prodromo ad refutat. Alcorani apud Acta erudit Lipſ. 1692. p. 331.

(g) Ibid. n. 12.

(1) Hotting. Hiſt. Orient. l. 2. c. 4. p. 273.

(2) Apud Baron. ann. 630. n. 9. l. 21. c. 47. apud Magd. Cent. 7.

which, they ſay, was Concluded between him and the Chriſtians. Proofs of the Forgery may be drawn from (AA△) the Piece it ſelf. But however this be, 'tis certain, that at the beginning, he had more Humanity for them than for the Jews, which [redacted] ſomething ſtrange; for appearing with the Splendour of a Conqueror, he was th[redacted]re likely to get himſelf followed by the Jewiſh Nation, as the Meſſias (BB) which leſire of n[redacted]e-guard (d); for upon this Occaſion he diſ[redacted]ſuch Orders as made 'em ſure of his Protection. Sir Paul Ricaut therefore had good reaſon to ſay, That Mahomet, at the beginning, offer'd Peace to the Chriſtians: But his Reaſons are not ſo ſtrong, whereby he pr[redacted]nds to prove, that they appear'd formidable to th[redacted]ſe-Propher. "The Chriſtians, ſays he (e), rec[redacted]nded themſelves by their Zeal, their Devotion, and the "Practice of all ſorts of Virtues. All this "concurr'd with the Purity of their Doctrine, "and a holy and firm Union in the Profeſſion of "the Faith: And becauſe the Emperors were then "Chriſtians, Chriſtianity was not maintain'd only "by Patience, Sufferings, and Hope, as it had "been in the firſt Ages, but was alſo ſupported "by the Arms and Protection of the Emperors." This is contrary to the general Opinion. 'Tis generally agreed, That the Diviſions among Chriſtians, their Vices, and thoſe of the Imperial Court (f), did extremely facilitate the Progreſs of Mahometiſm.

[redacted]---ſecuritatis inſtrumentum ſcripſit. I make uſe of a bold Verſion. See Hotting. ubi ſupra, p. 36. citing Elmacin. Hiſt. Sarac. p. 11.

(e) P. 305.

I cannot proceed to another thing, till I have made a Reflection upon this. The Mahometans, according to the Principles of their Faith, are oblig'd to employ Violence to deſtroy other Religions, and yet they tolerate them now, and have done ſo for many Ages. The Chriſtians have no Order, but to Preach and Inſtruct; and yet, time out of mind, they deſtroy, with Fire and Sword, thoſe who are not of their Religion. "When you meet "with Infidels, ſays Mahomet (g), Kill them, cut off "their Heads, or take them Priſoners, and put "them in Chains till they have paid their Ranſom, or you find it convenient to ſet them "at Liberty. Be not afraid to Perſecute them, "till they have laid down their Arms, and ſubmitted to you." Nevertheleſs, 'tis true, that the Saracens did quickly leave off the Ways of Violence; and that the Greek Churches, as well the Orthodox as the Schiſmatical, have been preſerv'd to this day under the Yoke of Mahomet. They have their Patriarchs, their Metropolitans, their Synods, their Diſcipline, their Monks. I know very well, that they ſuffer much under ſuch a Maſter; but, after all, they have more reaſon to complain of the Covetouſneſs and Extortions of the Turks, than of their Sword. The Saracens (h) were ſtill more gentle than the Turks. See the Proofs of it given by Mr. Jurieu (i), which are taken out of Elmacin and Eutychius. It may be affirm'd for certain, That if the Weſtern Princes had been Lords of Aſia, inſtead of the Saracens and Turks, there would be now no Remnant of the Greek Church, and they would not have Tolerated Mahometiſm, as theſe Infidels have Tolerated Chriſtianity. Let us hear Mr. Jurieu himſelf (k): "It may be "truly ſaid, That there is no Compariſon between "the Cruelty of the Saracens againſt the Chriſtians, "and that of Popery againſt the true Believers In the "Wars againſt the Vaudois, or even in the Maſſacres "which began on S. Bartholomew's Day, there was "more Blood ſpilt upon the account of Religion, "than was ſpilt by the Saracens in all their Perſecutions of the Chriſtians. 'Tis expedient to cure Men "of this Prejudice, That Mahometiſm is a Cruel Sect, "which was propagated, by putting Men to their "Choice of Death, or the Abjuration of Chriſtianity. This is in no-wiſe true; and the Conduct of [redacted]racens was an Evangelical Meekneſs, [redacted] compariſon of that of Popery, which exceeded [redacted] Cruelty of the Cannibals. It is not "therefore the Cruelty of the Mahometans which "has deſtroy'd Chriſtianity in the Eaſt and South, "but their Avarice. They made the Chriſtians pay "dear for their Liberty of Conſcience; "impos'd upon them heavy Taxes; they "them often redeem t[redacted]hurches, which "ſometimes ſold to [redacted]ews, and then the "[redacted]s muſt re[redacted] them again: Po[redacted] deſtroys Wit, and abates Courage. "[redacted] above all, Mahometiſm has deſtroy'd Chri[redacted] by Ignorance." He repeats the ſame thing, in fewer words, in one of his (l) Paſtoral Letters, ſuppoſing always that Chriſtianity was deſtroy'd under the Empire of the Mahometans. But he is miſtaken, and would have ſaid otherwiſe, had he better conſulted the Hiſtorians, but that, it ſeems, is none of his buſineſs. Let us proceed, and obſerve, That he tells us plainly, That the Saracens and Turks treated the Chriſtian Church with more Moderation, than the Chriſtians ſhow'd either to the Pagans, or to one another: For he obſerves (m), That the Chriſtian Emperors ruin'd Paganiſm, by demoliſhing its Temples, deſtroying its Images, by forbidding its Worſhip of Falſe-Gods; and that the Reform'd Princes aboliſh'd Popery, by burning its Images, by burying its Reliques in the ground, and forbidding all Idolatrous Worſhip. 'Tis plain, That the Sovereigns who forbid all on a ſudden a Religion, do uſe more Violence, than the Sovereigns who permit the Publick Exerciſe of it, and do only keep it under, as the Turks do to the Chriſtians.

The Concluſion which I would draw from all this, is, That Men are little govern'd by their Principles. The Turks, we ſee, Tolerate all ſorts of Religions, though the Alcoran enjoins them to Perſecute the Infidels: And the Chriſtians, we ſee, do nothing but Perſecute, though the Goſpel forbids them. They would make fine Work in the Indies, and in China, if the Secular Power there ſhould favour them: You may aſſure your ſelf, that they would make uſe of the Maxims of Mr Jurieu there. They have already done it in ſome Places. Read what follows, and you'll find, that Reaſons not being ſufficient to Convert the Infidels, the Viceroy of Goa was deſir'd to aſſiſt the Goſpel, by Decrees of Confiſcation, &c. (n) Cum neceſſarium eſſet, ut præter authoritatem Eccleſiæ poteſtas Principum Virorum ad ejuſmodi hanc frugem accederet, quæ obſtacula omnia amoliretur, Deus Dominus noſter Pro ea re tanquam inſtrumento in multis uſus eſt. Itaque ubi Bracmanni rationibus ſe dari victos agnoſcerent, ad diſſimulationem ſatis eſſe putabant, ut quoquo modo de cauſſis effugerent, quod ſe more Majorum vivere profiterentur. Sed cum pro innata animi pertinacia neque unquam ſe victos agnoſcerent, neque rationibus quantumlibet efficacibus crederent; Proceres in compendium miſſo negotio malo huic nodo malum cuneum opponit, legem promulgat, ut intra quadrageſimum diem a decreti promulgatione Bracmanes cum ſuis omnibus, qui Chriſtiani fieri nollent, ſuppellectili omni, quæque in ædibus & cenſu haberent, intra id tempus diſtractis, in exilium abirent; qui non parerent, jacturam ejus fortunæ, & ad triremes abruptum iri commentus eſt. See in the Margin (o).

(AA△) Proofs of the Forgery may be drawn from the Piece it ſelf.] Conſider a little the words of Dr. Prideaux (p). "Grotius rejects this Capitulation as a "Forgery, and not without reaſon For this Piece is "Dated in the 4th Year of the Hegira, at a time when "Mahomet was not in a Condition to ſpeak in ſuch "a manner, as he is made to ſpeak in that Writing, "his Power at that time being not ſo formidable "as to move any Perſons to pray him to grant "them his Protection; ſince he had been defeated "a little while before at the Battle of Ohud, where "he was ſo cruelly beaten, that at the Time when "this Capitulation is dated, viz. on the 4th Month "of this Year, he had not perfectly recovered "his Loſs, and found himſelf much lower than "ever he had been from the time he took the "Sword in hand for the Propagation of his Impoſture. "Beſides this, there is another Particular, which "moſt plainly diſcovers the Forgery of this "Piece; for, according to it, Hoawia, the Son "of Abu-Sophian, was then Secretary to Mahomet, "and drew up this Writing; and yet 'tis cer"tain, that Moawias, with his Father Abu-Sophian, "did then bear Arms againſt the Impoſtor; and "it was not till the time of Taking Mecca, which "was four Years after, that they join'd him, and "embrac'd his Impoſture, to ſave their Lives

(BB) At the Meſſias which the Jews expected] There are ſome Authors who ſay, That Mahomet,

(i) The Hiſtory of the War 1688.

(m) See what I have cited before, out of the Rights of Sovereigns.

(n) Ludovicus Frois, in Epiſtola ad Fratres in Europa degentes ſcripta Goæ primo die Decembris, 1560. apud Damhaverum in Vale Triumphali, p. 19.

(o) The Barbarities which the Spaniards exercis'd in America are horrible.

(p) Prideaux, in the Life of Mahomet, p. 158, 159. of the Amſterdam Edition, 1698.

A COMPARISON between the Toleration of the Mahometans and that of the Chriſtians.

(f) See Hotting. ubi ſupra, p. 239.

(g) In the 9th Chap. of the Alcoran. See Ricaut, l. 2. c. 2. p. 318.

(h) See Ricaut, ib. & c. 3.

(i) Jurieu's Apology for the Reformation, Tome 2. [redacted] Edit. in 4°. See alſo, the Thoughts upon Comets, p. 738.

(k) Jurieu, ib.

which they expected. The Mahometans have a very great Veneration (CC) for him, as it appears by ſeveral Inſtances: They make very devout Pilgrimages to the Place of for ſome time, gave himſelf out for the Meſſias, and that he (q) applied to himſelf the Oracles of the Old Teſtament, which had been accompliſhed in Our Lord. By this Artifice, he drew a great many Jews after him; and the bad Condition of that Nation in Arabia, diſpos'd them ſo much the more to be ſeduc'd. 'Tis ſaid, That they did not break off from him, till he fled from Mecca; and there are hardly any good Reaſons given of this Rupture: For, to tell us, as ſome do, That they were diſguſted with him, becauſe they ſaw him eat of a Camel, is to fob us off with Fables. Neither can I underſtand, that they did at any time take him for the Meſſias; ſince, on the one hand, the Scripture ſays expreſsly, That the Meſſias ſhall ariſe out of the Family of David; and, on the other hand, it was notorious, that Mahomet was not deſcended from it, but was of a Pagan Race. However, let us cite the Authors that have ſaid what I have related. (a) Et quidem primis temporibus Muhammed ſe ipſum apud Chadigam uxorem, Arabes, Judæoſque venditabat pro Meſſia, quem Judæi expectarent, ut eſt apud Enuſtinum in Geneal. Mahom. p. 10. Abbas Urſpergenſis in Chronico, p. m. 150. Hic erat Pſeudo-Propheta, ſed apud illos magnus æſtimabatur, ita ut etiam in principio adventus ejus æſtimarent hunc eſſe illum, qui ab eis expectatur Chriſtus. - - - (b) Secuti hunc ſunt complures Judæi, qui Muhammedum illico pro vero agnovere Meſſia. Theophanes aliique iſtius temporis ſcriptores ſcribunt, Judæos adhæſiſſe Muhammedo uſque ad cædem illius; μεχρι σφαγης αυτου. Pro σφαγὴν rectius legi φυγὴν, uſque ad fugam illius, monet vir literarum Græcarum peritiſſimus Iſaacus Voſſius in allegatis ſibyllinis oraculis, p. 24. aſſerens Theophanem alioſque prævam ſecutos fuiſſe lectionem. Itidem tradunt receſſiſſe Judæos à Mahammedo, cum eum cameli carnibus veſcentem conſpexiſſent. Alias alii afferunt ſeparationis cauſas. 'Tis certain, the Jews did not follow Mahomet till his Death, for he Perſecuted them outrageouſly with his Sword and Pen; he deteſts them, in many places of his Alcoran; and the War he had with them, was very bloody and deadly to them (c). The Turks, in this, do wonderfully follow the Genius of their Prophet; for they have a greater Averſion to the Jews, than to any People in the World, and they will not permit a Jew who turns Mahometan to be buried in their Burying-places (d). But what ſome ſay, That they will not ſuffer a Jew who deſires to embrace Mahometiſm, to come over immediately to the Profeſſion of their Faith, but he muſt firſt turn Chriſtian before he becomes a Mahometan (e), is falſe.

(CC) They have a very great Veneration for Mahomet.] I might ſet down a great many Circumſtances to this Purpoſe, but I ſhall mention only a few. The Grand-Signior ( ) ſends every Year into Arabia " 500 Chequins, an Alcoran cover'd with " Gold, carry'd upon a Camel, and as much Black " Stuff as may ſerve the Moſque of Mecca for a " Tent. When this New Cover is put on, that " of the preceding Year is taken away, and the " Pilgrims preſently cut it in pieces, and every " one carries off what he can of it, ſome more, " ſome leſs. They keep this Rag in their " Houſe as a Relique, and as a Token of their Pil- " grimage. - - - - When the Camel which carries " the Alcoran returns, he is adorn'd with Flowers " and other Ornaments, and after he has made this " holy Journey, he is exempt, for all the reſt of his " Life, from any other Labour or Service (g)." The Turks (h) have a great Veneration for a Camel; " and they reckon it one of the greateſt " Sins, to lay too much burden upon him, and to " make him labour more than a Horſe. The reaſon " of this is, becauſe this Beaſt is very common " in the holy Places of Arabia, and it has the " honour to carry the Alcoran, when they go a " Pilgrimage to Mecca. I have obſerv'd, that " thoſe who take care of this Animal, take the " Froth which comes out of his Mouth, after " he has drank in a Trough, and rub it upon " their Beards with great Devotion, as if it were " a Balſam of great Value, and while they do it, " they repeat often, in a religious tone, Hadgi Baba! " Hadgi Baba! i. e. O Father Pilgrim! O Father " Pilgrim!" Here follows a Paſſage from La Mothe le Vayer (i): " Where-ever the Religion " of Mahomet obtains, thoſe of his Line which are " call'd (1) Cherifs, are held in ſo great Venera- " tion, that none but they dares wear a Green " Turbant (k), and they are even exempt from " all Suits in Courts. And 'tis no wonder the " Turks, and other Muſſulmans, ſhould reſpect the " Poſterity of this Impoſtor; ſince they ſo far " eſteem the Horſes that come from the Mare he " rode upon, that none dares beat them, or evil- " entreat them, as we learn from the Relation " of the Sieur de Breves." Many Pilgrims, after having ſeen the Sepulchre of Mahomet, put out their Eyes, as if all the reſt of the World were unworthy of any regard, after they have ſeen ſuch an Object. I have read this in Brantome: The Reader will not be diſpleaſed to know upon what occaſion he mentions it. " The Day being come, ſays he, " (l) that the Ambaſſadors (m) of Poland waited up- " on the Queen of Navarre, ſhe appear'd to them " ſo beautiful, ſo magnificently adorn'd, and " richly dreſs'd, with ſo great Majeſty and Grace, " that they were all confounded with the Sight of " ſo great a Beauty; and among others, there was " one Laſqui, one of the chief of the Embaſſy, " whom I ſaw at his withdrawing, ſo dazled " with the Splendour of this Beauty, that he ſaid, " I will not ſee any thing after it: I could willingly do as " ſome Turkiſh Pilgrims, when they come from Mecca, " where the Sepulchre of their Prophet Mahomet is, who " are ſo glad, ſo tranſported and raviſh'd with the Sight " of ſo fine and ſo ſtately a Moſque, that they will never " ſee any thing after it, and therefore they burn out " their Eyes with hot Braſs-plates which deſtroy " their Sight, and then they ſay, That after this, " there is nothing more fine to be ſeen, and they will " never ſee any thing more: So ſaid this Islander, " of the admirable Beauty of this Princeſs." Since the Authority of Brantome may not be ſufficient, I ſhall cite two Maronites, who tell us (n); Hinc factum eſt ut multi hujus loci deſiderio patriam conſanguineoſque reliquerint: plerique etiam tali inſaniæ dementiæque capti fuerint, ut ſibi ſponte oculos eruerint, ne ſcilicet quicquam mundanum, ut inquiunt, viderent: reliquum vitæ curriculum ibi peregerint. This puts me in mind of a Thought of Mr. Ogier: In Compoſing a Funeral Oration upon Philip IV. King of Spain, he uſed (o) " all the Knowledge " that he had acquired by the Exerciſe and " Study of many Years in the Art of Rheto- " rick, and then reſolv'd, that after this Work, he " would never concern himſelf with Eloquence; " but follow the Example of a Lord in the " Low-Countries, who, after he had Regal'd Charles V. " in one of his Houſes, blew it up with Gun- " powder the next Day, as judging that no " Man was worthy to be receiv'd into it after that " Incomparable Prince". I have not yet related all the Honours that are done to Beaſts, for the Love of Mahomet. There are in the Territory of Mecca an infinite number of Pigeons; for, becauſe they are thought to be the Off-ſpring of that which came to the Falſe Prophet's Ear, therefore it is accounted a great Crime, not only to kill them, but even to take them or put them to flight. Summa columbarum copia invenitur, quæ quia ſunt de genere atque ſtirpe ejus, quæ ad Mahometis aures (ut Moſlemanni nugantur) accedebat, eo pollent privilegio atque auctoritate, ut non ſolum eas occidere, ſed eas capere aut fugare nefas eſſe exiſtiment (q). I have tranſcrib'd this Paſſage, to ſhow, that there are famous Writers who affirm, that the Muſſulmans mention this Dove which came to Mahomet's Ear, of which the Arabick Authors have ſaid nothing, if we believe Dr. Pocock (r). We muſt not forget the Camel which (s) " carry'd Ma- " homet from Mecca as far as Medina, to the Door of " the Houſe of Jul, a famous Turkiſh Captain, whom " this Prophet had a mind to viſit, without know- " ing the Houſe where this Valiant Man liv'd." The Mahometans pretend, that this Camel (t) will riſe again, and enjoy the Happineſs of Paradiſe. What (q) Plerique Veteris Inſtrumenti loca ad Meſſiam pertinentia impleverit, uti olim jam obſervatum Petro Cluniacenſi apud Iſaacum Voſſium in ſcripto de Sibyllinis Oraculis, p. 25. Joh. à Lent, de Judæorum Pſeudo-Meſſiis, p. 28, 29.

(a) Ibid. p. 29.

(b) Ibid. p. 30.

(c) See Hotting. ubi ſupra, p. 214, &c. Joh. à Lent, ubi ſupra, p. 30. ex Elmacino, p. 6.

(d) Ricaut, ubi ſupra, c. 3. p. 325.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Ricaut, State of the Ottoman Empire, l. 2. c. 23. p. m. 482.

(g) I have read, in the Relation of the Entry of Clement VIII. into Ferrara, that the Horſe or Mule which ſerv'd for this Ceremony, was never put to work afterwards.

(h) Id. ib. c 26.

(i) Moth Vayer, Tom. 8.

(1) Leo Africanus.

(k) Spon Voyage, Tom. 2. p. 16. affirms, That thoſe who are Born when their Mother makes a Journey to Mecca, have the ſame Privilege, of wearing the Green Turbant.

(l) The Lives of Illuſtrious Ladies, in the Diſcourſe of Queen Margaret, f. 205.

(m) Thoſe who offer'd the Crown to the Duke of Anjou, Brother to Charles IX.

(n) Gabriel Sionita, & John Heſronita, ubi infra, p. 26.

(o) Journal of the Learned, Febr. 22. 1666. p.m. 160, 161.

(q) Gabriel Sionita, & Joannes Heſronita, in Tractatu de nonnullis Orientalium urbibus, c. 7. p. 21. (r) See above, p. 1979. at the end. (s) Chevreau, ubi ſupra. p. 14. (t) Id ib.

of his Nativity, and to the Place where his Tomb is. 'Tis not true, that this Tomb hangs (DD) in the Air, as many Writers who tranſcribe one from another have affirm'd; neither is it very certain that any Architect is capable of making ſuch a Con-

(k) See a Mohe le Payer letter 116. Tome 2. p. 33. He cites the Voyage of Gouz.

(w) In the 2*d Tome of* Muſæum Italicum.

(x) Cap. 125. See the Univerſal Bibliotheque, Tome 7. p. 177.

(y) Univerſal Bibliothec. Tome 10. p. 98. in an Abſtract of a Book publiſh'd by Mr. Barrow, entitled, An Abridgment of the Faith and Religion of the Turks.

(a) Ib. p. 100.

(b) In the Article Fatima, Remark D.

(c) P. 264.

(d) Experientia hactenus docuit, & quotidie etiamnum noſtrates docet in Indiæ Orientalis Moluccis, regno Tarnatano, &c. ab Ethniciſmo plures poſſe converti, à Muhammediſmo fere nullos aut pauciſmos. Gisb. Voet. Diſp. Tome 2. p. 668.

(e) See the words of Voet. which I have cited juſt now.

What ſhall we ſay of Mahomet's Shirt? It is kept at Cairo in Egypt, and (u) carry'd in Proceſſion, on certain Days, with great Ceremony.

The Muſſulmans never teſtified their Veneration for Mahomet, by erecting Statues to him; and therefore 'tis falſe, what we read in the Hiſtory of the Holy War, publiſh'd by Father Mabillon (w). The Author there ſpeaks of a Statue of Mahomet, found in a Moſque which he calls the Temple of Solomon. He ſays, (x) "That Tancred found it "ſeated on a very high Throne, and that it was "ſo heavy, that Six of the ſtrongeſt Men could hardly "carry it, and that there muſt be Ten at leaſt to raiſe "it up. Tancred made a very pathetical Harangue "to this Statue, wherein he owns that it was "Mahomet's, and cries out, It is this wicked Ma"homet who was the firſt Antichriſt. If the Anti"chriſt that is to come, was now here with this, truly, I "would quickly have cruſh'd him under my Feet. Thoſe "who know any thing of the Mahometan Sentiments, know very well, that they do not keep "any Images, neither in their Moſques, nor in "their Houſes." 'Tis a Queſtion, whether the Muſſulmans invoke this Falſe-Prophet, and believe that he is in Heaven: Many aſcribe ſuch a Belief to 'em. (y) "But there is none of their ſolemn Prayers "which they do not directly addreſs to God, to "whom they Pray even for Mahomet; and they "maintain, That all Souls, that of the Prophet as well "as others, are, until the Day of Judgment, in the "Tombs where their Bodies are buried——— "(a) The Soul of Mahomet is alſo ſhut up in his "Sepulchre; for he refus'd to go to Heaven, "when God offer'd to receive him there, becauſe "he would not be without his Faithful. This "Soul ſhall conduct, at the Laſt Day, all the "Mahometan Souls to Heavenly Glory.——— "That you may ſee they Pray to God for Ma"homet, here follows the Concluſion of one of "their Prayers: O my God, be propitious to Ma"homet, and to the Mahometan People, as thou waſt "propitious to Abraham and his People, becauſe they "praiſe and glorify thee." If there be no better Proofs that Mahomet is not Invok'd by his Followers, I would not deny but that he is; for I have related a Form of Prayer (b), which ſhows, that they Invoke God for the ſame Saints whom they Invoke. As to their veneration for the Alcoran, ſee what Mr. Pfeiffer ſays in the 7th Vol. of his Univerſal Bibliotheque (c). They adhere ſo firmly to Mahometiſm, that ſcarce any can be Converted from it to the Chriſtian Religion (d), and without doubt, there are many more Chriſtians that turn Mahometans, than Mahometans who embrace the Goſpel. The Pagans (e) are more eaſie to be Converted. The Diſtinction which Richardus the Monk uſes, appears to me to be vain; he ſays, That a Mahometan would more eaſily turn Chriſtian at the Point of Death, than when he is in Good-health; and that a Chriſtian would by no means embrace Mahometiſm at the hour of Death; that therefore both of them are agreed, That the Mahometan Religion is more Convenient for Living, and the Chriſtian more Safe for Dying. (f) Chriſtianus quidem nunquam in morte fieret Saracenus, ſed in vita; Saracenus autem potius in morte fit Chriſtianus, quam in vita: uterque igitur horum potius eligit Chriſtianus mori, quam Saracenus. This Diſtinction is an Advantage whereof the Roman-Catholicks and the Reformed equally boaſt. See the Remark E. of the Article Abulpharagius. But the truth is, except a few People, every body wiſhes to Die in that Religion in which he was Educated. If any one quit it for ſome Temporal Advantage, that Advantage is of no uſe to him when he comes to die, and therefore he wiſhes to die in his firſt Communion. A Mahometan is in the ſame Condition with others, if he abjures his Faith for Worldly Conſiderations: For Ignorance does the ſame thing in the Heart of theſe Infidels, that Knowledge does in the Heart of an Orthodox honeſt Man; I mean, it makes them adhere invincibly to their Opinions. But I muſt obſerve, by the bye, that the Mahometan Religion is not ſo deſtitute of Apologiſts as is commonly believ'd. There are ſome Arabians who have written in favour of the Alcoran, and againſt the Bible, with great Pains and Skill, to foment Prejudices. Hottinger ſpeaks of an Author (g) who has laid open the apparent Contradictions of the Bible, and pretends to prove the Miſſion of Mahomet even from that Book. We ſhould be very ſimple, to think that a Turk who examines this, finds it as groundleſs as we do. He perceives no Force in the Objections againſt the Alcoran, but he ſees much Strength in the Objections againſt the Chriſtians. So great is the Power of Prejudices!

(DD) That his Tomb hangs in the Air.] An infinite Number of People ſay and believe, that Mahomet's Tomb being of Iron under a Vault of Loadſtones, hangs in the Air, and that this paſſes for a great Miracle in the Opinion of his Followers: But 'tis a Fable which they laugh at (h), when they know that the Chriſtians relate it as a certain Matter of Fact: And if they had us'd any ſuch Trick, it is no more than what a King of Egypt formerly attempted to do; who had a Deſign to procure the ſame Advantage to the Statue of his Spouſe, but his own Death and that of the Architect hinder'd him from putting it in Execution (i) Magnete lapide Dinocharen architectus Alexandriæ Arſinoës templum concamerare inchoaverat, ut in eo ſimulacrum ejus è ferro pendere in aëre videretur. Interceſſit mors & ipſius & Ptolemæi, qui id ſorori ſuæ juſſerat fieri. But if we believe Auſonius, this Deſign was executed, for he ſpeaks of it as of a Thing that did actually exiſt; but becauſe the Poets do not ſo narrowly conſider Things, let us rather believe what Pliny ſays.

Conditor Ille forſan fuerit Ptolemaïdos aulæ
Dinocharen: quadro cui in faſtigia cono
Surgit, & ipſa ſuas conſumit Pyramis umbras,
Juſſus ob inceſti qui quondam fœdus amoris
Arſinoen Pharii ſuſpendit in aere templi.
Spirat enim tecti teſtudine vera Magnetis,
Afficitque trahit ferrato crine puellam (k).

S. Auſtin did not at all doubt but that by human Skill and Induſtry ſuch a Thing had been produc'd. He does not ſet down the Place (l), but ſays only that in a certain Temple there was to be ſeen a certain Statue hanging in the Air, equally diſtant from the Pavement and the Roof, becauſe the Loadſtone which draws it upwards, and that which draws it downwards have the ſame Virtue. (m) Quamobrem ſi tot & tanta tamque mirifica, ſays he, quæ μηχανήματα appellant, Dei creatura utentibus humanis artibus fiunt, ut ea qui neſciunt, opinentur eſſe divina, unde factum eſt, ut in quodam templo lapidibus Magnetibus in ſolo & in camera proportione magnitudinis poſitis, ſimulachrum ferreum aeris illius medio inter utrumque lapidem, ignorantibus quid ſurſum eſſet ac deorſum, quaſi numinis poteſtate penderet.... Quanto magis Deus potens eſt facere, &c? He obſerves that the People who did not know the Cauſe of this Effect attributed it to the Power of God. 'Tis likely that the Temple which St. Auſtin does not name, was that of Serapis at Alexandria, for Ruffinus gives us the following Account of the Cheats which were diſcover'd in that Temple, when the Chriſtians were Maſters of it: (n) Erat aliud fraudis genus hujuſmodi, natura lapidis magnetis hujus virtutis eſſe perhibetur, ut ad ſe rapiat & attrahat ferrum. Signum ſolis ad hoc ipſum ex ferro ſubtiliſſima manu artificis fuerat fabricatum, ut lapis, cujus naturam ferrum ad ſe trahere diximus, deſuper, in laqueariis fixus cum temperate ſub ipſo radio ad libram fuiſſet poſitum ſimulacrum, & vi naturali ad ſe raperet ferrum, aſſurreziſſe populo ſimulacrum, & in aere pendere videretur. Proſper relates the ſame Thing with a Circumſtance which Ruffinus does not mention: He ſays that a good Servant of God, having learn'd by Inſpiration wherein the Artifice conſiſted, took away the Load-ſtone from the Roof, and immediately the Statue fell, and was broken in a 1000 Pieces. (o) Apud Alexandriam in templo Serapidis hoc (g) He is call'd Ahmed Abulabbas, Ben Edris, Sanhaghius, Melkita. See Hotting. ubi ſupra, p. 337.

(h) Unde igitur nobis Mahumedes ciſtæ ferreæ incluſus & magnetum vi in aere pendulus? Hæc cum Mohammediſtis recitantur, riſu explodunturque, ut noſtrorum in ipſorum rebus inſcitiæ argumentum. Pocockius, Specim Hiſtor. Arabum, p. 180.

(i) Plin. l. 34. c. 14. in fin. p. m 150.

(k) Auſonius Edyllio X. de Moſella, v. 311.

(l) Father Hardouin in Plin. ubi ſupra, ought not to have affirm'd, that Saint Auſtin ſaid this of a Statue which was in the Temple of Serapis.

(m) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, l. 21. c. 6.

(n) Ruffin. l. 2. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. c. 23 apud Coquæum Notis in Auguſt. de Civ. Dei, ubi ſupra, p. m. 961.

(o) Proſper, de Prædict. Part. 3 c. 38 apud eundem Coquæum, ibid.

(f) Richardus, Confut. Legis Saracen. c. 10. apud Hoornbeek, ubi ſupra, p. 208.

a Contrivance (DD △). There are many Predictions which threaten (EE) Mahometism argumentum dæmonis fuit, quadriga ferrea nulla basi sustulta, nullis uncis infixis parietibus colligata, in aere pendens cunctis superem ac velut divinum subsidium oculis mortalium exhibebat, quum tamen lapis magnes, qui ferrum sibimet attributum suspendit, eo loco cameræ affixus totam illam machinam sustentabat. Itaque cum quidam Dei servus inspiratus id intellexisset, magnetem lapidem è camera subtraxit, statimque omne illud ostentum cadens confractum comminutumque ostendit divinum non esse, quod mortalis homo firmaverat. If we may believe Cassiodorus (p), there was in the Temple of Diana a Cupid of Iron thus suspended. The anonymous Author of the annals of Tryers cites a Letter of Galba Viator, written to the Sophist Licinius, wherein this Galba acquaints him, That he saw at Tryers a Statue of Mercury, made of Iron, and very heavy, which continu'd hanging between Heaven and Earth, by reason of the equal force which drew it upward and downward (q): There was a piece of a Loadstone in the Floor, and another in the Roof, and this Statue was plac'd just in the middle above and below these two pieces of Loadstone. I can scarce believe these things, both upon the account of the considerable Distance, which, they say, was between the Statues of Iron, and the Stones which attracted them; and upon the account of the insuperable Difficulties they must meet with, to balance so exactly the Attractions (r). I should rather believe, what was said of a Statue of Mars, which join'd it self to a Venus of Loadstone:

(p) Cassiodor. Var. l. 1. cp. 45. p. m. 43.

(q) See Ausonius Variorum publish'd by Tollius, p. 403.

(r) Gassendus Oper. Tom. 2. p. 334. who mentions the Horse of Bellerophon, of which they told the same Story as of the Sepulchre of Mahomet; but he rejects it all.

(f) Ferrea Martis
Forma nitet, Venerem magnetica gemma figurat.
. . . . . .
(t) Cytherea maritum
Sponte rapit, cælique toros imitata priores,
Pectora lascivo flatu Mavortia nectit,
Et tantum suspendit onus, galeæque lacertos
Implicat, & vivis totum complexibus ambit.
Ille lacessitus longo spiraminis actu
Arcanus trahitur gemmâ de conjuge nodis.

(s) Claudian. de Magnete, v. 25. p. m. 79.

(t) Id. ib. v. 31.

But at least this is very certain, that the Sepulchre of Mahomet ought not to be reckon'd amongst these Wonders. This False-Prophet was buried at Medina, where he died. Some Authors say, that it was put into the Tomb of Aaisca (u), one of his Wives, who lov'd him best, whom the Mussulmans call the Mother of the Believers, or, the Mother of the Faithful, one who understood the Languages, and who study'd History with great Application (w). This Tomb is an Urn of Stone, plac'd in a Chapel which no Man can go into, because it is compassed about with Bars of Iron. The Pilgrims of Mecca go thither with extreme Devotion, and kiss these Bars religiously. This is what you will find in a little Book de nonnullis Orientalium Urbibus, written by Gabriel Sionita and John Hesronita, and plac'd at the end of the Geographia Nubiensis, whereof they publish'd a Latin Translation at Paris in 1619. See also the Dissertation of Samuel Andreas, de Sepulchro Muhammedis. We shall see, in the following Remark, what Mr. Bernier says of this false Story of the Suspension of the Tomb.

(u) Gabr. Sionita & Jo. Esronita, ubi infra, p. 25. See the Remark MM. where we criticise upon this Expression.

(w) Gabr. Sionita & Jo. Esronita de Nonnullis Orient. Urbibus, p. 23.

I cannot leave this Subject, without relating a very ridiculous Story, which I have read in the Travels of Moncony's. (a) "The Oia of the "Ambassador said, That there was a Stone at "Mecca, hanging in the Air, since Mahomet stept "upon it to mount the Bouraq; which, according "to the Alcoran, was an Animal less than a Mule, "and larger than an Ass; that God had sent it "to carry him up to Heaven. When the Stone "saw him going up, it followed him; but he perceiving it, caus'd it to stop, and it continu'd in "that Place of the Air where it was then. Others "say, that some Women big with Child having "since past under it, did Miscarry, out of fear it "should fall upon them, and that some Stones "were put under it to support it; but that "they signifie nothing, and that without them "it would nevertheless continue suspended in "the Air.

(a) The Travels of Moncony's, part 1. in 4°. p. 464, 465. ad an. 1648.

(DD) Neither is it very certain that any Architect is capable of making such a Contrivance.] I can cite, upon this Head, an Authority which is not to be despis'd, and that is the Declaration of one of the best Disciples of the famous Gassendus, which he makes in these words: (b) "I shall say nothing "of the pretended Suspension of the Iron Sepulchre of Mahomet at Mecca, between some Loadstones of equal force, and dispos'd as it were "in a kind of Vault, which has [illegible] formerly "said of the Iron Horse of Bellerophon, for it is "a thing that exceeds all Humane Skill, either "that several Loadstones should [illegible] of the same "Force, or applied in such a manner, that "Iron in the middle shall not feel more Virtue "on one side than on the other; or that the Iron "should in all its Parts be of that Form, Thickness and Temper which is necessary that it may "be equally attracted throughout: And yet 'tis "evident, that the least Difference, whether in "the Loadstone or the Iron, or in the Situation "of them, would make the Force of one to prevail above that of the other. I might add, as "having been more than a Month at Gidda upon "the Red-Sea, a small Day's Journey from Mecca, "that Mahomet's Sepulchre was never at Mecca, "but it is at Medina, which is about six or seven "Days Journey from thence, and in those Parts "there was never any mention made either of "this Vault of Loadstones, or of this Suspension." Mr. Vallemont maintains the Possibility of the Suspension of a Tomb of Iron. Let us see his Proofs: "Father [illegible] says, That he plac'd, "one day, two Loadstones above one another, "and distant about four fingers; and plac'd a "Needle in the middle between these two Loadstones, having found out the exact middle, "where the Needle should be no more attracted "by one Loadstone than by the other, that it "might continue suspended in the Air without "being supported by any thing. It requires "some Time, and a great deal of Skill, to find "out exactly this Point, and to place the Needle "there without falling, which will happen by "the least commotion of the Air. In fine, Cabeus "was successful in this Experiment: The Needle "continued in the Air, between two Loadstones, "without touching any thing; and this surprizing Sight continu'd as long as one might repeat "four long Verses: But when he arose to call "some of his Friends, the Motion of the Air "broke, as one may call it, this innocent Charm. "Wherefore this Philosopher does not scruple to "assert, That by this means an Iron-Coffin may "be suspended in the middle of the Air, in a "Chamber whose Walls were inlaid with Loadstones. Testor me id feciſſe. Potuisset etiam arca "ferrea fieri, & in cubiculo Magnete lapide parietato "ita disponi in medio aëre, ut penderet. Cabeus, "l. 4. c. 18. p. 334, & 335. This Jesuit says this, "upon Occasion of what is so often related "That the Followers of the impious Mahomet "have plac'd his Body in a Coffin of Iron, which "is suspended in the Air between two Loadstones: But he does not at all doubt but that "it is a Fable, as indeed it is." Mr. Vallemont relates afterwards the last Words of the Passage of Mr. Bernier, which has been quoted above; and he blames him for affirming that it is a thing that surpasses all Humane Skill. "Reason, continues "he (d), might evidently prove the contrary; "and the Experiment of Father Cabeus, decides "the Matter against Mr. Bernier." I dare be so bold as to say, That this Experiment decides it rather for him, for it requires much Patience and Skill, and produces nothing that is lasting, and yet it is only about a small Needle. By this you may judge of the Difficulties that must be overcome, to suspend an Iron-Coffin between two Loadstones. Dr. Prideaux is of the same Opinion with Mr. Vallemont; for after he has said, That the Body of Mahomet was buried at Medina (e) and remains there to this day, without any Iron-Coffin, and without any Loadstones, he adds these words: "I do not pretend to deny the Possibility of the "thing; I know, that Dinocrates (f), a famous "Architect, built formerly of Loadstones the "Dome of the Temple of Arsinoe at Alexandria; "and by this means, the Image of the Princess, "wholly of Iron, was suspended in the middle "of her Temple, without any thing to support it: "But nothing like it was ever attempted in favour "of Mahomet's Carcase." See above what concerns the Statue of Arsinoe.

(c) Vallemont's Description of the Loadstone found at Chartres, p. 167.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Prideaux in the Life of Mahomet, p. 134.

(f) Plin. l. 34. c. 14.

(EE) Many Predictions which threaten Mahometism.] Bibliander (g) affirms, That the [illegible]

(g) De Ratione communi omnium linguarum apud Beſoldum over. de siderat. legis & sectæ Saracenorum, p. 47.

…ometiſm a long while ago: And 'tis ſaid, That Mahomet being ask'd how long his Religion would continue? ſhow'd his Fingers extended; which, as it thought, ſignified, a famous Prophecy among the Mahometans, which ſtrikes a [redacted] Terror both into Men and Women, and whic[redacted] That the Empire ſhall be Deſtroy'd by the Sw[redacted] the Chriſtians. The Prophecy is expreſs'd in [redacted] following words, which are tranſlated out of [redacted]an into Latin by Georgievitz. (g) Imperator n[redacted] veniet, Gentilium Regnum capiet, rubrum malum capiet, ſubjugabit ſeptem uſque ad annos; Ethnicorum gladius ſi non reſurrexerit, duodecim uſque ad annos in eos dominabitur, domum ædificabit, vineam plantabit, hortos ſepe muniet, filium [redacted]iam habebit: duodecim poſt annos Chriſtianorum gla[redacted] inſurget, qui & Turcam retrorsùm profligabit. [redacted]in (i) publiſh'd a Book in 1570. wherein [redacted]rms, That there is a Prediction, That the Law of Mahomet ſhall laſt no longer than a Thouſand Years, and that the Empire of the Turks ſhall Fall under the Fifteenth Sultan (k). He adds, That Leo the Philoſopher, Emperor of Conſtantinople, has ſaid, in one of his Books, "That a light Hair'd Family, with "its Competitors, ſhall put all Mahometiſm to "Flight, and ſhall ſeize him who is poſſeſs'd of the "ſeven Mountains: Familia flava cum competitoribus totum Iſmaëlem in fugam conjiciet, ſeptemque colles poſſidentem cum ejus poſſeſſoribus capiet. The ſame Emperor makes mentio[redacted] a Column which was at Conſtantinople, whoſe Inſcriptions the Patriarch of the Place explain'd, and ſaid that they ſignify'd, That the Venetians and Muſcovites ſhall Take the City of Conſtantinople; and, after ſome Diſputes, they ſhall Chooſe, with one Conſent, and Crown a Chriſtian Emperor (l). This light Hair'd Family, ſo fatal to the Muſſulmans, makes me remember a Paſſage of Dr. Spon, which I ſhall ſet down. (m) "Of all the Chriſtian Princes, there is none "which the Turk fears ſo much as the Great Czar "of Muſcovy. - - - - I have alſo heard ſome Greeks "ſay, and, among the reſt, the Sieur Manno- "Mannea a Merchant of the City of Arta, a Man "of Wit and Learning for that Country, That "there was a Prophecy among them, which ſaid, "That the Empire of the Turks was to be De-"ſtroy'd by a Nation Chryſogenos, i. e. light Hair'd; "which cannot be attributed to any but the Muſ-"covites, who are almoſt all light Hair'd." There is mention (n) made of this, in the ſeveral Thoughts upon Comets, on occaſion of I know not what Tradition which is current, That the Fates have promis'd (o) the French the Glory of Deſtroying the Turks. See the Remark F. in the Article Marcſis (John des). The Prophecy of the Abyſſines mentions only a Chriſtian King, who ſhall be born in the North. (p) [redacted]Mahumetem facit (Duret, Hiſt. des Langues, fol. 575.) cujuſmodi Prophetiæ, quam magni æſtimant Abyſſini; 'quòd nempè, aliquando Mecha, 'Medina, aliæque fœlicis Arabiæ urbes, deſtruen-'tur, Mahometique & ejus ſymmyſtarum cineres 'diſſipabuntur; hæcque omnia facturus ſit Rex 'aliquis Chriſtianus, in regionibus ſeptentriona-'libus natus; qui pariter Ægyptum & Palæſti-'nam ſit occupaturus.' 'Tis pretended, that a Book was written in Arabick concerning this Prophecy (q) before the Taking of Damieta, and that this Book was found by the Chriſtians. Wallichius (r) relates, That the Turks find in their Annals, That the Reign of Mahomet ſhall continue until the Arrival of the light Hair'd Boys; donec veniant ſiglivoli biondi, i. e. flavi & albi filii, vel filii ex Septentrione flavis & albis capillis. Some think that this denotes the Swedes; but Antony Torquato, a famous Aſtrologer, applies it to the King of Hungary (s). I ſhall ſay nothing of the Prophecy which was current under the Empreſs Theodora, That the Deſtruction of the Saracens ſhould be the Work of the Macedonians; which was the Cauſe why the Emperor Monomachus rais'd ſome Troops in Macedonia, and ſent them into the Levant (a). The Events did not confirm this Prophecy, nor the Commentary upon the Predictions of the Emperor Severus, and upon thoſe of the Emperor Leo, Printed at Francfort with Fi[redacted]s, in 1597. This Comm[redacted]y (b) promis'd that the Ottoman Empire [redacted] be Deſtroy'd under th[redacted]an Mahomet [redacted] The Commentary of P[redacted]ticulus was not mo[redacted]happy than this, which he [redacted]re upon the Apocalypſe; for this Lutheran M[redacted]r had foretold (c), by virtue of ſome words of [redacted]m, That the Turkiſh Empire ſhould Fall in 1670. Wolfius has inſerted, in his Lectiones Memorabiles (d), a Piece which is entitled, Diſcurſus de futura & ſperata victoria contra Turcam, e ſacris prophetiis, aliiſque vaticiniis, prodigiis & prognoſticis depromptus, ac nuviter in lucem datus per Joannem Baptiſtam Nazarum Brixienſem: Which was Printed in 1570. wherein the Author diſcuſſes many Prophetical Paſſages of Scripture; and he finds, by the manner he applies them, and by calculating the Numeral Letters, that they ſignifie the Ruine of the Turks, and by that means an Univerſal Peace for the Year 1572, or 1575. The other Oracles which he conſults, are ſome foretelling Authors, the Signs that have appear'd in Heaven, and the Conſtellations; from all which he concludes, That the Turkiſh Empire, and all Mahometiſm, draws near its final Period; that they cannot eſcape; and that one may point out the Golden Age, which ſhall eſtabliſh an Univerſal Peace upon Earth. Beſoldus (e) is admirable, he mentions both this Treatiſe of Nazarus, and another (f) which was written in 1480. and printed at Paris about 1520. In it the Chriſtians were promiſed a Hundred noble Triumphs, which have proved meer Chimera's; and yet he averrs, that the Final Period of Mahometiſm draws near, which he founds upon this Obſervation, That the Sciences do not now flouriſh there as they have done formerly. (g) Hæcque omnia, licet vana & fanatica multis videantur, ac etiam ratione temporis vel loci falli poſſint; certum tamen multi habent, adpropinquare quoque Sarracenicæ legis ruinam. Nam ſane jam diu eſt, quod diſciplina & eruditio ab eadem receſſit The Sieur Konig (h) informs us, That Mr. Baſire, Chaplain to Charles I. King of England, declared, as he paſſed by Leipſick, when he was going for London, after the Reſtauration of Charles II. that, according to the Apocalypſe, there would quickly be a War againſt the Turks. That we were now in the Time of the Sixth Vial: That the Turks would be very ſucceſsful in this War, and that they would attack the City of Rome; and that after this Victory, their Empire would decline, and fall away; and that the wiſe Men of that Nation were of that Opinion. There was a Book Printed at Paris in 1686. in which are inſerted many Prophecies of things fatal to the Oriental Nations, which were given out (i) by the Abbot Joachim, by St Nerſes Patriarch of the Armenians, by St. Catalius (k) Biſhop of Trent, by St. Angelus a Carmelite, and by (†) Berobius of Patras. The Author pretending, that theſe Oracles concern the Moſt Chriſtian King, exhorts him to make War with the Ottomans. I ſhall not here repeat what I have ſaid in another Place (l), to which the Reader may have recourſe: I ſhall only ſay, That among ſo many Prophets who have all pronounc'd Wo, Wo, againſt the Mahometan Empire, there are ſome who have promis'd it great Bleſſings. The Aſtronomers of Toledo publiſh'd, in the XIIIth Century, a Prediction, That within Seven Years there ſhould ariſe Diſputes among the Saracens, and that they would abandon their Religion, and embrace the Goſpel. A Divine (m) of Franeker repreſented to Comenius the Falſhood of that Oracle, by citing to him a Theſis wherein Samuel Marcſius had ſaid, That it would be eaſie to prove by Scripture, that the Turks and Tartars ſhall not be Converted, but that they ſhall join with the remains of Antichriſt, and endeavour to deſtroy Chriſtianity: That God, by his Miracles ſhall hinder them, and that they ſhall all at once be ſwallow'd up in an Abyſs, at the Second Coming of JESUS-CHRIST. Marcſius was not to oppoſe the Account of the Millenaries; they pretend that the Turk ſhall be Converted. Let us relate what concerns the Aſtronomers of Toledo. (o) A prout eventu caruit illa Aſtronomorum Toletanorum prædictio ante 400 annos edita, quæ ex Wendovero refertur in Additamentis Matthæi Pariſienſis, ex edit Londinenſi anni 1632. & juxta quam intra ſeptennium ab edito illo Oraculo oritura erat dubietas inter Saracenos, & exant reliqui Mahumetias ſuas, & futuri unum cum Chriſtianis;

Francfort, in 1660. (n) Mareſius Diſp. 3 Th. 28

(a) See Wolfius, Lect. Memorab. Tom. 2. p. 803.

(b) Selim II. who reigned then.

(c) Wolfius, ibid.

(d) Spon's Travels, tom. 1. p. 270. of the Holland Edition.

(e) P. 783.

(f) See many Authorities about this Matter, in the Thoughts upon Comets, p. 781.

(g) Beſoldus, ibid. p. 48.

(h) See Hotting. in Theſaur. Philologico.

(i) In Vita Mahometis, p. 158. apud Schultetum, ubi ſuprà, p. 22.

(k) Apud Leunclavium, in fin. Epiſt. f. 844. citante Schulteto, ibid. See the Article Torquato (Antony.)

(l) Cedrenus, p. 515. apud Schultet. ibid.

(m) Schultet. ibid.

(n) Schultet. p. 21.

(o) Tom. 2. p. 884, &c.

(p) Ubi ſupra, p. 48

(q) De futuris Chriſtianorum triumphis in Saracenos. The Author is call'd Magiſter Joannes Viterbienſis.

(r) Beſoldus, ibid.

(s) Konig. Biblioth. Vet. & Nov. p. 90. ex Epiſtola Lipſiæ ſcripta die, 24 Aug. 1661.

(t) See the Journal of Leipſic for the Month of February, 1688. in the Abſtract of the Theatre of Turkey, by Michael le Fevre.

(k) S. Catalii Epiſcopi Tridentini, Act. Lipſ ib. He ſhould have ſaid, S. Cataldi Epiſcopi Tarentini.

(†) I believe it is the ſame with Bemechobus, in the Citation (3) of the next Column.

(l) In the Article Herlicius, Remark F.

(m) Nicolaus Arnoldus in Diſcurſ. Theolog. contra Comenium, printed at Francfort, in 1660. apud Arnoldum, ubi ſupra, p. 91, 92.

signified, That it would laſt a Thouſand Years, and ſo would have an end in 1639 *. I do not enquire whether the Calculation is exact, neither do I concern my ſelf to refute ſuch things: But I ought to ſay, on behalf of Chriſtian Authors, That they are the Followers of this Impoſtor, who publiſh'd the moſt ridiculous Fables about him; for they are the Perſons who inform us, that Rice and Roſes ſprung out of his Sweat (FF); and that the Angel Gabriel taught him the making of a Ragou (GG) which gave him great Vigour for the Enjoyment of Women. The Religion of this Falſe-Doctor was ſubject to the ſame Inconvenience which was obſerv'd at the ſtianis; ita non debemus nos facile lactare novâ ſpe converſionis Turcarum, quæ nuſquam in Dei Verbo promiſſa eſt. There are alſo ſome who foretell, That the Turks ſhall make great Conqueſts; they ſhall March as far as Flanders and Picardy. Read what I have tranſcribed. I have put in the Margin the quotations of the Author, without changing any thing in them. (o) Quam (ſenectutem imperii Turcici) etiamſi nondum agnoſcant plurimi Gogiticam priùs expectantes irruptionem, vel militiæ Turcicæ Coloniam uſque (1) deductionem, tùm Picardiæ, Flandriæ & Brabantiæ (2), imò omnium omninò regionum (3) per Turcas, præceſſuras incurſiones; nos tamen de Turcicâ ſenectute præſenti non vaticinia tantùm, ſed alia etiam indicia reddunt certiſſimos. You will find a Supplement to all this, in the Remark B. of the Article Torquato (Antony).

* See Andreas Catolus, at p. 953. of the Memorabilia Eccleſ. ſæculi, 17.

(o) Schultetus, ubi ſupra, p. 21.

(1) Methodius apud Wolf. Rer. Memor. T. 2. ad. 1571.

(2) Claromontanus apud Wolf. l. 1.

THE Origine of Prophetical Threatnings againſt the Turks.

If we ſhould aſcribe all theſe Prophetical Threatnings to one Cauſe only, we ſhould be miſtaken. The deſire ſome have to comfort themſelves with the hopes of the Deſtruction of a furious Perſecutor, makes them eaſily find this Deſtruction in the Predictions of Scripture, or in ſome other things. Thus, there are ſome who foretell through Credulity and Deluſion: The deſire of Comforting People, and diſſipating their Fears, obliges ſome to ſuppoſe, that the Scripture, Prodigies, and many other Pregnoſticks, promiſe the approaching Ruine of the Power which they fear. There are others, again, who foretell Things to come out of Policy: And thoſe who do it on purpoſe to render their Troops more Courageous, are Prophets of the ſame kind. There are ſome who propheſie, on purpoſe to ſtir up Sedition in an Enemy's Country; as for Inſtance, to encourage the Greeks, who acknowledge the Grand-Signior, to take Arms againſt their Lord. Theſe belong to another Claſs, and may be call'd Prophets of Sedition. You may place in what Claſs you pleaſe, I care not which, the Pagans mention'd by St. Auſtin, who vented a Prophecy, according to which, Chriſtianity was to be deſtroy'd, after it had laſted 365 Years. (p) Excogitaverunt neſcio quos verſus Græcos, tanquam conſulenti cuidam divino oraculo effuſos, ubi Chriſtum quidem ab hujus tanquam ſacrilegii crimine faciunt innocentem: Petrum autem maleficia feciſſe ſubjungunt, ut coleretur Chriſti nomen per 365 annos: deinde completo memorato numero annorum, ſine morâ ſumeret finem. St. Auſtin found, that reckoning theſe 365 Years from the Reſurrection of JESUS-CHRIST, they were ended a Year before Paganiſm receiv'd its mortal Blow, by the Deſtruction of its Temples. (q) Sequenti anno, conſule Manlio Theodoro, quando jam ſecundùm illud oraculum dæmonum aut figmentum hominum, nulla eſſe debuit religio Chriſtiana, quid per alias terrarum partes forſitan factum ſit, non fuit neceſſe perquirere. Interim quod ſcimus, in civitate notiſſima & eminentiſſima Carthagine Africæ Gaudentius & Jovius comites Imperatoris Honorii, quarto decimo calendas Aprilis Falſorum-Deorum templa everterunt, & ſimulachra fregerunt. St. Auſtin obſerves, That many Pagans were Converted, by the Reflections they made upon the Falſhood of the Oracle. As to the Motives of thoſe who publiſh'd it, ſee what I quote out of Baronius (r).

(p) Auguſtin. de Civit. Dei, l. 11. c. 83. See the Bp. of Meaux's Explication of the Apocalypſe, c 19. p. 231. of the Holland Edition.

(q) Idem Auguſt. ibid. c. 54.

(r) Tanta gloria ejus (Chriſti) Eccleſia aucta .... accidit ut Gentiles qui viderent Eccleſiam Chriſtianam tanta gloria auctam, adeoque immenſa claritudine illuſtratam, invidia tabeſcentes, quo ſolatio aliquo lenirent de Chriſtianorum gaudio & incrementis conceptum mœrorem & amicorum acerbitatem, novum oraculum confinxerunt, atque ore omnium diffamârunt Græcis quibuſdam verſibus præcinentes Chriſtianam religionem 365 annis duraturam quorum 313. jam prope elapſi eſſent. Baronius ad ann. 313. n. 17. p. m. 130.

Some of thoſe who have promis'd great Conqueſts to the Turks, have been by degrees inclin'd to it, from the Hatred they conceiv'd againſt the Houſe of Auſtria; either becauſe that Hatred made them Fanatical, or becauſe it made them only pretend to Viſions. But others have only follow'd the Syſtem which they had made upon the Prophecies of the Apocalypſe, Gog and Magog, &c. Two things were lately told me: 1. That a famous Miniſter in Amſterdam had Preach'd, during the Siege of Vienna in 1683, That the Turks ſhould take that City; which Prediction he grounded upon ſome Paſſages of Scripture. 2. That the Raiſing of this Siege did ſo affect him with Grief, that he Died of it: Not that he wiſh'd, as Drabicius did, that the Turks ſhould make great Progreſs in Germany; but he was mightily troubled, to be diſappointed. However, we may concluſie, That thoſe who attempt to Reveal Future Things concerning Turkey, have miſtaken the Times; for when they threatned it with Ruine, it Triumph'd; when they promis'd it Conqueſts, it loſt Battles and Provinces, as it has done ſince the Year 1683 (a). But we may obſerve, That in the time of Drabicius, there were ſome People in Holland, who promis'd, that the Turk ſhould be Deſtroy'd. There were two Pieces publiſh'd at Leyden in 1664. which were very different. The Title of the firſt was de Tartarorum irruptione ſuccincta Diſſertatio (b); and the other was, Paræneſis ad Chriſtianos, ſuggerens conſilium ad eos liberandos, & opprimendos Turcas. In the firſt, Holland is threatned with Irruptions of Tartars, unleſs it furniſh'd great Sums of Money for Levying the Troops that were neceſſary to the War againſt the Turks. In the other, the Conqueſt of the Turkiſh Empire is promis'd, provided great Levies were made of Men and Money; and the manner of Dividing this Conqueſt is deſcribed.

(a) See the Article Kotterus.

(b) Having a Dutch Verſion on one ſide.

(FF) That Rice and Roſes ſprung out of his Sweat.] Here are the words of two learned Maronites. (c) Ineptè Mohamedis ſequaces confabulantur, ortam eſſe (orizam) ex ipſius Mohamedis ſudore antequam mundo ſe manifeſtaret, mundum infeſtaret penè dixerim, cùm thronum Dei circuibat in paradiſo: Deus enim converſus reſpexit eum, Mohamedes præ pudore ſudavit tergenſque digito ſudorem, ſex extra paradiſum guttas miſit, ex quarum una roſa, ex altera oriza productæ ſunt, ex reliquis quatuor, quatuor Mohamedis ſocii nati ſunt. This is what ſurpaſſes the abſurdeſt Viſions of Legendary Chriſtians. Mahomet, ſay they, made a Tour about the Throne of God in Paradiſe, before he ſhow'd himſelf to Men. God turn'd towards him, and look'd upon him: Mahomet was ſo aſham'd, that he Sweat; and having wiped off the Sweat with his Fingers, he let fall ſix drops out of Paradiſe, one of which produc'd a Roſe, and the other a Grain of Rice: The four other Drops form'd four Diſciples of Mahomet. (d) "What "think you, Sir, of the Viſion of the Arabians, "(theſe are the words of Balzac) who took the "Roſe away from the Goddeſs Venus, to give it to "the Prophet Mahomet; and who maintain, "(as Busbequius ſays in his Relations) That the "firſt Roſes did ſpring out of the Sweat of this "great Prophet? Don't you admire their "Chronology, that will not allow there were "any Roſes in the World, before the Empire of "Heraclius?

(c) Here follows the Compoſition of it, Solent (Arabes) frequenter nutrire pulmento quodam Heriſe dicto, quod ex tritico prius decocto conficiunt, poſt ſoli exſiccandum exponitur, tum in urna contunditur donec emundetur, poſtremò pingui carne ſimul coquitur, donec caro conſumatur, quod ſane palato non eſt ingratum. Gabriel Sionita, Jo. Eſronita, ibid.

(GG) A Ragou which gave him great Vigour for the Enjoyment of Women.] He boaſted, That he learn'd from the Angel Gabriel, that the Virtue of this Ragou (e) was to fortifie the Reins. Having eat once of it, by the Order of the Angel, he had ſufficient Strength to fight againſt Forty Men: Upon another Occaſion, he had to do with Women Forty times, without being fatigu'd. (f) Mohamedes ---- affirmabat ---- hoc pulmentum à Gabriele Angelo ſe edoctum fuiſſe, & utilitatem ejus, eodem Angelo teſte, in eo conſiſtere, ut renes corroboret. Quandoque Angeli juſſu Mohamedes ex eo edens una nocte pugnavit adverſus quadraginta viros, aliaſque quadragies indefatigatus rem cum fœminis habuit. Sanè hæc, annum delirantium fabellas aut alicujus Moſquæicæ ſectæ ſeras calumnias eſſe opinaremur, niſi præfatum antiquum of the Birth of Chriſtianity, and the beginning of Luther's Reformation; for after he Propheſied, there aroſe (HH) many other falſe Prophets, and his followers were quickly divided. I am leſs aſtoniſhed at his boldneſs, with reſpect to the Promiſe of the Paraclet,

(d) Balzac, Conference 5. c. 2. p. m. 87. Compare the Remark BB. of the Article Juno.

(e) Sionita, Jo. Eſronita, ibid.

(f) Gabriel Sion. Jo. Eſron. ibid.

(g) 1. c. If I be not miſtaken, Mohamedes Ben. Caſem, of whom they cite, p. 2. hortus rerum delectabilium.

authorem (g) juris peritiſſimum eumdemque obſequentiſſimum Mahamedis ſectatorem ea omnia diſerte Arabico ſtylo, capite de quorundam ciborum delectu & utilitate, videremus referentem. "We have here a grave Author among the Mahometans, who relates theſe infamous Things of his Prophet, and therefore we muſt not ſuſpect that the Chriſtians or Jews have invented theſe Tales, on purpoſe to blacken the Impoſtor; and ſo altho' we do not read in the Alcoran, that the Pleaſures of the Conjunction between the two Sexes, ſhall laſt each time ſixty full Years, yet we muſt believe that this is a Mahometan Tradition. But that every one may the better Judge of this, we muſt relate a Paſſage which informs us, that Dr. Pocock, ſo well vers'd in Mahometan Authors, ſays nothing of that Tradition. Here is a Note of Beſpier upon what Sir Paul Ricaut ſays, (h) That the falſe Prophet promis'd a Paradiſe wherein there ſhould be fine Women, the Enjoyment of whom would give exceſſive Pleaſures, . . . . and which would laſt ſixty full Years without diſcontinuance. " (i) The Alcoran does no " where ſpeak of the time of this Pleaſure. " Baudier makes no ſcruple to extend it to fifty " Years, p. 691. of his Hiſtory of the Religion of " the Turks. This is what he has taken out of " Vigenere, p. 208 of his Illuſtrations upon Chalcondylas, and what both of them have taken " out of John Andreas, p. 72. where he ſays the " ſame thing. I do not complain that they have " Tranſcrib'd him in an infinite number of Places " as they have done, chiefly about the Pleaſures " of Paradiſe, about which they have taken four " or five Pages: But I blame them, becauſe nei- " ther of them names him in the Places which they " have Tranſcrib'd. I do not know whether the " Summa ſpeaks of theſe Fifty Years, as John Andrew affirms; but Pocock, who was very exact " in deſcribing all that the Mahometans ſay of the " Pleaſures of Paradiſe, ſays nothing neither of " the Fifty Years of John Andreas, Baudier and Vigenere, nor of the Sixty Years of our Author; " he ſays only, that theſe Infidels affirm, there " ſhall be a Hundred different Degrees of Pleaſure " in Paradiſe, whereof the leaſt ſhall be ſo great, " that to the end the faithful may reliſh it with- " out being over-whelmed, God ſhall give to each " of them the Power of a Hundred Men. Kowat " miat ragiel.

(h) Ricaut, ubi ſupra. p. 322.

(i) Beſpier's curious Remarks, p. 625.

Here we may admire human Infirmity. Mahomet Preaching and Practiſing the moſt exceſſive Lewdneſs, did nevertheleſs perſuade a great number of People, that God had appointed him to be the Founder of the true Religion. Did not his Life ſtrongly refute this Impoſtor? For, according to the Remark of Maimonides, the chief Character of a true Prophet, is to deſpiſe the Pleaſures of Senſe, and chiefly thoſe that are Venereal," k) Luceat hic adſcribere quæ habet Maimoni- " des in Moreh, l. 2. c. 40. ubi quomodo probandi ſunt " Pſeudoprophetæ, docet his verbis. Modus autem ta- " lem probandi, eſt ut perfectionem perſonæ ipſius " animadvertas, & in facta ejus inquiras, & con- " verſationem obſerves; ſignum autem præcipuum " quo dignoſcatur eſt, ſi abdicaverit voluptates " corporeas & eas contemptui habuerit, (hic ſi- " quidem primus eſt gradus ſcientiâ præditorum, " multo magis prophetarum) imprimis vero ſen- " ſum illum qui juxta Ariſtotelem opprobrio nobis " eſt, ac turpitudinem rei Venereæ; ideoque hoc " indicio detexit Deus omnes falſo de afflatu pro- " phetico gloriabundos, ut ita patefieret veritas " eam indagantibus, & ne in errorem inducantur." It cannot be ſaid that no Body was deceiv'd in this Caſe, and that thoſe who adher'd to Mahomet did it only through Self-love, knowing his Impoſtures. This is a thing that cannot be maintained. The greateſt part of his Diſciples rejected the News of his Death, as a Falſhood which was not conſiſtent with his Heavenly Miſſion, and to undeceive them, it was neceſſary to prove to them by the Alcoran, that he was to Die (l). They were therefore one ſeduc'd by his Words. Now when at any time once is prepoſſeſs'd with an Opinion, that a certain Man is a Prophet, or a great Servant of God, one is apt to believe rather, that the Crimes are no Crimes which he commits, than to think that he commits any Crime. This is the effect of the fooliſh Prejudices of many little Souls. Did not Seneca himſelf ſay, (m) That one could more eaſily prove Drunkenneſs to be a commendable thing, than that Cato committed a Sin in being Drunk. The Followers of Mahomet ſaid the ſame in their Heart; 'tis better to believe that Lewdneſs is not a Vice, ſince our great Prophet is ſubject to it, than to believe, that ſince he is ſubject to it, he is no great Prophet. We ſee every Day ſome inſtances of the ſame Prejudices. If a Man has once acquir'd a Reputation of a great Zealot for Orthodox Opinions, and ſignaliz'd himſelf in Diſputes againſt Hereſie, moſt People are ſo pre-engag'd in his Favour, that you cannot make them confeſs, that he has done amiſs in doing thoſe things which they would condemn if any other ſhould do them. St. Paul ſays only, (n) That the Unbelieving Wife is ſanctified by the Believing Huſband; but if he had ſpoke according to the Humor of theſe People, he ſhould have ſaid, that all that belongs to a believing Orthodox Man, and all that he does is Sanctified by him.

(m) Catonis ebrietas objecta eſt: at facilius efficiet quiſquis objecerit, hoc crimen honeſtum, quam turpem Catonem. Seneca de tranquillitate animi c. 15. pag. m 674.

(n) 1 Cor. 1 v. 14.

(l) See Pokock. Ibid. p. 178, 180.

(HH) There aroſe many falſe Prophets.] I remember the beginning of a Sermon of Mr. Daillé, which was grounded on this Thought, That whenever God ſends Men to declare the Truth, the Devil ſtirs up falſe Doctors to teach Hereſies. He rais'd in the times of the Apoſtles Cerinthus, Ebion, &c. and in the time of the Reformation, John of Leyden, David George, Servetus, and Socinus. The deſign of the Devil is to croſs the Progreſs of the Truth; for it was natural to believe, that the Jews and Pagans would deſpiſe the Goſpel, when they ſhould ſee many Sects among thoſe that Preach'd it. So likewiſe it was probable, that the Catholicks would deſpiſe and inſult the Reformation, when they ſhould ſee Luther, Zuinglius, Muncer and Calvin proceed in different Ways, and maintain Diſputes againſt many Party-Leaders, who, after their Example, would forſake the Romiſh Communion. Two Objections come naturally into one's Mind: 1. If theſe People were inſpir'd by God, they would be unanimous. 2. Suppoſing that we muſt forſake the ancient Doctrine, what Party muſt we chooſe among ſo many new Sects? 'Tis better for us to continue where we are, than to diſcuſs, whether one of them is true, and which it is. The Event did not confirm theſe Conjectures in their full extent; for altho' it cannot be denied, that the multitude of falſe Doctors who aroſe in the Firſt Century, and form'd ſo many Parties in the Boſom of the Infant Church, did a great deal of hurt to the good Cauſe; yet it muſt be confeſs'd, that it did not all the Miſchief the Devil hop'd for. Scepticiſm by it gain'd but little; I have already given the Reaſons of it (a). This Remark may be applied to the times of Luther and Calvin. Theſe two great Reformers did not make all the Progreſs they might have made, had they been united in the ſame Sentiments, and if all thoſe who oppos'd the Romiſh Church had ſpoke the ſame Language. Their Diviſions were a prejudice which kept many Perſons in the Romiſh Communion; nevertheleſs the Proteſtant Religion encreas'd in a little time, and acquir'd a laſting Conſiſtence. However, every body may be ſenſible, that the Devil purſues very well his own Intereſt, if he croſſes the Progreſs of a new Orthodoxy, as Mr. Daillé ſuppoſes; but it is not eaſie to conceive, that having raiſed up Mahomet to plant a falſe Religion, he ſhould oppoſe againſt him the ſame Obſtacles as he did againſt the Apoſtles of Jeſus Chriſt. How comes it then to paſs that falſe Prophets, the Emiſſaries of Satan attempt to deſtroy Mahumetiſm at its firſt appearance? (b) Whence comes it that Mahomet had his Rivals who boaſted of Heavenly Inſpiration as well as he? How comes it, that Muſeilema his Diſciple, abandon'd him to make a ſeparate Sect (c)? How comes it that an Aſwad, a Taliha, an Almotenabbi, ſet up for Prophets, and drew after them as many Followers as they could (d)?

(a) In the Article of Luther, remark T.

(b) See Hotting. Hiſt Orient. l. 2. c. 3 p. 258. d. Id ib.

Paraclet, than at that of ſome Arabian Authors, who boaſt of having read ſome Copies o the Goſpel (II), which contained ſome things concerning Mahomet, which they pre tend the Chriſtians have blotted out. I do not know, if one may believe what ſome ſay, that Mahomet declar'd, that only a third part of the Alcoran was true (KK).

He that would ſee a Chronological Account of the Actions and Adventu[illegible] of this falſe Prophet juſtified by very good Citations, and a fine detail of C[illegible]ſtances, needs only to read Dr. Prideaux's † Book. It has been Tranſlated out o[illegible]liſh into French, * ſince the firſt Edition of this Dictionary. In it, among othe[illegible]gs, there are many Proofs, that Mahomet was an Impoſtor, and γ that he made [illegible]poſture ſub-ſervient to his Luſt. One of theſe Proofs is taken from hence, that tillegible variations of his Prophetick Spirit were ſuited to the Change of his private Intereſt. What is related of his Amours, is very ſtrange. He was Jealous (MM) to the higheſt γ Prideaux, Life of Mahomet, p. 155.

* The French Tranſlat was Pul liſh'd at Amſterdam in 1698.

could (d). 'Tis not eaſie to account for theſe Phænomena, unleſs we ſuppoſe that there is as great a Diviſion among the bad Angels as among Men, or that Men without the Inſtigation of the Devil, will attempt to found falſe Sects. The Heads of the Parties that I have named, call'd Mahomet a falſe Prophet. But there aroſe others after his Death, who, without calling in queſtion his Authority, pretended to exceed one another in the underſtanding of the Alcoran. The two great Sects which aroſe at firſt, of Ali and Omar, do ſtill continue. Was not the permiſſion of this prejudicial to Mahometiſm? Was this the Intereſt of the Devil?

(d) Id. p. 259.

How great ſoever this Difficulty may appear, ſeveral Anſwers may be made to it. It may be ſaid, that the Devil is not much concern'd, if a falſe Prophet be croſs'd by other falſe Prophets, and if each of thoſe Impoſtors debauches the Followers of his Rivals: The Devil can loſe nothing by that means, for 'tis equal to him, whether [illegible] follow Mahomet, or Muſeilema, or Almotenabbi. The Fights, the Wars, the Confuſions of all ſorts which theſe Diviſions produce, are a more diverting ſight to the Enemy of Mankind, than if Matters went on ſmoothly and ſucceſsfully, there being but one falſe Sect. Beſides, it is a thing very fit to flatter the Pride of an ambitious Spirit, to ſhew that he can ſettle Mahometiſm in ſpight of a Hundred Obſtacles. Could not he hope, that if this Sect did wonderfully encreaſe, altho it was oppos'd in its Infancy by other Sects, this would be look'd upon as a Character of its Divinity; as God never made his Power in protecting the Goſpel, more ſenſibly appear, than by hindring the bad Effects of the Hereſies and Schiſms of the firſt Century?

(II) Of having read ſome Copies of the Goſpel.] The moſt Incredulous Men ſtagger, when they ſee grave Authors affirm certain things with a great pomp of Circumſtances, as having ſeen them with their own Eyes. It is therefore neceſſary to make it appear by ſome notable Examples, that ſuch Affirmations are ſometimes deceitful. What greater Example can we alledge, than that which I am going to mention; wherein we ſee, that a Mahometan affirms, that a Chriſtian ſhow'd him a Copy of the Goſpel, in which there are many things clearly and expreſly ſaid concerning Mahomet, and that there is no other Copy in the World but one like this. (e) Inter nomina ſeu titulos blaſphemi impoſtoris Paracletum numerant, teſte Al Jannabio: quin & aliàs in loco non uno, antè Evangelia à Chriſtianis corrupta expreſſam ejus faciam mentionem ſibi facile perſuadent, idque ab ipſis Chriſtianis edocti, ut retert Author modo laudatus; Mohammodem ſcil. Al Selencium, neſcio quem, à Sacerdote quodam magni inter Chriſtianos nominis didiciſſe nullibi extare Evangelii exemplar incorruptum, quàm apud ſe unum, ac Pariſiis alterum, atque e ſuo multa eorum ipſis legiſſe, in quibus multa & perſpicua de Mohammede narrantur.

(e) Pocockius ubi ſupra, p. 185, 186.

(KK) That only a third part of the Alcoran was true.] Father Joſeph de Sancta Maria, a bare Footed Carmelite, Apoſtolical Miſſionary in the Kingdom of Malabar, affirms, (f) That the Inhabitants of Maſcati pretend to be the moſt faithful obſervers of Mahomet's Law, and that Mahomet declared, that of 12000 Words that are in the Alcoran, there are only 4000 that are true. When they are confuted in any Point, and know not how to defend themſelves, they place it in the number of the 8000 Falſities. This is very convenient to come off in a Diſpute.

(f) In the Book intituled Prima ſpeditione all' Indie Orientali, Printed at Rome. The Journal of Italy, March 31. 1668. makes mention of it.

(LL) The variations of his Prophetick Spirit were ſuited to the Change of his private Intereſt.] We ſhall keep to [illegible] Words of Dr. Prideaux. (g) " All " his Alcoran almoſt was fram'd after this manner, " (i) to anſwer ſome private Deſign he had, ac- " cording as occaſion required. If he had any " new thing to ſet on foot, or ſome Objection a- " gainſt himſelf, or his Religion, to anſwer, ſome " Difficulty to reſolve, or ſome Diſcontent among " the People to pacifie; ſome Scandal to remove, " or ſomething elſe to be done for carrying on his " Deſigns, he had commonly recourſe to the An- " gel Gabriel for ſome new Revelation; and pre- " ſently he inſerted in his Alcoran ſome Addition " proper to anſwer [illegible] he then propos'd to " himſelf. So that [illegible] whole almoſt was Com- " poſ'd upon occaſions of this Nature, to produce " in his own Party the Effect which he propos'd " to himſelf. And all his Commentators plainly e- " nough confeſs it, by ſhewing exactly the Rea- " ſons for which each Chapter had been ſent him " from Heaven. But this was the Cauſe of the " many Contradictions that are to be found in " this Book. For as that Impoſtor's Affairs " and Deſigns varied, he was obliged to vary " his pretended Revelations, which is ſo well " known among thoſe of his Sect, that they all " confeſs this to be true; upon which account, when " theſe Contradictions are ſuch that they cannot " be reconciled, they revoke one of the contra- " dictory Places. And they reckon in the whole " Alcoran (1) more than 150 Verſes thus revok'd, " which is the beſt Expedient they can take for " ſaving the Contradictions and Inconſiſtencies " that are in it. But herein they diſcover very " much the levity and Inconſtancy of him who " was the Author of it." This Proof of Impoſture, is of great force: I have diſcours'd of it already; but here I ought to add, that it would be too far extended, if it ſhould be made uſe of without exception againſt all the Expounders of the Apocalypſe, who change their Hypotheſes (b) as the general Affairs take a different turn. It may ſometimes happen that there is nothing but Fanaticiſm in the Inconſtancy of thoſe Men, and not being able to perceive the Diſtemper in their Head, they are no leſs ſincere when they vary than when they do not. Let us therefore make uſe of a diſtinction, and ſay only, that thoſe who change their Apocalyptic Syſtem, according to the News in the Gazette, and always agreeably to the general deſign of their Writings, publiſh Falſities either without it knowing or knowingly. Their Conduct is very often an Impoſture, but not always.

(1) Johannes Andreas. Guadagnol. Tract. 4. c. 7. Sect. 3.

(a) In the Remark T.

(b) See the Chimerical Cabal at p. 189. of the 2d. Edition.

(MM) Jealous to the higheſt degree, and yet he bore with patience the Gallantries of that Wife which was deareſt to him.] " (c) As he became a brutiſh Slave " to the Love of Women, ſo he was extreamly " Jealous of thoſe he had Married. Thus to diſ- " ſuade them from what he fear'd, (2) he threatned " them once with a ſeverer Chaſtiſement than is " given to other Women, not only in this World, " but in that which is to come, ſuppoſing that " they ſhould be unfaithful to him. And when " ſome of his Followers frequented his Houſe too " much, and convers'd there with ſome of his " Wives, he declar'd, as in the Name of God, " theſe Verſes in the Alcoran, (3) wherein he " tells them, that they ought not to enter into " the Houſe of the Prophet without leave, and " [illegible] they were invited to Dine at his Houſe, " they ought to go away immediately after Din- " ner, without entring upon any Converſation " with his Wives; and that altho' the [illegible] " was aſhamed to tell them they ſhou[illegible] " yet God was not aſhamed to tell them t[illegible]

(c) Prideaux, Life of Mahomet, p. 153, &c.

(2) Alcoran, c. 33.

(3) Alcoran, c. 33.

highest degree, and yet he bore with patience the Gallantries of that Wife which was dearest to him: He could never resolve to put her away; and he interpos'd the great Contrivance of his Revelations, to make the People cease to speak evil of her, and to be scandalized at his Love for a Wife of a bad report. His Followers thought at last that she was honest, for they receiv'd as Oracles (NN) the Interpretation she put upon the Name of God, had a respect not only for his Person, but also for his Wives and Children. They were not therefore capable of forging such a bitter Calumny against Ayesha; but being well acquainted with the real disorders of her Conduct, they murmur'd and complain'd of them as of an intolerable Scandal to the dishonour of the Man of God. We must note, that Jealousie is not always uniform in its Causes and Effects: it deviates from its Rules, and from the common Road oftener than is thought. There are some People that would be Jealous if they were less amorous. The highest degree of Tenderness produces in their Heart a Confidence, which a lesser degree would not produce. There are some Men Jealous, who cease to Love when they think themselves betray'd. There are others whom a known unfaithfulness does not cure. Mahomet might very well be of this last Sort, with respect to his dearest Wife. We must always remember that he lov'd her always, and this is what is chiefly to be considered; for if he had only taken care to avoid the Raillery, to which he might have been expos'd by a Divorce, we must ascribe to him only a political Patience, which is common enough in Mankind. The number of those who prefer a cohabitation with an odious Object, to the noise of a Rupture, is not inconsiderable.

" And in the same Chapter he forbids his Wives
" to speak with any Man, unless their Face
" was cover'd with a Veil. Lastly, He carried his " Jealousie [illegible] beyond the Grave; for not be" ing able to endure that any should have to do " with his Wives tho' after his Death; (4) he for-" bad severely all his Followers to go towards " them as long as they liv'd. So that tho' all other " Women, when they were divorc'd, or became " Widows, had the liberty to Marry again, yet
" all his Wives were excluded from this Privi" lege. Upon which account all those whom he " left behind him at his Death, (5) remain'd al" ways Widows, tho' some of them were very " young, as particularly Ayesha, who was not then full " twenty Years old, and who liv'd Forty Eight " Years after, which was look'd upon in this hot
" Country as a very severe Restraint."

(4) Alcoran, c. 33.

(5) Johannes Andreas, c. 7.

You see in these Words of Dr Prideaux, that the same Wife whom we call'd above (d) Aaisca, is here called Ayesha. The two Authors whom I have cited in that place, do not well express themselves; they say that Mahomet was buried in the Grave of Aaisca; but since she liv'd longer than he, it had been better to say that he was buried in the Chamber of this Wife.* Thus Dr. Prideaux (e) expresses himself. He tells us, (f) that Ayesha, the Daughter of Abubeker, was she of all his Wives, whom Mahomet loved most tenderly, and tho' she was a Woman (6) that lov'd Gallanting, and was always busie in some Intrigue, yet Mahomet could never resolve to put her away. He wrote therefore the twenty fourth Chapters of the Alcoran, to declare her innocent, and at the same time to justifie himself for keeping her. Therefore he declares there to his Musulmans in the Name of God, that all these Reports that were spread to the disadvantage of Ayesha, were Impostures, and black Calumnies, forbids them to speak any more of them, and threatens them, at the same time, with terrible Punishments, both in this Life and the other, who should dare to defame good Women. Mahomet having Married her young, (7) took care to instruct her in all the Sciences that were usually taught in Arabia, and chiefly in the elegance and politeness of Language, and the knowledge of their Antiquities: She profited extreamly by her Husband's Care, and became very Polite and Learned. (8) She hated Ali furiously, because he discovered her Incontinence and Immoralities to Mahomet. Here is another Proof of the tenderness wherewith she was lov'd by her Husband. " (g) Sewda was she of all
(9) Mahomet's Wives whom he lov'd least; he had " even resolv'd to put her away; but he was diverted " from it by her earnest begging of him, that she " might still continue to enjoy the Name of Ma-
" homet's Wife, and promis'd him that she would " require nothing more, that when her turn should " come to lie with him, she would give it to Ayesha.
" The Love he had for Ayesha made him willingly " consent to this Bargain, and so Sewda continued
" in his House during her Life, upon the Condi" tions propos'd."

(d) In the Remark, D. D.

(e) Prideaux, p. 134.

(f) Id. ib. p. 139.

(6) Disputatio Christiani, c. 6. Commentat. in Alcoran, c. 24.

(7) Appendix ad Geograph. Nubiensf. c. 8.

(8) Disput Christiani. c. 6. Elmacin. lib. 1. c. 4. Abul-Faraghius Abul Feda. &c.

(g) Prideaux ib. p. 141.

(9) Gentius in notis ad Musladin. Sadum. p. 568.

Some perhaps may think, that I speak improperly, when I affirm that Mahomet bore with patience the Gallantries of that Wife whom he lov'd most tenderly; for one may imagine that he believ'd her very innocent, and in that Case we must not consider him as a Husband tender and jealous, and at the same time insensible of her Conjugal Unfaithfulness. Where will then be the singularity of that Character I have spoken of? I answer, that there is no appearance that he doubted of the Gallantries of Ayesha. He heard of them by the relation of Ali his Son-in-Law; and he continued to have as great Friendship for, and Confidence in him, as he had before; and doubtless he would not have used him after this manner, if he had taken him for a Slanderer in a Matter so nice as this was. Let us therefore believe, that he was convinc'd of the truth of the Report, and that if the amorous Intrigues of his Wife had not been certain, such Tales and Calumnies had never been forg'd of her, as obliged the false Prophet to have recourse to the Heavenly Authority to put a stop to them. His Followers [illegible] persuaded that he spoke to them in

(i) Prideaux, p. 84.

* (NN) They receiv'd as Oracles the Interpretation She put upon their Law.] Her Credit, after the Death of this false Prophet, was great enough to hinder Ali from becoming Caliph. She hated him for the Reason given in the preceding Remark. Her hatred lasted long; for altho' Ali (i) had a right to the vacant Throne, being Son-in-Law to the Impostor; he was three several times successively excluded. The Throne was vacant the fourth time, and Ali at last came to it; but Ayesha appeared in Arms against him, and tho' she succeeded not this way, yet she destroy'd him by stirring up and fomenting that Revolt, which at length ruin'd Ali and his Family. (1) Ayesha survi'd Mahomet full forty eight Years, and enjoy'd a great Reputation in his Sect, who call'd her the Prophetess and the Mother of the Faithful. She was the living Oracle of his Sect, who consulted her in all difficult Points of the Law, to learn of her what was the Sense of the Law-giver. Whatever her Answers were, they (2) were receiv'd as Oracles, and have always since passed among them for authentical Traditions. All the Traditions which compose the Sunnah, according to them, come from Ayesha, or from some one of the Ten Companions of Mahomet; so they call those Ten Men, who first join'd that Seducer. But the Testimony of Ayesha renders a Tradition very Authentick. Abdorrahman Ebn Auf. holds the second Rank. Note, that Mahomet (a) did not entrust her with the Box of his Apostleship, but Haphsa the Daughter of Omar. This is a little strange; for this Daughter of Omar held but the second (3) Rank in the Heart of her Husband Mahomet (b). " In this Box were all the Originals " of his pretended Revelations, which serv'd for " Materials to Compose the Alcoran. After this " Book was finish'd, Abubeker (4) gave the Origi" nal of it to Haphsa, to be kept in the same Box.
" Which may serve to discover the Error of John
" Andreas, who pretends that it was Ayesha
" who kept it. For this being so considerable an " Office among the Mahometans, what probability " is there, that if Ayesha had been once put in " possession of it by the Impostor himself, Abubeker
" should have endeavoured to dispossess her of it, " especially she being his own Daughter. But " Haphsa was much older than Ayesha, and for " that reason probably was preferr'd before her,
" to have the charge of the precious Depositum."

(1) For she died in the 53 Year of the Hegira, Elmachin, l. 1. c. 7.

(2) Johannes Andreas, c. 3

(a) Prideaux, p. 142.

(3) Joh. Andreas, c. 7.

(b) Prideaux, ib.

(4) Abul-Feda Hottingeri Biblioth Oriental. c. 2 Pocockii Spec. Hist. Arab. p. 362

There is some occasion to wonder, that the Mahometan Religion should be so unkind (c) to the Female Sex, since it was founded by a Man so excessively lascivious, and since his Laws were deposited in the Hands of a Woman, and another was to give the Interpretation of them as she pleas'd. We have already shown that Ayesha was look'd upon as a Prophetess and an Oracle, and that she was indeed a Pope among the Mahometans: Mr. Herbelot relates (d) That he had among them a

(5) Joh Andreas, de Confusione Sectæ Mahometanæ. c. 2.

(c) See Remark (Q).

(d) Herbelot, Biblioth Oriental at the word Aischah p. 60.

upon their Law. Some Christian Authors have Publish'd a very ridiculous Tale (OO) concerning the Credulity of the Mahometans as to Miracles. Mr. Simon † is blam'd for certain Things he has Publish'd, which tend to extenuate the Infamy of Mahometism. See the last Chapter of his Critical History of the Belief and Customs of the Nations in the Levant. But if what he says is grounded upon Reason, he deserves to be commended; for we must not foment the hatred of Evil by making it appear more black and hateful than it really is.

† See the Difficulties propos'd to Mr. Steyaert part 6. from p. 303. to p. 316.

MAHOMET the Second, the 11th Sultan of the Turks, Born at Adrianople the 24th of March, 1430. was one of the greatest Men that is mentioned in History, if we consider only the Qualifications necessary for a Conqueror; for as to those of a good Man, we must not seek for them in his Life. 'Tis not true that his Mother was a Christian *. He very well deserv'd the Title of Great, which he ambitiously aspir'd to, and which the Turks (A) did not fail to give him; "for he signaliz'd † his "Reign by the Conquest of Two Empires, Twelve Kingdoms, and Two Hundred "considerable Cities. But his Progress was not the effect of a sudden Revolution, "or of blind Fortune, which led him on from Victory to Victory, without the "assistance of prudent Conduct. The Blood that he shed upon great occasions, "proves, that the Advantages he gain'd were disputed. He rais'd some Sieges, made "hasty Retreats, and lost some Battles; but those Disgraces which blunt the Edge of "common Spirits, encourag'd his, or rather instructed him how to behave himself for "the future, and his Judgment help'd him to repair by patience, what he had "lost

* See the Remark. F.

† Guillet History of Mahomet II. p. 1. He cites Phranza l. 1. c. 33. Barlet. de Expug. Scodr. lib. 1. Bapt. Egnat. de Orig. Turc. Phil. Lonicer. lib. 1.

very great Authority, even in matters of Doctrine and Religion, and that they often had recourse to her to learn some Tradition of Mahomet, and that she undertook to condemn the Caliph Othman for Impiety. She might then have settled Matters upon a Foot very favourable to her Sex. Whence then came it to pass, that she did not do it? Was she of the Humour of certain Women, who are the first and most fierce in defaming their own Sex? May this be look'd upon as a Proof of that which is sometimes said, That the Authority of Men is never greater than when a Woman is seated on the Throne, and that the Authority of Women is never greater, than when the Scepter is in the Hands of a Man? For my part I know nothing of the matter; let speculative Men exercise their Wit as much as they please upon this Question. But consider, I pray you, the influence of the fair Sex upon the Foundation of Mussulmanism, and how the Passions of a Woman did quickly spread in it the Seeds of Discord. Follow the Tracks of Ali's Schism, and you will find the Lewdness of Ayesha, whom he accus'd, to be the Source of it. This Woman never forgave him: She hindered him three times successively from arriving at the Dignity of Caliph, and after he had obtain'd it, she made a League against him (c), and put her self at the Head of 30000 Men. She lost the Battle, and was taken, and sent back to Medina, where she died, and was buried near to Mahomet: But the League she had made to revenge the Death of Othman died not with her. Ali was at last kill'd upon this pretence, and from thence arose a great Schism, which still continues.

(c) Herbelot ubi supra, and at the word Ali, p. 89. & 90.

I cannot conclude without observing a small want of exactness in the Oriental Bibliotheque of Mr. Herbelot. He says in the Article Aischah, that this Widow of Mahomet, undertook to condemn Othman for Impiety. But in another place (f) he relates, that she being consulted by the Faction who brought some Complaints against this Caliph, made Answer, That he ought to be admitted to Penance, and that she maintain'd it afterwards to Ali. I do not object this as a Contradiction, but as an imperfect Account. We must believe, 1. That this Woman judg'd the Cause of Othman, and condemn'd him for Impiety. 2. That she pronounced that they ought to be satisfied with his Penance. Mr. Herbelot should have join'd these two Facts in the Article of Aischah, and in the Article of Othman, and not have parted the one from the other, by placing the first in one place without the second, and the second in another place without the first. This Advice is very important for all the Writers of Dictionaries, for to them 'tis very difficult to avoid this fault; I am afraid that I have been guilty of it more than once.

MR. HERBELOT criticis'd.

(f) In the Article Othman, p. 696.

(OO) A very ridiculous Tale concerning the credulity of the Mahometans as to Miracles.] A Benedictin of the Low-Countries (g) Publish'd a Book in Latin and Flemish, at Deventer, in 1524. wherein he vents many Follies, and among the rest this which follows; "A Genoese had a great curiosity to see what the Moors or Saracens practis'd in their Mosques, which he enter'd into by stealth, altho' he knew very well the Custom of putting all the Christians to Death who go in there, or forcing them to abjure Christianity. He found himself encompass'd with so great a Croud, that he could not get out, when an Accident happen'd to him which requir'd him to go forth, being very much press'd by a natural Necessity which he could not controul, and in a little time he saw himself in danger of Death, seeing the bad Smell he spread about him discover'd the Mischance. He free'd himself from this Danger, by giving out, that he had been for a long time bound in his Body, and now being come to recommend himself to Mahomet, he was presently eas'd. Whereupon they took his Breeches and hung them up in the Mosque, and cry'd out, a Miracle! a Miracle! The words of this Monk are these: (h) Cum ibi esset in medio maximæ multitudnis, & non posset exire, necessitasque ei venisset superfluum pondus corporis deponendi, stercorizavit in femoralibus. Cum autem fœtor esset in illa Moschæa, omnes circumspiciebant qui hujus fœtoris causa fuisset. Inveneruntque ipsum Januensem, quem volentes occidere, ille, qui forte linguam eorum sciebat, eis dixit, vel per interpretem mendacium hoc significavit, scilicet, Quod cum ipse non posset per longum tempus habere beneficium ventris, intravit templum, ut Mahumeto se commendaret, & statim habuit beneficium ventris. Hoc autem audientes & credentes illi homines bestiales, acceperunt femoralia illa stercore infecta, & suspenderunt in Moschæa, clamantes, miraculum! miraculum! Thus one half of the World laughs at the other; for doubtless the Mahometans are not ignorant of the ridiculous Stories that are told of the Monks; and if it were true that they know nothing of them, yet it might reasonably be believed, that they spread Lyes and impertinent Fables against the Christian Sects. If they knew this Story of the Flemish Benedictin, they would say perhaps, these brave forgers of Miracles frame very gross ones for us, not but that they know how to invent much finer, but those they keep for themselves; they drink off the Wine and send us the Dregs.

(g) Intitulated, Prognosticon Antichristi.

(h) Porgnosticon Antichristi, p. 38. apud Revium in historia Daventriensi, p. 228, 229.

(A) The Title of GREAT..., which the Turks did not fail to give him.] They confess (i) "That all the Conquests of his Successors had "his for their Foundation and Pattern, and that it "was easie for them to follow the way he had "opened to them, after he had removed all Impedi- "ments. And therefore when they speak of him they "commonly suppress his Name of Mahomet, al- "though in their Language it has the glorious "signification of Prais'd or Lov'd (l), and "they distinguish him from the other Sultans, by "the magnificent Titles of Bonuc and Aboulfetch, "whereof the one signifies Great, and the other "the Father of Victory. It is objected to him, that "during his Life, he did ambitiously seek af- "ter the first of these Titles; but did he not "take pains enough to deserve it? The Chri- "stians themselves have not contested it with "him, and 'tis agreed on all Hands, that he was "the first of the Ottoman Emperors, to whom

(i) Guillet History of Mahomet II. l. 1. p. 8.

(l) Anton. Geufrœus in Nomenclat. Vocabul. Barbar.

our

" loſt by Raſhneſs. He was indefatigable beyond imagination, for he did more than " once begin a Campaign gloriouſly in Europe, and finiſh'd it happily in Aſia." It was his good Fortune to be Born in an Age, wherein the Valour of his Enemies was infinitely proper (B) to advance the Glory of his Triumphs. We need not ſearch among the Turks for Matter wherewith to form a juſt Idea of his Merits. The Chriſtians have rais'd (C) Monuments to him, which exalt his Victories above what the Ottoman Annals do, and above all that the Turks could invent to eternize the Grandeur of his Actions. It is therefore very ſtrange, that in Chriſtendom there ſhould be ſome eminent

" our Weſtern Nations gave the Title of Grand- " Signior, or Great Turk, which Poſterity has con- " tinued to his Succeſſors."

(B) The Valour of his Enemies was proper to advance his Glory.] This is a Happineſs which the great Alexander wanted, for he found none but weak Enemies in Aſia, tho' they were innumerable. It ſeems therefore that he was not the Favourite of Fortune in the ſame reſpect as Mahomet was, who had almoſt always brave Nations to contend with, and overcome, which diſtinguiſhes him from all other great Conquerors very much to his advantage. Let us prove this by the words of a Modern Author, who has given us a fine Hiſtory of this Sultan. (a) " It cannot be ſaid, that he had " to do with obſcure Enemies, and Nations that " were not War-like, ſince among the illuſtri- " ous Captains, who made his Fortune waver, " are reckon'd Huniades, and Matthias Corvinus, " with the Forces of Hungary; Scanderbeg, with " thoſe of the fierce Albanians; the Valachian " Uladus no leſs fearleſs than they, although in " truth not ſo honeſt a Man; the Emperors of " Greece and Trebiſonde, the Kings of Perſia, of Na- " ples and Boſnia; the Princes of Greece, of Servia, " of Sinope and Caramania, the Republicks of Venice " and Genoa, the Knights of Rhodes, and the Ar- " mies of the Cruſade, i. e. the choiceſt Sol- " diers of our Weſtern Nations. There was not " one of ſo many Enemies, but what he met " with extraordinary Bravery, and who did not " at laſt yield to his Valour or his Pru- " dence. Chriſtians or Mahometans, they were " all the Aim of his Ambition, and the Intereſt of " his Religion was never admitted among the " Maxims of his Policy. Among ſo many Sultans, " never one of them to this Day, but He only, " durſt ſend regular Troops into Italy, where " at divers times they gain'd a pitch'd Battle, and " took a good Place; not by a ſudden Aſſault, as " Pirates do, but by the regular Attacks of a " formal Siege.

(a) Guillet, ibid. p. 6. & 7.

(C) The Chriſtians have raiſed Monuments to him.] The ſame Hiſtorian has furniſhed us with the Proof of this, (b) " I do not think it any fault to re- " vive the Memory of this Conqueror; for be- " ſides that 'tis impoſſible that his Name ſhould " periſh, (2) there never was any Infidel Prince, " who left among us the like Monuments. The " Catholick Church (3) takes care to put us in " mind of him every Day of the Year, by a re- " markable and perpetual Signal; for the ringing " of the Bell every Day for Prayers at Noon, " was enjoyn'd by one of our Popes, only to " Advertiſe the People to recommend to God the " Faithful that fought againſt this Sultan. (4) " For one Battle that he loſt, we do ſtill every " Year return Thanks to Heaven, by ſolemnizing " the Feſtival of the Transfiguration of our Sa- " viour, which was inſtituted for this Victory. " But it deſerves no leſs our Conſideration, that " he alone gave occaſion to the Convocation of a " general Council, and to the Project of ma- " ny others. His (5) Armies forc'd the Chri- " ſtians to oppoſe againſt him a Cruſade, which " was plainly diſtinguiſh'd from all other Holy " Wars, becauſe a Pope march'd with it in Per- " ſon, accompanied with the College of Cardi- " nals. Laſtly, He alone obliged the Weſtern " Emperors to inſtitute the Order (6) of the " Knights of Auſtria, who under this great Name " taken from the Houſe of their Founder, and under " the Protection of St. George, engag'd themſelves " by formal Vows to put a ſtop to his aſtoniſhing " Progreſs. An (7) Archbiſhop, a Cardinal, and " even a Pope publiſhed during his Life, his " Victories in their Writings, to raiſe up Ene- " mies againſt him in favour of our Altars." The Confeſſion that our Hiſtorians make, is no leſs a Teſtimony to his Glory, than the Preparations which the Pope made to retire to Avignon, in caſe that Italy was attack'd by Mahomet in Perſon. Mahomet, who commanded in Otranto, went from thence to wait upon his Maſter, (c) " and " confer with him about the Progreſs of his " Arms in Italy, whither alſo he promis'd to carry " him. The threats which he us'd at his embark- " ing, threw the Italians into a terrible Con- " ſternation, and made them the rather fear a fa- " tal Campagne, becauſe the Ottoman Garriſon " did every Day make Excurſions, and gain'd new " Advantages, ſo that Otranto was fill'd with " Chriſtian Slaves and Booty. Italy has endur'd " greater Miſchiefs, but it never was put into ſuch " Frights, and it ſeem'd as if the People there were " already condemn'd to wear a Turban. 'Tis cer- " tain that Pope (8) Sixtus IV. believing that he " ſaw Rome already involv'd in the frightful de- " ſtiny of Conſtantinople, deſign'd to truſt it to " the Protection of the Apoſtles, and thought of " nothing but to equip his Gallies to ſail into " Provence, and to tranſlate a ſecond time the Holy " See to Avignon. The Hiſtorians of that time " have written, that there was no Hopes of Safety " for Italy; becauſe in effect there was not one " place ſtrong enough to hold out againſt a hundred " Thouſand Mahometans, ſuppoſing that they were " encourag'd by the Preſence of the Sultan. A- " mong all the Teſtimonies of that Conſternation, " I ſhall only relate that of Sabellicus, who was of " that Country, and liv'd at that time. (9) There " is no doubt that Italy had been undone, if the Pro- " vidence of God had not put a ſtop to ſuch a horrible " Miſchief by the Death of Mahomet " I ſhall quick- ly cite a Paſſage of Platina (d), which may be join'd to the preceding.

(c) Guillet ibid. p. 370, 371. ad ann. 1481.

(8) Cuſpinian in vit. Mahomet.

(9) Sabellic. Ennead. 10 lib. 7.

(d) In the Remark E.

Here is another Monument rais'd by the Chriſtians to the Glory of this Turkiſh Prince. The exceſſive Joy they teſtified at his Death, was equivalent to the fineſt Panegyricks of Greece. Let us hear again Mr. Guillet. (e) The News of the Death of Mahomet was received in Chriſtendom with the greateſt tranſports of Joy that ever were ſeen. At Rhodes, where the News was brought ſooner than to other Places, they made ſolemn Rejoycings, but they were not equal to thoſe of Rome. Pope Sixtus caus'd all the Churches to be open'd, and forbad all Artificers to work at their Trades; he appointed a Feſtival which ſhould laſt for three Days, with publick Prayers and general Proceſſions; he commanded, that during this time the whole Artillery of the Caſtle of St. Angelo ſhould be continually diſcharged; and which is moſt remarkable, he put a ſtop to the Preparations for his Voyage to Avignon, whither he intended to fly as to a place of Refuge from the Ottoman Arms. The Hiſtorian being ſenſible that ſo many Demonſtrations of Joy might be prejudicial to the Chriſtian Name, becauſe they are not agreeable to that noble Greatneſs of Soul, which ancient Rome affected, endeavours to elude or refute this Objection by a pious Remark. It muſt be confeſſ'd, ſays he, (f) that the Chriſtian Religion has put a great difference between the manners of the Ancient Romans and of the Modern, and that it hath done it with ſuch Juſtice as cannot be too much admired. For ancient Rome being prepoſſeſſ'd with its proud Maxims, and a Policy wherein Pride had a larger ſhare than Concern, would not at all repine at the Death of its Enemies for fear of being forced to be ſhamefully afraid of their Power. They Cæſar aſſected to lament the Death of Pompey; and Paſſion Hiſtory is full of Inſtances of ſuch like Obſervation. But in the Age of Mahomet, the Profanation of our Holy Myſteries did juſtly require an exceeding great Joy for the Death of this famous Sacrilegious Robber, as a pious acknowledgment that Rome owed to Heaven for the ſafety of Chriſtendom. I have already ſaid, (a) that the Chriſtians gave this terrible Enemy the Surname of Grand Signior

(e) Guill. ibid pag. 384

(f) ib.

(a) In the Remark A.

(b) Id. ib. p. 4. & 5.

(2) Platina Vit. Caliſt. Girolamo.

(3) Briani. lib. 17.

(4) Pandect. Leunclav. cap. 133. Turco-Græc. p. 62. Petav. ration. temp. par. 1. lib. 9. Briani. lib. 17.

(5) P. Juſtinian. lib. 8. Platina vit. di Pio II.

(6) Lazius lib. 3. rerum Viennenſium.

(7) Leon. Chienſ. Arch. Mityl. Iſid. Ruthen. Card. SS. Pet. & Mart. Pius II.

eminent Writers, who maintain, that Proſperity (D) is a ſign of a good Cauſe, and that none but vertuous Princes * have a ſhare in the Favours of Fortune. 'Tis in vain to alledge, that if Chriſtian Princes had not been divided (E), they had beat the

* See what Bozius has written againſt Machiaras.

(c Septem-Caſtrenſis de moribus Turcarum, c. 11. pag. 40. apud Hottinger. hiſtor. Oriental. pag. 338.

(c) Secundum motivum eſt victoria eorum continua contra Chriſtianos: quod aliquos multum movet. Unde victores ſe nominant, & gloriantur quaſi victores totius mundi. Orant etiam pro victoribus ſpecialiter in omnibus congregationibus ſuis, præſertim in continuis poſt comeſtionem gratiarum actionibus. Superbiunt inſuper, & Chriſtianos faminas deſpiciendo nominant, & ſe viros eorum. Et ut ad hoc magis ac magis incitentur, anteceſſorum victorias deſcribunt, decantant, laudant, ac prædicant. Let us join another Witneſs to this, (d) "The happy ſucceſs of the Arms of theſe Infidels, is another Argument which they make uſe of to maintain the Truth of their Religion. "For ſince they believe that God is the Author of all good Events, they conclude, that the more they have ſucceeded in their Wars, the more God does make it appear, that he approves their Zeal and Religion. This Perſuaſion ma[illegible] Turks hate and deteſt the Jews above all o[illegible] People in the World. They call them a Peo-ple abandon'd by God, becauſe they have no fixed Habitation upon Earth, and no Prince of their own Nation to protect and defend them.

(d Ricaut Preſent State of the Ottoman Empire, B. 2. Chap. 3. p.m. 324.

The Monk, whom I juſt now cited, tells us a thing that is worthy of our attention, which is, that the Turks look upon themſelves as Men, and the Chriſtians as Women. How does this agree with our Hiſtories, which inform us, that the Turks never conquer'd the Chriſtians without being ten or twelve to one, and without loſing twenty times as many People as the Chriſtians did? If this were true, would they ſay, that the Chriſtians are Women? I know not what to ſay on this Subject; but I am perſuaded on the one ſide, that our Weſtern Chriſtians have always been as good Soldiers at leaſt as the Ottoman; and on the other ſide, that our Hiſtories are full of Fables, as to the numbers of the Slain, and of the Soldiers that fought: Theſe they encreaſe prodigiouſly on the ſide of the Infidels, and leſſen no leſs on the other ſide. They do what we have ſeen done by the Gazetteers of each Party in theſe laſt Campaigns at the two Sieges (e) of Namur. By turns the Gazettes of the Beſieged ſpok of many imaginary Aſſau'ts, wherein the Enemy loſt an infinite number of People; and again they have ſo encreaſed their Loſſes in real Aſſaults, that he who ſhould join together the Slain, the Wounded, the Deſerters, and the Sick, mentioned in theſe Relations, would not find one Man left in the Army of the Beſiegers, who could hear the Beſieged beat a Parley. However Things are chang'd for the better; the Turks have ſhown both in Hungary and Greece ſince the Year 1683, that they are but poor Soldiers, and are not able to reſiſt the Chriſtian Troops inferior to them in number. If they had always been ſo unſucceſsful, they would never have taken Proſperity for the Mark of a true Religion. They have had great Loſſes in Europe, and our News-Writers pretend, that they have had fatal Loſſes in Aſia; for how often have we read in the Gazettes, that † Mecca, Grand Cairo, and the Neighbouring Provinces have been Sack'd, and that there was a great Conſternation at Conſtantinople upon occaſion of theſe Irruptions and Inſurrections (f). Theſe were the Shams and politick Frauds which were deſign'd to perſuade the People, that all the Imperial Troops would quickly be upon the Rhine.

(e) The firſt in 1692, the ſecond in 1695.

† Note, that Mecca does not belong to the Turks as the Gazettes ſuppoſed.

(f) [illegible] words of Juvenal, Sa. 6. v. 407.

It ſeems, that the Turks, after theſe Diſgraces, ſhould doubt whether their Religion be good, [illegible] to prosper in this Life, and that if we obſerve it narrowly, we ſhall find the Maxim of Livy true, (i) that thoſe who fear God ſucceed in their Deſigns, and that Fortune is contrary to the Wicked. This is not all: As to the general Theſis it is agreed, that we ſhould not judge of things by the Event, and that thoſe who do ſo, deſerve (k) to be Unhappy. But let us repreſent to our ſelves two great oppo[illegible]parties, whereof the one has formed an impo[illegible] Enterprize: If it ſucceeds, they do not fail to infer from thence, that it is juſt; they maintain, that this good Succeſs is a Mark of God's Approbation; the other Party on the contrary maintains, that we muſt keep to the general Theſis, and to caret ſucceſſibus opto, &c. and that God permits very often for the Puniſhment of Men, that the Wicked ſhould ſucceed in their pernicious Deſigns. But if the Party, who gives ſuch Leſſons of Morality, a little while after forms an Enterprize of Conſequence, and ſees it ſucceſsful, ye ſhall no more hear them ſpeak of the general Theſis; but they ſay in their turn, that good Succeſs is a mark of the Juſtice of that Affair, and that it appears God has approved it, ſince he has ſo viſibly accompanied it with his holy Benediction. Then the other Party will not be aſham'd to ſay, that we muſt not judge of things by the Event, Careat ſucceſſibus opto, &c. and to vent a hundred fine common Places. Is there any thing more convenient than this? Is not this to be furniſhed with Principles, as we are with Cloaths, whereof one ſort is for Summer, and the other for Winter (l)?

HOW Menſport with different Principles about Proſperity and Adverſity.

(g) 2 Tim. 3. 12.

(h) 1 Tim. 4. 8.

(i) Invenietis omnia proſpere eveniſſe ſequentibus Deos, adverſa ſpernentibus, T. Livius lib. 5.

(E) That if the Chriſtian Princes had not been divided.] An infinite number of Books are full of Complaints, that the Chriſtian Princes by devouring one another, have loſt Conſtantinople, the Iſle of Rhodes, Hungary, &c. which they might eaſily have hindred, if they had uni[illegible] their Forces againſt the Common Enemy of Chriſtendom. We have reaſon to believe this, and to complain of a diſagreement which has been ſo profitable to the Turks. But it would be very ridiculous, if this Remark ſhould be made uſe of to ſhew, that the falſe Church has not been more favour'd with temporal Proſperities than the true one; for this diſagreement of Chriſtian Princes, is in it ſelf a great unhappineſs: And ſuppoſe the Infidels had not taken Advantage of it, it had nevertheleſs been a great Affliction to Chriſtendom. Obſerve well, that in the Queſtion, whether Chriſtianity has had a larger ſhare of Proſperity than the falſe Religions, we are not to enquire, whether the Sultans obtained Victories by the Valour of their Troops, or by the Weakneſs of their Enemies; but whether they conquer'd Kingdoms and gain'd Battles over the Chriſtians. Whether they did theſe things by good Fortune, or by Bravery, it is always a temporal Proſperity: And ſo we get no thing by weakening the Glory of their Triumphs, under pretence of their taking advantage of the diviſions of Chriſtians: Which rather affords a new Proof of the unfortunateneſs of Chriſtians. Let us therefore reckon it as a Monument erected by the Chriſtians to the good Fortune and Glory of the Turks that ſo many Harangues have been Pub[illegible], exhorring Chriſtian Princes to unite their [illegible]s againſt the Infi[illegible]. There was a time when our Profeſſors of E[illegible]nce would not ha[illegible]een thought worthy o[illegible] Penſions, unleſs [illegible] made an harangue of th[illegible]Nature, and thoſe H[illegible]s were not the Sportings of Wit, or Schoo[illegible]-

(k) Careat ſucceſſibus opto Quiſquis ab eventu facta notanda putat. Ovid. Epiſt. Phyllid. Demophoont.

(l) Apply here what St. Hilary ſays, lib. 2. ad Conſtant againſt the annuas atque menſtruas de Deo fides, which were rather fides temporum quam Evangeliorum. See alſo the Advice to the Refugees, p. 85 the Mahometans. There are ſome who write, that this Sultan (F) was an Atheiſt. This may be true, and at leaſt 'tis certain, that he made War to ſatisfie his Ambition, and not to aggrandize Mahometiſm. He preferr'd his own Intereſt to that of the Religion erciſes, [illegible]he Declamations that were made at Rome upon [illegible]bal (a) and Sylla (b), but they were ſerious and [illegible] Diſcourſes, deſign'd to perſuade Princes to [illegible]into a ſtrict League, and make a famous Expe[illegible]. Jerome Reuſnerus has collected many Volume[illegible] theſe Harangues. Neither did the Princes only ſtand in need of an Exhortation to Concord: There was another kind of Diviſion which did no ſmall miſchief to Chriſtianity. The Eccleſiaſticks depended upon the Laity, and theſe hop'd the Eccleſiaſtick[illegible]ld furniſh the Expences of the War. Pla[illegible]s very naturally deſcrib'd the ill Effect[illegible]ch follow'd from that reciprocal Expectation. Mahometus Arabs, ſays he, (c) Magnum in Chriſtiano populo excitavit incendium: & ita magnum, ut verear ne ejus ſecta noſtra potiſſimum ætate reliquias Chriſtiani nominis penitus extinguat: adeo tepeſcimus, & animo ac corpore languidi interitum noſtrum expectantes concidimus. Invaleſcit ejus ſecta nunc multo magis quam antea. Nam tota Aſia & Africa, magnaque pars Europæ Mahometanis principibus ſubjecta eſt. Inſunt nunc Thurci terra ac mari: ut nos tanquam cuniculos, in hac Europæ latebras eruant. Sedemus otioſi: alter alterum expectantes, quaſi hoc malum univerſæ reipublicæ Chriſtianæ non immineat. Expectant ſacerdotes ut à ſæcularibus hoc tantum bellum & tam neceſſarium ſumatur. Expectant item ſæculares ut Presbyteri tuendæ religionis cauſa pecunias in ſumptus bellicos polliceantur & ſubminiſtrent, ne in pejores uſus effundant, quemadmodum facere plerique conſueverc, pecunias eleemoſynis & ſanguine martyrum comparatas, [illegible]aureas & argenteas vaſa & pergrandia quidem fundentes, [illegible]parum de futuro ſolliciti: Dei quem tantum utilitatis gratia colunt, & hominum contemptores:

Bellarmin therefore is very juſtly laugh'd at for placing Proſperity among the Marks of the true Church. (d) Quas ultimo ponit loco notas Bellarminus IX. & X. infelicem exitum Eccleſiam oppugnantium, felicitatem vero Eccleſiam defendentium, nomen notarum adeo non merentur, ut mirum ſit non cogitaſſe Cardinalem furioſis hac ratione Muhammedanis contra nos ſuppeditari arma. It belongs to the Mahometans to teach ſuch a Doctrine, as Hottinger makes it appear, beſides ſhews elſewhere, that the Name of Catholick, Antiquity, a long and uninterrupted Duration, a large Extent, the ſucceſſion of Biſhops, the Miracles, the Auſterity of Manners, the Teſtimony of Adverſaries, and ſuch other Marks whereby Bellarmin pretends to diſcern the true Church, are the ſame which the Followers of Mahomet alledge to the advantage of their Religion.

(F) That this Sultan was an Atheiſt.] Paulus Jovius makes this remark upon this occaſion: (e) Natus erat ex Deſpoti Serviæ filia, quæ puerum Chriſtianis præceptis & moribus imbuerat, quorum mox oblitus adoleſcendo, ita ad Mahometis ſacra ſe contulit, ut neque hos, neque illos ritus teneret, & in arcano prorſus Atheus laberetur; utpote qui unum tantum bonæ fortunæ numen coleret, quod præclarè conciliari vivida efficacique animi virtute prædicabat. Itaque null. addictus religioni, cunctorum hominum accuratas de Diis, tanquam humana nihil curantibus, cogitationes irridebat; eo animi decreto, ut nullum unquam jus amicitiæ aut fœderis, niſi ex commodo, exceptaque ad proferendum imperium occaſione, colendum atque ſervandum arbitraretur. There are two Obſervations to be made upon this Paſſage: 1. Paulus Jovius is miſtaken, when he affirms the Mother of Mahomet to have been a Chriſtian. (f) "Neither the Name nor the Quality of his Mother "is known, altho' all the Weſtern Hiſtorians being "prepoſſeſs'd with a common Error, have deſcribed her to us, under Names differently forg'd, "ſometimes of Meliſſa, and Irene; ſometimes of Mary "the Daughter of the Deſpotes of Servia, and call'd "Deſpane, a Title of Honour which the Greeks "gave to the Eaſtern Chriſtian Princeſſes. But al"tho' this Deſpane was Married to ſultan Amurat, "yet ſhe was no more than Step-Mother to Ma"homet, and never had [illegible]Children, as is plainly "prov'd by the Emb[illegible]f the Hiſtorian. (g) "Phrantzes, who was [illegible]ollicite her to Marry "the Emperor Conſtantine when ſhe was the Wi"dow of Amurat. The Turks, and the reſt of the "[illegible]are agreed in this .... (g). There is a great "[illegible]lity that (2) Deſpane Mara, who by a "[illegible]ar Privilege lived there (h) in the exerciſe "of the Chriſtian Religion, took ſome care of "him; for ſhe taught him the Lord's Prayer, and "the Angelical Salutation, not as a Leſſon of Piety, "which Amurat, being jealous of his Worſhip, "would have rigorouſly condemn'd, but as a meer "amuſement to a Child, whoſe curioſity already "inclin'd him to all things". My ſecond Reflection is, that Paulus Jovius groſly contradicts himſelf; for if Mahomet II. acknowledg'd and ſerv'd the Divinity of Fortune, and if he believ'd, that he could gain her Favour by Application, and by virtue of his Courage, he was not at all an Atheiſt, and did not wholly reject Providence. 'Tis plain, that this Fortune whom he ſerv'd could not be conceiv'd in his Mind, but under the Idea of a Being which diſpoſes of Events and Favours to certain Perſons. This cannot be attributed to a blind Being, which is mov'd only by a natural force. But this Being muſt direct its Power according to its deſires, muſt know what Men do, and diſtinguiſh them one from another. Every one may ſee that the Atheiſt's Syſtem is inconſiſtent with the Suppoſition of ſuch a Being (i). Father Maimbourg, who tranſcribes here from Paulus Jovius, has fallen into the ſame Contradiction. There never was, (k) ſays he, a greater Atheiſt than this Prince, who ador'd only his own good Fortune, which he own'd to be the only Divinity, to which he was always ready to ſacrifice all things; who laughed at all Religions, at the Chriſtian, in which he was inſtructed from his Infancy by [illegible]Sultaneſs his Mother-in-Law, the Daughter of the De[illegible]of Servia; and at the Religion of Mahomet, whom he [illegible]the Ring-leader of the Banditti among his Conſidents; and at all thoſe who believed there was any other Providence but that which every one ought to have for himſelf. From hence it came to paſs, that his Intereſt, Grandeur and Pleaſure were the only Rule of his Actions, and that he neither kept Faith, nor Word, nor Oath, nor Treaty, but only ſo far as he found it convenient or uſeful for attaining one of theſe three Ends, which he always aim'd at in every thing that he undertook.

'Tis a very common Opinion, that ſome People are Fortunate and others Unfortunate; and we can hardly refrain from believing it, when we conſider publick Events. There are ſome Admirals who are almoſt always croſs'd by contrary Winds, in the moſt important Deſigns. There are others for whom a fair Wind ſeems to riſe, every time they have any great Deſigns to execute. This good and bad Fortune doth not appear ſo manifeſtly in Land Armies; but it cannot be denied but Rain or fair Weather, and many other Accidents which do not at all depend upon our Wiſdom, do croſs or hinder oftener the Deſigns of certain Generals, than they do thoſe of others. It ſeems alſo that it may be obſerv'd, there are ſome Generals, who are never ſeconded with what they call lucky Hits, but when they fight againſt Captains who are counted unlucky. If one ſhould follow the Tracks of the Adventures of private Perſons, we might find there proportionably as many Marks of lucky or unlucky Hits. There is no Atheiſt, no Epicurean, who can admit of this diſtinction of good and bad Fortune, it is not conſiſtent with their Syſtem. Will they alledge the influences of the Stars? But that's not fit to be ſaid but in a Ballad: for the Stars can do nothing, in this caſe, unleſs they are directed by an intelligent Principle; and this is what they do not admit. They will ſay that he is an unlucky Man, who pays for Two Hundred Lots, out of Three Thouſand, and draws no Prize at all; and that he is a lucky Man who pays only for three Lots out of a hundred thouſand, and draws the biggeſt Prize; but they will maintain that this is done without the direction of any intelligent Being, and is a neceſſary conſequence of the mixture of the Lots. In effect, if there were no Providence, ſome Body muſt neceſſarily have the greateſt Prize, and one Perſon rather than a hundred others: But they cannot maintain, according to their Syſtem, that certain Men ſhall always have the great Prizes, who pay only for a few Lots, and that thoſe who pay for a great number ſhall never draw any Prize; for this would plainly teſtifie the direction of ſome Genius that is a Friend or an Enemy. And thus it appears, why they cannot admit the diſtinction, properly

A REFLECTION upon what is commonly believ'd, that ſome People are Fortunate.

(a) Clemens & ſævas curre per Alpes, Ut pueris placeas & declamatio fias. Juven. Sat. 10. v. 166.

(b) Et nos ergo manum ferulæ ſubduximus, & nos Conſilium dedimus Syllæ privatus ut altum Dormiret. Id. Sat. 1. v. 13.

(c) Platina in Bonifacio 5.

(d) Hotting. Hiſtor. Orient. p. 338.

(e) Jovius in elog. virorum bellica virtute illuſtrium lib. 3. p. m. 262.

(f) Guillet ubi ſupra liv. 1. p. 10.

(g) Phran. lib. 3. cap. 2. Chalcond. l. 7. Turco-Græc. p. 22. Annal. Sultan. cap. 93. & 96.

(g) Guillet ib. p. 11.

(2) Turco-Græc. 194. Informat. di Paolo Giovio p. 75 Annal. Sultan. c. 99.

(h) In the Seraglio.

(i) See the Article of Ceſar,

(k) Maimbourg Hiſt. of the Schiſm of the Greeks, 16 p. 291 of the Holland Edition. He cites Ducas, c. 33 ligion he profeſs'd, and from hence it came to paſs, that he granted a Toleration to the Greek Church, and (G) alſo ſhow'd great Civility to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. There is no probability that he made the Vow (H) which is attributed to him. 'Tis ſaid, that to ſhew his Soldiers, that Pleaſure was not capable of ſoftning his Warlike Virtue, he cut off the Head of a Miſtreſs (I), with whom he was deſperately in love.

This

perly ſpeaking, of People that are Fortunate and Unfortunate *. In a word, to return to Mahomet, if he acknowledged the Divinity of Fortune, he was neither an Atheiſt nor an Epicurean.

(G) A Toleration to the Greek Church, and much Civility to the Patriarch.] I perſuade my ſelf that my Readers will be glad to find here a ſmall Account of a Matter ſo curious as this. I ſhall make uſe of the words of Father Maimbourg, who having deſcrib'd the taking of Conſtantinople, and Mahomet's triumphal Entrance into that City, continues thus: (a) " After this, as he was very dextrous, being " unwilling to loſe Chriſtians, who were the chief " Forces, and who afforded the greateſt Revenue of " his new Empire, he made uſe of a great piece of " Policy, to gain their good Will, by ſhewing them " that he would treat them very favourably like a " good Maſter, and allowing them the free Exerciſe " of their Religion. For underſtanding that the Pa- " triarchal See was vacant by the voluntary Reſigna- " tion of Gregory Proto-ſyncellus, who had retir'd to Rome, " he would have one plac'd there. And that he " might act at firſt as an Emperor, he ordain'd that " it ſhould be done after the ſame manner that was " uſual under the laſt Princes.——He caus'd ſome " Biſhops to aſſemble, who were then about Con- " ſtantinople, with a few Eccleſiaſticks who re- " main'd there, and the chief Citizens; and theſe " choſe, according to his Order, the famous Sena- " tor (2) George Scholarius, the ſame who had de- " clared ſo briskly for the Catholick Faith at the " Council of Florence, and whom Mahomet, who " lov'd able Men, had ſpar'd, when he put to Death " ſo many Perſons of Quality, knowing that he " was a very learned Man, and the moſt Eloquent " of all the Greeks. He was then choſen under " the Name of Gennadius; and the Sultan would " have the ſame Ceremonies obſerv'd on this oc- " caſion, which the Emperors of Conſtantinople had " us'd at inſtalling the Patriarchs after this man- " ner.— (b) Immediately after Gennadius had been " choſen, he was conducted by his Order with " great Pomp into the Palace, where he receiv'd " him with all ſorts of Honour and Teſtimonies " of good Will, made him eat even at his Table, " held long Conferences with him, as if he had " been one of his moſt intimate Confidents. Af- " ter which, being carried into the great Hall, the " Ceremony was perform'd of giving the Paſtoral " Staff into his Hand, in the preſence of the Turks " and Chriſtians, who flock'd thither to ſee ſuch a " ſurprizing Show; where the Sultan of the Turks, " the mortal Enemy of Chriſtendom, was ſeen to " give the Inveſtiture of the Patriarchate of Con- " ſtantinople by the Croſier. He did more than " all this; for tho' the new Patriarch did all that " he could to hinder him, alledging the example of " other Emperors who had never carried Good- " neſs and Civility ſo far; yet he would conduct " him to the Gate of the Palace, and there ſaw " him mounted on a very fine Horſe of his own, " richly harneſs'd with white Sattin, embroider'd " with Gold, and order'd all his Viſiers and Ba- " ſhaws to accompany him, as they did, marching " in good order on Foot, ſome before, and ſome " behind him, in a long and magnificent Train, " a-croſs the (3) whole City, as far as the famous " Church of the Twelve Apoſtles, which he had " aſſign'd to be his Patriarchal Church, in lieu " of St. Sophia, whereof he had made a great Moſ- " que. He went alſo to viſit him ſome Days af- " ter in the new Patriarchal Palace of the Church " of Our Lady, which he had obtain'd of the " Sultan inſtead of that of the Twelve Apoſtles; " and there he deſir'd him to explain to him the " chief Points of the Chriſtian Religion: Which " this great Man did with ſo much Judgment, " Strength and Clearneſs, and ſo much with the " Approbation of the Sultan, that he deſir'd to " have that Expoſition in Writing, which is to be " ſeen to this Day in Greek, Latin and Arabic half " Turkiſh. Thus that able Prince, by this feign'd " Sweetneſs at the beginning of his Empire, " endeavour'd to oblige the Chriſtian Greeks to " bear the Yoke more patiently, which they " ſhould not find ſo hard, as they found it ſince " to this Day." Conſult Mr. Guillet (c) who relates all this largely and exactly, and adds many other things which were done by Mahomet in favour of the Greeks. The Abſtract of which may be ſeen in the following Remark.

(H) The Vow which is attributed to him.] " (d) " The Supplement (e) to the Annals of Baronius " in 1469, affirms, that Mahomet tranſported with " Zeal for his Religion, made the following ſo- " lemn Vow againſt ours. I ſwear and proteſt " by a Vow, which I make to the only God, Creator of " all Things, that I will neither taſte the ſweetneſs of " Sleep, nor of good Chear, that I will renounce even " the Deſires of Pleaſure, and ſenſual Delights, and " that I will not turn my Face from the Eaſt to the Weſt " till I have trampled under my Horſe's Feet, all the " Gods which the Adorers of Chriſt ſhall make of Wood, " Braſs, Silver and Gold, and all the painted Pictures: " In a word, until I have purg'd the whole Face of the " Earth from their Impieties, from the Eaſt unto the " Weſt, that I may cauſe the Praiſes of the true God, " and of Mahomet his Prophet to be eternally ſounded " forth every where. The Greek Hiſtorians of this " time, who could write with certainty about " the Affairs of their own Country, and who did " not ſpare this Sultan in any thing, ſay nothing " of this Vow. Is it poſſible that the Latin Hi- " ſtorians, without citing any Authority, ſhould " make Mahomet ſo zealous for his Religion, who " maintain, that he profeſs'd none? Will they " ſay, that this Prince had a mind to play the Hy- " pocrite, to flatter his Subjects with a falſe Ap- " pearance of Piety, who was always ſo fierce, " and ſo well-perſuaded of his mighty Pow- " er, that he never us'd any Caution, was " never known to be reduc'd to ſuch a " Condeſcenſion by any Sedition of the Ar- " my or People, nor by any Formality " in the Ceremonies of his Law? It had been " eaſie for him to begin the performance of this " Vow in Turky, where his Sacrilegious Nation " would have lik'd nothing better than to ſecond " this falſe Zeal. 'Tis evident, that contrary to the " deſign of this pretended Policy, he would have " made himſelf ridiculous there, by doing every Day " before their Eyes the contrary to what he had " promis'd: For we have deſcrib'd his care to " reſtore the Patriarchal Dignity, to maintain a " kind of familiar Converſation with the Patri- " archs Gennadius and Maximus, to Authorize from " time to time the Exerciſe of their Religion by " Letters-Patents, or by the Orders of his Cadies, " and to People Conſtantinople with Chriſtian Fami- " lies, which he drew out of every City of Greece, " as fair as by his Arms he Conquer'd them. We " need do no more but conſider the preſent State " of Greece, where his Succeſſors have permitted the " Exerciſe of Chriſtianity, according to the liberty " he gave them when they were firſt Conquer'd. " In the moſt famous Monaſteries in that Country, " there are to be ſeen to this Day, the ſafe Con- " ducts and Titles of Exemption which he gene- " rouſly granted to their Prieſts. He did not forbid " the Greeks the veneration of uncarv'd Images, which " is ſtill continu'd to them againſt the expreſs " words of this Vow; and he granted the ſame " Toleration for carv'd Images, which were re- " verenc'd by the Genoeſe of the Romiſh Church, " planted at Galata, and by the Albanians of the " ſame Principle, who were ſubject to Scanderbeg. " The Latin Hiſtorians have alſo written, that as " often as Mahomet met a Chriſtian, he (4) believ'd " himſelf defil'd with a ſpiritual Taint, and ran " preſently to the Waſhings of the Alcoran, and " cleans'd his Eyes and his Mouth: But if this " had been ſo, he muſt have us'd many of this kind " of Purifications, when at the Head of his Army " he met fifty or ſixty Thouſand Chriſtians.

(I) He cut off the Head of a Miſtreſs.] She was call'd (f) Irene, and was but Seventeen Years old. (g) A Baſhaw had made her a Slave at the taking of Conſtantinople, and given her to the Sultan. You may

* See upon all this the Remarks of the Article Timoleon.

(a) Maimbourg. ib. p. 358, &c.

(1) Phranza. l. 3. c. 9.

(2) Phranza lib. cit. Leo Allat. de perp. conſenſ. l. 3. c. 5. 6.

(b) Maimbourg, ib. p. 361, 362.

(3) Turco-Græc. l. 2. Panmacharioſ.

(c) Ubi ſupra, l. 3. p. 259. &c.

(d) Guillet ubi ſupra, l. 6. p. 164. &c.

(e) Spondanus in the continuation of the Annals: he cites the Letter 380 of the Cardinal of Pavia, and ſays, that one having carried a Copy of that Vow to Raguſa, it was Tranſlated into Italian and ſent to the Venetians, who communicated it to the Pope. Probably this Piece was fram'd either by ſome idle Man, or ſome Politician, to excite the Weſtern Princes to a War.

(4) Iſidor Ruthen.

(f) Guillet. ibid. l. 3. p. 293. ad ann. 1455.

(g) Id. ib.

This Story, methinks, is a little Apocryphal. The greateſt part of Chriſtian Hiſtorians in ſpeaking of him, have ſacrific'd (K) their Candor to their Paſſion and Reſentment. He died * on the third of May, 1481, in a Town of Bithynia, as he enter'd into the fifty ſecond Year of his Age. He was † the firſt of the Sultans who prepar'd for himſelf a peculiar Monument. I think he was alſo the firſt who lov'd the Arts and Sciences (L). His (M) Epitaph deſerves to be conſider'd. I ſhall have ſome Faults to object to (N) Mr. Moreri, and will not let paſs the inconſiderateneſs of F. Maimburg, who attributes may find [illegible] Guillet the Circumſtances of this Adventure [illegible] ſince he obſerves, (b) that all thoſe who m[illegible] it, tranſcrib'd it from (i) Bandelli, an Italia[illegible]onk, who ſeems to deſerve no credit by the Faults he has made, contrary to the order of Time, and to the Names and Ranks of the Perſons he introduces there, I hold it not very certain. Mr. Scudery who made ſo many Harangues under the Name of illuſtrious Ladies, made ſome politic Diſcourſes under the Name of Kings. One of t[illegible] Diſcourſes is the pretended Anſwer of our Sult[illegible] to the Complaints of his Army, on the ſame Day he Beheaded this fine Woman.

(b) Ibid. p. 299.

(i) This is Bandel (Matt.) of whom I have made an Article.

(K) Have ſacrificed their Candor to their Paſſion.] Mr. Guillet having obſerv'd, that the Weſtern Nations gave this Sultan the Title of Grand Signior, or Great Turk, adds immediately; " (a) 'Tis " true, that this favourable Teſtimony of our " People was contradicted by the greateſt part of " the Weſtern Hiſtorians of his Time; for there " was no Reproach nor outrageous Word where- " with they did not [illegible] their Pen blacken this " Prince. Indeed their [illegible] for the Chriſtian Re- " ligion is to be commended, when upon occaſion " they were tranſported againſt the Impieties of Ma- " homet; but then they ought alſo upon occaſion " to have publiſh'd what commendable Qualities he " had. This is the juſt Moderation which was " obſerv'd by Philip Comines, and Chalcondylas, and in " the Letter of Pope Pius II. who ſpeaking of this " Prince during his Life, laid aſide vulgar Pre- " judices, and obſerv'd ſuch wiſe Reſerves as we " ought always to have for Crown'd Heads. For " in all Times, an unſeemly Cuſtom has baniſh'd " that Moderation, which ought to be us'd a- " mong Writers of a different Religion, and of " different Parties, and hath put them upon in- " vective and bitterneſs; as if Juſtice and Reaſon " ſtood in need of ſuch mean and ſhameful Helps. " And indeed it muſt be confeſs'd, that if a- " mong all the Reproaches publiſh'd at that time " againſt Mahomet, you except a few which were " indeed warranted by Modeſty and Piety, the " reſt appear to be ſham Commendations, and " vain Threatnings of thoſe whom they fear'd." This Author draws well the Portraicture of many People, who have appear'd in all Ages and all Nations.

(a) Guillet, ſupra l. 1. p. 9.

(b) Id. ib. p. 15.

(c) Ib. id. p. 16.

(d) Ibid. p. 17. See about all this F. Maimbourg's Hiſtory of the Schiſm of the Greeks, l. 6. p. 289. who cites Phranz. l. 1. c. 33. Leuncl. l. 15.

(L) The firſt Sultan who lov'd the Arts and Sciences.] He read (b) often the Hiſtory of Auguſtus, and of the other Cæſars, and with greater pleaſure that of Alexander, of Conſtantine and Theodoſius, becauſe all three reign'd in the Countries under his Dominion — (c); the love he had for Hiſtory, made him in time eſteem the Hiſtorians, of which he gave them ſome marks.——He paſſionately lov'd Painting and Muſick, and apply'd himſelf to Graving and Agriculture.—— (d) He lov'd dearly the knowledge of foreign Languages, contrary to the Genius of his Nation; for he ſpoke not only the Arabick, which is affected to the Ottoman Law, and to the Religion of Mahomet the Law-giver, but alſo the Perſian, the Greek, and French, i. e. the Italian corrupted. But chiefly he excell'd in Aſtrology; and to encourage his own Troops and terrifie his Enemies, he gave out, that the Motions and Influences of the Heavenly Bodies promiſed him the Empire of the World. To know how well he was ſkill'd in Painting, we need only read in Mr. Guillet (e) what Vaſari relates of Gentile Bellino, a famous Venetian Painter, who was for ſome time at Mahomet's Court, and return'd from thence loaded with Preſents. He brought Home the Picture of that Emperor, and ſo it was not difficult for Hiſtorians to tell us how he look'd. F. Maimbourg has a little abus'd F. Boubours upon this Subject. See (f) the Critique generale de l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſm. I ſhall end this Remark with [illegible] words of Paulus Jovius, (g) Cæterum Mahomet qui impoſitatis apud ſ[illegible] apud noſtros ver[illegible] perfidiæ & inhumanæ cru[illegible]is notam ſubiit, hanc ſa[illegible]ſſione omnium, [illegible] laudem à Barbaris re[illegible] non inſulſe tu[illegible]ſe exiſtimatur, quod ſi litterarum, & præcellentium artium deus cordi fuerit; quando cunctas clariſſimarum gentium Hiſtorias, jubi verti in Turcicam linguam juberet; ut inde hauſtis militiæ præceptis, actionum ſuarum diſciplinam, exemplorum varietate confirmaret, & præclaros artifices pictoreſque præſertim inſigni liberalitate complecteretur. Nam & commentaria rerum ab ipſo geſtarum à Liberto ejus (h) Vicentino conſcripta leginus; veraque ejus imagine ſumus potiti, quam Gentilis Bellinus, è Venetiis Byzantium evocatus pinxerat; quum ibi regiam multis tabulis rerum novarum ad oblectationem jucundiſſimam referret

(e) Guillet, ubi ſupra, l. 7 p. 381.

(f) Scudery Illuſtrious Baſhaw, to. 1 p. 320, 321.

(g) Paulus Jovius, ubi ſupra, p. 265.

(h) A Nameleſs Angiolello, of whom I have made an Article.

(M) His Epitaph deſerves to be conſidered.] " (i) " His Body was carried into a Moſque, founded " by himſelf, where his Turbant and his Simitar " are to be ſeen to this Day: But that which is " ſingular in his Epitaph is this, that it ſays no- " thing of his great Actions, and ſeems to value " them but little, in compariſon of his laſt Thoughts, " which are only expreſs'd in it as the greateſt " Elogium, and moſt faithful Picture of his Cou- " rage. The Inſcription conſiſted only of nine or " ten Turkiſh words, which may be expounded by " theſe, I intended to conquer Rhodes and proud Italy." This very plainly informs us, 1 That Mahomet's Epitaph did not mention any of the Deſigns he had executed, but only the Deſigns he had a mind to execute. 2. That theſe future Actions were ſet down in the Turkiſh Language. This is very different from the account of Madam Scudery, (k) As Ambition was the predominant Paſſion of Mahomet, ſo it follow'd him until his Death, and he ordred this Inſcription to be put on his Monument in the Latin Tongue, after a long Narrative of all his Victories in the Turkiſh Tongue HE INTENDED TO HAVE RUIN'D RHODES AND PROUD ITALY. Spandigunus (l) agrees with this Account, except that he does not ſay the laſt words were in Latin. I find it probable enough, that Selim I. to go beyond this Epitaph, caus'd one (m) to be made, wherein it was ſaid, that he ſtill made War after his Death.

(i) Apud Spondanum ad ann. 1481 n. 2.

(k) Scudery, ubi ſupra, p. 321.

(l) Laonicus Chalcondylas in his Hiſtory of the Turks, I am the great Selim, who conquered the Earth, who ſeek for fights ſtill after my Death Fortune did always bend under my Efforts: My Body is in this Tomb, but my Spirit is at War

(m) Here follows the Subſtance of the Epitaph, tranſlated by Du Verdier in his Hiſtory of the Turks.

(N) I ſhall have ſome faults to object to Mr Moreri.] I. 'Tis not true that Mahomet ſubdu'd Carinthia and Stiria. His Troops made only Excurſions, and ravag'd the Country there, after the Victory of Liſſonio, which they gain'd over the Venetians in (n) 1467. II. 'Tis falſe that he made his own Epitaph in Latin. III. And that he died at Nicomedia: For he died in a Town (o) of Bithynia, known to the Ancients by the Name of Aſtacus, between Conſtantinople and Nicomedia, which are diſtant from one another a Days Journey. This Town is call'd by ſome Teggiur Tzair, and by others Gemiſe. IV He lived above Fifty One Years, and not Fifty Three Years. V It cannot be ſufficiently admir'd, that Mr. Moreri ſhould ſay, that Mahomet did not want Courage For thus we uſe to ſpeak of a Man ſuſpected of Cowardize, when we endeavour to vindicate him Thus we ſpeak of a very peaceable Prince, who never gave any publick proofs of his Valour, but made it appear in private, that he neither fear'd Death nor Dangers: But 'tis abſurd to expreſs one's ſelf after this manner, ſpeaking of the Thunder-bolt of War, and of ſuch a Conqueror as our Mahomet was, who, to uſe the words of an Hiſtorian, whom Moreri ſhould have known, (p) Had by Nature a Body extreamly ſtrong, that could endure all the fatigues of War, which he made his continual Buſineſs during his whole Life, and a very fine Temper, and that he was Prudent, Bold, Enterprizing, and infatiable of Glory, and had a Heart even great above his Birth and Fortune, and an undaunted Courage VI Mr Moreri expreſſes himſelf very ill a little after, when he affirms, that To ſpeak ingenuouſly, one cannot bear of Mahomet's Debaucheries without Contempt And then preſently he ſays, That that infamous Wretch would have forc'd the Peace of Walachia Is it not with Horror, and not with Contempt, that we hear of ſuch a Lewdneſs? VII. Mahomet himſelf did not cut off the Head of a Woman becauſe ſhe appeared to him too beautiful; 'twas becauſe his Soldiers murmur'd to ſee him loſe his Reputation, and the fair Opportunities

(n) See Paulus Jovius, ubi ſupra, p. 263. & Guillet, l. 7 p. 295, 291.

(o) Guillet, l. 7 p. 377.

(p) Maimbourg's Hiſtory of the Schiſm of the Greeks, l. 6 p. 299. He cites Leuncl. l. 15 Ionic Hiſt Tur. l. 1 Cuſpin. in Mahom attributes (O) to the Schiſm of the Greeks the Miſchiefs that they ſuffered under this Turkiſh Prince.

Landinus, a Knight of Rhodes, has collected divers Letters which this Sultan had written in Syriack, in Greek, and in Turkiſh, and Tranſlated them into Latin. This Tranſlation has been publiſh'd. (P) I ſhall ſpeak of it hereafter, but 'tis not known † where the Originals may be. I ſhall Diſcourſe alſo of a Letter which Pope Pius II. wrote to the ſame Sultan; (Q) which employ'd the Pens of the Controverſial Writers. It may not only † See Fabricius et. de interpret. p. m. 183.

tunities of Action in the Arms of a Miſtreſs. Beſides the Matter of Fact is not certain (q). VIII. 'Tis falſe that this Sultan, after the taking of Conſtantinople vented his Wrath againſt the dead Body of Conſtantine. The (r) Chancellor of that Emperor, who (ſ) was in Conſtantinople, and wrote nothing but what he ſaw himſelf, ſays the contrary: (t) "He aſſures us that the Sultan having cauſed ſtrict "ſearch to be made every where, to find out the "Truth of what was yet doubtful, viz. whether "he was alive or dead, his Body was at laſt found "among the Carcaſes of many Turks and Chriſtians "heap'd one upon another, doubtleſs in the ſame "place where this brave Prince had been kill'd, "with thoſe Valiant Men that died with him, after they had deſtroy'd a great number of the "Enemies; for in the Gates there were none but "the Bodies of Chriſtians, either ſtifled in the "croud, or kill'd while they were endeavouring "to get out in this hurly-burly. He adds, that "the Body, though all diſfigured, was known by "the Boots of Purple, enrich'd with Eagles Embroidet'd with Gold, which the Emperors only "wore, and that Mahomet being deſirous to Honour the Vertue and Courage of ſo great a Prince, "commanded all the Funeral Honours to be paid "to him, that were due to the Emperors.

(q) See the Remark I.
(r) He was called Phranzes.
(ſ) Maimbourg Hiſt. of the Schiſm of the Greeks L. 6. p. 347.
(t) Id. ib. p. 348. he cites Phranzes, l. 3. c. 18.

(O) Attributes to the Schiſm of the Greeks.] He does not ceaſe to repeat (a) that the taking of Conſtantinople, and the Ruin of their Empire, were the juſt Puniſhment of their Obſtinacy, in refuſing the ſubmiſſion they ow'd to the See of Rome. He was little the better for the Cenſures he receiv'd for writing ſo Dogmatically, after the like manner, in the Hiſtory of the Iconoclaſts. It was then prov'd to him that this Doctrine was Seditious. He had ſaid (b) that God took away the Weſtern Empire from the Greeks, as a Puniſhment of the Revolt they had ſo often renew'd againſt the Church; which a Critick thus Cenſures. (c) None but God knows the Cauſe of the Change of Empires and Kingdoms, and it is at leaſt a raſh thing to attribute it to the Impiety, or the Hereſies, of the Sovereigns, or Subjects of thoſe Empires. Do you think, continues he, that any one is permitted to ſay of a King, or Emperor, that is Heretical, or of a Sovereign, in whoſe State there are Heretics, when we ſee them depriv'd of their Dominions, that they have loſt them upon the account of the Hereſies that aroſe in them? This comes too near, replied Euchariſtus, that deteſtable Doctrine, condemn'd for Hereſy in the Council of Conſtance (1). For if it may be ſaid of a Prince that he loſt his Sovereign Power, and was depriv'd by God for his Crimes, for his Hereſy, or for the Hereſy that prevailed in his State, is not this to ſay, that thoſe Crimes deſerve the deprivation of a Prince? This Doctrine is not only Seditious, but alſo an Imitation of the Complaints that were made by the Pagans againſt the Chriſtian Church, (d) upon occaſion of the great Havock that the Goths made in Rome, in all Italy, and elſewhere. The City of Rome was as ill treated by Charles the 5th, in 1527, as Conſtantinople was when the Turks took it. Would not F. Maimbourg take it ill, if the Greeks ſhould tell him that Rome was then made Deſolate, becauſe ſhe was ſo Ambitious as to require that the Greek Church ſhould pay her Obedience? What would he Anſwer to this? that Rome was in the Right, and that it was not ſo with the Greeks. But would not this be that which is called Petitio principii? Men ought not thus to ſearch into the Counſels of Providence. All Parties ſtand in need of this Leſſon; they often attribute the Calamities of a contrary Party to the Qualities of their Doctrine, which is to forget the Declarations of Jeſus Chriſt. Father Maimbourg would not have been much more unreaſonable, if he had adopted the Story related by Chalcondylas. That Hiſtorian pretends that the Romans being deſcended from Æneas, and being ſtill concerned in the Ruin of Ilium, ſaid, that the Greeks had ſuffer'd ſo much Miſchief at the taking of Conſtantinople, as a Puniſhment of the Outrages they had formerly committed in the Kingdom of Priamus. (f) Facetus eſt Chalcondylas dum ait Romanos ſuis Latinos conſuevisse aſſeverare, hanc cladem contigiſſe Græcis in ultionem eorum quæ olim feciſſent barbaris in deſtructione Ilii: quod videlicet dicantur Romani à Trojanis deſcendiſſe. According to this idle Fancy we ſhould not leave the numbers, ſuch as they are in the Decalogue. We ſhould believe that God viſits the Iniquities of the Fathers upon the Children, not unto the 4th, but unto the 1000th Generation, and ſo Preſcription ſhould never take place, (g) Delicta majorum immeritus luet Romane. France would have reaſon to fear that 2000 Years hence, an Irruption of Barbarians ſhould come to Revenge the Injuries which the Romans and Greeks receiv'd from Brennus.

(a) In the Hiſtory of the Schiſm of the Greeks, l. 6.
(b) See the Conferences between Eudoxus and Euchariſtus. p. 95. of the Holland Edition.
(c) Ib. p. 96.
(1) Seſſ. 15. quilibet tyrannus, &c.
(d) See Oroſius in his Preface, and Saint Auſtin de civit. Dei in præfat. & alibi paſſim.
(e) Saint Luke, ch. 13.
(f) Spondanus ad An. 1453. n. 17. p. m. 30.
(g) Horatius Od. 4. l. 3.

(P) This Tranſlation was publiſh'd, I ſhall ſpeak of it.] It was printed at Lyons (h) in 4° in 1520, and ſince that at Baſil, with the Epiſtles of Symmachus by Frobenius. It was afterwards inſerted in a Collection of Letters which John Oporin publiſh'd at Baſil (i) in 1554 in 12°. This Collection was compil'd by Gilbert Couſin, and intituled Farrago epiſtolarum Lacenicarum & ſelectarum. The Tranſlation of Landin in 8°, was reprinted at Marpurg, in 1604, and again at Leipſick in 12° in 1690, by the care of (k) Simon Gabelius Rombildenſis Francus. Melchior Junius, profeſſor of Eloquence at Strasburg, publiſh'd at Montbeliard in 1595, a Collection of Letters, which contains three of them which were written to Scanderbeg by Mahomet II. The Compiler took them out of a Book of Marinus Barletius de vita & geſtis Scanderbegi. There are added to them three Anſwers that were made to the Sultan. The Turkiſh fierceneſs does no wiſe appear in theſe three Letters of Mahomet; they are written in very civil Terms, and are ſuch as may become the moſt Debonaire Chriſtian Princes to write.

(h) Epit. Bibliot. Geſneri, p. 533.
(i) Ibid. p. 560.
(k) See Crenii, Animadvers. part 2. p. 26.

(Q) A Letter which Pope Pius II. wrote to the ſame Sultan . . . has employ'd the Controverſial Writers.] Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai was the Aggreſſor in theſe Words: (l) The Ambition of Pius II. can be no better known than by his Epiſtle 396, wherein he offers and promiſes the Empire of the Greeks, to Mahumed King of the Turks, provided he would turn Chriſtian, and Succour the Church, that is, his own Party, and aſſiſt him to rend Chriſtendom in pieces, as he did by continual Wars, giving him to underſtand that it was in his Gift, and that thus his Predeceſſors had granted the Empire of Germany to Charlemagne. Coeffeteau fill'd all the ſails of his Eloquence, or rather of his Anger, in anſwering this Place of Du Pleſſis. Is it poſſible, ſays he, (m) that Hereſy ſhould ſo far extinguiſh all "Ingenuity as to Condemn what is moſt commendable in the Actions of thoſe whom they "have a mind to Defame? There can be nothing "ſo Learn'd and Eloquent, nothing ſo Solid and "Nervous, nothing ſo Humble and Chriſtian, nothing ſo Pious and Religious, as this Epiſtle; "and yet du Pleſſis alledges it to ſhew the Inſolence of its Author. Does any Spark of "Modeſty, any Senſe of Juſtice remain with "him? Here are the Words from which "he would infer the Ambition of Pius. "If you would, ſays this Pope to Mahomet, "enlarge your Empire among the Chriſtians, you need "neither Gold nor Silver, nor Armies, nor Ships to do "it. One little thing may render you the Greateſt, "the moſt Powerful, the moſt Famous of all that ever "liv'd to this Day. You will ask what is that? 'Tis "not difficult to find it, and you need not ſearch far for "it, it is to be met with in all Parts of the World; "'tis only a little Water wherewith to Baptize you, that "you may embrace the Chriſtian Religion, and believe "the Goſpel. If you do this, there will not be a Prince "in the World that exceeds you in Glory, or equals you in "Power. We will call you the Emperor of the Greeks, "and of the Eaſt, and what you now poſſeſs by Violence "and Injuſtice, you ſhall then poſſeſs by Right and Equity. All Chriſtians will Honour you, and make you "Arbitrator of their Differences, &c. And again, If "you were Baptiz'd, and would go with us into the

(l) Du Pleſſis myſtery of Iniquity, p. 541.
(m) Coeffet. Anſwer to the Myſtery of Iniquity, p. 1197.

"Houſe

only bear a ſuperficial Examination, but alſo blind the Eyes of thoſe who read it without any deſign of Criticizing upon it, and repreſent this Pope to them under an advantageous Idea, and worthy of Praiſe. Nay, even thoſe who examine it ſtrictly, and conſider Pius II. only under the Notion of a Soveraign Prince of one part of Italy, may judge his Letter to be Prudential; but when it is weigh'd in the Balance of the Sanctuary, and when we conſider that he who wrote it calls himſelf the Vicar of JESUS CHRIST, and conſequently the Protector of the Morality of the Goſpel, he cannot be excus'd. Seeing therefore this Queſtion has different Faces, none ought to blame me for relating a little largely the Words of the Advocates who plead this Cauſe. My Commentary ought to be conſider'd among other reſpects, under the Notion of a Tome, wherein the Hiſtoriographers inſert all the Pieces for their Juſtification, which they mention in the courſe of the Narrative. Let this be ſaid once for all: There are ſome People who believe that the Letter of Pius II. was never (R) written to be ſent to Mahomet.

MAHO-

" Houſe of the Lord, the People would no longer dread " your Empire, and we would not aſſiſt them againſt " you; but rather we would implore your Aid againſt " thoſe who ſometimes uſurp what belongs to the Roman " Church, and lift up their Horns againſt their Mother. " And as our Predeceſſors, Stephen, Adrian and Leo, " call'd in to their Aſſiſtance Pepin and Charlemaign, " againſt Aſtulphus and Deſiderius, Kings of the " Lombards, and after they had by them been deli- " ver'd from the Oppreſſion of Tyrants, they tranſferred " to their Deliverers the Empire of the Greeks; ſo we " would make uſe of your Aſſiſtance, and we would not " be Ungrateful for the Benefit we ſhould receive. Can " the Reader who reads and conſiders theſe Things " without Paſſion, obſerve any Appearance of " Ambition in this Epiſtle? was it not rather his " Zeal that made him write thus, that he might " move the Pride and Courage of this Barbarian? " And does he promiſe Mahomet any thing, but " what all Chriſtendom would deſire, if this Barbarian were willing to embrace theſe Conditions which Pius propos'd to him. This is ſuch Language as is very fit to Prejudice thoſe againſt du Pleſſis, who are not wont to read Books of Controverſy, I mean ſo as to Diſcuſs Matters, and Collate the ſeveral Pieces, that the Anſwers and Replies may the better be compared together. This is almoſt the only way to underſtand, that thoſe who aſſume the moſt triumphant Airs, and make the moſt tragical Exclamations, are for the moſt part reduc'd to ſome Streights, and under a neceſſity of ſupplying by Figures of Rhetoric, what they want of Reaſon. Thoſe who are vers'd in this kind of Reading which I have deſcrib'd, and beſides, are tenderly concern'd for the Glory and Memory of du Pleſſis Mornay, will not be afraid when they read all the words of his Adverſary; but if they be Novices, and ſuch as cannot ſpeedily lay hold of this Prejudice againſt Coeffetau, that he being a Dominican, does not manage Controverſy fairly, they will be much afraid that du Pleſſis was miſtaken, and will think that he is utterly confounded, and therefore they will be impatient to inform themſelves, whether he or any other has anſwer'd Coeffetau. Whatever their uneaſineſs may be, they can no longer doubt of the Victory of their Champion, when they examine the Reply of Rivet. And this ought to warn us to obey the Precept audi & alteram partem, hear alſo the other Party, and that 'tis not ſufficient to Examine what John ſays, and what Peter anſwers, but we muſt alſo inform our ſelves what is anſwer'd to Peter.

(a) Rivet's Remarks upon the Anſwer to the Myſtery of Iniquity, part 2. p. 617.

Rivet, anſwering for du Pleſſis, confeſſes that the long Letter of Pius II. to Mahomet, contains (a) very good things againſt the belief of the Turks, for the confirmation of the Chriſtian Faith; but then he adds, " beſides that the Deſign appears to be vain of " Converting this Prince by an Epiſtle, which was " no ways probable, there is a diveliſh Malice in " it. For inſtead of ſhowing pity to the poor " Chriſtian Greeks, under the Empire of this Barbarian, and exhorting him to treat them Civilly, " he ſeems to have written this Epiſtle on purpoſe " to blacken them as falſe Chriſtians, and to diſcover that their Loſs does not affect the Latines. " Our Hiſtory adds, as a Mark of Ambition, that " he propoſes to Mahomet, provided he would be " Baptiz'd, the peaceable Empire of all he had " Uſurp'd, and promiſes him that all will make him " Judge of their Debates, and that the whole World " will appeal to his Deciſion (you may think whether " the Princes that have been long Chriſtians are " not mightily oblig'd to him) that many of them- " ſelves will ſubmit to him, and to his Sen- " tence, &c. He adds, that the Charity of " the Romiſh Church will not only be to him what it is to " other Kings, but ſo much greater, as he is higher than they. " Note this touch. In fine he repreſents to him that " the Romiſh Church would implore his Aid, againſt " the undutiful Children that roſe up againſt their Mo- " ther. And in fine, having boaſted that the Popes " had tranſfer'd the Empire of the Greeks to the " French, he promiſes that he would do the like " for him for his Benefits. There wants a long " Commentary to this Diſcourſe. In a few Words, " this way of Converting Men by promiſing them " the Empire of the World is not Apoſtolical. " 2. 'Tis a thing Ridiculous to promiſe a Foreign " and Potent Prince, what he is already poſſeſs'd " of. 3. 'Tis a thing contrary to Charity, that has no " reſpect of Perſons, to be greater toward thoſe " who are advanc'd more highly. 4. It is againſt " the ſame Charity to diſcover to an Infidel the " Miſeries of Chriſtendom, and to deſire his Con- " verſion on purpoſe to make uſe of him againſt " Princes already Chriſtians. 5. 'Tis Vanity, " Ambition and Preſumption to boaſt that the Empire of Charlemagne is a Gift of the Pope, and " to pretend that he could Reward, after the ſame " manner, him to whom he ſpeaks. Let the " Reader judge, whether this Diſcourſe becomes him who ſays he is ſeated in the Chair of " St Peter: Is it a Diſcourſe humble, Chriſtian, modeſt and Pious? Are theſe Conditions and Promiſes " the deſire of all Chriſtendom? I know not whether Coeffetau, or any other Catholick has anſwer'd this Book of Rivet; and if I had in my hands the Second Piece of the Antagoniſts of du Pleſſis, I would here ſet it down at length, that nothing might be wanting and that my Readers might give Sentence, having a full Knowledge of the cauſe, upon the Charge alledg'd againſt Pius II. It ſeems not poſſible to reply any thing that's very material to the Remarks of Rivet, but on the contrary, it ſeems very poſſible to make them more unanſwerable; for what can be more horrible and ſhameful to the Chriſtian Religion than to ſee Mahomet II. one of the greateſt Criminals that ever liv'd, a Man who had ſhed ſo much Blood, and rob'd ſo many Perſons of their Eſtates by a continual Train of Cruelties and Injuſtices, become lawful Poſſeſſor of all his Uſurpations, provided he would be Baptiz'd. What becomes of that inviolable Law of Chriſtian Morality, that the firſt ſtep of a Repentance that expiates a Robbery, is the Reſtitution of the ill-gotten Goods? What would one ſay, if a Jew, who were guilty of a fraudulent Bankrupt for three Millions, ſhould obtain, by the meer Ceremony of Baptiſm, without being oblig'd to make any Reſtitution, a full Abſolution of his Crimes, and a Right to Poſſeſs theſe three Millions? Would not the Infidels have very good Reaſon to complain of Chriſtianity as the peſt of Equity and natural Morality? And yet what concerns the Bankrupt would be only a Peccadillo, in compariſon of the Offers which Pius II made to Mahomet, to make him Lawful Poſſeſſor of his Conqueſts, by means of a few Drops of Water pour'd upon his Face. What would the Apoſtles ſay at the ſight of ſuch a Diſpenſation, and ſuch a uſe of the Keys? Is this agreeable to what St. Paul ſays (b), or even to what Ovid (c) an Heathen Poet ſays?

(b) For we are not as many who corrupt the word of God, 2 Cor. 2. 17.

(c) O nimium facilis qui triſtia crimina cædis Flumineâ tolli poſſe putatis aqua. Ovid. faſt. l. 2. v. 27.

(R) Who believe the Letter of Pius II. was never written to be ſent to Mahomet? I ſhall add nothing to the words which I ſhall borrow from a Catholick Writer (d) " Here we muſt add a word about (d) Gaillet Hiſt. of Mahomet II. Tom. 1. p. 461 & ſeq. ad ann. 1461.

MAHOMET GALADIN, Emperor of Mogul, was famous for his good Qualities and chiefly for his great Application to hear the Petitions and Complaints of his Subjects. He gave them Audience twice a Day; and that Persons of a mean Condition, who commonly could not or durst not approach his Tribunal, might have an opportunity to declare their Grievances; he caus'd a Bell to be set near him, to which a Rope was tied that went into the Street, and whenever the Bell was rung, he either went out, or order'd him who had pull'd the Rope to be brought in *. He died † in the Year 1605 and none could ever know of what Sect he was. He had thoughts of becoming a Christian, but the Mahometan Priests dissuaded him from it for Two Reasons.

* Don Clement Tosi, a Benedictin of the Congregation of Sylvester in the first Vol. of his Gentilesimo confutato.

† Morinel 1605. senza sapersi di qual Setta egli fosse stato. Giornale de Litterati, June 27 1669. p. 83. in the Abstract of Gentilesimo confutato.

MAYERNE (THEODORUS TURQUET SIEUR DE) one of the most famous Physicians of his time, was Born near β Geneva in 1572, or γ thereabouts. He took at Montpellier in 1595. his Degree of Batchelor of Physick, and his Degree of Doctor in the same Faculty, Feb. 20. 1597. He went from thence to Paris some time after, and was very much addicted to the Practice of Chymistry, which was a Study very much decried at that time, and very odious to the Physicians of Paris. Upon which account they rail'd most passionately against Mayerne and du Chesne δ, and endeavour'd to make them appear sworn Enemies to Physick. This appears from a Book that was Printed in 1603, against these two Physicians, which Mayerne refuted in another (A) Book, and that again was confuted by another. The Matter rested not there, for the Faculty of Physick fell upon him with a Decree prohibiting him to Practise; but notwithstanding this, Mayerne was call'd to Court, and was made Physician in Ordinary to Henry the Great. After the Death of this Prince, he retir'd to England, and there rais'd a very great Fortune. He obtain'd the Friendship of many illustrious Persons there, and so far gained the Favour of the Learned King James, that he was not only his first Physician, but also in some measure his Favourite. He was loaded with Honours ‡, and his Fortune still encreas'd under King Charles I. He was with an unanimous Consent admitted into the Societies of the Doctors of both Universities of the Kingdom. His Reputation and Practice were extraordinary, and he got a great Estate. He had two Sons and one Daughter, who was Married to the β In a Country House call'd Mayerne in the Territory of the Republick of Geneva. Browne in præfat. oper Mayernii γ See in the Remark C. the true Day of his Birth

δ See the Remark A

‡ See the Remark B. the Inscription under his Print

" the long Letter which (1) Francesco Sansovino has " Publish'd, (c) under the Name of Pope Pius to " Sultan Mahomet. For it appears by it, that this " Pope wrote it at a time when the Conquest of Si- " nope and Trebizonde made the Latin Princes fear the " like Effort from the Ottoman Arms. It shows " at length the Advantages of the Christian " Religion above the Mahometan, and pretends to " invite the Sultan to Baptism by great Ex- " amples, representing to him, how glorious it " was for Constantine the Great, to have been the " first of the Roman Emperors who became a Chri- " stian, and to Clovis to have been also the first " of the French Kings who embrac'd the Gospel, " and that it would be no less honourable for " him to be the first of the Ottoman Monarchs who " embrac'd our Faith. There are many who re- " flecting upon the inaccessible and morose Hu- " mour of Mahomet, do not think it probable, " that a Letter on so nice a Subject, was ever de- " liver'd to him, or that any durst expect an An- " swer to it. They add, that at least it would " have found the Mind of the Sultan very little " inclin'd to the Proposal, and that unless by a " Miracle, his Conversation could not be the ef- " fect of the Remonstrances of a Letter. Thus " when the Italians would express the little Hopes " there is of Success in any Matter, they say " pleasantly in their Language, La penna non toglie " il filo alla Spada: That the Pen will not blunt " the edge of the Sword. 'Tis probable therefore, " that it was Publish'd among the Western Na- " tions, after the taking of Trebizonde, as a Mani- " festo to justifie the Arms of the Crusade, and to " awake the Ardor of the Warriors in Christendom, " after they had seen that the Pope had evdeavour'd " in vain to divert the Arms of the Sultan in the " peaceable way of Remonstrances.

(1) Francesco Sansovino fol 134.

(c) He seems to be Ignorant, that this Letter is found in the Editions of Pius II. his Letters

(Z) Dissuaded him from it for two Reasons.] By one Reason applied to the Mind, and another to the Heart. They told him that the Christian Religion propos'd to him Mysteries to be believ'd, which he could not at all comprehend, and that it would oblige him to Marry but one Wife. 'Tis very probable that the second Reason was stronger to him than the first; for those who have been Educated in the Doctrine of Polygamy, and have put it in practice, have a frightful Idea of the Christian Doctrine in this Point; and altho' the Great Mogul was told, that this Evangelical Doctrine did not much incommode many Christian Princes, because almost all of them dispens'd with it; not indeed by Marrying many Wives, but by keeping Mistresses, yet he still thought it hard: For indeed there is a great difference between being able to do such things agreeably to Religion, and not being able to do them without violating the Laws of Religion. (a) Poco vi manco che non accettasse la nostra religione, e ne fu ritirato da i Mulasi Sacerdoti Mahomettani dal non poter capir i misteri della fede col, lume naturale, e l'obligo di contentarsi d'una sola moglie. Lyserus, the grand Apologist for Polygamy, does not forget to observe, that the Law of Marrying but one Wife, retards the Conversion of the Infidels (b).

(A) Mayerne refuted in another Book, and that again was confuted by another.] Guy Patin mentions this Dispute, but like one that took pleasure in Defaming, and who was an Enemy to innovating Physicians. "The Sieur de Mayerne Turquet, says he, " (c) was Physician to the King of England, and, " as I have been inform'd, a Native of Geneva, " the Son of one who wrote the History (†) of " Spain, which is now Printed in two Volumes " in Folio. His Father wrote also a Book En- " tituled, the (d) Aristodemocratick Monarchy, which " was contradicted by Louis d'Orleans, (who wrote " the Commentaries on Tacitus) in his Plante Hu- " maine, Printed at Lyons and at Paris. Turquet " wrote an Answer to Louis d'Orleans, in 1617. " He dwelt at Geneva, or near it, and was of " the Religion of that Country.— (e) I believe " that his Son is a Physician at Montpellier. He " came to Paris in 1602, and because he affected " to be a great Chymist, he had a Quarrel with " some of ours; whereupon a Decree was made, " that none should consult with him; yet he had " some Friends of our Profession, who would " visit the Sick with him. From this Quarrel " there proceeded an Apology for the said Theo- " dorus Mayerne, of which he was no more the Au- " thor than You or I. Two Doctors of our So- " ciety have taken pains in the matter, Seguin, our " Ancient, who always bore with the Charlatans, " and his Brother-in-Law Acakia (f). This May- " erne is still in England to this Day, very old, " and almost grown a Child again. 'Tis said, " that he has quitted the King's Party, and turn'd " to the Parliament's side. I saw one of his Chil- " dren in this City studying Physick, who is since " Dead in England. 'Tis said, that he is very " harsh to his Children, he is so Covetous, and " that he suffers them to Starve. He was a " great Chymist, very rich, and knows the way " of procuring to himself a great number of Pis- " toles's by a consult of five or six Pages. This,

(a) Giornale de Litterati June 27. 1669. p. 83 in the Abstract of Gentilesimo confutato by Don Clement Tosi.

(b) See Polygamia triumphatrix, p. 92.

(c) Patin Letter 8. p. 35. of Tom. 1. It is dated Nov. 16. 1645.

† See the end of this Remark.

(d) This Book was seiz'd, confiscated and forbidden. See the French Mercury, to. 1 ad ann. 1615. p. m. 184.

(e) Patin ib. p. 36

(f) Id. ib. p. 37

the * Marquis de Rivigni. He died at the Age of Eighty Two Years. This is what I gather from the Preface to his Works, (B) Printed at London in 1700. We shall give in the Remarks (C) a more large and exact Account. I must not forget that our Mayerne met with some envious Persons, who endeavour'd to blacken him upon occasion of the Death of the Prince of Wales, in the Year 1612. But his Honour was perfectly secur'd by some Authentick Acts; I mean by the Certificates which King James, the Lords of the Council, and the Officers and Gentlemen of the deceas'd Prince of Wales, drew up for him in the best Form that could be wish'd. They may be found, together with a relation of the Disease, Death, and opening of the Body of this Prince in † the Work I have mention'd.

MAIGNAN (EMANUEL) one of the greatest Philosophers of the XVIIth Century, was a Minime, a Native of Toulouse. He forsook the Opinions of the Schools, and oppos'd them very solidly. He was neither Cartesian, nor Gassendist, but agreed with the Heads of these two Sects, in rejecting Accidents, Qualities and substantial Forms, and he cultivated Experimental Philosophy. He understood very well the Mathematicks, and had join'd to all these Sciences, so great a skill in Divinity, that he was capable of teaching it even at Rome it self *. The manner how he explains the

4 'Tis a fault: See the Remark

† P. 103. &c. of the Opera Medica Theod. Turquet. Mayernii Edit. 1700. London

* See Remark A.

" among other things, Baron of Aubonne, a fine Lord" ship in the Country of Vaux, near Geneva, of " which a certain Bishop of Nevers, called Paul
" Spisame, was Lord in 1560.—(g) This Apology
" of Mayerne did not want an Answer. Mr. Rie-
" lan the Father answered it, by a Book very E" legant and Learned, according to his usual
" manner".

(g) Ib. p. 39.

Dr. Brown, as I have already said (b), observes, that Mayerne had a Companion of his Fortune, in the Persecution he suffered from the Physicians of Paris. He calls his Associate Quercetanus, whose French Name was du Chesne. Patin says nothing of that Conjunction, but he speaks very satyrically of this Quercetanus. In the same Year 1609, says he (i), died a wicked Rogue and Mountebank, who hath kill'd many during his Life, and after his Death, by the unhappy Writings he left behind him, under his own Name, which he had caus'd to be Compos'd by other Physicians and Chymists, here and there. I mean Josephus Quercetanus, who went at Paris, by the Name of la Violette. He was a great Drunkard, and very ignorant; who knew nothing of Latin, and being by his first employment no more than a Surgeon's Boy of the Country of Armagnac, a poor, cursed and unhappy Country, pass'd at Paris, and particularly at Court, for a great Physician, because he had learn'd something of Chymistry in Germany. I must observe, that the General History of Spain, writ by Louis de Mayerne Turquet of Lyons, was first Printed in the Year 1587, and after that, by Abel l'Angelier, in the Year 1608, at Paris, and after that again by Samuel Thiboust, in 1635. The Second Edition comprehends Thirty Books, and comes down as far as the Year 1582. The Third Edition is augmented to six Books, and comes down to the end of the XVIth Century.

(b) There is the like fault in the Bibliotheque of Konig. See there p. 522, & 822.

(i) At London in 8. Dr. Charleton put a Preface to it

(B) From the Preface to his Works Printed at London in 1700.] They are a pretty large Folio, divided into two Books; the first contains Consilia, Epistolas, & Observationes; and the second, Pharmacopœam variasque Medicamentorum formulas. There is before the Book the Picture of Dr. de Mayerne, as he was at the Age of 82 Years. It is the most (k) happy Physiognomy in the World; he has a lively, serene and majestick Air, and a venerable Beard. Underneath the Picture we read, Theo: Turquet de Mayerne Eques Auratus, Patriâ Gallus, Religione Reformatus, Dignitate Baro, Professione alter Hippocrates, ac trium Regum (exemplo rarissimo) Archiater: eruditione Incomparabilis: experientiâ nulli secundus: & quod ex his omnibus resultat, fama late vagante perillustris. The English Physician (l) who had the care of this Edition, affirms, that he had never yet seen any work of Mayerne, which was truly his (m). Quicquid hactenus sub Mayernii Nomine Orbem invisit, tam crebris fœdatur interpolationibus, utpote quod partim ex suis, partim ex aliorum Chartis in Bibliotheca sua repertis imperite consuitur, ut nemo hariolari possit, quid Author sibi velit, ejusque se Opum assequi valeat, cum Casus a Remediis pessimo Consilio ubique alienantur.——Nihil hactenus sub ejus nomine comparuit, quod ipsius revera esse dici possit. He gives us the Reasons which hindred the publishing the Chirurgical Works of this Physician. You may find in Lindenius renovatus (n) the Title of some Writings of this Author; but do not you imagine that Theodorus Mayernus Turquetus, and Theodorus Turquetus de Mayerne, who are there mention'd as two different Writers (b) are two Persons. No mention could be made there of the praxeos Mayerniance in morbis internis præcipuè gravioribus & chronicis syntagma; for that Book was not Printed till (c) 1690. The Journalists of Leipsick have given us an Abstract of it.

(k) See the Journal of Leipsick, 1691. p. 57.

(l) Josephus Browne utriusque Facultatis Doctor.

(m) Id. in præfat.

(n) At p. 997. of the Edition of Nuremberg, 1686.

(C) A more large and exact Account] I shall give all that I have receiv'd from Mr. Minutoli who was pleased at my desire to inform himself exactly of all the Circumstances.

" Theodorus de Mayerne, Baron of Aubonne, Coun" sellor and chief Physician to their Britannick
" Majesties James I. and Charles I. was the Son of " Lewis de Mayerne, famous for the General History
" of Spain, which he Compos'd, and for his Mo" narchy Aristodemocratick, Dedicated to the States
" General, and of Louisa, the Daughter of Antony
" Masson, Treasurer of War to the Kings Francis I.
" and Henry II. in Piemont. That Family is Origi" nally of that Country, having flourish'd a long " time in the Town of Quiers. And as to the Name,
" or Nick-Name of Turquet, it came from a Wo" man of their Family, who being well Made, and
" of a prety large Size, was thought to resemble
" a fine Turkish Woman; which made People com" monly give the Surname of Turquetti, to all her " Children. Lewis de Mayerne retir'd to Geneva
" about the end of the Year 1572, having had two " Houses demolish'd at Lyons upon the account of " Religion. On the twenty Eighth of September,
" 1573. Theodorus Mayerne was born to him, having " for his God-father Theodorus Beza. He was in" structed in his own Country, in Classical Learn" ing, and from thence sent to Heydelberg, where " he continued some Years After which, be" ing design'd for Physick, he went to Montpe-
" lier, where he took his Degree of Batchelor,
" and afterwards of Doctor. From thence he " went to Paris, where applying himself to Pra" ctice, he read Lectures of Anatomy to young " Surgeons, and of Pharmacy to Apothecaries;
" and his Prescriptions gain'd him Esteem; so that " he was known to Mr. Ribbit, Sieur de la Riviere,
" chief Physician to King Henry IV. who recom" mended him so well to His Majesty, that he " gave him the Place of one of his Physicians in " Ordinary; and in the Year 1600. he appointed " him to attend the Duke of Rohan, in the Journies
" he made for France, towards the Princes of Ger- " many and Italy. Being return'd, he was much " esteem'd in the discharge of his Office, and " was in Favour with the King, who promis'd him
" great Things if he would change his Religion,
" setting, for that end, Cardinal du Perron, and other " Ecclesiasticks, to persuade him to it. Nay, not" withstanding his resistance, the King issued out
" a Brief to make him his first Physician, which the " Jesuits, who knew it, endeavour'd to get revok'd
" by Queen Mary de Medicis, a Circumstance and " Favour which Dr. Mayerne knew nothing of
" then; but afterwards in England, in the Year
" 1642, he learn'd it from the Mouth of Cæsar
" Duke of Vendosme, a Natural Son of France. In
" 1607, he prescrib'd Physick to an English Lord,
" who being Cur'd, carry'd him into England,
" where he had a private Audience of King James
" And even after the Death of Henry IV. he con" tinued to be Physician in Ordinary to Lewis XIII
" till 1616, when he bargain'd for this Office with the Preſervation of Accidents, without a Subject, in the Euchariſt, is more happy than that of (A) Deſcartes. I have read in ſome of the Journaliſts, that ſome Body is Writing his Life. If I had read it, I would very willingly make a long Article of this Learned Minime. I ſhall ſay a word (A) of his Writings. He is ſometimes confounded with another Philoſopher, call'd (B) Magnen. This Article was already in the Preſs, when I diſcover'd that Father Maignan was out of his place † in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary.

(d) At p. 57, &c. of the Year 1691.

Since the firſt Edition of this Dictionary, I have ſeen a Piece, * whoſe Title is, De vita, moribus, & ſcriptis R. Patris Emanuelis Maignani Toloſatis, Ordinis Minimorum, Philoſophi atque Mathematici præſtantiſſimi elogium. It was compos'd by Father Paguens ‖, and printed at Toloufe in 1697. out of which I ſhall draw a good Supplement.

† Emanuel Maignan, Native of Toulouſe who was a Diſciple of Father Maignan, and taught the Philoſophy of his Maſter at Toulouſe, at Bourdeaux, and at Rome, for a long time. He publiſh'd in 1700. a Book of 286 Pages in 12 intitled Accidentia profligata, Species inſtauratæ, ſive de ſpeciebus panis & vini poſt Conſecrationem Euchariſticam duntaxat manentibus. Opus Philoſophico-Theologicum, in which he maintains with ſtrenuous Father Maignan's Opinion about the Sacramental Species.

(a) Printed at Lyons by John Gregoire.

(b) Baillet's Life of Deſcartes, to m. 2. p. 376, 380 ad ann. 1649.

(1) In 1648. in fol at Rome. Perſpectiva Horaria, &c.

(2) Letter M. S. of Maignan to Merſenne, July 17. 1648. p. 512. of the firſt Vol of Letters to Merſennus Variorum.

(c) Ibid.

" a French Phyſician. In 1611, the King of Eng- " land, by his Ambaſſador, demanded him, to be " firſt Phyſician to himſelf, and to his Spouſe
" Queen Anne, by a Patent, Seal'd under the great
" Seal of England, where he ſerv'd the whole
" Royal Family with great Honour and Approba" tion till the end of his Life; as he did alſo the " greateſt part of the Nobility, and People.
" He made an exact Collection of his Counſels in " Medicine. He compos'd a very curious Phar-" macopœa of Medicines, Galenical as well as " Spagyrical; but he never Printed any thing,
" except an Apology againſt the Faculty of Phy(f) Part 4. p. 64, &c. " ſick at Paris, which had attack'd him. There " was a Phyſician call'd Brouent, who ſent to Do" ctor Bevereovicius, a Relation of the Bladder of " Iſaac Caſaubon, written by the ſaid Mayerne, for " which he expreſs'd a reſentment. He had two " Wives, whereof the firſt was Margaret de Boet- (g) Month of March 1692. p. 336. " ſlaer of the Houſe of Aſperen, by whom he had " two Sons, which died during his Life. And " the ſecond was Iſabel, the Daughter of Mr.
" Joachimy, famous for his Embaſſies for the States
" General in Muſcovy, and Sweden, and for above
(h) Rohault entretien ſur la Philoſophie, p. 48. " Twenty Four Years in England, by whom he " had two Sons, which died before him, and three " Daughters, whereof two died while he was a" live. He died the 15th of March, 1655, at " Chelſey, near London, leaving one only Daughter,
" who brought a great Eſtate by her Marriage, to the " Marquis de Montpouillan, Grandſon to the Mar-
" ſhal Duke de la Force; but ſhe died at the Hague, in " 1661, becauſe ſhe could not be Deliver'd, or
" at leaſt, in the time of her Delivery.

(i) Id. ib. p. 55. Note, That Dr Mayerne had a Niece who was Married to an Engliſh Lord of great merit. She was call'd Louiſe de Frotté, and by her Marriage was named My Lady Windſor. She was a Perſon of a great deal of Wit, and much reading, and for many Years was an Ornament to the City of Geneva: She died there about the end of the Year 1691. See her Elogium in (f) the Italia regnante of Mr. Leti. See alſo the Hiſtory (g) of the Works of the Learned.

(k) Id. ib p. 53, 57, &c.

(A) The manner how he explains the Preſervation of Accidents without a Subject, is more happy than that of Deſcartes.] Mr. Rohault pretended the contrary; but it was becauſe he did not ſee the great Difficulty that is conſequent upon that Explication he takes for the beſt. Let us ſee how he relates that of F. Maignan. " (h) There is nothing ſo eaſie as " to explain the manner how the Accidents of " Bread and Wine ſubſiſt without the Bread and " Wine; for in a word, we need ſay no more, but " that the Bread and Wine being taken away, " God continues ſtill to make the ſame impreſſi- " ons upon our Senſes, as they did before they " were chang'd. After this manner this Myſtery " is explain'd, by a famous Divine of the Order of " the Minimes, call'd Father Maignan." But Mr. Rohault blames this Hypotheſis, becauſe it admits two Miracles where we need but one. Altho' it be true, (i) ſays he, that God can produce in our Senſes the Impreſſions of Bread and Wine, after they have been chang'd by Tranſubſtantiation, yet there is no neceſſity after this to have recourſe to a new Miracle, as this good Father ſeems to do: Becauſe it follows from the very Eſſence of the Myſtery (which is, that the Bread is really chang'd into the Body of Jeſus Chriſt) that we muſt continue to perceive all the ſame appearances as we perceiv'd before, i. e. that the accidents of Bread and Wine muſt ſubſiſt. This Carteſian pretends, (k) that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt does in ſuch a manner take up the place of the Bread, that the ſame Spaces exactly, which ſerv'd for a place to the Bread, are thoſe wherein the Body of Jeſus Chriſt is diſpos'd, leaving to the Matter which fill'd the Pores of the Bread, the ſame Spaces which it fill'd before. From whence it follows, that the parts of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt aſſume the Figure, Situation, and in general all the other modes of Bread, and conſequently that they are Bread: For according to Mr. Rohault, the Eſſence of Bread, or the Form which diſtinguiſhes it from all other Bodies, is nothing but the concurrence of certain Modifications: And therefore there muſt needs be Bread whereſoever this Concurrence is; and ſo it being found in the Body of Jeſus Chriſt at the Sacrament of the Euchariſt; this Body is nothing elſe but Bread: From whence it follows, that this great Myſtery conſiſts in deſtroying a bit of Bread, and replacing another piece of Bread in the room of that which was annihilated. This is abſurd, and altogether remote from the Doctrine of Popery. 'Tis true, that in this Suppoſition there needs no Miracle to explain how the appearances of Bread ſubſiſt with reſpect to all our Senſes. This is a natural Conſequence from the Situation of the Body of our Lord in the place of the Bread deſtroy'd: But this Advantage proceeding only from an Hypotheſis which includes ſuch Abſurdities as are inconſiſtent with the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, cannot make the Carteſian Explication equal to that of Father Maignan, altho' it requires a particular Miracle for the continuation of the appearances of the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt,

(A) I ſhall ſay a word of his Writings.] He printed at Toulouſe a Courſe of Philoſophy in four Volumes, in 8° in the Year 1652. He publiſh'd it again in Folio (a) in 1673, with many Additions, and Dedicated it to the Preſident d'Onoville, who is ſo much commended in the Voyage of Mr. Bachaumont and Mr. la Chapelle. He added to it among other things a Critical Diſcourſe about the Vortices of Mr. Deſcartes, and a Diſſertation about the Speaking-Trumpet, invented by Sir Samuel Morland. There is alſo a Book of his relating to Divinity, entituled, Philoſophia Entis ſacri, and a perſpectiva horaria, printed at Rome in 1648, in Folio, &c. What follows is found in Mr. Baillet concerning this laſt Book. (b) Mr. " Carcavi acquainted Mr. Deſcartes, that there was " at Rome a Minime, call'd Father Maignan, who " was more intelligent and profound than Father " Merſenne, who had given him hopes of making " ſome Objections againſt his Principles. This " Father was called Emanuel, and was born at Tou- " louſe. But then he dwelt at Rome, where he " taught Divinity in the Convent of the Trinity " of Mount Pincio, which is otherwiſe called the " Convent of the French Minimes. About a Year be- " fore 1) he had put out a curious Work divided in- " to four Books, concerning Clocks and Sun-Di- " als, and about the ſame time he wrote to " Father Merſenne, being then alive, (2) that by " his Phyſical Principles, he had prov'd Geo- " metrically the ſame Proportion of Refractions " with that of Deſcartes. But he did not believe " that the Principles he laid down for the Mo- " tion of a Luminous Body, which ſwells and " falls, were true, or that ſuppoſing theſe Princi- " ples, it was poſſible that Refractions ſhould be " made, as 'tis certain they are. This is the thing " upon which Father Maignan had a great deſire to " put ſome Objections to Mr. Deſcartes, as he might " have acquainted Mr. Carcavi a Year after. Let us not forget the Diſſertatio Theologica de uſu licito [illegible] publiſh'd by our Minime in 1673, in 12°. It [illegible]'d by ſome Biſhops.

(B) He is ſometimes confounded with another Philoſopher call'd Magnen.] [illegible]e (I uſe the words of Mr. Baillet) (c) have impertinently confo[illegible] Emanuel Maignan with John Chryſoſtom Magnen, profeſſor of Pavia, who publiſh'd in 1648, De rerum viciſſitudine, which made the Dutch believe [illegible]

Maignan, born the 17th of July 1601, was of an Ancient (C) and Noble Family. He gave hopes from his Cradle, that he would have an Inclination to Letters and Sciences, for nothing would sooner put a ſtop to his weeping and crying than to put a Book in his Hand. He would turn over the Leaves, and look upon the Characters with much Pleaſure, and it was perceiv'd after he had paſſed the Age of 5 Years, that he deſpiſed the little Pleaſures of Children, and that he gave a wonderful Attention to Prayers, and Catechetical Inſtructions. Upon this Account he was carefully plac'd betimes under the Direction of a Domeſtick Tutor. After this he had his Education at the College of the Jeſuits, and perform'd with great diligence all the Duties of a good Scholar, both with reſpect to the Exerciſes of Learning and thoſe of Religion. He diſcover'd in all his Conduct ſo much modeſty and Sincerity, that he was afraid of being † infected with ſmutty Diſcourſes, and from thence it came to paſs that he did by Degrees withdraw himſelf from the Company of his School-fellows, and that he choſe rather to leave off the Diverſions proper to his Age, than to expoſe his Innocence to any Danger. His Hours of Recreation were ſpent in walking in the Convent of the Minims, where he met with an old Man who Diſcours'd to him about Salvation. Theſe Diſcourſes were the Seeds of a Religious Life, to which he Conſecrated himſelf ſome time after, and to this he was ſtrongly inclin'd, by a Diſgrace which happen'd to him then when he was Studying Rhetorick: He had compos'd a Poem to Diſpute the Prize of Eloquence, and he believ'd that he was unjuſtly dealt with in adjudging the Victory to another. The Reflections he made, during this Vexation, confirm'd him ſo much in the Thought of quitting the World, that he deſir'd the Habit of a Minim. And it was not long deny'd him, for having well performed the Tryals of his Novitiate, he was admitted to make his Vows at 18 Years of Age, i. e. in 1619. He went through a Courſe of Philoſophy under a Maſter very much addicted to the Doctrine of Ariſtotle, and he loſt no opportunity of Diſputing briskly againſt every thing that was ſuſpected of Heterodoxy in the Phyſicks of that Ancient Philoſopher. This was taken for a good Omen by his Profeſſor, who quickly after was aſtoniſh'd to find that his Scholar underſtood very well the Mathematicks, without (D) any body to read Lectures to him. In this he was his own Maſter. He was quite another Man when he Studied his courſe of Divinity, than he was in that of Philoſophy; for whereas in this he was very incredulous, and ſubmitted every thing to a ſevere Examination, and to the moſt ſubtil Diſcuſſions of Diſpute, in that he ſubmitted humbly † to Theological Doctrines; but as to the Peripatetical Reaſons, which were employ'd to illuſtrate and prove them, he did not think himſelf oblig'd to admit them without Examination, and if he found them not Solid, he rejected them, and made no ſcruple of admitting the aſſiſtance of Plato before that of Ariſtotle. The Proofs that he gave of his Wit for the 6 Years that he ſate upon the Benches, occaſioned his being look'd upon as a fit Perſon to do the Office of a Profeſſor, and he acquitted himſelf in that Employment ſo Subtilly and ſo Solidly, that his Reputation flew over the Pyrenees and the Alps, whereupon the General of the Minims ſent for him to Rome, in 1636, to take upon him the like Profeſſion. His great Knowledge in Mathematical Inventions, and Phyſical Experiments, became quickly famous, and chiefly by a Conteſt which aroſe between him and Father Kircher, which was decided after † Ad omnes vitæ ſuæ actus, & uſus advocabat honeſtum ac modeſtum illum pudorem, qui abhoret ab omni inquinamento laſcivientis colloquii. Quare cœpit paulatim declinare à ſociis, præeligens omni joco abſtinere, quam facere vel leviſſimum verecundiæ ſuæ periculum. Saguens ubi Supra. p. 5.

† Suimmiſſiſſimum ſe coram Chriſtus (...) fidem offert, refugitque ut a levi ſuſpicula dubitatione, ſic abominatione indagine ex quo audiat ſectatorem Machiatis oppreſſum in a gloria (illegible) was a Carteſian Philoſopher. Mr. Baillet cites Revii Statera, p. 243. This John Chryſoſtom Magnen, was of Luxeuil, in Franche Comte, and profeſs'd Phyſick at Pavia. Beſides the Democritus reviviſcens, printed at Leyden in 1648, in 12', and whoſe Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated April 30, 1646. I have ſeen a Treatiſe (d) de Manna, printed by him at the Hague in 1658. in 12', and whoſe Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated April 5. 1648. Theſe Dutch Editions are not the firſt.

(C) He was of an Ancient and Noble Family.] His Father was Counſellor to the King, Referendary and Dean of the Chancery of Toulouſe, and reckon'd among his Anceſtors the Barons of Maignan, who made a great figure in Armagnac. He Married the Daughter of Emanuel Alvarez, Royal Profeſſor of Phyſick in the Univerſity of Toulouſe. Such was the Father and Mother of this Minim, of whom we now Diſcourſe, and here follow the Words of his Elogiſt. (e) Pater ei fuit Petrus Maignanus Conſiliarius Regius, Referendarius & Decanus in Cancellaria Toloſana, vir æquitatem ſervans, & conſpicuus ſplendidiſſimi generis antiquâ nobilitate indubitatâ. Siquidem ut omnes norunt, Maignani Toloſates iſti ſtirpem ſuam trahunt ex illis, quos Eluza urbs nunc obſcura, ſed antiquitate celebrata ad Geſſam amnem ſitam Comitatus Armaniaci Baronl. ſuos ſtemmos, opulentos, regni ſui per multas non interruptorum generationum ſeries reverenter, ac perannumer complexa eſt, Aymericum habuit Gaudiſium de Alvarez clarum filium Eberardi illius Comitis Emanuelis de Alva, a quem Toloſa urbs Literarum omnium [illegible] precipue et politiorum multos ex Lyſitania accerſivit Profeſſores. Ab origine ſuæ claruit ex antiquiſſima Familia Alvarezorum de Eberardi illius genere, & fuit patria Lyſitanica Maignanorum, qui [illegible] nomen Emanuelis obtinuit.

(D) He underſtood very well Mathematicks, tho' none had read any Lectures of them to him.] This is a Second Example of what we ſhall ſhow hereafter in the Article of Mr Paſcal; and Father Saguens does not fail to confirm the one by the other. Let us ſee the particulars of it: Such things are chiefly to be collected together, and inſerted in ſuch Books as this Dictionary (a Multo celſiorem de illo opinionem accepit (Magiſter (b) Ruffarius) quum occaſione data ſchematis Mathematici, quo ipſe ad explanationem reconditioris cujuſdam Phyſici myſterii, lucem afferebat, intellexit eum eſſe Geometram; ſtupuitque, & cauſam requiſivit cauſam, ac methodum comparatæ, & eo uſque occultæ eruditionis. Verum ut reſponſeret parum modeſtiæ parcam, dicam ipſe ego paulo liberius, quod multo poſt ad ſuadenda rerum Mathematicarum ſtudia enitebat ſibi objiciſſe, ut extra horas unius [illegible] ſuæ claſſis a tempore a [illegible] Chori, & [illegible] ſiſtis uſitato, tot Theoremata, & Problemata demonſtrata per ſe ipſum adinvenerit, ut dum [illegible] non poſſet [illegible] continere. [illegible] Elementorum Mathematicorum. An non decere illum tam magni [illegible] ſtatuiſſent Elementa Logicæ [illegible] Quæritur de clariſſimo Patre Maignano, cujus [illegible] celebrandam [illegible] Deo præſente [illegible] poſſeſſionem convocaſſe. [illegible] Magiſtrum Mathematicum, qui [illegible] cum conatus ultra poſſe [illegible] Crucem Mathematicam habuit [illegible] cum ſruſtra [illegible] ſatorias. At [illegible] occurreret, aut [illegible] quid natus, a Chorea [illegible] Cæſtus genium [illegible], ut a plerisque mos Cathedræ illuc applaudatur

(a) Id ib p. 8, 9

(b) It is the name of a Maxime, under whom Maignan was [illegible] through a Courſe of Philoſophy

(c) Saguens in elogio Emanuelis Maignani. p. 3

(d) It is bound up with that of Tobacco, by the ſame Author after ſuch a manner, that the Glory of (E) the Invention, the Subject of the Diſpute, was not deny'd to our Minim. His Book de perſpectiva horaria, Printed at Rome in 1648, at the Expence of Cardinal Spada, was very much eſteem'd. No Body had ever undertaken ſuch a Work. In it there is a method of making Teleſcopes which he had inveneted, which he explains at large, and does not imitate thoſe who conceal, as a Myſtery, the Inventions of their Art, and die with their Secret. He was not troubl'd with that Diſeaſe, for if he met with any Artificers, who had a mind to make Dioptrical, or other Inſtruments, according to his Diſcoveries and Method, he communicated to them with the greateſt eaſineſs in the World what he knew of that Matter. He did not return from Rome to Toulouſe till 1650. and then he was receiv'd in his own Country with univerſal Joy. He was created Provincial the ſame Year, altho' he earneſtly deſir'd that he might not be diverted from his Studies by the Cares of any Office. He Publiſh'd his Courſe of Philoſophy, in 1652, by which Work he may at leaſt expect to be call'd the Reſtorer of it. And if becauſe he explain'd Phyſicks by the Four Elements, the glory of that Invention ſhould be deny'd him, and given to Empedocles *; yet it cannot be denied but he did as to this Hypotheſis, what Gaſſendus did as to that of the Atomiſts. The Office of Provincial being expir'd at the end of three Years, our Minim had more leaſure to go on with his Philoſophick Divinity; but a long Sickneſs, and ſome Journies about the Affairs of his Order, retarded the execution of this Deſign. We ſhall ſee in the Remarks at (F), what time the two Tomes of that Work did appear. If the Author hau been ambitious, he might have found a fair Opportunity of ſatisfying himſelf, when the French King deſir'd him to come to Paris, which was in 1660.

* Opus vere eximium & ad illa uſque tempora intentatum. Id. ibid. p. 17.

gitur ſummis capitibus paginasum, cruce lignea utebatur.

(E) A Conteſt which aroſe between him and Father Kircher . . . ., the glory of the Invention was not denied to our Minim,] Father Saguens inſiſts upon two Books of a wonderful Invention, and vaſt Labour, written in the Monaſtery of the Order at Rome, by Emanuel Maignan. One was a Book of Opticks, and the other of Catoptricks. The firſt was a Perſpective, (c) whereof the Deſcription is to be found in the Thaumaturgus Opticus of the Minim Niceron. The other was a Repreſentation of the Heavens, with all the Aſtronomical Circles, (d) catoptrica anacamptica, complectiturque integram cæli faciem ſuis omnibus ad res Aſtronomicas ſpectantibus circulis interſtinctam. Father Kircher had no ſooner look'd upon it, but he told a German Gentleman, who accompanied him, what are you aſtoniſh'd at, is not this the Figure of my Book? Quid ſtupes, an non hæc eſt figura mei libri? A Minim who heard this, and underſtood that Father Kircher attributed to himſelf the whole Glory of the Invention, anſwer'd very briskly; on the contrary, this is the Book of your Figure, imo hic eſt liber tuæ Figuræ, and related the thing quickly after to Father Maignan, who being an humble Man ſaid no more than that he did not think himſelf guilty of any Theft, unleſs it were ſuppos'd that his Hands had ſtole the work from his Mind (e). The matter had gone no further, if the Friends of one ſide and the other, had not thought it worthy of a further Enquiry, conſidering that it concern'd the glory of a German or of a French Mathematician, for the Principal Praiſe is always due to the Inventor. Father Maignan was like to have loſt the Cauſe, when a Jeſuit ingenuouſly declar'd that he had ſeen the like work in France made by Father Maignan. Thus the Learned Men of Rome left the Glory of the Invention to each of the contending Parties. This is only an Abridgment of what you may ſee at large in the Latin of Father Saguens: (f) Totaque res ibi ſubſiſtiſſet, niſi viſa fuiſſet communibus amicis digna diligentiori examine; quodque ducebant vertendum ad gloriam non mediocrem aut Germani, aut Galli Mathematici. Omninò enim in quovis artium, & doctrinarum genere primum fuiſſe ita glorioſum eſt; ut id poſteritas omnis, quia imitari non poteſt, invidia dignum putet. Primus labor plerumque ſibi aut totum honorem vindicat; aut ſecundo non niſi magna ex parte imminutum relinquit: vel quod difficultatem penè omnem, quam in rebus inveniendis maximam eſſe conſtat, exhauriat: vel quod non parùm emolliat: vel denique quod præſtantioris cujuſdam ingenii acum, judicioque demonſtret. Ecce itaque inter Doctos certatur, & ambigitur uter è duobus eximiæ illius & nunc excogitationis Catoptrico-Gnomonicæ laudem ſit relaturus, gravioſſimoque tandem judicio declinabant ad partes Kircheri, qui prior typis nuper eam commiſerat: nec ſatisfactum acerrimum compellatus occurriſſet alius R. P. Societatis Sectatis Mathematicus, qui feliciter Romam ad ſuos, & ingenuè enarrabat vidiſſe ſe multos annos in Gallia, & in conventu quidem hujus Aquitanicæ Provinciæ noſtræ Albaterrenſi tale quoddam opus Catoptricum à P. Maignano elaboratum. Res ita erat; & Maignanus quidem, me audiente, non ſemel retulit cogitationem illam horographicam ſibi adhuc juniori ſubito immoderatoque impetu occurriſſe; tantaque voluptate mentem occupaſſe, quâ nullam majorem in vita ſenſiſſet. Hinc eruditorum Romanorum cohors ſuam utrique palmam contulit, protulitque paria eſſe in gignendis fortunatiſſimi ingenii Viris Germaniæ Galliæque imperia.

(c) Ib. p. p. 15.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Nullius hac in re, inquit, furti mihi ſum conſcius, niſi fortè manus meas, opus quod elaboraverunt, menti ſubripuiſſe quis finxerit. Id ib p. 16.

(f) Id ib

* 'Tis not impoſſible but the ſame thing might be invented by two Perſons, tho' one was not aſſiſted by the other.

(F) At what time the two Tomes of that Work did appear.] The firſt was printed in 1662, and the ſecond in 1672. There had been a leſs ſpace of time between the Publication of theſe two Volumes, if the Author had not been oblig'd to anſwer ſome Writings that were publiſh'd againſt him. His firſt Antagoniſt was (a) a Jeſuit of the College of Toulouſe, who in his Book de Cycloide had pretended that Father Maignan was miſtaken as to many Aſſertions touching the Structure and Gravity of Bodies, the Acceleration of Motion, and the equality of the Angles of Incidence and Reflection, &c. The Minim maintain'd that there was a Paralogiſm in the Demonſtration of the Jeſuit, and this occaſion'd a long Diſpute, the reſult whereof contributed very much to confirm this Aphoriſm of Geometrical Phyſicks, that an excellent Naturaliſt, moderately vers'd in Geometry, is better able to explain Phyſicks, than an excellent Geometrician who has but little Skill in Phyſicks. (b) Plus proderit, inquit Maignanus, in rebus Phyſicis peritiſſimus Phyſicus mediocriter in Geometricis verſatus, quàm peritiſſimus Geometra parum Phyſicus. Then he adds, At ſi utroque genere excellat, nihil prorſus optabilius eſſe poteſt. This Anſwer of Father Maignan was printed as an Appendix, and was follow'd by a ſecond Appendix, wherein he confutes the Replies of the Jeſuit, and wherein he mingles very good Obſervations concerning the Succeſſive Propagation of Light, the Scintillation of the fixed Stars, and the Glaſs-drops of Holland. The third Appendix is an Anſwer to a Diſſertation, which Mr. Ducaſſe publiſh'd againſt the Reaſon which F. Maignan had given, why the Dutch Glaſs-drops break in a thouſand pieces (c), after the little end is broken off. This Experiment was made in the Convent of the Minims, in 1662. in the Preſence of many Perſons. The fourth Appendix was an Anſwer to a (d) Writer, with whom the Jeſuit at his Death had entruſted the concerns of his Cauſe. This Writer dwelt upon Acceſſories, and gave over the main Point of the Diſpute, which was the Accuſation of a Paralogiſm. He complains of F. Maignan, that he had fallen foul upon the moſt famous Jeſuits, Suarez, Vaſquez, Mendoza, Zaichi, &c. The Minim anſwer'd all theſe Complaints, and forgot not his Proofs of the Accuſation of a Paralogiſm. This fourth Appendix was Printed in 1667, at Bourdeaux, whether the Author went about the Affairs of his Order. The fifth Appendix was an Anſwer to Theophilus Raynaud, who wrote againſt the Hypotheſis, which our Minim made uſe of to explain the Conſervation of the Accidents

(a) call'd Lalouvere.

(b) Id. ib. P. 35.

(c) See Rohault's Phyſicks, part 1ſt. c. 22. n. 47, &c. P. m. 191.

(d) The Father Courboulez a Jeſuit of the College of Toulouſe.

1660. After His Majeſty himſelf had ſeen an infinite number (G) of Machines and Curioſities in the Cell of this Monk, Cardinal Mazarine, who view'd them with the King, acquainted Father Maignan next Day with the Intentions of this Prince, by Mr. Fieubet, firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Toulouſe. The Minim teſtified ſo modeſtly and humbly his Inclination to ſpend all his Life in the obſcurity of a Cloiſter, wherein he had been cloathed with the Habit of his Order, that the Affair reſted there. He had therefore the ſatisfaction to ſhun the Pomp in which he would have been engag'd, and peaceably ſpent his time in making Books and Experiments, and reading Lectures. He was conſulted by the greateſt Philoſophers, and gave a Thouſand Anſwers to them either by word of Mouth, or by Writing. Never Man lov'd his Leaſure better than he did; he ſtudied even in his Sleep; for his Dreams (H) put him upon ſome Theorems, the deduction whereof he purſu'd, until he arriv'd at the demonſtration of them; and he happen'd often to awake ſuddenly, upon the account of the great Pleaſure he had in finding out a Demonſtration. The Goodneſs of his Morals, and the purity of his Virtues, render'd him no leſs worthy of Eſteem than his Wit and Knowledge. He died the 29th of October, 1676 *. We muſt not forget that when he went to Paris in 1657, he was admitted with great Teſtimonies of Honour to the Philoſophical Conferences at the Houſe of † Mr. de Mommor, Maſter of the Requeſts ‡, that he Compos'd with great falicity β, without blots.

MAIMBOURG (Louis) was Born at Nancy 1610, and became a Jeſuit in 1626. He taught Claſſical Learning for ſix Years; after which his Superiors employ'd him in the Office of a Preacher; which he diſcharg'd in the chief Cities of the Kingdom *; and I think the laſt Sermons he Preach'd were againſt the Verſion of Mons. The Anſwers which the Janſeniſts publiſh'd to his Sermons againſt this Tranſlation, repreſent him very much to his diſadvantage. He wrote Three Treatiſes of Controverſie ‖, which are not ill-done; but he acquir'd a much greater Reputation by many Hiſtories * which he Publiſh'd. The Janſeniſts criticiz'd upon that of Arianiſm, and that of the Iconoclaſts, and ſuffered all the reſt to paſs. That which he wrote about Calviniſm in 1681, ſtirr'd up againſt him a ſharp War, of which he left all the Operation to his Enemies; for he continued perfectly unactive, and neither acted Offenſively nor Defenſively. He had been turn'd out of the Jeſuits Society when he Publiſh'd the Hiſtory of Calvinism, which was done by the General of that Society, becauſe he declar'd too fiercely for the Doctrines of the Gallican Church, againſt thoſe of the Ultramontains. He retir'd into the Abby of St. Victor, and died there Auguſt 13th. 1686, after he had made a (A) Will which ſhews that he was diſſatisfied with the Jeſuits. He had a large ſhare in (B) the Friendſhip of Father Ferrier, the King's Confeſſor. I have ‖ elſewhere ſaid, that he ſtudied at Rome under John de Lugo. The Books that were written againſt him, are ſo common, and contain ſo fully a Character of his Genius and his Conduct, that 'tis nowiſe neceſſary to compile thoſe Facts here. But ſince thoſe who have refuted dents of the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt This Jeſuit had ſhown, that he underſtood nothing of the State of the Queſtion; for he believ'd that the Opinion of F. Maignan was the ſame with that of a certain Sicilian call'd Chiavetta. In the ſame Appendix F. Maignan anſwer'd two other Adverſaries, who were F. Vincent Baron, and F. Nicholas Arnu, both Jacobins. Theſe five Appendices having been Printed at ſeveral times, were publiſh'd again all together in 1672 (e). I have already (f) ſpoken of the Second Edition of his Courſe of Philoſophy, and of the two Treatiſes which were added to it, one againſt the Vortices of Mr. Des Cartes, and the other concerning Sir Samuel Morland's Trumpet. I add here, that this Father invented a Machine (g) which he caus'd to play before many Learned Men, which overthrows what Deſcartes ſuppoſes concerning the manner in which the Univerſe was fram'd, or might have been fram'd, and concerning effort of removing from the Center of Motion by Tangents.

(G) His Majeſty himſelf had ſeen in the Cell of this Monk, an infinite number of Machines and Curioſities. The Particulars which I ſhall now mention, may ſerve to diſcover the great Induſtry of F. Maignan

(b) Id ib. p. 31, 32.

(b) Properabat Rex ad celebrandas nuptias ſuas.—— Sed caſu Toloſæ parumper conſtitit: nec inter ea, quæ oculis Regis dignæ conſpectantur, infima fuit cellula Canobitica Patris Maignani, quæ inter Religioſæ egeſtatis anguſtias, ſi quid Matheſis pulchrum coluit, includebat; tubos omnis generis Telescopicos, Microſcopicos, Polyoptricos, Hygroſcopicos, Thermometricos, ut non adjiciam machinamenta Pneumatica, Hydraulica, Magnetica multa, ſtatumque de planiſphæriis, tabellis orbicis, fabricatis tum ad figuras torni induſtrios, tum ad res ſtatuas alimentibus ingenioſiſſimis plurimis: ſpeculariæ ſphæras, qualia nec capaciores Sphæræ, nec nitidiores formæ, nec denique incendii perniciosi ullibi tunc temporis prodebant. In quo copioſiſſimo ſupellectilis Mathematicæ apparatu non tam mirabatur Rex ſuo cum Toloſo Cenobiarcham artificem, quæ totum elaboraverat, quam ad multò plura, & utiliora Reipublicæ mechanica perficienda inſtructam. Quæ recogitans apud ſe ipſum occepit, quantus Matheſios fulgor per univerſam Galliam irradiaret, ſi Tu ille bonus ex Toloſana, ut ſic loquar, eremo in populareni Regiæ urbanitatis, & Aulæ frequentationem educeretur.

(H) His Dreams put him upon ſome Theorem. Here follows a Fact which confirms an Obſervation I made above. It is of the Nature of thoſe I mention'd at the beginning of the Remark D. Let us therefore relate it in the Words of the Original. (k) Mentem laboribus iſtis ita ſolicitor affuefecerat (Maignanus) ut emenſa diem ſtudio, in nullam nocturnæ corporeæ quietis partem veniret. Quod rarum aliis, frequentiſſimum Maignano fuit, ut idem aſſequeretur ſomni, & ſomni alicujus eruditi initium vel unicamente ad ſolita ſua theoremata, nec abſiſtente dono e de illis demonſtrationem obtinuiſſet, cujus inopinatæ voluptas dormienti ſæpe fuit pro ſatalabulo. Tum ne illa ſuboriens ad inſtar emicaret & fugeret, erectam ſuo ſulcamento recondebat, quâ notulis, quantum id tenuæ patiebantur, in paratâ chartæ exaratis eam ſiſtaret. Did our Age love Quibles, we would ſay that he was a Geometrician, whoſe Stock increaſed in his Sleep.

(A) A Will which ſhews that he was diſſatisfied with the Jeſuits. See the News from the Republick of Learning for the Month of September, 1686 (a).

(B) In the Friendſhip of Father Ferrier. He informs us of this himſelf in his Hiſtory of St Leo, for after he has ſhown what a new Opinion that probable againſt the falſe Idea which ſome had framed of it, he adds, "(l) "And this will be found very fully prov'd in the "little Book concerning a probable Opinion, "written by the deceaſed Father Ferrier Confeſſor to the "King, and one of the learneſt Divines that "ever I knew, for whoſe Memory I ſhall always "have a ſingular Veneration, as well for his de"ſire of Peace, as for the particular Obli"gations I have received from him, and which I "cannot in honeſty, but I muſt Teſtify "on any occaſion, which I will now leave to "Poſterity.

(l) Hiſt.

a ut ſuſ Saguens in his Elogium of Emanuel Maignan.

These Conferences are often mentioned in the Letters of* Sorbiere.

† Saguens loid. p. 46.

β Eloquarne an tacebo incredibilem illam conſcribendi ſine lituris ullis cogitata ſua rapiditatem, appendicem tertiam tribus horis, quartam conſcripſit tribus hebdomadis. Id. ib. p. 48

a Taken from Nathan. Sotuel Bibl Societ Jeſu p. 567

‖ See the Remark D.

* The Supplement of Moreri Langue d'Oc

† In the Article Lugo, p. 195 Edit. (c)

(c) Taken out of F. Saguens, p. 34, &c.

(f) In the Remark A

(g) Saguens, ib. p. 42

(k) Id ibid p. 47, 48.

(a) p. 343 &c

(b) Maimbourg Hiſt of the Pont. ſ. at of St. Leo, p. 343 Edit Holl.

refuted his History of Calvinism, have said nothing of a certain Sermon, which furnish'd a Writer of Port Royal with a merry Tale (C), I shall make one Remark upon it; and another concerning the Works of F. Maimbourg (D); and I shall make a third Remark upon

(C) With a merry Tale.] 'Tis in a Preface before the Defence of the Translation of Mons, of the Cologne Edition, 1668, and which was not reprinted in the Edition at Geneva, of all the Pieces which concern this Translation. And hence it comes to pass that this Story is but little known, and was not set forth by the Censurers of the History of Calvinism. It will not therefore be impertinent to insert it here in this Remark, as the Author of the Preface tells it

(c) Preface in the defence of the Translation of the New Testament, printed at Mons against the Sermons of F. Maimbourg the Jesuit. p. 6

" (c) 'Tis now above twenty Years since I went " by chance into the Chappel of the College of " Clermont, and there I saw one mount up into " the Pulpit, of an extraordinary Mien, and who " was none of those whom the Scripture speaks " of, whose Wisdom shines in their Countenance. On " the contrary there was nothing to be seen but " fierceness in his Eyes, in his Gestures, and in " all his Air; and he might have struck Terror " into the People, if this fierceness had not been " mingled with a Thousand theatrical Gestures " which made People Laugh.——His Discourse " was yet more astonishing than his Air, and the " oddness of it was so strange, that I can never " forget it. It was the Sunday after Easter, when " the Gospel about the good Shepherd was read: " From hence he took occasion to magnifie the " Condition of Shepherds, by observing that it " was not formerly the Profession of the meanest " People, as it is at present; but that Kings and " Princes did not then think it unworthy of them. " After this, he reckon'd up a great number of " Princes that were Shepherds: And then he for- " got not the Patriarchs, but carried down the " Catalogues as far as to David, upon whom he in- " sisted a long time; for he gave us a comical " Description of his Beauty, the colour of his " Hair, his Cloaths, and lastly of his Dog. It " was, says he, a brave Dog, and had so much Cou- " rage, that we may believe while his Master fought " against Goliah, this Dog, to avoid the Disgrace of " doing nothing in the mean time, hunted after the " Wolves and fought them. After this good Father " was once enter'd upon the Subject of Dogs, as " if he had been link'd to it by some secret Sym- " pathy, he could not tell how to leave it, and " therefore he divided his Sermon into four " Parts, according to the four several sorts of " Dogs. The first sort were English Dogs: The " second were Masty Dogs: The third were " the Lap Dogs: And the fourth the good " Dogs; whereof he made an Application to dif- " ferent sorts of Preachers. The English Dogs " were the Jansenists, or, as they were then cal- " led, the Arnaudists, whom he represented as an " indiscreet People, who tore in pieces all Men " indifferently, and made no distinction between " the Innocent and the Guilty, but oppress'd " every Body with hard Penances. He de- " scrib'd the Masty Dogs as being Cowardly, and " having no Courage but upon their own Dung- " hill, and who being off from that, are always " fearful, which he applied to Preachers of that " Humour. The Lap Dogs, were according " to him, the Abbots of the Court: They are, " says he, shap'd like Lions, and make a great noise, " but when they are view'd narrowly, their noise is " laugh'd at. And upon this occasion he de- " scrib'd their Ruffles, their Bands, their Sur- " plices, their Gestures. And lastly, the Good " Dogs were the Jesuits, and such Preachers as he " was. 'Tis impossible to imagine after what " manner he treated this ridiculous Subject, and " to what an excessive Pitch he carried the Buf- " foonry of his Descriptions. I can assure you, " that being then present, I saw all the Reverend " Fathers that were in the Galleries above, hold- " ing their Sides with Laughter, from the begin- " ning of the Sermon to the end of it, and the rest " of the Auditory could not well keep their " Countenance, and look grave: Indeed there " was nothing but a loud Noise, which could " not be stopt. All this diverted the Good " Father, and inspir'd him with a new Ar- " dor to encrease the Laughter of his Auditors, " with new Grimaces. After I had been a Spec- " tator of this strange Profanation, and was inform'd " of the Name of the Jesuit who had Preach'd, " who was said to be F. Maimbourg, I went " out more scandaliz'd at the Society than at their " Preacher.

(D) Concerning the Works of F. Maimbourg.] He Publish'd at Rouen, two Panegyricks in 1640; one is that of Lewis XIII. because he had put France under the Protection of the Virgin. The other is an Elogium of the Kings of France. He had Publish'd at Rome in 1638, a Funeral Oration on Nicholas Zappi an Augustin Monk, and he publish'd at Paris his Lent Sermons in 1670, in Two Volumes in 8°. Father Sotuel, who inform'd me of this, said nothing of the Letters of Francis Romain, which is a Work of F. Maimbourg; the Title alone gives us to understand, that it concerns the manner how to reconcile the Obedience due to the Pope, with that due to the King. Sotuel did not forget the Controversial Treatises, written by F. Maimbourg. They are three little Treatises, whereof one is entitul'd, (d) A peaceable Method to bring back the Protestants without Dispute to the true Faith as to the Eucharist, upon occasion of the (e) Contest concerning the perpetuity of the Faith of the same Mystery. The second is Entituled, of the true Church of Jesus Christ. And the third, Of the true Word of God. The first of these three Works appear'd so good to the Roman Catholicks, that it holds the fifth Place among the sixteen Methods of converting the Huguenots, which were recommended by the Clergy of France to the Controversial Writers in 1682. The words of the Memorial drawn up by that Assembly are these. " The fifth is a peaceable Method, and without " Disputes, founded upon the Synod of Dort, which " all the Protestants of France have receiv'd, and " which has determin'd by the Holy Scripture, " that when there is a Contest about any Article " between two Parties which are in the true " Church, it must be referr'd to its Decision, un- " der this penalty to any one that refuses to sub- " mit to it, that he shall be accounted guilty of " Schism and Heresie". And indeed in this consists the whole strength of the Method of F. Maimbourg. He shows by the Conduct which was observ'd in Holland, when Disputes arose between the Arminians and Gomarists, that according to the Doctrine of the Protestants, it belongs to the Church, in whose Bosom the Contests arise to do Justice to the Parties, by deciding which is in the right, and which is in the wrong, and that by virtue of its definitive Sentence, they must cease to Dispute; and that those who will not submit to this Decision, are to be reputed Hereticks, and to be cut off from the Body as unruly Members. According to this Principle, will the Papists say, the Protestants ought to acknowledge, that it belong'd to the Council of Trent to give Sentence without Appeal, about the Disputes of Luther and Calvin; and that after the Decision of this Council, none ought any more to quarrel, but that each of them must conform himself to the definitive Decree with the Romish Doctors, upon pain of deserving the Thunder of Excommunication, as a Heretick and Rebel. This is not a place to examine whether this Argument ad hominem has any force (a): 'Tis sufficient to say, that the Protestant Church cannot be blam'd for Establishing an Order, without which 'tis impossible that any Society can subsist: For in all Societies there must be a Tribunal to give Sentence without Appeal about the Disputes of private Persons, and who have Power to inflict the Penalties of Rebellion upon those who refuse to submit to its Decrees; for otherwise it would not be possible to cure any Disorder, nor to hinder Disputes from lasting eternally. I know very well, it is objected, that in this respect, there is no other difference between the Romish and Reform'd Church, as to the point of Authority, but that one declares it is infallible, and does not permit the private Persons to examine its Decisions; whereas the other acknowledges it self fallible, and permits private Persons to examine the whole, provided that at last they submit to its Decrees. I know very well, I say, that 'tis objected, that in this respect, the way of Authority is no less the last Refuge for Protestants than for Papists; but I know also what the Protestants

(d) Printed at Paris in 1670. and Reprinted there the third time in 1682.

(e) It was that which made so great a noise between Mr. Arnaud and Mr. Claude

(a) Mr. Jurieu in his Treatise of the Power of the Church, p. 323. confesses, that there is Wit and Cunning in this Book of Mr. Maimbourg. And p. 325. That the turn he gives to the difficulty has something amazing in it which strikes the mind with a great Idea of the Difficulty.

Answer

Cousin which he had (E) who became a Protestant, and is the Author of two or three Books.

MAINUS (JASON) one of the most famous Civilians of his Age, was born in 1435. Andreot Mainus, his Father, being banished from Milan, for a Crime he had committed, retired to Pesaro, and there got his Maid with Child, † who was deliver'd of our Civilian. He was Educated at Milan, but his Master treated him very harshly, and did not take the same care of him as he did of the Legitimate Sons of Andreot Mainus. He was sent to Study the Civil Law at Pavia, where he was so much addicted to playing at Cards,

† Pisaurum ad Galeacium Malatestam oppidi dominum venit, ubi ex ancilla Annete concubina Jasonem filium suscepit Gudianus Antecedentium rerum, p 281

Answer. Three (b) of their Authors have refuted the Method of Father Maimbourg. He whom I name last has taken the best expedient that could be taken; his Reflections are fine and good; but did not always perceive whether his Answers were a Paralogism. I will give an Example of it.

He proposes this Objection in Page 347. (c) "If one is not obliged to submit to the Decisions "of Councils and Synods; if it be always lawful "to Appeal from them; if every one has a Power to look upon those Decisions as meer Counsels, "and to reject them when they judge them not "agreeable to the word of God, there will be no "way left of Deciding any Controversy, or put-"ting an end to it" He answers, among other things, That they who value so much this Difficulty, do not remove it by the Doctrine of the Infallibility of the Church. He proves it (d) by 200 Heresies, which according to the Calculation of Bellarmin, have made great Devastations in the Romish Church, which always declar'd, says he, that it was Infallible. He adds (e) that there is in the Birth of Heresies je ne sçai, something Supernatural, and therefore that we must not imagine that we have it always in our Power to stop those Mischiefs, unless God interposes in an extraordinary manner. There are two great Defects in this Answer: 1. 'Tis to confess to the Adversaries, that God has not left in his Church any ordinary Means for determining Disputes. 2. That the multitude of Heresies that have been in Christendom, proves that the Doctrine of Autority is not a proper means to extinguish them. Why could not this Author see that these Heresies could never have lasted, if their Followers had believ'd this Doctrine? They themselves maintain'd only by rejecting it: Does this prove any thing against the goodness of the Remedy? Can a sick Man who is not cur'd, because he rejects all that the Physician orders him, testifie that the Physician's Remedies are nothing worth? I say this only en passant, to advertise the Readers that there is a large Field for Criticism in Controversial Books.

I return now to the Books of Father Maimbourg; but shall not mention the Titles of his Histories, which may be found in the Supplement to Moreri. I think it may be said that he had a particular Talent for such kind of Books; for in them he scatter'd many pleasant Things, many lively Strokes, and a multitude of occasional Instructions. There are few Historians, even among those who write better and are more learned and exact than he, that have the Art of ingaging the Reader so much as he does. I wish that those who could exceed him in Candor and Knowledge, would give us all the Histories he had undertaken to write, if he had liv'd 20 Years longer, and that they would set them off with the same Attractives as he did: It would be no small Advantage to the Republick of Learning. I have said in the Body of this Article, that his Histories of Arianism, and of the Iconoclasts, were Criticiz'd. Those Criticisms (f) were burnt at Paris, in 1674. They are very good. They were printed again in Holland in 1683. His History of the Church of Rome was also Criticiz'd, and I have heard say that the Author of the Criticisms was M. Boileau, the Doctor. His Work was printed twice, and is very much augmented (g) in the 2d Edition. The News (h) from the Republick of Learning mention the first. The Abstract which is found there of this Piece, shows that M. Maimbourg succeeded very ill in the Attack he made against the Infallibility of the Pope, and the Superiority of the Holy See over the Councils.

(E) Upon a Cousin he had, nam'd Theodore Maimbourg] He conform'd to the Custom of the Times in publishing the Motives why he chang'd his Religion. The Letter which he wrote upon this occasion to his eldest Brother, was printed in 1659. He retir'd into Guienne, (i) to the House of the Marquis de Bougi, and wrote a Summary Answer to the Method of Cardinal Richelieu. He Dedicated it to Madam de Turenne, and sent the MS. to Samuel Maresius, who publish'd it at Groningen, in 1664. The Author calls himself by the Name of R. de la Ruelle. He return'd to the Romish Communion some time after, and made Profession of it when the Famous Book (k) of the Exposition of the Catholick Faith was printed. He made some Reflections upon this work, which were seen in MS. by some of the Reformed Religion. This made Mr de la Bastide affirm, (l) That he knew a Catholick who was writing against the Exposition of the Bishop of Condom. I use the same words which the Bishop of Condom cites, as taken out of the 2,d Page of the Preface of Mr de la Bastides; but I find in this Preface at p. 3.5, of the 2d. Edition, the following words: "I have been "inform'd that there is a certain Person of the Ro-"mish Church, who writes against this same Exposi-"tion of the Bishop of Condom, and what those of his "own Communion can say concerning their own "Belief, will be of more Weight, and less suspected in their Mouth than in ours. The Bishop of Condom observes, that the Gentlemen of the Reformed Religion were impos'd upon, when they were told so. "This were certainly, adds he (m), "a strange thing that this good Catholick, whom "the Catholicks have never known, should so "much confide in the Enemies of the Church, "as to tell them of a Book he was preparing "against a Bishop of his own Communion. But "this imaginary Writer has been now expected "for a long time, and the pretended Reform'd "will be very easy to believe any thing, if for "the future they suffer themselves to be amus'd "with such like Promises. The Person meant by Mr. de la Bastide, was our Theodore Maimbourg, who went into England about the Year 1682, to return into the Protestant Church. He took with him divers Manuscripts which he had written, and among the rest, an Answer to the Peaceable Method of his Cousin the Jesuite, and an Answer to the Book of the Bishop of Condom. The 1st of these two Pieces was printed at Rotterdam in 1683. The Bookseller was earnestly desired to Print the 2d immediately, but the Stile of the first did in no wise incourage him to do it; and so the Work was buried in the dark Corners of a Study. The Author was made Governor to one of the Natural Sons of King Charles II. He died at London about two or three Years ago (n), and if one may believe the Reports that were spread of him, he declar'd to the Ministers that prepar'd him for Death, that he died a Socinian, and continu'd Obstinate in that Heresy to the last. I have heard some say that he was a Man of a good Mien, of a great deal of Wit, and who knew the World very well.

There was a Jesuite of Lorrain, call'd John Maimbourg, who was not Inferiour, neither in Knowledge nor Wit, to the Famous Serarius, another Jesuite of Lorrain; but he would never publish any Books, tho' he was earnestly exhorted to do it. A Jesuite of the same Country gives us an Account of these Things. (o) Magnum literaue Lotharingiæ lumen, magnum eruditionis omne ornamentum, magnum pietatis, & Christianæ modestiæ decus: Ambo florentes ingenio, erudi ti ambo, ambo in omni genere authorum assidua lectione versati, vel potius omnia tum sacræ tum profanæ doctrinæ partibus absolut. atque perfecti ambo sa rae literæ, & hanc ipsam quæ in suspensum tenebat, inscriptionem,

Explanare pares, & respondere parati

Alter scriptis in lucem publicam emissis, alter alter ingenio par, eruditione, virtutibus, loco uno duntaxat inferior quod addam nunquam potuit, ut ingenii de fœtu, partuque suæ fœtu exprometi, ac publico mandari paterentur. Alter erat Nicolaus Serrarius, alter Joannes Maimburgius.

(a) Nicol Abramus in Pharo Veteris Testamenti, p 256 col 2

(a) viz. Mr. Lenfant, Minister of Chatillon upon the Loing, Father of Mr. Lenfant Minister at Berlin. 2 A Cousin of Father Maimbourg, of whom I shall speak hereafter. 3 Mr. Jurieu in his Letters about the Power of the Church, printed at Roan in 1677.

(b) Jurieu's Treatise of the Power of the Church, Letter 7. n. 9. p. 347.

(d) Ib. p. 348.

(e) Ib. p 351.

(f) The Title is, Conferences between Eudoxus and Eucharistus about the History of Arianism, and the History of the Iconoclasts of Father Maimbourg

(g) In Holland in 1686, and 1688.

(h) Month of April, 1686. p 461.

(i) At the Castle of Calonge in Condomois, near Agen

(k) Written by Mr. Bossuet, then Bishop of Condom This Book was printed the first time in 1671.

(l) In the Advertisement of his Answer to the Book of the Bishop of Condom. See the Advertisement of this Prelate about the 2d Edition, p 25 of the Holland Edition

(m) Ibid

(n) He was written in the Month of January, 1696

Cards, that he loſt all his Money and his Books, and then went about the Streets (A) in a miſerable Condition. He improv'd under the Chaſtiſements of his Father, for he applied himſelf ſo heartily to Study, that he made a wonderful Progreſs both at Pavia and Bologna, inſomuch that he was judg'd worthy to Teach the Civil Law in 1471. He taught in Pavia from that Year till 1486, that he was call'd to Padua. Altho' he had a great Salary (B,) yet he was not contented with it, and becauſe he could not obtain an Augmentation of it, he retir'd at the end of three Years to Piſa, where he had a better Penſion. He was called back again to Pavia in 1491, and became ſo famous there, that he had three Thouſand Scholars. He was ſent to Rome the next Year, to Congratulate the new Pope Alexander VI. to whom he made a very fine Harangue. But that which he made upon the Marriage of Maximilian of Auſtria, King of the Romans, with the Niece of Lewis Sforza, was no leſs applauded at the Court of the Emperor, from whence he returned loaded with Preſents, and (C) honourable Titles. He Harangued likewiſe in 1495. when Lewis Sforza was declared Duke of Milan, which procur'd him new Titles of Honour*. When he became almoſt blind, he broke off (D) his Lectures, and could not be engag'd to reaſſume them again, but by the urgent ſollicitations of Lewis XII. He was honoured with the Preſence (E) of this Prince at one of his Prelections, which was attended with a thouſand Advantages; but the Fief wherewith he was Inveſted, never brought him one Farthing†; but on the contrary put him to great Charges. The Jealouſie between him and (F) Philip Decius, another Profeſſor, proceeded to a great height. He was not a Man of a very ſubtil Wit, neither did he make any ſcruple (G) to make uſe of the Labours of others. He

* See the Remark C.

† See the Remark D.

(A) He went about the Streets in a miſerable Condition.] He was forc'd to be Shav'd, becauſe the Scurf had eaten into his Head, and beſides he was very ill Cloath'd. We ſhall make uſe of the Words of Panzirollus. (b) In peſtilenti chartarum luſu adeo miſerè deperditus eſt, ut omni conſumpta ſuppellectile etiam jurium volumina in membranis magno pretio deſcripta vendere cogeretur, ad extremamque inopiam deductus vili veſte, & tonſo capite, quod deformi tinea obſitum erat, omnium ſordidiſſimus incedebat.

(B) Altho' he had a great Salary.] viz. The Sum of 1000 Ducats, which none had ever before him; for all the Penſion that was given to his Predeceſſors was only two or three hundred Ducats. (c) Primus ex noſtris jurium interpretibus mille aureorum ſalarium obtinuit, cum ante ducentis aut ſummum trecentis aureis docerent. He was alſo the firſt who cauſed 50 Ducats to be given for a Conſultation; nay, 100 and more, whereas before no more than 4 were given (d). He was miſtaken ſometimes in his Advice; but I know not whether he kept his Word to his Clients that conſulted him, to whom he promiſed the Reſtitution of the Money he had taken from them, in caſe they loſt the Cauſe. (e) Conſultoribus oneroſus in hoc laudem meruit, quod ſi cauſa excidiſſent, extortam pecuniam ſe reſtituturum pollicebatur, in quibuſdam tamen minus rectè conſuluiſſe arguitur. There are ſome ſellers of Febrifuges, who promiſe the like Reſtitution, in caſe a Fever does not go off. But if it ſhould happen, I do not think that ever they would Refund the Money.

(C) Loaded with Preſents and Honourable Titles.] (f) Auro argentoque donatus, & equeſtri ac palatina dignitate honeſtatus, Cæſariſque patritius factus lætus in patriam rediit. Mr. Bullart relates, (g) "That Lewis "Sforza, Duke of Milan, having a mind to promote "the Glory of a Man who was his Subject, prefer'd "him to be a Senator of his Council, and gave "him the Honour of Knighthood, (h) and then "ſent him on ſeveral Embaſſies to the Emperors "Frederick and Maximilian; who judging him "worthy of their Eſteem, for his own Merits as "well as for his Character, did him extraordinary "Honours, and diſmiſſed him loaded with Pre-"ſents." This Story is not well told, for if a Man builds upon theſe words, he may imagine that Mainus was ſent ſucceſſively to the Emperor Frederick, and the Emperor Maximilian. But this is a miſtake, for he was ſent to the Imperial Court, only when Bonna Sforza Married Maximilian, King of the Romans.

(D) He broke off his Lectures.] For more than nine Years, if we may believe Panzirollus; but he himſelf will not permit us to believe him: for he ſays that King Lewis XII. engag'd him to read publick Lectures again, and that Mainus being inveſted with a Fief, (i) upon condition he would teach the Law, perform'd this Condition, and yet was diſappointed of his Fief (k). He complained of this to Lewis XII. who diſpatched Letters in his Favour; but they were thrown away, and he that preſented them had a thouſand blows. Jaſon amicorum opera à Rege literas impetravit, ut ſibi ablata reſtituerentur; ſed nunciis pugnis, & calcibus percuſſus penè cæſus eſt. Literæ in terram projectæ, & conculcatæ fuere. Mainus complain'd to Guy de Rocheford, Chancellor of France, and did not forget to tell him of the hundred and fifty Crowns, that this Affair had coſt him, without getting one Penny from the Lands the King had given him. Panzirollus adds, That theſe things happen'd in the Year 1500, and that he continued to teach until the Year 1511. The breaking off did not begin at the ſooneſt till the Year 1495. where then ſhall we find the nine Years which Panzirollus makes it to laſt. Sometimes I am ſurpriz'd when I meet with ſuch Faults of Arithmetick in good Authors; but now I do not wonder any more at it, I have found ſo many of them that I am us'd to them, and pretty well hardned.

(E) With the preſence of Louis XII. at one of his Lectures.] Louis XII. being at Pavia, had a mind to hear him. Mainus being clad in a Robe of Gold, conducted him to the Auditory. The King made him go before him (l), and ſaid that the Royal Power in theſe Places was inferior to that of the Profeſſors. He was follow'd with five Cardinal and a hundred Lords. He embrac'd Mainus after he came down from his Chair, and preſented him with a Caſtle. This may be compar'd to the Honours given by Pompey (m) to the Philoſopher Poſidonius. The Sieur Bullart ought not to have ſaid (n) that Lewis XII. went often into this Law School; but this is the Common Error of all thoſe who make Elogiums, they never mind the exact Numbers, but multiply them always. The Subject treated of by Mainus in this Prælection ought not to be forgotten: He maintain'd that the Dignity of a Knight conferr'd by a Prince upon him who had ſignaliz'd himſelf in a Fight, ought to paſs from Father to Son (o) Ea lectione dignitatem equeſtrem ob ſpectatam in acie facinus de manu Regis traditam, accendendæ virtutis ergo ad poſteros manare definivit.

(F) The Jealouſy between him and Philip Decius, another Profeſſor, proceeded to a great height.] There is nothing more common than to ſee this kind of Jealouſy produce a Torrent of Reproaches and Slanders; but 'tis rare that thoſe who are Tainted with it ſhould throw Stones at one another, in a literal Senſe, as theſe two Profeſſors did one day. They met one another in a narrow Street, and Diſputed the Wall, and had like to have kill'd one another with Stones. What a ſtrange Sight was this! and how diverting to Children and all Paſſengers! Jaſonis (a) nominis invidia exagitatus Philippus Decius, ipſum uſque ad infamas cavillationes numquam inſectari deſtitit. In tantum denique odium prorupere, ut ſemel in angiportu obviam facti, cum de [illegible] contendere cæpiſſent, etiam lapidibus ſeſe inceſſiſſe ferantur.

(G) Neither did he make any Scruple to make uſe of the Labours of others.] He had not been well [illegible] to leave him out of the (b) Liſt of Plagiaries [illegible] he attributed to himſelf a Book which [illegible] of (l) Rex eum velut præceptorem præire juſſit, quod eo in loco profitentibus regiam poteſtatem inferiorem eſſe diceret. Panzirol. pag. 283.

(m) Cn. Pompejus confecto Mithridatico bello intraturus Poſidonii ſapientiæ profeſſione clari domum fores percuti de more à lictore voluit, & faſces literarum ſubmiſit is cui ſe oriens occidens. que ſubmiſerat. Plinius l. 7. c. 30.

(n) Bullart ubi ſupra.

(o) Jovius in elog. c. 66. p. 154. See alſo Panzirol. ubi ſupra. pag. 283.

(a) Panzirol. p. 284.

(b) He is in the Liſt of Thomaſius p. 471.

* See the Remark C.

† See the Remark D.

(b) Panzirollus de claris legum Interpretibus, lib. 2. cap. 127. p. m. 281.

(c) Idem pag. 282.

(d) Primus etiam 50. 100. & amplius aureos pro reſponſis accepit, cum prius quatuor aureolis honorarentur. Panzirol. ubi ſupra pag. 282.

(e) Id. p. 285. He cites Marza conſ. 1. fol. 10. & 12. in princ.

(f) Panzirol. ibid. pag. 283.

(g) Bullart's Academy of Sciences, to m. 1. p 212.

(h) Ejus (Ludovici Sfortiæ) Senator ac Patritius eſt declaratus Panzirol ubi ſupra.

(i) Caſtrum Properam Rex in feudum Jaſoni, dum viveret, cum multis prædiis & proventibus conceſſit, hoc animo, ut jura profiteri teneretur, niſi valetudine eſſet impeditus Id ib. p 283.

(l) Dominus à Corcu regiæ domus magiſter Jaſonem Caſtro ſpoliavit, etſi poſt acquiſitum Caſtrum ſemper docuit. Ib p 284.

He took cruel Fees from those who came to consult him; but he promised to restore the Money again if they lost their Cause †. He was excus'd from reading Lectures in the last Years of his Life; which was a Favour that he obtained from the Duke of Milan, and which the bad State of his Mind was sufficient to procure him. This last part of his Life was very sad. He had *lost the use of his Reason, and he had a Nephew that beat him. He died at Pavia the 22d. of March, 1519. aged 84 Years, and left a Natural Son behind him, who had Offices in the Republick of *Genoa. The Answer he made to Louis XII. is ill related by Mr. Moreri (H). He is the Author (I) of many Books. He Studied by Candle light (K) in the Day-time.

† See the Remark B.

* Ferunt eum senio confectum delirasse, & sæpe à Com. Hippolyto ex fratre nepote pugnis cæsum fuisse Panzirol. ubi infra p. 286.

MAJORAGIUS (MARK ANTONY) Professor of Eloquence at Milan in the 16th Century, got great Reputation by the Politeness of his Style, and by his great Judgment in Critical Learning. He Studied at Come under a Professor who was (A) his near Kinsman; after which he went to Milan, where he met with a Patron †, in whose House he lodg'd five Years, and was so addicted to Study (B) that he almost kill'd himself by it. It came into his Head to revive the Custom of Declaiming, which anciently qualified Youth to make Eloquent Harangues, and after he had given many of his Scholars very useful Instructions to this Purpose, and prepar'd them for it in private, he resolv'd to employ himself in it publickly. The Curators of the College were so favourable to him, that they bestow'd that Employment upon him as soon as they knew his Intentions. He was then but 26 Years old, and yet he discharged that Office very well, but at the end of two Years all the Professors were dismiss'd, because the Milanese was threatned with a dangerous War. He retir'd to Ferrara, where he Studied the Civil Law under Andreas Alciatus, and Philosophy under Vincent

† Taken out of Panzirol. lib 2 de claris legum Interpretibus c 127

† Called Lancelot Fagniano

Imola wrote, and he hired some Scholars, who took Copies of the Lectures of the most Learned Professors, of which he afterwards made an Advantage. One of these Professors complain'd of it publickly, and was so Mad and Angry with the Cheat, that he chang'd his Opinion out of spite, and Refuted those Opinions which had been stolen from him. Read this Latin, and you will find the Names of the Persons concern'd. (c) Aliorum etiam laboribus Jason libenter fruebatur, siquidem commentarium in titulum de Actionibus ab Alexandro Imolensi scitè elaboratum sibi adscripsisse, & in lucem edidisse, fertur. (1) Hieronymi Torti Papiensis, qui cum Jacobo Puteo in patria vespertinas lectiones paulo ante explicuerat, & aliorum scriptis locupletari voluit; Bononiæ quoque dum ibi Bartholomæus Socinus, deinde Carolus Ruinus profiterentur, auditores aluisse dicitur, qui eorum descriptas lectiones ad se referrent: id & ejus commentaria ostendunt, & Ruinus sæpe publicè deploravit, qui, mutata per indignationem sententia, surreptas opiniones confutare consueverat.

(c) Panzirol. ib. p. 285.

(1) Apostil. ad conf. 62. & 163. Decii.

(d) Moreri, at the word Mayni.

(e) Jov. in Elog. c 66. p. 154.

(f) Panzirol, p. 283.

(g) Compare with this the Answer of Allatius, related in his Article Remark D.

(h) Panzirol. p. 282

(i) Ibid pag. 285.

(2) Hieron. Buttigel. in l. 1. § si quis simpliciter. n. 9 ff. de ver. oblig.

(k) Linteo capiti obvoluto, etiam meridie occlusis fenestris ad accensum lumen elucubrare consueverat, ne cœli claritate mentem evagari sineret. Panzirol. ibid.

H) Ill related by Mr Moreri.] "(d) Paulus Jovius "adds, That Louis XII. having ask'd him, why he "was never Married, he answer'd, because he "was perswaded, that by his Majesty's Sollicitati- "on Pope Julius II. would make him a Cardinal." This is not to Translate, as he should have done, the words of Paulus Jovius. (e) Me audiente interrogatus à Ludovico Gallorum Rege cur nunquam duxisset uxorem, ut te commendante, inquit, Julius Pontifex ad purpureum galerum aptandum me habilem faciat. Nevertheless we may know by this bad Version that Mainus wish'd for a Cardinals Hat; but it avail'd him nothing to discover the secret of his Ambition. (f) Hoc responso animi quidem secretum ostendit, sed nunquam voti compos factus est. This is what Panzirollus says, after he had said what you are going to read. In domestico colloquio ab eodem (Rege) interrogatus Jason, cur nunquam uxorem duxisset, Ut tua, inquit, amplissime Rex, opera Julius Pontifex me ad purpureum Galerum promovere possit (g).

(I) He is the Author of many Books.] Of a Commentary upon the Pandects, and upon the Code of Justinian, besides four Volumes of Answers, Responsa, and the Explication of the Title de actionibus (h). He compil'd many things together, but he did not always understand what he borrowed from others. (i) Jason non multum ingenio acutus ob hæsitationem indocilem quandoque articulos reliquit, nec semel male percepta aliorum argumenta recitat, ac in reprehendis receptis opinionibus, quæ Communia vocantur, non nunquam decipitur. Vir alioquin laboriosus, & in æmulandis aliorum dictis diligens, (2) quicquid enim legebat, scriptis mandabat, unde à puero calamo Juris studiosum adjuvenem delectabat, & si, quantum studebat, tantum scribere refrenabat.

(K) By Candle-light in the Day-time.] I have heard this said of some other Learned Men, and I am very glad to find it printed concerning (k) Mainus. The reason of this Conduct may be easily guess'd, for there are some Men who can produce nothing unless they recollect themselves, and concenter their Thoughts within themselves; and they find it very difficult to prevent distracting Fancies: Upon which Account 'tis necessary to remove from their Eyes the great diversity of Objects, which the light Presents to them.

(A) Under a Professor, who was his near Kinsman.] He was a Person (l) of great Merit, and his Name was Primus Comes. This Name was the ground of an Ambiguity which surpriz'd Erasmus; for this Italian having put his Name at the bottom of a Note, wherein he acquainted him that he intended to give him a Visit, made Erasmus, though then very Weak, go forth in all haste to meet him, thinking that he was some great Prince He was much astonished to find only a little Man all alone; but he did not repent of having made haste, for the Conversation of the Man pleas'd him very much. Majoragius relates this much better than I do, and so deserves to be heard. (m) Cum in Germaniam ea de causa profectus fuisset, ut Erasmi consuetudine per aliquod tempus frueretur, priusquam ipsum Erasmum conveniret, ad eum literas dedit, quibus adventus sui causam declarabat, quarum in extrema parte nomen suum, ut fit, ita subscripserat, Tui studiosissimus Primus Comes Mediolanensis. Hanc cum Erasmus subscriptionem vidisset, credidit statim magnum aliquem adisse Principem, sui visendi gratiâ venire licet admodum senex & infirmus esset, tamen quo statuto, quoque apparatu potuit, obviam consobrino meo longe processit. Sed postquam hominculum unum, nullo comitatu, nullo servorum grege stipatum, & bene quidem literatum, sed nullo elegantiori cultu vestitum reperit, errorem suum videre jucundissimè cæpit: & tamen eum sibi multò gratiorem advenisse, quam si magnus Princeps fuisset, multis audientibus, testatus est. He informs us in the same place, that one reason (n) why he quitted the Name of Count, was because several People were deceiv'd by it; for Gryphius answering a Letter of Majoragius, wrote in such a Style to him as if he had been a Prince. (o) Eadem ratione deceptus aliquando fuit in nomine meo vir insignis ac literatus Sebastianus Gryphius. Cum enim ad eum literas dedissem, & me Comitem inscripsissem, ille mihi tanquam alicui Principi respondit, & clarissimum Comitem non semel appellavit.

(l) See Natalis Comes Mythol l 9. c 5 p. m. 960

(m) Majoragius, Orat 10 p m 221. 222.

(n) We shall see hereafter in Remark D. that Majoragius was called Antonius Maria Comes.

(o) Majoragius ubi supra p. 222.

(B) So addicted to Study, that he almost kill'd himself by it.] Diversions, Plays, Feasts, had no Charms for him; and it was in vain to tell him that so Sedulous an Application to his Books would kill him, for he would not unbend at all; but at last a dangerous Sickness made him sensible, that he shou'd have yielded to the Exhortations of his Friends And this he himself informs us of (p) Fui apud hunc annos circiter quinque, quo quidem tempore literarum studiis adeo vehementem operam dedi, ut totum illud quinquennium in labore atque contentione animi contriverim, ut me non quærere, non rogare, non æqualium studia, non ludi, non convivia delectarent Tristis est vir iste gravissimus atque ornatissimus Lancillottus Faunianus, patruus meus, qui mihi adest, de me sollicitus est, meum honorem atque exaltationem tuetur Quantum in stu-

(p) Id ib p 196

cent Magius, He Publiſh'd (C) ſome Pieces, in which he call'd himſelf by the Name of Marcus Antonius Majoragius. The alarms of War being appeas'd he return'd to Milan, and was reſtor'd to his Profeſſor's Place, with a more conſiderable Salary. His Enemies who had labour'd in vain to hinder this, fell upon him, and drew up a Proceſs (D) againſt him upon the Name which he had ſet at the beginning of his Book. He pleaded his Cauſe dius litearum me continenter verſari videret, magno quodam cum amore ſæpiſſime reprehendere ſolebat, quod acquirendæ ſcientiæ deſiderio, propriæ ſalutis oblivi ſcerer. Teſtes ſunt omnes, qui me norant eo tempore, ut non ſemel propter nimis aſſiduum ſtudium, cum in graviſſimos morbos incidiſſem, de vitæ periculo dimicarim. After he was cur'd he wanted no leſs to be advertis'd, that he took too much pains; the love of Knowledge and of Glory entic'd him ſo much, that he did not conſider the prejudice his Health ſuffer'd by it. (q) Quo quidem munere (Oratoriam artem publicè docendi) duos annos ita perfunctus ſum, ut (ne quid arrogantius de me dicam) nemo diligentiam aut induſtriam meam deſideraverit. Quin potius ita noctes & dies in omnium doctrinarum meditatione verſabar, ut non tantum propinqui atque neceſſarii mei, ſed etiam multi ex vobis, P. C. me ſæpiſſime reprehenderent, quod nimios magnos labores & viribus meis impares aſſumere non dubitarem. Ardebam enim (ut ingenue fatear) incredibili gloriæ cupiditate, quam in adoleſcente nequaquam eſſe vituperandam ſapientes omnes exiſtimant. Nullum igitur omnino diem eſſe patiebar, in quo non aut publice docerem, aut private mecum ipſe meditarer, & vel ſcriberem, vel declamarem: frequenter autem eodem die hæc omnia faciebam.

(C) He Publiſhed ſome Pieces in which he gave himſelf the Name.] I can hardly reconcile his ſeveral Dates in which he pretends things to have been done. He ſays in his pleading (a), that being at Ferrara, he reſolv'd, by the Advice of his Friends, to Print ſome Treatiſes. Theſe were (b) ſome Harangues and the Apology of Cicero againſt Calcagninus. After they were Publiſh'd, he began to be known at Ferrara by the Name which he had prefix'd to them. Afterwards he return'd to Milan, and there reaſſum'd his firſt Profeſſion, notwithſtanding the bad Offices of his Enemies. Some time after he was accus'd of changing his Name, as will appear in the following Remark. This is not eaſily reconcil'd with the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Anſwer to the Cenſure of Calcagninus; it is dated the 8th of July 1543, and in it he ſpeaks of himſelf, as of one that peaceably perform'd the Duty of his Profeſſion. It is not therefore true, that this Book came out of the Preſs while the Author was at Ferrara, whither he had retir'd when the confuſions of War interrupted his publick Lectures at Milan. Another Remark is this; he was born (c) the 26th of October 1514, and he was made Profeſſor of Rhetorick when he was ſcarce (d) Twenty Six Years old, i. e. in 1540. He diſcharg'd this Office for two Years (e), and then went to Ferrara, and ſo he went thither in 1542. Now he was at Milan in July 1543, and it was then he Publiſh'd his Defence of Cicero againſt Calcagninus. He is miſtaken therefore when he ſays, that this Book appear'd while the War interrupted his Prælections, and before he quitted Ferrara to return to Milan. Let us proceed. He ſtudied the Civil Law at Ferrara, under Andreas Alciatus, who did not begin his Lectures there, until the Year 1543. Therefore Majoragius Publiſh'd a Lye, when he ſaid, that he was admitted Profeſſor at the Age of Twenty Six Years, and that at the end of two Years he went to Ferrara, where he heard the Lectures of Alciatus. In this he is miſtaken; but ſetting aſide this Lye, it will be eaſie to remove all the other Difficulties, and to reſtore the true Date of his Journey to Ferrara. Since the publick Lectures ceas'd upon the account of the Army (g) that was come from France into Piemont, this Interruption muſt be plac'd in 1544. The Duke of Enguien was ſent this Year into Italy with a Reinforcement of Troops, and gain'd the Battle of Cerizolles. Majoragius being quiet in his Houſe in the Month of July, in the preceding Year, had written the Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Treatiſe againſt Calcagninus; but before he put this Book into the Preſs, he was forc'd to go to Ferrara, and while he ſojourn'd there he Publiſh'd it. The ſame Date may be prov'd by ſome places of his Harangue, wherein Majoragius juſtifies himſelf as to the change of his Name. He obſerves that he was then Thirty Two Years of Age (h). He juſtified himſelf therefore in 1546. He obſerves that Andreas Alciatus had taught the Civil Law at Ferrara the laſt (i) Years. This is not inconſiſtent with the Year 1546. He obſerves that it was a Feat (k) ſince he was returned to Milan. He return'd therefore in the Year 1545. From whence we may conclude, that the interruption of his Lectures, and his ſtay at Ferrara laſted a Year, in which time he Publiſh'd ſome Harangues and the Apology for Cicero.

I have obſerv'd elſewhere (l) that the Learned are ſometimes careleſs in ſetting down the Dates of their Adventures. Here is one, who made himſelf younger than he was, when he enter'd upon publick Offices.

(D) A Proceſs upon the Name he had taken.] His Chriſtian Name was Antony, as was that of his Uncle by the Father's ſide (m). His Mother, by her particular Authority, joyn'd to it the Name of Maria, both upon the account of her Devotion for the Holy Virgin, and becauſe ſhe was pleas'd to hear that word. (n) Boni ominis gratia—— nomini meo Mariam addidit, ut ſanctiſſimum illud divinæ matris nomen, materna quadam pietate muliebrique religione mihi additum, gratiorem ex nomine meo ſonum atque amabiliorem ad ipſius matris aures apportaret. Eam enim ſæpiſſime commemini dicere, ſe Mariæ nomine mirandum in modum ſolitam eſſe recreari. And thus from the Cradle our Majoragius was call'd Antony Maria. His Father and his Neighbours call'd him by this Name; and by this Name he was known afterwards whereſoever he appear'd. It was therefore a ſurprize to ſee him call himſelf in the Title of his firſt Book Mark Antony, ſuppreſſing the true Name of the Holy Virgin which he had always bore. I wonder that this was not the principal Attack of his Accuſers, and that they did not endeavour to convict him of having done an injury to the Mother of the Son of God. The Cauſe was pleaded before the Senate of Milan with great Pomp. I do not know whether the pleading of his Accuſers (o) was made publick, but we have the Defence of the Accuſed among his Harangues. He juſtifies himſelf very eloquently, and cites a great many illuſtrious Examples of the liberty he took. He confeſs'd ſincerely the reaſon why he durſt not appear in publick under the Name of Antony Maria, was this, becauſe he was ſo ſcrupulous in the choice of Words, that he durſt not imploy any but what was to be found in the beſt Latin Authors. That there is no Example in the Roman Antiquity, where a Man was call'd Maria, and had at once a Maſculine and Femine Name. Upon which account he turn'd the Name Maria into Marcus, by lengthening out the laſt Syllable, and ſet it before Antony: For it had been an uſage unknown to ancient Rome, to call himſelf Antonius Marcus: He therefore not only lengthened out one of his Names, but alſo changed its Place. Since we have here an example of the Superſtitions of the Ciceronian Sect (p), we muſt relate the very words of this Author. (q) In verborum delectu, quod C. Cæſar eloquentiæ principium eſſe dicitabat, adeo diligens, & pene dixerim ſuperſtitioſus eram, ut nullum omnino verbum, nullam verborum conjunctionem, nullam dicendi formulam admittendam mihi eſſe cenſerem, quam non apud veteres Latinos atque probatos auctores inveniſſem. Id igitur in nomine meo præ cæteris ſervandum eſſe ſtatuebam, ne, cum Latinæ linguæ candorem & elegantiam profiterer, aliquis mihi barbarum nomen & inuſitatum aliquando poſſet objicere atque eo magis, quod mihi nullo modo convenire videbatur, ut mulcbre nomen cum virili conjungerem. Quis enim apud antiquos unquam talem nominis conjunctionem vel legit, vel audivit, ut quis à viro & muliere nominaretur? As to the Name Majoragius he prefer'd it to that of Comes, for the Reaſon I gave above (r). Thus inſtead of Antonius Maria Comes, by which Name he was call'd before he appeared as an Author, he call'd himſelf Marcus Antonius Majoragius, when he ſet up for one. I ſaid, that Majoragius had the Name of his Father, and that his Father was ſo called, becauſe he was born in the Village Majoragio, near to Milan. (ſ) Julianus Comes cum innocentia atque integritate vitæ, tum officii auctoritate ſui nominis facile Princeps, mi-

(a) Ibid. p. 198.

(b) Ibid. p. 200.

(c) Hankius, de rerum Roman. Scriptoribus. l. 1. p. 215.

(d) Majoragius ib. p. 198.

(e) Ibid

(f) Cum apud nos maxima eſſet belli ſuſpicio, quoniam ingentes Gallorum copiæ jam Alpes tranſcenderant, atque in Taurinis conſederant, omnes publici bonarum artium Profeſſores, ut ſit in ejuſmodi temporibus, dimiſſi ſunt, & ſtudia literarum intermiſſa Majorag. ib. p. 198.

(g) Hic eſt exactæ vitæ meæ curſus, P. C. hæc ſtudiorum meorum ratio; hoc duorum & triginta annorum, quibus hactenus vixi, ſpacium, Majoragius, ib. p. 201.

(h) Majorag. ib. p. 198.

(i) Ibid. p. 199.

(k) Ibid. p. 190. 213.

(l) In the Article Agrippa, Remark C.

(m) Hankius, de Romanarum rerum Scriptori l. 1. p. 213. is miſtaken when he ſays, In avi matterni memoriam . . . Antonius dictus eſt.

(n) Majorag. ib. p. 194. he ſays, p. 222. Cum præſertim Majoragii cognomentum haberem adhuc à patre hæreditarium.

(o) They were call'd Fabius Lupus, & Macrinus Niger.

(p) Majoragius was a moderate Ciceronian, he did not deſpiſe the terms which Cicero did not make uſe of provided they were in the Writers of ancient Rome. See the Remark towards the end.

(q) Majorag. ib. p. 194.

(r) In the Remark A.

[redacted] of [redacted] is [redacted] in he justifies the change of his Name.

Cause publickly and won it *. He continued to teach with great Application, which, without doubt, shorten'd his Life, for he liv'd only about forty Years and six Months. He died April the 4th 1555. Mr. Moreri has given (E) the Titles of some of his Books, and has committed (F) some little Faults. Thuanus (G) has also committed some.

Majoragius ought to be put in the (H) Catalogue of those who are accus'd of being Plagiaries.

MAJ[redacted]UNIANUS) a Neapolitan Gentleman who taught Philological Learning in Naples, towards the [redacted]end of the XVth Century †. Among other Scholars he had the famous (A) Sannazar. [redacted]e contributed much by his Lectures and Books to restore the Elegance (B) of

† See the Bibliotheca Neapoletana of Nicolo Toppi, p. 168.

* He names three Brethren, whom Defiderius Kerfti's Lombards, [redacted] Majoragius, promoted to the Dignity of a Count, and to whom he gave a great deal of Land.

fuit, P. C. qui cum Majoragium vicum habitaret, atque ita se comiter liberaliterque gereret, ut vicinis omnibus & charus haberetur; cognomen à loco sortitus est, & Majoragius appellatus. This Julian Majoragius having Married Magdalen le Comte, called himself Comes, in imitation of his Brothers in Law, who thought it improper to call themselves de Comite, or de Comitibus. Of this our Majoragius informs us. (a) Cum hoc locutionis genus à consuetudine Latini sermonis abhorreret; primo vir eruditissimus avunculus meus, qui permultos annos Med.olani magna cum gloria publice docuit, cum elegantiæ sermonis admodum studiosus esset, non amplius se de Comitibus, ut cæteri faciebant, sed Petrum Comitem capit inscribere.... Hunc imitati sunt ejus fratres Jacobus & Aloysius, atq; etiam pater meus Julianus, qui horum sororem Magdalenam, matrem meam in matrimonio habebat. Note, that Julian and his Wife (b) were descended from the same Ancestors.

(a) Ibid. p. 221.

(b) Idem Orat. 8. p. 141.

(E) Mr. Moreri has given the Titles of some of his Books.] He forgot the Harangues and Prefaces which have been Printed many times. I think that the First Edition was Printed at Venice in (c) 1582, by the care of John Peter Ayroldus Marcellinus. It contains twenty five Harangues, Fourteen Prefaces, and the Dialogue de Eloquentia. I make use of the Edition of Leipsick, illustrated with Marginal Notes by Valentin Hartungus, Professor in Physick. They durst never publish in Italy the (d) Harangue of Majoragius against the Covetousness of the Clergy. It is a very fine Piece, and as finely turn'd as can be. It was Publish'd at Utrecht in 1666, in 4°. from the M S. of Mr. Gudius. Mr. Morhof perceiving that the Copies of it grew scarce, caus'd it to be Re-printed, with the Discourse he made according to this Patern in 1692. These two Pieces are in the Collection of Harangues and Programs by Mr. Morhoff, Publish'd at Hamburg in 1698. You will find a very long Extract taken out of this Harangue of Majoragius in (e) Mr. Seckendorf's History of Lutheranism. Mr. Moreri ought to have explain'd a little better the occasion of the Quarrel of Majoragius, with Calcagninus, and Nizolius. The Quarrel with Calcaginnus was in defence of the Offices of Cicero, against which Calcagninus had publish'd 25 Disquisitions. Majoragius refuted them all by so many Decisions; which is the Title he gave to his Answers Publish'd in 1543. James Grisolus refuted also the Disquisitions of Calcagninus. These three Pieces, I mean the Censure of Calcagninus, and the Answers of Majoragius and Grisolus were Publish'd together in 8°. in the XVIth. Century. Mr Grævius has inserted all this in his excellent Edition of Cicero's Offices. Nizolius fell out with Majoragius through the Jealousie of his Profession: He came by the worst, because few Learned Men approved his being a riged Ciceronian. (f) Hunc Tullianæ elucubrationis genium cum inter cæteros ejus ætatis præferret etiam Marius Nizolius Brixellensis, orta est inter utrumque de primæ laudis acquisitione contentio. multa utrinque de primæ laudis acquisitione contentio. multa utrinque scripta, sive publicè objectantem, ac sua vicissim scripta carpentem: in quo tamen Nizolio adeò accrescens tulit eruditorum judicia, quod Jubacei & tetrica superstitionis, in tanta latinorum proceritate ne hirsutum quidem à Ciceronis formulis recedendum arbitraretur. Sua igitur non inepte tutatus placita Majoragius perdocte ac industrii ingenii nomen emeruit. We must not forget that Gaudentius Merula is to be reckon'd among the Adversaries of Majoragius, who accuses him of being a great Plagiary (g)

(c) Seckendorf, Hist. Luther, l. 3. p. 342. &c.

(f) Joh. Imperialis in Musæo Hist. p. 126.

(F) Mr. Moreri has committed some little Faults.] I. He should not have said, that Majoragius was a Native of a Castle of the same; for Majoragio was only a Village. If any one shall say, that this does not hinder but there might be a Castle in that Village, I will confess it; but then I will add, that Majoragius was not born in a Castle; and this I [redacted] from these words. (b) Amplectitur, [illegible]

(g) In Apologia, p. 28. apud Almeloveni in Plagiariorum syllabo p 27.

(b) Majoragius Orat 10. p. 220.

(i) illis natu maximus erat, Majoragium vicum extruxit, atque in eo turrim, cujus adhuc in domo mea paterna, post septingentos atque amplius annos, quædam exstant vestigia atque fundamenta; hæc rejici generis auctor fuit. Would Majoragius have talk'd thus of his paternal Seat, if it had been the Castle of the Place; add to this, that he confesses his Father was (k) very poor; but not that he was a Domestick of the Lord of the Village. II It was not he but his Father, who from the Village Majorago, where he dwelt, took the Name of Majoragius. See the Remark D. III 'Tis not true, that his Name was Mark Antony Maria. IV. Nor that he taught at Ferrara.

(k) Licet in tenuissimæ familiari versaretur re. Majoragius p. 230.

(G) Thuanus also has committed some Faults.] I. He should not say, that (l) Majoragius was called from his Name from a Town where his Father dwelt. I have already shown that his Father was call'd Majoragius. II. His Epitaph in the Nefasum of Imperialis says, that he taught for the space of fourteen Years; but in the Theatre of Ghilini, it says, that he taught only nine Years. Thuanus in Mr Teissier, makes the Professor's place of Majoragius to [redacted] at the end of eight Years, and supposes that he quitted it to apply himself entirely to the Study of Divinity. My Edition of Thuanus says, that Majoragius did not begin this Study till he had spent Thirteen Years in instructing Youth III He says in the same Mr Teissier, that Majoragius liv'd Forty two Years. The Latin Edition does not allow him but Forty, tho' the truth is, he did live Forty Years, and near Six Months.

(l) I make use of the same Edition that Mr Teissier also, Addit. to the Eloges, Tom. 2. p. 1. Lat. 1696. The Latins call it, A Majoragio vico in quo ejus pater, habitabat, ita vocatus [illegible] 1. 1. 6. (m) Natalis Comes, Mythol. l. 9. c. 5. p. 959.

(H) In the Catalogue of those who are accus'd of being Plagiaries.] Natalis Comes affirms, that he heard some Learn'd Florentines say, that Majoragius being indebted to Peter Victorius for his Illustrations upon Aristotle's Rhetorick, had not the Gratitude to own it, but adorn'd himself with stollen Goods. (m) Qui locus (Aristotelis in 3 libro Rhetoricorum) cum ante nostram ætatem legeretur depravatus, Petri Victorii patricii Florentini ac doctissimi clarissimi ingenio est integritati restitutus ut nobis, cum essem Florentiæ, multis rationibus probarim: quidam eximiæ integritatis & eruditionis, atque ut puto Vincentius Borgfma, vir omnium quos unquam novi, multiplici rerum cognitione præstantissimus. Hoc magnum scelus autoritate commotus non potui non summopere improbare M. Antonii cujusdam Majoragii nescio impudentiam ne appellem, an exquisitam ambitionem qui omnia explicationes propè Aristotelicæ artis ipsis Victorii scriptis acceptas, ut ex iisdem locis illustrissimus cognovi, ex hac emendatione elatus, mox alacer in Victorium ipsum non semel insultavit, & per hujus loci correctionem cæteros omnes clarissimos suæ ætatis reprehendit: atque in primis Hermolaum Barbarum virum præstantissimum.

(n) He had amongst other Scholars —— Sannazar.] This appears by the 7th. Elegy of the 2d Book of Sannazar, dedicated ad Jurianum Majum præceptorem. I shall cite hereafter a long Passage out of it

B To restore the Elegancy of the Latin Tongue.] This is the Commendation that Sabellicus gave him Subjacet his aliquis, says he, (n) haud omnino vulgaris Turtelorum Aretinum & Jurianum Parthenopæum. Uterque illi industria utrique sua, nec multum inter se diversa verborum utriusque linguæ copiam [illegible] Published a Book at Naples in 1476, de præstantia verborum, which was Re-printed in the same City in 149[redacted]. The Second Edition is full (o) of Faults occasion'd by the negligence of the Printer: but he praises very much the Printer of the first The words he uses will please the curious; for they acquaint us with the Name of him who first began to practice Printing in that Country. (p) Addit ad hæc quod Germani solerti ac incredibili quodam ingenio usque novam quandam impressionis rationem invenerint, præsertim Matthias Moravus cujus nomen ingens & immortalis elegantia in hac scientia effecit [illegible] Impressorio Blasii Moravi Ramensis

(n) Nicolo Toppi Bibl. Napoletana p 168

(p) Janus Majus, Epistola dedicatoria ad Pagem Ferdinandum, apud Nicodemum Addizioni alla Biblioteca Napoletana di Nicolo Toppi p 144

of the Latine Tongue, but he diſtinguiſh'd himſelf much more by expounding Dreams (C). He was the great Onirocritick of his Age; and People flock'd to him from all Parts, to know what ſuch and ſuch Dreams preſag'd. Many pretended that his Anſwers to them were very uſeful. This is not unworthy (D) of Reflection.

MAKOWSKI

(1) L. de divinat. c. 24. & l. de inſomniis per decem capita. (2) De quo Alex. ab Alexan. l. 1. c. 11.

merii viri ſacris literis inſtituti ac ſanctis moribus probati, hac noſtra urbe excepiſſe gratulamur, &c. Some believe that Volaterran ſpeaks of our Majus in the words which follow: (q) Chalcidius Græcorum non erat ignarus, nec imperitus Grammaticus, attamen infans & abſque genio. Dictionibus in primis invigilabat, lexiconque condiderat quod obitu ipſius ſuperveniente Jovinianus ejus diſcipulus ſibi vindicavit. This Chalcidius taught at Rome. Majus would deſerve a place among the Plagiaries, if Volaterran ſpoke of him. On the other ſide, Calepin learn'd much from the Book of Majus, as Toppi remarks. (r) Dicde alla luce un libro della proprietà delle parole antiche, del quale ſe n'è ſervito Ambroſio Calepino aſſai bene.

(q) Volaterranus, l. 21. p m 776.

(r) Nicolo Toppi ubi ſupra.

(C) By expounding Dreams.] Alexander ab Alexandro, who had been his Scholar, ſays wonderful things of his knowledge in theſe Matters. Every Morning the Houſe of Majus was full of People, who came to tell him their Dreams, that they might learn from him the Interpretation of them; and among them there were ſome Perſons of Quality. He anſwer'd them not as the greateſt part of others do, in dark Speeches, and a few Words, but clearly and largely. Many Perſons by following his Advice, ſecur'd themſelves from Death, and prevented ſometimes very great Troubles. We may ſee this ſet forth at large if we conſult the Latin of Alexander ab Alexandro. Junianus Majus, ſays he, (a), conterraneus meus, vir bene literatus, in exquirendo adnotandiſque verborum & ſententiarum viribus, multi ſtudii fuit: & præterquam quod in erudiendis juvenculorum animis, imbuendiſque doctrina pueris, caſtigatiſſimæ diſciplinæ, ſomniorum quoque omnis generis ita verus conjector fuit, ut ipſius reſponſa, divina fere monita haberentur. Ad eum meminî, cum puer adhuc eſſem, & ad capiendum ingenii cultum frequens apud eum ventitarem, quotidie ſomniantium turbam, hominesque celebri fama & multi nominis, de ſomniis conſultum veniſſe. Declarabat definiebatque ille, non breviter aut ſubobſcure, ut plerique, ſed expoſite atque aperte ænigmata ſomniorum, ſive boni, ſive mali prænuncia: ita apte, ut judicium factum à veridico diceres. Multi quoque illius monitu, vitæ interitum, nonnunquam animi ægritudines vitarunt. Sannazar, another Scholar of this Interpreter of Dreams, found it happy both for himſelf and for his Miſtreſs, that he had recourſe to ſuch an Oracle. He extols him to the Skies, and prefers him before all the Augurs. Let us remember that he writes like a Poet; and therefore there is no neceſſity that we ſhould give credit to his words without making ſome abatement. However let us hear what he ſays.

(a) Alexander ab Alexandro Geniald. dierum l. 1. c. 11. p. 81. 82.

At (b) tibi venturos, Mai, prædicere caſus
Fas eſt, & nitet conſuluiſſe Deos.
Nec tantum aut aeræ fumos, aut nuntia ſentis
Fulgura, ſed Stygia ſomnia miſſa loco,
Somnia quæ miſeram perturbant ſæpe quietem,
Dum mens incerta pendet imaginibus.
O quoties per te vanum poſuiſſe timorem
Me memini, & lætos continuaſſe dies.
O quoties, trepidus cum non ſpernenda putarem,
In noſtrum cavi damna futura caput.
Sæpe meæ tibi cum narraſſem viſa puellæ,
Dixiſti, certos haud procul eſſe metus.
Sæpe illam madidos luſtrare in flumine crines
Juſſiſti, & miſto ſolvere ſava ſale.
Quod ſi olim terris talem te fata dediſſent,
Sprevi ſſet Teutſcos Martia Roma viros.
Nam ſi quis melius calidas deprendere fibras,
Conſulere aeriæ aut potuiſſet aves?
Ille triumphatum &c.

(b) Sannazar. eleg. 7. l. 2. p 96. edit. Amſtel 1689.

Martin del Rio, who is otherwiſe ſo credulous and ſo little wont to reject fooliſh Fancies, ſpeaks of Majus in another tone, and treats him with the laſt degree of Contempt. (c) Cæterorum onirocriticorum veterum, non magna reipub. jactura omnes libri interierunt, præter unum Artemidorum Daldianum, delirum ſanè, aut libros quinque cuncta ab aliis tradita complexum. Brevior eſt Aſtrampſychus Græcè & Latinè in lucem editus: ſed æque nugax ut & alius ille Arabs, qui Græcè barbarizans una cum Artemidoro in lucem prodiit in Gallia. Hodiè in pretio habent Apomaſaris Arabica Apoteleſmata, ex recentioribus Contra. Wimpina, vellem ne tam multa ſine antidoto congeſſiſſet (1). Avorum quoque memoria, hanc in Italia vaniſſimè profitebatur artem Junianus Majus (2): cujus extant epiſtolæ & libelli quidam Grammatici.

(c) Mart. Del Rio Diſquiſit. Magicar. l 4. c. 3. quæſt. 6. p. m. 278.

(D) This is not unworthy of Reflection.] It were to be wiſh'd for the welfare and eaſe of an infinite number of People, that Dreams had never been mention'd as a thing that fore-tells future Events; for thoſe People who are once poſſeſs'd with this Fancy, imagine, that the greateſt part of the Images that paſs through their Minds in their Sleep, are ſo many Predictions which very often threaten them with future Evils: From whence ariſe a Thouſand uneaſie Thoughts; and where there is one Man that is not ſubject to this Weakneſs, there are a Thouſand that are not able to free themſelves from it. I think we may ſay of Dreams the ſame almoſt as of Inchantments, that they are far leſs myſterious than People believe, and ſomewhat more than the Unbelievers Fancy. The Hiſtories of all Times and Places relate, both with reſpect to Dreams and Magick, ſo many ſurpriſing things, that thoſe who obſtinately deny them all, render themſelves ſuſpected either of want of Sincerity or Judgment to diſcern the force of the Proofs. A violent Prejudice, or a certain turn of the Mind, blinds their Underſtanding, when they compare the Reaſons Pro and Con. I have known ſome Men of Parts who deny'd all preſages from Dreams upon this Principle, viz. None but God, ſaid they, knows things to come, i. e. ſuch as are call'd Contingent: But Dreams are ſuppos'd to be Preſages, which moſt times foretel contingent Futurities; God therefore muſt be the Author of thoſe Dreams, and then he muſt produce them by a Miracle, and ſo in all the Countries of the World, he muſt work an infinite number of Miracles, which are no wiſe agreeable to the Character either of his infinite Greatneſs or Sovereign Wiſdom. Theſe Gentlemen urge very much, that the moſt myſtical Dreams are as common among Pagans and Mahometans, as among the followers of the true Religion. In effect, read Plutarch, and the other Greek and Roman Hiſtorians; read the Books of Arabians and Chineſe, and you will find in them as many Examples of miraculous Dreams as in the Bible, or in Chriſtian Hiſtories. It muſt be confeſs'd that this Objection is of great force, and ſeems to bring us neceſſarily to another Syſtem, viz. That which attributes theſe ſort of Dreams, not to God as the immediate Cauſe, but to certain Intelligences, who under the Direction of God, have a great ſhare in the Government of Man. It may be ſuppos'd, according to the Doctrine of occaſional Cauſes, that there are general Laws which ſubject a great number of Effects to the Deſires of ſuch and ſuch Intelligences, as there are general Laws, which ſubject to the Deſires of Men the motion of certain Bodies. This Suppoſition is not only agreeable to an Opinion which was very common among the Pagans, but alſo to the Doctrine of the Scripture, and to that of the ancient Fathers (d). The Pagans acknowledg'd many inferior Gods, who preſided over particular Things, and they pretended alſo, that each Man has a Genius that governs him. The Roman Catholicks pretend, that the Doctrine of an Angel-Guardian, and of an Angel that preſides over a whole Country, a City, or a Province, is founded upon the Scripture. If you once lay it down for a Truth, that God has thought fit to appoint certain Spirits as the occaſional Cauſe of Man's Conduct, with reſpect to certain Events, then all the Difficulties that are objected againſt Dreams vaniſh away. We muſt no more wonder, that we do not find a Character of Greatneſs or Gravity (e) in the Images, which advertiſe us in Dreams. Tho' they be confus'd or childiſh, and tho' they vary according to Times and Places, and according to the Temper of Mens Bodies, this ought not to ſurprize thoſe who know the narrow bounds of Creatures, and the Obſtacles which occaſional Cauſes, of different kinds, muſt needs reciprocally raiſe againſt one another? Do not we find

A REFLECTION on Dreams.

(d) According to the Theology of St. Auſtin which includes, as F. Thomaſin teaches, the ancient Tradition of all Men, nothing is done in the World but by Angels or by Demons, or by the Sentiments which God imprints in the Minds of Men. Arnaud againſt the Syſtem of Malebr. t. 1 p. 191

(e) There are ſome Dreams that are meer Reveries of Picardy, like that which Brantome ſpeaks of, which foretold to Margaret of Auſtria, being deſign'd to marry Charles VIII. that Anne of Bretagne ſhould take from her the Crown of France She dreamed, that as ſhe was walking in a Garden, an Aſs came to her and took away the Noſegay ſhe held in her Hand.

MACOWSKI (John) in Latin Maccovius, a Poliſh Gentlemam, and Profeſſor of Divinity at Franeker, was Born at Lobzenic in the Year 1588. He began his Studies ſomewhat late, but he repair'd this ſlowneſs by his great Application and natural Sharpneſs of Wit. He ſtudied Latin, and his Courſe of Philoſophy at Dantzick, under the famous Keckerman; and he improv'd himſelf ſo conſiderably, that he glorioufly excell'd his School-Fellows, and particularly in Diſpute; and when he return'd to his Father's Houſe, he was made Governor to ſome young Gentlemen*. He Travell'd with them, and find by Experience every Day, that our Soul and our Body do mutually hinder one another in thoſe Operations that are peculiar to them? An Intelligence that ſhould act both upon our Body and our Mind, muſt needs find divers Obſtacles in the Laws, which eſtabliſh theſe two Principles (f), as the occaſional Cauſe of certain Effects. But whence comes it, may ſome ask, that theſe inviſible Genii do not make uſe of a fitter Time? Why do they not advertiſe Men of Things future while they are awake? Why do they wait till they are aſleep? (g) Illud etiam requiro, cur, ſi deus iſta viſa nobis providendi cauſa dat, non vigilantibus potius dormientibus? Sive enim externus, & adventitius pulſus animos dormientium commovet, ſive per ſe ipſi animi moventur, ſive quæ cauſa alia eſt, cur ſecundum quietem aliquid videre, audire, agere videamur, eadem cauſa vigilantibus eſſe poterat: idque ſi noſtra cauſa dii ſecundum quietem facerent, vigilantibus idem facerent; præſertim cùm Chryſippus, Academicos refellens, permulta clariora, & certiora eſſe dicat, quæ vigilantibus videantur, quam quæ somnientibus. Fuit igitur divina beneficentia dignius, cùm conſuleret nobis, clariora viſa dare vigilantibus, quàm obſcuriora per ſomnium: quod quoniam non fit, ſomnia divina putanda non ſunt. Jam vero quid opus eſt circuitione, & amfractu, ut ſit utendum interpretibus ſomniorum potius, quam directo? Deus ſi quidem nobis conſulebat. Hoc facito, Hoc ne feceris, diceret? idque viſum vigilanti potius, quàm dormienti daret? Why do they communicate their Predictions to People of weak Minds, rather than to thoſe of ſtronger Heads? 'Tis eaſily anſwer'd, that thoſe who wake are not proper to be thus advertiſed; for then they conſider themſelves as the Cauſe, of every thing that preſents its ſelf to their Imagination, and clearly diſtinguiſh between what they imagine, and what they ſee. But when they are aſleep, they put no difference between their Imaginations and Senſations; all the Objects which they fancy appear to them to be preſent, and they cannot retain exactly the coherence of their Images: And ſo they cannot perſuade themſelves, that they are connected one with another by themſelves; from whence they conclude, that ſome of them proceed from other Cauſes, and were inſpir'd into them by ſome Spirit that would advertiſe them of ſomething. Can it be deny'd that an Engine is more fit to play when ſome of its parts are at reſt, than when they are not? Let us ſay the ſame of our Brain. 'Tis more eaſie to direct in it certain motions for exciting preſaging Imaginations, when the Eyes, and other external Senſes, are lock'd up, than when they are in Action. Do we know how the effects of Sickneſs or Madneſs make things more eaſie to the Authors of Dreams? Can we doubt but the Laws of Motion, according to which our Organs are mov'd, and which are only to a certain degree ſubject to the deſires of created Spirits, do trouble and confound the Images, which the Author of a Dream would render more diſtinct? Cicero ſeems to triumph upon pretence that theſe Images are obſcure and intricate (h) Jam vero quid opus eſt circuitione, & amfractu, ut ſit utendum interpretibus ſomniorum potius, quam directo?——(i) Venit in contentionem, ſit probabile.ne, deoſne immortales, rerum omnium præſtantia excellentes, concurſare omnium mortalium, qui ubique ſunt, non modo lectos, verum etiam gravatos, & cum ſtertentes aliquos viderunt, objicere his quædam tortuoſa, & obſcura, quæ illi exſtergefacti ſomnio ad conjectorem manè deferant. an natura fieri, ut mobiliter animus agitatus, quod vigilans viderit, dormiens videre videatur. But to this it may be anſwer'd, that every Creature is limited and imperfect: There may therefore be Irregularities, and even ſome Oddneſs, according to our way of judging, in the Effects which are directed by the Deſires of a created Spirit. This may ſerve us for an Anſwer to ſome Objections, which the Wits alſo make to thoſe who talk to them about the exiſtence of Magick. In fine, I ſay, that the knowledge of things future is not ſo great as is imagin'd, in ſuppoſing that there are Dreams of Divination. For if we examine the common Relations and popular Tradition, moſt of theſe Dreams inform us only of ſuch things as happen in other Countries, or ſuch as quickly come to paſs. A Man Dreams of the Death of a Friend or a Relation, and 'tis found, ſay they, that this Friend or Relation died 50 Leagues off at the time of this Dream. To reveal ſuch a Thing as this, does not imply the knowledge of things to come. Others Dream of I know not what, that threatens them with ſome Misfortune, as with Death if you pleaſe. The Genius, who is the Author of this Dream, may know the Plots and Devices which are framing againſt them; it may ſee in the State of the Blood, a near Diſpoſition to an Apoplexy, a Pleuriſy, or ſome other mortal Diſeaſe. But this is not to know things future which are call'd contingent. But ſome may ſay, there are private Perſons who have Dream'd that they ſhould Reign, and they did not Reign till 20 or 30 Years after. I anſwer that their Genius being of a very high Order, Active and Wiſe, had a mind to promote them to a Throne, he (d) was reſolv'd to take hold of every opportunity, and did not doubt of a good Succeſs, and from theſe conjectures, which were almoſt certain, he imparted the Dream. Men would do as much proportionably to their Ability.

* They were called Sieninski.

I do not produce theſe things for Proofs, or ſtrong Reaſons, but only as Anſwers to the Difficulties which are propos'd againſt the common Opinion: And it muſt alſo be conſider'd that I confine my ſelf within the Bounds of natural Light; for I ſuppoſe the Diſputants would not make uſe of the Authority of Scripture. I deſire alſo that it may be obſerv'd, that thoſe who maintain there are Dreams of Divination, need do no more, but Enervate the Objections of their Adverſaries; for they have an infinite number of Facts to alledge for their Opinion, and ſo have thoſe alſo who maintain that there is ſuch a thing as Magick. And this being ſo, it is ſufficient for them that they can anſwer Objections; but it belongs to them who deny theſe Facts, to prove that they are impoſſible, and without this they will never win the Cauſe. I ought alſo to take notice that I do not pretend to excuſe the Ancient Pagans, either as to the care they took to relate ſo many Dreams in their Hiſtories, or as to the Proceedings that were conſequent upon certain Dreams. Sometimes they had no other Foundation for (e) appointing certain Ceremonies, or for condemning the accuſed. (f) Quum ex æde Herculis patera aurea gravis ſurrepta eſſet, in ſomnis vidit (Sophocles) ipſum deum dicentem, qui id ſeciſſet. Quod ſemel ille, iterumque neglexit, ubi idem ſæpius, aſcendit in Areopagum: detulit rem. Areopagitæ comprehendi jubent eum, qui a Sophocle erat nominatus. Is, quæſtione adhibita, confeſſus eſt, pateramque retulit. Quo facto, ſanum illud Indicis Herculis nominatum eſt. One may juſtly laugh at the Weakneſs of Auguſtus (g), and much more at the Law (h), which enjoyn'd all private Perſons in certain Countries, who had dream'd any thing concerning the Republick, to declare it openly, either by ſetting up a publick Advertiſement, or by a Cryer, and excepting ſome particular Dreams, we may ſay of all the reſt what we read in Petronius: (i) Hinc ſatis Epicurum hominem eſſe divinum, qui ejuſmodi ludibria facetiſſimâ ratione condemnat.

Somnia, quæ mentes ludunt volitantibus umbris.
Non delubra Deum, nec ab æthere numina mittunt;
Sed ſibi quiſque facit. Nam cum proſtrata ſopore
Urget membra quies, & mens ſine pondere ludit.
Quidquid luce fecit, tenebris agit. Oppida bello
Qui quatit, & flammis miſerandas ſævit in urbes, &c.

And I continue in the ſame Opinion which I have declar'd elſewhere (k), that there is no employment (f) viz. the humane Body and the humane Soul.

(g) Cicero de divinat. l. 2. fol. m. 332. A.

(h) Cicero ubi ſupra.

(i) Id ib.

(d) See the Remark D. in the Article of the Cimmes.

(e) See Cicero de divinat l. 1 fol m. 311. A

(f) Id. ib fol. 308 B

(g) Somnia neque ſua neque aliena de ſe negligebat Sueton in Auguſto, c. 91

(h) See Caſaubon upon Suetonius in Aug c. 91 who cites Artemidorus, l. 1 c. 2

(i) Petronius, p. 178 edit Roterod 1693

(k) In the Article Artemidorus, Remark B &c.

and upon all occaſions improv'd his Talent of Diſputing (A) as well againſt the Jeſuites as the Socinians. He ſaw the moſt flouriſhing Academies of Germany, viz. of Prague, Heidelberg, Marpurg, Leipſick, Wittemberg, and Jena, and then he came to Franeker, where he took the Degree of Dr. of Divinity, March the 8th 1614. He gave ſo great Proofs of his Wit and Learning, that the Curators of the Academy reſolv'd to detain him, and for that end they made him Profeſſor extraordinary of Divinity, April the firſt 1615, and Profeſſor in ordinary the next Year. He diſcharg'd the Office for almoſt Thirty Years, i. e. until his Death, which happen'd towards the end † of the Month of June, 1644. He Married three Wives, whoſe Families may be ſeen, if any one deſires it, in the Funeral Oration, which furniſh'd me with this Article. Cocceius his Collegue, who ſpoke it, informs us, that Maccovius maintain'd, with great Zeal, and even with too much heat, the Good Cauſe againſt the Arminians, which was to him a Source of bitter Misfortunes (B): Theſe are the common Conſequences of this kind of Temper. He had ſome Affairs (C) in the Synod of Dort. We ſhall hereafter ſhow the Titles of the greateſt

(†) The Diarium biographicum of the Sieur Witte places it on the 24*th of* July, which cannot be, ſince the Funeral Oration was ſpoken the 2*d. of* July. Maccovius was dead eight Days before, die Lunæ ante octiduum, ſays, Cocceius in the Funeral Oration of Maccovius ment more frivolous and ridiculous than that of the Onirocriticks. If we would compare, with what happens to us, an infinite number of Imaginations that ariſe in our Minds, when being awake we abandon our ſelves to all the Objects that offer themſelves, we might find in them as much relation to our Adventures, as in any Dreams, which we look upon as Preſages But ſome will ſay, we do not only ſee in a Dream the Objects, but we hear them tell ſuch things, as we never heard when we were awake, and conſequently whereof we could have no Footſtep in the Brain. We believe ſometimes that we ſee in a Dream a new Book, which we had never heard of before, and we read the Title, Preface, and a hundred other Things in it. This reaſon is of no Force Don't we do all this while we are awake? Do not we repreſent to our ſelves ſuch an one, and ſuch another, who tell us a hundred Things, which we our ſelves do frame? Cannot we imagine, if we pleaſe, that ſuch a one has juſt now publiſh'd ſuch a Book, which contains ſuch and ſuch Things? And ſo this pretended great Reaſon is of no Weight; but I believe at the ſame time, that we cannot doubt of certain Dreams which are mentioned by Authors, neither can we explain them by natural Cauſes, I mean without acknowledging an Inſpiration or a Revelation of them. See Valerius Maximus (l), and the Letters of Grotius (m). As to the Objections of Cicero, which are indeed very ſtrong, and almoſt unanſwerable, they are of no ſtrength but upon the Suppoſition that God himſelf (n) is the immediate Author of our Dreams. Primum igitur, ſays he, (o) intelligendum eſt, nullam vim eſſe divinam effectricem ſomniorum. Atque illud quidem perſpicuum eſt, nulla viſa ſomniorum proficiſci à numine deorum. Noſtra enim cauſa dii id facerent, ut providere futura poſſemus. Quotus igitur eſt quiſque, qui ſomniis pareat? qui intelligat? qui meminerit? quàm multi vero, qui contemnant; eamque ſuperſtitionem imbecilli animi, atque anilis putent? Quid eſt igitur, cur his hominibus conſulat deus, ſomniis moneat eos, qui illa non modo cura, ſed ne memoria quidem digna ducant? nec enim ignorare deus poteſt, qua mente quiſque ſit: nec fruſtrà, ac ſine cauſa quid faceret, dignum deo eſt: quod abhorret etiam ab hominis conſtantia. Ita ſi pleraque ſomnia aut ignorantur, aut negliguntur; aut neſcit hoc deus, aut fruſtra ſomniorum ſignificationem tuitur. Sed horum neutrum in deum cadit. Nihil igitur à deo ſomniis ſignificari fatendum eſt This is his firſt Reaſon. We have already ſeen the ſecond above. Here follows the third. (q) Jam verò quis dicere audeat, vera omnia eſſe ſomnia? Aliquot ſomnia vera, ſays Ennius, ſed omnia non eſt neceſſe. Quæ eſt tandem iſta diſtinctio? quæ vera, quæ falſa habet? & ſi vera à deo mittuntur, falſa unde naſcuntur? nam ſi ea quoque divina, quid inconſtantius deo? quid inſcitius autem eſt, quàm mentes mortalium falſis, & mendacibus viſis concitare? ſin vera viſa divina ſunt: falſa autem, & inania, humana: quæ eſt iſta deſignandi licentia, ut hoc deus, hoc natura fecerit potius, quàm aut omnia deus, aut nihil, aut omnia natura? He propoſes a fourth, founded upon the Obſcurity of Dreams, which has been already conſider'd; but let us conſider it a little better. There is no body, ſays he, who has ſufficient capacity to expound Dreams aright; if therefore the Gods ſpeak to us in this way, they will be like the Carthaginians, who ſhould harangue the Senate of Rome in their own Language, and bring no Interpreter with them. (b) Videtigitur, ne etiam ſi divinationem tibi eſſe conceſſero, quod numquam faciam, neminem tamen divinum reperire poſſimus. Qualis autem iſta mens eſt deorum, ſi neque ea nobis ſignificant in ſomniis, quæ ipſi per nos intelligamus: neque ea, quorum interpretes habere poſſimus? ſimiles enim ſunt dii, ſi ea nobis objiciunt, quorum nec ſcientiam, neque explanatorem habeamus, tanquam ſi Parni, aut Hiſpani in ſenatu noſtro loquerentur ſine interprete. Jam verò quò pertinent obſcuritates, & ænigmata ſomniorum? intelligi enim à nobis dii velle debebant ea, quæ noſtra cauſa nos monerent.

(A) He improv'd his Talent of Diſputing.] At Prague he attack'd the Jeſuits in one Diſpute; at Lublin he entred the Liſts with the Socinians; and when he was at Heidelberg he went to Spire on purpoſe to Diſpute with the Jeſuits, in the room of Bertholomew Coppenius, whom they had Chalenng'd to a Combate, and who could never obtain leave of the Elector Palatine to appear there (c).

(B) Which was to him a Source of bitter Misfortunes.] Cocceius (d) having ſaid that Maccovius was not a Dog that could not bark during the Troubles of the Church, but that he fought valiantly for the Truth of Grace, adds, "That theſe ſort "of Wars being wont to produce evil Suſpicions, "Enmities and Diſcords, upon the Account of "humane Infirmity; we muſt not think it "ſtrange that the Infirmity of the Fleſh made "Maccovius drink deep of this bitter Cup. Hot "Spirits, adds he, have this Fault, that altho' "they defend a good Cauſe, they appear ſome-"times to be tranſported with Paſſion. It hap-"pens to them as to good Dogs (ſuffer me ſo "far to enlarge a Compariſon borrow'd from "Scripture) who while they keep their Ma-"ſter's Houſe, Bark againſt all Strangers, tho' "they may be the greateſt Friends of the Houſe. "Thus the Defenders of the Truth, whom the "Prophet Iſaiah commands to bark aloud, (as being "the great Dogs that keep the Flock) while they "are employ'd againſt the Enemy, and think of "nothing but the Combat, are often ſo heedleſs "in what they do, that they do very inde-"cently uſe harſh and bitter words againſt the "Innocent". After this he makes uſe of the Compariſon of Mariners, who in a violent Storm Murmur and Complain of one another, tho' the general aim of them all is to ſave the Veſſel. This was ſufficient to declare what was the Fate of Maccovius. He had raſhly laid about the Heterodox, and Orthodox, and at laſt he in his turn was ſtruck at by both of them. Theſe are the Fruits of Diſputing: Stout Dogs fanſie they ſee every where the Wolf, as often as they meet with any one that does not agree with them in all their Hypotheſes; and if they find a Brother who departs from them, they leave the Common Enemy, and run upon that Fellow-worker, as upon a Traytor (g). They tell them their own; hinc illæ lacrymæ! Conſider theſe Words of one of the Fathers of the Synod of Dort. (h) Qui revera primo quoque auditu videbantur, exceptis uno aut altero, non fuiſſe tanti momenti, ut homo doctus de illis coram Synodo accuſaretur: complurimi ipſorum evant ex iſta receptiſſima diſtinctione agentis phyſice & moraliter ab accuſatore male intellecta

(C) He had ſome Affairs in the Synod of Dort.] They read in the hundred thirty Eight Seſſion, the Petition

(b) Cicero, ibid. B.

(c) Taken from Coccejus, Orat. funeb. Maccovii.

(d) Ibid.

(f) cap. 56.

(g) That it might appear that I do not enlarge upon the Thoughts of Cocceius, I would have plac'd them here in Latin, but I could not find again the Funeral Oration.

(h) G. Balcanqualius apud epiſt. Eccleſ. & Theolog. p. 73 col. 1 edit. in fol. 1684.

(l) Valer Maximus lib 1 c 7.

(m) Grotius epiſt 405 part. 2

(n) It was the ſuppoſition of the Stoicks, whence it comes to paſs that Cotta in Cicero de nat Deor. l 3. ſub fin. ſpeaks thus to them, Quomodo idem dicitis non omnia Deos perſequi, idem vultis à Dijs immortalibus hominibus diſpartiri ac dividi ſomnia?

(o) Cicero de divinat ubi ſupra, fol. 321. D

(q) Cicero, ibid. fol. 322. A.

greateſt Part (D) of his printed Writings. I paſs over thoſe which were found among his Papers and were never publiſh'd. He was accus'd (Da) of Plagiariſm.

MALDONAT (JOHN) a Prieſt of Burgos in Caſtile flouriſh'd about the Year 1550. He wrote good Latin, and publiſh'd a piece to recommend the Study of Polite Learning, præneſin ad litteras politiores. His Abridgment of the Lives of the Saints was printed many times *. We ſhall ſee (Z) whether he had reaſon to boaſt ſo much of his Correction of the Brevary.

* Taken from Andrew Schottus Bibl. Hiſp. pag. 350. 351.

MAL-

Petition which he preſented to the Aſſembly; he complain'd of being accus'd of Hereſy before the States of Frizeland, by his Collegue Sibrandus Lubbertus, and he moſt humbly pray'd the Synod that they would determine this Difference, or permit the accuſer and himſelf to chooſe Commiſſioners in this Aſſembly, who ſhould inform themſelves of the Matter of Fact, and give an Account of it to this Aſſembly. Lubbertus being ask'd about this Matter, deny'd that he had accus'd him, and maintain'd that he was only the Mouth of the Claſſis of Franeker, who were the true accuſers of Maccovius, and ſo he would not own himſelf for a Party in this Suit. It was order'd that the Acts ſhould be read, that were come from Frizeland about this Affair. They were read in the hundred and fortieth Seſſion, and there were found in them fifty Errors, whereof Maccovius was accus'd, which (i) appear'd all of them to be of ſmall importance, and were founded upon the bad Senſe which the Accuſer put upon the Words of the Accuſed. Two Apologies of Maccovius were read, and ſome Deputies that were Foreigners ſaid, that the whole Accuſation might have been reduc'd to four Heads, and that the Crime of Hereſy, imputed to Maccovius, did no wiſe appear. Quidam ex Exteris Theologis dicebant, potuiſſe illos quinquaginta errores, ad quinque vel etiam quatuor reduci; nec ullum crimen hæreſeos, ſicut objectum fuerat, in illis deprehendi (k). When Lubbertus gave his Opinion, he broke out into a great Heat againſt one of the Members of the Aſſembly, and produc'd a new Liſt of the Errors of Maccovius. He was anſwer'd, that they had heard from Perſons worthy of Credit, that tho he would not be a Party, yet it was he that had extracted from the Theſes and Lectures of Maccovius, the Propoſitions that were pretended to be Erroneous. He was very angry, and ſwore twice that this was not true. (l) Quod ut audiebat D. Sibrandus, vehementiſſime commotus, his Deum vindicem in animam ſuam precabatur ſi iſthæc vera eſſent; adeo ut D. Præſes eum ſæpius modeſtiæ ſanctæ, & reverentiæ Synodo debitæ juſſerit meminiſſe. In the hundred and forty ſecond Seſſion it was thought convenient not to read before the Synod the third Apology of Maccovius, becauſe it contain'd many Perſonal Matters againſt Lubbertus. It was not read but in a particular Committee, whereof Scultetus (m) would be one, altho' he was very unfit to be a Judge, ſince the Divines of Heidelberg had already declar'd, that they Condemn'd the accus'd Party. Certe Exteri mirabantur D. Scultetum nominatum fuiſſe a Provincialibus; & multo magis, D. Scultetum id munus velle ſubire, cum facultas Theologica Heidelbergenſis, cujus ipſe pars eſſet, theſes illas, quæ examinandæ ſunt, jam hactenus tanquam otioſas, metaphyſicas, & falſas damnaverit (n). The Judgment of the Commiſſioners was, that Maccovius had been falſely Accuſed, and that he was neither guilty of Paganiſm nor Judaiſm, nor Pelagianiſm, nor Socinianiſm, nor of any other Hereſy; but that he ought not to have made uſe of Obſcure and Ambiguous Phraſes, borrow'd from the Schoolmen, nor to have deny'd certain Propoſitions. They may be ſeen in the Latin, which I ſhall now ſet down. By this means it will appear that he was a Supralapſarian, and that he expreſs'd himſelf harſhly about thoſe Doctrines, wherein he ſhould have ſtudied to pleaſe nice Ears. (a) Legitur judicium deputatorum a Synodo in cauſa Maccoviana: cujus ſumma hæc erat; D. Maccovium nullius gentiliſmi, Judaiſmi, Pelagianiſmi, Socinianiſmi, aut alterius cujuſcunque hæreſeos reum teneri, immeritoque illum fuiſſe accuſatum, peccaſſe eum, quod quibuſdam ambiguis, & obſcuris phraſibus ſcholaſticis uſus ſit; quod ſcholaſticum docendi modum conetur in Belgicis Academiis introducere; quod eas ſelegerit quæſtiones diſceptandas, quibus gravantur Eccleſiæ Belgicæ: Monendum eſſe cum, ut cum Spiritu Sancto loquatur, non cum Bellarmino aut Suarezio: hoc unum vertendum ipſi, quod diſi nullam ſufficientiæ & efficientiæ mortis Chriſti aſſereret eſſe fructum; quod negaverit humanum genus lapſum eſſe objectum prædeſtinationis; quod dixerit Deum velle, & decernere peccata; quod dixerit Deum nullo modo velle omnium hominum ſalutem; quod dixerit duas eſſe electiones. Judicant denique, Titulum hanc inter D. Sibrandum, & D. Maccovium componendum eſſe, & deinceps, neminem debere cum talium errorum inſimulare. The Synod (b) approv'd the Judgment of the Commiſſioners, and this was the Iſſue of that Suit. There was a Deputy of Frizeland, who deſired that they ſhould proceed againſt the Accuſers, and offer'd to prove by authentical Writings, that Lubbertus had orders to be his Accuſer. This motion made ſuch a buſtle in the Synod, that the political Deputies were forc'd to knock with a Hammer to command ſilence. (c) Communi conſilio earum nomine coram Synodo proteſtor, ſalvo jure ut agant contra accuſatores; partes autem accuſatorias domino Sibrando eſſe demandatas, conſtare ex literis quotquot publicis, quas è ſinu depromſit, ac coram Synodo lectas poſtulavit: increbreſcenti hac in expoſitulatione plausu ſervori, ac multiloquio, modum imponunt Delegati politici malleo ſuo, quo mos eſt ſilentium obſtrepentibus imperare.

(D) The Titles of his Writings ] I have taken them out of the Diarium Biographicum of the Sieur Witte, where theſe words are to be found: d) Reliqua Collegia Theologica: Locos Communes: Diſtinctiones & Regulas Theol. ac Philoſophicas: Opuſcula Philoſophica. Hypomnemata adv. Anabaptiſtarum: Ὑπόμνημα ψευδάδελφον, ſive oſtenſionem primi Falſi Arminianorum: Prælectiones pro Perkinſo contra Arminium: Diſceptationes de Trino vero Deo, &c. Note, that the greateſt part of theſe Books are Poſthumous, and were Publiſh'd by the care of a Polander (e), who was Miniſter of a little City of Friſeland, and afterwards Profeſſor of Divinity at Franeker. He promiſ'd to Publiſh many more, as may be ſeen in his Preface to the common places of Maccovius. He caus'd them to be Re-printed with many Corrections and Additions taken out of the Author's MSS. His Epiſtle Dedicatory is dated in 1649. The Edition which I make uſe of, is of the Year 1658.

(Da) He was accus'd of Plagiariſm. ] He who made this diſcovery, propos'd it modeſtly, and did not forget to Praiſe Maccovius; which he does in the following words (f) Imo ne abſolvam quidem crimine hoc plane poteſt inter Theologos noſtros ullus aliquot ſubtiliſſimus, Joannes Maccovius. Quod ſi eum inſpicere non detrectes Exercitationes ipſius Remonſtrantium hypotheſibus abhinc annos aliquot oppoſitas, docebunt te oculi tui, eruditam earum partem non tantum quoad (1) materiam, ſed quoad ipſa etiam verba, e Belgico Latine verſa, e (2) Clar. Molinæi Anatome Arminianiſmi compilatam eſſe. Quod in Dolore, extemporanei acuminis honore aliàs celebratiſſimo, miratus ſemper fui.

(Z) Whether he had reaſon to boaſt ſo much of his Correction of the Breviary ] I find what follows in a Book of Mr. Thiers, Publiſh'd in 1699, under the Title of a Diſſertation concerning the place where at preſent lies the Body of St. Firmin third Biſhop of Amiens. "(g) John Fonſeca, Biſhop of Burgos, "the Capital City of the ancient Caſtile, having a "mind to make a new Edition of the Breviary of "his Dioceſs, appointed three Learned Men, Cor- "rera, Lara, and John Maldonat to manage it. "This John Maldonat, who muſt not be confound- "ed with the famous John Maldonat the Jeſuit, "took upon him to Compoſe and put into Latin, "the Lives of the Saints, which were to ſerve "for Leſſons to that Breviary. He underſtood "Latine very well, and acquitted himſelf ſo well "(as he imagin'd) of this Commiſſion, that he "boaſted of his Breviary, as being a moſt "exact Work, the moſt correct and finiſh'd that "ever was." Theſe boaſts are contain'd in an Epiſtle, which he Printed at the end of this Breviary, and of the Lives of the Saints, of the Lyons Edition, 1561 — It is addreſs'd to his two Colleges Carrera and Lara (h). Mr. Thiers gives it at length, and then uſes theſe Words "(i) Any body who has once read

(i) Balcanquallus, ubi ſupra.

(k) Id ib.

(l) Ib. col. 2.

(m) Deputy of the Palatinate and Profeſſor of Divinity at Heidelberg.

(n) Ibid.

(a) Ib. p. 574. col. 2.

(b) Leg. tur, & pe plura Synodi ſuffragia approbatur, ſententia deputatorum in cauſa Maccoviana, qui eum ab omni hæreſi abſolvendum cenſuerunt, ſed monendum, ut Theologiam docendi modum commodiorem ſequatur, verbo- rumque formis ex ſacra Scriptura petitis utatur, etiam juſtam eum reprehenſionem incurrere ob quaſdam propoſitiones ab ipſo crudius & lepidius aſſertas. Baillon quadam, tom. I. p. 576. col. 1.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Ad 24 Jul. 1614.

(e) i.e. Nicolas Arnoldus, of whom I have given an account.

(f) Baldenus de his Libris, p. 156.

(1) Maccovii Col leg. The olog. Disp. 4 & 11.

(2) Molin. Anatom Arminianiſmi, 5 & 6.

(g) Page 18 of the Diſſertation of Mr. Thiers.

(h) Ibid. p. 19.

(i) Ibid. p. 21.

MALDONAT (John) a Spaniſh Jeſuit (A) was born in 1534. He Studied at Salamanca, and taught Philoſophy, Divinity and the Greek Tongue there, before he devoted himſelf to the Society of the Jeſuits in the ſame City. He did not take there the Habit of the Order, but at Rome in 1562. He was ſent to Paris the next Year, to teach Philoſophy there, in the College which the Jeſuits had lately obtain'd. He taught there afterwards Divinity (B) with very good ſucceſs; for what is told of the multitude of his Auditors (C), is wonderful. He was ſent to Poictiers with nine other Jeſuits in 1570. There he read Latin Lectures, and Preach'd in French; but not finding a good Settlement there, he return'd to Paris, after he had maintain'd ſome Diſputes againſt thoſe of the Reform'd Religion. He made an Excurſion into Lorrain, and as he paſs'd thro' Sedan, he diſputed there againſt more (D) than Twenty Miniſters. He was brought into Trouble at Paris; for he was not only accus'd of Hereſie, but (E) alſo (k) Taken from Nathan. Sotuel Bibloth. Scriptor. Societat. p. 473.

" this Epiſtle, would believe, that the Lives of " the Saints of the Breviary of Burgos are per- " fectly free from Faults: And yet that Epiſtle is " nothing but a Spaniſh Rhodomontade, and in " thoſe Leſſons there are many ſilly things, which " are to be found in the ancient Legends.

(A) Spaniſh Jeſuit.] The place of his Birth is call'd Las Caſas de la Reina. It is ſituated near Larena, in the Province of Eſtramadura, and belongs to the great Maſter of the Knights of St. James. Maldonat teſtifies all theſe things in a writing ſign'd with his own Hand, which is kept at Rome in the Archives of the Jeſuits (k). Therefore George Cardoſus (l), Thuanus (m), and Mr. Thiers (n), are miſtaken when they make him a Portugueſe. Alegambe knew not this very exactly, for he call'd (o) Maldonat's Country Fuente del Maeſtro in ditione Zafrenſi. Nicolas Antonio (p) call'd it by the ſame Name. Mr. Moreri has perverted this Name into Fruente deli Maeſtro.

(l) In Agiologio ad diem 6. Januarii, apud Sotuel ib. p. 475.

(m) Thuanus, l. 53. p. 1088.

(n) Thiers diſſertat. ſur ſaint Firmin, p. 18.

(o) Alegambe, Biblioth. Scriptor. Societ. Jeſu, p. 255.

(B) He taught there afterwards Divinity.] I will not ſay that he taught it full Ten Years, altho' (q) Sotuel has affirm'd it; for I find this may be a little queſtioned. This Author ſays, that Maldonat taught at firſt Philoſophy at Paris, whither he had been ſent in 1563, and that he went to Poitiers about 1570, and that afterwards he made a Journey into Lorrain. He ſpeaks no more of his Lectures of Divinity: Where then ſhall we find theſe Ten Years? Sotuel ſhould have ſaid, that after his Journey to Lorrain, Maldonat began again to be a Profeſſor in the College of Paris. Maldonat was at firſt a Regent of Philoſophy, and he was made ſo (r) in the Year 1564. He ſpent two or three Years in this, for at that time a Courſe of Philoſophy could laſt no leſs. He taught afterwards Divinity, and finiſh'd a Courſe of it in four Years. (ſ) Tradidit ille primum totam Theologiam compendio annis quatuor. We are come to the time when he was ſent to Poictiers. Now ſince a (t) Miniſter who had chang'd his Religion, during the Paris Maſſacre, accompanied him in his Journey to Lorrain; we cannot place this Journey before the Month of September 1572. 'Tis very probable, that being return'd to Paris, he begun to execute his deſign of dictating a Courſe of Divinity larger than the former; for if he had began to execute it after his return from Poictiers, would he have been taken from this Exerciſe, and ſent into Lorrain. This larger Courſe was interrupted by a Proceſs of Hereſie, and of a Teſtamentary Cheat which was entered againſt him. (v) Iterum eandem uberius tradere aggreſſus, cum jam procul iſſet progreſſus, alieniſſimo ſane tempore, ab hoſtibus variis calumniis appetitus eſt. Now this Suit was determin'd in 1575, and Maldonat, notwithſtanding his abſolution, quitted Paris. I know not therefore where we ſhall find theſe Ten Years, which are mention'd by the two Bibliothecaries of the Jeſuits. I have inſiſted the longer on theſe Trifles to ſhew, that a clear and exact Narrative is a Work more difficult than is commonly thought. Doth not Alegambe, who is thought to be very exact, throw us into Confuſion? Thoſe who write Books like his, ought to know what I have criticiz'd here.

(p) In Bibliotheca Scriptor. Hiſpan. Tom. 1. p 558.

(q) Totos decem annos Theologiam profeſſus eſt. Sotuel Biblioth. Scriptor. Societat. p. 474.

(r) Richeome Apologetical Complaint, p. 33.

(ſ) Sotuel ibid.

(t) Du Roſier. See Thuanus, l. 53. p. 1088.

(v) Sotuel ibid.

(C) Of the multitude of his Auditors.] The Bibliothecaries of the Society ſay, that People, leſt they ſhould not find a place, went to the School two or three Hours before he mounted into the Chair, and that he was often oblig'd to read his Lectures in a Court, and in the Streets, becauſe the Benches were not ſufficient for all thoſe that came to hear him. They add, that there were alſo ſome Miniſters of the Reform'd Religion, preſent at his Lectures. (x) Ne ipſi quidem Calviniſtæ, & Calviniſtarum Miniſtri ipſius prælectionibus abſtinerent. Duabus quotidie, tribuſve horis ante ſubſellia certatim implebant, quam ludum ille ingrederetur, ne excluderentur. Sæpe in aperto, atque adeo in viis publicis docere coactus eſt ob multitudinem Auditorum, quos nullæ ædes capiebant.

(x) Sotuel ibid.

(a) Alegambe, p. 255. Sotuel, p. 574.

(D) He diſputed at Sedan againſt more than Twenty Miniſters.] Genebrard, an Author ſuſpected, teſtifies, that Maldonat overcame them all, and that two of them were converted. " (b) De quo certa- " mine Genebrardus ſic ait, Joannes Maldonatus Ca- " pellum, Holmum, Loqueum, & xx. alios Mini- " ſtros Calviniſtas, primum differendo, deinde de- " clamitando proſtravit: nam in declamationes " diſputationem commutandam Miniſtri cenſue- " rant, quod ejus vim Syllogiſticam non poſſent " depellere. Additque Launeum & Henricum Pen- " neterium Miniſtros, qui aderant, fuiſſe conver- " ſos." 'Tis certain, that Matthew de Launoy, and Henry Pennetier, chang'd their Religion; but this was not a Conſequence of that Diſpute with Maldonat. They became Papiſts in 1577, and immediately Publiſh'd a Book of Controverſy, which they Dedicated to the French King. There they mention Maldonat, but do not ſay that he had diſputed with the Miniſters of Sedan, or that his Reaſons had open'd their Eyes. They inform us (d), that du Roſier a Miniſter who had chang'd his Religion, accompanied Maldonat, and left him at Metz to go into Germany, becauſe the Miniſters of Sedan perſuaded him, that if he return'd to Paris with this Jeſuit, he would be put to Death, and that Maldonat had given ſome intimation of it, by ſaying that he was ſtill a Heretick. They do not ſay in what Year this was done; but it may be affirmed, that it was three or four Years before their Abjuration; for as I have already obſerv'd, it was after Bartholomew-tide, that Maldonat and du Roſier were ſent to Metz. It was believ'd (e) at the Court of France, that du Roſier having chang'd his Religion, and contributed very much to the Abjuration of the King of Navarre, the Princeſs Catharine, the Prince of Conde, and the Wife and Mother-in-Law of this Prince, would be a fit Inſtruſtrument to make Converſions at Metz, and therefore he was ſent thither with Maldonat. The Duke of Mompenſier deſir'd them to go to Sedan, that they might diſabuſe the Dutcheſs of Bouillon his Daughther, who was a very good Huguenot (f)

(b) Id. ib.

(d) Folio 139.

(e) Thuanus, l. 53. p. 1088. ad ann. 1572. See alſo Theod. Beza, Hiſt. Eccleſ. B. 16. p. 475.

(E) He was not only accus'd of Hereſie, but alſo of having ſtole.] For this let us quote Alegambe. (g) Alieniſſimo ſane tempore, ab hoſtibus variis calumniis appetitus eſt: nam & Præſidem Montibrunenſem St. Andreæ moribundum circumveniſſe, & poſteros ejus fortunis evertiſſe, illi perſuadendo ut ſua omnia Societati legaret, dicebatur, ſeductor ſimul & prædo nuncupatur; & a nonnullis Lutetiæ zelo præpoſtero, hæreſis eſt accerſitus; verum ab hac cum injuriâ vindicavit Summi Pontificis Gregorii XIII. auctoritate Petrus Gondius Pariſienſis Antiſtes: ab illa vero publico Senatus conſulto liberatus eſt. Verum quamvis ſic ejus innocentia publice ſatis teſtata foret, ſatius tamen fore putavit, ſi paucorum æmulationi, præſertim ingraveſcente ætate viribuſque labefactatis, cederet, lucemque illam hominum fugeret.

(f) Thua. ibid.

(g) Alegambe & Sotuel ubi ſupra.

Anthony Arnould pleading againſt the Jeſuits, in 1594, ſuppoſes that Maldonat was really guilty of ſeducing the Preſident Saint André, and that the Parliament of Paris had not acquitted him. " Nothing comes out, ſays he (h), every thing goes " in, whether People die inteſtate, or make their " Wills, which they extort every Day, repreſent- " ing on one ſide the Terrors of Hell to thoſe that " are near Death, and on the other, pre- " ing an open Paradiſe to thoſe who give to " Society of Jeſus, as Maldonat did to the Pre- " dent Montbrun Saint André, drawing out of his also of having stole an Inheritance, by seducing the President St. André, to leave his Estate to the Jesuites. Peter de Gondi Bishop of Paris acquitted him of Heresie, and the Parliament (F) declared him innocent of the other Crime. But this did not hinder Maldonat from a Resolution to go and hide himself in the College of Bourges, that he might apply himself entirely to his Commentaries upon the Scripture. He had a Dream which the Event confirm'd (G). Having gone to Rome by Order of the Pope, to take care of the Edition of the Greek Bible; he finish'd there his Commentaries upon the Gospels, and presented them to the General Aquaviva, December 21. 1582. A little while after he fell sick, exactly according to his own Dream, and was found dead in his Bed on the Eve of the Epiphany, 1583. There is, no doubt, but his too earnest Application to Study shortned his Days. He wrote (H) many Books, which show that he had a great Capacity *. Thuanus gives him

* Taken from Nathanael Sorüel Biblioth Scriptor. Societat. p 473, &c.

" his Goods and Purchases, by a Confession full of " Avarice and Imposture, of which Mr Pibrac " complain'd as of an abuse in a full Audience." I know not what the Jesuit Richeome answer'd as to this Article; for I have not the Apology he Publish'd under the Name of Francis de la Montagne against the Plea of Antony Arnauld.

(F) Peter de Gondi——acquitted him of Heresie] The Bibliothecaries of the Jesuits do not say of what Heresie he was accus'd: But here follows a small Account of the Particulars, which Mr Simon affords me " i) It was very difficult for a " Man of his Merit, and who profess'd to speak " his Mind freely, without minding the Pre- " judices of others, to please every Body Some " false Zealots accused him of having taught " Heresies. Their Accusations proceeded so far, " that they were carried to Rome, and Pope Gre- " gory the XIIIth. sent them back to the Bishop of " Paris, to be examin'd upon the spot His Ac- " cusation was, that contrary to the Sentiment of " the Faculty of Divinity at Paris, he had taught, " that it was not a Point of Faith, that the Holy " Virgin was conceiv'd without Original Sin " The Doctors pursued this Affair with so much " heat, that Maldonat, who had done so good Ser- " vices to Religion and the State, was forc'd to " appear before the Bishop's Tribunal, who ac- " quitted him. His Brethren thought it conveni- " ent to Print the Sentence of his Absolution, " before his Commentary after the same manner " it had been Publish'd Yet it is not to be found " but in the first Editions, viz. in that of Pont a " Mousson, which appear'd in 1596, and in the o- " thers till 1615, at which time the Jesuits re- " vised that Commentary in an Edition of Lyons; " and I perceive, that afterwards, this reform'd " Edition was generally follow'd, from which " the Sentence of Absolution was taken away, " which I shall here set down entire, as I have " read it in the Edition of Pont a Mousson." Mr Simon having set down the whole Sentence (l) adds, that altho' it was very favourable, (l) Maldonat thought it better to get over his Divinity Lectures, than to give occasion to his Enemies to raise up new Strifes against him. He retir'd to Bourges to study there quietly in the College of his Society.

(i) Simon's Critical Hist of the Commentators on the N. Testament, c. 42 p. 620.

(k) The 22d of January 1575.

Let us set down here some Extracts from the Registers of the Faculty of Divinity at Paris. John Maldonat read Lectures upon the Master of the Sentences in the College of Clermont in 1574, and disputed earnestly about the immaculate Conception of the Holy Virgin against the Faculty of Divinity, which made their Members swear, that they would believe this Conception as an Article of Faith. The Rector of the University of Paris call'd together the four Faculties, and they resolv'd unanimously to complain of this Jesuit to Peter de Gondi Bishop of Paris. The Faculty of Divinity being assembled, all the Doctors, except eight or nine, declar'd expressly, that they held it as an Article of Faith, that the Holy Virgin was conceiv'd without Original Sin Hence it came to pass, that the Bishop of Paris Publish'd a Censure against the Rector, and the principal Members of the University; but seeing that his proceeding rais'd great Tumults he chang'd his Method, and thunder'd out an Excommunication against the Dean, and the Syndick of the Faculty of Divinity The four Faculties appeal'd from this as a grievance to the Parliament, who disapprov'd the Conduct of the Bishop. This you will find in Latin (m) a Book of Mr Joly. You will find there also (n) that which follows. " I've Months and " Day after the Sentence of the Bishop of Paris, " by which Maldonat was discharg'd from the " Accusation of Heresie brought against him con- " cerning the Conception; and after the Rector " and the principal Members, the Dean and the Syn- " dick of the Faculty were Excommunicated, for " acting contrary to the Decree of the Council of " Trent afore-related. All the Faculties on the " 18th of June 1578. declar'd, that the Bishop of " Paris had no power to Excommunicate either " the Rector or the principal Members of the U- " niversity, and condemn'd the words of Mal- " donat as heretical Here follow the words ta- " ken out of the Registers Recepta Nobili [illegible] " dum modo Jam. Maldonatum Societatis [illegible] " causa super articulo Immaculatæ Conceptionis [illegible] " cum Domino Episcopo Parisiensi, et omnibus [illegible] " ter hos duodecim articulos Maldonatum non esse [illegible] " condemnandum —— præcepit, dilationem usque ad Concilium " Episcopum Parisiensem non posse excommunicare nec " quæ Rectorem, neque Decanum, aut Syndicum pœnis ec- " clesiasticis coercere, neque Facultatem Theologicam Pa- " risiensem Congregationi Generali Cardinalium de Maldo- " nato tanquam Hæretico." Those who know the present State of the Controversie concerning the immaculate Conception, will doubtless admire that a Jesuit should have been persecuted by the Sorbonne upon such an occasion

(m) Antonii Joli Opus Theologicum de Immaculata Conceptione Deiparæ Virginis, Paris 1664.

(n) At p. 95. &c. 96.

(G) He had a Dream which the Event confirm'd] He thought he saw a Man who exhorted him to go on vigorously with his Commentary, and assured him he should finish it, but he should not long survive the Conclusion of it When that Man said this, he show'd him a certain place in his Belly, which was the very same place where Maldonat felt the sharp Pains of which he died (a) Cum autem absolvisset primum in totum Evangelia Commentarium, scribere, per aliquot mihi suspecta visum est quendam, qui ut sermone captum opus prosequeretur, exhortari, sive quia ut Patres sententiæ perfectæ: sed opere parum diu superesse jam; atque hæc cum diceret, intento digito certam ad quam ventre partem illi significabat Hoc sane quamquam pro somnio ludibrio habitum, comprobavit eventu, nam a Gregorio XIII. Pontifice Maximo e Gallia in urbem accitus, ut eo ad finem præstaret ad editionem Græcam Novi Testamenti, quam parabat, non diu Pontifici superstes fuit: Is vero cum illam suam absolvisset, & tabulas omnes in Bibliothecam Pontificiam illatas ad dominicæ Nativitatis annum MDLXXXII evulsit, ac secundas curavit, accessimus eum dolor incepti operis, quæ tanto jam prius illi fuerat pernecessaria jejunia vesperam. 'Tis very probable that this was known from Maldonat himself, and that he did not intend to deceive those to whom he related it. And 'tis no wise probable that Chance was the Cause of this good Agreement between the Dream of this Jesuit and the Event Such facts as this, of which the World is full, confound more the Unbelievers than they are willing to own

(a) Alegambe ubi supra p. 256

(H) He wrote many Book] He publish'd nothing himself; all that came out was Printed after his Death The first of his Works that was Publish'd, is his Comment upon the four Gospels Mr Simon has commended it as much as appears from his own Words which in both Critical and Historical Order is the Commentaries that we have mentioned hitherto there are few which deserve such a Work. It gives care and even with [illegible] Effects, the true Reader of the Gospels [illegible] Jesuit. Dying [illegible] Fifty Years, [illegible] Secrets, to [illegible] commanded his Com- [illegible] when he [illegible] gave Orders to [illegible] the Jesuits [illegible] Publications Copies which he had given them. These Jesuits [illegible] the Work [illegible] Work, they [illegible] something of their [illegible] obliged to mend the [illegible] MS Copy was [illegible] some places,

(b) Simon ubi supra, p. 618

† See Sir Thomas Pope Blount Cenſura Autorum, p. m. 535

him great (I) Commendations †. Some Proteſtants have alſo much commended him, but they complain of ſome paſſionate Expreſſions that have dropt from his Pen (K). Others ſpeak of him with the greateſt Contempt. There has been a greater Noiſe than the Matter deſerv'd about one of his Lectures concerning the Exiſtence of

" it not being in their Power to conſult the O" riginal which was at Rome Beſides, the Au" thor having not ſet down in the Margin of his " Copy, the Books and Places from which he took a " good part of his Citations, they ſupplied this defect.
" It appears alſo, that Maldonat had not read in the " Original Authors a great many of thoſe Places
" which he cites, but that he had made uſe of the " Labours of former Writers, as is commonly done
" He is not ſo exact as if he had put the laſt hand
" to that Commentary (a). Notwithſtanding
" thoſe Defects, and ſome others which may be " eaſily mended, it appears plainly, that this Je-
" ſuit took a great deal of pains in Com-
" poſing this excellent Work. He ſkips no Dif" ficulty, but examines it very carefully. When " he meets with ſeveral literal Senſes of the " ſame place, he uſually chooſes the beſt, with" out ſhewing too much regard to the Authori" ty of the ancient Commentators, nor even to " the greater Number, becauſe he minded no" thing but the Truth He rejects often the Inter" pretation of St Auſtin, &c.

(a) Thuanus is of the ſame Opinion. Nihil vivens publicavit, ſays he, l. 78. p. 481. poſt mortem ejus, opera ac cura Clementis Puteani ex eodem ſodalitio viri doctiſſimi, prodierunt eruditiſſima Comentaria in IV. Evangeliſtas Muſſiponti edita, meliora & integriora multorum judicio futura, ſi ſuperſtite auctore edita fuiſſent.

The Commentaries of Maldonat upon Jeremiah, Baruch, Ezekiel and Daniel, were Printed at Lyons in 1609, and at Cologne in 1611. To which they join'd his Expoſition upon the 109th Pſalm, and a Letter about his Diſpute of Sedan His Treatiſe De fide, was Printed at Mentz in 1606, and that about Angels and Demons at Paris, in 1605. As to the Summa of Caſes of Conſcience, and the Controverſies about the Seven Sacraments, two Books which have appeared under his Name, the Bibliothecaries of the Society look upon them as Suppoſititious, as appears by their own words. " (d) Summa caſuum conſcientiæ, quæ tanquam hauſta è ſcriptis & do-
" ctrinâ Maldonati, & collecta per Martinum Co-
" dognat Minimum prodiit Lugduni apud Hæ-
" redes Gulielmi Rovillii MDCIV. Venetiis etiam
" & alibi, partus ſuppoſititius eſt, erroribus ſca-
" tens, Maldonato proſus indignus, & merito ab
" Apoſtolicâ Sede damnatus. Similiter Diſputati-
" onum ac Controverſiarum de ſacramentis circa VII. Eccle-
" ſiæ Romanæ Sacramenta, tom II. Lugduni ſine
" Typographi nomine, nec illius nec ullius de
" Societate ſunt, & ſuos etiam errores continent." They ſay nothing of a Folio that was Printed at Paris by Sebaſtian Cramoiſy, in 1643, with this Title, Johannis Maldonati Soc. J. Commentarii in præcipuos ſacræ Scripturæ libros Veteris Teſtamenti. Don Nicolas Antonio (e) makes mention of it, and of ſome other MS. Pieces of the ſame Jeſuit. Some Pieces of Maldonat were Publiſh'd at Paris in 1677, which had never appear'd before, viz. his Treatiſe of Grace, that of Original Sin, that of Providence and Juſtice, that of Juſtification and the Merit of Works; his Prefaces, his Harangues, and his Letters. Theſe new Treatiſes do not make Three Volumes in Folio, as Mr. Teſſier affirms (f), but only one. The two others, Printed at the ſame time by Pralard, had already been Publiſh'd There is hopes that ſome other Treatiſes of this Jeſuit, will come forth; and 'tis the more probable, becauſe a great number of People tranſcrib'd what he dictated at Paris (g). I think that Mr. du Bois, Doctor of the Sorbonne, procu'd the Edition of the new Treatiſes of Maldonat: He prefix'd (h) a Preface to it, which contains a Commendation of this Jeſuit.

(d) Alegambe, p. 257. Sotuel p. 475

(e) Biblioth Scriptor. Hiſp. t. 1. p. 558

(f) Addit. to the Eloges, t. 2 p. 14 Edit. 1696.

(g) Ex ejus ſchola prodierunt viri eruditi quamplurimi, & vix quiſpiam poſtea fuit in Gallia qui cum ejus auditor eſſe non potuiſſet, quæ in ſcholis dictaverat ſibi domi deſcripta non haberet. Alleg. p. 255. Sotuel, p. 474.

I have read in Mr. Joli, a Paſſage which I will now tranſcribe. " (i) The MS. Letters of Maldo-
" nat, and his Book of the Sacraments, were Prin" ted at Paris about Twenty or Thirty Years ago,
" but the Jeſuits buy up all the Copies.

(h) Simon ubi ſupra p. 625.

(i) Joli Preſcriptions concerning the Conception of our Lady. p. 19. This Book was Printed in 1676

(I) Thuanus commends him very much.] According to him, the Merit of Maldonat was the cauſe why the Parliament of Paris decreed nothing againſt the Jeſuits, altho' they were ſuſpected by the wiſeſt Heads, and the whole Univerſity hated them very much. Can any Man be better prais'd?

(k) Unus in cauſſa exſtitiſſe merito creditur, ut ſodalitium illud totæ Academiæ valde invi-ſum, & alioqui jam prudentioribus ſuſpectum, ob tanti viri gratiam ac commendationem à Senatu apud quem adhuc indicija pendebat, tamdiu toleraretur; & poſtquam dum rebus ſodalium in urbe confirmatis, Maldonatus poſt conſti-tutam inſigni ſua unius eruditione novo ordini celebritatem, a Gregorio XIII. Pontifice Romam evocatus eſt. Thuanus ſays, that this Jeſuit join'd a ſingular Piety and Purity of Life, and an exquiſite Judgment, with an exact knowledge of Philoſophy and Theology. (a) Qui ad exactum philoſophiæ & theologiæ ſtudium ſingularem pietatem, morum candorem & acerrimum judicium cum attuliſſet, magna cum laude & frequentia omnium Ordinum concurſu totos X. annos in-terpretatus Pariſiorum, ubi & cum puer audiviſſet, in Claromontana ſchola profeſſus eſt. He did not know the true Age of Maldonat; for he ſuppoſes him to have lived more than Fifty Six Years, when indeed he did not arrive to Fifty. You will wonder the leſs at this Miſtake, when you know that Richeome has made Maldonat younger than he was, at a time when the Intereſt of his Cauſe requir'd, that he ſhould rather have added more Years to his Life, than have taken any from it. It was objected to the Jeſuits (b), that they put young Men to teach the lower Claſſes; Richeome anſwers (c), That John Maldonat began to read Philoſophy when he was Twenty Seven Years of Age, in 1564. This is an Error, he ſhould have ſaid, when he was Thirty Years old, and thereby, will ſome ſay, the Anſwer had been better. It ſeems ſo at firſt, but when we conſider the Matter more narrowly, this Miſtake of Richeome appears to be advantageous to his Cauſe; for his deſign was to prove, that a Man, tho' he be young, may nevertheleſs be fit to teach well. Maldonat, whoſe Lectures were admir'd, is an Example of this. Now the younger you make him, the more weight you give to that Example Thus Richeome was not miſtaken to his Prejudice

(a) Thuanus, l. 78 p. 481.

(b) Richeome Apologetical Complaint, p. 32.

(c) Ibid. p. 33.

I have ſaid elſewhere, that 'tis difficult to Abridge a Book well; I will add here, that 'tis difficult to make pertinent Additions to it. There is ſuch an Addition as requires that twenty places ſhould be corrected. Patience alone does not fit a Man to make theſe Emendations; he muſt look narrowly into all the little things that are leaſt perceptible, and remember them a long time, and whenever it is neceſſary. An Author, who enlarges his own Work, has not always theſe Qualifications; but commonly he ſucceeds better in the Corrections which the Additions require, than one who adds to the Work of another will do. This Fault is to be excus'd in him, when the Addition is far diſtant from the place which is to be Corrected. Alegambe ſays, that Maldonat died (d) at the beginning of his Fifrieth Year, the Fifth of January 1583. If he could not ſay it without telling a Lye, yet at leaſt he could ſay it without refuting himſelf, ſince he takes no manner of notice of the Year of his Birth Sotuel his Continuator has inſerted ſome Additions in the Article of Maldonat; one among the reſt which informs us, that this Jeſuit was born in the Year 1534. From hence it appears, that the words of Alegambe, which I have related, muſt be falſe, and yet Sotuel has chang'd nothing in them; he has related them, and conſequently he is guilty either of a Contradiction, or of a falſe Calculation.

THAT thoſe who make Additions to a Book, find it a very difficult thing (d) Mortuus in lectulo inventus, ætatis vix dum anno 50, ſalutis vero 1583, ineunte pervigilio Epiphaniarum. Alegambe p. 256.

(K) The paſſionate Expreſſions that have dropt from his Pen. Some others] I will cite Caſaubon (e) Quum ubique virulentus ſit ſcriptor in magnos viros pro ſua modulia, pari petulantia & impudentia debacchatur; naſcium tamen maledicæ linguæ ſuæ lacinores habenas indulſit, quam in hac diſputatione: hæreticos tertio quoque verbo nominans illos, aut eandem cum Arianis & aliis ſententiam tuentes PETRAM exponi Chriſtum, cujus Majeſtatem dedecere, bodie eſt hæreticum contendere — (f) O[illegible] in hunc locum Maldonatus, acris & magni ingenii vir; ſi aſperiores ſi linguæ, ſi odio veritatis, parciſſet modestiæ. Here are things both obliging and offenſive; but ſince he does not obſerve this Temper, he ſays nothing of God, and I wonder that Pasquier (L) did not understand the weakness of that Objection.

(e) Caſaubon in Baronium, exercitat. 15 n 12. p. m. 722.

MAL-

what is ill of this Jesuit. If he allows him to have Publish'd some good Things, yet he robs him of all the Glory of them, because he accuses him of having stolen them, (g) Maldonatus in Evangelia maledicus, insignia tamen quædam habet bona Having taken all this from Beza, he speaks ill of him. Quando aliquid habet boni furatur à Calvino, & ut agnoscas, maledixit ei, ut Eusebius ex Africano conatur furta sua tegere. He denoted him by the word Lyon; but he denied it, when he saw that some took Advantage of it. We must believe that he did not remember he had us'd that word, and that he did not intend when he us'd it, that there should be any thing obliging in the Allusion. However this be, my Proofs are these. (h) Pag 313. Insultas Sciopp.o. Proferat fur (inquis) scriptum meum, in quo ulla vestigia exstent, quod Maldonatum LEONEM vocarim. Proh Deum immortalem! tunc tam impudens es, ut id negare audeas? Credo enim, an non hæc tua sunt verba de Maldonato in Elenchi tui vereci adversus Serarium, cap xi. fol. 89 Rarò verum dicit, nisi in illis, quæ ab aliis accipit, quibus cum maledicit, putat se furta sua occultare posse. Utinam viveret, non inultas sycophantias ferret. Sed LEONI non respondetur post mortem ejus. I nunc, & Scioppium mendacii postula. R vet has follow'd the foot-steps of Scaliger; he does not allow Maldonat one good Quality (i); he makes him a very ill Man, and very ignorant, or at least one who had a false shew of Learning. Pareus in his Commentary upon St. Matthew, has censur'd this Jesuit very often, and very sharply.

(g) Scaligerana, p. 148.

(h) Oporinus Grubinius in Amphoridibus Scioppianis, p. 254

(i) Non certe merito in eo & verum eruditionem, & fidem, etiam aliquando mentem & sensum requirimus Rivetus, Comment. in Psalm. 110. Oper. tom. 2 p. 329.

C. That Pasquier did not understand the weakness.] Here follows a Passage of his Plea against the Jesuits in 1564. "(k) Within these two "Months, your Metaphysician Maldonat in one "of his Lectures, endeavours to prove a God by "Natural Reason, and in another by the same "Reason to prove that there is none Now "I would ask, in which is the greatest Impie-"ty and Extravagance, in the first, or in the se-"cond? In effect, these are the Holy Mysteries "by which you become famous among the Peo-"ple; these are the good Seed which you sow a-"mong us." There are three Faults in this Objection. 1. 'Tis contrary to Candor, to pretend, that one who first gives the Proofs of the Existence of a God, and after that proposes the Reasonings and Objections of the Atheists, intends to overthrow what he has establish'd This Advocate therefore cannot be excus'd from a Fault: He reports unfaithfully the state of the Case; he would persuade us, that Maldonat did equally intend to prove that there was a God, and that there was none. But this was not at all the intention of this Jesuit; for in both Discourses, he intended to prove the Existence of a God. In the first, by proposing the solid Arguments of those that hold it; in the second, by exposing the weak Arguments of those who deny it. 2. Pasquier trifles Childishly, when he blames this method of Disputing, for on all Subjects a Philosopher should examine the Objections of his Adversaries, and not think to enervate them out of Politicy. Thus Maldonat a Metaphysician did nothing but his Duty, when he design'd one Lecture for the examination of the Arguments of the Atheists 3. 'Tis an Absurdity, I will not say unworthy of so learned a Man as Stephen Pasquier, but of any Man of common Sense, to affirm, that there is as much Impiety, in proving a God by Natural Reason, as in proving by the same Reason, that there is none. All those that will consider these three Censures of this Passage of Pasquier, will easily believe, without farther Proof, that this able Advocate sunk in this Cause. Nevertheless I will show after what manner this Matter was urg'd.

(k) The Answer of Renatus de la Fon to the Plea of Simon Marion, c. 37. p. 373 Edit. 1599.

"(l) Before I shew here the ignorance of Pas-
"quier, I must take notice of the occasion of this "Calumny Maldonat in the Year Sixty Four,
"handled the Question which is usual at all "times, and necessary in ours; a Question
"which the Master of the Sentences, St Thomas,
"and all the other Doctors of Divinity, have "handled among the Questions de Deo, an "Deus sit? Which Question is to "be handled by natural Reasons, such as are fit
"to convince the Atheists, who admit no Te"stimonies from Scripture but only Arguments
"drawn from Nature. The Divines who treat
"solidly this Subject, bring Arguments Pro
"and Con, and confirm the Truth by strong "Reasons, and by the same, confute the Fal"shood and Impiety of the Atheists, and their "contrary Arguments, as Maldonat has done.
"Pasquier neither knowing, nor desiring to under"stand the sense of the Question, hath founded a "Calumny both upon his Ignorance and Malice
"Now in this Question there are two contra"dictory Propositions; the one is, There is a God
"The other is, There is no God Pasquier calls both "these Propositions equally Impious. And "herein he first discovers, that he is extreamly
"ignorant, not only in Religion, but also in the "first Principle of Nature: Secondly, That he "himself is an Impious Man" The Advocate of the Jesuits spoils his Cause; for he mistakes the meaning of his Adversary, and so confutes a Chimerical Impiety; for Pasquier's meaning was not that there is as much Impiety in this Proposition, There is a God, as in that, There is no God And yet he ascribes this to him, and spends a whole Page in refuting it, which I do not set down. Pasquier meant this, That there is as much Impiety in proving by natural Reason the Existence of a God, as in denying it by natural Reason. His Adversary attacking him in this manner, which was the only way of doing it, quite overthrows him. "(a) He is no less igno"rant in the Christian Religion than in Na"ture, to think it an Impiety to prove a "God by natural Reasons, as I shall show very "plainly. There is no Christian so little instruct"ed in our Faith, but he knows that God de"monstrates and proves himself by his Works
"There was not any good Philosopher, although "a Pagan, who did not naturally know and ac"knowledge a God from the Works of Nature:
"The Scripture says expressly, that the Creatures
"testify there is a God St Paul does purposely
"testify it, when he says, writing to the Romans,
"The invisible things of God are clearly seen, being un- "derstood by the things that are made And speak"ing of the Philosophers, he says, Who having
"known God, did not glorify him as God

(a) Renatus de la Fon, ubi supra, p 175

It Pasquier had been wise, he had been silent all his Life, as to his Objection against Maldonat; but tho' he found himself weak, and incapable of assuming on this occasion, that triumphant Air, which he shows in the rest of his Catechism, yet he would not hold his Peace He pretended (b) that the Jesuits who maintain'd Maldonat, were fallen into the Heresies condemn'd by the whole Gallican Church, and by Pope Innocent II. viz. into the Heresie of Peter Abelard, who said, that we must believe nothing but what may be proved by natural Reason This was to make his last Condition worse than the first, and it will always be the Fate of those self-conceited Men, who being fallen into gross Mistakes, will neither acknowledge them sincerely, nor hold their Peace, but maintain what they have said to be right It will always happen to them to defend one Falshood with another This is what Pasquier did, and he was the worse for it Read what was reply'd to him "(c) It has been
"observ'd that he said, when he slander'd the Le"ctures of John Maldonat, a Divine of this Society
"that it was as great an Impiety to prove by natu"ral Reasons that there is a God, as to prove that "there is none; which is gross Ignorance and "Blasphemy against God, who proves and mani"fests himself by the whole Nature It is also
"contrary to the Holy Scripture, and against "all the Creatures in the Universe which tell me
"that there is a most Powerful, most Good "and most Wise God. How does he clear him"self of this Crime? By saying that the Je"suits teach by the Pen of Renatus de la Fon,
"that we must not to prove by natural Rea- "sons, an Deus sit, which is an Error and an
"Impiety Here is a double Forgery for his justifica"tion; for Renatus de la Fon says only, as Maldonat,
"and all Divines have said that it may be piously
"taught

(b) Pasquier's Catechism of the Jesuits, b. 2 c. 7 p. m. 239 240

(c) Richeome Apologetical Compliment, n. 56 p. 221.

MALHERBE (FRANCIS) the beſt French Poet of his time, was born at Caen, about the Year 1555, and died at Paris in 1628. I ſhall not ſay many things of him. Mr.

" taught that there is a God by natural Reaſon, " againſt the Atheiſts, which is the Catholick Doctrine; and not that the Deity is to be prov'd " only by natural Reaſon, without recurring to " Faith, which is the Hereſie of Abelard, who " would believe nothing but what is prov'd by " natural Reaſon, and who deſtroy'd Faith, by " which we believe that which is above Reaſon " and Senſe. And thus inſtead of purging him- " ſelf, he is juſtly charg'd with two new Ca- " lumnies.

Paſquier might have defended himſelf more judiciouſly, by ſaying, That ſince firſt Principles are not to be prov'd, all thoſe who think fit to prove there is a God, do hereby confeſs, that they do not rank among firſt Princi[illegible] this Propoſition, There is a God: But it is an impious thing not to reckon it among firſt Principles This Anſwer, tho' leſs groſs than the other, had nevertheleſs been very bad; for it had accus'd of Impiety the moſt Holy and moſt famous Authors, and even the Cuſtom of all Ages, Authoriz'd by the State and the Church. I ſhould never have done, if I ſhould undertake to name all the Authors who have prov'd by natural Reaſon that there is a God. I ſay, pious Authors, who are commendable as well for their Virtue as Learning. And every one knows, that in all the Schools in Chriſtendom, where Philoſophy is taught, there is always one Chapter of Metaphyſicks deſign'd for the Proofs which natural Reaſon affords us, of the Exiſtence of a God, and for the refutation of the Sophiſms of the Atheiſts The greateſt part of the common Places of Divinity that have been Publiſh'd, contain ſuch a Chapter. It would therefore be ridiculous for any one to pretend, that all thoſe who prove by natural Reaſon, that there is a God, are Impious, or do not acknowledge as a firſt Principle this Poſition, There is a God. We muſt take notice, that all the Propoſitions which are call'd Principles, are not equally evident. There are ſome which are not prov'd, becauſe they are as clear, or clearer, than any Medium that can be us'd to prove them. Such, for inſtance, is this Propoſition; The whole is greater than a part; if from two equal quantities, you take away equal parts, the remainder will be equal: Two and two make four. Theſe Axioms have this Advantage, that we have not only a clear Idea of them in our Mind, but they alſo fall under our Senſes: Daily Experience confirms them, and ſo the Proof of them would be altogether uſeleſs. We cannot ſay the ſame thing as to the Propoſitions which fall not under our Senſes, or which may be oppos'd by other Maxims, they want to be diſcuſs'd and prov'd. We muſt ſecure them from Objections. It cannot be deny'd that this Theſis, There is a God, is one of this number: It does not fall directly under our Senſes; it has been deny'd in all Ages by Men of Letters, and who made Profeſſion of reaſoning, and we ſhall ſee hereafter (e), that it is deny'd to this day by ſome flouriſhing Sects. It is not therefore ſuperfluous to undertake the proof of it; nay, it is very uſeful and neceſſary to produce it, although we could not make vulgar Minds ſenſible of it, as we make them ſenſible of the Properties of Numbers. This is what a famous Miniſter pretends (f).

(e) In a Paſſage of Mr. Arnauld

(f) That truth, There is a God, may be demonſtrated, as I believe, but not by a demonſtration on which one may be contented, to convince Men of Senſe, and of true Judgment of Nature and Grace, p. 248.

But ſome perhaps may ſay, is it not a ſcandalous thing to propoſe it as a Problem in a Metaphyſical Lecture, whether there be a God or no? I have heard of a German Prince, who had Founded an Univerſity, that he was about to ſuppreſs it, becauſe this Queſtion was diſputed in it. Probably ſome Body alarm'd him in the ſame manner as ſome Perſons attempted to prejudice the Parliament of Paris againſt Maldonat. We ſhall add a few words about this Difficulty 'Tis certain, that according to the Rules or Method of Diſpute, we muſt reduce this great and important Truth into a Queſtion, as ſoon as we undertake to prove by Philoſophical Reaſons, that there is a God; for the natural and juſt End of this Undertaking, is to convince thoſe of Falſhood who deny this Theſis. Now, according to the Rules of Diſpute, it may and ought to be requir'd of them, that they ſhould lay aſide their Prejudices, and that they ſhould not imploy their peculiar Principles againſt the Reaſons which ſhall be propos'd to them; for if they do this, they fall into the Sophiſm which the Schools call Petitio Principii, which is an enormous Fault, and ought to be baniſh'd from all Controverſies, as an eſſential Obſtacle to the deſign of diſcovering the Truth. They have the like right of requiring the ſame thing, ſince in all Diſputes that are well regulated, the Combatants ſhould be equally arm'd. Thus for a certain time, i. e. while each Party is alledging his Reaſons, both thoſe who deny, and thoſe who affirm, ought to lay aſide their Theſis, without Affirming or denying it. It will be then a Queſtion and a matter of enquiry, wherein to proceed ſincerely, we muſt nor ſuffer our pre-conceiv'd Opinions to add any Weight to the Arguments that favour them, nor to enervate the contrary Reaſons. We muſt examine every thing as if we were a tabula raſa. 'Tis not neceſſary actually to doubt, and much leſs to affirm, that all we have believ'd is falſe: 'Tis ſufficient to keep in a kind of ſuſpence; i. e. not to ſuffer our Perſuaſion to byaſs us, in the Judgment we are to paſs upon the Proofs of the Exiſtence of a God, and the Difficulties and Arguments of the Atheiſts. This is doubtleſs what Deſcartes intended, when he would have his Philoſopher doubt of every thing, before he examines the Reaſons of Certainty If any one will not believe me, let him hear at leaſt a Miniſter, who in a diſpute with the Atheiſts, would have us for a time renounce the Principles to which they do not agree. Ut clare oſtendamus, ſays he (g), quæ iſta tantopere declamata dubitatio eſt, cui tot retro annis tantæ lites motæ atque etiamnum moventur, rem ipſam paulo altius & ab initio repetemus. Conſtat, ab omni tempore repertos eſſe, qui Deo naturam, exiſtentiam, providentiam, & quidquid horum eſt, quibus omnis plane nititur Religio, ut ſcio quibus non ſubtilitatibus aut evertere, aut dubia ſaltem reddere non vereruntur.——Cui tamen malo quantum poſſe obviam eundo, iisque quos inſci ſſer, convincendis, haud pauca ſemper vere docti ac egregii ingenia calamoſque ſuos acuerunt Quibus certe, ſi quid proficere volunt, non ex principiis adverſæ partis negatis, ſed ab eadem conceſſis neceſſario eſt diſputandum; utut illæ alias in ſe ipſæ poſſint eſſe certiſſimæ Quod cum recte perpenderet Carteſius, eaque de exiſtentia Dei argumenta proferre ſtuderet, ad quæ pertinaciſſimus quiſque Sceptaeus obmutesceret, etiamſi potuit aliter, quam ut ea omnia de quibus iſti dubitant, tantiſper ſeponere? He names Diagoras, Epicurus, and the Scepticks: He might have cited whole Bodies of the Chineſe, as Mr. Arnauld has done, who thus addreſſes himſelf to the Jeſuits. " (a) The moſt able Miſſionaries " of China, whereof ſome are of your Society, " maintain that the greateſt part of the Learned " Men there are Atheiſts, and that they are not " Idolaters, but thro diſſimulation and Hypocriſie; " like many of the Pagan Philoſophers, who ador- " ed the ſame Idols with the Common People, " tho' they did not believe any of them, as may " be ſeen in Cicero and Seneca Theſe ſame Miſſi- " onaries inform us, that theſe Literati do not be- " lieve any thing to be Spiritual, and that the " King above, which your Matthew Ricci took " for the true God, is nothing but the material " Heaven; and that what they call the Spirits of the " Earth, Rivers and Mountains, are nothing but " the active Virtues of theſe Natural Bodies. " Some of your Authors ſay, that they fell into " this Atheiſm ſome Ages ago, only becauſe they " ſuffer'd the good Diſcoveries of their Philoſopher " Confucius to be loſt. But others who have ſtu- " died theſe Matters with greater care, as your " Longobara, maintain, that this Philoſopher ſaid " many fine things about Morality and Politicks; " but as to the true God and his Law, he was as " blind as the reſt.

(g) Abraham Heidanus, Conſiderat. ad res quaſdam nuper geſtas, p. 135, 136.

(a) Arnauld in his fifth Denunciation of the Philoſophical Sin, p. 38. See alſo Father Gobien in the Preface to the Hiſtory of the Edict of the Emperor of China.

We conclude therefore, that our John Maldonat deſerves not the cenſure which Stephen Paſquier has inſerted in his Plea againſt the Jeſuits.

I am ſorry that Mr. de Saint-Evremont, whom I admire and honour as much as any Man in the World, hath an Opinion contrary to the Method uſed by Maldonat, and that I muſt prefer to it that of an anonymous Writer who Criticiz'd him. " Let's " leave Divinity entirely to our Superiours, ſays

ARTICLE upon the Carteſian doubting

Mr. Moreri has ſaid enough for the greateſt part of Readers, and thoſe who deſire more may be eaſily ſatisfied in the Books * which are every where to be found. I know upon what Mr. Moreri might ground (A) what he ſaid, That Malherbe expreſs'd himſelf with a very ill Grace: But Racan teſtifies the contrary. He informs us of a thing which confirms what I ſaid in the Article of Lotichius, viz. That the Poets make (B) imaginary

* The Life of Malherbe by Racan, Printed at Paris, in 1672. The Converſations of Balſac. A Collection of the fineſt Pieces of the French Poets, reprinted in Holland in 1692 tom p. 215

" he (d), and follow with reſpect thoſe who have " the Care of our Souls. Tho' it muſt be confeſs'd, " that our Teachers do not ſeem to deſerve al- " together ſuch a Deference; they inſpire us " with a ſort of Curioſity that leads inſenſi- " bly into Error. There is nothing ſo well Eſta- " bliſh'd among Men, but what they ſubject " to the extravagance of Reaſoning. They burn " a Man who is ſo unhappy as not to believe there " is a God, and yet they make it a Queſtion in " the publick Schools, whether there be one By " this means you offend the Weak, and make the " Stubborn ſuſpicious. By this you arm the " Furious, and allow them to ſeek for pernicious " Reaſons, with which they oppoſe their own " Opinions, and the true impreſſions of Nature. See the Remark of his Cenſurer. (e) When the Divines ask whether there be a God, 'tis not to doubt of his Exiſtence, but to have certain Proofs of it, and to confound the Atheiſts, as Phyſick inſtructs us in the knowledge of Poiſons in order to cure thoſe that are infected with it.—— (f) He calls all the Doctors Scandalous and Imprudent Men, and St. Thomas himſelf, who in the beginning of his Summa Queſt. 2. Art. 3. demands expreſly, whether there be a God. Can Mr. S. E. imagine that any body will take his part againſt ſo many Learned Divines, who have treated this Queſtion in all the moſt famous Univerſities for ſo many Years in the face of the Church? &c.

(d) St. Evremont's Judgment about the Sciences p. 200. tom. 1. of his Works, the Dutch Edit. 1693.

(A) I know upon what Mr. Moreri might ground— but Racan teſtifies.] Moreri might ground it upon theſe words of Balzac: " (b) What you have been " told is true; Malherbe was a moſt ingenious Man " in Converſation, but he had not a handſome De- " livery, and his way of reciting was very diſagree- " able. We us'd to call him Antimonidory; for he ſpoil'd " his good Verſes in pronouncing them. Beſides, he " could not well be heard, upon the account of " an impediment in his Tongue, and the lowneſs " of his Voice: He would ſpit at leaſt ſix times " in repeating a Stanza of four Verſes. And this " occaſion'd Marini to ſay of him, that he never " knew a Man more moiſt, nor a Poet more dry. Racan ſays quite the contrary. " Such, ſays he, (c) " were the ordinary Diſcourſes he had with his " moſt familiar Friends; but they cannot be ex- " preſs'd with ſuch a grace as he ſpoke them, be- " cauſe they deriv'd their greateſt Ornament from " his Geſture, and the tone of his Voice.

(e) Diſſertat on St. Evremont's Works, p. 216. Paris Edit. 1698.

(f) Ibid. p 308.

(b) Balzac Converſation, 37. p.m 355.

(B The Poets make imaginary Miſtreſſes.] As will appear by this Narrative. " Racan and Malherbe (d) one " day were diſcourſing of their Amours; to " wit, of the deſign they had of making choice " of ſome Lady of great Merit and Quality, to be " the ſubject of their Verſes. Malherbe nam'd " Madam de Rambouillet, and Racan Madam de Termes, " who was then a Widow. They found that both " of them were nam'd Catherine; viz. the firſt " whom Malherbe had choſen, Catherine de Vivonne, " and Racan's choice, Catherine Chabot." They ſpent all the Afternoon, " (e) in ſeeking out Ana- " grams to this Name, that might be ſoft e- " nough for Verſe, and they found but three, " Arthenice, Eracinthe and Charintee. The firſt " was judg'd the fineſt; but Racan having " made uſe of it in his Paſtoral, which he made " immediately after, Malherbe deſpis'd the two " others, and reſolv'd to make uſe of Rodante.—— " He was then Married, and far advanc'd in " Years; wherefore his Amours produc'd but " few Verſes, and among the reſt, thoſe which be- " gin thus, Dear Beauty, how my Soul is raviſh'd; and " theſe others which Boſſet ſet to a tune, Thoſe Kings " of mine Eyes go away He wrote alſo ſome Letters " under the Name of Rodante: But Racan, who " was Thirty Four Years younger than he, and " a Batchelor, chang'd his Poetical Love into " a true and lawful one, and made ſome Journies into Burgundy for that end." Obſerve well the difference they make between a Poetical Love and a real one. At that Age good Malherbe was fit only to love Poetically; and yet if one had judged of him by his Verſes, one would have thought that he had a Miſtreſs, who often made him ſigh, and who embrac'd him very cloſe; tho' he was ſo chilly, that he number'd his Stockings with the Letters of the Alphabet, leſt he ſhould put more upon one Leg than upon the other (f): He confeſs'd one Day, that he was come as far as the Letter L. His Infirmities were known, and jeſted upon. It was objected to him one Day in Verſe, that he was in the wrong to make Women his Idols, ſince he had nothing for them but words. Here are other Verſes that concern him

(c) Racan's Life of Malherbe, p. 42, 43.

(d) Racan, ibid. p. 42, 43.

(e) Id ib. p. 43, 44

(f) Id ib. p 7.

Avoir (h) quatre chauſſons de laine,
Et trois Caſaquins de ſatanne,
Cela ſe peut facilement.
Mais de danſer une Bourree
Sur une Dame bien parée,
Cela ne ſe peut nullement.

(g) Menage's Obſervations upon the Poems of Malherbe p 497.

To wear four woollen Socks,
And three fuſtian Frocks,
That to him is agreeable.
But to dance a Bouree
Upon a Lady fine and free,
To do that he is not able.

He was ſenſible of his Weakneſs, and complain'd of it very much. " (i) I am not buried, " but thoſe who are, are not more dead than I am " I have no reaſon, thanks be to God, to murmur " againſt the Conſtitution that Nature has given " me: It is ſo good, that at the Age of ſeventy " Years I know not one of thoſe Inconveniences " to which Men are ſubject in old Age. And " if to be Well, were nothing elſe but not to " be Ill, I ſee but few Perſons whom I ſhould " envy. But what? becauſe I am not Ill, ſhall " I be ſo fooliſh as to make my ſelf believe that I " am Well? I know not what is the Sentiment " of others, but I am not ſatisfied at ſuch an eaſie " rate. Indolence is the deſire of thoſe, whom " the Gout, the Gravel, the Stone, or ſome ſuch " like Diſtemper, put upon the Rack once a " Month. I deſire not only to be free from " Pain, but to enjoy Pleaſure; not indeed all ſorts " of Pleaſure, for I do not confound Gold with " Copper; but that which Men reliſh by the in- " comparable ſweetneſs of Converſing with Wo- " men". He deſcribes afterwards this ſweetneſs, and then he ſays (k), " Judge, if after this, there be " any misfortune equal to that of not being able " to have a ſhare in their Favour; and I am ſure " that you will hardly condemn me. But I muſt " not any longer continue this Diſcourſe, leſt it " ſhould bring me into Deſpair. He ſaid, one day, to Monſieur de Bellegarde, "You act the part of a " Gallant and Lover of fine Ladies, and can " you pay a Bill at ſight? This was his uſual " Phraſe to ſignifie, whether he was ſtill ready to " ſerve them. Monſieur de Bellegarde anſwer'd him, " Yes Malherbe reply'd in theſe words; as I " live, Sir, I had rather reſemble you in this, " than in your being a Duke and a Peer (l)." Some Caviller perhaps may tell me, that Malherbe reſembled one of the Ancients, who would not renounce Love even when Age made him unable to pleaſe Women.

(i) Malherbe's Letter to Balzac, p 63 of the Collection of new Letters, Printed at Paris, 1642.

(k) Ib p 65.

(l) Racan's Life of Malherbe, p 19

Amare (m) liceat, ſi potiri non licet
Fruantur alii: non morer, non ſum invidus,
Nam ipſe excrucior qui beatis invidet
Quos Venus amavit, fauit amor, compotes
Nobis Cupido velle dat, poſſe abnegat

Hoc illi faciant quos Venus non invidet,
At nolo caſſe jacitem dilectionem
Amare liceat, ſi potiri non licet

(m) Apulerius in Apologia ſua, ex Menandro, in veterum Poetarum Catalectis ad calcem Petronii, p.m 220

I anſwer, that if Malherbe had been ſtill in a Condition to have taken a real Miſtreſs, he would not have made choice of Madam de Rambouillet, whoſe Quality, and much more her Virtue, would have left no manner of Hope. Rambouillet-Houſe, which is become ſo famous, was truly a Palace imaginary Miſtreſſes, that they may have an opportunity to vent their Thoughts. 'Tis very probable that Malherbe (C) had ſcarce any Religion. His good Friend having no mind that this ſhould be believ'd, has taken ſuch a Method as puts it out of all doubt. In the Article concerning Madam des Loges, we have ſet down ſome Facts relating Palace of Honour. " (n) There was nothing but " Gallantry there, and no Love. Mr. de Voiture giving one day his Hand to Mademoiſelle de " Rambouillet, who was afterwards Madam de Montauſier, was ſo bold as to kiſs her Arm. But " Mademoiſelle Rambouillet declar'd ſo ſeriouſly, that " his boldneſs did not pleaſe her, that he had no " mind after that to take the ſame Liberty another " time." We conclude from all this, that the Miſtreſſes of Poets, I mean their Claudina's, their Phyllis's, &c. for whom they make ſo many Love Verſes, are not always the Objects they love. Theſe are only Poetical Miſtreſſes, whom they make uſe of, that they may have a fixed Subject, to which they may apply ſome Thoughts.

(C) That Malherbe had ſcarce any Religion.] " (a) When the Poor ſaid to him that they would " pray to God for him; He anſwer'd them, That " he did not believe they had a great Intereſt " in Heaven, ſince they were left in ſo bad a con- " dition in this World; and that he ſhould like it " better, if Mr. de Luyne, or ſome other Fa- " vourite, had made him the ſame Promiſe.—— " (b) In his Primer, he had blotted out all the " particular Names, from the Litanies of the Saints, " and he ſaid it was ſuperfluous to name them " all one after another, and that it was ſufficient to " name them in general, Omnes ſancti & ſanctæ " Dei, orate pro nobis.—(c) He would ſay ſometimes, " That the Religion of honeſt Men was that of their " Prince." During his laſt Sickneſs, " (d) He " had much a do to reſolve to confeſs his Sins; for " which he gave this Reaſon, That he was not wont " to do it but at Eaſter.—(e) He that prevail'd " with him to reſolve upon this, was Porande, " a Gentleman who had been bred up a Page to " the great Royal Stable, and was his Scholar in " Poetry as well as Racan. To perſuade him to " receive the Sacraments, he told him, that ha- " ving always profeſt to live like other Men, " he muſt alſo die like them; and Malherbe " having ask'd him what he meant by that, he " told him, that when other Men died, they con- " feſs'd their Sins, communicated and receiv'd " the other Sacraments of the Church. Malherbe " confeſs'd he was in the right, and ſent " for the Vicar of St. Germain, who aſſiſted " him in his laſt Hours. Obſerve, that no mo- tive of Religion, no inſtinct of Conſcience pre- vail'd with him to confeſs; but he yielded to a Reaſon purely humane, that we muſt follow the Cuſtom of other Men as well at the point of Death, as during our Life. We ſhall ſee, that at the approach of the fatal Moment, which de- termines our Condition for Eternity, he ſcarce thought of Heaven or Hell (f). " An Hour be- " fore his Death, after he had been two Hours in " an Agony, he awak'd all on a ſudden to reprove " his Land-Lady, who waited upon him, for uſing " a word that was not good French; and when his " Confeſſor reprimanded him for it, he told him he " could not help it, and that he would defend the " purity of the French Tongue until Death." I have heard ſay, that this Confeſſor having repre- ſented to him the Happineſs of another Life, with very little Eloquence, and ask'd of him, whether he did not feel a great deſire to enjoy quickly that Happineſs. Malherbe anſwer'd him, ſpeak no more of this, your bad Style diſguſts me. But I am willing this ſhould be look'd upon as a meer Story, and even that the Truths which Balſac (g) thought fit to ſuppreſs, ſhould be thought to have no relati- on to the laſt Hours of this Poet. Let us on- ly inſiſt upon the Facts that are taken out of his Life, written by Racan his good Friend: Do not they raiſe a violent Preſumption, that his Faith and Piety were very ſmall? (h) Racan enquir'd very carefully in what manner he died, becauſe he had heard him ſay, That the Religion of honeſt Men was that of their Prince. This is a Curioſity, which ſhews, that he was ſuſpected of Irreligion, and that this was a good ground for theſe Suſpicions. 'Tis therefore to no purpoſe for Racan to tell us, that his Friend (i) Was very ſubmiſſive to the Commands of the Church; that he did not willingly eat meat on the forbidden Days without leave, altho' he was very old, that he went to Maſs every Holy-day and Sunday, and that he never fail'd to confeſs & and to Communicate at Eaſter at his own Pariſh; that he ſpoke always of God and Holy Things with great reſpect, and that one of his Friends made him confeſs one Day before Racan, that he had once made a Vow to go from Aix to the Cave of St. Magdalen bare-headed for the Diſeaſe of his Wife. Racan may tell us theſe things as much as he pleaſes, but he can never take off the bad Impreſſions which the other Facts have produced; and if he gains any thing 'tis only this, That Malherbe had determin'd nothing, neither for nor againſt Religion, and that having ſome ſort of Religion in his Mind, not in his Heart, he conform'd to the common Uſage by way of Pre- caution; as being a thing which might be ſerviceable, and could do no hurt. It may be be- liev'd, that in a time of great Affliction, when the Soul is troubled, and turns it ſelf on all ſides, and tries all Remedies that it can think of, he might have had ſome Thoughts which put him upon making Vows; but that this Tempeſt was calm'd in his Heart after the danger was over. We may add to this, that he had Reaſon to fear a real and effective Damage, by not obſerving the Commands of an abſolute Obligation, ſuch as thoſe of his Church are, to Communicate once a Year, to hear Maſs upon Holy-Days and Sundays. A Man of Parts who wants to make his Fortune, or de- ſires to keep himſelf up, will never diſpenſe with this kind of Precepts; he will ſo behave himſelf, that his Neighbours, Friends and Do- meſticks ſhall not know that he deſpiſes the Church, and even carry the matter ſo far, that he will not without leave, eat Meat on the forbidden Days. All the of Religious Actions that Malherbe did, were ſo eaſie and ſo neceſſary to his Fortune, and to the Reputation of an honeſt Man, which he maintain'd in all other things, that they cannot balance the Proofs of Irreligion, which the Rela- tions of Racan do furniſh us with. When I ſaid, that in all other things he maintain'd the Reputa- tion of an honeſt Man, I had regard to the way of judging, which the Corruption of the Times has introduc'd over all the World; for Mankind is ſo deprav'd, that the purſuit of fleſhly Pleaſures by unlawful Ways, and criminal Gallantries, do not hinder a Man from being accounted honeſt. If we ſhould judge otherwiſe of things, Malherbe would not paſs for ſuch an one; for he deſcribes himſelf as one beſotted with thoſe Pleaſures. He repreſents himſelf as one juſt ready to Deſpair, (k) when he thinks that old Age renders him incapable of enjoying Women. Finding himſelf in this State of decay, wherein Nature ſeeks but can- not find herſelf, quærit ſe natura nec invenit; he groan'd and ſigh'd, he ſhed almoſt Tears of Blood, and wiſh'd rather to recover his Strength to enjoy Women, than to have the Dignity of a Duke and Peer. In this he differ'd very much from the Opinion of the wiſe Pagans (m), who re- ckon'd that among the Advantages of old Age, which he accounted a misfortune. How much was he inferior to the Virtue of Sophocles, a Poet like himſelf, but a Pagan Poet! Being old, he was ask'd one Day, whether he could ſtill divert himſelf with the fair Sex: God forbid, anſwered he, I am deliver'd out of the Hands of a furious Ma- ſter, with the greateſt Pleaſure in the World. Bene Sophocles, cum ex eo quidam jam affecto ætate, quæreret, utcreturne rebus venereis: Dii meliora, in- quit. Libenter vero iſtinc, tanquam a domino agreſti, ac furioſo profugi. Cupidis enim rerum talium, odio- ſum, & moleſtum eſt forte aſſe carere. Satiatis vero, & expletis, jucundius eſt carere, quam frui. Quamquam non caret is, qui non deſiderat. Ergo hoc non deſiderare, dico eſſe jucundius, quam frui (n). Malherbe is accu'd of another moral Fault, or rather of two: I mean Vanity and Avarice. He is eaſily convicted of the former, by ſeveral Paſſages in his Poems (o); but the Proofs of the ſecond are of no validity. " (p) Some have thought, ſays Mr. Baillet, that there are " in the Poems of Malherbe, ſome marks of a " meanneſs of Soul, and of his being too much " addicted

(a) Racan's Life of Malherbe, p. 15.

(b) Id. ib. p. 24.

(c) Ibid. p. 45.

(d) Ibid.

(e) Ibid. p. 46.

(f) Ibid.

(g) I cite his words in the Remark D.

(h) Racan, ib. p. 45, 46.

(i) Ibid. p. 45.

(k) See his Letter to Balzac cited and pointed out above Remark B.

(m) Habeo ſenectuti magnam gratiam, quæ mihi ſermonis aviditatem auxit, potionis & cibi ſuſtulit... At non eſt voluptatum tanta quaſi titillatio in ſenibus. Credo: ſed ne deſideratio quidem. Nihil autem moleſtum, quod non deſideres. Cicero de ſenectute, c. 14. p.m. 421. 423. Illa quanti ſunt, animum tam quam emeritis ſtipendiis libidinis, ambitionis, contentionis, inimicitiarum, cupiditatum omnium, ſecum eſſe, ſecumque (ut dicitur) vivere? Id. ib. p. 424.

(n) Id. ib. p. 423. Plato de Repub. lib 1. Cicero init. p.m. 572. 573 relates this Anſwer of Sophocles.

(o) See Bailler Jugement ſur les Poëtes, part. 4. n. 1411. p. 14, &c

(p) Ib. p 17, 18

relating to Malherbe. I shall speak of the best Edition of his Poems (D), and I will say something (E) of his Translations. The Good and Evil which was said of his Works, was carefully Collected by Mr. Baillet *, to whom I refer the Readers. I do not find that Malherbe had any great share in the Affection (F) of Cardinal Richelieu.

He was of the Number of those Authors whom I have mention'd twice or thrice, who write with extream difficulty (G), and who put their Mind upon the Rack to correct

* Jugement des Sçavans, tom. 3. n. 944. & sur les Poetes, tom. 4. 1411.

" addicted to his Interest, which took from him " sometimes the natural Sentiments of Humanity. " But I think that this Accusation has no other " Foundation, but the Epitaph of one of his " Relations call'd M. d'Is, whose Heir he was, " wherein he declar'd, that he wish'd to see all his " Kindred buried, that he might have the whole " Estate of his Family. The Verses of Malherbe " upon this occasion are these.

Icy git Monsieur d'Is,
Plût or à Dieu qu'ils fussent dix!
Mes trois sœurs, mon Pere, & ma Mere,
Le grand Eleasar mon Frere;
Mes trois Tantes, & Monsieur d'Is,
Vour les nomme-je pas tous dix?

Here lies Monsieur d'Is,
I would to God here were Ten,
My three Sisters, my Father and Mother.
The great Eleazar my Brother,
My three Aunts, and Monsieur D'Is.
Don't I name you all the ten?

(q) Indentidem felicem Priamum vocabat, quod superstes omnium suorum exstitisset. Sueton. in Tiberio, cap. 62.

To judge of this impartially, this seems not to be the natural Disposition of q) Tiberius, but a Sally of Wit, and a Poetical Jest, in which the Heart hath no share. Malherbe could not be comforted upon the loss of his Son (r); and he lov'd his Spouse so well, that the Affliction of seeing her sick, awak'd his Religion when it was asleep, and engag'd him to do a thing which he was very much asham'd of afterwards: For he made a Vow to go bare-Headed to St. Baume the Cave where St. Mary Magdalen did Penance) but he was not pleas'd to find it was known that he was so devout, and he was so far from boasting of it, that he endeavour'd, by all means, to conceal it as a secret (f).

(r) See Balzac's Conversation, 37. p. m. 356, &c.

(D) The best Edition of his Poems.] 'Tis that which Menage procur'd and improv'd with many Notes, which was Printed at Paris in 1666. M. Menage had been long before about it, as appears by what is found in a Letter of Mr. Balzac, dated January 23. 1651. " (a) The News of a Commentary " upon the Works of Malherbe surprises me; and " how comes it to pass that our excellent Friend " has given over his design of Publishing Diogenes Laertius, and many other Works of great " importance which he had promis'd to the Pub- " lick, to amuse himself with explaining a Poet " so plain and easie as ours is? I have known him, " 'tis true, and that very particularly; and I " know several particulars of him, which all o- " thers, besides my self, are ignorant of. I have " here, as yet, a Man who saw him die, and whom " I sent to him, not being able to go and " see him, upon the account of my Indisposition. " But what I know, Sir, more than others, " cannot be decently written; for there are cer- " tain Truths which are only fit to be suppress'd". I promis'd in the preceding Remark a part of this Passage, it is therefore longer than my Text requires. Mr. Menage himself informs us, (b) That he was no more than Twenty Years old, when he first had a desire to Comment upon Malherbe, and that if his Friends had not diffuaded him, he would have begun with that to make himself known to the World. He adds, that before his Notes were Publish'd, Mr. Chevreau had Printed a Commentary upon the same Poems. I do not doubt, continues he, but this Commentary contains many very curious things, and very well worth reading: But I am deprived of the pleasure of reading them, lest I should be accused of stealing from Mr. Chevreau, if I should happen to hit upon the same Thoughts; or of having a mind to contradict him, if I be not of his Opinion. Those who have not this Work of Mr Chevreau (of whom I am one), may form an Idea of it from the words of Mr. Baillet. " (c) It were tedious to run over " all the other Faults which are charg'd upon Mal- " herbe. Those who would be fully instructed " may consult a Book of Remarks which Mr Che- " reau has made upon our Poet. Mr Ristaut de- " clares, that having communicated these Re- " marks, or rather Censures to Mademoiselle de Scu- " dery, she gave him to understand, after she had " read them, that she was very much surpriz'd " This Learned and Judicious Lady confessed, that " there may be something which deserves Reproof " in some places of Malherbe's Poems; but she " could not seriously imagine, that this famous Poet " furnish'd Matter for so many Corrections

Note, that Mr. Chevreau does not grant, that his Remarks had not been seen by Mr Menage. See his Narrative and Complaints in a Letter which I quote (d). See also in the second Part of his Miscellanies, and of his Chevræana, many fine and solid Observations against Malherbe.

(a) Balzac's Letter 4th. to Conrart, l. 2. p. m. 100, 101.

(b) In the Preface to this Edition of Malherbe.

(c) Baillet ubi supra, p. 23.

(d) Ibid. p. 193. Cit. of the first tome of the Miscellanies

(E) Something of his Translations.] He has Translated some Works of Seneca, and some Books of Livy, and if he was not successful, yet he had the happiness to be well-satisfied with his Labour (e). " His principal Business was to criticize upon " the French Language; in which he was so well " skill'd, that some of his Friends desir'd him one " Day to make a Grammar for our Tongue —— " He answer'd them, That he need'd not take that pain, " for they might read his Translation of the Seventh " Book of Livy, and he would have them to write after " that manner. But every Body was not of this " Opinion Mademoiselle de Courray, a Learned " Woman of that time, said commonly, That this " Book appear'd to her like a Bubble of fair Water. " She meant, that the Language of it was too " plain, and some thought that she was in the " right." Mr Huet observes, that the Passion Malherbe (f) had to please Courtiers, made him invert the method of his Author, that he neither followed his Pointing nor his Words, and that he studied only to purifie and polish our Language Mr Racan confirms this: " Malherbe, says he (g), said often, and chiefly " when he was reproved for not following the " Sense of the Authors whom he Translated or " Paraphrased, that he would not dress Meat " for Cooks; meaning, that he did not much " care for the Praises of Learned Men, who un- " derstood the Books he had Translated, provid- " ed he was praised by the Courtiers.

(e) Borel, Biblioth. Françoise p. 269. 2d Edit. 1667.

(f) De claris Interpretibus, l. 2. p. 186. apud Baillet, Jugem. tom. 4. p. 542

(g) Racan ubi supra p. 28

(F) In the Affection of Card.nal Richelieu.] 'Twas the misfortune of this Poet, that his Laziness was known to this Cardinal He came to know, that instead of writing new Matter, to set forth the Glory of that great Minister, Malherbe had only patch'd together old Scraps which he found among his Papers. This was not the way to please so nice a Palate, and one that was so haughty as he was; and therefore he receiv'd this Homage from Mr. Malherbe very ill Read these words of Mr Menage; " (h) I learn'd from Mr Racan, that Mal- " herbe wrote those two Stanza's above thirty " Years before Richelieu, to whom he address'd " them, was made a Cardinal, and that he chang'd " only the first four Verses of the first Stanza, to " accommodate them to his Subject I learn'd al- " so from the same Racan, that Cardinal Richelieu, " who knew that these Verses had not been made " for him, did not receive them well, when Mal- " herbe presented them to him, which made Mal- " herbe not to continue them

(h) Menage Observations upon the Poems of Malherbe p. 545

(G) Of the number of those Authors who write with extream difficulty.] He who disguis'd himself under the Name of Eginhardus Germanus, was not ignorant of this. It was not, says he (i), without much watching and labouring, hard, to it Malherbe pronounc'd his Divine Poem. We may compare his Muse to certain Women, who are seven or eight Hours in hard Labour before they can bring forth a Child; and since his Pains were much longer, and more troublesome, than those to which Balzac was expos'd in the like Case, they must have been very terrible Consider a little these words: (k) " At last it is

(i) Melange d'Histoire & de Literature, p. 223, Paris 1699

(k) Balzac Letter 11 l. 2 to Conrart, p. 111, Edit. Lat.

Correct their own Works. The Vain-glorious way wherewith he ſpoke of his Poems would be more offenſive; were it not that Poets (H) have always taken the liberty of praiſing

" finiſh'd; I mean the Diſcourſe which was " mention'd in my laſt Letter, and which is one " of the Five that I have promis'd you. It has " wearied me, ſpent my Spirits, and made me curſe " the Buſineſs a dozen times. Whatever you may " ſay upon this occaſion, I am ſtill leſs difficult " to be pleas'd, than the good Man I have often " mention'd to you, who waſted half a Ream of " Paper to make and unmake one ſingle Stanza. " If your curioſity deſires to know what Stanza " it was, the beginning is as follows.

" Comme en cueillant une guirlande,
" L'homme eſt d'autant plus travaillé.

" Good God, what pains do we take in ſuch kind " of Trifles! Trifles Moral and Political, in " French and Latin, in Proſe and Verſe." This is what Mr. Balzac wrote to Mr. Conrart the 25th of June 1651. The good Man here mention'd is our Malherbe, as plainly appears from the 5th Stanza of his Ode to the Duke of Bellegarde.

(l) Malherbe's Poems, B. 4. p. m. 102

Comme (l) en cueillant une guirlande,
L'homme eſt d'autant plus travaillé,
Que le parterre eſt émaillé
D'une diverſité plus grande;
Tant de fleurs de tant de coſtez
Faiſant paroiſtre en leurs beautez
L'artifice de la Nature,
Il tient ſuſpendu ſon deſir,
Et ne ſait en cette peinture
Ni que laiſſer, ni que choiſir.

(n) He was a Bookſeller of Paris.

If Mr. Menage had known this Circumſtance which Balzac knew concerning the pains, which that Stanza coſt the Author, he had doubtleſs inſerted it in his Notes upon this place of Malherbe. I have elſewhere related what is commonly ſaid of the inconceivable Difficulty wherewith Mr. Balzac wrote his Books. We have already ſeen what he ſays of it himſelf; and here follows another Paſſage out of his Letters to Mr. Conrart. " (n) " Mr. Courbé thinks perhaps, that I proceed as " faſt as Salmaſius, who goes faſter than the " Tranſcribers and Printers. One ſmall Letter " coſts me more pains than a large Book does this " devourer of Books. Happy are thoſe Writers " who are ſo eaſily ſatisfied, who labour only " with their Memory and Fingers, who without " chooſing write all that they know (o)". This ſerves me for a Proof; for ſince Malherbe was yet more difficult to be pleas'd than Mr. Balzac was, whatever repreſents to us the pains of the latter, encreaſes the Idea we have of the great pains, which the other endur'd. What follows is a ſhorter Proof, ſince we find in it, that Malherbe ſurpaſs'd Balzac in point of trouble. " (o) " Good Malherbe told me often, that after having Compos'd a Poem of one Hundred Verſes, " or a Diſcourſe of three Sheets, one muſt reſt " Ten full Years. Mr Courlé is not of that O- " pinion, neither am I. I don't want to reſt " ſo long after ſuch a ſmall work. But ſhould I " expect that happy Facility, which enables M. de Scudery to produce large Volumes, I ſhould be " ignorant of my ſelf, and do my ſelf a greater Honour than I deſerve.

(o) Balzac Letter 12. of the firſt Book to Conrart, p. 50. See what he ſays in Letter 24 of the 2 B. O happy Writers, Salmaſius in Latin, and Scudery in French! I admire your eaſineſs and plenty! You can write more Calepins than I can Almanacks.

(a) Balzac's Letter 16. of the ſame Book, p. 58.

There are ſo many things to be collected about this Character of Mens Wit, that after the many Citations I have already produc'd elſewhere (b) upon this Subject, there remains ſtill more to be added. Caſaubon was free from the ſlavery under which theſe Authors groan, who write their Letters many times over and do nothing but blot out. He has made an authentick Declaration of it. De mih. quæſo, ſays he (c), ut αὐτεχνως & ὡς ἐπὶτὸν ἀσκον γνω λόγο tecum loqui liceat. Polire impenſa cura quæcunque ſcribas, præſertim autem epiſtolas, &

(b) See Linacer Remark I

(c) Caſaubon Epiſt. 173.

de ſingulis verbis ire in conſilium, diligentiaris eſt hominis atque, ut ingenue dicam, ἀνοητου. φλεγματικὸ quam ego ſum. The Phraſe he makes uſe of to expreſs the Scruples of a Writer, who deliberates upon every word, is that of Seneca (d) the Father. The Exceſſes committed in this kind, are very much to be blam'd, and are indeed a Yoke which reduces the Pen ſometimes to a kind of barrenneſs. Quintilian cenſures it very juſtly, and ſays, This is to be Condemn'd to the unhappy Puniſhment of ſtandering one's ſelf. (e) Nec enim rurſus eos qui robur aliquod in ſtylo fecerint, ad infælicem calumniandi ſe panam alligandos puto. Nam quomodo ſuffiuere civilibus officiis poſſit, qui ſingulis actionum partibus inſu.ſcat? Sunt autem quibus nihil ſit ſatis: omnia mutare, omnia aliter dicere quam occurrit, velint: incredulí quidam, & de ingenio ſuo peſſime meriti, qui diligentiam putant, fuere ſibi ſcribendi difficultatem. It is not eaſie to determine, adds he, whether thoſe who approve whatever they write, are more to be blam'd than thoſe who are always diſcontented. He obſerves, that this great niceneſs is attended ſometimes with ſpite and Deſpair; and he relates what was ſaid to a young Man, who was vex'd for having taken a great deal of needleſs pains for the ſpace of three Hours to find out the Exordium of his Subject: Would you, ſaid one to him, write better than you can do? The Words of Quintilian have more Beauty and Strength. (g) Nec promptum eſt dicere, utros petere validius putem, quibus omnia ſua placent, an quibus nihil. Accidit enim etiam ingenioſis adoleſcentibus frequenter, ut labore conſumantur, & in ſilentium uſque deſcendant nimia bene dicendi cupiditate. Qua de re memini narraſſe mihi Julium ſecundum, illum æqualem noſtrum, atque à me, ut notum eſt, familiariter amatum, miræ facundiæ virum, infinitæ tamen curæ, quid eſſet ſibi à patruo ſuo dictum. Is fuit Julius Florus, in eloquentia Galliarum (quoniam ibi demum exercuit eam) princeps, alioqui inter paucos diſertus, & dignus illa propinquitate. Is cum Secundum ſcholæ adhuc operam dantem triſtem forte vidiſſet, interrogavit, Quæ cauſſa frontis tam obductæ? Nec diſſimulavit adoleſcens, tertium jam diem eſſe, ex quo omni labore materiæ ad ſcribendum deſtinatæ non invenuret exordium: quo ſibi non præſens tantum dolor ſed etiam deſperatio in poſterum fieret. Tum Florus arridens, Num quid tu, inquit, melius dicere vis, quam potes? Ita ſe res habet: Curandum eſt, ut quam optime dicamus: dicendum tamen pro facultate. Ad profectum enim opus eſt ſtudio, non indignatione.

(d) Quiqui ſ.ſ.ſius ſ.ſ.ent, qui ſe ſingulis verbis in conſilium veniunt, neceſſe eſt quæ totiens animo ſuo admoverint noviſſime affigant. Seneca præf. lib. 1 controverſ. p. m. 72.

(e) Quintil. l. 10. c. 3. p. m. 484.

(g) Quintil ubi ſupra.

(H) The Poets have always taken the liberty of praiſing themſelves ] I have (h) elſewhere blam'd Malherbe for giving himſelf Elogiums more becoming a Captain upon the Stage than an honeſt Man: And I have cited two Authors, whereof one (i) condemns him, or (k) juſtifies him only ironically, and the other excuſes him in earneſt (l), and ſhows, that the liberty of giving one ſelf pompous Elogiums, is an ancient privilege of the Sons of the Muſes. He obſerves, that Virgil, Horace and Ovid have made uſe of it. He treats this Matter more largely in another Work, wherein he relates † the places in which Ennius, Nævius, Plautus, Catullus, Lucretius, Virgil, Horace, Ovid, Propertius, Lucan, Statius and Martial praiſe themſelves. He ſhows alſo (m) that the Moderns (n) have imitated thoſe Examples. Note, that he goes back as far as the Greek Poets; for he cites (o) Pindar, Heſiod, Theocritus and Moſchus. I refuted a Man the other Day, who told me, that thoſe who pretend that the Grecians knew nothing but what they had learn'd from the Phœnicians, had forgot a Remark which favours them; which is this, That the Poets who promis'd Immortality to ſome Perſons whom they prais'd, had borrow'd this Idea from the Epithalamium contain'd in the 45th Pſalm, which ends thus according to the Verſion of Buchanan.

Nec ſu carminibus regina tacebere noſtris,
Quæque patet tellus liquido circumſona pon.
Fœmineas te ſ.ra canet, quamque aurea volve.
Aſtra polus, in mori ſ.ſ.ſ celebrabere fama.

(h) In the new Letters againſt Maimbourg. p. 123.

(i) Coſta's Letter 50. vol. 1. p. 126.

(k) Idem continuation of the defence of Voiture, p. m. 32.

(l) Menage's Obſervations upon the Poems of Malherbe, p. 331, &c.

† Id. Anti-Baillet, tom. 2. p. 139.

(m) Id. c. 137. 140.

(n) F. Caſimir Sarbieſchi, F. Vavaſſeur, F. Rapin, F. Commire, in their Latin Verſes: Ronſard, Joachim du Bellai, Malherbe, and du Perier in their French Verſes

(o) Men ib. c. 138.

praiſing themſelves exceſſively. I don't doubt but that 'tis he whom Balzac ſpeaks of when he laughs at a certain Tyrant of Syllables (I).

MAMMILLARIANS, a Sect among the Anabaptiſts. I do not know the time when this new Schiſm aroſe; but the City of Haerlem * is ſaid to be the Native Place of this Subdiviſion. It owes its Original to the liberty which a young Man took of putting his Hand into the Boſom of a Maid whom he lov'd, and had a mind to Marry: This touch of her Breaſt came to the knowledge of the Church; and hereupon they conſulted what Puniſhment the Delinquent ought to ſuffer. Some maintain'd that he ought to be Excommunicated; others ſaid that his Fault deſerv'd favour, and would never conſent to his Excommunication. The Diſpute grew to ſuch a height, that it caus'd a total Rupture between the two Parties. Thoſe who declar'd for Indulgence to the young Man, were call'd (A) Mammillarians †. In one ſenſe this does a great deal of Honour to the Anabaptiſts; for it is a proof that they are much more ſtrict in their Morals (B) than thoſe who are called Rigoriſts in the Spaniſh Low-Countries. I ſhall relate to this purpoſe a certain Story (C) which is told of Labadie. I have been told that ſome People of Senſe maintain'd one Day in Converſation, that there will never be (D) any Baſiarians, or Oſculatians among the Anabaptiſts

* See Micrælius ſyntagm. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. p 1012. edit. 1679.

† See Stoupp's Religion of the Hollanders, Letter 3. p. m. 16. See alſo the Syntagma of Micrælius ubi ſupra.

MAMURRA,

Quant eſt de moi, à ton nom & ta gloire
Ecrai eſcrits d'éternelle memoire,
Et par leſquels les gens a l'avenir
Sans fin voudront te chanter & benir.

I told this Man, that his Remark appear'd to me Childiſh, and that he was much to blame to wonder, that Mr. Menage had not made uſe of it. Mr Menage had too much Judgment to mix prophane and ſacred Authorities together.

(I) When he laughs at a certain Tyrant of Syllables.] The Deſcription is very lively, and may convince us that there are People, who are little reſpected after their Deaths, by thoſe Perſons who gave them a thouſand tokens of Veneration, and who fancy, that provided they don't name them, they may be as ſharp upon them as they pleaſe. This is my proof for it

(g Balzac Socrate Chreſtean Diſcourſe 10. p. m. 267, 268.

" (g You remember the old Court Pedagogue, who " was formerly call'd the Tyrant of Words and " Syllables; nay, when he was in a good Humour " he call'd himſelf the Grammarian with Spectacles " and gray Hair. We muſt not imitate the ri- " diculous things which are related of this old Do- " ctor, our Ambition is to follow better Exam- " ples. I pity a Man who makes ſo great a " difference between Pas and Point, who treats " of Gerunds and Participles, as if they were " two Neighbouring Nations jealous of their " Frontiers. This Doctor in the vulgar Tongue, " us'd to ſay, that he had endeavour'd to Ungaſcon " the Court, but that he could not obtain his " End. Death ſnapt him minding a Period, and " he was ſurpriz'd by his Climacterical Year, " whilſt he was deliberating whether Doute and " Erreur were Maſculine or Feminine. With what " Attention did he deſire to be heard, when he " dogmatiz'd on the Uſe and Virtue of Particles?

(A) Were called Mammillarians.] I need not here turn Etymologiſt: All that underſtand French know, that the word Mammelle, which is now little us'd, ſignifies the ſame thing as Teton, a Teat.

(B) Who are much more ſtrict in their Morals than the Rigoriſts.] The looſeſt Caſuiſts's, the Sanchez's, and the Eſcobars condemn the touching of the Paps. They agree that it is an Impurity and a branch of Luxury, one of the ſeven mortal Sins. But if I miſtake not, they do not impoſe upon him that is guilty of it any very ſevere Penance; and there are many Countries in Europe, where they are forc'd to treat this as one of the ſmall Faults, which are called quotidianæ incurſionis. This bad Practice is ſo common in thoſe Countries, and it is a thing ſo ordinary even in the middle of the Streets, eſpecially among the common People, that the moderate Caſuiſts perſuade themſelves this prevailing Cuſtom blots out one half of the Crime. They think that it is look'd upon under the Idea of a very diſhoneſt Liberty, and that the offence of the Spectators is very ſmall: Upon which account they ſlightly paſs over this Article of Confeſſion. I do not believe that any Rigoriſt did ever, upon ſuch an occaſion, delay the Abſolution of his Penitent, not even in thoſe Climates where this kind of Fumbling is little us'd, and paſſes for one of thoſe Liberties, at which Women are oblig'd to be angry. Thus the Anabaptiſts are the moſt rigid of all the Chriſtian Moraliſts, ſince they condemn to Excommunication one that touches the Boſom of a Miſtreſs whom he has a mind to Marry, and break off Eccleſiaſtical Communion with thoſe who will not Excommunicate ſuch a Spark.

(C) A certain Story which is told of Labadie.] All who have heard of this Man, know that he recommended to his Devoto's both Men and Women ſome Spiritual Exerciſes, and that he prepar'd them for inward Recollection and mental Prayer 'Tis ſaid, that having given to one of his devout Women a ſubject of Meditation, and recommended to her earneſtly an entire and cloſe Application to this great Object for ſome Hours, he came near her when he thought that ſhe was moſt recollected, and put his Hand into her Boſom. She beat him off briskly, and declar'd to him her great ſurprize at this kind of proceeding, and was preparing to cenſure him when he prevented her. I perceive, my Child, ſaid he to her, without being diſturb'd, and with a devout Air, that you are ſtill very far from Perfection: Confeſs humbly your weakneſs, beg pardon of God for having been ſo little attentive to the Myſteries you are meditating upon. If you had had all the attention that was neceſſary, you would not have perceived that which was done to your Breaſt. But you was ſo little abſtracted from Senſe, ſo little concentred with the Deity, that in a moment you knew when I touched you. My deſign was to try your fervour in Prayer, whether you were raiſed above Matter, and united to the Sovereign Being, the living Source of Immortality and Spiritualty, and I perceive, with much grief, that you have made but a very ſmall progreſs. Let this, my Child, fill you with Confuſion, and excite you to perform better for the future the holy Duty of mental Prayer. 'Tis ſaid, the Maid having good Senſe as well as Vertue, was no leſs angry at theſe words, than at the Action of Labadie, and that ſhe would no more hear of ſuch a Guide. I do not warrant the certainty of all theſe Facts, but I do affirm, that 'tis very probable, that ſome of theſe Spiritual Devoto's, who make People believe, that a ſtrong Meditation will raviſh the Soul, and hinder it from perceiving the Actions of the Body, have a mind to fumble their devout Siſters with Impunity, and to do ſtill worſe: of which the Molinoſiſts are accus'd. In general, there is no thing more dangerous to the Mind, than too myſtical, and too much abſtracted Devotions, and doubtleſs the Body in that caſe runs ſome hazard, and many are glad to be deceiv'd.

(D) There will never be any Baſiarians or Oſculatians.] Theſe would be a ſort of People who would cut Men off from their Communion, becauſe they would not conſent to Excommunicate thoſe who kiſs their Miſtreſſes. Thoſe who denied that any ſuch Schiſm can be expected, did it upon theſe grounds. Such a Schiſm is not poſſible, ſaid they, unleſs ſome Caſuiſts ſhould be ſo ſevere, as to make Excommunication the Puniſhment of a Kiſs, as ſome have been found ſo rigid, as to make a Man undergo that Penance who had touch'd the Breaſt of his Miſtreſs. Theſe two Caſes are no-wiſe parallel. The Laws of Courtſhip in certain Nations, continued they, have eſtabliſh'd from Generation to Generation, and chiefly among Perſons of the third State, that Kiſſes ſhould be the firſt favour, and that touching the Breaſt ſhould be almoſt the laſt, or the laſt but one When People are educated in theſe Principles, they do not believe that they do, or ſuffer any great matter by Kiſſing; but they believe MAMURRA, a Roman Knight, a Native of Formium, purchas'd prodigious * Riches in Gaul, where he attended Cæsar in the quality of Overseer of the Work-men, if I may so translate the Præfectus Fabrûm in Pliny. He us'd his Riches as voluptuous Men do; he heap'd them up with great Avarice, and a devouring Extortion, and spent them prodigally in all sorts of Luxury. Alieni appetens, sui profusus, as is said of Catiline †. He built a House extreamly magnificent at Rome upon Mount Cœlius; all its Walls were cover'd with Marble, and he was the first * that built one with that Magnificence, which consisted in placing handsomely little pieces of Marble very thin, and of divers Colours, all over the Walls. There was no Column in this House but what was all of the most precious Marble. Catullus (E) made very Satyrical Verses against the immense Robberies of Mamurra, and the debauch'd Life which he supposed between Julius Cæsar and him: We have spoken of it in the Article of this Poet.

* Cicero ad Attic. l. 7 Epist. 7. Plin. ubi infra.

† Sallust. in bello Catilinar.

MANARD (JOHN) Born at Ferrara in 1462, was one of the ablest Physicians of his Age: You will find in Moreri, that he was Physician to Uladislaus King of Hungary, that afterwards he was Professor in Physick at Ferrara, and that having Married when he was very old a young Wife, he run into Extravagancies (A) which kill'd him. The Poets did not fail to jest upon this occasion, and chiefly those who knew that an they do or suffer a great deal by the handling of the Breast. And therefore, tho' those who administer the Canonical Laws, complain'd very much of the young Man, who was protected by the Mammillarians, it does not follow that they would do so against the other kind of Courtship. No, they would allow something to Custom, and pardon those Liberties which pass for the first Element, and the Alphabet of caressing Civilities. I relate these things, only to show, that there is no Subject to which the Conversation of Persons of Merit will not sometimes descend. 'Tis not useless to discover this weakness of intelligent Men. Does such a Speculation deserve in Conscience to be examin'd? And after all, had it not been much better, not to have given a decisive Answer about a thing future? De futuro contingenti non est quoad nos determinata veritas, is the judicious saying of the Masters of the Schools of Philosophy.

*Primum Romæ parietes crusta marmoris operuisse totius domus suæ in Cœlio monte Cornelius Nepos tradidit Mamurram Formiis natum, equitem Romanum, Præfectum fabrum C. Cæsaris in Gallia. Neq; indignatio sit tali auctore inventa re, hic namque est Mamurra Catulli Veronensis carminibus pro scissus, quem & res & domus ipsius clarius quam Catullus dixit habere quidquid habuisset comata Gallia &c. Plin. l. 36. c. 6.

I observe, by the by, that in some Countries it was suppos'd, that the first Kiss a Maid receiv'd from her Gallant, was that of her Betrothing. This we read in the History of Marseilles. (a) The Man gave commonly a Ring to the Woman on the Day of their Betrothing, and made also some considerable Present in acknowledgment for the Kiss he gave her. In effect, Fulco, Viscount of Marseilles, made a Grant in 1005, to Odila betrothed to him, for the first Kiss, of all the demesns he had in the Territories of Sixfours, Cireste, Soliers, Cuges and Olieres. This Custom was founded, as I take it, upon the Law (1) 16. Si a Sponso, which ordained, that when the Marriage did not take effect, the Woman betrothed should get half of the Presents she had received from the Man; for the Ancients believed that the purity of a Virgin was defiled by one single Kiss; but this Law at present is abrogated in this Kingdom.

(a) Russi. Hist of Mars. tom. 2. p. 391. edit. 1696.

(1) Leg. 16. Cod. lib. 5.

(E) Catullus made very Satyrical Verses.] Here follows the beginning of his Thirtieth Epigram:

Quis hoc potest videre, quis potest pati
Nisi impudicus, & vorax & helluo?
Mamurram habere quod Comata Gallia
Habebat unctum, & ultima Britannia.
Cinæde Romule hæc videbis & feres,
Es impudicus & vorax & alco.

The 58th Epigram is yet more sharp.

Pulcre convenit improbis Cinædis,
Mamurræ Pathicoque Cæsarique.

(c) Corradus, & Lambinus.

Some Interpreters (c) of Cicero, think that these words of the 52d. Letter of the 13th Book to Atticus, Tum audivit de Mamurra, vultum non mutavit (d), signifie, that Cæsar did not change his Colour, when he was told, that Catullus had written Verses against him and Mamurra: But this explication is ill-grounded. Cæsar being return'd from the defeat of Pompey's Sons, was then at a Country-House of Cicero's. Now what probability is there, that he was then ignorant of the Verses of Catullus, and that it was any News to inform him of them? We have shown at large (e) in another place, that the defeat of Pompey's Sons was long after the Reconciliation of Cæsar and Catullus. Manutius imagines, that some then spoke to Cæsar about the neglect of the sumptuary Laws, of which Mamurra was then guilty. This is more probable than the Explication of Lambinus.

(d) The Edition of Mr. Grævius has it non mutavi.

(e) In the Article of Catullus.

(A) Extravagancies which kill'd him. The Poets did not fail.] Paulus Jovius accuses him of great want of Judgment. When he was very Old and Gouty, says he, he married a Wife whose Beauty and Youth requir'd a Man in the Flower of his Age. The worst of it was, adds he, that he fell into intemperance, even at the expence of his Life: He show'd a greater desire to have Children than to live, and he was willing to hasten the Hour of his Death, provided he could obtain the Title of Father. (a) Duxit autem uxorem plane senex, & articulorum dolore distortus, ab ætate, formaque, florentis juvenis toro dignam, adeo levi judicio, & letali quidem intemperantia, ut maturando funeri suo, aliquanto prolis, quam vitæ cupidior ab amicis censeretur. You may find in Moreri (b) an Epigram consisting of six Latin Verses upon this Subject, by Cursius; but you will not find there this distich of Latomus.

(a) Paulus Jovius in Elog. c. 81. p. 190.

In fovea qui te peristurum dixit Aruspex,
Non est mentitus: conjugis illa fuit.

(b) It is in Paulus Jovius, ibid.

This Distich was so much descanted upon, that at last some said, that Manard, to shun the Prediction, kept at a distance from all Ditches. He dream'd of nothing but the literal sense, and never mistrusted the Allegorical: But he knew by experience, that it is not always the Letter which kills, and that the Allegory sometimes gives the mortal Blow. He died on the Night of his Marriage, in the very Minute of Enjoyment, and thus the Prediction was fulfill'd. Thus some Writers circumstantiate the thing. I wonder they did not compare him to Bees (c) who die by the Stings which they give. (d) Johannes Manardus——cum ab Astrologo ipsi prædictum fuisset, vitæ periculum in FOVEA ipsi imminere, à foveis sibi timuit & fossis, non satis perspecta oraculi κρύψει. Cum vero illiberis, prolis aliquanto quam vitæ cupidior, plane senex uxorem duceret juvenculam, prima nuptiali nocte cum dilecta concumbens, desideratis intentus amoribus, in genitali fovea extinctus, suavi morte oraculi implevit scopum, & funus maturavit suum. I believe they are mistaken; for such a Circumstance would never have been omitted by those who first spoke of this matter; and I observe that Paulus Jovius induces us to believe that Manard did not die so soon. No body informs us whether his endeavours were attended with some fecundity, and whether he had at least the consolation to leave his Wife big with Child. To labour much, and after all return empty, is very unpleasant.

(c) Animasque in vulnere ponunt. Virgil. Georg. [illegible] v. 242.

(d) Vera Eleusinia patefacta, p. 181, 182, edit. Francof. 1684.

Αἰνῶς γ' (e) τοῦτ' ἐστὶν τὰ μὴν ἐν τε γένεσθαι.
Nam turpe diuque manere inanemque redire.

(e) Homer Il. l. 2. v. 298

If it were true, that this good old Man died in the Night of his Marriage, a Soothsayer who had foretold him what is to be seen in the two Verses, which are in the close of a Passage I am now to transcribe, had answer'd much better than he that made the Latin Distich already cited. The Passage is taken out of [illegible] Chevreau, and is very pat to the purpose, for it is concerning the Incidence of old Men who Marry. "(f) If you had "consider'd seriously the principal end [illegible] "riage, you would easily have perceived [illegible] "principal an Aſtrologer had foretold he ſhould die in a Ditch. He died at Ferrara in March 1536. at the Age (B) of Seventy Four Years, and was * interr'd in the Cloiſter of the Carmelites. 'Tis ſaid in the Inſcription of his Sepulchre, that he had (C) reſtor'd Phyſick to its ancient Dignity, after he had many times put to flight the many baſe Pretenders that diſhonour'd it. His Letters † are the beſt part of his Works. Calcagninus commends them, and ſpeaks (D) of their Author with great Eſteem.

(f) Chevreau's Miscellanies, part 1. p. 149. in a Letter dated October 15. 1691.

* Tandemque redit ad pulpita notum Exodium cum perſonæ pallentis hiatum In gremio matris formidat ruſticus infans. Juvenal Sat. 3. v. 174.

† They are didided into twenty Books: you may find a Summary of them in Geſner's Bibliotheque.

MANDUCUS. Thus the Romans nam'd certain Figures, or Perſons whom they produced in a Comedy, or (A) at other publick Sports, to make ſome laugh, and to terrifie others. 'Tis not difficult to gueſs why theſe Perſons were thus call'd. We need only remember, that they had great Cheeks, a great open Mouth, and long and ſharp Teeth, which they cracked luſtily. Juvenal * informs us, that Children were frighted with them: And from hence doubtleſs the Mothers took occaſion to threaten their Children who would not obey † their Commands, that Manducus would come and eat them. It was therefore made a Night Scare-crow or Spectre. This did not ill agree with the Tradition of the Lamiæ; for 'twas ſaid, that they alſo devour'd Children. If we muſt believe Scaliger (B) Manducus was call'd Pytho Gorgonius, by a Poet who thus entitled a Dramatick Piece. This Poet applied himſelf chiefly to the Comedies call'd Atellanes, wherein this kind of Figures above-mention'd, did chiefly take place. Our Remarks contain a proof of all this. In a parallel between the Ancient and Modern Cuſtoms, one ſhould join together Manducus and Loupgarou; i. e. The Man-Wolf. See our Article of Acco.

(†) See the Commentary upon the Emblems of Alciatus, p. 717 of the edit of Padua, 1661.

MANICHEANS, Hereticks, whoſe infamous Sect founded by one (A) Manes, [illegible] in the Third Century, and ſettled in many Provinces, and (g) Id. ib. pag. 150.

(h) Patin's Letter 96. p. 383. of tom. 1.

(l) F. Agoſtino Superbi da Ferrara, Theologo e Predicatore de Minori Conventuali, apparato degli huomini illuſtri della citta di Ferrara, p. 74.

(m) Geſner in Biblioth. fol. 455.

(n) It is in Agoſtino Superbi, who ſays 'tis to be ſeen in the Cloiſter of the Carmelites of Ferrara.

(o) I do not know whether the ſe four Letters ſignifie plus minus ſexaginta.

(p) Calcagninus epiſt. 54. l. 20. inter Eraſmianas, p. 1019

" principal end does not belong to us who are " Eighty Years old: And I offer at a venture to " maintain at my own Charges the Nurſes of the " firſt Fruits of your Family, provided you have " no helper, and do not delight in rocking " other folks Children in the Cradle at your Houſe. " (g) The Counſel of St. Paul, That 'tis better to marry than to burn, in my Opinion does neither belong to you nor to me: And I could relate to " you many examples and Authorities of the ridiculouſneſs of old Men, who reſolve to marry, " when they ought to think of their Funerals. " This ridiculouſneſs is always mortal; and you " may underſtand me without a Commentary, " when I put you in mind of the Verſes which Hardy aſcribes to a Confident of Alcyoneus, who " thought that in order to get the States of his " King, he ſhould marry his Daughter.

" One and the ſame Torch you ſhall have,
" To light you both to Bed and the Grave."

Let us add to this a Paſſage of Guy Patin (h). A Counſellor of the great Chamber, being almoſt upon the brink of the Grave, would needs marry a pretty young Daughter of another Counſellor. I think the good Man fanſies he has done a fine Exploit; but ſee how well theſe good Men are capable of judging our Cauſes who commit ſuch follies. We have ſeen in another place what Dr. Patin ſaid of ſuch another Paſſion of Dr. de Lorme a famous Phyſician, and who had, as ſome ſay, a Fate very different from that of our Manard; he was the occaſion of the Death of his young Spouſe, and hereby ſhow'd that the Aphoriſm, The weakeſt goes to the Wall, is not always true.

(B) He died in March 1536, at the Age of 74 Years.] This is ſet down in his Epitaph. Brother Auguſtin Superbi of Ferrara is miſtaken when he affirms (l), that our Manard died in 1545. Geſner (m) on the other ſide, who wrote his Biblioteheque in 1544, and who tells us, that he heard ſome ſay, that Manard died about ſix Years before, was not well inform'd.

(C) He reſtored Phyſick to its ancient Dignity.] The words of his (n) Epitaph are theſe. Ann. (o) P. M. L. X. Continuato inter tuos Docendo & Scribendo, tum innocentiſſime medendo omnem Medicinam ex arce bonarum literarum ſæde prolapſam, & in Barbarorum Poteſtatem ac ditionem redactam, Proſtratis ac profligatis hoſtium copiis identidem ut Hydra renaſcentibus in Antiquum Priſtinumque ſtatum ac nitorem reſtituit.

(D) Calcagninus ſpeaks of Manard with a very great eſteem.] This is in a Letter he wrote to Eraſmus in 1525, wherein you may ſee that having declar'd his Affliction for the Death of Camicenus, he adds: (p) Una res mihi ſolatio fuit, quod Joannes Manardus vir Græcè & Latine doctiſſimus, rem medicam curæ arcanæ iſdem veſtigiis proſequitur, cujus rei ſpecimen dare poſſunt epiſtolæ, quas proxime edidit: eas puto in manus tuas pervenſſe, quod ſi nondum pervenſſe ſignificaveris, dabo curam, ut quamprimum ad te perferantur. Scripſit ille quidem alia plurima digna immortalitate, ſed vir minime ambitioſus ea nondum publicam materiam fecit: hoc ſuperſtite minus Leonicenum deſideramus.

(A) Or at other publick Sports.] I prove it by theſe two Verſes of Plautus (q).

CH. Quid ſi aliquo ad ludos me pro Manduco locem?
LA. Quapropter? CH. Quia pol clarè crepito dentibus.

(q) Rudent. act. 2. Scen. 6. v. 51.

Upon which the Commentator Philippus Pareus makes this Note which he borrow'd from Scaliger. (r) Manducus eſt μορμολυκεῖον quod in ludis circumferebatur inter cæteras ridiculariaſ & formidoloſas perſonas, magnis malis, lateque dehiſcens & clarè crepitans dentibus. Scaliger adds, that this was done chiefly when the Atellanes were acted, and cites the Paſſage I have related out of Juvenal. Dentes, continues he, magnos & voracitatem attribuebant nocturnis illis terriculamentis; quo nomine factum ut Lamiam puerorum infantium deglutricem fingerent.

(r) Scalig in Varron. de ling. Lat. p. 150

(B) If we muſt believe Scaliger.] Here is the ſequel of the words alledg'd in the preceding Article. Inde Pomponius Atellanarius Poëta inſcripſit exodium quoddam Pythonem Gorgonium, qui nihil aliud erat, ut puto, quam ille Manducus, de quo dixi. Nam Pythonem pro terriculamento, & Gorgonium pro Manduco, quia ſpectabat cum magnis dentibus pingebantur. Itaque apud Nonium ita leges, gumiæ Guloſi. Lucilius libro XXX.

Illo quid fiat Lamia, & Pytho oxyodontes.
Quo veniunt illæ gumiæ, vetulæ, improbæ, ineptæ

(A) Founded by one Manes.] He was a Perſian by Nation, of a very mean Birth, but well-ſhap'd and of a good Wit, (a) which was the reaſon that a Widow who bought him, had took an Affection for him, adopted him for her Son, and took care to have him inſtructed by the Magi, in the Diſcipline and Philoſophy of the Perſians, wherein he improv'd ſo much, that being otherwiſe naturally Eloquent, and expreſſing himſelf eaſily and with a good Grace, he acquir'd the Reputation of a ſubtil and learned Philoſopher. He ſtudied chiefly the Books of a certain Arabian call'd Scythianus, and took from him the greateſt part of his wicked Doctrines. Terebinthus Heir to the Eſtate, Money, and Impieties of Scythianus, had brought upon himſelf a great Perſecution, for having Publiſh'd ſome Doctrines in Perſia, and fled to this Widow's Houſe. He made a very Tragical End; his Books and Money remained with the Widow, and by this means Manes found in her Houſe the Writings of Scythianus. " (b) When, according his to cuſtom, " he aſcended in the Night-time to the top of the " Houſe (c) to invoke upon the Platform the Demons of the Air, which the Manichæans have us'd " ſince in their execrable Ceremonies, he was ſuddenly ſtruck with a Blow from Heaven, which " threw

(a) Maimbourg's Hiſt of St. Leo. B. 1 p. 11

(b) Maimb ib

(c) i. e. the Widow's Houſe

and continu'd a very long time, tho' they taught ſuch Doctrines, as of all things in the World ſhould create in us the greateſt Horror. Their weakneſs did not conſiſt, as at firſt it may ſeem, in their Doctrine of two Principles, one good, and the other bad; but in the particular Explications (B) they gave of them, and in the practical Conſequences

" threw him down from the top to the bottom up" on the Ground, whereby his Head was cruſh'd
" and his Neck broken." St. Epiphanius relates (d) that Scythianus had the ſame fate; i. e. that he fell from the top of his own Houſe. Others ſay, that the Devil carried Terebinthus into a Deſert, and there ſtrangled him, and that Scythianus was cruſh'd under the Ruins of his Houſe at Jeruſalem. (e) Scythianus autem domus ſuæ ruina oppreſſus miſere periit. Diſcipulum autem & ſucceſſorem doctrinæ ſuæ habuit quendam nomine Buddam, cognomine Terebinthum, qui & ipſe à Satana in ſolitudinem abreptus ſtrangulatus eſt. They ſay alſo (f) that Manes Married the Widow who enfranchis'd him, and hereby they find a continuation of the Parallel they make between him and Mahomet. They add, that he was flea'd alive, becauſe of the Enchantments and Witchcraft he us'd to kill the King's Son. Poſtquam ſuis incantationibus Regis Perſarum filium necaſſet, vivus ab eo excoriatus eſt (g). But it is much more probable, that he did all that lay in him to cure him. This is certain, that he pretended to reſtore his Health, but he did not perform his promiſe. "(h)
" The Report being ſpread every where of the " great Power he was ſaid to have of working Mi" racles, he was ſent for by King Sapores to cure
" his Son who was very ſick. At firſt this bold
" Deceiver drove away all the Phyſicians who had " undertaken the Cure of this young Prince, and " promis'd the King to reſtore him quickly to per" fect Health, without any other Remedy but " that of his own (i) Prayers. But the Child dy" ing between his Arms, the King being furiouſly
" provok'd againſt him, caus'd him to be put into " Priſon, from whence he eſcap'd and fled into " Meſopotamia. There he was twice confuted in " two ſolemn Diſputes, by the Holy and Learn'd
" Biſhop (i) Archelaus, who had much a do to " ſave him from the fury of the People, who " would have torn him in pieces. Nevertheleſs
" this ſecur'd him but a little while, for in a ſhort
" time after he was re-taken by ſome Horſe-Men, " who were ſent every where after him, and car" ried to Sapores, who caus'd him to be flea'd a" live, and then threw his Body to the Dogs to " be devour'd by them, and hang'd up his Skin
" ſtuffed with Straw before one of the Gates of " the City.

(B) The Explications they gave of them, and the practical Conſequences.] According to the Manicheans (k) the two Principles fought together and in this Conflict there was made a mixture of Good and Evil. Ever ſince the good Principle labour'd to ſeparate what belong'd to him: He ſpread his Vertue among the Elements to make in them this ſeparation. The Elect alſo labour'd in it; for all that was impure in the Meat they did eat, ſeparated from the Particles of the good Principle, and then theſe Particles thus ſever'd and purify'd, were tranſported to the Kingdom of God, their firſt Country, upon two Veſſels appointed for that purpoſe. Theſe two Veſſels are the Sun and Moon. (l) Ipſam vero boni a malo purgationem ac liberationem non ſolum per totum mundum, & de omnibus ejus elementis virtutem Dei facere dicunt; verum etiam Electos ſuos per alimenta quæ ſumunt, & eis quippe alimentis, ſicuti univerſo mundo, Dei ſubſtantiam perhibent eſſe commixtam, quam purgari putant in Electis ſuis eo genere vitæ, quo vivunt Electi Manichæorum, velut ſanctius & excellentius auditoribus ſuis —— (m) Quicquid vero undique purgatur luminis per quaſdam naves (quas eſſe lunam & ſolem volunt) regno Dei tanquam propriis ſedibus reddi. Theſe Hereticks " (n) imagin'd, that to ſave Souls God had made a great " Machine, compos'd of twelve Veſſels, which inſenſibly carried the Souls on high, and afterwards unladed them in the Moon, which having purified theſe Souls by its Rays, convey'd them into the Sun and into Glory, and hereby they explain'd the different appearances of the Moon. It was in the Full, when the Veſſels brought thither a multitude of Souls, and it decreas'd proportionably as theſe Souls were removed out of it into Glory." There were in theſe Veſſels, ſaid they, certain Vertues which aſſumed the ſhape of a Man, on purpoſe to make the Women of the other party fall in Love with them; for during the motions of Luſt, the Light which is entangled in the Members flies away, and is receiv'd into the tranſport Veſſels, which reſtore it to its natural place. (o) Eſſe autem in eis navibus ſanctas virtutes, quæ ſe in maſculos tranſigurant, ut illiciant fœminas gentis adverſæ, & per hanc illecebram commota eorum concupiſcentia fugiat de illis lumen, quod membris ſuis permixtum tenebant, & purgandum ſuſceperant ab Angelis lucis, purgatumque illis navibus imponatur ad regna propria reportandum. While ſome Vertues aſſumed the ſhape of a Man, others took upon them that of a Woman, to entice Men to love them, and ſo reciprocally to make the laſcivious Fires ſeparate the ſubſtances of Light from the ſubſtances of Darkneſs. (p) Certè iiii libri Manichæi ſunt omnibus ſine dubitatione communes, in quibus libris illa portenta ad illiciendas, & per concupiſcentiam diſſolvendos utriuſque ſexus principes tenebrarum, ut liberata fugiat ab eis, quæ captivata tenebatur in eis divina ſubſtantia, de maſculorum in fœminas, & fœminarum in maſculos tranſfiguratione conſcripta ſunt. If you add to this, that they fancy'd that the parts of Light (q) were much more intermix'd with the parts of Darkneſs, in Perſons that do the Work of Generation than in others, you may underſtand the monſtrous Alliance they made between theſe two Doctrines, whereof one was, that Men muſt not marry nor procreate Children; the other is, that they may give the Reins to the tranſports of Nature, provided they hinder Conception. Et ſi uruntur conjugibus, conceptum tamen generationemque devitant, ne divina ſubſtantia quæ in eos per alimenta ingreditur vinculis carneis ligetur in prole (r). It ſeems they believ'd that Saclas, one of the Princes of Darkneſs, a greater devourer of Children than Saturn, could not find a better way of holding in cloſe Priſon the Divine Particles he had eaten, than that of Generation, and that for this end he came near his Wife, and begot two Children on her, which were Adam and Eve. (a) Adam & Evam ex parentibus principibus fumi aſſerunt natos, cum pater eorum nomine Saclas ſociorum ſuorum fœtus omnium devoraſſet, & quicquid inde commixtum divinæ ſubſtantiæ ceperat, cum uxore concumbens in carne prolis, tanquam tenaciſſimo vinculo, colligaſſet. Now becauſe they look'd upon their Elect as very good Purifiers, I mean as Perſons who did admirably ſilter the parts of the Divine Subſtance, entangled and impriſoned in the Aliments (b), they gave them the Principles of Generation to eat, and 'tis ſaid, that they mixed them with the Symbols of the Euchariſt, a thing ſo abominable, that the Biſhop of Meaux had reaſon to ſay, (c) That one dares not think, and much leſs write of it. The words of St. Auſtin are theſe; (d) Qua occaſione vel potius execrabilis ſuperſtitionis quadam neceſſitate coguntur Electi eorum velut Euchariſtiam conſperſam cum ſemine humano ſumere, utcumque inde, ſicut de aliis cibis quos accipiunt, ſubſtantia illa divina purgetur. —— (e) Ac per hoc ſequitur eos, ut ſic eam & de ſemine humano, quemadmodum de aliis ſeminibus, quæ in alimentis ſumunt, debeant manducando purgare. Unde etiam Cathariſtæ appellantur, quaſi purgatores, tantam eam purgantes diligentiam, ut ſe nec alba tam bovem: cibi turpitudine abſtineant. They did not own that they committed this Abomination; but 'tis pretended (f) that they were convicted of it: To which purpoſe a Modern Writer tells us, " (g)
" Since they believed that the Spirit came from a " good Principle, and that the Fleſh and the Body
" were from an ill one, they taught that Men ought to " hate, deſpiſe and diſhonour it by all ways poſſible;
" and upon this pretence, there is no ſort of exe" crable Uncleanneſs wherewith they did not de-
" file themſelves in their Aſſemblies." St. Auſtin does not attribute to them this reaſoning; yet I do not ſay that Maimbourg is miſtaken, for the Doctrine and Conduct of the Manicheans, is related many different ways, which came to paſs without doubt, either becauſe they varied their Doctrine from Age to Age, or becauſe all their contemporary Doctors did no explain it after the ſame manner; or laſtly, becauſe all their Adverſaries did not rightly underſtand them. It was thought fit to deſtroy all

(d) Epiphan. adv. hæreſ. p. 620.

(e) Lamb. Danæus notis in librum Auguſt. de hæreſibus, fol. 118. verſo.

(f) Id. ib. fol. 120.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Maim. ibid. pag. 13, 14.

(i) Yet St. Epiphan. ib. p. 621 ſays, that he uſed Remedies. Τινὰ καὶ φαρμακείαις προσέγναι. Cum medicamenta quædam adhibuiſſet.

(i) Hier. de Script. Eccl. in Archelao

(k) Auguſtin. de hæreſ. c. 46.

(l) Id. ib. fol. 115. edit. Lamberti Danæi.

(m) Ibid. fol. 115. verſo.

(n) Baſnage's Hiſt. of the Religion of the Reformed Churches, tom. 1 p. 125, 126.

(o) Auguſt. ibid.

(p) Id ib. fol. 116

(q) In cæteris autem hominibus, etiam in ipſis auditoribus ſuis, hanc partem bonæ divinæque ſubſtantiæ, quæ mixta & colligata in eſcis & potibus detinetur, maximeque in eis qui generant filios, arctius & inquinatius colligari putant. Ib. fol. 115.

(r) Auguſtin. ibid. fol. 117.

(a) Ib. id.

(b) See the laſt Remark.

(c) Hiſt. of the Variations, B. 11. n 15. p. m 129

(d) Auguſtin. ubi ſupra, fol. 117. verſo

(e) Ibid. fol. 116. verſo

(f) Id ib. fol. 116

(g) Maimbourg ubi ſupra, p. 17, 18

quences which they drew from them It muſt be confeſſ'd, that this falſe Tenet (C) which is much ancienter than Manes, and cannot be maintain'd by any one that admits the Holy Scripture, all the Books of the Manichæans, which may have been of [illegible] uſe; but this little Inconvenience flows from it, that we cannot be ſure of their Doctrine, as we might have been by conſulting the Works of their moſt Learned Authors. By the Fragments of their Syſtem we meet with in the Fathers, it plainly appears, that they were not happy in their Hypotheſis, when they came to Particulars. Their firſt Hypotheſis was falſe, and it grew worſe in their Hands by the little Art and Philoſophical Skill they employ'd in explaining and applying it.

(C) A Tenet much ancienter than Manes.] We have already ſeen that he found it in the Books which Terebinthus inherited from his Maſter Scythianus. 'Tis not true, as St. Epiphanius ſuppoſes (b), that this Scythianus liv'd in the times of the Apoſtles; he ſhould have ſaid only, that he might have been Manes's Grandfather: But 'tis very true, that the Doctrine of two Principles was known in the World a long time before the Preaching of the Apoſtles. Scythianus was indebted to Pythagoras for it, if we may believe Epiphanius (i). Some ſay (k), that Terebinthus borrow'd it of Empedocles. The Gnoſticks, Cerdonians, Marcionites, and many other Sectaries, who introduc'd this ill Doctrine into Chriſtianity, before Manes was ſpoken of, were not the Inventers of it; but they found it in the Books of the Pagan Philoſophers. Plutarch informs us of the Antiquity and Univerſality of this Cuſtom, not as a mere Hiſtorian, but as a faithful Follower of it. "'Tis impoſſible, ſays he, "(l) that one Cauſe alone, whether good or bad, "ſhould be the principle of all things together, "becauſe God is not the cauſe of Evil, and the "Harmony of this World is compos'd of Contraries, like a Harp whoſe Muſick conſiſts of "high and low Notes, as Heraclitus ſaid, and to "the ſame purpoſe ſaid Euripides alſo:

"The Good was never ſeparated from the Evil,
"The one is always mix'd with the other,
"That all things in the World may go on the better.

"Wherefore this Opinion is very ancient, and deſcended from Divines and Lawgivers in times "paſt unto the Poets and Philoſophers, but without knowing who is the firſt Author of it, although it is ſo firmly imprinted in the Minds "of Men, that it can by no means be defac'd "or rooted out, it is ſo frequently taught, "not only in private Diſcourſe, and common Reports, but at the Sacrifices and Divine Ceremonies of the Gods, as well in the barbarous Nations, as among the Greeks in many places, that "neither does this World float in uncertainty without being govern'd by Providence and Reaſon; "neither is it one Reaſon alone which maintains "and governs it with I know not what Rudders, "and Reins of Obedience; but there are many of "them mixed with good and Evil; and to ſpeak "openly there is nothing here below which Nature brings forth and produces, that is in itſelf pure and ſimple; nor is there one only Diſpenſer of the two Tuns, who diſtributes to us "all Affairs, as a Vintner does his Wines, by "mingling and brewing them one with another. "Thus this Life is govern'd by two Principles "and two Powers contrary to one another; one "of which directs and conducts us to a right "End by a right Way, and the other, on the "contrary, diverts us from it and turns us back. "Thus this Life is mix'd, and this World, if not "all of it, yet at leaſt the Lower and Terreſtrial "part of it below the Moon, is unequal and variable, ſubject to all the Changes that are poſſible: "For nothing can be without a preceding Cauſe, "and what is good in itſelf can never be the cauſe "of Evil; Nature therefore muſt have a Principle "from which Evil proceeds as its Cauſe and Principle, as well as another from which Good proceeds. 'Tis the Opinion of the greateſt part "and the wiſeſt among the Ancients; for ſome "think there are two Gods of different Profeſſions; the one the Author of all Good, and the "other of all Evil: Others call him God who is "Author of all Good, and the other a Dæmon, "as did Zoroaſter the Magician, of whom 'tis ſaid, "that he liv'd Five Hundred (1) Years before the "times of the Trojan Wars He therefore call'd "the good God Oromazes, and the other Arimanius: "And moreover he ſaid, that the one reſembled "Light more than any other ſenſible thing, and "the other Darkneſs and Ignorance; and that there "was between them two one call'd Mithres; where"fore the Perſians do ſtill call him that intercedes "and mediates Mithres; and he taught Men "to Sacrifice to one, to deſire of him all good "Things; and to the other, to divert and keep off "all Evil and Unfortunate Things. —— (m) The "Chaldæans ſay, that among the Gods, of the Planets "as they call them, there are two who do Good and "two who do Evil, and three which are common, "and in the middle between both. And as to the "Greeks Opinion concerning this, no body is ignorant of it. That there are two parts of the "World, one Good, which belongs to Jupiter "Olympius, i. e. Heavenly; the other Bad, "which belongs to the Infernal Pluto And they "feign moreover, that the Goddeſs Harmonia, i e "Harmony, was born of Mars and Venus, whereof "the one is Cruel, Moroſe and Contentious, and "the other Mild, Loving, and Fruitful Obſerve that the Philoſophers themſelves agree in "this; for Heraclitus openly calls War the Father, "King, Maſter and Lord of all the World, and "ſays, that Homer when he pray'd,

"May all War ceaſe in Earth and Heaven,
"Both between the Gods and Men,

"did not conſider that he curs'd the Generation "and Production of all things, which come into "being by the ſtruggle and contrariety of the Paſſions, and that the Sun would not tranſgreſs the "bounds prefix'd to him, otherwiſe the Furies, "the Miniſters and Aſſiſtants of Juſtice ſhould "meet him. And Empedocles ſays the Principle of "Good, is call'd Love and Friendſhip, and often "Harmonia; and the cauſe of Evil is

"A bloody Fight and Peſtilential Noiſe

"As to the Pythagoreans, they denote and ſpecifie "this by many Names, calling the Good Principle, One, Finite, Reſting, Streight, Odd, "Squar'd, Right, Luminous; and the Bad, "Two, Infinite, Moving, Crooked, Even, more "Long than Broad, Inequal, Left, Dark Ariſtotle calls the one Form, and the other Privation. "And Plato ſhadowing as it were and covering "his meaning, in many places calls one of theſe "contrary Principles The Same, and the ſecond "The other: But in his Book of Laws which he "wrote when he was old, he no more calls them "by ambiguous and cover'd Names, nor by ſignificant Notes, but in plain terms he ſays, that "this World is not manag'd by one Soul only, "but by many at a venture, at leaſt by two, "whereof one is beneficient, and the other contrary to it, and produces contrary Effects. And "between theſe two there is alſo a third Cauſe, "which is not without a Soul, nor without Reaſon, nor unmoveable of it ſelf, as ſome "think, but adjacent and adhering to the two "others." Plutarch in another Book (a), ſays expreſly, that the Nature of God does not permit him to do any thing but what is Good, nor to be angry with any one, nor to hurt him This Author therefore muſt have been perſuaded, that the Afflictions which ſo often torment Men, proceed from another Cauſe than God, and conſequently that there were two Principles, one that did nothing but what was Good, and the other which did nothing but what was Evil I add, that the Perſian Philoſophers (b), who are much ancienter than thoſe of Egypt, have conſtantly taught this Doctrine.

Plutarch carries the matter too far (c), when he pretends, that it appeared in the publick Acts of Religion among the Barbarians and Greeks, from thence that it be true, that the Pagans have acknowledg'd and honour'd hurtful Gods; yet they taught alſo both by their Books and by their Practice, that the ſame God

(b) St. Epiphan. adverſ. hæreſ. p. 620. ſuppoſes, that Scythianus went to Jeruſalem to confer with the Apoſtles. He went therefore before Titus took the City; and ſo his Diſciple could not be contemporary with Manes in the Third Centur.

(i) Ib. p. 619.

(k) Suidas in Μάνης.

(l) Plutarch in his Treatiſe of Iſis and Oſiris p.m. 1043. This Paſſage in the Greek and Latin Edition of Franckfort, 1620, is [illegible]

(1) He ſhould ſay 5000: See the Remark E, of the Article Zoroaſter at the beginning

(m) Ib. p 1046

(a) Non poſſe ſuaviter vivi juxta Epicurum p. 1102

(b) Diog Laertius in prooemio & Agathias, Hiſt.

(c) Obſerve that I conſider Plutarch only for what reſpects the Perſians, and not for what he ſays of the Egyptians, which I ſhall examine in the Article Typhon, Remark [illegible] where I ſhall ſhew that there were ſome Gods, the good Jupiter for inſtance, who could do no hurt, but what was given

Scripture, either in whole or in part, would not eaſily be refuted, if it were maintain'd

God who beſtow'd ſometimes good things upon a Nation, did alſo afterwards ſometimes afflict them, to take Vengeance upon them for ſome Offence. If you read the Greek Authors never ſo little, you will plainly perceive this: We may ſay the ſame thing of Rome. Read Livy, Cicero, and other Latin Writers, you will clearly underſtand, that the ſame Jupiter, to whom Sacrifices were offer'd for a Victory gain'd, was honour'd upon other occaſions, to the end he would ceaſe to afflict the People of Rome: And though there was one Vejovis much more inclin'd to do Evil than to do Good; nevertheleſs it was belived that Dijovis or Dieſpiter, i. e. the good Jupiter darted the Thunderbolt. Aulus Gellius expreſſes himſelf in ſuch a manner, that he clearly diſtinguiſhes Jupiter from Vejovis. (d) Cum Jovem igitur & Dijovem à juvando nominaſſent: eum quoque contra deum, qui non juvandi poteſtatem ſed vim nocendi haberet (nam deos quoſdam ut prodeſſent celebrabant, quoſdam ne obeſſent placabant) Vejovem appellaverunt, demptæ atque detractâ juvandi facultate. —— Simulachrum dei Vejovis, quod eſt in æde, de qua ſupra dixi, ſagittas tenet, quæ ſunt videlicet paratæ ad nocendum: quapropter eum deum plerique Apollinem eſſe dixerunt. —— Virgilium quoque aiunt, multæ antiquitatis hominem ſine oſtentationis odio peritum, numina læva in Georgicis quoque deprecari, ſignificantem quandam vim eſſe hujuſcemodi deorum in lædendo magis quam in juvando potentem. Verſus Virgilii hi ſunt:

(d) Aulus Gellius, l. 5. c. 12

> In tenui labor, at tenuis non gloria, ſi quem
> Numina læva ſinunt, auditque vocatus Apollo (e).

(e) See concerning theſe two kinds of Gods, a Paſſage of Arnobius in the Remark G of the Article Paulicians.

Plutarch is alſo miſtaken, when he thinks that the Philoſophers and Poets are agreed in the Doctrine of two Principles. Did not he remember that Homer the Prince of Poets, their Pattern, their common Original, that Homer, I ſay, ſet only one God over the two Tuns of Good and Evil?

> Δοιοὶ (f) γάρ τε πίθοι κατακείαται ἐν Διὸς οὐδει
> Δώρων οἷα δίδωσι, κακῶν, ἕτερον δὲ ἑάων·
> Ὧ μὲν κερμίξας δῶκε Ζεὺς τερπικέραυνος,
> Ἄλλοτε μὲν τὸ κακῶ ὄγε κύρεσε, ἄλλοτε δ' ἐσθλῷ·
> Ὧ δέ κε τῷ λυγρῶν δῷη, λωβητὸν ἔθηκε·
> Καί ἑ κακὴ βόρβωρος ἐπὶ χθόνα δῖαν ἐλάυνει.
> Φοιτᾷ δ' οὔτε θεοῖσι τετιμένος οὔτε βροτοῖσιν.
>
> Duo quippe dolia jacent in Jovis limine
> Donorum quæ dat, alterum malorum, alterum vero bonorum:
> Cui quidem miſcens dederit Jupiter fulmine gaudens,
> Interdum quidem in malum ille incidit, interdum & in bonum:
> Cui vero ex malis dederit, injuriis omnibus obnoxium facit,
> Et illum exitialis dolor acerbiſſimus ſuper terram alumem exercet:
> Vagaturque, nec diis honoratus neque mortalibus.

(f) Hom. Iliad. lib. ult. p. 527.

Mr Coſtar has juſtly cenſur'd theſe words of Mr. Girac. It ſeems that you would imitate Homer's Jupiter, and that drawing out of Tuns, you pour out with both Hands as he did, this diverſity of Matter by chance and without choice. Here follows the Cenſure. The Compariſon " (g) of Jupiter doth me Honour, " but it doth little Honour to him who alledges it " ſo impertinently. Homer (1) who is the Inven- " ter of this Fiction, and Plato who relates it (2) " in his Republick, do not ſay, that Jupiter having " drawn out of his two Tuns all the Goods and E- " vils of Life, ſcatters them inconſiderately upon " miſerable Mortals. They ſay only, that ſome- " times he pours them out pure, ſometimes he " mixes them; from whence it comes to paſs, that " among Men ſome are always Unhappy, and " the Fortune of others is nothing but a reciprocal " Flux of Unhappineſs and Miſery." But Mr. Coſtar forgot one thing which deſerv'd to be obſerv'd: He did not ſay that of the three things which Jupiter could do with theſe two Tuns, he does but two of them: For he might either take out of the good Tun, or out of the bad, or partly out of one, and partly out of the other. Homer took care not to ſpeak of theſe three Offices; for he knew too well, that the firſt does never take place, and I think he had done well to have ſuppreſs'd the ſecond, for is there any Man ſo unhappy as to enjoy no manner of Good? Plato rejected this Thought of Homer, becauſe it is eſſential to God to do nothing but what is Good; from whence he concluded that God is not the cauſe of ſome Events that befal Men. Οὐδ' ἄρα ὁ θεὸς, ἐπειδὴ ἀγαθὸς, πᾶσί γε ἂν αἴτιος εἴη αἰτίῳ, ὡς οἱ πολλοὶ λέγουσιν· ἀλλ' ὀλίγων μὲν τοῖς ἀνθρώποις αἴτιος, πολλῶν δ' ἀναίτιος· πολὺ γὰρ ἐλάττω τἀγαθὰ τῶν κακῶν ἡμῖν· καὶ τῶν μὲν ἀγαθῶν οὐδένα ἄλλον αἰτιατέον· τῶν δὲ κακῶν ἄλλα ἀττα δεῖ ζητεῖν τὰ αἴτια, ἀλλ' οὐ τὸν θεόν. (h) Non igitur Deus, quum bonus ſit, omnium cauſa eſt, ut multi dicunt, ſed paucorum quidem hominibus in cauſa eſt, multorum vero extra cauſam. Multo enim pauciora nobis ſunt bona quam mala. Et bonorum quidem ſolus Deus cauſa eſt dicendus. Malorum autem quamlibet aliam præter Deum cauſam quærere decet. He ſays, that the Poets who give us this Fiction of two Tuns, ſpeak fooliſhly of God, and are guilty of a great Sin. Οὐκ ἄρα ἀποδεκτέον ἐστὶ θρηνοῦντας, ἢ ἄλλα ποιοῦντας ταύτην τὴν ἁμαρτίαν περὶ τοὺς θεοὺς ἀνοήτως ἁμαρτάνοντας, καὶ λέγοντας ὡς δοιοὶ πίθοι. Neque Homeri igitur, neque alterius poëtæ admittendum eſt peccatum, ſtulte de Diis dicentis, in Jovis limine duo jacere dolia (i). We ſhall elſewhere give a larger account (k) of the Platonick Hypotheſis concerning the Original of Good and Evil.

(h) Plato de Repub. l. 2. p. m. 605. D.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) In the Remark KΔ of the Article Paulicians.

The Apology of Coſtar being ſcarce in foreign Countries, I ſhall make no ſcruple to cite a long Paſſage out of it: " (l) It may be, that Mr. " Girac believ'd the Roman de la Roſe, which " makes Fortune a Vintner, which diſtributes by " Pots and Pints the ſeveral Liquors of theſe two " Tuns, according to her caprice Fancy;

(l) Coſtar ubi ſupra p. 226, 227.

> " Jupiter en toute ſaiſon
> " A ſur l'iſſue de ſa maiſon,
> " Ce dit Homer, deux pleins tonneaux,
> " S'il n'eſt vieulx Homs ne Gacronneaux
> " Ni n'eſt Dame ni Demoiſelle,
> " Soit vieille, jeune, laide ou belle,
> " Qui vie en ce monde reçoive,
> " Qui de ces deux tonneaux ne boive.
> " C'eſt une Taverne pleniere,
> " Dont Fortune eſt la Taverniere,
> " Et en trait, en pots, & en coupes,
> " Pour faire à tout le monde ſoupes.
> " Tous elle en abreuve à ſes mains,
> " Mais aux uns plus, aux autres moins.
> " N'eſt nul qui chacun jour ne pinte,
> " De ces tonneaux, ou quarte, ou pinte.
> " Ou muy, ou ſeptier, ou chopine,
> " S'il, comme il plaiſt à la mecheine,
> " Ou plene paulme, ou quelque gonte,
> " Que la Fortune ou bec, luy boute:
> " Et bien & mal à chacun verſe,
> " Si comme elle eſt douce & perverſe.
>
> " Jupiter at all times
> " Has at the Threſhold of his Houſe,
> " As Homer ſays, two full Tuns;
> " And there is neither old Man, nor young,
> " Neither Woman nor Maid,
> " Wherher ſhe be old or young, handſome or ugly,
> " Who receives Life in this World,
> " But drinks of theſe two Tuns.
> " 'Tis a full Tavern,
> " Whereof Fortune is the Vintner,
> " And mingles Pots and Cups,
> " To make all the World Soups;
> " She gives all Drink with her own Hands,
> " But to ſome more, to others leſs:
> " There is none but every Day drinks
> " Out of theſe Tuns, either a Quart or a Pint,
> " Or a Tierce, or a Gallon, or a Chopin,
> " As it pleaſes Fortune,
> " To give either with a full Hand or a few Drops,
> " Which ſhe puts into their Mouth:
> " And pours out Good or Evil upon every one,
> " According as ſhe is in a good or bad Humour.

(m) See the words of Father Thomaſſin in the Remark D. of the Article Paulicians.

The ancient Hereſie of two Principles prevails ſtill in ſome oriental Countries (m), and 'tis believ'd that it was very common among the ancient barbarous People of Europe. (n) Apud Slavos nondum quidem Chriſti fide imbutos, ſimile dogma receptum fuiſſe, Helmoldus (3) auctor eſt, qui malum illorum Deum Zeevuboch vocatum ſcribit. Parthi & de aliis Germanorum populis Voſſius (4) conjicit. Atque hodienum.

(n) Tobias Pfannerus, Syſtema Theol. gentilis, p. 258.

(3) Helmold. Chronic. Sclav. c. 53.

(4) Voſſ. de Orig. idololatr. l. 1. c. 8. p. 280.

(g) Coſtar, Apol. p. [illegible]

(1) Iliad. [illegible]

(2) Dialog. [illegible]

(5) Guil. Muller. Beſchreibung der Africaniſchen Landſchaft Tetu pag. 43, 44.

tain'd (D) by ſome Pagan Philoſophers, well skill'd in Diſputes. It was a happy thing that St. Auſtin, hodiernum, Provinciæ Tetu in Africa incolas perſuaſum ſibi habere, eſſe aliquod Numen, cui omnia mala, aliud cui bona accepta ferenda, Joh. Guil. Mullerus (5), Danicæ in Africa Eccleſiæ quondam Paſtor, teſtatur. The Gurdes, a Nation in Aſia, worſhip two Principles, one as the Author of Good, the other as the Cauſe of Evil; but with this difference, that they are infinitely more exact in the Worſhip of the latter than of the former (e).

(D It would not eaſily be refuted, if it were maintain'd by ſome Pagan Philoſophers.] By reaſons a priori they would quickly have been put to flight: But the Reaſons a poſteriori were their ſtrong Holds; with theſe they might have fought a long time, and it was difficult to force them. You will underſtand me better by the Explication I ſhall now ſubjoin. The moſt certain and clear Idea's we have in our Minds, teach us, that a Being which exiſts by it ſelf, which is Neceſſary and Eternal, muſt be one, Infinite, Almighty, and endow'd with all kind of Perfection. If therefore we conſult theſe Ideas, we ſhall find nothing more abſurd, than the Hypotheſis of two Eternal Principles, and independent on one another, whereof one has no Goodneſs, and puts a ſtop to the Deſigns of the other. This is what is call'd a Reaſon, à priori; which neceſſarily leads us to reject this Hypotheſis, and to admit only one Principle of all Things. If nothing but this were requir'd to prove the goodneſs of a Syſtem; the Cauſe would be determin'd to the confuſion of Zoroaſter, and all his Followers. But every Syſtem, requires theſe two things to make it good; one, that the Ideas of it be diſtinct; the other, that it ſhould give an account of matters of fact. We muſt ſee therefore whether the Phænomena of Nature can be conveniently explain'd by the Hypotheſis of one Principle alone. When the Manicheans tell us, that ſince we ſee in the World many things that are contrary to one another (a), as Heat and Cold, White and Black, Light and Darkneſs, there muſt neceſſarily be two Principles, they argue pitifully; for the oppoſition between thoſe Beings, tho' confirm'd as much as they will, by what we call Variations, Diſorders and Irregularities of Nature, cannot make one half of an Objection againſt the Unity, Simplicity and Immutability of God. A Reaſon may be given for all thoſe things, either by the different Powers God has given to Bodies, or by the Laws of Motion which he has Eſtabliſh'd, or by the concurring of occaſional intelligent Cauſes by which he is pleaſed to act. This does not require the Quinteſſences which the Rabbins have imagin'd, and which have ſupplied an Italian Biſhop with an Argument ad hominem, in favour of the Incarnation. (b) Di queſta unione parla diffuſamente l'Autore, portando gli eſempi e le ſimilitudini, con cui la ſpiegano i Rabbini (alcune delle quale ſono le medeſime che adoprano i noſtri Theologi per eſplicar l'Incarnaſione) e con le ſteſſe loro dottrine prova evidentemente ch'ella non ſia altro che un inſpirazione, cive due nature ſpireita, e Divinità inſieme in un ſuppoſto. They ſay that God has united himſelf to Ten moſt pure Intelligences call'd Sefira, and that he acts with them in ſuch a manner, that all the Variations and Imperfections of Effects muſt be attributed to them. (c) Attribuendoſi a Dio ne' ſacri libri atti fatti ſe contrarii e imperfetti, per ſalvare l'immutabilita e ſua ſomma perfettione, hanno poſta una Gerarchia di dieci Intelligenze puriſſime, per mezo delle quali, come iſtrumenti della ſua potenza, egli opera tutte le coſe, ma in modo che à loro ſole s'attribuiſce ogni varieta, imperfettione, e mutatione. Without ſuch an Hypotheſis, the Simplicity and Immutability of the Ways of God may be ſav'd; the ſole Eſtabliſhment of occaſional Cauſes is ſufficient for that, provided we are only to explain the Phænomena of the Bodies, and do not concern our ſelves about Man. The Heavens and the reſt of the Univerſe, declare the Glory, Power, and the Unity of God; Man alone the Maſterpiece of his Creation among things viſible, affords the greateſt Objection againſt the Unity of God.

Man is Wicked and Unhappy; every one knows it by what he feels in himſelf, and by the Commerce he is oblig'd to have with his Neighbours. He that lives only five or ſix Years (d) may be perfectly convinc'd of theſe two things; and thoſe who are much engag'd in Worldly Affairs, know this ſtill more clearly. Travels afford perpetual Lectures upon this Subject; they ſhow every where the Monuments of Mens Misfortunes and Wickedneſſes: This appears every where by the many Priſons, Hoſpitals, Gibbets, and Beggars. Here you ſee the Ruins of a flouriſhing City; elſewhere (e) you can hardly find the Ruins of it.

Jam (f) ſeges eſt ubi Troja fuit, reſecandaque falce
Luxuriat Phrygio ſanguine pinguis humus.

Read theſe fine words taken out of a Letter that was written to Cicero: (g) Ex Aſia rediens, cum ab Ægina Megaram verſus navigarem, capi regiones circumcirca proſpicere. Poſt me erat Ægina, ante Megara, ad ſiniſtram Piræus, ſiniſtra Corinthus: quæ oppida quondam tempore florentiſſima fuerunt, nunc proſtrata & diruta ante oculos jacent. Studious Men without going out of their Studies, make the greateſt diſcoveries of theſe two Articles, becauſe in reading Hiſtory they take a review of all the Ages and Countries of the World. Hiſtory, properly ſpeaking, is nothing but a Collection of the Crimes and Misfortunes of Mankind; but we muſt obſerve, that theſe two Evils, the one Moral, and the other Phyſical, do not wholly fill up Hiſtory, and include all the experience of private Perſons. There are every where ſome things that are phyſically and morally Good; ſome Examples of Virtue, and Happineſs: And this is that which makes the Difficulty; for if there were none but Evil and Unhappy Men, we ſhould not need to have recourſe to the Hypotheſis of two Principles; it is the mixture of Happineſs and Virtue with Miſery and Vice, which requires this Hypotheſis; and this is that ſtrong Hold of the Sect of Zoroaſter.

To the end it may appear how difficult it would be to refute this falſe Syſtem, and that we may conclude, that it is neceſſary to have recourſe to Revelation to overthrow it, let us feign here a Diſpute between Meliſſus and Zoroaſter, who were both Pagans and great Philoſophers. Meliſſus, who acknowledg'd but one Principle (h), would ſay, at firſt, that his Syſtem agrees admirably well with our cleareſt Ideas. A neceſſary Being is not bounded; and therefore it is Infinite and Almighty, and conſequently one, and it would be a monſtrous thing, and a contradiction to ſay, that it has no Goodneſs, but the greateſt of all Vices, viz. an eſſential Malice. I confeſs to you, would Zoroaſter anſwer, that your Idea's are very conſequential, and I am willing to grant, that in this reſpect your Hypotheſis ſurpaſſes mine. I will not inſiſt upon an Objection which I might make uſe of, which is this, that Infinity muſt include every thing that is real, and that Malice (i) being no leſs a real Being than Goodneſs, the Univerſe requires that there ſhould be both wicked and good Beings; and that ſince a Sovereign Goodneſs and a Sovereign Malice cannot ſubſiſt in one and the ſame Subject, there muſt be in Nature one Being eſſentially Good, and another eſſentially Evil: I do not inſiſt, I ſay, upon this Objection (k); I will allow that your Notions are more regular and orderly; but explain to me I pray you by your Hypotheſis, whence it comes to paſs, that a Man is Wicked, and ſubject to Pain and Grief? I defie you to find in your Principles a Reaſon of this Phænomenon, as I can in mine; and now I have regain'd the advantage you had; for as you ſurpaſs me in the Beauty of Ideas, and in Reaſons à priori, ſo I ſurpaſs you in the Explication of the Phænomena, and in Reaſons à poſteriori. And ſince the principal Character of a good Syſtem is to give an account of Matters of Fact, and that the bare incapacity of explaining them, is a proof that an Hypotheſis is not good, how beautiful ſoever it appears, you muſt grant, that I have hit the Mark by admitting two Principles, and that you have not hit it by admitting but one.

Here, without doubt, lies the ſtreſs of the whole Matter: Here Meliſſus has a great occaſion to ſhow his Parts; Hic Rhodus, hic ſalta. Res ad triarios red. t.

(a) As there are ſome Sects who have placed and eſtabliſh'd two Gods, by reaſon of the Grief and Sorrow, which theſe two have created many times, &c.

(c) See Concerning Genius of Balzac.

(d) Ovid. Epiſt. Penel. ad Ulyſſ.

(e) Sulpicius ad Ciceron. Epiſt. 5. l. 14. Cicer. ad famil.

(f) See Diogenes, l. 9. c. 24. de Menagium.

(i) I ſay malice and Action; I make this Note, leſt any one ſhould alledge, that Evil is nothing but a privation.

(k) I have read in the Journal of Italy, Aug. 31. 1674. p. 101. that Piccinardi in the 3*d Book of his* Dogmatica Philoſophia Peripatetica Chriſtiana, refutes this Theſis, An malus Deus ſit poſſibilis, which may maintain'd by the Peter Conti againſt Columera.

(a) Guil. Poſtellus *in his Book de Orbis Concordia, ſays, that the Manicheans are ſo call'd from one Manes, who was a Perſian, and lived in the Reign of Aurelian, and Probus, and that he was Author of the Sect of the Manicheans, which was afterwards propagated by Terebinthus, who was a Diſciple of Manes, and by Addas, and Hermas, and Buddas, and Thomas, and Scythianus, and Hermogenes, and Archelaus, and Epiphanius, and Auguſtus, and Fauſtus, and Adimantus, and Felix, and Secundus, and Fortunatus, and Hierax, and Agapius, and Timotheus, and Julianus, and Calliſtus, and Dioſcorus, and Theodotus, and Theodorus, and Theophilus, and Theotimus, and Theophanes, and Theodulus, and Theodoſius, and Theodoſius, and Theodoſius

St. Auſtin, who knew ſo well all the Wiles of Controverſie, abandon'd the Manichean Hereſie; for he would have removed its groſſeſt Errors, and framed ſuch a ſyſtem as by his management would have puzzled the Orthodox

Nunc animis opus Æneæ, nunc pectore firmo. Let us hear Zoroaſter continuing his Diſcourſe.

If Man is the Workmanſhip of one only Being ſovereignly Good, Holy and Powerful, can he be expos'd to Diſeaſes, to Heat and Cold, Hunger and Thirſt, Pain and Grief? Can he have ſo many bad Inclinations? Can he commit ſo many Crimes? Can Sovereign Holineſs produce a Criminal Creature? Can Sovereign Goodneſs produce an unhappy Creature? Would not Sovereign Power joyn'd with Infinite Goodneſs, furniſh his own Workmanſhip plentifully with good things, and ſecure it from every thing that might be offenſive or vexatious? If Meliſſus conſults the Notions of order, he will anſwer, That Man was not wicked when God made him. He will ſay, That Man was Created by God in a happy State, but he not following the light of his Conſcience, which was intended by the Author of his Being, to conduct him in the way of Virtue, became wicked, and ſo deſerv'd that God who was Soveraignly Juſt as well as Good, ſhould make him feel the Effects of his Wrath. God therefore is not the Cauſe of moral Evil, but he is the cauſe of Phyſical Evil, i. e. of the Puniſhment of moral Evil; a Puniſhment which is ſo far from being inconſiſtent with a Principle Sovereignly Good, that it flows neceſſarily from one of his Attributes, I mean from his Juſtice, which is no leſs eſſential to him than his Goodneſs. This anſwer, which is the beſt that Meliſſus could make, is good and ſound at the bottom; but it may be oppoſed by ſuch Reaſons as have ſomething more ſpecious and dazzling: For Zoroaſter would not fail to repreſent, that if Man were the Workmanſhip of a Principle infinitely Good and Holy, he ſhould not only have been Created without any actual Evil, but alſo without any inclination to Evil, ſince that Inclination is ſuch a Defect as cou'd not have ſuch a Principle for its Cauſe. It remains therefore that we ſay, that Man coming out of the Hands of his Creator, had only the Power of determining himſelf to Evil, and that having determin'd himſelf to it, he was the ſole cauſe of the Crime which he committed, and of the moral Evil which was introduc'd into the World. But firſt, we have no diſtinct Idea, that can make us underſtand, that a Being which does not exiſt by it ſelf, can nevertheleſs act by it ſelf. Zoroaſter therefore will ſay, that the free Will which was given to Man, is not able to determine actually it ſelf, ſince it exiſts continually and totally by the Action of God. 2. He will put this Queſtion: Did God foreſee that Man would make an ill uſe of his free Will? If you anſwer Yes, he will ſay, That it ſeems not poſſible, that any thing can foreſee that which depends wholly upon an indeterminate Cauſe. But I will grant you, will he ſay, that God did foreſee the Sin of his Creature, and from thence I conclude, that he would have hindred him from ſinning; for the Ideas we have of a Cauſe infinitely Good and Holy, which can hinder the introduction of moral Evil, will not ſuffer us to believe that it did not hinder it, eſpecially ſince by permitting it, God was oblig'd to oppreſs his own Workmanſhip with grievous Penalties. If God did not foreſee the fall of Man, yet at leaſt he muſt think it poſſible; ſince therefore in caſe it ſhould happen he ſaw himſelf oblig'd to depart from his Paternal Goodneſs, and to make his Children very miſerable, by exerciſing upon them the Office of a ſevere Judge, he would have determin'd Man to moral Good, as he determin'd him to that which is Phyſical; he would not have left in the Soul of Man any Power which ſhould incline him to Sin; no more than he has left any to incline him to Miſery. This is what our clear and diſtinct Ideas lead us unto, when we follow ſtep by ſtep, what a Principle infinitely Good ought to do: For if a Goodneſs ſo bounded as that of Earthly Fathers does neceſſarily require, that they ſhould prevent as much as is poſſible, the bad uſe their Children might make of the good Things they give them; much more will an Infinite and Almighty Goodneſs prevent the ill Effects of his Gifts. Inſtead of giving them Free-will, it will determine its Creatures to that which is Good; or if it gives them a Free-will, it will always watch over them to keep 'em from ſinning. I believe indeed that Meliſſus would not remain ſilent; but all that he could anſwer would be preſently oppos'd by Reaſons as plauſible as his, and ſo there would be no end of the Diſpute (a).

If he had recourſe to Retortion, he would very much perplex Zoroaſter; but by granting him one of his two Principles, he would leave him an open way to come at the Explication of the Origin of Evil. Zoroaſter would go back to the time of the Chaos, which is a State as to his two Principles, very like that which Hobbs calls the State of Nature, and which he ſuppoſes to have preceded the firſt Eſtabliſhment of Societies. In this State of Nature one Man was a Wolfe to another, and every thing belong'd to the firſt Poſſeſſor: None was Maſter of any thing except he was the ſtrongeſt. To put an end to this Confuſion every one agreed to quit his right to the whole, that he might have a Property in ſomething; they tranſacted one with another, and the War ceas'd. The two Principles weary of this Chaos, wherein each confounded and overthrew what the other would do, came at laſt to an Agreement; each of them yielded ſomething, each had a ſhare in the Production of Man, and in the (b) Laws of the Union of the Soul. The good Principle obtain'd thoſe which procure to Man a Thouſand Pleaſures, and conſented to thoſe which expoſe him to a Thouſand Sorrows; and if it conſented that moral Good ſhould be infinitely leſs in Mankind than moral Evil, he repair'd the Damage in ſome other kind of Creatures, wherein Vice ſhould be much leſs than Virtue. If many Men in this Life have more Miſery than Happineſs, this is recompenc'd in another State; what they have not under a humane Shape they ſhall recover under another (c). By means of this Agreement the Chaos was a paſſive Principle, which was the Field of Battel between thoſe two active Principles. The Poets (d) have repreſented this diſentangling under the Image of a Quarrel ended. This is what Zoroaſter might alledge, boaſting that he does not attribute to the good Principle, the production of a Creature at his own pleaſure, which was to be ſo Wicked and Miſerable; but only after he had found by experience that he could do no better, nor better oppoſe the horrible Deſigns of the evil Principle. To render his Hypotheſis the leſs offenſive, he might have denied that there was a long War between the two Principles, and lay aſide all thoſe Fights, and Priſoners which the Manicheans ſpeak of. The whole might be reduc'd to the certain knowledge of the two Principles, that one could never obtain from the other but ſuch and ſuch Conditions. And thus an eternal Agreement might have been made upon this Foot.

A Thouſand great Difficulties might be objected to this Philoſopher; but as he would find Anſwers, and after all deſire to be furniſh'd with a better Hypotheſis, pretending to have ſolidly refuted that of Meliſſus, he would never be brought back into the way of Truth. Human Reaſon is too weak for this end: It is a Principle of Deſtruction and not of Edification; it is only fit to ſtart Doubts, and to turn all manner of ways to perpetuate a Diſpute: And I think I am not miſtaken if I ſay of Natural Revelation, i. e. of the Light of Reaſon, what Divines ſay of the Moſaical Oeconomy. They ſay, that it was only fit to diſcover to Man his Weakneſs, and the neceſſity of a Redeemer, and of a Law of Mercy: It was a Pedagogue, (they are their own words) to bring Men to Jeſus Chriſt. Let us ſay the ſame of Reaſon; it can only diſcover to Man his Ignorance and Weakneſs, and the neceſſity of another Revelation, which is that of the Scripture. There we find what is ſufficient to confute unanſwerably the Hypotheſis of two Principles, and all the Objections of Zoroaſter. We find there the Unity of God, and his infinite Perfections; the Fall of Man, and the Conſequences of it. Let any one tell me a

(a) All this is more largely diſcuſſ'd in the Remark of the Article Paulicians.

(b) Apply here what Juno ſaid to Venus in Virgil, Æneid l. 4. v. 98 Sed quis erit modus, aut quo nunc certamine tanto? Quin potius pacem æternam pactoſque hymeneos Exercemus? Commune hunc ergo populum, paribusque regamus Auſpiciis.

(c) Note, that all thoſe of the greateſt part of thoſe who admitted two Principles, held the Metempſychoſi..

(d) Hanc Deus & melior LITEM natura diremit. Ovidius Metam. lib. 1.

thodox Christians. Pope Leo I. acted very vigorously against the Manicheans; and his Zeal being (E) supported by the Imperial Laws, this Sect receiv'd then a very great Blow. It became formidable in Armenia in the Ninth Century, as I have said elsewhere *, and it appear'd in France in the time of the Albigenses †. This cannot be deny'd; but it is not true, that the Albigenses * were Manicheans. These, among other Errors, taught that the Souls of Plants are rational; and condemn'd Agriculture as a murdering Exercise; but they permitted it to their Hearers in favour (F) of their Elect.

In the Article Paulicians.

See Mr. Beaux's Hist. of Variations l. II.

Since

See Mr. Basnage Hist. of the Religion of the Reformed Churches, part 1. ch. 4, &c.

pompous Show of Arguments, that it was not possible that moral Evil should be introduc'd into the World by the Workmanship of a Principle infinitely Good and Holy; we shall Answer, that this was nevertheless done, and consequently that it is very possible. There is nothing more foolish than to reason against Matter of Fact; this Maxim, ab actu ad potentiam valet consequentia, is as clear as this Proposition, two and two make four. The Manicheans perceiv'd what I have just now observ'd, and therefore they rejected the Old Testament; but what they retain'd of the Scripture supplied the Orthodox with strong Arms against them. And so it is not very difficult to confound those Heretics, who otherwise childishly entangled themselves when they came to particulars. Now since the Scripture affords us the best Solutions, I shall not be blam'd for saying, that it would be a thing difficult to get the Victory over a Heathen Philosopher in this Cause. This is the Text of this Remark.

(f) To that of the Paulicians.

How long soever I have been, I shall not make an end, till I have Advertis'd my Reader, that there remains still three Observations to be made, for which I refer the Reader to another Article (f). In the first I shall declare, whether the Fathers have always reason'd well against the Manicheans, and whether they could always silence them. In the second I shall show, that according to the Doctrines of Paganism, the Objections of Zoroaster had no great force: And in the third, in what sense it may be said, that the Christians do not reject the System of the two Principles. 'Tis more difficult for them than the Pagans, to resolve these Difficulties, in the way of Reason, because they have among them Dispures about Liberty, in which the Aggressor (g) seems always to have the better; and because the small number of those who are Predestinate, and the Eternity of Hell afford such Objections as Melissus would not very much fear.

(g) See the Remark F. in the Article of the Marcionites.

(E) The Zeal of Pope Leo was supported by the Imperial Laws.] There were (h) Manicheans at Rome when St. Austin came thither in 383. "For he "lodg'd in the House of a Manichean, and con- "versed very often with those of that Sect. —— "But after Carthage had been taken and destroy'd "by Genseric King of the Vandals, in 439, the "greatest part of the Manicheans in Africa fled as "well as the Catholicks into Italy, and chiefly to "Rome." Pope Leo (i) oblig'd the People to make an exact search after these Hereticks, and show'd by what marks they might be discover'd. "(k) "To create in all Men the greater abhorrence "of so detestable a Sect, he held an Assembly, to "which, together with the Bishops, he invited "the chief of the Clergy, of the Senate, of the "Nobility of Rome, and of the Common People "(1). There he produc'd the most considerable "among the Manicheans, and one of their Bishops "who made a publick Confession of their abomi- "nable Lusts, which I dare not declare for fear "I should offend the Ears, or rather the chast "Eyes of my Reader; and which those same Per- "sons who had been guilty of them, by Order of "this false Bishop, declared before all the World, "and discovered at the same time what their Bi- "shops and Priests were, and the secret Places "where they assembled, their prophane Myste- "ries and sacrilegious Ceremonies, all which was "authentically taken down in Writing. And St. "Leo gave an account of all this to the People a "little while after in a Sermon, which he made "for the Fast of the Four Ember-Weeks, where- "in he declar'd (2), that they were oblig'd in "Conscience to accuse those whom they knew "to be engag'd in so infamous and pernicious a "Heresie; that all ought to unite and act with "the same Zeal, and with equal Vigilance against "those common Enemies; and that those who "thought they ought not to discover them, would "be guilty of a very criminal Silence before the "great Tribunal of JESUS CHRIST, tho' "they did not partake in their Errors. In fine, "he us'd so great a care in searching after the Ma- "nicheans, and was so well seconded by the Peo- "ple, that none of them could escape them, "so that he had the good Fortune to deli- "ver Rome entirely from that Heresie. For ma- "ny of those Hereticks being strongly affected by "his powerful Exhortations, were seriously con- "verted to God; and after they had made a pub- "lick abjuration of their Heresie in the Church "(3), and sign'd the Form which was presented to "them, containing a Condemnation of Manes, and of "his Doctrine and Books, they submitted to the "Penance which was imposed on them. Those "who continued obstinate in their Error, and "refus'd to subscribe this Condemnation, were "condemned by the Judges to Banishment, ac- "cording to the Laws and Edicts of the Empe- "rors. But because the most wicked and dan- "gerous Followers of this execrable Heresie, fear- "ing the Punishment of their Crimes, had fled a- "way; he gave notice of it to the Bishops of Italy, "and other Provinces by a Circular Letter, wherein "after he had declar'd to them all that was done "at Rome in this Cause of the Manicheans, he ex- "horted them to prosecute those Fugitives, and to "give all necessary Orders to prevent their retire- "ing into their Dioceses, protesting, that they "would be inexcusable before God. (4) if it "should ever happen that any of their Subjects "were seduc'd by these Impostors, for want of "due care to discover them, to drive them away, "and to hinder them from spreading among the "People the Venom of their detestable Doctrine "And that which finish'd the extermination of "this Heresie, was that the Emperor Valen- "tinian the IIId. knowing that the Pope had "discover'd the Crimes of the Manicheans, caus'd "an Edict to be Publish'd (5), wherein he con- "firms and renews all the Ordinances of his "Predecessors against them, declares them infa- "mous, incapable of any Offices, and of bearing "Arms, making a Will, contracting and doing "any valid Act in the civil Society; forbids all "the Subjects of the Empire to conceal and shel- "ter any of them, and requires them to discover "and prosecute them, that they may be punish'd as "soon as they shall be known. Thus this Heresie "which came from Africa into Italy, was quickly "banish'd from it by the effectual Zeal of St Leo" Father Thomassin did not forget this example of the use of the Penal Laws against Heresie. "St. Leo the "Pope, says he (a), in his first Decretal says, that "many Manicheans were converted at Rome, but "that some among them were so far ingag'd in "those detestable Errors, that no Remedies that "could be us'd, were sufficient to reclaim them; "that afterwards the rigor of the Laws had been "made use of, and according to the Constitutions "of the Christian Princes, the publick Judges had "condemn'd them to a perpetual Banishment, "lest their contagious Conversation should in- "fect the rest of the Flock." I put in the Margin (b) the words which he quotes from St Leo. A little after he cites the Code of Justinian, to inform us that the 11th Law of the 5th Title of the 1st Book condemns (c) the Manicheans to lose their Head, in whatever part of the Roman Empire they may be found. Manichæo in loco Romano deprehenso caput amputare The next Law, continues he (d), is of the Emperor Justin, and it distinguishes the Manicheans not only from the Hereticks, but also from the Greeks, i. e. from Pagans, Jews and Samaritans. The Manicheans are punish'd with Death; all others are only Condemn'd as Hereticks, who cannot be preferr'd to any Magistracy, or Dignity, nor discharge the Office of Judge, or Patrons, or Fathers of Cities.

(1) Ep. 93. ad Turib. Ser. 5. de jejun. decim. mens.

(2) Contra communes hostes pro salute communi una communis debet esse vigilantia; — & qui tales non prodendos putant, in judicio Christi invenientur rei de silentio, etiam si non contaminentur assensu. Ser. 5. de jejun. decim. mens.

(3) Ut damnarent Manichæum cum prædicationibus & disciplinis suis publicè in Ecclesia professione, & manus suæ subscriptione compulimus. S. Leo. Ep. 2. ad Epis. per Italiam: & Epist. 93. ad Turib. Asturic.

(4) Ante tribunal Domini de reatu negligentiæ se non poterit excusare, quicunq; plebem suam contra sacrilegæ perversionis auctores noluerit custodire Ep. 2. ad Ep. per Italiam.

(5) Nov. Valent. 3. de Manic

(F) In favour of their Elect.] The Manicheans were (h) Maimbourg's Hist. of St. Leo, B. 1. p. 14.

(i) Id. ib. p. 18.

(k) Ib. p. 20. ad ann. 443.

(a) Thomassin of the Unity of the Church. tom 1. p. 339

(b) Aliquanti vero, qui ita se demerserunt ut nullum his auxiliantis possit remedium subvenire, subditi legibus, secundum Christianorum Principum constituta, ne sanctum gregem sua contagione pollucrent, per publicos judices perpetuo suntexilio relegari (c) Thomassin ib p. 377

(d Ibi p. 578

See at the end of this Dictionary an Explanation relating to what has been ſaid concerning the Doctrine of the Manichees.

MANTO, the Daughter of Tireſias, and as great a Diviner as her Father. She was ſo highly eſteem'd, that when the Argivi robb'd the City of Thebes, they thought they could not acquit themſelves of the Vow they had made to Apollo, to Conſecrate to him the moſt excellent thing they had among their Spoils, but by offering to him this Maid. She was therefore ſent to the Temple of Delphi: But this did not oblige her to make any Vow of Continence, or, if ſhe was engag'd to it, ſhe did very ill obſerve her Vow; for we read that Alcmæon, who was Generaliſſimo of the Army that took Thebes, had two Children by our Manto; a Son whoſe Name was Amphilochus, and a Daughter who was very handſome, and was call'd Tiſiphone. Theſe were the fruits of a Courtſhip which had ſomething very ſingular in it, ſince it happen'd during the fury which ſeiz'd Alcmæon, after he had put his Mother to Death. This is what Apollodorus * tells us indeed concerning Manto. Others ſay, that ſhe was carried to Delphi with the other Theban Priſoners †, but that the Oracle having order'd them to go and plant a Colony, they went (Y) to Claros, where Rhacius had ſettled one; and that Rhacius having learn'd from Manto who thoſe were by whom ſhe had made this Journey, and for what end they made it, took her to Wife, and had a Son by her nam'd Mopſus. Diodorus Siculus inſtead of this γ tells us, that the Daughter of Tireſias was call'd Daphne; that ſhe was ſent to Delphi as an Offering, by a vow of the Argivi; that ſhe improv'd the Prophetick Illuminations ſhe had [illegible] acquir'd, and wrote a great number of Oracles; that 'tis pretended Homer took from her many Verſes to adorn his Poems; and that ſhe was nam'd Sibylla, becauſe ſhe was often ſeiz'd with a Divine Spirit, and gave many Anſwers δ. Pauſanias ſays ζ, that in his time at Thebes, before the Porch of a Temple, the Stone was ſhown on which Manto ſate, and which was call'd the Chair of Manto. He ſpeaks of the Tomb of Manto in another place η; but there he means another Perſon who was the Daughter of Polyidus. She of whom Virgil (Z) ſpeaks is the ſame with the Daughter of Tireſias. And this Shows that this poor Propheteſs is ſaid to have been a great Traveller; for Virgil κ Tranſports her into Italy, not to keep her Virginity there, but to bring forth a Child which built Mantua.

* Bibi. l. 3. p. m. 196, 200.

† Pauſanias, l. 7. p. m. 207.

γ Biblioth. l. 5. c. 6.

δ See one of her Oracles in Ovid Metam. l. 6. upon occaſion of the Worſhip of Latona.

ζ Pauſan. l. 9. p. 289.

η l. 1. p. 41.

κ Æneid. lib. 10. v. 199.

MARCA (PETER DE) one of the moſt illuſtrious Ornaments of the Gallican Church, was born at Gant in Bearn, January 24. 1594. He was Baptiz'd by a Prieſt (A) in the Dioceſs of Tarbes, and went thro' his School-learning λ, and a Courſe of Philoſophy μ under the Jeſuits, and then he ſtudied the Civil Law ξ for three Years; after which he was admitted in 1615, Counſellor in the ſupreme Council of Pau. He was not the firſt of his Family who had an Office (B) in the long Robe. All his Collegues were then of the Reformed Religion *: But the Face of Things was quickly λ At Auſch.

μ At Touloufe.

ξ At Touloufe.

* Stephanus Baluzius in vita Petri de Marca, p. 12.

divided into two Orders, that of the Elect, and that of the Hearers. The former were not allow'd to exerciſe Agriculture, or even to gather Fruit; the latter were allow'd to do theſe things, and were aſſur'd that the Murders they committed in this exerciſe, were pardon'd them by the Interceſſion of the Particles of God, which came out of Priſon, when the Elect did eat them. Thus the Remiſſion of theſe Murders was founded upon this, that they furniſh'd the Elect with Food, and procur'd liberty to the Particles of the Divine Subſtance that were impriſon'd in Plants. St. Auſtin relates theſe Chimæras, and Scoffs at them as they deſerve. (c) Cæteras animas & in pecora redire putant, & in omnia quæ radicibus fixa ſunt, atque aluntur in terra. Herbas enim atque arbores ſic putant vivere, ut vitam, quæ illis ineſt, & ſentire credant, & dolere, cum læduntur, nec aliquid inde ſine cruciatu eorum quenquam poſſe vellere, aut carpere. Propter quod agrum ſpinis purgave veſas habent. Unde agriculturam, quæ omnium artium eſt innocentiſſima, tanquam plurium homicidiorum ream dementes accuſant; ſuiſque auditoribus ideo hæc arbitrantur ignoſci, quia præbent inde alimenta Electis ſuis, ut divina illa ſubſtantia in eorum ventre purgata impetret eis veniam, quorum traditur oblatione purganda. Itaque ipſi Electi nec in agris operantes, nec poma carpentes, nec ſaltem folia ulla vellentes, expectant hæc afferri uſibus ſuis ab auditoribus ſuis, viventes de tot & tantis ſecundum ſuam vanitatem homicidiis alienis.

(Y) They went to Claros.] I do not underſtand why Pauſanias did not add what Pomponius Mela ſays (a), that Manto flying from the Conquerors of Thebes built the Temple of Apollo Clarius, and that her Son (b Mopſus built Colophon. Take notice of theſe words of Mela, Fugiens victores Thebanorum Epigonos; for if I am not very much miſtaken, they ſhew that Charles Stephanus, Lloyd, and Hoffman are in the wrong to ſay, that Manto fled from the Tyranny of Creon and Theſeus, when ſhe went to build the Temple of Clarus. Moreri had nothing to ſay of Manto, tho' he might have found matter enough about her.

(Z) She of whom Virgil Speaks.] Servius (c) informs us, that ſhe was the Daughter of Tireſias, for Virgil does only call her as a Propheteſs, and ſpeaks of her Amours for the Tiber.

Ille (d) etiam patriis agmen ciet Ocnus ab oris
Fatidicæ Mantûs & Tuſci filius amnis,
Qui muros matriſque dedit tibi, Mantua, nomen.

The ſame Servius adds, that ſome made Hercules the Father of this Propheteſs. Leander Albertus relates a vaſt number of Traditions concerning this Founder of Mantua. Conſult him if you pleaſe in his (e) Deſcription of Italy.

(A) He was Baptiz'd by a Prieſt in the Dioceſs of Tarbes.] The exerciſe of the Romiſh Religion was forbidden in Bearn ever ſince the Edict of 1569; ſo that the few Catholicks who remain'd in that Country, were forc'd for want of Prieſts, to get their Children Baptiz'd in the Churches of the Reform'd (f). James de Marca would not follow their Example. He caus'd his Son to be carried to the Monaſtery of St. Peter de Generes in Bigorre. There our Archbiſhop was Baptiz'd by a certain Monk, who was Curate of the Parish. This refutes Papin, who ſays ſomewhere, that this Prelate was born of the Reform'd Religion. See the following Remark.

(B) He was not the firſt of his Family who had an Office in the long Robe.] The Family of Marca is Originally from Garcias de Marca, who commanded the Cavalry of Gaſton Prince of Bearn [illegible]ege

(a) Auguſt de hæreſ. c. 46. fol. m. 116. verſo.

(b) Lib. 1. c. 17.

(b) Mopſus according to Strabo, was the Son of Apollo and Manto, and not as Pauſanias would have it of Rhacius and Manto. See the Article Mopſus.

(c) In Virgil. ubi infra.

(d) Virgil Æn. l. 10. v. 198.

(e) Pag. m. 602, &c.

(f) Stephanus Baluzius de vita & rebus geſtis Petri de Marca, p. 8. edit. 1663. in 8.

† The eldest Galactorius de Marca succeeded in his Father's Office, I mean that of President in the Parliament of Pau.

quickly chang'd; for in a little time after, none could be admitted into that Council erected into a Parliament, who was not of the Romish Religion *. Peter de Marca had a great hand in the Intrigues which produc'd this Change. He Married a Lady of the ancient Houſe of the Viſcounts of Lavedan; but loſing her in 1632, after he had had many Children by her †, he would not Marry again. He was made Preſident in the Parliament of Bearn in 1621, and Counſellor of State in 1639. Three Years after the King nam'd him for the Biſhoprick of Conſerans. He had already been employ'd to write (C) a Work of great Importance. He was ſent into Catalonia

* Ib. p. 13.

Siege of Saragoſſa, in the Year 1118. His Poſterity followed the Profeſſion of Arms; but about the Year 1440, there was one Peter de Marca a good Civilian, who after he had been Attorney General to the Prince his Maſter in all his Dominions, was made Preſident of his Councils (g). I have read in a Book which was Printed in the time of the League, that one de Marque (h) ſecond Preſident in the Parliament of Pau, could never be admitted to his Office ——— till he had made the Proteſtation againſt the Maſs, together with the Faith of the Calvinian Faith, appointed by the late Queen of Navarre, Mother to Henry the Great. This Author is Patin, who affirms, that our Mr. de Marca was of a mean Birth. Let us relate the Paſſage which contains many Falſhoods; for to ſay nothing of the reſt, 'tis falſe that this Prelate was ever either a Miniſter or a Jeſuit. We ſhall here have an Example of the falſe Reports that are ſpread againſt great Men: One cannot collect too many ſuch Examples to bring the World to a Spirit of incredulity in this reſpect. "(i) We are inform'd here that the Archbiſhop-"rick of Toulouſe is beſtow'd upon Mr. de Marca, "Biſhop of Conſerans, by means of 50000 Crowns "which he has given to Cardinal Mazarin. This is "a good Fortune for that ambitious Man. He is of "a mean Original; after he had ſtudied, he be-"came a Miniſter to the Party of the Reform'd (k), "of whom he was one. After he had chang'd "his Religion, he became a Jeſuit; and then "quitting the Society he Married, and became "Counſellor into the Parliament of Pau, and "after that Preſident: Afterwards he came to "Paris, and by the favour of the Chancellor "Seguier, he was made Counſellor of State; "after that Intendant of Catalonia, and then "Biſhop of Conſerans, after he had a long time "waited for his Bulls, which he could not "get from Rome becauſe of the Quarrel he had "with the Jeſuits after he had quitted them, "and at laſt he had them not till he had recon-"cil'd himſelf to them: And then he was made "Archbiſhop of Toulouſe. When he has paid his "Debts, if a red Hat be offer'd to him, he will "be ſure to purchaſe it for Money. I cannot "better compare Mr. de Marca than to the late "Mr. le Jay, who from a ſmall beginning "became firſt Preſident in the Parliament of "Paris.

(g) Id. ib. p. 6, 7.

(h) An Anſwer of the true French Catholicks to the Advertiſement of the Engliſh Catholicks, p. 53. edit. 1589.

(i) Patin Letter 69. p. 294. of tome 1. dated June 28. 1652.

(k) Note, that in order to juſtifie Patin the conſtraint that was put upon the Preſident de Marca can not be alledg'd; for our Peter de Marca was the Son of a Swordman. He had not therefore been oblig'd to make an Abjuration to preſerve an Office. See the Life of Peter de Marca by the Abbot Faget, p. 7, 8.

(l) It was a Prieſt of Paris, called Herſens. See the Life of F. Morin, p. 52. The Jeſuit Michael Rabardeau wrote an Anſwer to him, which was cenſured at Rome. See Theophilus Raynaudus, de bonis & malis libris, n. 514, p. m. 293.

(m) Baluzius ubi ſupra, p. 23, 24.

(C) He had already been employ'd to write a Work of great Importance.] The Hiſtory of Bearn, which he Publiſh'd in 1640, confirm'd extreamly the good Opinion, which was conceiv'd of his Knowledge and great Capacity. It was therefore believ'd, that he would be very fit to be imploy'd about a nice and important Matter, which offer'd it ſelf a little while after. The Volume of the Liberties of the Gallican Church, which Peter de Puy had Publiſh'd, alarm'd the Partizans of the Court of Rome; and ſome of 'em endeavoured to make it believed, that theſe were the Preliminaries of a Schiſm which was deſign'd by Cardinal Richelieu; as if that Eminence had had ſome Thoughts of erecting a Patriarchate in the Kingdom, that ſo the Gallican Church might have no dependance upon the Pope. A French Divine under the Name of Optatus Gallus wrote upon this Subject, and inſinuated that the Cardinal had gain'd a great Perſon who would make an Apology for this new Eſtabliſhment. This great Perſon was no other than Peter de Marca. (m) Sequens menſis Martius materiam dedit novis ſermonibus, ob editionem Libelli Petri de Marca ad Antiſtites Regni, de cavendo ſchiſmate, quem præ ſuribus adeſſe nunciabat Optatus Gallus. Sub eo namine latere voluit ; ſatis alioqui cognitus, quam illi detrahere liberet. Occaſionem turbandi ſit ex editione Voluminum de Libertatibus Eccleſiæ Gallicanæ, quæ anno ſuperiore prodierant curâ Clariſſ. Petri Puteani ; atque item ex rumore vulgi, diſ-ſerentis eam Cardinali Richelio mentem eſſe, ut omiſſo Epiſcopo Romano, Patriarcha in Gallis conſtituatur. Ajebat præterea, magnum virum in partes tractum promiſſis ingentibus, qui ſcripto defenderet quæ pro ea cauſa Cardinalis facturus erat, neque dubitatur, quin Marcam intelligeret. The King underſtanding that an Accuſation of this Nature would render him odious, by reaſon of the Hatred to which it expos'd the Cardinal, gave Orders to Mr. de Marca to refute this Optatus Gallus, and to keep a certain Medium which ſhould not prejudice the Liberties of the Gallican Church, and ſhould ſhow that they did not leſſen the Reverence due to the Holy See. He accepted of this Commiſſion, and executed it in the Book, de Concordia ſacerdotii & imperii, ſive de libertatibus Eccleſiæ Galliçanæ, which he Publiſh'd in 1641 (a). He declared in his Preface (b), that he would not enter upon the Diſcuſſion of the Right, but only inſiſt upon Matters of Fact, i. e. that he would only ſhow the Bounds which at all times had parted the two Empires, viz. that of the Temporal and that of the Spiritual Prince. But tho' he Collected an infinite number of Teſtimonies concerning the Pope's Power; yet his Book diſpleas'd the Ultramontanes, who have very tender Ears. (c) Quorum aures tenerîtudine quadam plus trahuntur, ut ait Auxiliaris præfectus apud antiquum ſcriptorem vitæ ſancti Hilarii Epiſcopi Arelatenſis. The Court of Rome ſhow'd it ſelf very backward to diſpatch the Bulls which were deſir'd for this Author, who was lately nam'd to the Biſhoprick of Conſerans. They acquainted him that he muſt in the firſt place ſoften ſome Paſſages of his Work, which they caus'd to be examin'd with great exactneſs. Holſtenius, one of the Examiners, declar'd, that he found many things in it which wanted Explication, and ſome others that ſecretly wounded the Rights of the Church. (d) Holſtenius quidem quamplurima in eo contineri retulit, quæ explicatione indigerent; quædam etiam eſſe quæ Romana jura violent, ſed in occulto. Tanto quippe ac tam ſingulari artificio librum hunc eſſe perfectum, ut diſtingui vix poſſit, quæ pars ejus Eccleſiæ Romanæ faveat, quæve noceat. One of the other Examiners gave it a better Teſtimony; he aſſirm'd that this Book prov'd ſo ſtrongly the Authority of the See of Rome, that the Author of it deſerv'd to be rewarded. His Approbation was conceal'd, and Mr. de Marca could never get a Copy of it. After the Death of Urban VIII. Cardinal Bichi ſollicited earneſtly Innocent X. to grant the Bulls to the Biſhop of Conſerans; but the Aſſeſſor of the Holy Office reviv'd the Complaints which had been made againſt the Book de concordia ſacerdotii & imperii, which made the Pope examine the Book a-new. (e) Innocentius naturâ cunctator, & qui per imprudentiam nihil eorum prætermitti volebat quæ ad dignitatem Sedis Apoſtolicæ pertinere exiſtimabat, librum hunc examinandum de integro commiſit Cardinalibus Bauberino &c. Mr. de Marca perceiving things thus drawn out to a great length, and hoping for no good Iſſue unleſs he made ſatisfaction to the Court of Rome, Publiſh'd (f) a Book wherein he explain'd his Opinion according to the Mind of the Ultramontanes, and wrote a very ſubmiſſive Letter to the Pope, wherein he made great Promiſes of Fidelity. He confeſs'd that he had diſcharg'd in his Book the Duties of a Preſident in the Parliament, much better than thoſe of a Biſhop; but it will be better to relate the very words which he made uſe of. (g) Fateor eo in libro Principis partes pro muneris mei ratione ſoviſſe, Præſidemque potius implevi ſſe quam Epiſcopum ——— & ne libri publicati invidia deſiderius meus obeſſet, libello altero Barcinone edito, quem huic chartæ adjunxi, hallucinationes meas deprecatus ſum; Opus cenſuræ Beatitudinis Veſtræ ſubmiſi, quam prona mente amplexurum voveo, & aſſertorem vindicemque libertatis Eccleſiaſticæ futurum. He did not forget in his Book the great ſervice he pretended to have done the Ultramontanes, by (h) Publiſhing

(a) Id. ib. p. 24, 25.

(b) Sic ſcriptionem ſuam temperavit, ut relicta diſcuſſione juris quod utrique Poteſtati competit, ad ſolam facti inquiſitionem, qua fines veterum poſſeſſorum demonſtrare poſſet, ſe contulerit; ut ipſe præfatur in Admonitione ad Lectorem Id. ibid. pag. 25.

(c) Ibid. pag. 26.

(d) Ibid. pag. 28.

(e) Ibid. pag. 30.

(f) At Barcelona 1646 Quo editionis librorum de Concordia Sacerdotii & Imperii conſilium exponit, opus Apoſtolicæ Sedi cenſura ſubmittit, & Reges Canonum cuſtodes, non vero auctores eſſe docet Ibid. p. 31.

(g) Ibid. p. 32.

(h) See the Remark M

lonia in 1644, to exerciſe there the Office of Viſitor General, and Intendant; which he diſcharg'd till the Year 1651. with ſo much capacity that the Catalans lov'd him (D) to ſuch a degree as is ſcarce to be parallell'd. He went to take Poſſeſſion of his Biſhoprick in Auguſt 1651. The next Year he was nam'd to the Archbiſhoprick of Toulouſe, and wrote to the Pope a Letter (E) which deſerves a Remark. He took Poſſeſſion Publiſhing the decretal of Pope Vigilius. The Court of Rome, according to their uſual cunning, continued ſtill their delays after this ample ſatisfaction: But at laſt Mr. de Marca obtain'd his Bulls in the Month of January 1647. He was ordain'd Prieſt at Barcelona in the Month of April 1648. and conſecrated Biſhop at Narbonne, in the Month of October following. In this Year he was put upon a tryal, and he made it appear, that he was ſincere in promiſing a great Zeal for the Intereſt of the Pope. They had a mind to know his Opinion about a Queſtion which † made a great noiſe, and he gave it ſuch as Innocent X. could wiſh. (i) Mota erat temporibus illis gravis quæſtio, de duplici capite in Eccleſia, pleriſque unicum tantum caput, videlicet B. Petrum, in ea conſtituentibus; quibuſdam vero cenſentibus Paulum quoque Eccleſiæ caput cum Petro fuiſſe. Cum hæc quæſtio diſtraheret in partes ingenia hominum eruditorum, atque interim dignitas Romanæ Sedis tentari videretur; Innocentius, qui apprime noverat Marcam in primis Eccleſiaſticæ antiquitatis peritum eſſe, ratus præterea eveniſſe occaſionem qua ejus animum erga Sedem Romanam experiretur, aperire ſententiam jubet. Ille nihil cunctatus Exercitationem Barcinone v. Kalendas Junii anno M.DC. XLVII. ſcripſit de ſingulari Primatu Petri, quæ nondum edita eſt: quam Innocentio, ad quem ſtatim miſſa eſt, valde placuiſſe ex eo intellectum eſt, quod eam publice legi juſſit, ac ſingularem quandam de Marca in Sedem Romanam propenſione acceptæ opinionem.

† That about the two Heads of the Church of St. Peter and St. Paul.

(i) Ibid. p. 37, 38.

Two things we may conclude from this Narrative: 1. That 'tis a great Slavery for the Court of France, to want the Pope's Bulls for the making of Biſhops; for it hinders thoſe who are capable of maintaining the Liberties of the Gallican Church, and the Intereſt of the King in his Quarrels with Rome from uſing all their ſtrength: They aſpire to Prelacies, and they ſee that they cannot arrive at them if they render themſelves too odious to the Court of Rome; or at leaſt that they muſt make a ſhameful Satisfaction. It is not long ſince (k) this happen'd to ſome Members of the Aſſembly of the Clergy in the Year 1682. The ſecond thing I conclude is, that Mr. Sallo had no reaſon to take for an Artifice what was done at Rome in 1664, againſt the new Edition of Mr. de Marca's Book. 'Twas pretended that Baluzius had Publiſh'd that Book ex retractatis ſcriptis Petri de Marca. This was not without ground. Did not this Prelate make a Retractation in the Writing Publiſh'd at Barcelona? Did not he write to the Pope to ask his Pardon? Let us ſet down the very words of the Decree, and the Reflexion of Mr. Sallo. (l) Decretum ſacræ Indicis congregationis, quo damnati, prohibiti, ac reſpective ſuſpenſi fuerunt infra ſcripti omnes libri. Romæ, 17. Novembris 1664. De concordia Sacerdotii & Imperii, ſeu de libertate Eccleſiæ Gallicanæ liber, à Stephano Baluzio impreſſus Pariſiis, anno 1663. Perperam adſcriptus Petro de Marca, ex cujus retractatis ſcriptis aliorumque erroneis ſententiis operâ præfati Baluzii editus eſt. " (m) The Court of Rome having always " their Aim, 'tis not very ſafe to adhere ſcrupulouſly to their cenſures. Wherefore this " Decree ought not to hinder us from having always as great an eſteem as we had for the Book of " the Liberties of the Gallican Church, written " by the late Mr. de Marca. In effect it contains nothing but very certain Maxims, and " which may paſs for the fundamental Laws of " this Monarchy. Likewiſe we ought not to " have the worſe Opinion of the ſincerity of " Mr. Baluzius, altho' he is accus'd in this Decree " of having falſly attributed this Book to Mr. de " Marca. For 'tis plain that the Congregation " made uſe of this Artifice, becauſe they durſt not " directly attack the Memory of this great Archbiſhop, and they thought it would be more eaſie " to cry down his Book by ſubſtituting in his " place a Perſon of leſs eminent Dignity in the " Church."

(k) I writ this the 18*th of* Decemb. 1695.

(l) See the Journal des Savans Jan. 12. 1665.

(m) Sallo, Journal des Savans. ibid.

To conclude the Hiſtory of this Book, I muſt add further, that Mr. Baluzius has procur'd two Editions of it ſince the Death of the Author; one in 1663, and the other in 1669. Theſe Editions are larger than the firſt, as it appears from theſe Latin words. (n) Opus de concordia ſacerdotii & imperii——altero ab ipſius obitu anno auguſtiori habitu adornatum, iterum emiſit in lucem Baluzius, & non ſaltem priores quatuor libros recenſuit, additionibus ab Auctore compoſitis auxit, ac ſuis notis, ubi occaſio tulit, illuſtravit; ſed & integrum Tomum alterum nunquam antea editum ex autographo ſummi Viri deſcriptum addidit, nonnulla Antiquitatis illuſtria monumenta adjecit, integroſque in eo Libros, quod Gallice eſſent ſcripti, in Latinam linguam vertit. Cumque Opus hoc tanto favore eruditorum fuerit exceptum & communi approbatione commendatum, ut intra breve tempus diſtracta exempla fuerint, iſtud anno M DC LXIX. recognitum emendatius, copioſiuſque literato iterum orbi dedit.

(n) Acta Eruditor. Lipſienſ. ann. 1682. p. 327.

Deckherrus has committed ſome groſs Faults, when he ſpeaks of the writing of Optatus Gallicus, and of the Book of our Mr. de Marca: They were critically obſerv'd (o) in a Letter added to the new Edition of his Book in 1686.

(o) See Deckherrus de Scriptis adeſpotis, p. 384. edit. 1686.

Note, that the Author of the famous Book de libertatibus Eccleſiæ Gallicanæ, publiſh'd in 1685, does not ſpeak favourably of the Conduct of the Author of the concordia ſacerdotii & imperii. " (a) " He inſinuates, that Mr. de Marca is not upright " in his Ways, and that tho' he wrote like a Man " that made his Court in France, yet he had a " cautious regard for the Court of Rome; for it " ſeems in certain places, that by virtue of his " Citations, he has eſtabliſh'd the thing, but all on " a ſudden he gives the Advantage to the other " ſide, by citing Examples and Teſtimonies contrary to the former, or by limiting the former " with a thouſand Reſtrictions: And then after " all this, he leſſens alſo the Advantage of the ſecond Party. At firſt he grants all, and then he " regains it inſenſibly, but in ſuch a manner that " he makes the Balance turn towards the ſecular " Power.

(a) News from the Republick of Learning, July 1685. p. 718. of the 2*d. Edition.*

(D) The Catalans lov'd him to ſuch a degree as is ſcarce to be parallell'd.] This appears by the Prayers and Pilgrimages which they made for his Health, in 1647. (b) The City of Barcelona made a publick Vow to our Lady of Montſerrat, and ſent thither in their Name twelve Capuchins, and twelve Maids. Theſe travell'd with their Hair hanging down, and their Feet naked. Mr. de Marca was perſuaded, that ſo many Vows and Prayers obtain'd his Health, and he would not leave Catalonia without going to offer up his Prayers at Montſerrat. Thither he went in 1651, and there (c) he wrote a little Treatiſe, de origine ac progreſſu cultus B Mariæ Virginis in Monteſerrato, which he left in the Archives of the Monaſtery. It was loſt by Negligence, becauſe perhaps the Author did not admit all kind of Traditions. He ſent a Copy of it in 1663, to Francis Creſpus, Profeſſor of Divinity at Lerida, who was writing a Hiſtory of this Convent of Montſerrat. He adviſ'd him to uſe a little more Diſcretion than the Spaniards do. (d) Paucis agit de antiquitate loci; admonetque Creſpum, ne in ea hiſtoria ſcribenda, falſis, uti Hiſpani ſolent, teſtimoniis utatur; quæ Gallis, inquit, fabularum iſtiuſmodi detegendarum peritiſſimis, ludibrium debent, & reliquæ narrationi, licet alioqui veræ, auctoritatem demunt. This Diſſertation was Publiſh'd in 1681, by the care of Mr. Baluzius. Note, that Mr. de Marca, that great Author, did not diſdain to write about ſuch things, as were more becoming to a Monk than a Counſellor of State: As when he wrote the Hiſtory of our Lady of Betaram (e), at the deſire of a devout Prieſt call'd Charpentier, who was the Founder of that Chappel, as he was afterwards of that of Mont Valerien, near Paris. This Hiſtory was Publiſh'd at Barcelona (f).

(b) Baluzius ubi ſupra p. 45.

(c) Id. ib. p. 46.

(d) Id. ib. p. 48.

(e) In Bearn in the Diocеſs of Leſcar.

(f) Taken from the Life of Mr. de Marca, written by the Abbot Faget, p. 43.

(E) He wrote a Letter to the Pope which deſerves a Remark.] The tranſlation of a Biſhop from one See to another, ſtands in need of a particular Favour from the Court of Rome: Wherefore Mr. de

Poſſeſſion of the Archbiſhoprick of Toulouſe, without any Pomp, in the Month of March 1655. He aſſiſted the next Year at the General Aſſembly of the Clergy of France, where he oppos'd the (F) Janſeniſts. He prepar'd himſelf for reſidence in 1658; when, to remove all the Scruples that might trouble him, if he had continu'd a long time at Paris, the King made him Miniſter of State. He follow'd the Court in a Progreſs to Lyons, and then was preſent in the States of Languedoc, from whence he went to Toulouſe in the Month of April 1659. He preſided in the States of that Province in the ſame City while the King was there, and preſented the Rolls to His Majeſty. The next Year he went to Rouſſillon, to regulate the limits with the Commiſſioners of the King of Spain. Theſe Conferences were of a very ſingular Character;

(g) O me felicem, quando veteris illius atque ſanctiſſimi Sacerdotis Exuperii exemplo, (qui ex Præſidatu in Hiſpaniis acto Cathedram illam ſuſcipiens, eam deinde rexit juxta pium atq; prudens Innocentii primi ad ejus conſulta reſponſum) licebit per Innocenti X. decretum poſt geſtos Magiſtratus Regios in Gallia & Hiſpania, Epiſcopatus quoque curis funcio mihi, Toloſanæ Sedis adminiſtrationem capeſſere. Baluzius ubi ſupra p. 53.

de Marca Biſhop of Conſerans, being nam'd to the Archbiſhoprick of Toulouſe, paid his reſpects to the Pope with the greateſt Addreſs that was poſſible; and tho' he knew that Exuperius Biſhop of Toulouſe, was not the ſame Exuperius who had Commanded in Spain, yet he gave it out as a thing certain in the Letter he wrote to Innocent X. By this means he drew an agreeable parallel between Pope Innocent I. and Pope Innocent X. and between himſelf and this Exuperius (g): And therefore he made no ſcruple to vent this Falſity, which he thought proper to tickle the Pope, and to render him more favourable to himſelf. Some Body obſerv'd that this was a Falſhood, but Mr. de Marca being told of this Criticiſm, laugh'd at it, and call'd ſuch a Cenſurer a little Soul, who did not ſee the difference between a Letter of Complement and a Hiſtory. Mr. Baluzius has given us ſo good a Narrative of this, and in Terms ſo well-choſen, that it would be an injury to the judicious Reader, not to ſet down his words: There he will find much more Matter for Reflexions than in the ſhort account I have given of it. Sciebat ſane vir eruditiſſimus diverſum ab Exuperio Epiſcopo Toloſano fuiſſe Exuperium illum, qui Præſidatum in Hiſpanis egit. Quis enim ignorat? Verum cum argumentum eſſet accommodatiſſimum ad rem quam tractabat, ſciretque præterea Principum aures ita eſſe formatas, ut nihil niſi jucundum lætumque accipere velint, vim aliquam inferre veritati non abnuit, ut Pontificem aliqui difficilem ac moroſum, ſibi faventem ac propitium habere poſſet. Quod ideo retuli, ut eatur obviam ſcrupuloſæ cujuſdam ſcriptoris diligentiæ, qui in adverſariis ſuis adnotavit lapſum hoc eſſe Marcam: de quo admonitus a me vir optimus paucis ante obitum menſibus, riſit hominis ſupinitatem, qui non animadverteret cujuſmodi argumentum in ea epiſtola tractaretur. Neque enim hiſtoria ſcribebatur. Non diſplicet profecto hominibus eruditis, quod oratores veri limites nonnunquam excedant in compoſitione verborum, ut auditorum aures aliqua voluptate permulceant, & alliciant (h)

(F And there oppos'd the Janſeniſts] It was an unhappy thing for them that this great Prelate met with ſo great Difficulties at Rome, when he wanted a Bull to be Biſhop of Conſerans. This taught him that he muſt not loſe any occaſion of repairing the damage which his Concordia Sacerdotii & Imperii had done him in that Country. Now what more favourable occaſion could he expect, than that of ſeconding the Court of Rome in the proceedings againſt the Diſciples of Janſenius? Add to this, that he had been repreſented as a Janſeniſt beyond the Alps, and that this bad Office had for a long time retarded the expedition of the Bull, which was neceſſary for making him Archbiſhop of Toulouſe. I do not know if among the many Pieces that have been written about this Calumny, it was ever thought fit to write one concerning the uſefulneſs of that Crime. Thoſe that would employ themſelves about this matter, would be much to blame, if they forgot the Advantage that may be drawn from Calumny in Diſputes of Religion; for ſometimes an able and very active Man, would keep himſelf neuter, or endeavour to accommodate Matters in a fair way, if he was not deſam'd as a favourer of Hereticks. Then to clear himſelf, and to prevent the diſadvantage that may ariſe from ſuch a Reputation, he is oblig'd (i) to ſet up for a Perſecutor: Whatever might be the cauſe of M. de Marca's Zeal againſt the Party of the Janſeniſts, 'tis certain that they found him a terrible Adverſary. Alexander VII. thank'd him heartily for it. Clerici Gallicani Comitia Parifiis habebantur. Illuc ivit de Marca ſe conferens anno M. DC. LVI perhonorifice eo cœtu ſuſceptus XIII Kalend. Aprilis, de ipſius plurimis occaſionibus, quibus oſtendit quanto ingenii vi polleret, & quam præclara eruditione ac doctrina præditus eſſet. Nam auctoritatem Romani Pontificis, quam per ſummum nefas aliqui deprimere conabantur, fortiter & ſtrenue vindicavit adverſus æmulos. Quarum id Alexandro VII. qui poſt abſoluta demum Comitia, honorificas ad Marcam literas die XVII. Novembris anni M. DC. LVII. ſcripſit: quibus ei gratias egit, ob aſſertam Sedis Apoſtolicæ dignitatem, & ut deinceps pergeret in eadem reverentia, verbis amantiſſimis hortatus eſt. Janſeniſmum vero, tum maxime vires ſuas colligentem, ſi magiſtratu & auctoritate ſua repreſſit, ut ob hoc ipſum promeritus ſit iram hominum ejuſdem ſectæ, qui ne mortuo quidem pepercerunt. He adds, that before the Concluſion of this Aſſembly (l), there appear'd a Satyr againſt Mr de Marca, which was ſuppreſs'd by another ſome time after. (m) Ineunte ſpatio prodiit libellus famoſus, ſub titulo hypothetico illuſtriſſimum Dominum de Marca Archiepiſcopum Tolonenſem, quo ejus fama atrociter proſcindebatur. Ab hoc Romanæ Sedis per ſummum ſuum in aperto violabatur. Libellum hunc ſecutus eſt alius, haud moderatior, & ipſe, ut prior, abſque auctoris nomine. Some of his Friends advis'd him not to anſwer thoſe Libels, and others advis'd him to do it. He conſider'd with himſelf which Advice he ſhould follow, and at laſt reſolv'd to be ſilent (n). He was contented to ſee the Agreement of the Empire and the Prieſthood with reſpect to theſe two Libels; for they were condemn'd to be burnt both at Paris and at Rome. Here follow the Titles of three Pieces that appear'd againſt him. A Letter from the Author of the moſt important Rules to my Lord de Marca Archbiſhop of Toulouſe, 1657. An Anſwer to the Letter of my Lord Archbiſhop of Toulouſe about the Conſultation of the Clergy, November 14. 1656. An Anſwer to a Letter lately publiſh'd about what paſs'd in the Aſſembly of the Clergy November 14. 1656. The firſt of theſe three Pieces was preceded by this; Very important Rules drawn from two Paſſages, one of the Council of France, and the other of Glaber, alledged by my Lord de Marca Archbiſhop of Toulouſe. This is not at all Satyrical

I have juſt now caſt my Eyes upon a Book (o), wherein I find ſomething which ſhews that the heat of the Janſeniſts is not yet cool'd. In this Book 'tis related, that the Archbiſhop of Rouen (p), had a mind to compoſe the Diſputes of Janſenism during the general Aſſembly of the Clergy in 1657 "(q) This Negotiation went not far. The Arch-" biſhop of Rouen had audience upon this Subject " May 3. of Cardinal Mazarine; who, as this Pre-" late related the ſame Day to Mr Bagnols, teſti-" fied he had a mind to accommodate this " Affair, and that they had agreed, his Emi-" nence and he, to treat of this Matter with Mr " de Marca Archbiſhop of Toulouſe, who probably " made no ſecret of it to F. Annat. After a ſecond " Audience which the Archbiſhop of Rouen had of " the Cardinal the next day; this Prelate related, " that having been two full Hours in Conference " with that chief Miniſter, and with the Archbiſhop " of Toulouſe, his Eminence had ſhewn more firm-" neſs than he had done before, and had made a grea-" ter oppoſition to the Project of Accommodation, " and that the Archbiſhop of Toulouſe ſpoke bitterly " againſt it, and call'd the diſtinction of the Jan-" ſeniſts as a Chimerical Fancy. This is very cre-" dible; for this Prelate being wholly a Politi-" cian, was the Father of the Inſeparability of the " Right and the Fact, a true Chimera wherewith he " was in Love, or ſeem'd to be ſo, becauſe it " ſerv'd his Ends. This Prelate did not care to " give over his own Deſigns in order to follow " thoſe of the Archbiſhop of Rouen in his. He knew " much more than he, in Matters of Policy and " Intrigue. He had fram'd his Scheme, and taken " his Meaſures with F. Annat, upon another Plan " than this, which could not pleaſe that Fa-" ther

(h) Id. ib. p. 53, 54.

(i) Compare with this the Article Ferrier.

(k) Baluzius, ibid. p. 59.

(l) It ended in the Month of March 1657.

(m) Ibid. p. 64

(n) Id ib. p. 65. Yet he wrote ſomething againſt thoſe Libels, which Mr Baluzius publiſh'd in 1681.

(o) Printed in 1710 and intitled, The Peace of Clement IX.

(p) Francis Harly who died Archbiſhop of Paris.

(q) The Peace of Clement IX. p. 144.

Character; for he was oblig'd to make (G) ſeveral Critical Remarks upon ſome words of Pomponius Mela and Strabo. He made a Journey to Paris in the Month of September in the ſame Year, and died there June 29th 1662, a little after (H) he had obtain'd the Bulls for the Archbiſhoprick of the ſame City, to which he was nam'd without any canvaſſing, after the King had accepted the Reſignation of Cardinal de Retz. He left the care of his MSS. to Mr. Baluzius, who did belong to him ever ſince the 29th of June 1656 *. He could not chooſe a more worthy Depoſitory; for Mr. Baluzius made it appear from that time, that he had a great Zeal (I) for the Glory of the Deceas'd, and all the Parts requiſite for Publiſhing ſuch a Depoſitum. He promis'd the Life of his Mæcenas as a very large Work, wherein the detail of the noble Actions, and fine Qualities of this Prelate would be ſeen. I think he has not executed this Deſign. The Publick hath loſt much by it, altho' the Letter I have † cited, and from which I have taken the Chronological Narrative, which I have ſet down, does very clearly, and at ſome length, declare the Virtues, Merits and Actions of this Archbiſhop. Some time after his Life appear'd written by the Abbot Faget, attended with three or four Diſcourſes; which rais'd a Diſpute (K) between him and Mr. Baluzius. There are in the Work of this Abbot many Particulars, which may be read with Pleaſure, when one loves to know all that concerns great Men. There we may ſee how Mr. de Marca renounc'd all the Pleaſures of Youth, out of Love for his Books, while he was a Scholar. He foretold his School-Fellows, who loſt their " ther. In fine, he had for this kind of Affairs " and many others, an entire Confidence from " the Cardinal, and all the ſupport of the Court. " Thus the Archbiſhop of Roan took care not to " inſiſt upon this Affair, when he was better in- " form'd.

(G) To make ſeveral critical Remarks upon ſome words of Pomponius Mela.] It was ſaid in the Treaty of the Pyrenees, that the limits between France and Spain in the County of Rouſſillon, ſhould be the ſame with thoſe which anciently ſeparated Gaul from Spain. It was therefore neceſſary to examine where the ancient Geographers bounded Gaul on that ſide. The Learning of our Archbiſhop was a great help. You will find the particulars of all theſe Conferences in a Poſthumous Work of this Author (d).

(H) He died a little after he had obtain'd the Bulls.] The little time that he liv'd after his Nomination to the Archbiſhoprick of Paris, invited ſome Body to write an Epitaph upon him of ſix Verſes, which is known to every Body.

Cy git l'illuſtre de Marca,
Que le plus grand des Rois marqua,
Pour le Prelat de ſon Egliſe:
Mais la mort qui le remarqua,
Et qui ſe plait à la ſurpriſe,
Tout auſſi-tot le demarqua.

(I) That he had a great Zeal——and all the parts.] To be convinc'd of this Truth, we need only ſee the Prefaces, Notes, Additions, &c. wherewith he has enrich'd the Poſthumous Pieces of his Mecenas as he Publiſh'd them. I have already ſpoken of the new Editions which he procur'd of that famous Work, de concordia imperii & ſacerdotii. I muſt now add that he publiſh'd three or four Diſſertations of that Learned Man in 1669 (e). They concern the Authority of the Pope, and that of the Patriarchs and Primates; a very difficult Canon of the Council of Orange, and the firſt Eſtabliſhment of the Chriſtian Faith in Gaul. He publiſh'd many others in 1681, the Subjects whereof you may ſee in the Journal of (f) Leipſick. In 1688 he Publiſh'd a Folio, with this Title, Marca Hiſpanica, ſive limes Hiſpanicus, hoc eſt Geographica & hiſtorica deſcriptio Cataloniæ, Ruſcinonis, & circunjacentium populorum auctore illuſtriſſimo viro Petro de Marca. All the Journaliſts make mention of it.

(K) A Diſpute between him and Mr. Baluzius.] The Abbot Faget, an ancient Agent of the Clergy, and Son of an Aunt by the Mother's ſide to Mr. de Marca, Printed at Paris in 1668, the Life of this Prelate, together with a Treatiſe of the Euchariſt, another of the Sacrifice of the Maſs, another about the Erection of the Patriarchat of Conſtantinople, another in French about the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, and ſome other Sacraments. He was the Author of the Life, but not of the Diſſertations which are joyn'd with it; theſe were written by Mr. de Marca. He could never obtain the approbation of the Faculty of Theology, without conſenting that all the French Treatiſes ſhould be left out, and that ſome Leaves ſhould be printed a-new to alter ſeveral things in the others. The Printer, who was of the Reform'd Religion, knew very well that ſome Leaves were Printed a-new, on purpoſe to take out ſome things that favour'd the Proteſtants. What does he do? He keeps in all the places which were to be chang'd, and ſo he deliver'd a Copy to Mr. Claude, juſt ſuch as he had Printed it before the Commiſſioners of the Faculty of Theology made theſe changes in it (g). From this Copy, or ſuch another (h) an Edition of the Book was Printed in foreign Countries, as Mr. Baluzius (i) had foreſeen. To this Edition were joyn'd the Letters which Mr. Baluzius and Mr. Faget wrote one againſt another: For you muſt know, that Mr. Baluzius thought he ought not to keep ſilence, when he ſaw that the Probity and Orthodoxy of Mr. de Marca were call'd into queſtion. He wrote therefore, one after another, two Letters (k) to Preſident de Marca. I will here give one Paſſage of the firſt: " (l) You know, Sir, " that his Enemies have wickedly Publiſh'd, that " in the Affairs which paſs'd thro' his Hands, he " did not ſo much conſider Truth and Juſtice as " his Intereſt and Ambition, having always en- " deavour'd to riſe higher and higher in the " Church, and that theſe Conſiderations were " the reaſon why he often betray'd the Truth to " flatter the Court of Rome. I was going about to " ſtop theſe Diſcourſes, and hinder them from " making any impreſſion on the minds of rational " Men. But Mr. Faget with one daſh of his Pen, " has overthrown, if we may believe him, all that " the true Servants of the deceas'd Archbiſhop " were able to eſtabliſh in the ſpace of many " Years" Let us ſee another Paſſage taken out of the ſecond Letter. " (m) I think my ſelf ob- " lig'd to acquaint you, that the Book which Mr. " Faget has Printed, makes a great noiſe in this " City, upon the account of ſome Expreſſions " that have crept into it, which ſeem to favour " the Error of the Calviniſts and Lutherans con- " cerning the Sacrament of the Euchariſt; which " is one of the moſt eſſential Points of our Reli- " gion, and at this Day moſt controverted. If " it be true, which I can hardly believe, that the " deceas'd Archbiſhop wrote the Treatiſes which " Mr. Faget has Printed under his Name, of which " he boaſts in the Preface, and in the Life, to " have the Originals written with the Author's " own Hand; we cannot hinder the deceas'd " Archbiſhop from being accounted by many " People a Heretick on the Subject of the Eu- " chariſt, and conſequently his Reputation will " receive great Damage. You cannot imagine how " this Edition has given occaſion to all ſorts of Peo- " ple to talk of him. The Huguenots expreſs a great " joy in it, as being a thing which comes very ſeaſon- " ably

* Taken from a Latin Letter of Mr. Baluzius written to Sorbiere, de vita, rebus geſtis, moribus, & ſcriptis illuſtriſſimi viri Petri de Marca, Printed at Paris in 1663. in 8°.

† It has been inlarged at the beginning of the Book De concordia Imperii & Sacerdotii, of the edit. 1669.

(d) Entitled Marca Hiſpanica. The Biblioth. Univerſ. has an Abſtract of it at the beginning of Tom. 15.

(e) See the Journal of Leipſick, 1682. p. 327.

(f) Ib. p. 328. See alſo the Journal des Savans, March 21. 1681. p. 117.

(g) A Letter of Mr. Baluzius to the Biſhop of Tulle, printed at the end of the Book publiſh'd by Mr. Faget edit. 1669.

(h) Mr. Baluzius in his ſecond Letter to Preſident de Marca, confeſſes that Mr. Fager had already preſented his Book, and that the Printer had ſold ſome of them, before there was any thought of ſuppreſſing the Edition.

(i) Provided there remain but one Copy in the Hands of a private Perſon, ten thouſand ſhall be printed from that whenever they have a mind to make it publick. Which I am certain they will not fail to do, ſpeedily in Holland, and at Geneva. Baluzius's ſecond Letter to Preſident de Marca at the end of the Book of the Abbot Faget, Edition of 1669.

(k) The Son of the Archbiſhop of Paris.

(l) 'Tis dated at Paris April 22. 1668.

(m) Dated at Paris May 27. 1668.

their Time in vain Recreations, what a difference there would be one Day, (L) between their Glory and his. This was at Toulouſe that he laid the Foundations of his great Knowledge. He neglected no Means whereby he might become a good Grecian (M); which very much diſtinguiſh'd him from other Learned Men. One of his chief Excellencies was, that he could explain the moſt intricate Matters without (N) needing a Guide.

MARCELLINUS (AMMIANUS) has an honourable Name among thoſe who wrote, the Roman Hiſtory. He was a Greek Originally (A), as he declares at the end of " ably to confirm their Opinion, and the Ene" mies of the late Archbiſhop take occaſion

" from thence to blaſt his Memory, and blacken
" his Reputation. The Abbot Faget being treated with the utmoſt Contempt in thoſe two Letters, was Mad at it, and publiſh'd two other Letters full of Rancor. I ſhall not dwell upon it, but only touch one Point which relates to a Fact I have mention'd in the body of this Article. Mr. Faget denies (a) that Mr. de Marca entruſted his MSS. with Mr. Baluzius.
Let us ſee what Mr. Baluzius did when he ſaw himſelf bely'd upon this Head. " I will obſerve
" to you, ſays he to the Biſhop of Tulle, that " having caus'd him to be rebuk'd by a good
" Prieſt of Roüergue of his Acquaintance, call'd
" Guibert, becauſe, to the prejudice of the Truth
" well known to him, he has affirm'd in that " Life, that I was guilty of Forgery, when I pub-" liſh'd, that the deceas'd Archbiſhop had given " me his Papers when he was dying, and entruſt-
" ed me with the Edition of his Works; he an" ſwer'd, That it concern'd him in Point of Re" putation, becauſe, ſaid he, if this were belie" ved, it would follow, that the deceas'd Arch" biſhop had not a good Opinion of him, and did " not think him capable of taking care of the E" dition of his Works. And this he ſaid alſo in " general terms to a Perſon of great Merit and " Virtue, whom you know, who did me the ho" nour to tell me of it. This is, my Lord, the fine
" Principle upon which he grounds his Calumny
" and Impoſture." Without eſpouſing any Party in this Quarrel (b), I will only ſay in general, that there are a thouſand Falſhoods Printed which have no other Foundation than the point of Honour; for when once we perceive, that a naked Declaration of the Truth will do us a prejudice in the World, things are related quite otherwiſe than they happen'd.

(a) In Vita Petri de Marca, p. 118.

(b) Note, That Mr. Baluzius in the Life of Mr. de Marca, edit. 1669. refutes Mr. Faget about the Depoſitum and many other things.

(L) What a difference there would be one Day between their Glory and his.] A young Man of your Quality, would they ſay to him, ought not to ſhun Company, nor to forſake Play, Dancing, and ſuch other Diverſions. You are like one that's dead and buried. A Time will come, anſwer'd he to them, when I ſhall make my Name famous, but ye ſhall remain in Darkneſs. (c) Exprobrabant adoleſcentem genere clarum non decere, a virorum & mulierum nobilium civitatis colloquiis & ſocietate recedere, nec præſtantes animi dotes exerere, non ludos, nec ludicra, neque nocturnas hyemis choreas, ut aliis ſolitum erat, frequentare, poſſeque eum, virum abſconditum jure nominari. Ad quæ ille, quum veniſſet temporis occaſio, futurum ſe omnibus pervotum, ubi latendum illis foret, peracute reſpondit. The Event juſtified this Anſwer. Mr. de Marca became one of the greateſt Men of his Age, and appear'd on the higheſt Stages; and perhaps thoſe who gave him this Reproof, were never known two Leagues from their own Pariſh. This is a good Leſſon for Scholars that are ſtudious, and for thoſe that are debauch'd. 'Tis good to ſet before their Eyes ſuch an Example as this; which was the reaſon why I made this Remark.

(c) Fagetus, in Vita Petri de Marca, p. 9.

(M) He might become a good Grecian.] He gave proof of this in 1642, by publiſhing a Greek MS. he found in the King's Library (d), which he Tranſlated into Latin. It was the Decretal Epiſtle of Pope Vigilius, confirming the ſecond Council of Conſtantinople: He added to it a Learned Diſſertation, the Anathema's of the ſame Council, a Letter of Eutyches to this Pope, and this Pope's Anſwer (e). Theſe Anathema's, and theſe two Letters had never appear'd before but in Latin. The Decretal had never been publiſh'd in any Language (f). He pretended to have done a great ſervice to the Pope by this Work; for he obſerved in the Book he Printed at Barcelona, in 1646. to remove the occaſion of Complaint which retarded the diſpatching of his Bulls; he obſerved, I ſay, that the publiſhing of this Decretal ſerv'd very much to confirm the Authority of the Holy See above the Oecumenical Councils, which was much ſhaken in the Schools of France. (g) Quid de hac editione poſtea ipſe ſenſerit, accipe ex libello ejus Barcinone edito M. DC. XLVI. cujus ſupra mentionem feci: Sane explicari non poteſt, quantum hujus Epiſtolæ publicatio profuerit ad firmandam Apoſtolicæ Sedis auctoritatem erga Concilia Generalia; quæ apud Gallicanos Academiarum Magiſtros, majorum ſuorum decretis inhærentes, valde nutabat See the Margin (h). The Diſſertation was inſerted in the Edition of the Councils which was publiſh'd at the Louvre, as alſo the Diſſertation of the ſame Author, De primatu Lugdunenſi & cæteris primatibus, cum notis ad Canones aliquot Concilii Claromontani ſub Urbano II. celebrati). I know not how to believe the Tale of the Abbot Faget, that de Marca, coming from his Studies and returning from Toulouſe to his Father's Houſe, did ſo confound ſome Huguenot Gentlemen, who provok'd him to diſpute in a Baron's Houſe, that they were forc'd to ſend for a Miniſter of Pau, a Man famous for his Learning, to come to their aſſiſtance; who propos'd ſome Sophiſms, which this young Scholar diſcover'd the weakneſs of, by a Paſſage of St. Paul (k). The Miniſter could not reply any thing, but that the Text of St. Paul was not ſo as alledged. De Marca taking out of his Pocket a Greek New Teſtament, prepar'd himſelf to juſtifie his Citation; but the Miniſter declar'd that he underſtood nothing of that Language. This Relation of Mr. Faget looks like a Tale forg'd at pleaſure. (l) Allatis quibuſdam argutiis, quarum acies citato ex Epiſtolis Divi Pauli loco novus athletes omnino retudit. A tam expreſſo rei probandæ textu Pſeudomiſan nullo alio modo explicare ſe potuit, quam aliter in Divo Paulo legi pertinaciter conteſtando. Marca vero conſiſtim in Novi Teſtamenti Græci abſque interpretatione Latina, quem fere ſemper ſecum ferebat, codice, laudatum locum ipſiſmet, quæ attulerat verbis, conceptum indicavit. Sed cum ſibi penitus ignotam eam linguam profiteretur Pſeudominiſter, ſi non omnino cauſſa cecidiſſe, deluſus ſaltem ab adoleſcente ſuis etiam viſus eſt.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Here are the words of the Abbot Faget, ubi ſupra, p. 44. Eam (decretalem.) non ſolum ut hactenus incognitam ille plurimi fecit, ſed etiam quod multum ad firmandam Apoſtolicæ Sedis auctoritatem contra quorundam Theologorum ſententiam in Concilia generalia prodeſſet.

(i) Baluzius ubi ſupra, p. 40.

(k) Faget ubi ſupra, p. 11.

(l) Id ib. p. 12

(N) Without needing a Guide.] Moſt Learned Men are only fit to cultivate the Lands which have been already Till'd: They can ſmooth or enlarge a way which has been already made. There are but a few, (m) quibus arte benigna & meliore luto finxit præcordia Titan, that can plough up the Grounds that were never Till'd, and make a way through a Foreſt, where no Man had ever paſs'd. Mr. de Marca was of this ſelect number. (n) The Rank he held among the Criticks, was no leſs conſiderable in the Commonwealth of Learning, than that he had among the Prelates in the Church and State. The Author of whom I borrow theſe words, relates the Praiſes which Father (o) Combefis, and F (p) Labbee have given to the great Parts of this Prelate, and he adds, That the certainty of his Conjectures, and the liberty of ſpeaking his Thoughts — would have induc'd him to carry his Criticiſms much further, if he had not been reſtrained by Conſiderations which every one knows.

(m) Juvenal Sat. 14. v. 34.

(n) Baillet Judgments of the Learned, tom. 2. p 295.

(o) Combef. recenſion. Auctor. Concionat p 15.

(p) Labbe, Epiſt. dedicator. Diſſertat. de Scriptor Eccleſ & tomo XI. Concil. general. ad Concil. Claromontan.

(A) A Greek Originally, as he declares at the end of his laſt Book.] This Paſſage will be cited elſewhere; I ſhall now mention three others One is in Chap. 8. of the 22d Book, ἐνθένδε, Græci dicimus ſtultum: The ſecond is in Chap 15 of the ſame Book, ad ignis ſpeciem, τὸ πυρῶδες, ut nos dicimus extenuatur in cornu: The third is in Chap. 6. of the 23d Book, tranſire, διαβαίνειν dicimus Græci. Voſſius (q) makes uſe of the ſecond, which wants the Clauſe that he has join'd to it, nempe nos Græci. Had he remember'd the other two places, in which the Author has us'd the very word Græci, he would rather have cited them than this But we ſee the greateſt Memories have not that of his laſt Book, and a Native of Antioch, as may be gather'd from a Letter of Libanius *. This, together with the Military Life which he follow'd, ought to make us excuſe the harſhneſs of his Latin. This Defect, and that of ſome high-flown Digreſſions, are abundantly compenſated by many excellent Qualities which are to be found in this Author; as for inſtance, the little Partiality he ſhow'd againſt Chriſtianity, although he was (B) a Pagan, and the exact Enquiries he made, that he might write nothing but what he was certain of, and whereby he has inform'd us of many things which otherwiſe we ſhould not have known. His Authority is beſides very conſiderable, becauſe he was an ocular Witneſs of many things he wrote. He began betimes to liſt himſelf a Soldier, and was preſently enroll'd among thoſe who were call'd Protectores domeſtici; which may induce us to believe that he was of a good Family β, ſince it was uſual with the Youths of the firſt Quality to enter themſelves into that Body, and he that could be promoted to it, thought himſelf well rewarded for his long Service. Thus our Marcellinus began to take his Aim, but we do not know whether ever he roſe higher (C), only we find that in this Imployment he follow'd Urſicinus General of the Cavalry in many Expeditions. He was order'd to go with him into the Eaſt, when the Emperor Conſtantius ſent him thither in 350. Urſicinus being re-call'd from thence in 354, and oblig'd to come to Milan, brought back with him Marcellinus into Italy. They went into Gaul the next Year, and quickly reduc'd the Tyrant Sylvanus to Reaſon; after which Conſtantius ſent for Urſicinus to Sirmium, and ſent him back again into the Eaſt. The bad Offices which ſome did Urſicinus with this Emperor were the cauſe why he was recall'd, and his Office given to another. He obey'd, but being arriv'd in Thrace, he found Orders there, which oblig'd him to return immediately towards Meſopotamia, though the Command was not reſtor'd to him, which had been given to Sabinianus. Nevertheleſs he did the Emperor great ſervices. Marcellinus who always follow'd him, did alſo the Emperor much Service, both as a Soldier, and as a manager of Affairs, as he himſelf relates, without exceeding the bounds of Modeſty. He did not quit the Service, when Urſicinus was utterly diſgrac'd, in the Year 360; but as I have already ſaid, 'tis not known whether he was advanc'd, or whether he continu'd always in his Poſt of Domeſtick Protector, even when he follow'd Julian in the War againſt the Perſians. It may be gather'd from ſome places γ of his Books, that he lived at Antioch under the Empire of Valens. He came afterwards to ſettle at Rome, and there Compos'd (D) his Hiſtory. He recited ſeveral

(q) De Hiſtor. Lat p 201.

* See the Preface of Henry Valeſius to Ammian. Marcellin. The Printers of Moreri have put Labienus inſtead of Libanius.

β Valeſius ubi ſupra. γ Lib. 29. cap. 1. Where he ſays, that he ſaw the torments of many Perſons whom Valens put to Death at Antioch in 371. and lib. 30. c. 4. where he complains of the tricks that had been put upon him in the Eaſt.

always ready at hand which they ſtand in need of.

(B) Altho' he was a Pagan.] 'Tis ſo eaſie for thoſe who weigh every thing exactly, to diſcover that he was one, that we muſt needs think it very ſtrange, that ſo able Men as Petrus (a) Pithœus, and Claudius Chiffletius (b) ſhould take him for a Chriſtian. Would a Chriſtian who wrote his Hiſtory under the Emperors, who reduc'd Paganiſm to the laſt gaſp, have been contented to ſpeak honourably of the Chriſtian Religion, and have never carried the Matter ſo far as to declare ſometimes, that it was the only good and true Religion, and that the Worſhip of the Pagan Deities was an Idolatry? Under ſuch Emperors would a Chriſtian have been ſo inconſiderate as to praiſe Julian the Apoſtate (c), and never declaim ſharply againſt his Apoſtacy, and his hatred of JESUS CHRIST? Would he have ſpoken of Mercury and the Goddeſs Nemeſis, and the Goddeſs Themis, and the Augural ſuperſtition of Paganiſm, as Ammianus Marcellinus ſpeaks of them? I know of no Chriſtian Authors who did not, even in the hotteſt Perſecutions, ſpeak contemptibly of the Pagan Idolatry, and in ſome manner inſult over it; and 'tis incomparably more eaſie to conceive that a Pagan ſhould uſe moderation, ſpeaking of the Goſpel, than that a Chriſtian ſhould do it when he ſpeaks of the Worſhip of falſe Gods. The Proofs alledg'd by Chiffletius for the pretended Chriſtianity of Marcellinus need no refutation, except one Paſſage of Book 27. where having cenſur'd the Luxury of the Biſhops of Rome, he oppoſes to it the Auſterity of ſome Biſhops of the Provinces: Quos, ſays he, tenuitas edendi potandique parciſſime, vilitas etiam indumentorum & ſupercilia humum ſpectantia, perpetuo numini veriſque ejus cultoribus ut puros commendant & verecundos. But all that can be inferr'd from theſe words is only this, that according to this Author, Sobriety and Humility recommend Men to God, of whatſoever Religion they be, and that the Pagans themſelves had a veneration for Chriſtian Biſhops, who teſtified by their manner of living, that they did not ſeek any temporal Advantage. As to the definition he gives us of Martyrs, (d) qui deviare à religione compulſi perdulces evitabiles pœnas aduſque glorioſam mortem intemerata fide progreſſi, it proves only that the Pagans themſelves might admire ſuch a firmneſs of Soul as was not ſhaken by the moſt cruel Torments. Intemerata fides, is not oppos'd in this place to a falſe Religion, but to the change of a Party. What he had ſaid in the preceding Page, that a Biſhop (e), who turn'd Informer, had forgotten that his Profeſſion advis'd him to nothing but what is juſt and gentle, profeſſionis ſuæ oblitus, quæ nihil niſi juſtum ſuadet & lene, ad delatorum auſa feralia deſciſcebat, proves only that he knew what the Chriſtians made Profeſſion of; and we would ſay as much of the Chineſe Prieſts, if we knew that their Rituals oblig'd them to a great Purity of Life. Is it neceſſary to be a Chriſtian? May not a little Reaſon ſuffice to ſhow, that an Eccleſiaſtick who ſets up for an informer to Princes, as this Biſhop of Alexandria did, apud patulas aures Conſtantii multos exinde incuſans ut ejus recalcitrantes imperiis, diſhonours his Character. Theſe are the ſtrongeſt Proofs of Chiffletius for the pretended Chriſtianity of Marcellinus. But if he be depriv'd of this Happineſs which is attributed to him, yet at leaſt this praiſe is due to him, that he ſpoke very honourably of a Religion he did not follow. There are but few Examples of ſuch a moderation. Father Poſſevin (f) who is not contented with it, ſeems to be too nice, and we need not fear that our Poſterity will diſpute concerning the Religion of thoſe who write Hiſtory at this Day (g). I confeſs that Marcellinus wrote under the Chriſtian Emperors; but that Reaſon did not ſet bounds to the Malice of Libanius and Zoſimus.

(C) We do not know whether ever he roſe higher.] Moreri therefore hath too raſhly affirm'd, that Marcellinus Compos'd his Hiſtory after he had gone through the moſt honourable Offices of the Army. He tranſcrib'd this from la Mothe (h) le Vayer.

(D) And there Compos'd his Hiſtory.] This Work contain'd in 31 Books, what paſs'd (i) from Nerva till the death of Valens. The firſt thirteen are loſt, which brought down the Hiſtory to the Empire of Conſtantius, (for he enlarged leſs upon theſe times which he could not know but by the information of others) the eighteen which remain have been very much abus'd, either by the ignorance of Tranſcribers, or the raſhneſs of the Criticks. I know that Claudius Chiffletius makes ſome upon pretty good Reaſons, that this Hiſtory contain'd Thirty two Books, and that there is a Book

(a) Apud Hadrian. Valeſium Præf. edit. 1681.

(b) In Vita Amm. Marcellini. 'Tis to be found in the Edition of Valeſius 1681.

(c) The Abbot de Billi, Schol. ad Gregor. Nazianz. Orat. 2. in Julian. ſays thus, Hinc perſpicuum eſt Marcellinum Græcæ ſuperſtitionis cultorem plus gratiæ quam veritati tribuiſſe, cum ſcribit, nulla Juliani definitionis à vero diſſonans reperitur.

(d) Lib. 22. c. 11.

(e) This was George Biſhop of Alexandria who periſh'd in a popular Sedition, in 362.

(f) Diligenter ſcripſit, ſed ea quæ pertinent ad Chriſtianos traducens ac detorquens. Poſſev. Appar. ſect. 3. cap. 15.

(g) See the News from the Republick of Learning, July. 1684. p. 487. of the 2*d Edition.*

(h) Judgment upon the Hiſtorians, p. 240. tom. 3.

(i) Hæc ut miles quondam & Græcus à principatu Cæſaris Nervæ exorſus, adusque Valentis interitum pro virium explicavi menſura. Ammian. Marcellin. lib. 31. ſub fin.

several parts of it as he Compos'd them *, and they were receiv'd with great Applause. 'Tis not known when he died, but without all doubt he was alive in 390, since a Consulship, which happen'd to be in this Year, was not unknown to him †. He had some Suits *, which put him in so bad an Humour against the Practisers in the Law, that he could not forbear to make a long Digression against them. It is an Invective almost as sharp as the Comedy intituled Grapinian.

MARCHE (OLIVER DE LA) a Son of a Gentleman of the Franche Comté *, was made Page to the Duke of Burgundy, Philip the Good, in 1439, at the Age (A) of about thirteen Years †. He serv'd this Prince and Duke Charles his Successor with great Zeal, and was Steward and Captain of the Guards to the latter §. He incurr'd the Indignation of Lewis (B) XI. when he made the Bastard Rubempré Prisoner in Holland in 1463. He was one of the Knights γ who were created by the Count δ of Charolois at the Battle of Montleheri in 1465. He fell into the Hands of his Enemies ζ at the unhappy Battle of Nancy, where his Master lost his Life in the beginning of January 1477. Having paid his Ransom he was set at liberty, and he had the Office of η great and chief Steward to Maximilian of Austria, who married the Heiress of Burgundy. He had the same Office ϑ under the Archduke Philip, Son to this Maximilian. He was sent Embassador to the Court of France * to compliment the new King after the Death of Lewis XI. He wrote some Memoires, which were Publish'd (C) at Lyons in 1562, in Folio, by the care of Denys Sauvage Historiographer of France. He died † at Brussels Febr. 1. 1501.

MAR-

* Epist. Liban. apud Valesium ubi supra.

† Neotherium postea Consulem tunc Notarium ad eandem tuendam ire disposuit. Amm. Marcel. lib. 26. cap. 5. That Man was Consul with Valentinian II. in 390. Valesius ibid.

* Oliver de la Marche's Memoires, B. 1. c. 1. p. m. 76.

† Id. ib. c. 4. p. 1. 3.

§ Id. in the Preface of the first Book, p. 74.

γ Id. ib. c. 35. p. 314.

δ The Son of Philip the Good.

ζ Id. B. 2. c. 1. p. 408.

η Id. ib. c. 8. p. 409.

ϑ Id. in the Preface, p. 1. and in c. 13. of the 2*d Book* p. 425.

* Id. B. 2. c. 10. p. 415.

† Valer. Andreas Bibl. Belg. p. 767.

(c) In fol. and in 4°.

(f) p. 76.

(g) p. 2.

(b) Valerius Andreas Bibl. Belg. p. 777.

(i) Oliver de la Marche, b. 1. c. 35. p. 512.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Mezer. Abridgment Chronol. tom. 3. p. 292. ad an. 1464.

(m) Id. ib.

(n) Oliver de la Marche, ib. p. 513.

(o) See the Advertisement to the Reader.

* Lib. 30. c. 4. See la Mothe le Vayer, Judgment about the principal Historians, p. 247. of the 3. tom. in 12°.

HISTORY of the Editions of Marcellinus. The Faults of Moreri, &c.

(a) Hen. Valesius Præfat. ad Ammian. Marcel.

(b) Moreri takes this A. for Aulus, but according to Konig he should have said Angelus.

(c) Moreri having seen in Valesius, Sig. Gelenius, believ'd by a mistake that it meant Sigebert.

Book between the Thirtieth, and that which we now reckon the Thirty first, which is certainly the last of all. He had heard that the first Books which are now wanting of Marcellinus, were to be found in the Library of Cardinal Pool. Mr. de Marolles publish'd a French Translation of this Historian in 1672, with Remarks; but the Undertaking was two weighty for him.

Valesius the Eldest (a) says, that the first Edition of Marcellinus was that of Rome in 1474, which was prepar'd by A. (b) Sabinus a Poet Laureate; that the second was Printed at Bologna, in 1517, by P. Castellius, a Man void of Wit and Judgment; that the next Year John Frobenius counterfeited at Basil this Edition of Bologna; that in 1538, there appear'd two new Editions, one at Augsburg, Corrected by Mariangelus Accursius, the other at Basil by the care of (c) Sigismond Gelenius; that the Edition of Accursius was augmented with the five last Books which had never been Printed before; that the Edition of Gelenius had the same Addition, except the last Book, and the last Page of the last Book but one; that in 1546, Jerom Frobenius who had printed the Edition of Gelenius, made another Edition with the last Book; and that it seems, all the Editions which have appear'd since in France and Germany till that of the Year 1609, which Frederick Lindenbrogius Publish'd with Notes, were Printed from this 2d Edition of Frobenius. That of Lindenbrogius is very good; but that which Valesius publish'd in 4° in 1636, is incomparably better. We shall hereafter say something of that of 1681. Mr. Moreri knew not how to transcribe the Preface of Valesius; for he saw some things in it which are not there: He saw there that Accursius was the first that publish'd the first five Books of Marcellinus, and that Gelenius added the last Book with the last Page of the thirtieth which we had not. All this is false; Gelenius was so far from making this Addition, that on the contrary what he publish'd wanted just this Book which was in Accursius's Edition; and 'tis so far from being true, that Accursius publish'd the first five Books, that to this Day all the thirteen are wanting, as Mr Moreri had said a little before. Mr. Valesius commends the Edition of Accursius, but he mightily praises that of Gelenius: Which makes me wonder, that Vossius who speaks with approbation of the former, says nothing of the latter. He is extreamly dry, I know not why, upon the Article of our Ammianus Marcellinus. Accursius who boasts he had Corrected five Hundred Faults in this Author, is commended by Claudius Chifletius, but in such a general way, that he says nothing of his chief Excellency, I mean his publishing the last Books. Is it not strange, that Chifletius should say nothing of this, and yet that he should give Gelenius the Glory of being the first who publish'd the 27, 28, 29, and 30th Books? He observes, that Sebastian Gryphius inserted in his Edition the end of the thirtieth Book, and was the first who publish'd it. Valesius says nothing of the first of these two Facts, and he refutes the second by saying, that Accursius publish'd the last five Books. Toppi in his Bibliotheque of Naples d), falsly ascribes the publishing of the sixth Book of Ammianus Marcellinus to Mariangelus Accursius, and says nothing of his publishing the five Books of this Historian, which had never appear'd before. Valesius the younger publish'd our Ammianus at Paris in 1681, in Folio. This ought not to have been omitted in the Dictionary of Moreri. In this Edition there are added, 1. Many new Notes of Valesius the Elder: 2. Those which Lindenbrogius had publish'd in 1609, and those which he added to them since, and which were found among his Papers: 3. The Life of Ammianus Marcellinus by Claudius Chifletius, Professor of Law at Dole. 4. Some Corrections and Observations of Valesius the younger. Mr. Gronovius reprinted this Edition at Leyden in 1693 (e), and added good Notes to it.

(A) At the Age of about thirteen Years] This agrees with what he says in Chap. 1. of the first Book (f), that he was between eight and nine Years old, when in 1434, his Father put him to School at Pontarli, but not with what he says in his first Preface (g), that he was sixty six Years old when the Archduke Philip was not ten. This Archduke was born in 1478. Oliver de la Marche was then 52 Years, and so his 60th Year falls in with the 14th of the Archduke. This is not the first time I have observ'd that Authors speak of their Age with a thousand Confusions. Note here a gross Fault of Valerius Andreas. He (h) assigns the Year 1380, to be that of the birth of our Oliver, and places his death in 1501, without taking notice of such an extraordinary old Age; whereas an Author like this, who had liv'd one Hundred and Twenty One Years, ought to be plac'd in the number of notable Things. The truth is, as I have already said, that the Year 1426, was the Year of his Nativity.

(B) He incurr'd the Indignation of Lewis XI when he seiz'd —— the Bastard Rubempré.] He was seiz'd, because he was suspected of having a design (i) to carry off the Count de Charolois. Our Oliver de la Marche carried the News of this seizure to Duke Philip who was then at Hedin, where he conferr'd sometimes with Lewis XI. (k). The Duke hearing of this went off quickly without the knowledge of this Monarch. A Report was spread abroad (l) that Lewis XI had a design to secure at one time the Father and the Son. He sent Embassadors to the Duke (m) to complain of this, and demand Oliver to be deliver'd up to him; for he look'd upon him as the Author of all these Calumnies, and of what those suspicions had produc'd, and he had a mind to punish him severely. The Duke answer'd, That Oliver was his Subject and his Servant, and that if the King, or any other had any thing to do and of him, he would do them justice (n). Read the first Chapter of Philip de Comines.

(C) Which were publish'd at Lyons (o) 1562.] The Manuscript was taken out of (o) the Library of the House of Cluny in Franche-Comté. There was a second Edition of it at Gien in 1567, in 4°. with Notes and Corrections in the Margin, and a Preface which informs us that the Author of these Me-

MARCIONITES. So they call the Diſciples of Marcion an Hereſiarch, who liv'd (A) in the Second Century. He was Born at Sinope, a City of Paphlagonia, upon the Euxine Sea, and he had a Good and Pious Biſhop for his Father. He firſt apply'd himſelf to a Monaſtick Life, but he obſerv'd very ill the Laws of Continency, for he debauch'd a Maid. His Father exercis'd all the rigour of the Diſcipline upon him; he excommunicated him, and would not yield either to his Prayers or offers of Penance. Then Marcion being expos'd to the Laughter and Contempt of the whole City, went ſecretly out of it and retir'd to Rome, where he could never be (B) receiv'd moirs was rather a Calumniator than an Hiſtorian, with reſpect to the Civil Wars of Flanders (p). As to the other Books Compos'd by this Writer, Printed and not printed, ſee the Bibliotheque of (q) Du Verdier Vau Privas. They have lately publiſh'd in Dutch (r) the State of the Houſe of Charles Duke of Burgundy; which is a Tranſlation of a Treatiſe which this Author had written in French, and which was publiſh'd at the end of his Memoirs (ſ) in the Edition of Louvain, 1645. Gollut inſerted ſomething of it in (t) his Memoirs of Burgundy. Du Chêſne (v) will inform you that this State of the Houſe of Duke Charles was written in 1474, and that it was Printed at Bruſſels in 1616, in 4°. and that the Memoirs of the ſame Author were Printed at Lyons in Fôlio, in 1612, and at Bruſſels in 4°. in 1616.

(A) Who liv'd in the Second Century.] This may be ſaid for certain; but as to the Year when he came to Rome, and the Time when he begun to ſet up for a falſe Doctor, they cannot be clear'd from the Contradictions, which are found on this Subject in the ancient Fathers. According to St. Epiphanius, he came to Rome after the Death of Pope Hyginus, i. e. according to the account of the Romans, after the Year of Grace 157. Tertullian pretends that he came to Rome under Pope Anicetus (b), i. e. if we believe Mr. Weſtein, under the Empire of Antoninus Pius, (c) Romanis tunc imperante Antonino Pio, unde Tertull. l. 1. c. 19. adv. Marc. eum Antoninianum hæreticum, ſub Pio impium vocat, id eſt circa annum Chriſti 154. But ſince the two Paſſages of Tertullian, the one in Verſe, the other in Proſe, are contrary one to another, we cannot confirm the one by the other, nor refer them both to the Empire of Antoninus Pius. Conſult the Annals of Baronius, and there you'll find the Death of this Emperor under the Year 163, and that of Pope Pius, and the promotion of Anicetus under the Year 167; ſo that if it be true, that Marcion came to Rome under the Pontificate of Anicetus, 'tis falſe that he came thither under Antoninus Pius, and conſequently Tertullian could not ſpeak the truth in his Verſes, without telling a falſhood in his Proſe, and vice verſa. He ſays in another place, that this Heretick was again and again turn'd out of the Communion of the Faithful under Pope Eleutherius (d) Conſtat illos (Marcionem & Valentinum) neque adeo olim fuiſſe, Antonini fere principatu & in Catholicam primo doctrinam credidiſſe apud Eccleſiam Romanenſem, donec ſub Epiſcopatu Eleutherii beneficii ob inquietam ſemper eorum curioſitatem quia frequens quoque vitabant, tamel & iterum ejecti, Marcion quidem cum decretis ſeſtertiis ſuis quæ Eccleſiæ intulerat, navigaſſe in Pontum diſſidium relegati venena doctrinarum ſuarum diſſeminaverint. This leads us far away from the Empire of Antoninus Pius, for Eleutherius was created Pope in 179. Beſides it is no-wiſe probable that the Excommunication of Marcion ſhould have been delay'd till the Pontificate of Eleutherius, ſince he had render'd himſelf ſo abominable by his Hereſies, under the Pontificate of Anicetus, that St. Polycarp calls him the eldeſt Son of Satan. Conſult St Irenæus (e), who relates that St. Polycarp being gone to Rome in the time of Pope Anicetus, reclaimed many of the Followers of Marcion, and repelled this Heretick with the Encomium that I have related: Which ſerv'd as an Anſwer to the Queſtion that Marcion put to him (f), Do not you know me? Baronius (g) obſerves, that Marcion begun to dogmatize under the Empire of Hadrian; which he proves by Origen who ſays, that the Philoſopher Celſus that wrote againſt the Chriſtians under that Emperor, ſpeaks often of the Errors of this Heretick. Philaſtrius ſeems to confound this, when he ſays, that Marcion before his coming to Rome, was convicted of teaching falſe Doctrines in Aſia by St. John, and driven away from Epheſus. (h). Suppoſe as much as you will, that he was excommunicated ſeveral times, and that he made many Journies to Rome; you can never excuſe Tertullian's want of exactneſs in his account of him.

Let us ſee a Paſſage of Lambert Danæus, in which there are ſome Faults. (i) Venit (Marcion) Romam quemadmodum lib. 1. Adverſ. eum ſcribit Tertull. ſub Antonino Pio, circa annum à Chriſto paſſo 115, ſub Hygino, ut ait Platina: Tertullian. ſub Eleutherio. Cæpit autem poſt Cerdonem innoteſcere illius hæreſis ſub M. Antonino Philoſopho imperatore, & Aniceto Pontifice Romano, circa annum à paſſo Chriſti [illegible] quinquam Clemens lib. 7. Stromat. vult [illegible] eo tempore vixiſſe Romæ Valentinum hæreticum [illegible] jam ſenem Marcion juvenis viderit. In the firſt place it is an error, that he did not perceive Tertullian would have been miſtaken, if he had ſaid, that the Popedom of Eleutherius and the Empire of Antoninus Pius were contemporary. 2. 'Tis a fault in Chronology to place the Pontificate of Anicetus under Antoninus Pius; for Anicetus was not promoted to that See, till five Years k) after the death of this Emperor. 3. Clemens Alexandrinus does not ſay, that Valentinus was alive ſtill under the Emperor Marcus Aurelius; he ſays only that Baſilides and Valentinus having begun to ſpread their Errors under Hadrian, liv'd unto the Reign of the firſt of the Antonini's. 4. He was ſo far from affirming that Marcion in his Youth ſaw Valentinus in his old Age, that he ſays Marcion convers'd with theſe other Hereticks as an old Man does with young People (l).

(B) He could never be receiv'd to the Communion—This denial oblig'd him.] I ſhould deceive my Readers, if I ſhould leave theſe words without a Commentary; and it would be in vain to ſay, that St. Epiphanius having deceiv'd them firſt, I need not ſcruple to do it after him: They would not approve ſuch a bad Apology: Let us therefore ſhow wherein the fault of St. Epiphanius's Account conſiſts. None can read this Father but he muſt think, that the Church of Rome never admitted Marcion to her Communion, and that the Governors of this Church having told him, We cannot admit you into Communion without the leave of your Father who has excommunicated you, he threatned them with a Schiſm, and was as good as his word. (m) Τί μὴ ἠθελήσασί με ὑποδέξασθαι; τῶν δὲ λεγόντων, ὅτι ἡ δυνάμεθα ἄνευ τῆς ἐπιτροπῆς τὰ τιμία παρέχειν σοι τοῦτο ποιῆσαι. Μία γάρ ἐστιν ἡ πίστις, καὶ μία ὁμόνοια, καὶ δυνάμεθα ἑναπιωθῆναι τῷ καλῷ συλλειτουργῶ. παρὲξ δὲ σοῦ. Ζηλώσας λειτὸν, καὶ εἰς μέγαν ἀφορμὰς δυμὸν καὶ ὑπερηφανίαν, τὸ ὁρισμα ἐργάζεται ὁ τοιοῦτος, ἑαυτῷ τὴν ὄρεσιν προσαιρούμενος, καὶ εἰτῶν. Ὅτι ἐγὼ ὁρῶ τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν ὑμῶν, καὶ ἔχω ὁρισμα ἴζαλεν ἐ μικρὸν, ἢ τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν σχίσας, ἀλλ' ἑαυτὸν καὶ τοὺς αὐτῷ πειθομένους. Give me, impute, receipere nolu ſtis? Reſponderunt illi, Nobis impoſſe venerandi Patris tui facere iſtud non licet. Una ſiquidem fides eſt, & animorum una conſenſio: neque contra ſpectatiſſimum Collegam patrem tuum moliri quippiam poſſumus. At ille abſcendentius exaudi ſcens, ac ſuperbia tumidique perditus Schiſma conflavit, ac privatum Hæreſin erexit: & Eccleſiam, ait, veſtram ego deſero, in cui Schiſma ſuſcitatum invenitur. Quod illi verò non modo quidem injuſtè non ita tamen ut Eccleſiam, ſed ut ſe potius ac ſuos deſeruerit. If St. Epiphanius had conſulted Tertullian, he would have known, that Marcion was ſeveral times driven out of the Communion of the Orthodox; which is an evident proof that they were more than once ſatisfy'd with the Proteſtations he made of renouncing his Errors, and that they had reconciled him to the Church. Perhaps alſo if Death had not prevented him, he had been ready to perform the Condition required of him the laſt time, he appeared Repentant, [illegible] that he ſhould deceive thoſe whom he had perverted from the true Faith. (n) Poſtmodum Marcion pœnitentiæ

(p) Valer Andr ubi ſupra (q) Tom. II. p. 932.

(r) See the veteris ævi analecta publiſh'd by Mr. Matthæus at Leyden, in 1698.

(ſ) See the Preface to this Work of Matthæus.

(t) In ch. 109. B. 10.

(v) Du Cheſne Biblioth. of the Hiſtorians of France, p. m. 199.

(a) Epiphan. adv. hæreſes, p. m. 302.

(b) A quo Pio ſuſcepit Anicerusordine ſortem, Sub quo Marcion hic veniens nova Pontica peſtis. Tertull. carm. l. 3 adverſus Marcion.

(c) Joh. Rodolphus Werſtenius, not. in Origenis dial. contra Marcionitas, p. 3. edit 1674.

(d) Tertull. de præſcript. c. 30.

(e) Iren. l. 3. c. 3. See alſo Euſeb. l. 4. c. 14.

(f) See the Notes of Henry Valeſius upon Euſeb. l. 4. c. 15. where theſe words are put into Latin for an Interrogation Dost not Salute me.

(g) Baronius ad ann. 146. n. 7.

(h) Philaſtrius de hæreſ. cap.

(i) Lambertus Danæus in Comment. ad librum D. Auguſtini de hæreſibus, fol. 58. edit. Genevenſis 1578. in 8.

(k) See Baronius ad ann. 167.

(l) Μαρκίων γὰρ καλὰ τὰν αὐτὰν αὐτοῖς ἡλικίαν γενόμενος, ὡς πρεσβύτης, νεωτέροις συνεγένετο. Marcion enim cum natus eſſet eadem, qua ipſi ætate, verſabatur ut ſenex cum junioribus. Clemens Stromat. lib 7. p. 764. D.

(m) Epiphanius adverſus hæreſes, p. 303.

(n) Tertullian de præſcript. c. 30.

...r'd to the Communion *, altho' he made uſe of the Artifices of a Woman who went before him to prepare the way †. This denial oblig'd him to ſet up out of ſpite for the Head of a Party. He became the Diſciple of Cerdo *, and that he might be the better able to maintain the Doctrine of two Principles, which he had learn'd of this Heretick, he apply'd himſelf (C) to the ſtudy of Philoſophy. He had a great number of Followers, who did not only maintain themſelves after his Death, but alſo ſpread themſelves in all Parts, and form'd Churches in ſpite of the Orthodox (D) wherever they could. It was neceſſary to employ againſt them the ſecular Power, when the Empire was devolv'd to the Chriſtians; and ſome Ages paſt before this good Remedy againſt this Sect put an end to it. They boaſted (E) of their pretended Martyrs. This

* Romam præmiſit mulierem, quæ decipiendos ſibi animos præpararet. Hieron. tom. 2. Ind. Script. Eccleſ. in Cerdone, p. 263.

...erſ. hæreſ. p. m. 92, 303.

Epiph. biſupra.

(p) Rodolphus Wetſtenius ubi ſupra, p. 4.

(q) Wetſtenius, ibid.

(f) This is Zeno Eleates, who paſſes for the Inventer of Logick. See Gaſſendus de Logicæ Origine, c. 1. to. 1. oper. p. 37, 38.

(a) Id. Wetſtenius ibid. p. 5.

(b) Epiphanius ubi ſupra, p. 302.

(c) Denique Epiphanius ſcribit ſuo ſeculo adhuc quoſdam Marcionitas Romæ natos fuiſſe. Lambert. Danæus ubi ſupra fol. 39.

SEVERAL pieces of a Controverſial Proceſs put together.

(d) Maimbourg Hiſt. of Calviniſm, B. 1. p. 33.

(e) He means the Proteſtants

(f) Jurieu, Apology for the Reformers, c. 12. p. 171. of tom. 1 edit. in 4°.

feſſus, cum conditionis datæ ſibi occurrit, ita pacem recepturus ſi cæteros quoque quos proditioni eruperat, Eccleſiæ reſtitueret, morte præventus eſt. There are ſome who ſay (p), that after he was turn'd out of the Church with his Money, he joyn'd with the Sect of the Cerdonites; which they prove by ſome Paſſages, wherein Tertullian and Philaſtrius affirm, that he was the Diſciple of Cerdo. I believe they confound the Times, for the Expulſion they mention was the laſt, and it happen'd under Eleutherius; but 'tis no-wiſe probable that Cerdo was then alive.

(C) He applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Philoſophy.] In this I have follow'd the Opinion of a learned Commentator. (q) Marcionitas hæreſin propagaret, Philoſophiæ ſe mancipavit, Stoicæ præſertim: Tertull. de præſcr. hær. c. 30. Unde idem Tertullianus, c. 7. ejuſd. libri Philoſophiam & Dialecticam exagitat, velut matrem hæreſeon, & Prudentius in Hamartigenia, Dialecticæ oſtentationem ei exprobrat, p. 192.

Hæc tua Marcion gravis dialectica vox eſt. Norunt enim omnes a Zenone (f) Stoico dialectam eſſe inventam. But I do not blame thoſe who believe that he was already a good Stoick, when he was excluded from the Communion of the Church the firſt time.

(D) Form'd Churches in ſpite of the Orthodox, wherever they could.] Let us cite again the ſame Commentator. (a) Poſt ejus obitum Marcionitæ Eccleſias, in æmulationem Eccleſiæ Catholicæ, ubique locorum erexere: unde Tertull. l. 4. c. Marc. c. 5. Faciunt ſavos & veſpæ, faciunt Eccleſias & Marcionitæ. St. Epiphanius (b) teſtifies, that the Hereſie of the Marcionites continu'd ſtill not only at Rome and in the reſt of Italy, but alſo in Egypt, Paleſtine, Arabia, Syria, in the Iſle of Cyprus, in Thebais, Perſia, and in other places. Is it not ſtrange that Lambertus Danæus who makes uſe of this Paſſage of St. Epiphanius, to prove that this Sect had made a great Progreſs, did not alſo uſe it to prove that it was largely ſpread in this Father's time. He cites Epiphanius, as to his own time, only (c) to prove that there were then at Rome ſome Marcionites. If we ſhould make a Collection of ill-choſen Citations, the moſt famous Authors would be found very often to be guilty of them. This part of Criticks would be no leſs uſeful than the reſt: It might teach us how to diſcern between thoſe who are truly learn'd, and thoſe who only make a ſhow of it.

(E) They boaſted of their pretended Martyrs. It gave occaſion to a Diſpute.] Let us produce the ſeveral pieces of this Proceſs, according to the Rank they deſerve.

I. The firſt ſhall be furniſh'd by Mr Maimbourg, (d) whoſe words are theſe: "(e) They "cannot be ignorant that the moſt famous of "their Doctors, who wrote that Hereticks ought "to be puniſh'd, caus'd Marcion to be a Sacrifice, "who remain'd obſtinate until Death, to be burnt "at Geneva, and that according to the Doctrine "of the ancient Fathers, who ſay it is not the "Suffering but the Cauſe that makes the Martyr, "he did not give him this illuſtrious Title, no "more than he did to the Marcionites, and many "other ancient Hereticks, who ſuffer'd the moſt "cruel Deaths with an incredible ardour for their "own Sect.

II. Let us ſee what Anſwer was given him. "(f) I do not know that ever there was an "ample of ſuch prodigious ignorance given by "any Man that undertakes to write, or of ſo great "a boldneſs in an Author, who knows that his "Book is to be rigidly examin'd. The Marcionites, ſays he, willingly expos'd themſelves to "the Torments of Death for their Sect. Now "in the firſt place we muſt know that the Marcionites prevail'd in the ſecond and third Century, wherein the Chriſtians were under Perſecution, how then could they ſend the Marcionites and other Hereticks to the place of Execution, who had no Judges, no Tribunals, and "when themſelves were every Day Condemn'd to "Death? We muſt moreover obſerve, that in the "Age of the Marcionites, the Diſcipline of the "Church was ſo ſevere, that moſt Chriſtians did "not think that they could with a good Conſcience execute the Office of a Magiſtrate. They "condemn'd wicked Men to Death, how then could "they ſentence Hereticks to loſe their Lives? But "chiefly we muſt obſerve, that the Marcionites were "a Branch of the Gnoſticks, and that the general Error of the Gnoſticks was, That God and not the Son for the Blood of Chriſt was, and that Jeſus Chriſt "did not expect Salvation from our Death. Wherefore "they ridicul'd the Martyrs, and laugh'd at the "pretended folly of thoſe who expos'd themſelves "to Death for their Religion. And even Tertullian tells us, that the Gnoſticks, Valentinian's, and "other Hereticks in the time of Perſecution, "were the moſt forward to perſecute others, to "ſave themſelves from being Perſecuted (1) Sic igitur fides æſtuat, & Eccleſiarum ſic figura rubi tunc Gnoſtice compuncti, tum Exſultantium proſerpunt, tunc omnes martyrorum refugatores ebullunt talentes, & ipſi offendere, figere, occidere. And upon theſe words, omnes martyrorum refugatores, Rigaltius makes this Obſervation: He means the "Gnoſticks, who endeavour'd to hinder every body "from ſuffering Martyrdom, and by all means "oppos'd it. Such were the Hereticks, who ac"cording, to the learned P. Maimbourg, embrac'd "Torments and Death for their Sect with an in"credible ardour. But that this declamer may "not eſcape us, we deſire him if he will quit "the Age of the Marcionites, to ſhow us what "Hereticks ſuffer'd Death in great numbers to "maintain their Hereſie, and when this happen'd. "For as to us, who know nothing of Hiſtory but "what Books teach us, we find no ſuch Ages, we "meet with no ſuch numbers of Hereticks who "died for their Errors. We know only that in the "fourth Century ſome Orthodox Biſhops perſe"cuted certain Spaniſh Hereticks to Death. 'Tis "very unhappy for a Man to go out of his Sphere. "P. Maimbourg has been taken up of late Years with "writing modern Hiſtories; but if he had been "wiſe, he would never have ſaid any thing of "ancient Hiſtory; for he can ſay nothing of it "which does not diſcover his Ignorance. And "I muſt confeſs that theſe Diſcoveries give us "great ſatisfaction; for they ſhow that this great "Author, who undertakes to write ancient Hiſ"tories, as among others, that of Arianiſm, is "only a poor Tranſcriber, who knows nothing "of Antiquity.

(1) Scorpiac. c. 1.

III. Let us now ſee what was replied on behalf of Mr. Maimbourg. (g) "Whatever deſire we may "have to diſcover the Faults of an Author by "criticizing upon him, methinks we ſhould ne"ver draw up a Charge againſt him in a matter "which is capable of a good Senſe as well as of "a bad. What Mr. Maimbourg has aſſerted about "the Marcionites, is of this nature. It may be ta"ken in a bad Senſe, by laying with the Apoſ"tate, that the Marcionites were not forward to "run in crowds to Martyrdom, ſince the Primi"tive Chriſtians, were neither able nor willing "to put them to Death for their Sect, both be"cauſe they were under Perſecution, and had no "Courts of Judicature, and alſo becauſe they "were averſe to execute the Office of a Magi"ſtrate. But on the other ſide the Marcionites "might run to Torments, and die for their Sect, it "to ſhow that it was good, they ſuffer'd Marty"dom for the Cauſe of Jeſus Chriſt, as well as "other Chriſtians who were not of their Opi"nion. This Senſe is no leſs natural than the

(g) Jurieu, Apology for the Reformers, c. 12. p. 173. of tom. 1 edit. in 4°.

This gave occaſion to a Diſpute, of which it will not be needleſs to give a particular Account.

" other, but rather more; and I doubt not but " Mr. Maimbourg had it in his view, when he ſpoke " of the Marcionites: I am perſuaded of it, becauſe he " only ſays, the Marcionites willingly ſuffer'd Death, " and not that the Chriſtians Condemn'd them " to it. The Apologiſt has added this of his " own Head; but we may ſay, that his Com- " mentary is not agreeable to the Opinion of the " Author whom he interprets. If this be ſo, as I " believe it is, Mr. Maimbourg has not ſhown a " prodigious Ignorance, ſuppoſing it may be " prov'd, that there were pretended Mar- " tyrs among the Marcionites. The Apologiſt " maintains, that theſe Hereticks were ſo far " from expoſing themſelves to Martyrdom, that " they were of the number of thoſe who oppos'd " it, and laugh'd at thoſe who ſuffer'd it. If I " did not profeſs to baniſh from this Diſpute all " offenſive words, I might ſay the Apologiſt is " fallen into that ignorance he objects to his Ad- " verſary. But I retract the word Ignorance, " and will not only uſe a ſofter word, but I " ſhould be glad to find another Expreſſion than " what I am oblig'd to uſe, by telling him that " he is miſtaken: Which I prove thus. (2) Euſe- " bius tells us, that one of thoſe whom God raiſed " up to write againſt the Phrygiſts, oppos'd in " his third Book, thoſe who boaſted of having " had many Martyrs among them. After they " have been convicted, ſays this anonymous Author, " of all the points I have mention'd, and have no- " thing to anſwer, they alledge their Martyrs, af- " firming, that they have many, and that it plain- " ly proves the power of the Prophetick Spirit which " they pretend to in their Party. But in my O- " pinion they are miſtaken; for the followers of " other Hereſies boaſt alſo of having many Martyrs; " and yet we do not go over to their Opinion, nor " ever confeſs that the Truth is on their ſide. The " Marcionites ſay, that they have many Martyrs of " Jeſus Chriſt, notwithſtanding which they are of " a Religion contrary to that of Jeſus Chriſt. I " might obſerve alſo againſt this Apologiſt, that " the Marcionites did not prevail ſo in the ſecond " and third Century, but that there were ſtill " ſome of them left in the fourth, ſince St. (3) " Epiphanius tells us of a Diſpute he had with a " Marcionite. But I paſs over this as a trifle, that " I may come to ſomething more conſiderable— " (1) If it may be ſaid, as certainly it may, that " one dies for Hereſie, who expoſes himſelf to Mar- " tyrdom in hopes of promoting it, we ſhall eaſi- " ly find other Martyrs beſides thoſe of the Mar- " cionites; among whom we may alledge thoſe of " the Phrygiſts, which are mention'd by the ano- " nymous Author in Euſebius. Many of theſe " Hereticks expos'd themſelves to Martyrdom, " and ſuffer'd it for the end I have mention'd, as " appears by the nameleſs Author who oppos'd " their Hereſie. St. Auguſtin relates (1), that in " the times when Idols were publickly ador'd, " great Crowds of the Donatiſts would appear at " the Pagan Solemnities, and throw themſelves " head-long a-croſs thoſe Idols, that they might " be kill'd by their Adorers. Here are Here- " ticks who ran in Crowds to Death.

IV. 'Tis but juſt we ſhould hear what Mr. Maimbourg replies for himſelf. " (a) Mr. Fer- " rand——does only tell him with the grea- " teſt modeſty in the World, that he is mi- " ſtaken in all theſe Heads: For firſt he ſhows " him that I never ſaid nor pretended, that the " Marcionites were ſentenc'd to Torments by the " Chriſtians, but only by the perſecuting Pagans. " 2dly, That the Marcionites were not only in the " ſecond and third Centuries under the Pagan " Emperors, but alſo in the fourth, as he proves by " St. Epiphanius (2), and I ſay further, as I have " already prov'd in their Hiſtory, that there were " ſome alſo in the ſixth under the Chriſtian Em- " perors, when according to the Imperial Laws " (3) and Conſtitutions Hereticks were puniſh'd " with Death. In the third place he ſhows, that " the Marcionites, and many other Hereticks, wil- " lingly expos'd themſelves to Torments, that they " might honour their Sect with a pretended Mar- " tyrdom, as I had ſaid. This he proves to him " by very convincing Teſtimonies, and chiefly by " that of Euſebius, that he may know, that what " what he boldly ſays does not appear in Hi- " ſtory, is very evident in it. For Euſebius tells " us in his Hiſtory, when he relates what was " ſaid by an ancient Author, whom God raiſed " up to write againſt the Phrygians or Cataphry- " gians, Hereticks who boaſted they had among " them many Martyrs: (4) After they were con- " victed of all the points I have mention'd. (They are " the words of that nameleſs Author, as they are " related by Euſebius in Greek, and by Mr. Ferrand " in French) and have nothing to anſwer, they alledge, " &c.——(b) What will the Apologiſt ſay now? " Here are the Cataphrygians, and many other an- " cient Hereticks, who are expos'd to Torments " by ſuffering a pretended Martyrdom; and here " are alſo the Marcionites who ſuffer it, and they " ſuffer from the Pagans, and no wiſe by the or- " der of the Chriſtians, becauſe, as he himſelf " ſays, they had not at that time any Judicature. " Here then is a very authentick Teſtimony of " Hiſtory which fully juſtifies me, and over- " throws him, and perfectly deſtroys all that he " has ſaid againſt me on this Subject. (5) And if " the Confuſion which this ought to put him in, " would permit him to advance one ſtep further, " he might find in what is cited to him from St. " Auſtin, (6) great numbers of Donatiſts, who ran " in Crowds on Death, and pretended to be Mar- " tyrs, when they threw themſelves head-long a- " croſs the Pagans, to maintain their Sect, by re- " ceiving Death from the Hand of theſe Idolaters. " But is it poſſible, that this Apologiſt who be- " lieves himſelf ſo learned a Man, ſhould be igno- " rant of that which almoſt every one knows, " viz. That upon occaſion of the pretended Mar- " tyrs of the Donatiſts, St. Auſtin has uſed in " more than one place of his Works, this Sentence " ſo good and ſo common, (7) That it is not the " Torment, but the Cauſe for which a Man ſuffers that " makes him a Martyr. This he learn'd from St. Cy- " prian, who had ſaid it a long time before him, " upon occaſion of the Schiſmaticks and Hereticks " who boaſted of their Martyrs, (8) He that is not " united to the Church, cannot be a Martyr; he may " be put to Death, but he cannot be Crown'd. And " does not our St. Gregory produce to this pur- " poſe this Opinion of St. Cyprian, but uſing the " words of St. Auſtin, to ſtop the Preſumption " and Pride of the Schiſmatical Biſhops, who " boaſted that they ſuffer'd Perſecution as Mar- " tyrs? (9) You ought to know, ſays he to them, " that according to St. Cyprian, it is not the Torment " but the Cauſe that makes the Martyr: And this be- " ing ſo, 'tis very unjuſt and unreaſonable, that you " ſhould dare ſtill to boaſt of that Perſecution which " you ſuffer. Were there not then in the times " of theſe Holy Fathers Schiſmaticks and Here- " ticks, who pretended to have Martyrs in their " Party, ſince they are told, that they are miſta- " ken, and that it is neither the Perſecution nor " the Torment, nor Death it ſelf, when it is " ſuffer'd, that makes the Martyr, but the good " Cauſe and the Truth for which one ſuffers. " After all that I have ſaid, what Credit can be " given to People, that write ſo boldly, and " even inſultingly of things which are plainly " prov'd to be falſe?

V. There is yet one Piece to be produc'd, and that is the Reply of the Cenſurer of Mr. Maim- bourg, the Reply, I ſay, which he made to Mr. Ferrand. He " (c) accuſes me of Ignorance, be- " cauſe I did not know a Paſſage of Euſebius, " wherein 'tis ſaid, That the Marcionites ſay they " had many Martyrs of J. CHRIST. I ſhould " not be aſham'd to learn of Mr. Ferrand in point " of Quotations; but I can aſſure him, that I " both read and obſerv'd this Paſſage of Euſebius " before he gave me notice of it. Neither will it " oblige me to retract the leaſt thing I have ſaid " againſt M. Maimbourg. For I. I did not conſi- " der what the Marcionites ſaid, but what is the " real truth of the matter. I doubt not but af- " ter the Danger was over, and Peace was re- " ſtor'd to the Church, the Marcionites would " boaſt as others did, of their having Martyrs. " This Honour they would aſſume to themſelves " tho' it coſt them nothing. But it was falſe that " they had any Martyrs. Tertullian, and all the " other

(2) B. 5. c. 16. p. 182. C. D. p. 183. A. edit. Gr. Lat. Paris. 1658.

(3) Hæreſ. 48. num. 2. p. 403.

(1) Ferrand, ib. p. 217.

(1) Epiſt. 50. ante med.

(a) Maim Hiſt. of the Pontificate of St. Gregory, B. 4. p. 427. edit. Holland.

(2) Hæreſ. 48 n. 2

(3) Cod. lib. 1. leg. 5 11. 12.

(4) Euſeb. lib. 5. c. 16.

(b) Maimbourg. ib. p. 428.

(5) Page 218.

(6) Aug. Ep. 50. L. 3. cont. Ep. Parm. & alibi. Optat. l. 3.

(7) Chriſti Martyrem non facit pœna, ſed cauſa. L. 3. contr. Creſcon. c. 4. inſp. Pſa. 34. & 68.

(8) Eſſe Martyr non poteſt qui in unitate non eſt; occidi poteſt, coronari non poteſt. Cypr. l. de unit. Ep. 52. ad Antonian.

(9) Debetis enim ſcire, ſicut beatus Cyprianus dixit, quia Martyrem non facit pœna, ſed cauſa. Dum igitur ita ſit, incongruum nimis eſt de ea vos quam dicitis perſecutione gloriari. Greg. l. 1. ind. 10. Ep. 36.

(c) Jurieu, true Syſtem of the Church, p. 644, 645.

Account. If we will judge charitably, Marcion died in a good temper, he

" other Accounts, are more to be believ'd than the " Marcionites themſelves, who far from being perſe- " cuted were foremoſt in the crowd of Perſecu- " tors. I confeſs I would gladly know, if a few " words ſpoken faintly, and by the by like theſe, " The Marcionites ſay they had many Martyrs of " JESUS CHRIST, be ſufficient to aſſert with " great aſſurance, that the Marcionites run to the " place of Execution with incredible Ardour, that they " might die for their Sect? One that reads this, " would be apt to think, that Mr. Maimbourg has " ſeen a Martyrology of the Marcionites, wherein he " has read the Hiſtory and all the Circumſtances " of the Death of theſe Martyrs, and among o- " ther things has obſerv'd their Conſtancy and " incredible Zeal. Certainly, I may tell him once " more, that if he had read Tertullian, he would " not have aſſerted ſuch a Falſhood with ſo great " aſſurance: And therefore, without any offence " to Mr. Ferrand, we may ſay, that Mr. Maimbourg " is neither Chriſtianly nor univerſally learn'd. In " what follows Mr. Ferrand makes a long digreſſi- " on, and quotes a vaſt number of Paſſages out " of the Ancients about the Torments of He- " reticks: Whereof ſome would have them left " to their own Conſcience; others would have " them reſtrain'd, but not by inflicting a Capital " Puniſhment upon them; and laſtly, others " think fit that they ſhould ſuffer Death. He con- " cludes his Chapter with citing long Extracts out " of Optatus and St. Auſtin, which prove this " Maxim, cauſa non pœna facit Martyrem. It " ſeems that Mr. Ferrand is under an Oath to ſay " nothing to the purpoſe: For what is all this " for? Who denies that 'tis not the Death but " the cauſe of the Death that makes the Martyr? " Who denies but there have been Hereticks who " died for their Hereſie? The thing to be prov'd " was, whether it is poſſible for Hereticks to die " for their Hereſie, 1. In great numbers. 2. Per- " ſons of both Sexes, &c.

My Readers have now the Proceſs as fully inſtructed as is poſſible; for the Parties have produc'd all that they have to ſay: It remains only that they ſhould give ſentence, who is in the right who is in the wrong, and I hope I may be allow'd to give my Opinion in this caſe.

In the firſt place it ſeems that Mr. Maimbourg did not ſufficiently weigh his words; his Expreſſions are hyperbolical; for it is neither certain that the Marcionites had many Martyrs, nor that thoſe Martyrs ſuffer'd Death as they were Marcionites. It had been therefore more prudent to have ſaid only, that this Sect boaſted of having Martyrs. II. But if the Expreſſions of Mr. Maimbourg are Hyperbolical, thoſe of the Cenſurer are much more ſo; for upon pretence of uſing too high words, one ought not to be accus'd either of a prodigious Ignorance, or of too great Boldneſs. III. The Cenſurer hath been ſo paſſionate, that did not we perceive a great air of moderation in the whole Work of Mr. Ferrand, the exceeding great Modeſty which he ſhows in this place, might paſs for a malicious Trick, deſign'd to diſcover the hideous Deformity of the Criticiſm he refuted. When I read this Page of his Book, I fancy I ſee fine Pearls about the Neck of an Æthiopian, whoſe Luſtre is encreaſed by the blackneſs which encompaſſes them, whilſt they add new degrees of obſcurity to the blackneſs (d). IV. According to all appearance, the Cenſurer knew nothing of this Paſſage of Euſebius, when he Publiſh'd his Apology for the Reformers, and he did not know that the Sect of the Marcionites did continue in the fourth Century. How then comes it, may one ſay, that he affirms he had read and obſerv'd this Paſſage before Mr. Ferrand gave him notice of it? Does not he himſelf overthrow all his Conſtruction, by confeſſing that he was not ignorant of this place in Euſebius? Since therefore this Confeſſion was prejudicial to him, we muſt conclude that he was ſincere in it. I anſwer, That of two Evils we muſt always chooſe the leaſt. Thus in comparing the Evil which might happen to him by his Confeſſion, with that which might happen by a Conduct quite oppoſite, the damage is leſs which he ſuffers by the firſt than by the ſecond: and therefore he boaſted of knowing what Euſebius ſays concerning the Martyrdom of the Marcionites. Now if he had confeſs'd that he knew nothing of it, all his Readers would have entertain'd the worſe Opinion of his Learning; for the moſt ſtupid might have Wit enough to conclude with a great deal of eaſe, that he was a meer Novice in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and that it was very indecent in him to object this fault to his Adverſary with ſo much Haughtineſs. The Evil was great; the Danger unavoidable, and the Prejudice not to be eaſily repair'd. But what had he to fear in boaſting that he was well acquainted with his Euſebius? I will tell it you here in two words, and more particularly hereafter. He might fear that the Readers who reaſon well, and take the pains to compare exactly the Objections with the Anſwers, and to conſider, whether a Proof that's good in itſelf does not loſe its force by ſuppoſing this or that, would perceive the weakneſs of his Criticiſm. This Evil is not very great, for of a Thouſand Readers there are ſcarce two who will trouble themſelves with theſe Enquiries, or who are capable of making them; wherefore the Danger is infinitely greater, when one is expos'd to be taken for an ignorant Perſon by all thoſe that can read, than when he is in danger of being taken for a bad Logician by a ſmall number of Readers. Did he ſtand in need of a greater Motive to manage himſelf as he did? It was worth his while to boaſt that he knew very well the Pretenſions of the Marcionites related by Euſebius, being in ſuch Circumſtances wherein he was expos'd to the great inconveniences, which I ſhall now lay open. V. The Proofs that were made uſe of againſt Maimbourg, may be reduc'd to this: The Marcionites liv'd only in the ſecond and third Centuries, therefore they had no Martyrs; for at that time the Chriſtian Church had not any Courts of Judicature, and beſides they taught with the Gnoſticks, That it was a fooliſh thing to expoſe one's ſelf to Martyrdom. This reaſoning ſuppoſes, that the Followers of Marcion were neither Perſecuted by the Chriſtians nor by the Pagans. Could any one be ſo bold as to ſay this, if he knew, 1. That an Author cited by Euſebius (a) confeſſes, that they boaſted of the multitude of their Martyrs? 2. That Euſebius does not deny the matter of Fact, but only denies, that the great number of the Marcionites, that were Martyrs, was a proof of the goodneſs of their Sect? VI. This Paſſage of Euſebius utterly ruins the pretenſion of the Critick, viz. That the followers of Marcion taught with the Gnoſticks, that none but Fools would loſe their Lives for their Religion, and that they were the moſt forward among the Perſecutors, to keep off Perſecution from themſelves. How could they teach this, when they pretended to prove by their Martyrs, that they were the true Church? VII. 'Tis impertinent to cite Tertullian, ſince he ſays nothing expreſly of that Sect, and 'tis ridiculous to pretend, that thoſe who join the Note of Regaltius with the words of Tertullian, will not talk of any Marcionites that were Martyrs. VIII. 'Tis very true, that Marcion agreed with the Gnoſticks in ſome things, but nevertheleſs his Sect was different from theirs; and ſo without an expreſs Teſtimony and particular Proofs, 'tis not juſt to aſcribe to him the Opinion of the Gnoſticks concerning Martyrdom. Otherwiſe it might be lawful to argue thus: The Arminians are a branch of the Proteſtants; therefore they believe the real Preſence like thoſe of the Confeſſion of Augsburg, and abſolute Predeſtination like thoſe of the Confeſſion of Geneva. IX. 'Tis very ſtrange, that one who durſt inſult Mr. Maimbourg for his ignorance of Antiquity, ſhould not know that the Sect of the Marcionites flouriſh'd very much towards the end of the fourth Century, as St Epiphanius informs us. It flouriſh'd ſtill in the time of Theodoret, who informs us, that he Converted and Baptized more than Ten Thouſand Marcionites (b). Note, That Lambertus Danæus was not ignorant, that theſe Sectaries boaſted of their Martyrs; but with St. Cyprian he pretends, that thoſe who ſuffer'd Death for Religion were not Martyrs. (c) Martyres etiam ſe habere jactant, ut ſcribit Euſebius lib. 5. cap. 16 inter quos recenſet Methodorum Smyrnæ crematum, lib. 4 cap. 16 falſo, nam

(a) Καὶ οἱ πανταχοῦ ἀπὸ τῶν Μαρκίωνος καὶ αἱρέσεως ἐπιφανείας καὶ λαμπρότητος, πλείστους ὅσους ἐπέχειν χρόνους μάρτυρας λέγουσιν ἀλλ' ἢ τὸν γε Χριστὸν αὐτὸν καθ' ἁλήθειαν ἐχ' ὁμολογεῖν. Plurimi certe qui Marcionis hæreſin ſequuntur, vulgo Marcionitæ cognominari, quamplurimos habere ſe dicunt martyres Chriſti. Tamen Chriſtum ipſum revera minime confitentur. Euſeb. Lib. 5 cap. 16 p. 182 D

(b) Theodor epiſt. 146 apud Baron. ad ann. 424 n. 19.

(c) Lambert Danæus ubi ſupra fol. 59

(d) Every body knows this Aphoriſm of the Schools, Contraria juxta ſe poſita magis eluceſcunt.

he was not ſo dogmatical in his Hereſie as his Diſciples were. We muſt ſay of his Syſtem the ſame thing as of that of the Marcionites. He did not know how (F) to manage (c) Euſeb. l. 4. c. 15. p. m. 135. Compare this with what Mr. Jurieu ſays, It was falſe that they had any Martyrs. Conſult Baronius, ad ann. 424. n. 14. where he ſays, Facilius eſt invenire Marcionitam à Gentilibus olim occidi, quam à Chriſtianis Eccleſiæ redditum.

(f) Epiphan. adv. hæreſes, n. 66. p. m. 627.

(g) Ὁ δὲ Ἀρχέλαος γνὺς τὴν αἰτίαν, καὶ τὸν ἐπιστολὴν ἀναγνὺς, ἔζεσε τὸν θυμὸν. ὥσπερ λέων ὠρυόμενος, καὶ ζῆλον θεὸν ἀναλαβὼν, ἐπεμέρετο ὁρμῆσαι μᾶλλον ἐπ' αὐτῷ, καὶ χειρώσασθαι τὸν ποιμένα. Archelaus re omni perſpecta dentibus fremens, rugientis leonis inſtar, ac divino quodam ardore percitus ad Manichæum potius proſiſci cupiebat, hominemque capere, id. ac p. 624

(h) Id. ib. p. 625.

(i) Jurieu Apology for the Reformers, tom. 1. p. 172.

naim cauſa facit martyres, quemadmodum Cyprianus ait, non autem pœna. He ſpeaks of a Marcionite Prieſt that was burnt at Smyrna at the ſame time that St. Polycarp ſuffer'd. (e) Ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ δὲ περὶ αὐτὸν γεγονὼς, καὶ ἄλλα μαρτύρια συνῆπτο καλὰ τὴν αὐτὴν σμύρναν πεπεραγμένα ὑπὸ τὸν αὐτὸν πολεμὸν τῷ χρόνῳ τῆς τοῦ Πολυκάρπου μαρτυρίας· μαθ' ὧν καὶ μαρτυρίου τῆς καλὰ μαρκίωνα πλάνης, πρεσβύτερος εἶναι δοκῶν, πυρὶ παραδοθεὶς ἀνῄρεθη. Sed & alia martyria ſub idem tempus quo Polycarpus paſſus eſt, apud Smyrnam facta, in eadem epiſtola conjunctim leguntur. In quibus & Metrodorus quidam qui Marcionis ſectæ presbyter dicebatur, flammis conſumptus interiit. X. Perhaps it may be probably affirm'd, that theſe People reckon'd thoſe for Martyrs among them who were kill'd in ſome popular Commotion of the Orthodox. 'Twould be no great wonder if ſome did believe, that even before the Emperors were Chriſtians, the Hereticks were expos'd ſometimes to the violence of the Catholicks; for we learn from St. Epiphanius, that Manes had like to have been kill'd by the Common People in the City of Caſchara, where he publickly diſputed with the Biſhop of that place. He had infallibly loſt his Life there, if a very honeſt Man, call'd Marcellus, had not by his venerable Preſence, put a ſtop to the burning Zeal of the People (f) Ἐνταῦθα ὁ Μάνης ἁρπάσας, βυλομένων τῶν δήμων αὐτὸν λιθοβολῆσαι, εἰ μὲ ὅτι παρῆλθεν εἰς μέσον Μάρκελλος, καὶ τῷ αἰδησίμῳ ἀπὸ προσώπῳ καταδυσώπησε τὸς δήμους, ἐπεὶ ἂν ὁ πάλαι νεκρὸς μόνον πάλαι ἐλεδήνικει. Secundum hæc Manes fuga ſibi conſulit. Populus enim lapidibus illum obruere volebat; niſi Marcellus in medium prodiens vultu ipſo veneratione pleno aſpectuque repreſſiſſet. Quod niſi feciſſet, jam dudum infelix ipſe periſſet. This honeſt Man had us'd the ſame moderation before to hinder the Biſhop from cauſing Manes to be kill'd. This Prelate was call'd Archelaus (g), who was in ſo great a Rage, when he knew what Manes had writ to Marcellus, that he would preſently have ſeiz'd this Heretick; but Marcellus hindred him by his Prayers. Some Days after he had occaſion again for all his Eloquence to reſtrain the Zeal of this Prelate. Manes having receiv'd the Anſwer of Marcellus, went to him. Archelaus was of opinion that he ſhould be kill'd like a wild Beaſt, who ravag'd the Lord's Sheep-fold. But Marcellus, by his wiſe Diſcourſes, inclin'd him to mildneſs, and made him agree to confer peaceably with this Hereſiarch. Perhaps I ſhall not be believ'd, unleſs I cite the Greek words, and therefore I will ſet them down. Ὁ δὲ Ἐπίσκοπος Ἀρχέλαος ἔχων ἐν ἑαυτῷ μᾶλλον τὸν λόγον καὶ τὸ ζηλωτικὸν τῆς πίστεως, ἐζυλυσύλο, εἰ ἦν δυνατὸν, ἐξ αὐτῆς τὸν ἄνδρα ὥσπερ παρδαλιν, ἢ λύκον, ἢ τι ἕτερον τῶν θηρίων ἀρτύσας, δυνατῷ παρδῦναι, ἵνα μὴ λυμανθῇ τὸ ῥεύματα, τοῦτο θηρός, [ἢ ὁδὸ] τὴν εἴσοδον καλυπτῶν. Ὁ δὲ Μάρκελλος τῇ μακροθυμίᾳ μᾶλλον ἰξίκ, καὶ ἀνεξικάκως τὸν πρὸς αὐτὸν διάλογον ἐπ' αὐτῷ γενέδαι (h). At Archelaus Epiſcopus præter doctrinam fidei inſuper ardore præditus, author erat, ut ſi fieri poſſet, homo ille, pardi inſtar ac lupi, vel cujuſvis alterius beſtiæ, interceptus morti traderetur, ne ejuſmodi feræ incurſione pecora læderentur, cum illius ingreſſum cognoſceret. Marcellus contra patienter ac lenius potius illum in colloquio tractandum putabat. This ſhows, that under pretence that the Orthodox had not any Courts of Judicature for the firſt three Centuries, one muſt not conclude ſo magiſterially that the Hereticks could not boaſt of having Martyrs. All Communions agree in honouring with this Title ſome of thoſe who die for their Religion by the Factions of the Common People. XI. I obſerve that Mr. Jurieu ſhould not have been inſulted for making long Extracts out of Optatus and St. Auſtin which prove this Maxim, Cauſa non pœna facit Martyrem; for it was neceſſary for him to make them to anſwer the Challenge of the Apologiſt, and to ſhow his raſhneſs: Once more here is the Tenor of this Challenge; " (i) But that this Declaimer may " not eſcape, we deſire him, if he will quit the " Age of the Marcionites, to ſhow us what Here- " ticks died in crowds to maintain their Hereſie, " and when this happen'd. As for us, who " know nothing of Hiſtory but what Books teach " us, we find no ſuch Ages, we meet with no " ſuch crowds of Hereticks, who died for their " Errors: We know only, that in the fourth Cen- " tury, ſome Orthodox Biſhops proſecuted to " Death certain Spaniſh Hereticks. This Chal- lenge does plainly contain this Aſſertion. In the firſt four Centuries there were no other Martyrs that were Hereticks but ſome Priſcillianiſts. The contrary to this was prov'd to him by the long Citations aforeſaid. What then can be more ridiculous than to laugh at thoſe long Extracts, and to ſay they are impertinent, and (a) that he does not deny that there were Hereticks who died for their Hereſie, and that he was not concern'd in this Enquiry, whether it be poſſible for Hereticks to die for their Hereſie; but only whether it be poſſible in the Circumſtances alledg'd by him, which are five in number? 'Tis manifeſt that this Challenge contains nothing relating to thoſe Circumſtances, and ſo this Author is notoriouſly guilty of acting inſincerely. He challenges one to prove ſuch a thing to him; and when he ſees it prov'd demonſtratively, he complains of the length of the Proof, and ſays, the Queſtion was not about this, but about ſome other thing. That which is moſt aſtoniſhing is, that a Man ſo much vers'd in Controverſie, ſhould dare to give ſuch a Challenge as this; ſince almoſt all the Romiſh Controverſial Writers, in anſwer to what is alledg'd of the Martyrology of the Proteſtants, that the ancient Hereticks boaſted of the ſame thing. I ſhall only quote a Jeſuit, who wrote againſt Peter de Moulin, and whom this Miniſter and Andrew Rivet have refuted. Vetus delirium hæreticorum eſt, ſays he (b), Eccleſiam Catholicam in Martyrum cenſu æmulari velle. Ita de Marcionitis & de Cataphrygibus ſeu Montaniſtis ſcribit (1) Apollinaris Epiſcopus Hierapoleos, antiquiſſimus Theologus; ipſos, cum omnia quæ pro ſe attulerant argumenta, fuiſſent rationibus conſentaneis rejecta, ad Martyres confugiſſe, & ad propheticum illorum ſpiritum. Invehuntur pariter tum ſanctus Cyprianus contra pſeudomartyres Novatianos, tum ſanctus Epiphanius contra Euphemitas: qui ob eorum multitudinem ſe Martyrianos vaniſſime appellarunt. Habuere ſuos Donatiſtæ; tantâque inſaniâ Martyrii eam larvam affectarunt, ut cum Eccleſiæ tyrannorum perſecutio deeſſet, ſe aliquoties dederint præcipites exanimaverintque; deque his Optatus Milevitanus, divus Auguſtinus, & Theodoretus meminerunt. Non caruerunt iis quoque Ariani & Priſcillianiſtæ, quorum inſiſtere veſtigiis ſat agunt Sectarii noſtri temporis, & ideo ſuos habent Martyrologos, qui mendacia intexunt ineptiis dicerem lepidiſſimis, niſi jocari in re tanti momenti facinus eſſet. Note, Petraſanctæ is miſtaken, as well as Baronius (c), in thinking that Apollinaris was the Author whom Euſebius quotes. Rufinus and Nicephorus are guilty of the ſame Error. See how they are refuted in the firſt Tome (d) of the Bibliotheque of Mr. du Pin, according to the Reaſons which Henricus Valeſius (e) and Peter Halloix (f) have alledg'd.

(a) Jurieu Syſtem of the Church, p. 645.

(b) Silveſter Petraſancta in notis in epiſtolam Petri Molinæi ad Balzacum p. 36, 37.

(1) Apud Euſeb. hiſt. l. 5. c. 15.

(c) Ad ann. 173. n. 20. &c.

(d) Pag. 68. Dutch Edition.

(e) In Euſeb. l. 5. c. 6.

(f) In notis ad vitam S. Apollin. c. 3.

THE Advantages of collecting the Writings of ſuch Controverſies.

It were to be wiſh'd, that a good Critick would take the pains to collect together all the Pieces of ſuch like Controverſies, and place them one after another. as I have done, as to the diſpute about the Martyrs of the Marcionites. I have given here a Specimen of this Work, to encourage thoſe who are able to undertake it. It would be a Work of very great uſe, either to diſcover the diſingenuity of ſome Diſputants, or to accuſtom Authors to a greater exactneſs: For knowing that very few, if any, compare together the Replies and Rejoinders which are ſcatter'd in many Volumes, they do not fear the Conſequences of their diſingenuous Practices; which they would certainly be afraid of, if they knew that ſome will make ſuch a Collection of the Objections and Anſwers, and of the Replies and Rejoinders, as will be moſt proper to ſhow in a moment the Strength and Weakneſs both of the one and the other; which might be ſeen the more eaſily if there were added to it ſuch Obſervations as I have made above. The beſt way of doing it, would be by ranging the whole in two or three Columns. See the Preface to the Project of this Dictionary towards the end.

(F) He did not know how to manage his principal Point.] If ſuch a Wit as Deſcartes had been to manage this Affair, none could have confounded the Syſtem of the two Principles ſo eaſily as the Fathers did, when they had none to oppoſe, but Cerdon, Marcion, Apelles, and Manes, who knew manage his principal Point, but entangled himself in a multitude of ill-contriv'd Explications; from whence it came to pass, that the Fathers did easily confound the Marcionites, who it seems were overthrown by the first Answer that was given them: For as soon as they were told of the inviolable privileges of humane Liberty, they were altogether silent and mute like Fishes, tho' it was easie (Ϝ Δ) to reply to this.

knew not how to make use of their Advantages, either because they admitted the Gospel, or because they had not Knowledge enough to avoid the Explications (g), which were most subject to great inconveniences. It was the most ridiculous thing in the World, to maintain that Christ did indeed appear upon Earth, but not with a true humane Body, and to give this reason of it, because the Flesh is not the Work of a good Principle but of an ill one. The Marcionites Dispute pitifully about this. In general, if we judge of their strength by the Objections they propose in the Dialogue (h) of Origen, we must think very meanly of them. They did not urge the Difficulties about the Origin of Evil, for it seems, that after they were answer'd, that Evil came from the bad use of the Free-will of Man, they knew not what to reply; or if they insisted upon the fore-sight of this mischievous use, they were satisfy'd with the first Answer, how weak soever it was. Origen (i) having answer'd, that an intelligent Creature, who had not enjoy'd Free-will, had been immutable and immortal like God, stops the Mouth of the Marcionite, for he has nothing to reply. Nevertheless it would be easie to refute this Answer; for we need only ask Origen, whether the Blessed in Paradise are equal to God in the Attributes of Immutability and Immortality. He would doubtless make Answer, they are not: And consequently, it may be replied to him, a Creature does not become a God, because it is determin'd to good, and is depriv'd of that which you call Free-will. You do not therefore answer the Objection; for it was ask'd of you, wherefore God fore-seeing that a Creature would Sin, if it were left to its own Free-will, did not determine it to that which was Good, as he does continually determine the Souls of the Blessed which are translated into Paradise? You answer after such a manner as shows, that you think it had been ask'd of you, why God did not give a Creature a Being as immutable and independant as himself is? But there was never any such Question put to you. St. Basil has given another Answer which has the same fault. God, says he, would not have us to love him by constraint, and we our selves do not think our Servants well-dispos'd to our Service, while we hold them in Chains, but only when they obey us of their own free Pleasure (k) "Ὅτε γὰρ σὺ τοὺς οἰκέτας, οὐχ ὅταν δεσμοῖς ἔχῃς, εὔνους ὑπολαμβάνεις, ἀλλ' ὅταν ἑκουσίως ἴδῃς ἀποπληρώσαί σοι τὰ καθήκοντα, καὶ Θεῷ τοίνυν οὐ τὸ ἀναγκαστὸν φίλον, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἐξ αἱρέσεως καλοῦ δόμενον· αἵρεσις δὲ ἐκ προαιρέσεως καὶ οὐκ ἐξ ἀνάγκης γίνεται. Quoniam & tu servos, non quando vinctos in custodiâ tenes, benevolos esse tibi existimas; sed cum sponte omnia, quæ erga te oportet, videris agere. Sic item Deo cum pura fore amicum, non qui coactus, sed qui sponte suâ virtuteque illi obtemperat. Virtus enim ex voluntate perficitur, non ex necessitate. To convince St. Basil that his Opinion is very false, we need only put him in mind of the state of Paradise: God is there lov'd and serv'd perfectly well, and yet the Blessed do not enjoy Free-will; they have not that fatal privilege of the Power to commit Sin. Must we therefore compare them to those Slaves who do not obey but by force? What did St. Basil think of? Since he answers the Difficulties by the Parallel we have produc'd, 'tis a sign that the followers of Marcion and Manes made no reply, when they saw themselves overthrown by this Argument, and that they never thought to put their Adversaries in mind of the state of the glorified Souls. If there were any Marcionites at this Day, able Disputants, as either the Jesuits or the Jansenists in their Disputations against one another, they would begin where their Ancestors left off. They would attack the last Intrenchment of Origen, viz. Free-will, and before they had advanc'd three Syllogisms, they would oblige the maintainer of it to confess, (l) that he does not understand what he affirms, and that they are unsearchable depths of the Sovereignty of the Creator in which our Reason is swallow'd up, and that nothing but Faith can support us. Revelation is the only Magazine of the Arguments, which we must oppose to these People: By this means we are able to refute the pretended Eternity of an ill Principle But when we go about to determine after what manner the Creator has acted, with respect to the first Sin of the Creature, we find our selves very much entangled. All the Hypotheses that are laid down by Christians, can hardly ward off the blows that are level'd at them (m): They are triumphant when they act offensively; but they lose all their Advantage when they sustain the Attack. Our Ideas in this matter are only as clear as 'tis necessary to make an eternal War; like those Princes, who cannot hinder others from ravaging their Frontiers, tho' they are strong enough to make incursions into the Enemies Country. It does not appear that Marcion and his Followers did well understand the Strength and Weakness of the Orthodox.

Prudentius, who wrote a Poem about the Origin of Sin, has not well (a) answer'd the Objection of those Heretics.

(g) Compare what was said in the Article Manicheans, Remark B.

(h) I mean the Dialogue against the Marcionites attributed to Origen, of which Mr. Wetstein Professor at Basil, publish'd an Edition in 1674, being the first in which the Greek appear'd.

(i) A Dialogue against the Marcionites, Sect. 3. p. 79. 80. edit. Basil. 1674.

(k) Basilius Magnus, tom. 1. in homilia, Quod Deus non sit auctor mali, p. 369.

(l) They would pretend that such a Confession does not differ from that which is call'd, to be reduc'd ad terminos non loqui.

(Ϝ Δ) Tho' it was easie to reply to this.] I have already shown in the preceding Remark, that to refute invincibly the Answer of St. Basil, it was sufficient to desire him to consider the state of the Blessed. I add here, that it was not necessary to put him upon such a high Contemplation; for it was sufficient to desire him to consider the state of the Just in this Life. 'Tis by virtue of the Grace of the Holy Spirit that the Children of God, while they are Travellers, I mean while they are in this World, do love their Heavenly Father, and perform good Works. Neither St Basil, nor the other Greek Fathers could deny this, tho they did not assert the necessity of Grace efficacious by it self so highly as St Austin did. Does the Grace of God reduce the Faithful to the condition of a Slave who obeys only by force? Does it hinder them from loving God voluntarily, and from obeying him with a good and sincere Will? If one had put this Question to St Basil and the other Fathers, who refuted the Marcionites, would not they have been oblig'd to answer negatively? But what is the natural and immediate Consequences of such an Answer? Is it not to say, that without infringing the Liberty of the Creature, God could infallibly determine it to that which is good? And therefore Sin does not proceed from hence, that the Creator could not prevent it without destroying the Free-will of the Creature; but we must find out some other cause of it. I wonder that the Fathers of the Church did not see the weakness of their Answers, and that their Adversaries did not give them notice of it. I know very well, that these matters had not then pass'd thro' all the Discussions which have appear'd in the XVIth and XVIIth Centuries; but 'tis certain the Primitive Church knew distinctly the Agreement of humane Liberty with the Grace (b) of the Holy Spirit The most rigid Christian Sects acknowledge at this Day, that the Decrees of God did not impose upon the first Man a necessity of sinning, and that the most efficacious Grace does not destroy the Liberty of a sinful Man They confess therefore, that the Decrees of preserving Mankind constantly and invariably in a state of Innocence, how absolute soever they had been, would have permitted all Men to perform their Duty very freely The Thomists maintain, that Physical pre-determination perfects the Liberty of our Soul, far from destroying or weakening it; and yet they teach that this pre-determination is of such a nature, that when it is intended to produce an act of Love, 'tis not possible in sensu composito, that it should produce an act of Hatred. I frankly confess, that I believe they do not very well understand, how the liberty of the Creature is perfected by this Physical pre-determining Quality, which the first Cause, by the

(m) See in the Article Paulicians, what I have said of the Judgment of M. Jurieu about the loose method of explaining Grace. See also what a French Minister answer'd to the Lutherans. Mr Beauval has inserted it in the History of the Works of the Learned, Novem 1695. p. 1185, & but chiefly see the Judgment of Bernardinus Ochinus

(a) See one of the Remark in the Article Prudentius

(b) See Grace, Remark [illegible]

this. I shall make (G) a few Obſervations againſt Moreri.

MARESTS (JOHN) a Pariſian, Sieur de St. Sorlin, was one of the finest Wits of the XVIIth Century; but he became at laſt viſionary and fanatical. He was mightily belov'd by Cardinal Richelieu, and we may ſay that among other * places, he had under his Eminence (A) an Employment of Wit. He himſelf has left us a Deſcription of his Manners, which is not very much to his Advantage; for he confeſſes, that to ſeduce the (B) Women who oppos'd him out of a concern for their Salvation, he made no ſcruple to incline them to Atheiſm. He was a Member of the French Academy in the beginning of its Foundation, and one of its principal Ornaments. He wrote † many Dramatick Pieces, which were much applauded, and chiefly that whoſe Title is, Les Viſionaires. He undertook an Epic Poem ξ, which coſt him the labour of many Years, and he believ'd he ſhould have taken a longer (C) time

* He was Comptroller General of the extraordinaries of the War, and Secretary General of the Marine of the Levant. Hiſt. of the French Academy. p. m. 342.

† See the Titles of them and thoſe of ſeveral other Pieces of his in the Hiſtory of the French Academy, p. m. 343.

ξ Intitul'd Clovis.

they, produces in the Soul of a Man before it acts; but whether they do underſtand it or no, 'tis certain, that they afford what is ſufficient totally to overthrow the Solution which St. Baſil gave to the Objections of the Manichees. As for the Moliniſts, they cannot make uſe of ſuch a Solution, for they do not reject the Grace of God, which infallibly ſecures a Man's Predeſtination; they do not deny but God, if he pleaſes, can ſecure a Man who always acts freely from ever falling into Sin in the moſt dangerous Temptations.

(G) I ſhall make a few Obſervations againſt Moreri.] I. His Remark, that Sinope, a City of Paphlagonia, had formerly been a City of Pontus, is very falſe, ſince Sinope was at the ſame time a City of Paphlagonia and Pontus. II. 'Tis not true (c), that Marcion was never receiv'd into the Communion of the Church of Rome. III. Nor that after he had followed a long time the Errors of Cerdon, he invented new ones in 134. We have ſhown before that he came to Rome under Antoninus Pius, who did not begin to Reign till 138. Baronius (d) building upon ſome Paſſages of Tertullian, believ'd that Marcion began to publiſh his Tenets at Rome in 146; and yet there are other Paſſages of this Father which teſtifie, that Marcion did not come to Rome till the time of Pope Anicetus (e): Which ſuppoſes that he did not arrive there till 20 Years after the birth of his Sect. Tertullian (f) had reaſon to ſay, that he was not well inform'd of the time when this Heretick began to dogmatize. IV. Since Cerdon went to Rome (g) in Pope Hyginus's time, who was not created till the Year 153, how was it poſſible that Marcion ſhould invent new Hereſies in 134, after he had follow'd a long time thoſe which Cerdon taught him at Rome? V. 'Tis falſe, that Marcion call'd himſelf JESUS CHRIST ſent to aboliſh the Law as being wicked. Moreri ſlanders him in aſcribing this to him. If it be ſaid, that Moreri in theſe words, He call'd himſelf JESUS CHRIST, does not refer to Marcion, but to one of the Gods of this Heretick, to him whom he own'd for the Author of the Goſpel, and the Redeemer of the Univerſe; this will not clear Moreri, but he will ſtill be guilty both of expreſſing himſelf ill, and of reporting amiſs the Opinion of this Heretick. Marcion admitting of two Gods, one good and the other bad, ſaid (h), that one made the World, and the other was the Father of JESUS CHRIST. Perhaps the Confuſion wherewith Baronius ſpeaks of this, deceiv'd Moreri. (i) Dus poſuit Deos (Marcion) ſibi contrarios, quorum alter bonus, malus vero eſſet alter; alter legis veteris auctor, alter autem novæ ——— ab illoque malo mundum eſſe creatum, à bono autem reſtitutum atque redemptum, huncque fuiſſe Jeſum ſolventem legem atque Prophetas à Deo patre miſſum. Thus this Paſſage is read in my Edition of Baronius (k). I know not whether the Printers have omitted ſome words, or whether we muſt attribute to Baronius the Contradiction which is found there, and which conſiſts in ſaying, that JESUS CHRIST was the good Principle, and that his Father ſent him into the World.

(A) He had under his Eminence an Employment of Wit.] So we muſt underſtand what he ſays of himſelf under the name of Euſebius in one (l) of his Books. " With the help of ſome, by whom I " was ſupported to arrive at the height of the Pa- " lace of Fortune, I came at laſt to his Apart- " ment, who bears rule in this high Place. There " I taſted a Thouſand raviſhing Pleaſures by the " eſteem he had for me, by the Careſſes both " publick and private, wherewith he honour'd " me, by the applauſes I receiv'd from all parts, " and by the Victories I often gain'd over my " envious Enemies. ——— (m) You will force " me to tell you ſome of theſe nice reliſhes where- " by you may judge of the reſt, and which will " ſerve to ſhow the indefatigable Virtue of the " Genius of this great Man, who could not reſt " from a Labour of the Mind, but by another " Labour of the Mind. Immediately after he " had ſpent ſome Hours in ſettling the Affairs " of State, he often ſhut up himſelf with a Learn- " ned Divine, to handle with him the ſublimeſt " Queſtions of Religion, where Wit gather'd a " new ſtrength in theſe kinds of Converſation. " After this he commonly call'd me in alone, to " divert himſelf about Matters more gay and nice, " in which he took wonderful pleaſure. For ha- " ving obſerv'd in me a fruitful Wit to bring " forth ſudden Thoughts, he confeſs'd to me, " that his greateſt pleaſure was, when in our " Converſation, he improv'd my Thoughts by his " own: And if I propos'd another Thought be- " yond his, then his Wit made a new effort with " very great ſatisfaction. —— Now judge you, " if I did not reliſh by turns the ſame Pleaſure, " which ſeem'd to him ſo great, ſince it often " happen'd, that I improv'd his Thoughts by my " own.

(m) Ibid. p. 105.

(B) That to ſeduce the Women.] He does not only ſay, (a) " That he ſtaid ſome time in the Cottage " of carnal and groſs Pleaſures, which had but one " ſign, courſely painted, and whereon Bacchus and " Venus were repreſented; and that finding that " theſe Pleaſures ruin'd his Body and his For- " tune, he reſolv'd to ſeek after thoſe which were " more ſublime. He adds, (b) That he ought to " mourn with Tears of Blood for the bad uſe he " had made of his Eloquence among the Women; " for I made uſe of nothing but diſguiſed Lyes, ſub- " til Tricks, and infamous Treacheries. I endea- " vour'd to ruin the Souls of thoſe whom I feign'd " to be in Love with; I ſought out deceitful " Speeches to diſturb, to blind, and ſeduce them, " that I might induce them to believe, that Vice " was Virtue, or at leaſt a thing natural and in- " different. I betray'd even God himſelf, by in- " terpreting his Laws maliciouſly, and ſetting off " the falſe and damnable Reaſonings of the vo- " luptuous and impious, ſuch as you are, and I " employ'd all the Efforts of my Eloquence to " extinguiſh the ſenſe of Virtue in a Soul. (c) It was prov'd to him, that " He had denoted himſelf " by thoſe individual and perſonal Characters"; ſo that what his Euſebius ſays, is his own Hiſtory.

(a) Ibid. p. 3.

(b) Delices del'Eſprit, p. 73. See the new Critical Letters againſt Maimbourg, p. 746, 747.

(C) A longer time to finiſh it, if Providence had not had a deſign.] 'Tis he alſo who reveal'd this little Myſtery; for he begins his Delices de l'Eſprit (d) with a kind of Prodigy, which he pretends happen'd to him; which was, ſays he (e), " That God " did ſo ſenſibly aſſiſt him in finiſhing his great " Work of Clovis, thereby to bring him the " ſooner to ſuch things as were more uſeful, " and more ſublime, that he durſt not ſay in " what time he finiſh'd the nine Books which re- " main'd, and refin'd the others." The Gentlemen of Port Royal make the following Reflection upon this Paſſage. " (f) Thus, according to " Mareſts, it was the Spirit of God which [illegible] him to write theſe nine Books, which [illegible] to refine the reſt, and which in- [illegible] to publiſh this Work. It was the [illegible] God which aſſiſted him in publiſhing [illegible] Chriſtians ſo many [illegible] ridiculous Fables. It was [illegible] that mov'd him to tempt [illegible] by ſo many dangerous Images, and the [illegible] ſeduction

(c) The Gentlemen of Port Royal in their Viſionaires, Letter 8. p. 456. Edit. of Cologne, 1683. in 8°

(d) Les Viſionaires, Letter 1. p. 256.

(e) Preface to the Delices de l'Eſprit.

(f) Viſionaires, ibid.

(g) Irenæus, l. 1. c. 28. apud Baron. ibid. n. 2.

(h) See Damous ubi ſupra, fol. 36. citing Iren. l. 2. c. 1. and l. 4. c. 87. and other Fathers.

(i) Baronius ubi ſupra, n. 9. p. 117.

(k) 'Tis that of Antwerp. 1597.

(l) Delices de l'Eſprit, p. 4.

time to finish it, if Providence had not had a design to employ his Pen in Works of Devotion. He wrote also Romances, wherein (D) he departed from those Ideas of Virtue which were then represented in this kind of Writings. He d ed in 1676. He declar'd himself an Enemy to the Jansenists, and without doubt he had better never have meddled with that Quarrel; for had it not been for this, his Visions (I) which are so well describ'd by these Gentlemen, had lain conceal'd in Darkness. He " sentation of so many Criminal Passions. It was " the Spirit of God that induc'd him to write a " Romance, which no-wise differs from others, " only it is more extravagant." Moreover, The Abbot de Marolles informs us of one particular, from whence we may conclude, that our John Des-Marests set a high value upon his Clovis. He gave me his Delices de l'Esprit, says the Abbot (g), and " some other of his Works in Prose and " Verse, at such time as I had no difference with " him, as I have had since, because he took in a " sense contrary to mine, what I had written of " his Clovis, which I had not preferr'd above the " Æneids, although I had an esteem for it, and " thought it not unworthy of him.

(g) Michael de Marolles, enumeration of the Authors, who gave him their Books.

(D) Romances wherein he departed from those Ideas of Virtue.] Upon this account he is pleasantly expos'd in the Parnasse Reformé, which puts this Complaint in the Mouth of Ariana his Heroine. " (h) There are no places with me but what are " infamous, each Book furnishes one of them at " least; and the Heroes of the Romance are so " accustom'd to frequent those Places, that one " would take them for common Soldiers or " Musqueteers. To give me a Visit, and to go " to (you know my meaning) is but one and the " same thing; the one is now confounded with " the other. I don't wonder after this, if " he makes me appear naked; it had been " irregular to have us'd me otherwise; and since " Astræa, who had not the advantage of the Place " as I have, shows herself to Celadon in this Po- " sture, there was an indispensable necessity that " I should do the like." It is not therefore for the Romance of Ariana, that Des-Marests was concern'd in the last part of the Censure I am now to relate, and which is principally address'd to him. " (i) A writer of Romances and Plays is a pub- " lick Poisoner, not of the Bodies but of the " Souls of the Faithful, who ought to be look'd " upon as guilty of an infinite number of spiri- " tual Murders, which he has either actually " committed, or might have been the cause of " by his pernicious Writings. The more care " he takes to cover with a Veil of Decency the " criminal Passions he describes, the more dan- " gerous he renders them, and the more capable " of surprizing and corrupting simple and inno- " cent Souls. These sorts of Sins are so much " the more dreadful because they always subsist; " for the Books do not perish, and they always " spread the same Venom in those who read them." He cannot justly defend himself against the Parnasse Reformé, by saying he follow'd the Precept of the ancient Masters, that Romances ought (k) to be probable; for there is a medium between a Heroine which is not very Vertuous, and one that is too much so, and this medium does not exceed probability.

(h) Parnasse Reforme, p. 148, 149.

(i) Veronafres Letter 1. p. 253.

(k) Ficta voluptatis causa sint proxima veris. Horat. de arte Poetic.

(I) His Visions which are so well describ'd by the Gentlemen of Port Royal.] When I first read their Letters, I was seiz'd with an extraordinary surprize, that a Wit, who was the Author of such pleasant Pieces, and such as were fitted for the Stage, should boast very seriously, (m) That God of his infinite Goodness had sent to him a Key of the Treasure of St. John's Revelation, which was known but to very few Persons before him—and that by the Order of God (n) he was to raise 144000 fighting Men, whereof one part was already muster'd to make War against the Wicked and the Jansenists. My surprize was encreas'd when I reflected upon the Time and Place where these Chimera's were vented, and it was still re-doubled when I took notice, that not only the management of his own Estate was left to this pretended Prophet, but also the Office of an Inquisitor was bestow'd upon him: And that no body intrigu'd more than he, and was more active for the extirpation of Jansenism. If I had then known what I saw twenty Years after, I should not have been thus surpriz'd; but certainly I was excusable to think it strange at that time, that one who publish'd at Paris so many Chimera's, should obtain greater Authority than ever he had before. Oh what Irregularity is this! " (o) The Archbishop of Paris makes use of him for " his Apologist, admits him to his Table, receives " him into his House. The Archbishop of Aux " approves of the design of his Army. He is per- " mitted to be the founder of a new Order, " to set up, though he is wholly a Layman, " for the Director of a great number of Women " and Maids, to take an account of their " most secret Thoughts, to write for them Let- " ters of Conscience, stuffed with an infinite " number of very dangerous and imprudent " things, to say no more, and to frequent many " Convents of Virgins, and publish there his " mad Fancies and new Spiritualities And lastly, " The Archbishop of Paris cast his Eyes upon " him to help him to reform the Monastery of " Port Royal at Paris. His Instructions are there " greedily receiv'd, and they confer with him a- " bout mental Prayer; they give him an account " of the state in which they are, whether of Com- " fort or Misery.

(m) Delices de l'Esprit, part 3d. p. 2. in the Visionaires, Letter 1. p. 241.

(n) Advices of the Holy Ghost to the King, p. 242.

(o) Visionaires, Letter 1. p. 28.

The Book which he publish'd entitl'd, The Advice of the Holy Spirit to the King, has all the Characters of Fanaticism. He there explains Three Prophecies of Scripture, which he pretends are to be understood of the Jansenists; as being to be destroy'd by the French King with the Pomp of a great Army. One Character (p) which is the popular mark of Fanaticks, is this, That how Spiritual soever the People endeavour to appear, yet if they be narrowly observ'd, their Spirituality commonly aims at some external and sensible Effect; and they are never satisfied till they have carried on their Imaginations and Allegories to some great Event that is sensible, of which they fancy they are to be not only the Spectators, but also the Ministers. The Author from whom I have these words, proves this by many Examples, and then continues his Discourse after this manner " (q) The Imaginations of the Sieur Des-Marests, " being of the same kind with those of other Vi- " sionaries, must also terminate in something Ex- " ternal, and he must be willing, like others, to en- " joy in this World the Fruit of his Prophecies " 'Tis true, he does not seem to come to that all " of a sudden; for in the beginning he did all that " he could to keep at a distance from it by Spi- " ritualizing every thing, and reducing the most " terrible Beasts in the Revelations into Chime- " ra's, or quintessences of Mystical Theology " But at last he grew weary of those airy Spi- " ritualities, and the natural bias of his Fanatical " Imagination carried him on to frame, like o- " thers, a vast design in this World; for the ex- " ecution whereof he believed that he was chosen " by God. The Idea of it is not very No- " ble and Sublime. But lest you should think " that I impose upon him, I will represent it to " you in his own words. This design therefore " is to draw up an Army to oppose and destroy every " where Impieties and Heresies. The number of " those who shall Compose it, is to be according to the " Prophecy of St John 144000, who shall have the " mark of the living God upon their Foreheads, i. e. " who shall plainly make it appear by their Lives, that " God lives in their Hearts. And because every " Army stands in need of a General, he has pro- " vided one for it, by offering this Office to the " King, That so the Zeal and Valour of his Sacred Per- " son, who shall be the General of this brave Army, as " being the Eldest Son of the Church, and the principal " King of all Christians, may encourage all the Soldiers. " As to the inferior Offices, he declares to his " Majesty, that they are design'd for the Knights " of the Order. Your Royal Band, says he, of the " Knights of the Holy Ghost, ought to march at their " Head, if they be as Noble and Valiant as they pre- " tend to be. And to inflame their desire of Ho- " nour, he adds, That they will be very much ashamed " to be as ready as the rest of the Holy Army to do and " suffer all things. As for the Means to be em-

(p) Ib. p. 29

(q) Ib. p. 280

He promis'd the French King by his expounding of the Prophecies (F), that he should have the Glory of deſtroying the Mahometans. We ſhall elſewhere * ſhow his Conduct againſt one Morin, who call'd himſelf the Son of God. Des-Mareſts wrote ſomething

* In the Article of the Morin.

" ploy'd in this War, and which this numerous " Army are to make uſe of, he does not as yet " diſcover them, but reſerves the declara- " tion of them to a proper Time, having " learn'd them from the Holy Spirit. He " ſays only by the bye, That they will extirpate " all Impieties, not by Temporal but Spiritual Arms, " † according to the Heavenly means and methods which " God hath appointed, and which ſhall be particularly " declar'd. But leſt it ſhould be thought, that " this was only a Viſion, and leſt the expectation " of an Event very remote, ſhould not make an " impreſſion upon the King's Mind, he declares, " that the greateſt part of this Army is already " raiſed. God, ſays he, Sir, hath already anticipa- " ted your deſign, and you have a long time ſince " had an Army of ſuch Perſons as are faithful to him, " and who are devoted to him as victims of his juſt " Wrath which has been kindled by ſo many Abomi- " nations, to pray to him without ceaſing, and to ſuffer " all things, that ſo it may pleaſe him to convert the " falſe Chriſtians, and to extirpate by your Authority " ſo many Sects and deteſtable Vices, as now reign in " France. This Army is Compos'd only of valiant " and ſtout Souls, who fight without ceaſing, Sa- " tan and his Supporters. And in the Vow of U- " nion he affirms, That there are of it already many " thouſand Souls. Nevertheleſs ſince it has not " yet arriv'd to the prophetick Number of " 144000, the Sieur Des-Mareſts has a Commiſſion " from Heaven to publiſh every where, that thoſe " who have a mind to liſt themſelves, may do it " by his means; and to this end the Advices of the " Holy Ghoſt are particularly deſign'd. We muſt, " ſays he, communicate theſe Holy Advices to all the " World, that we may encourage many faithful Souls " to offer themſelves to God as Victims, by liſting them- " ſelves in this holy Army. And as it is uſual to " make Soldiers take an Oath, M. Des-Mareſts has " tram'd one for thoſe who ſhall compoſe this " Army, which he has Printed at the end of " theſe Advices with this Title, The League and " Vow of each Knight or Soldier in the Army of JE- " SUS CHRIST. He has alſo preſcrib'd to " them an Exerciſe for every Day, whereby it " appears, that theſe People are all KNIGHTS " OF THE INFALLIBILITY OF THE " POPE." He has foretold alſo all the Exploits which this Army are to perform (a); for he expreſly ſays, That they are to obtain a Victory over the Enemies of God by the deſtruction of Impieties and Hereſies, and that then an innumerable number of all ſorts of Nations and People ſhall be openly united to the Church, and ſhall pray before the Throne of God within themſelves. And all this is to happen under the Reign of Louis XIV. who will be the Joſhua of this Army, i. e. the Captain and General to lead on and animate the Troops and fight valiantly with them, under (b) the inviſible Conduct of the four Princes of the Heavenly Hoſts, St. Michael, St. Gabriel, St. Raphael and St. Uriel.

This Janſeniſt Author has made a Reflexion upon this too judicious to be here omitted. " I am " willing to believe, ſays he, (c) that the Sieur " Des-Mareſts has not yet a deſign to make his Vi- " ctims take up rebellious Arms, and that his " Army is ſtill wholly Spiritual and Extatical; " but he knows not what he will be at to " Morrow, becauſe he knows not whither " his fanſie will carry him, nor what he will " diſcover in the Revelations. Such a Man as he " who takes all his Thoughts for ſo many Inſpira- " tions, cannot anſwer for himſelf. The Figures " of the Revelation change often in his Head, and " they ſignifie ſometimes one thing, and ſome- " times another, and always by inſpiration " from God." There are here ſome Examples of the variations which had already appear'd in his Prophetick Doctrine. See the whole fifth Letter of this Janſeniſt; wherein he ſhews ſo many Chimeras of the Sieur Des-Mareſts, that to underſtand how a Man could fill his Head with ſo many Viſions, without loſing that part of common ſenſe which hinders People (d) from running about the Streets, one muſt conſider the Reflection which a great Wit has inforc'd with Examples. 'Tis one of the miſeries of Mankind, ſays he (e), that Reaſon and good Senſe are ſometimes overthrown and dethron'd, if I may ſo ſay, in one of their Provinces, and continue Maſters in the others, wherein a violent Imagination does not prevail. Conſult the Article Tulenus. Let us now ſee ſome other Lineaments of St. Sorlin's Fanaticiſm.

(F) He promiſed the French King—the glory of deſtroying the Mahometans.] " (f) That which ele- " vates the Prophets, is, Firſt, the greatneſs of the " Events which they foretell; and Secondly, the " clearneſs wherewith they expreſs the particu- " lar Circumſtances, which make them appear to " be true Prophecies, and not Diſcourſes in the " Air, among which we may meet by chance with " ſomething that is agreeable to the Event. This " is what the Sieur Des-Mareſts takes care to avoid " above all things. He uſes a Language that " is obſcure and enigmatical, and is a moſt " intelligible Prophet. He refuſes to tell us " a Story of times paſt, and ſets down the " Time, Place and Circumſtances in poſitive and " intelligible Terms. He does not refer us to a " time very remote, to verifie his Prophecies; " and yet they are the greateſt things that any " Man can ever Propheſie. Let us hear him " ſpeak, for he expreſſes himſelf very clearly. " This valiant Prince, foretold, according to him in " Jeremiah, by the words of the Son of the Juſt, which " unfortunately are not to be found in this Prophet, " is to deſtroy and drive out of his Dominions Impiety and " Hereſie, and to reform the Eccleſiaſticks, the Courts of " Juſtice and the Treaſury. And then by common Conſent, he, and the King of Spain, ſhall call together " all the Princes of Europe, with the Pope, to re-unite " all Chriſtians to the true and only Catholick Religion. " He ſhall ſend for the Pope to come to Avignon, that " there they may conſer together about the means neceſſary for ſo great a Good, becauſe otherwiſe, (ſee how " circumſpect he is) he would, ſays he, be oblig'd to " go to Rome with a great Army worthy of a French " King, to conſer there in Perſon with him, and the " Pope will rather chooſe to come to Avignon, than to be " burden'd at Rome with a great Army. Hitherto " you have ſeen great things, and very particu- " lar, the deſtruction of all Impieties, the He- " reticks and impious Perſons driven out of " France, the Eccleſiaſticks, Courts of Juſtice, " and the Exchequer reform'd, the Convocation " of the Princes and Pope at Avignon, the Re- " union of all Chriſtians to the Catholick Reli- " gion. But theſe which follow are greater ſtill. " After, ſays he, the Re-union of all Hereticks under " the Holy See, the King will be declar'd the head of " all Chriſtians, being the eldeſt Son of the Church, " and with the Forces of Chriſtendom he will go and " deſtroy by Sea and Land the Empire of the Turks " and the Law of Mahomet, and propagate the Faith " and Kingdom of JESUS CHRIST over the " face of the whole Earth; i. e. in Perſia, in the Em- " pire of the Great Mogul, in Tartary and China. " What can be deſir'd more, except that all theſe " great things ſhould be particularly mention'd in " the Prophecies? And of this the Sieur Des-Mareſts " does confidently aſſure us. All this, ſays he, " is ſpecially foretold by the Prophet, as will be made " appear to the King, to whom alone God hath given " the power to bear ſo great a Secret, and ſo great " Novelty, and the illuſtrious proſpect of a Life ſo " glorious, during which the Kingdom of God, which " is to laſt unto the end of all Ages, will be eſtabliſh'd " every where. And to make theſe Events the " more credible, he has ſet down the means of " bringing them." He ſets down alſo the Rea- ſons why other People cannot ſupport theſe great De- " ſigns. " The Queens themſelves, adds he, (a) " cannot endure at firſt, that the King ſhould " take the reſolution of quitting Paris, and going to Avignon, " when he ſhall be call'd by a Special Prophecie, " ſtay there a long time with the Pope, that " may call all Chriſtendom by common Conſent " ſent with the King of Spain, as is ſet forth " an expreſs Prophecy.

The Reflection of the Janſeniſt is very and (e) Peliſſon, Chimeres de Mr. Jurieu, Part 2. Sect. 2. p. 69. Dutch Edition.

(f) Viſionaires, Letter 5. p. 395, 396.

(a) Viſionaires, ibid p. 398.

† Note, that the greateſt part of the Viſionaries begin thus; but they find afterwards that temporal Arms ought alſo to concur: all the furies of War come into their Plan, under the notion of pious Actions. Proh ſuperi quantum mortalia pectora cœcæ Noctis habent! ipſo ſceleris molimine Tereus Creditur eſſe Pius laudemque à crimine ſumit Ovid, Metam. lib. 6. v. 472.

(a) Ibid. p. 282.

(b) Ibid. p. 283.

(c) Ibid. p. 286.

(d) The Viſionary whom Horace ſpeaks of was of this ſort; he did not run about the Streets, he was alſo reaſonable in many things. Cætera qui vitæ ſervaret munia recto More, bonus ſane vicinus, amabilis hoſpes, Comis in uxorem, poſſet qui ignoſcere ſervis, Et ſigno læſo non inſanire lagenæ: Poſſet qui rupem & mutum vitare patentem. Horat. Epiſt. 2. lib. 2.

ing againſt * the Satyrs of Mr. Boileau in his latter Years. I ſhall ſay ſomething of his eldeſt Brother (G) in a Remark.

* See the Remark (G) of the Article Macedonia.

MARESTS (ROLAND DES) See the laſt Remark of the Preceding Article.

MARESIUS (SAMUEL), in French Des-Mareſts, a Miniſter and Profeſſor of Divinity, was one of the moſt famous Divines of the 17th Century. He was born at Oiſemond in Picardy, the 9th of Auguſt 1599, and from his Infancy diſcover'd a ſtrong inclination to Study. When he was thirteen Years old, he was ſent to Paris, where he improv'd much in School-learning and Philoſophy. Three Years after he was ſent to Saumur, where he ſtudied Divinity under Gomarus, and Hebrew under Lewis Cappel. He return'd to his Father's Houſe in 1618, and then he went to Geneva to finiſh his Studies of Divinity. He return'd to France the next Year, and to fit himſelf for Preaching he went to Paris. The Probation-Sermons he made at the Houſe of Mr. Durant, one of the greateſt Preachers of that time, pleas'd him very much, and that Miniſter adviſ'd him to betake himſelf quickly to the Holy Miniſtry. His Youth and his low Stature (A) made him averſe to this Counſel; nevertheleſs he follow'd it, and preſented himſelf before the Synod of Charenton in the Month of March 1620; and altho' he has given us a Picture that reſembles many People, and ſhows the univerſal Spirit of the makers of Predictions. " (b) There is doubtleſs " ſomething inconvenient in theſe words; the " under Age of the King of Spain makes him for " a long time incapable to conſentung to this great " Deſign: So that it ſeems the Sieur Des-Mareſts " had in his view the deceas'd King of Spain, who " died notwithſtanding this expreſs Prophecy. " But perhaps if M. Des-Mareſts was preſs'd upon " this Point, he would extricate himſelf after " the ſame manner, as another Prophet very like " him did, from ſuch another Objection. He " was call'd the Prophet John, and waited upon " the Queen of Poland when ſhe was at Paris, and " had retir'd to the Monaſtery of Port Royal. He " endeavour'd to prove to her by the Revelation, " that the Empire of the Turks was to be deſtroy'd " under the Reign of Louis XIII. and the Ponti- " ficate of Urban VIII. She propos'd to him an " Objection which was very natural, viz. That " both of them were already Dead. But this " Prophet, without troubling himſelf about this " Difficulty, anſwer'd gravely, That he would " never diſpute, and thereupon he left the Prin- " ceſs. The Sieur Des-Mareſts will find ſome ſuch " Anſwer to the Difficulties of his Prophecy, " and will tell us, That he meant the Queen " Regent of Spain, who acts in the Name of " the King. For to put us off to the time of " the King of Spain's being of Age, would be at- " tended with too great inconveniencies, ſince " he could not begin too ſoon, when he is " to conquer the whole World, and to finiſh " his Conqueſt during his Life.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Petrus Hallæus ubi infra.

(d) Tantum exiſtimationis in operibus aliorum examinandis ſibi quæſiverat, ut eundem Borbonium, ſe ſibi magis ab uno Mareſio, quam à cæteris omnibus cenſoribus timere, ſæpe affirmantem audiverim. ib.

(G) I ſhall ſay ſomething of his eldeſt Brother in a Remark.] He was call'd Roland Des-Mareſts. He was born at Paris in 1594, and pleaded at the Bar for ſome time; but being diſguſted with the Noiſe and Clamours that are heard there, he conſecrated himſelf to a quiet Life. Being neither covetous of Riches, nor ambitious of Honours, he applied himſelf entirely to the ſtudy of Human Learning, and ſought for his Happineſs in the Boſom of the Muſes, and the ſhades of his Retirement. (c) A cupiditate gloriæ, reique ſtudioſius augendæ deſiderio prorſus alienus, ſuæ animi conſcientiæ teſtimonio ac domeſticis copiis contentus, ſe modeſte exhibere, quam operoſis fortunæ famæque bonis avide captandis immiture malut. Yet he cultivated a Friendſhip with learned Men, and conferr'd with them about his Studies. He became a very good Critick (d), inſomuch that Nicolas Bourbon, a Man of excellent Parts, fear'd no Man's Cenſure ſo much as that of our Roland's. He publiſh'd ſome Letters in Latin, which appear'd to be very well written, and therefore after his Death they were join'd with others which he wrote ſince, and were found among his Papers. Mr. de Launoy, and the two Valeſius's; who publiſh'd them at Paris [illegible] in 1655. They were re-printed in Germany 1687. He was never Married: He employ'd ſome of his leiſure Hours in the Education of a Niece, whom he found fit for ſtudy, and taught her the Latin and Greek Tongue (f) Puellam Mariam Prætæam, ſororis filiam, quæ [illegible] ſtare videbatur, ſolici vim ingenii & acumen ka[illegible] exprimebat, ſuccessu incredibili Latinis Græciſque literis non [illegible] ſuccessu imbuit. There was all along a ſtrict Friendſhip between him and John Des-Mareſt. his Brother. His Health was very good, but by ſtudying too much he ſo weaken'd his Conſtitution, that he fell into a languiſhing Diſtemper, which waſted him by degrees, till at laſt he gave up the Ghoſt about the end of December 1653 (g) The Gentlemen of Port-Royal took advantage of the approbation he gave to their Method of teaching the Latin Tongue; for they caus'd the Letter wherein this Approbation is contain'd, to be Printed at the beginning of the Book

(c) Intitled Rolandi Mareſii epiſtolarum philologicarum libri duo.

(f) Petr. Hallæus, ibid.

WHAT is found concerning the Letters of Rolandus Mareſius, in the Melanges d'Hiſtoire & de Literature, written by (h) Vigneul Marville, is very curious and Judicious.

(A) His Youth and his low Stature] There are but few Perſons who at twenty Years of Age have not attain'd to ſo great a height as Nature deſigns for them. Mr. Mareſius was none of thoſe; he was a true Zaccheus at the Age of twenty one, and was always call'd the little Propoſant. But he grew after that till he was twenty five Years old, and then he was of a pretty tall Stature. (i) Mareſius qui eum (Durantium) ſibi maxime imitandum deligerat, nonnullas in ipſius ædibus habuit Propoſitiones, quæ ipſi adeo placuêre, ut hic author ſuavit operam ſuam Eccleſiis offerendi; a quo alias conſilio ut abhorreret duo efficiebant, nempe & quod ætate valde juvenis eſſet; & quod ſtatura & vultu, majorem adhuc præ ſe ferret juventutem: Etſi enim nunc ſatis ſit procerus, tamen ita parvus manſit uſque ad annum 21. ſuæ ætatis, quo demum uſque ad 25 celerrime crevit, ut vulgo parvi Propoſitionis nomine deſignaretur. I will remark another thing very ſingular, which may ſerve to comfort the Fathers and Mothers who have infirm Children; This is not always a certain Argument, that they ſhall not arrive to old Age, and that they ſhall never be ſtrong Samuel Mareſius, who was ſo weak in his Infancy, that he was fed with Milk and Butter, and left to lie in his Bed for many Days together, liv'd till he was ſeventy four Years old, and was ſo vigorous, that the ſtrongeſt Men could hardly endure the Fatigues and Exerciſes which he endur'd, without being ſick at any time. When he begun to be ſick at Groningen, (k) he had for the ſpace of thirty Years diſcharg'd a very laborious Profeſſion, and had continually been publiſhing many Books The Latin I ſhall here ſubjoin will give a more particular account of the infirmities of his Infancy. (l) Infantiam habuit imbecillem & ita tenera conſtitutionis, ut ſere lacte & butyro ſuerit educandus; Puer carne elixâ veſci non poterat, nec jure, nec ullis oleribus: & ſemper occulta quadam antipathia poma, pyra, cerœſa, fraga & id genus alia pueronum, ita eſſe adverſatus, ut in hunc diem nihil ex illis unquam degluerit. Quamvis autem puericiam haberet languidam & valetudinariam, ex qua cum vix ſuperviturus [illegible] plurimi, ſæpius ex oculis, aliiſque fluxionibus laboraſſet, aliquando ex genuum dolore per 15. dies officus lecto; unde metuebant parentes, eum ſi vir fieret, futurum podagricum, licet hic uſque nihil tale Dei beneficio ſit expertus; non ſemel ex lapſu aliiſque caſibus puerilibus in preſens vitæ diſcrimen adductus; tamen animo erat erecto, tenaci memoriæ, & ad ſtudia tam proclivis, ut ante ſeptennium exactum, non modo legere poſſet & literas accurate pingere, ac jam rudimentis Linguæ Latinæ operam daret, ſed etiam bis univerſa Biblia a capite ad calcem evolviſſet, ut à puerilibus fere ab illis occupationibus abduceretur [illegible] ut ego

(g) Taken from his Eloge compoſed by Petrus Hallæus, and plac'd before the Letters of Rolandus Mareſius

(h) At p. 171 and 172 of the 1ſt edit at Rouen.

(i) Effigies & vitæ Profeſſorum Groning. p. 138.

(k) I have read this in his Funeral Oration in M.

(l) Effigies & vitæ Profeſſorum Gronin. p. 135.

* Upon the Frontiers of Champagne.

† Petito tamen quoad profeſſionem ſpatio aliquo ad ſtudia ſua ſcholaſtica recollegenda, quo paratior illam capeſſeret. Vitæ Profeſſorum Groning. p. 142.

although the Examination was then very ſevere, yet he gave full ſatisfaction. The Church given him was that of Laon. The Circumſtances of the Time and Place rendred the Exercife of his Miniſtry very difficult; yet he diſcharg'd his Duty very well. The Anſwer he wrote to a Lady who had chang'd her Religion, provok'd his Adverſaries ſo much, that 'tis thought Father d'Aubigni the Jeſuit ſuborn'd an Aſſaſſin, who (B) gave him a ſtab with a Knife December 13. 1623. But although the Wound was dangerous, yet it was cur'd in a ſhort time; and then it was thought fit to diſengage him from a Church, which he could no longer ſerve without great danger, and to lend him for a Year to the Faithful of Falaiſe *. This was order'd in a Synod of the Iſle of France in the Month of March, 1624. In a little while after he accepted the call of the Church of Sedan, and was inſtall'd in the Room of James Cappel in the Month of October of the ſame Year. He was to be Miniſter and Profeſſor of Divinity; but † he was diſpens'd with the Duties of this laſt Office, till he had recover'd the Ideas of his Scholaſtick Studies. He obtain'd alſo leave to go into Holland to take his Degree of Doctor of Divinity, which he did at Leyden the 8th of July 1625. Having made a ſmall trip into England, he return'd to Sedan, and there began to exerciſe his Profeſſion of Divinity on the 24th of November in the ſame Year: And continuing in that place he met with a great deal of Trouble; for he had ſome Storms to weather, which he endur'd with great Reſolution, by the favour of the Duke of Bouillon, and the Affection of the Church. But one of the ſtrongeſt Barriers which he thought fit to oppoſe againſt his Enemies, was (C) to Marry. He Married therefore a Widow, who had fled to Sedan for Religion with her firſt Huſband in 1622. The Marriage was celebrated the 2d of May 1628: In this Year alſo he Publiſh'd his firſt Book *, after which there follow'd an infinite number of others (D). He follow'd the Duke of Bouillon into Holland in 1631, to be his Chaplain

* Intitul'd, A preſervative againſt Apoſtacy. Note, That in 1623, there was printed without his knowledge, and without his Name, one of his Sermons about Predeſtination, upon 2 Tim. 2. 12. It was reprinted many times.

(a) Uxor nobilis cujuſdam cui Hurtebiſæo nomen erat, & qui ut ſibi conſervaret Heræ præfecturam, jam ante biennium defecerat, maritum ſuum tandem ſequuta fuerit, circa finem anni 1622. Ibid. p. 142.

(b) Ibid. p. 140, 141.

(c) Vulnus erat profundum & quoad ipſius capacitatem, illeſo non pati ad penetraret. Ibid. p. 140. Quamvis autem vulnus periculoſum valde fuerit, & ex quo candelam ei objectam poterat Mareſius extinguere, brevi tamen tempore ex eo convaluit. Ibid. p. 141.

ergo, quam alii ſolent à luſu ad illa magis ſeria revocari. You ſee in theſe laſt words the proof of what I ſaid concerning the inclination which appear'd early in him to his Studies. It was harder for him to leave them, that he might divert himſelf with the Plays of Infancy, than it is for others to leave their Play and apply themſelves to Study. This is a proof that the Application of the Mind is not always hurtful to weak Conſtitutions, and it is an Example that affords comfort to thoſe Parents, who are affraid, leſt their ſtudious and weak Sons ſhould die quickly.

(B) Aſſaſſin who gave him a ſtab with a Knife.] Mareſius having heard that the Wife of the Governor of la Fere (a) had chang'd her Religion, after the example of her Husband who turn'd Roman Catholick that he might keep his Government, wrote a Letter to her full of Exhortations to return to the Sheepfold. She wrote a large anſwer to him to juſtifie her Conduct, and ſent him a Printed Relation of her Converſion. This Relation being ſtuffed with Falſhoods, he thought it his Duty to refute it, and at the ſame time to anſwer the Reaſons this Lady had alledg'd. The Jeſuits had been imploy'd to convert her, and found the Anſwer of this Miniſter too bold, and threatn'd to puniſh him for it. This made People imagine, that the Wound he receiv'd ſome time after, was the effect of this Menace; and if Father d'Aubigni was chiefly ſuſpected, it was becauſe he had been the Converter of this Lady, and was then Preaching the Advent Sermons at Laon. (b) Nec dubitatum redemptum fuiſſe Sicarium, ob literas ſupra commemoratas, à Monachis, præſertim ab Albigio Jeſuita, illo eodem, qui duodecennio ante Ravaillaci parricidæ Henrici IV. Confeſſarius fuerat, & coram Ampliſſimo Senatu dixerat, ſe dono oblivionis pollere poſt auditas Confeſſiones, excuſaturus quod Regii parricidæ Confeſſionis non amplius meminiſſet. Is enim & Hurtebiziana delectioni fuerat obſtetricatus, & tum Laduni ſolemnes Adventus habebat conciones. Nec aliud totâ urbe, maxime inter Reformatos, perſuaſum fuiſſe, univerſa Laodunenſis Eccleſia comprobavit adhuc non ita pridem, ſolemni ſuo Teſtimonio, conſcripto à R. & Doct. Viro D.P. GEORGIO illius Paſtore anno 1647. 18. Auguſti, paullo priuſquam ad Deum evocaretur. The Aſſaſſin eſcap'd, and the Magiſtrates did not think fit to enquire further into this Affair. He waited for Mr. Mareſius in the Streets, who was returning home after he had ſupp'd with his Unckle, and ſtruck the Knife in his Breaſt: By good fortune (c) the blow did not hurt his Lungs.

(C) Which was to marry.] He thought that he was expos'd to a Storm, only becauſe he had no Wife, and had refus'd one. This thought oblig'd him to Marry, and preſently the Tempeſt was calm'd, and after it Halcyon-Days ſucceeded, and he liv'd in Peace with all his Collegues. Cum hos fluctus decumanos ſibi videretur pati, quod cælebs eſſet, & nonnullis, ut credebatur, maneret alta mente repoſtum judicium Paridis ſpretæque injuria formæ; vitâ cælibe relictâ tandem vitæ ſociam ſibi aſcivit Abigalem le Grand, natam Aquiſgrani honeſtiſſimo loco, patre Jaſpare le Grand Tornacenſi, Mercatore Magnario —— Ab eo tempore Mareſius Alcyonia Sedani obtinuit, & cum Reverendis ſuis Collegis omnibus, in ſuo munere, tranquille verſatus eſt (d). There is in this Narrative one thing eaſie to be underſtood, and one thing that's very obſcure. We can eaſily underſtand, that a Man who has refus'd a Woman, is expos'd to the ill Offices of the Relations of that Perſon whom he refus'd to Marry. 'Tis an Injury which the Fair one will not pardon, and if ſhe have any Intereſt, or be capable of managing Intrigues, ſhe may give a great deal of Trouble to a Miniſter and a Profeſſor. Theſe Gentlemen have their Friends Enemies, and from hence ariſe Factions and Diſcords, which the Family that's angry for the contempt of the Affinity they would have contracted, can make uſe of to ſatisfie their Reſentment. It was no wonder therefore that Samuel Mareſius endur'd at Sedan many troubleſome Perſecutions, after he had provok'd a Family by a Judgment ſomething like that of Paris, ſpretæque injuria formæ. But 'tis ſtrange, that by Marrying a Widow whom he had never refus'd, he ſhould calm that Storm, and be reconcil'd to all his Enemies. This is what I cannot comprehend. The Marriage with the Widow was a new occaſion of Anger to the Party deſpis'd. If Mareſius had liv'd always a Batchelor, it might have been believ'd that his refuſal proceeded from a general indifference for the Sex, which was a kind of Comfort to the Fair one refus'd: But after ſhe ſaw him Married, ſhe could only look upon it as a peculiar indifference, and a contempt of her ſelf: This is a vexing thing, which muſt needs increaſe one's Anger, and bad Offices. Here is therefore ſomething that is kept in the dark: The Narrative is not exact; there are many things wanting here, which I would not report, tho' I knew them. I know part of them.

(d) Vitæ Profeſſor. Groning. p. ...

(e) It is not in the laſt Edition, nor in the two firſt. It reaches to the Year 1654, in the Lives of the Profeſſors of Groningen.

(D) There followed an infinite number of others.] You will find a Chronological Catalogue of his Works at the end of his (e) Syſtem of Theology. The number of them is prodigious, and the variety of the Subjects ſhows that his Mind was not ſtinted. We may ſay that he was very laborious, and wrote very eaſily, and with much quickneſs of Thought and Learning. He had a mind to collect into one Body all his Works, as well thoſe that were Printed as thoſe that were not. He review'd them for this end, and made Additions to them. They would have made up four Volumes in Folio. His Death hinder'd the plain in the Army. The next Year he return'd into the ſame Country, together with the Prince's Mother, and engag'd in the Service of the States, who appointed him Miniſter to the Church of Maeſtricht. He oppos'd both by word of Mouth and by Writing the Efforts which the Eccleſiaſticks of Liege made to hinder the Eſtabliſhment of the Reform'd Churches in that Country; and he had a Thouſand Difficulties to maſter, after the Duke of Bouillon (E) had Married a Catholick Woman. He endeavour'd, but in vain, to retain him in the Profeſſion of the Reformed Church, and by this means he incurr'd the hatred of the Dutcheſs; which being added to his other Troubles, made him look upon the Call which the Church of Boſleduc gave him in 1636, as a piece of good Fortune, and therefore he did not refuſe it. The next Year he became Profeſſor in the illuſtrious School of the ſame City, and he diſcharg'd that Office with ſo much Application and Succeſs, that he was deſir'd to come to Franeker in 1640, and to Groningen in 1642. He refus'd the firſt Call and accepted the ſecond. He made his inaugural Oration at Groningen the 20th of January 1642 *. And from that time to his Death he did ſo great Services to this Univerſity, that it paſs'd for one of the moſt flouriſhing in the Low-Countries. The Magiſtrates of Bern being well inform'd of his great Parts, offer'd him with great Advantages a Profeſſor's Chair of Divinity at Lauſanne, for which he thank'd them. The Univerſity of Leyden deſir'd him for the like Profeſſion in the Month of March 1673 †. He accepted it, but had not time to go and take Poſſeſſion of it. He died at Groningen the 18th of May of the ſame Year, leaving two Sons, of whom I (F) ſhall ſay ſomething.

I ſhall

* Taken from his Life, printed in the Work entituled, Effigies & vitæ Profeſſorum Academiæ Groningæ. Printed at Groning. in 1654.

† And not in 1675, as Mr. Hofman, and after him Konig. affirm.

(f) Hinc primum mihi nata eſt hæc Synopſis Theologica, non tam aliis, quam mihi & meis diſcipulis primitus deſtinata: etſi favorabilius publice excepta fuerit quam putaſſem, adeo ut ſæpius recudi debuerit, & in omnibus ſcholis Reformatis vel publice explicari, vel privatim proponi ſibi à viris clariſſimis in cynoſuram ſuorum Collegiorum non fere conſtans fuerit. Mareſ. in præfat. editionis. 1673.

the execution of this Project. The firſt Volume ſhould have contain'd all that he had publiſh'd before he went to Groningen; among which there had been many Pieces in Latin which had been publiſh'd only in French. The ſecond Volume ſhould have contain'd his Opera Theologica didactica; the third his Opera Theologica polemica; the fourth ſhould have had this Title, Impietas triumphata, and was deſign'd to contain Hydra Socinianiſmi expugnata, & biga fanaticorum everſa, & fabula Praadamitarum refutata. Theſe are three Works which had been Printed at ſeveral times. The Syſtem of Theology of this Author was found ſo methodical, (f) that it was us'd in other Academies, and was many times re-printed. The laſt Edition was inlarged with a great number of Notes, wherein the Author explains his Sentiments, and refutes with his ordinary heat the Cenſures of his Enemies. It was Printed at Groningen in 1673. If I obſerve that Grotius was one of thoſe whom he attack'd, 'tis only that I may have an opportunity to undeceive thoſe, who having read the Acta eruditorum, might think that he durſt not do it without a diſguiſe. We find in the Journal of Leipſick (a), that Mr. Ittigius cenſur'd Matthew Pool, who had ſaid, that Claudius Salmaſius, under the Name of Simplicius Verinus, refuted Hugo Grotius his Explication of ſome Paſſages of the New Teſtament which relate to Antichriſt. Ittigius pretends, that it was our Mareſius, who under the Name of Johannes Simplicius, refuted this Explication of Grotius. I have three things to ſay againſt this. 1. 'Tis very certain, that Salmaſius did aſſume the Name of Simplicius Verinus in two Works he Publiſh'd againſt Grotius, in 1646; but theſe Works have no reference to the Treatiſe of Antichriſt: One of them concerns the diſcuſſion of the Apology of Andrew Rivet, with whom Grotius had been for very long time at War about the Reunion of Chriſtians. The other concerns Tranſubſtantiation. The Title of the firſt is this, Simplicii Verini ad Juſtum Pacium epiſtola, ſive judicium de libro poſthumo H. Grotii. 2. Mareſius did not diſguiſe his Name when he wrote againſt Grotius about Antichriſt, for he put all this in the Frontiſpiece of his Book. (b) Diſſertatio de Antichriſto, quid expenditur & refutatur nupera Commentatio ad illuſtriora eâ de re Novi Teſtamenti Loca, Il. V. Hugonis Grotii credita; ſimulque Eccleſiarum Reformatarum ſententia de Antichriſto Romano defenditur & confirmatur; authore Samuele Mareſio, S. S. Th. Doctore & Profeſſore, in Schola Illuſtri Sylvæducenſi, nec non ibidem Eccleſiæ Gallo-Belgicæ Paſtore. 3. The Socinian Jonas Schligtingius diſguiſed himſelf under the Name of Johannes Simplicicus to write againſt the Treatiſe of Grotius de Antichriſto. This appears by the Bibliotheque of the Antitrinitarians, at Page 128. This was doubtleſs the Original of the Error of Matthew Pool, who was not rightly cenſur'd by Mr Ittigius. You may obſerve by the by, that the Work of the Socinian Author was put in the vaſt Collection which is call'd, the great Criticks Note, that Grotius was not ſilent with reſpect to Mareſius; for he Publiſh'd an Appendix ad interpretationem locorum Novi Teſtamenti quæ de Antichriſto agunt aut agere putantur, where he treats him very ill. He ſcorns to name him, but denotes him only by the reproachful Name of Borboritæ in alluſion to the French Word Bourbe, (i. e. Dirt,) which agrees very well with the Moraſſes. This Appendix was vigorouſly refuted by a Work which was Printed in 2 Vol. in 8°. in 1642, with this Title, Concordia diſcors & Antichriſtus revelatus: id eſt Ill. Viri HUGONIS GROTII apologia pro Papa & Papiſmo quam prætextu Concordiæ inter Chriſtianos ſarciendæ, exhibet illius Appendix ad Interpretationem Locorum Novi Teſtamenti de Antichriſto, modeſte refutata duobus Libris, per Samuelem Mareſium S. Theol. Doctorem & Profeſſorem in Schola Buſcoducenſi & Eccl. Gallo-Belgicæ ibidem Miniſtrum. It was objected (c) to Grotius among other things in this Reply, That he had not been cautious enough of the Rights of Kings. This ſurely is ſingular, for Grotius is every Day refuted (d), becauſe he hath too much ſubjected the People to the Royal Power. Why ſhould it be ſaid after this, (e) that the Lutherans are the only Perſons who approve the Maxims of Grotius, ſince here is a Calviniſt Miniſter, who thinks that Grotius has not ſpoke favourably enough of Monarchy. The Biſhop of (†) Meaux has obſerv'd the ſame thing, and many inconſequences in the Hypotheſes of Grotius

(a) Lapſum deprehendit in Matthæi Pooli Hugonis Grotii commentationem ad loca quædam Novi Teſtamenti à Salmaſio Simplicii Verini nomine reſutatam ſcribit, cum tamen Mareſio ſub Johannis Simplicii nomine refutata fuerit. Act. Editor. Lipſ. 1690. pag 213. (b) This Work was printed in 12mo in 8°.

(E) The Duke of Bouillon had married a Catholick Woman.] This Marriage caſt Mareſius into a Thouſand Troubles (f). The Duke had promis'd to Abjure when he Married Mademoiſelle de Berghes (g), but he thought fit for many Reaſons to delay the performance of his Promiſe. That People might think his change proceeded from a Motive of Conſcience, he propos'd a Thouſand Doubts to his Miniſter, and put off the thing for four or five Years. Mareſius drew up a Relation of this Affair; I know not why he did not Print it: There would be ſeveral curious things in it. (h) Dum altius in conſilia & aſtutias Jeſuitarum penetrat, quam voluiſſent, ſibi accerſivit novæ Conjugis odium ſatis vehemens, & ſenſit DUCEM pedetentim ad publicam Pontificiorum communionem gradum ſibi ſtruere, in quo moliendo per mille fraudes Jeſuiticas, anni 1634, & 1635, tranſacti ſunt. Intereſſet Eccleſiæ, ſpecialem Hiſtoriam iſtius defectionis, a Mareſio diligenter collectam, publici juris fieri, ut conſtaret quibus artibus Egregius alias ille Princeps, Reformatam Communionem deſeruit, & ab illo tempore, non ſine occulto Dei judicio, in illas incidit calamitates continuas, quibuſcum quoad vixit, luctatus eſt. Mr de Puyſegur (i) informs us, that this Prince became a Catholick in January 1636, and that for ſome time it was known only to few.

(F) Leaving two Sons of whom I ſhall ſay ſomething.] The Eldeſt was born at Sidan, and was preſented to

(c) Id præſertim tolerari non poteſt in Grotio, quod ſatis aperte negat Reges eſſe inſtitutionis divinæ; quandoquidem judicibus illis eximiis, quorum inſtitutio a Deo, ut apparet Num. xi 16. opponit Reges, quos voluntas primum populi reperit. Sim. Mareſius in Antichriſto revelato tom. 1. p. 345.

(d) See the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, Novem. 1695. p. 127.

(e) An Important Advice to the Refugees, p 216, 217.

† See his fifth Advertiſement againſt Mr Jurieu.

(f) Ex conjugio Ducis Bullionæi cum Berghenſi Comitiſſa, eximiæ formæ & ſublimis ingenii fœmina, ſed ſupra modum Pontificia, nova fuerunt certamina illi ſuſtinenda. Vitæ Profeſſor. Groning. p. 148.

(g) Quam deſerturum harum nuptiarum gratia jam antea clam receperat. Ibid. (h) Vita Profeſſor. Groning. p 149. (i) Puyſegur's Memoirs; tom 1. p 135. Dutch edit.

I ſhall alſo ſay ſomething (G) of his Anceſtors. We muſt not forget that in * 1652, he was appointed ſole Miniſter to the Walloon Church of Groningen, where till then, he had Preach'd once every Sunday, to eaſe the Paſtor of that Church, tho' he was not obliged to it. The Academy of Montauban had a deſire to call him after the Death of Garriſoles; and likewiſe the Univerſity of Marpurg, when it began to be reſtor'd †. Among all the Diſputes he was engag'd in, there was none longer and hotter than that which he had (H) with Mr Voetius. He had one with Mr. Daillé, which was very hot, but it laſted not to Baptiſm by Elizabeth of Naſſau, Dutcheſs of Bouillon (k), who gave him the Name of Henry, which was that of the Prince whoſe Widow ſhe was. He ſtudied the Civil Law, and after he had taken his Licentiate's Degree, he begun to prepare himſelf for the ſtudies of the Bar in the Houſe of Charles Des-Mareſts his Unkle, a famous Advocate in the Parliament of Paris. He pleaded ſome Cauſes with good ſucceſs, and yet he abandon'd all on a ſudden this Profeſſion, to conſecrate himſelf to the ſtudy of Theology, and to the Miniſtry of the Word of God. What follows is a Diſcourſe his Father made to him in an Epiſtle Dedicatory: (l) Tu quidem, Henrice, tyrocinia poſueras ſacræ facundiæ in Auguſtiſſimo Pariſienſi foro, ubi poſt Licentiæ in utroque Jure gradum ſuſceptum, cæteras Advocati munere defungi, ſub Auſpiciis Conſultiſſimi & Ampliſſimi fratris mei. Et belle tibi prima illa publice dicendi initia proceſſiſſe, audivi ipſe ex ore Illuſtriſſimi Præſidis Belleurei, cum ad Celſiſſimos Ordines Generales Legatum extraordinarium Regis Chriſtianiſſimi ageret, ſiquidem ipſo Præſide & Judice in aliqua cauſa peroraveras & triumphaveras: adeoque poſtquam tuopte nutu, nec ſine Numine, me ab initio ob cauſas ſæculares (quid diſſimulem?) diſſuadente, & Domino Patruo tuo tandem conſentiente, animum appuliſti ad ſacra ſtudia, & corpus Juris cum corpore Scripturarum permutaſti, exemplo plerorumque virorum magnorum in veteri & renaſcente Eccleſia, omnia facultiora expertus es. He was admitted Miniſter in 1652, and his firſt Employment was to Preach in French in the Academical Church of Groningen. In the ſame Year he was call'd to Caſſel, to be Miniſter there to the French Church. He had a Call the next Year from the Walloon Church of Boſteduc, and accepted it, tho' he was very well ſatisfied with the Court of Heſſe, where he receiv'd great Teſtimonies of their Goodneſs and Eſteem (m). He ſerv'd the Church of Boſteduc, untill he accepted that of Delft in 1662. Since that time he has been fix'd at Delft (n), where he has acquir'd the Eſteem of every body. He refus'd in 1669, the Call he had from the Walloon Church of Leyden. Daniel DES-MARESTS his younger Brother, was born at Maeſtricht in 1635. After he was admitted to be a Miniſter, he was Collegue to his Father in the French Church of Groningen, untill the Year 1656. After which he was call'd to Middleburg, and ſerv'd the French Church there, untill he had a Call from that to the Hague in 1662. His Wit, Eloquence, and Judgment, and in a word, his great Merit, procur'd him ſo great an Eſteem at the Court of the Prince of Orange, that one might very verily ſay, that he was in favour. The Throne of England to which this Prince was advanc'd in 1689, added a new Luſtre to the favour this Miniſter continu'd ſtill to enjoy, and which he ſtill enjoys to this Day in the Glorious and agreeable Retirement of Houtſlaerdyke. His Health not permitting him to continue in the exerciſe of his Miniſtry, he retir'd to this fine Houſe, where he ſpends his time in ſuch Employments as are uſeful and agreeable to H. B. M. Theſe two Gentlemen have been concern'd in the Edition of the Bible which is call'd Mareſius's, wherein the Bookſeller Elzevier ſpar'd no coſt for the beauty of the Letter and Paper. Their Father on his part undertook with great Labour to adorn this Edition with Notes, wherein he was aſſiſted by his two Sons. I add, that they publiſh'd (o) "A curious Hiſtory of the "Life, Behaviour and true Sentiments of John "Labbadie, with a modeſt refutation of the Declaration, Publiſh'd in the form of a Manifeſto by "the ſaid Labbadie, to juſtifie his Deſigns and "ſchiſmatical Reſolutions, which were the juſt "cauſe of his Depoſition.

* Vitæ Profeſſor. Groning. p. 153.

† Ibid. p. 152.

(k) Sam. Mareſius epiſt. dedicatoria 3 editionis Syſtematis Theologici.

(l) Id. ib.

(m) Sylvæ ducenſes——te, Henrice, ad ſe evocarunt Caſſellis, ubi in aula Sereniſſimi Principis Lantgravii (à quo & ægre dimiſſus es, nec ſine ſpecialibus benevolentiæ & beneficentiæ ſuarum Serenitatum teſtimoniis) linguâ Gallicâ fungebaris miniſterio ſacro, ferme à tempore tuæ hîc ad illud ordinationis. Mareſius ubi ſupra.

(n) I writ this the 4th of February 1696.

(o) At the Hague, in 1675, in 12°.

(p) Vitæ Profeſſor. Groning. p. 134.

(G) Something of his Anceſtors.] They had conſiderable Offices in Picardy. (c) Mareſii inter ſuos Maſſ[illegible] Depoſitos Præfectos, Gamachienſeſque Caſtellanos, Pontivi nuncupare; nec ita pridem Davidis patruelis, Brillac in Armorica, Sardinio Gubernatore, Propræfectum egit. Vaucquetiorum vero familia, totâ Picardia nota eſt. Verum in eo potiſſimum ſolet Mareſius gloriari, quod ex parentibus ſit ortus piis & probis, ac Religioni puriori ſub Βρέφος addictiſſimis. The Titles and Offices of David DES-MARESTS the Father of Samuel, were as follows. (d) Pater ei fuit Ampliſſ. & Conſultiſſimus David Deſmareſts Dominus du Feret, Avimontii ejuſque Commendæ Prætor ſive Juridicus ordinarius, Baronatus item Chepienſis, Sancti Mauentii aliorumque pagorum Judex Civilis & Criminalis; in Regia Præfectura Vimacenſi Juriſconſultus & cauſarum Actor eximius, & Notarius Regius, Regiſque Chriſtianiſſimi, Rerum Maritimarum in Occiduo Mari Commiſſarius; eoque nomine gaudens eadem immunitate à Tributis ordinariis quâ Nobiles. He Married in 1588 to Magdalen Vaucquet, the Daughter of a conſiderable Man (e), and very zealous for the Reform'd Church, and died in 1649. His Widow was ſtill alive in 1654. Lambert DES-MARESTS the Father of David, was very zealous for the ſame Religion. Lambertus Davidis pater, Civis Blangiacenſis honoratus & opulentus, Senior fuit in Eccleſia Domeſtica Principis Porciani, ſub auſpiciis Reformationis (f).

(d) Ibid.

(e) Johannes Vaucquetius Magdalenæ pater, Prætor Sanmanvizii Fontiumque, & Juris patrii conſultiſſimus in Præfectura Vimacenſi, atque Regius Notarius, itidem columen fuit inter ſuos Eccleſiæ Reformatæ; quem Mareſius recordatur ſe admodum puerum vidiſſe, venerandâ canitie ſenem, natum 93. vel 94. annos, integris mentis & corporis viribus ſacra noſtra frequentantem. Ibid.

(f) Ibid.

(H) The Diſpute he had with Voetius] It begun in 1642. Voetius had publiſh'd a Diſputation, de idololatria indirecta, wherein he blam'd the Conduct of the Magiſtrates of Boſteduc, concerning a fraternity of the Virgin ſettled in their City for ſome Ages. They had (g) oblig'd the Roman Catholicks to admit into it the Proteſtants, after they had taken away the Ceremonies, which the Reform'd Church could not allow. Voetius maintain'd, that the Proteſtant Magiſtrates ought not to tolerate ſuch Fraternities, and that private Perſons who enter'd themſelves into them did very ill. Mareſius, who was at this time Profeſſor in the Schola Illuſtris of Boſteduc, was deſir'd to write an Apology for the Magiſtrates who tolerated the Fraternity of the Virgin, and enter'd themſelves into it. His Book was Printed in 1642 with this Title, Defenſio Pietatis & Sinceritatis Optimatum Sylvæducenſium, in negotio Sodalitatis quæ à B. Virgine nomen habet, teſtibus veritate & charitate. A little while after there appear'd a Book † of Voetius, entitled, Specimen aſſertionum partim ambiguarum aut lubricarum, partim periculoſarum, ex tractatu nuperrime ſcripto pro ſodalitatibus B. Mariæ inter Reformatos erigendis aut interpolandis, titulo, Defenſio pietatis & ſinceritatis, &c. Theſe were the firſt Acts of Hoſtility on both ſides, and after this there was no means of getting off; for the Combatants had not only joyn'd Battle, but there was alſo Blood ſpilt between them.

(g) See the Life of Deſcartes written by Mr. Baillet, tom. 2. p. 180, &c.

† Tus in 4°.

(h) Ubi ſanguine bellum
Imbuit, & primæ commiſit funera pugnæ,
Deſerit Heſperiam, & cæli convexa per auras,
Junonem victrix affatur voce ſuperba:
En perfecta tibi bello diſcordia triſti:
Dic, in amicitiam coëant, & fœdera jungant.
Quandoquidem Auſonio reſperſi ſanguine Teucros.

The Battle grew hot, and the Combatants did often charge one another. Mareſius who had only (i) Skirmiſhed in the Years 1643, and 1644, gave Battle in 1645. This is the Title of the Book he publiſh'd. Samuelis Mareſii Theologi Ultima patientia tandem expugnata à D. G. Voetio Ultrajectino Profeſſore & quibuſdam illius aſſeclis; ſive Modeſta & neceſſaria defenſio tripartita, tum ſui ipſius, tum eâ occaſione cauſæ Procerum Sylvæducenſium & Decretorum Ordinum circa illam, ipſi extortæ variâ ac longâ contumeliarum ſerie, ac præſertim nupero libello famoſo, Belgicè edito, & inſcripto, Kort ende oprecht verhael, &c. The Profeſſor of Utrecht did ſcarce appear in the Field of Battle (k); but he ſent thither either his Son or his Friends: The Profeſſor of Groningen nevertheleſs continue to ſtrike directly at the Father. You may underſtand how things ſtood, after the War had laſted as long as the Siege of Troy;

(i) See thoſe skirmiſhes in the Appendix of the Tribunal iniquum, p. 151, 152.

(k) He appear'd perſonally in it in 1648, at the beginning of his 1ſt Vol. of Theological Diſputations. See the long Preface to that Volume.

not long. I ſay ſomething of it elſewhere *. If I be not miſtaken the laſt Adverſary whom he wrote againſt, was Wittichius a great Carteſian and Profeſſor of Divinity. Our Mareſius cannot be ſufficiently commended for his Zeal againſt the Enthuſiaſts, and the foretellers of great Revolutions. He baffled Comenius †, Labadie and the Millenarian Serarius (l). The Extracts I ſhall give out of the Book wherein he refuted this Millenarian, will be acceptable to Men of good Senſe. He did a great

* In the Article Daillé Remark K and L.

† See the Remarks F. and G. of the Article Comenius.

Troy; I ſay, you may underſtand it by the Book which Mareſius publiſh'd in 1652, with this Title, Auctarium primum Bibliothecæ Theologicæ D. Gisberti Voetii nuper recuſæ cum virulentâ præfatione; continens, 1. Summariam deductionem litis decennalis quæ ipſi cum Samuele Mareſio, licet pacem & amneſtiam ſemper deprecante, hactenus interceſſit. 2. Vindicias Conditionum Amneſtiæ & Reconciliationis partibus oblatarum, à R. R. Deputatis Synodi Groning. Omlandicæ, ab hoc admiſſarum & ab illo rejectarum. 3. Conditiones iniquiſſimas & impracticabiles, ab ipſo D. Voetio pro imperio præſcriptas; Ad ejus pertinax odium & animum invincibiliter irreconciliabilem toti Belgio demonſtrandum. 'Tis a Book in 8°. It is believ'd, that this Quarrel which laſted eighteen Years, had never ended but with the Death of the Parties, if a common Intereſt had not induc'd them to come to an Agreement, that they might unite all their Forces againſt a Party of Divines (l), who were as odious to the Profeſſor of Groningen as to him of Utrecht. It was obſervable in this Diſpute, that on the one ſide the Curators of the Univerſity of Groningen, and on the other, the Magiſtrates of Utrecht offer'd their Mediation to the Parties, and that they having accepted it, at firſt it was order'd there ſhould be a Ceſſation of all acts of Hoſtility during the Treaty of Peace. After this, they conſulted about the Preliminaries, and the Mediators diſpatch'd ſeveral Couriers to agree about the Time and Place wherein the Conferences ſhould be held, and upon the choice of the Deputies Plenipotentiaries. All this was labour in vain, becauſe during theſe Preliminaries, the Party of Utrecht broke the Truce, having publiſh'd a very injurious Book againſt Mareſius. The forcible carrying away of the Prince of Furſtemberg did not more diſſolve the Conferences about the General Peace which was treated at Cologne in 1674, than this Book did the Project of Peace between theſe two Profeſſors. If you would ſee my Proofs in the Original, you need only read what follows. (m) Caduceum injicere conati ſunt Nobiliſſimi & Ampliſſimi hujus Academiæ p. t. Curatores .. Scripſerunt eum in finem Ultrajectum, & ſtipulati ſunt ut interim dum ipſi convenirent cum Delegatis quibuſdam ex N. N. & A. A. illo Magiſtratu ad totum negotium componendum, armiſtitium bonâ fide ſervaretur, nec quicquam directe vel indirecte, mediate vel immediate ultra emitteretur. Sed vix dum in has conditiones N. N. & A. A Magiſtratus Ultrajectinus, recommunicatâ cum D. Voetio & ſuis bonâ fide conſenſerat, & adhuc de loco, tempore & perſonis conventus præliminariter agebatur per Tabellarios hinc inde inter Proceres utroſque miſſos, cum ecce novus interim libellus convitioſus & famoſus, ſub nomine Cibabanæi, contra fidem publicam in me Ultrajecti prodiit.

(l) Thoſe who are call'd, Cocceians. Mareſius, de ſtatu afflicto ſtudii Theologici, p. 3. calls it factionem Carteſio-Loveſteniano-Remonſtranticam.

(m) Mareſius in Præfatione Theologi paradoxi retecti & refutati. This Book was printed at Groningen in 1649.

This Quarrel being one of the (a) moſt remarkable that has been ſeen between two Proteſtant Divines, and having produc'd more Books than can be imagin'd, I deſign'd to give the whole Hiſtory of it, with a Chronological Catalogue of all the Writings it produc'd; but I found that this undertaking requir'd fuller Inſtructions, and deeper Enquiries than I could afford, and that it would fill up too many Pages; and therefore I leave it to thoſe that write Eccleſiaſtical Annals, or the Hiſtoria Literaria of the XVIIth Century, and ſhall conclude this Remark with a thing which I know not well how to Circumſtantiate. I have heard in France from many People, that (b) Jeſuit publiſh'd a Book, which contain'd nothing but the Reproaches which theſe two famous Profeſſors divulged one againſt another, and that he concluded after this manner: "Altho' it were "ſuppos'd, that two thirds of theſe Accuſati-"ons were falſe on both ſides, yet the other "third being true, renders theſe two Writers "worthy of corporal Puniſhment, who yet pro-"teſted, during the progreſs of this Quarrel, that "they wiſh'd a good Reconciliation." I found no Body in Holland who knew of ſuch a Book; and ſome People, worthy of Credit in theſe Matters, told me, that there never was any ſuch Book. But at laſt Mr. Grævius inform'd me, that a Jeſuit of the Low-Countries had publiſh'd a Collection of this nature.

(a) Concerning its Origin ſee Letter 463 of Voſſius.

(b) Some ſaid he was call'd James Tirinus; but that is falſe. He died before the beginning of this Quarrel. Thoſe who ſaid ſo, ſeem'd to have this ground for it, That Mareſius having publiſh'd two Volumes againſt James Tirinus, had probably provoked him.

(l) The Millenarian Serarius. The Extracts I ſhall give.] Peter (c) Serarius Publiſh'd a Book in 1663, wherein he declar'd, that the Conjunction of the Planets in the ſign of Sagittarius foretold great Revolutions. The ſame News was publiſh'd in many other Latin and French Books. Mareſius refuted this Pretenſion in ſome Theſes which he maintain'd. Serarius wrote againſt theſe Theſes, which oblig'd Mareſius to publiſh (d) a Book which he entitul'd, Chiliaſmus enervatus, and which contains, beſides theſe Theſes, three Diſcourſes againſt one part of the Anſwer of Serarius. He Dedicated this Book to his Adverſary, and prudently repreſented to him, that the Doctrine of the Chiliaſts render'd the Reform'd Religion odious to the ſupreme Powers; for ſince they pretend, that the Proſperity of the Church depends upon the deſtruction of all temporal Powers, they excite the People to Inſurrections, that they may bring in the golden Age of Chriſtianity, or the Reign of a Thouſand Years. He repreſents to him the Seditions that had been rais'd in England by the Doctrine of the fifth Monarchy Men, and the mortification the Chiliaſts had lately had by ſeeing all the Hopes they had grounded upon the difference between France and the Pope vaniſh into nothing by the Peace of Piſa. The Affront done to the Duke of Crequi at Rome in 1662, provok'd very much his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty: He ſent ſome Troops into Italy, and then the credulous People, chiefly the Millenarians, doubted not but the Beaſt in the Revelation was ſuddenly to be deſtroy'd, and they could not refrain from publiſhing their Hopes: And ſo the Treaty of Piſa, which ended this Difference, without any effuſion of Blood, or any real damage to the Court of Rome, was like a clap of Thunder to them. Mareſius takes care to put his Adverſary in mind of this terrible Mortification. He obſerves, that it had been publiſh'd at London in 1656, that Rome would be deſtroy'd in 1666, and that the Day of Judgment ſhould happen in 1711. Many People flatter'd themſelves, that the War which was deſign'd in France againſt Alexander VII. to revenge the Affront done to the Duke of Crequi, the Ambaſſador of this Crown, would verifie the firſt Article of the Prediction: Judge then whether the Peace of Piſa was acceptable to them. What he ſays concerning the conjunction of the Planets in Sagittarius, is curious, which happen'd on the 11th of December 1662. A Dutch Author, following the obſervations of the Aſtrologer Theodorus Hoen, affirm'd, that the like Conjunction had not been ſeen ſince that which was in the ſign (e) of Aquarius, in the time of Noah's Deluge. Serarius building on this Dutch Book, and another that appear'd in Germany, wrote a Latin Diſcourſe to ſhow, that the Conjunction of the Planets in Sagittarius, the laſt ſign of the fiery Trigon, ignæ triplicitatis, being well conſider'd with all its Circumſtances, Antecedents and Conſequents, foretold the approaching coming of JESUS CHRIST for the Converſion of the Jew, the Ruin of the Pope, and the Eſtabliſhment of the Millenary Kingdom. Mareſius refutes him ſolidly, and obſerves, that according to Alſtedius, this Monarchy ſhall begin in 1694, and according to Theodorus Hoen, the Conjunction in Sagittarius was to produce the univerſal Conflagation. He laughs at this, and ſays, that Sagittarius cannot paſs for fiery Sign, but becauſe it obliges People to keep good Fires in their Houſes that they may not be a cold; and he obſerves, that at the time of this Conjunction, it was a terrible Froſt for many Weeks. And whereas Serarius ſaid, that the Conjunction which was in the ſame Sign, October 9 1663, did ſtill produce its bad Effects; Mareſius anſwers him pleaſantly, That 'tis very ſtrange it has

(c) I ſhall ſay ſomething of him at the end of this Remark.

(d) In the Year 1664.

(e) According to Serarius who built upon the ſame Hoen, and upon the Tables of Conjunctions. It happen'd in the ſign of Piſces.

a great (K) injury to the Janſeniſts, without thinking of it, by declaring that their Opinions were the ſame with thoſe of the Reform'd. His Reputation gave him great Authority even in foreign Countries; inſomuch that one who had written a Book very (L) ſevere againſt him, was order'd to ſuppreſs it.

* Proſper Mandoſius in Biblioth. Romana, centur. 5. n 66.

MARGARIN (CORNELIUS) Abbot of Mount Caſſin, and Archiviſt General of the Order, was one of the greateſt Compilers that liv'd in the XVIIth Century. He was born in 1605, and died February 11th 1681 *. The Works which he Publiſh'd gave but an imperfect Idea of his indefatigable Induſtry. To make a true Repreſentation of it, we muſt join to that which is Printed, (A) that which is not as yet Publiſh'd.

MARGARET; Queen of Navarre. See NAVARRE.

MARIANA

not yet diſcharg'd all its Poiſon, mirum eſt ejus virus nondum defecbuſſe. He adds, that Serarius was a good Friend to Paul Felgenhawer, who Printed a Book (f) in 1655, wherein he aſſumes to himſelf more than once a prophetick Spirit, and promiſes the Jews all ſorts of good News. But he does not agree with the Author of a Piece entituled, Judæorum excitabulum matutinum, ſive Judæus redux, wherein 'tis affirm'd, that the Converſion of the Jews ſhall begin in 1664, and that it ſhall quickly after be follow'd with their return into Paleſtine, where they ſhall live moſt deliciouſly above all other People in the World.

(f) At Amſterdam. It was entituled, Bonus nuncius Iſrael

REVOLUTIONS of Religion hoped for by the Mahometans.

When I conſider'd this multitude of Chriſtian Doctors, who have foretold for ſo many Ages a great Revolution of the Faith, I was curious to know whether there were not ſuch kind of People in other Religions; and among other things I find that there are ſome Mahometans who leave Legacies (g) to an unknown Prophet, who is to come and deliver the World from the tyranny of Antichriſt: And the Perſians believe, that Mahomet Mahadi, the Son of Haſſen, ſecond Son of Ali, is not dead, but lies hid in ſome place, from whence he ſhall come forth one Day and refute all Errors, and re-unite all Men in the ſame Belief. He will Preach on Horſe-back, and begin to do it in the City of Mazadel, where there is always a Horſe kept ready for him (h). This in ſome things reſembles the Opinion of many Chriſtians concerning the Prophet Elias. We need not wonder that the Mahometans believe ſuch Chimera's, ſince the Prince of Baſſora can perſuade them that he is the chief favourite of Mahomet, and that his Credit is ſo great with that Prophet, that by his Letters of Exchange, he can procure the Bearers ſuch or ſuch a Place in Paradiſe. There is a Bank in his Houſe for the diſpatch of theſe Letters; he ſigns a Policy, by which the Poſſeſſion of a certain place in Heaven is acquir'd, that is more or leſs advantageous, in proportion to the ſum that is pay'd him. (i) Il prencipe di Baſſora pretende eſſer de' Confidenti di Maometto, e haver maggior autorita degl' altri, in vertu della quale concede à gente ſimplice pezze di cielo, ſegnando polize di cambio da tanto e tal ſito nel Paradiſo, ſecondo il danaro che ne riceve.

(g) Ne teſtamenti ſi fanno legati à certo profeta incognito, che deve venir liberar il mondo dalla tirannide del Anticriſto. Giornale de' Letterati, March 31. 1673. p. 33 in the Extract of the Voyage to the Indies, by Father F. Vincenzo Maria of St. Catharine of Siena, Procurator General of the Carmelites.

(h) Ibid.

(i) Ibid.

WE will in a few words acquaint the Reader who this Petrus Serarius, or Serrurier was, againſt whom Mareſius wrote. I find at p. 297, of a Book (k) Printed in 1670, that he was lately dead and that above forty Years before he was depos'd from the Miniſtry for the fanatical Errors of Swenckfeldius, to which he was wholly addicted; that he Publiſh'd a ſmall Piece in favour of Labadie, in 1669, and entitul'd it Examen Synodorum, and addreſs'd it to the Walloon Synod; and that at the beginning of this Book he call'd himſelf A Miniſter of the Goſpel of the Univerſal Church, and that he was a Man who Communicated with no Church.

(k) Entituled, Modeſte relevation de la declaration en forme de Manifeſte Publiſh'd by John Labadie.

(K) A great injury to the Janſeniſts.] In 1651, he Publiſh'd a Book in 4°. with this Title, Synopſis veræ Catholicæque doctrinæ de Gratia & annexis ejus articulis; propoſita partim libello quo anno ſuperiore à Janſenſtis in Communione Romana Gallicæ proaret ſub hoc titulo, Catechiſmus Gratiæ, & poſtea recuſus fuit ſub alio, Elucidationes quarundam difficultatum de gratia; partim breviter, ad illarum Scholas Theologicis. The next Year there was publiſh'd at Paris a little Book written by the Jeſuits, and entitul'd, "The Janſenſts "own'd for Calviniſts by Samuel Mareſius, Doctor "and chief Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſi- "ty of Groningen, and Miniſter in ordinary of the "Academical Church, in his Latin Verſion of "the Catechiſm of Grace of the Janſenſts, Print- "ed at Groningen in 1651." The Author of this Book inſerted the Preface which Mareſius put before his Synopſis, and took advantage of all that he has obſerv'd, to ſhow, that in the Doctrines about Grace, and thoſe that are concomitant, the Opinions of the Janſeniſts are the ſame with thoſe of Calvin. From that time few Books appear'd againſt the Janſeniſts, wherein this Agreement, which the Profeſſor of Groningen had own'd between them and his Sect, was not objected to them. This gave a great deal of trouble, and did great prejudice to theſe Gentlemen, which made them write bitterly againſt him. Mr. Daillé put him in mind of it in the Defence of the Apology for the National Synods of Alençon and Charenton. (a) Hoc ne ſciat, narro illi iſtos, quos tantopere prædicat Janſenianos, quos cordatos dicit, quos graviſſimos argumentatores cenſet, hos inquam ipſos narro jam ante quadriennium tres libellos longe ſacerrimos ac nequiſſimos, convitiis & maledictis prodigioſis refertos, contra ipſum edidiſſe; in quibus, quod credo, auſus eſſet iis male palpari: ita ferociter recalcitrant, ut nihil mitius cogitaſſe videantur, quam ut laudatorem hunc ſuum miſere diſcerperent ac laniarent. Scin' tu quas ei pro ſuis laudibus grates reddant? Quibus elogiis virum talibus pro meritis exornent? (1) Virulenriſſimum ſcriptorem vocant; artis diabolicæ multoties convictum, hominem frontis ad omne mendacium proſtitutæ, Theologaſtrum, Sophiſtam, Sycophantam dira calumniandi libidine citra modum ac legem efferatum, protervum, ominoſum convitiatorem, audaciſſimum impoſtorem, fanaticum vatem. Piget plura de teterrimis iſtorum convitiatorum venenis dicere. Hos ſuos rabioſiſſimos ac maledicentiſſimos obtrectatores, pro laudibus, quibus immerentes afficerat, turpiſſima probra rependentes, & plenis in eum plauſtris effundentes habet tamen Epicrita pro cordatis, gravibuſque diſputatoribus (b). The ſame Apology informs us (c) 1. That David Blondel wrote to Mareſius, and blam'd him for meddling with the Diſputes between the Janſeniſts and Jeſuits. 2. That the Janſeniſt (d) who treated Mareſius ſo very ill, had forged a Lye, viz. That the Miniſters of Charenton had urg'd him of Groningen, to own the Diſciples of Janſenius for Orthodox, on purpoſe to render them odious to the Jeſuits, and to be reveng'd for the Reproaches the Janſeniſts had publiſh'd againſt Labadie. Mr. Daille anſwers, that thoſe who are accus'd of this Trick, are ſo innocent of it, that they would have counſell'd their Brother of Groningen with all their heart, never to engage in that Quarrel, but to leave the two Parties to diſpute it out. Quæ quam falſo, quamque mendaciter conficta ſint, nemo ſcire vel teſtari melius atque certius poteſt, quam Epicrita, qui ſui in eduudis illa Janſenianæ catechiſeos cenſura conſilii unus ſibi optime conſcius eſt. Nos quidem, quos fabulator totius rei auctores fuiſſe fingit, tantum ab eo quod iſte commiſcetur, abfuiſſe novit Deus, ut Epicritam, ſi nos ille conſuluiſſet etiam à ſcribendo deterreturi fuerimus, ſuaſuriique ut bene compoſitos cum ſuis Bacchios inter ſe dimicatiari, dignuſque utrimque Romano ſupercilio iris ac ictibus lacerari ſineret; neve quos certandi rixandique æſtus ac libido tam commode commiſcrat, eos intempeſtivo ſuo divelſos in ſe provocaret, atque converteret ac).

(d) 'Tis Mr. Hermant, who diſguiſed himſelf under the Name of Hieronymus ab Angelo forti.

(e) Dallæus ibid. p. 133. Altingius.

(f) See the fifth Tome of the Works of Pag. 393

(a) Dallæus, in Viniciis Apologiæ pro duabus Synodis, parte 1. c. 6. p. 130, 131.

(1) Hier. ab Angelo forti Epiſt. 1. a. D. 1654. edita p. 14, 15.

(b) Mr. Daillé at page 428 of the ſame Book ſpeaks thus: Ex his ſuis laboribus nihil ad eum pro exſpectatis triumphis rediiſſe vidimus, quam à Romanis quidem librorum cenſoribus eam notam, de qua non erat, quod hic tantopere gloriaretur, Janſenianis vero tria convitiorum & maledictorum plauſtra, quæ in eum ab Hieronymo illo perſonato, de quo alibi ſupra diximus, tota plaudente caterva fundi inviti ac dolentes ſpectavimus.

(c) Page 428.

MARIANA (JOHN) Born at Talavera, in the Dioceſs of Toledo, turn'd Jeſuit January 1. 1554. When he was a Student at Complutum, being ſeventeen Years old. He became one of the ableſt Men of his Age; a great Divine, a great Humaniſt, one of a profound Skill in Eccleſiaſtical and Prophane Hiſtory, a good Grecian, and learned in the Holy Tongue. He went to Rome in 1561, and taught there Theology. At the end of four Years he went into Sicily, and taught there for two Years. He came to Paris in 1569, and there explain'd Thomas Aquinas for the ſpace of five Years. His Health would not ſuffer him to continue, but oblig'd him to follow ſuch Studies as were leſs laborious. He return'd into Spain in 1574, and ſpent the reſt of his time at Toledo. He died there February 17th 1624, (A) being 87 Years of Age. The Inquiſition made uſe of him in many Affairs of importance; but for his part he ſtood in need of Patience (B), and of great Courage not to ſink under the ſevere trials of Adverſity *. What is obſerv'd of his (C) Chaſtity, is altogether ſingular.

* Taken from Nathanael Sotuel, Biblioth. Scriptor. Societat. p. 477.

(g) Proſper Mandoſius, Biblioth. Romana, centur. 5. n. 66. p. 332.

(h) Nicol. Anton. Biblioth. Hiſpan. tom. 1. p. 561.

(i) Bernardin. Giraldus Patavinus, in Apologia pro Senatu Veneto, dated at Padua Decem. 1. 1634.

(k) Alegambe and Sotuel mention it in the Article of Mariana. Don Nicolas Antonio does not mention it in the long Catalogue he has given of the Writings of Thomaius printed and to be printed. He calls him Tamajus.

(l) Mr. Teſſier Biblioth. Bibliothecar. p. 308. & 385. calls him Tamaus.

(m) Alegambe, p. 258. Sotuel, p. 477.

(n) See the new Letters, p. 685.

(2) Caſtitatis cultor ſtudioſiſſimus, cujus aliquis effectus eſſe potuerit quod mortuo manus fuerint ita tractabiles ac ſi viveret. (a) Lyſerus, Polygamia triumphatrix, p. 314. (b) Thus this Author calls the Roman Catholicks, as if they held the Holy Virgin for the head of their Reli- corroborazione della verita di un inſtrumento conſervante la famiglia de Capizucchi. Bullarium Caſinenſe in 2 Tomes. Inſcriptiones antiquæ Baſilicæ ſancti Pauli de Urbe. Dictionarium Longobardicum. His unprinted Works are a large undigeſted Collection of Papers, which make eight Volumes, that are kept in the Vatican. The Title of them is this, Theſaurus Hiſtoricus ſacræ & politicæ veritatis in S. R E. Agro ipſis Autographis monumentis à veruſtiſſimis antiquitatum latibulis per diurna ſæcula abſconditus, in tomos octo diſtributus, & ad ſanctiſſimos Innocentii XI. P. M. pedes ea quæ decet veneratione & alacritate humillime depoſitus, per D. Cornelium Margarinum Abbatem Caſinenſem, ad certam Chronologiæ normam juxta Indictionum rationem ipſa teſtante veritate expoſitus (g).

(A) February the 17*th* 1624, being 87 Years of Age.] Don Nicolas Antonio who had read all this in Alegambe, does nevertheleſs affirm (h), that Mariana died February 17, 1623. Aged 90 Years. As to this I truſt more to the Jeſuits, who have compil'd the Bibliotheque of their Order, than either to him, or Bernardin Giraldi (i), who affirms, that Mariana died in 1632, Aged 96 Years. Jeſuitarum quos ætas noſtra vidit annoſiſſimus, qui abhinc biennium pie obiit diem ſuum nonagintæ ſex annos natus.

(B) For his part he ſtood in need of Patience.] If I could have conſulted his Life written (k) by Thomas Thomains (l) de Vargas, Hiſtoriographer to the King of Spain, I could doubtleſs have given here the detail of the Perſecutions which Mariana endur'd; but I can now only ſay theſe words of two Jeſuits; (m) Ipſe viciſſim multa perpeſſus adverſa, admirabili animi æquitate, & omnium virtutum documento ſe malis ſuperiorem eſſe probavit. Exercitam ſenectutem Toleti produxit uſque ad diem XVII. Februarii anni Domini MDCXXIV. Add to this Paſſage what they will tell us hereafter, when I ſhall ſpeak of the Book about the alteration of Money.

(C) Of his Chaſtity, is altogether ſingular.] Thoſe who have read the new Letters of the Animadverter upon Maimbourg, have ſeen there this ſingularity expreſs'd after this manner, "(n) You "are not like to believe this, nor perhaps that "which F. Alegambe teſtifies of the Jeſuit Mariana, "who died in 1624, after he had liv'd almoſt 9 "Years in the moſt exact Chaſtity; from whence "perhaps it came to paſs, adds the Hiſtorian, "that his (2) Hands were as ſupple and pliable "after his Death, as if he had been alive. I con"feſs freely that I ſee no Connexion between "theſe two things." I believe with him, that it would be a difficult thing to give a natural Reaſon of ſuch an effect of Charity; and as to miraculous Reaſons, I know not upon what Ground or Analogy they can be founded, unleſs perhaps upon the Argument of Contraries, and that in Conſequence of a Monkiſh Tradition, which lays it down for a certain Truth, that all thoſe who have had to do with Nuns, are accuſed after their Death, and convicted of this Action by the —— which is obſerv'd in that part which had been made uſe of to commit the Sin. (a) Notabile eſt quod Mariani (b) dicunt, eum qui ſpurium ex moniali procrearit, ſingulariſſime à Deo poſt mortem puniri, uti celeberrimus Medicus Leonellus Faventinus c. 7. ſecundæ partis Practicæ Medicinalis hoc myſterium naturæ aperuit, Qui coit, inquiens, cum Monachâ vel moniali, quando talis moritur, remanet virga ejus tenſa, Unde dicitur in carmine apud vulgares:

Qui monacha potitur, virgâ tendente moritur.

Cujus & meminit Wolfgangus Hildebrandus Mag. Nat. l. 1. c. 31. p. 34. Erford. impreſſ. 16. 22. Et fortean etiam moniales ſtupratæ poſt mortem peculiari ſigno notantur, quod honoris & pudoris ergo reticetur. Certe ſi miracula hæc quotidie contingerent pauciores ſpurii invenirentur. The words of Leonel Faventinus, which I have now related, were cited by Henry Kornann in Chap. 67 of the 4th Part of the Miracles of the Dead.

I will obſerve upon this occaſion ſome very notable ſingularities which are to be found in Alegambe about the Chaſtity of certain Jeſuits. He ſays, that Father Gil, who died in 1622, Aged 73 Years, knew not any Woman by her Face, ſuch a ſtrict watch did he keep over his Senſes that they ſhould not fix upon theſe Objects. He was afraid of himſelf, and could not endure to touch himſelf; and he thank'd God that he had a bad ſight, becauſe this furniſh'd him with a good Remedy to preſerve Chaſtity. (c) Erat ſeveriſſimus ſuorum ſenſuum cuſtos: nullam tot annis fœminam de facie noverat: ſe quoque ipſum attingere quodammodo horrebat. Agebat Deo gratias pro hebetata ſibi acie oculorum; ex quo multa commoda caſtimoniæ perſentiſceret. Father Coſterus declar'd, (d) that his Chaſtity was never overcome by any irregular motion, nor by any obſcene Imagination. Father Coton who was Confeſſor to a very lewd Prince, and whoſe Court follow'd the Maxim, Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis, died a Maid, and preſerv'd his inward Chaſtity in ſuch a manner, that he had a horror for every thing that might be offenſive to this Virtue; and he had ſo nice a Smell in this reſpect, that if the Perſons who came near him had violated the Laws of Chaſtity, they would produce in him the ſmell of an intolerable ſtink. (e) Caſtitatem impenſe coluit, & Virgitatis decus ad extremum uſque obtinuit. Senſus fœnabat accuratâ cuſtodiâ, & horrore quodam impuritatis; quam etiam in iis qui ſe illa fœdaſſent, ex gravolentiâ neſcio qua diſcernebat. Father Spiga, who died in the Year 1594, Aged 74 Years, was accounted a Maid, he had never look'd upon any Woman. He knew not how to diſtinguiſh his own Nieces one from another, altho' he had been their Confeſſor, and he would never enter into their Houſe for any thing in the World, when he knew they were alone. (f) Caſtitatis tuendæ, nunquam fœminas intuitus eſt. Neptes ſuas, quas crebro confitentes audierat, inter ſe diſtinguere neſciebat; ad illas, ſi domi ſolæ eſſent, non poterat induci ut intraret, quantiscunque momenti negotio urgeretur. Opinio conſtans fuit, Virginitatis illi decus uſque ad extremum conſtitiſſe. I wonder that Alegambe ſhould not know what is related of Poſſevin the Jeſuit, "That being to read "Tibullus upon account of his fine Latin, he "pray'd to God with his Knees upon the Ground, "that the Verſes of this Poet about Love might "not inſpire him with Love. Mr Menage, (g) who relates this, ſays juſt before, "That he "heard Father Sirmond ſay, that having read the "Judgment which Photius gave of the Romance "of Achilles Statius, by which it appears, that "this Romance is ſtuffed with obſcene Stories, "he would never read it. To this purpoſe I will add, how Melchior Canus, who was no Friend to the Jeſuits, made himſelf merry one day at their Expence, when he was at the King of Spain's

SOME Particulars about the Chaſtity of ſome Jeſuits.

(c) Alegambe, p. 369. col. 1.

(d) Virginitatem nulla unquam cogitatione aut indecoro motu oppugnaram ſe ſervaſſe faſſus eſt ipſe aliquando. Idem pag. 118.

(e) Idem pag. 379. col. 2.

(f) Idem pag. 401 col. 1.

(g) Menage, Anti-Baillet, to 2 p. 333. quoting Nicius Erythræus in the Eloge of Poſſevin. This Eloge is not in the three Pinacothecæ of Erythræus gular. He publiſh'd ſeveral Books †, and among the reſt a Hiſtory (D) of Spain, which many look upon as a Maſter-piece. He Printed a Book of Lucas Tudenſis *, about the Life to come, and againſt the Albigenſes. His Treatiſe of the alteration of Money

† See the Titles of them in Moreri.

* Thus we muſt call him, and not Tridentis with Alegambe and Sotuel.

Court. He ſaid, that they carry'd about them an Herb which mortified Nature in ſuch a manner, that by the Efficacy of this Simple they could converſe with Women with Impunity. Philip II. taking this in a literal Senſe, had a mind to know what this Herb was, and having given order, that the Jeſuits ſhould be preſs'd to name it, he learn'd that it was call'd the Fear of God. (h) " Feſtivum " eſt quod refert Nicolaus Orlandinus libro quinto hi- " ſtoriæ Societatis JESU. Petrus Faber & Antonius " Araoxius aulam Philippi ſecundi Hiſpaniarum Regis " adierant, & tum primum in illud regnum Societatis " nomen invexerant. Quibuſdam autem inſtar e- " rant miraculi, quod cum omni genere ſexuque " promiſcue tam verſarentur innoxii. Nec dubi- " tavit in media curia Melchior Canus belle jocari, " Patres Societatis JESU herbam quandam ſecum " ſolitos circumferre, quæ vim haberet interi- " mendæ libidinis: eaque velut antidoto tuto " poſſe inter fœminarum verſari greges, & conſi- " tentibus puellis aurem ſalva integritate præbere, " &c. Ea vox, &c. ſenſim ſparſa per curiam ad " Principis pervenit aures. Qui rei auditæ curio- " ſus inveſtigator Johannem de Zuniga (is erat ei " velut morum magiſter ac cuſtos) ad Patres miſit " ſciſcitatum quod herbæ genus illud eſſet, &c. " Non negavit Araoſius hujus virtutis herbam ſe ha- " bere: & cum Johannem aliquandiu ſuſpenſum re- " ſponſi ambiguitate tenuiſſet, quo majorem audiendi " cupiditatem accenderet, Hæc, inquit, herba com- " muni ſermone Timor Dei nuncupata, &c. hoc " igitur principi, velim, narres, hoc fidelibus re- " feras." Jarrige does not faithfully repeat the Circumſtances of this Story. " Philip II. ſays he, " (i) their great Protector, and a Prince of a fine " Wit, ask'd them in jeſt one Day, how they " could be Chaſt, having private and familiar " Converſations with all the fine Ladies of this " magnificent Court. We have, ſaid they, by the " report of their Hiſtorian, an Herb which we " carry about us, by which we avoid the danger " of Uncleanneſs, and reſiſt all its Attacks. Be- " ing preſs'd by the Monarch to name it, they " anſwer'd, that it was the Fear of God; but I aſ- " ſure you, if they had it then, I am very certain " they have loſt the Seed of it now, and that it " does not grow in their Garden.

This Herb of Melchior Canus brings to my Mind the Indian Hermits who practiſe a harſh Penance all their Life time, and renounce even the ſight of the Female Sex. They hold in their Hands a Cane, by which they drive away all impure Thoughts and Temptations, as if they were chaſing away a Dog. I Ruxis è Hiobioli abitano ne' deſerti paſcendoſi di foglie, e frutti ſalvatici, occupati quaſi ſempre nelle meditatione de' lor dii, profeſſano perpetua verginita, fuggendo la viſta delle donne, portano una canna in mano con la quale dicono tener lontano i diletti, tentationi, e travaglii (k).

(D) A Hiſtory of Spain—as a Maſter-piece.] It is divided into thirty Books, after which follows an Appendix. The firſt twenty were Printed at Toledo, in Folio, in 1592. He added to them ten other Books ſome time after (l). He Tranſlated this Hiſtory himſelf out of Latin into Spaniſh, and publiſh'd (m) this Verſion at Toledo in 1601. It was Reprinted often. He ſometimes departs from the Original, as if he were writing, not a Tranſlation, but a new Book (n). The Appendix contains nothing but a little Summary of ſome Events from 1515, till the time it was written; for the Author having finiſh'd his great Work at the Death of Ferdinand of Arragon, in 1516. thought it would be more for his Intereſt to publiſh a meer Hiſtorical Index of matters ſince that time, than exact Narratives of them, which he could not do without departing from that Sincerity he had hitherto follow'd, or offending ſome Perſons ſtill alive. Wherefore he took the ſureſt and honeſteſt way, and that which wiſe Men (o) have always moſt approv'd. He would not write the things which happen'd in his own Time, or a little before. Let us ſee the Elogies which Father Rapin has beſtowed upon this Hiſtory. " (p) None of " the Modern Hiſtorians has written more ſenſi- " bly than Mariana in his Hiſtory of Spain. It " is a Maſter-piece of theſe laſt Ages for this ſingle " Property. There ſhines in all the Work a Wiſ- " dom which never ſuffers him to dwell too long " on noble Exploits, nor to neglect thoſe that are " not ſo. This equality ſo judicious, which is " always the ſame in the inequality of Matters " which this Author handles, is little known to " the Hiſtorians of theſe laſt Times." To underſtand the full force of this Elogy, we muſt add to it this Deſcription. " To write ſenſibly, according " to Father Rapin (q), is to go directly to one's " end in any Matter about which a Man writes, " without wandring or amuſing himſelf by the " way. It is to expreſs things with a kind of " Wiſdom and Reſervedneſs, without giving way " either to the heat of his Imagination, or the " briskneſs of his Wit. It is to know how to " ſuppreſs what is ſuperfluous in the Expreſſion, " as thoſe Adverbs and Epithets are which di- " miniſh things by heightning them; to leave " nothing in it that is idle, languiſhing and uſe- " leſs; to leave out generouſly what muſt not be " ſaid, how fine ſoever it be; to take always leſs " care of the Ornaments (r) than of ſolid Truth; " not to ſhow heat and warmth where a Man ought " to be cool and ſerious; to examine one's " Thoughts, and meaſure one's Words with that " exactneſs of Senſe, and accurate Judgment, " that nothing may paſs but what is exact and " judicious. It is to reſiſt the Temptation we " naturally have to diſcover our Wit——It is to " leave room for thoſe who read Hiſtory, to ima- " gine what ought not always to be ſaid. Laſtly, " It is to know well how to avoid Contradictions, " and to lay down Probabilities in all that is ſaid. " And this ſenſible Spirit, this Character of Wiſ- " dom which Hiſtory requires, is a kind of " watchfulneſs over one's ſelf, which allows of " no Exaggeration, and uſes continual precau- " tion againſt thoſe bold Imaginations to which a " Man is ſubject, when he has a Wit too bright or " too fruitful; to the end that he may expreſs " great matters in a few words, as Salluſt does." Father Rapin does not ſtop here, but he adds further (s), " That Mariana is one of the moſt ac- " compliſh'd Writers among the Modern Hiſto- " rians, becauſe he is one of the plaineſt. That " nothing (b) gives the Hiſtory of Mariana ſuch an " air of Grandeur, as the Art of this Author in " fetching into it by way of Digreſſion, all the " conſiderable things that have paſs'd in the World, " all that's admirable in the fabulous Times; all " that was remarkable in Greece, in Sicily, in the " Roman Empire; a very particular Account of " the Republick of Carthage, which is no where " better done than there; the Sieges of Sagun- " tus and Numantia; the Paſſage of Annibal into " Italy; the ſucceſſion of the Emperors; the birth " of Chriſtianity; the Preaching of the Goſpel; " the Conqueſt of the Arabians, and many other " great Tranſactions. He is a Genius who treats " of nothing but great Matters, which always " have ſome reſpect to the Hiſtory of Spain. Up- " on which account never did any Hiſtorian do " ſo much Honour to his Country by any Book; " for he has imparted to his Nation the greateſt " Actions that have been done in the World. " Among the Moderns, continues Father Rapin(c), " I find Mariana, Davila, and Fra Paolo admi- " rable for Hiſtory. Mariana had the Talent " of Thinking, and expreſſing nobly what he " thought and ſaid, and of imprinting a Character " of Greatneſs upon any thing he conſider'd— " (d) None of the Moderns exceeds Mariana, either " for the greatneſs of his Deſign, or the nobleneſs " of his Style. He is more exact than others, " judges ſoundly of every thing." Let us ſee ſo many Elogies not what is ſaid by an- Jeſuit (e) in favour of Mariana, but what a tant ſays of him. (f) Inter Latinos omnibus palmam præripit Johannes Mariana Hiſpanus, rerum Hiſpanicarum cognitione, ni fallor, ſecundus. Valuit vero Mariana inſigni eloquentia, prudentia, & magnanimi- tate dicendi: hinc libertatis ſtudioſiſſimus in ſuos ſæpe eſt mordax.

How excellent ſoever this Book of Mar et

(g) Ibid. p. 230.

(q) Delectus verborum habendus & ponderandus ſingulorum examinanda. Fab. lib. 10. cap. 3.

(r) Rapin, ib. numb. 5. p. 236.

(s) Ibid. num. 22. p. 280.

(b) Ibid. num. 26. p. 293.

(c) Ibid. ſub fin. p. 305.

(c) Quid? Mariani gravem & decoram conſtructionem, ſonantia verba, ſplendorem, narrandique ſublimitatem, copiosum ingenium in non impari materia, qua ætas non reverebitur? Clarus Bonarellius in Amphitheatro honoris lib. 2. cap. 13. p. m. 192.

(f) [illegible] Confingius de regno Hiſpan. apud Pope Blount, Cenſura Autorum p. 614.

(d) Ibid. num. 27. p. 305.

(e) Quid? Mariani gravem & decoram conſtructionem, ſonantia verba, ſplendorem, narrandique ſublimitatem, copiosum ingenium in non impari materia, qua ætas non reverebitur? Clarus Bonarellius in Amphitheatro honoris lib. 2. cap. 13. p. m. 192.

(f) [illegible] Confingius de regno Hiſpan. apud Pope Blount, Cenſura Autorum p. 614.

(g) Ibid. p. 230.

(h) Nicol. Abramus, Commen. in Orat. Ciceronis tom. 2. p. 599, col. 1.

(i) Jarrige, Jeſuites ſur Fécha-faud, c. 6. p. m. 65.

(k) Giornale de Letterati, March 31, 1673, p. 35. in the Extract of the Voyage to the Eaſt Indies, by F. Vincenzo Maria di S. Caterina da Siena.

(l) The thirty Books with the Appendix are in the Edition of Mentz, 1605, in 4°

(m) At Madrid in 1616, and 1650, in Fol. & alibi Nicol. Anton. ubi infra.

(n) See Nicolas Antonio Biblioth. Scriptor. Hiſpan. to. 1. p. 560.

(o) See the Remark D. of the Article Bonfadius, and the Remark E. of the Article Haillan.

(p) Rapin's Reflexions upon Hiſtory, n. 3 p. m. 232.

Money (E) brought him into trouble at the Court of Spain, and expos'd him to a Puniſhment (EΔ) which is ill related by Mr. Varillas: But there had been more reaſon to moleſt him upon the account of another Book, which Spain and Italy ſuffer'd to go abroad, and which was burnt at Paris by the Sentence of the Parliament, becauſe of the pernicious Doctrine it contain'd. There is nothing more ſeditious, (F) nor more capable of expoſing Kingdoms to frequent Revolutions, and even the Lives of Princes to the (g) ſince the Royal Printing-Houſe an Edition more correct. Nicol. Anton. ubi infra tom. 2. p. 170.

yet it has ſome Faults which have been critically obſerv'd in ſome meaſure by a Secretary of the Conſtable of Caſtile, who calls himſelf Pedro Mantuano. He publiſh'd his Critical Remarks at Milan (g) in 4°, in 1611, and entitul'd them Advertencias à la Hiſtoria de Juan de Mariana, when he was yet but twenty ſix Years of Age. Thomas Tamaius de Vargas, who anſwer'd in behalf of Mariana, relates a thing that looks like a Prodigy; which is, that Mariana would never caſt his Eyes upon the Work of his Cenſurer, nor of his Apologiſt; tho' the latter offer'd him his MS. before he gave it to the Printer, and deſir'd him to Correct it. (h) Noluiſſe Marianam legere, nec Mantuani cenſuram, nec Tamaji amiciſſimi capitis apologiam, etiam ante editionem ſibi ab authore ad pervidendum & emendandum oblatam, quod credet vix poſteritas. There was publiſh'd in the Hiſtory of the Works of the Learned, at p. 139, of the Month of November 1693, the deſign of a French Tranſlation of Mariana, with good Notes. The Publick ought to wiſh they may quickly enjoy this Work. There was Printed in Holland in 1694, a Chronological Abridgment of the Hiſtory of Spain, taken chiefly from Mariana, which is attributed to (i) a Gentlewoman of Rouen, now a Refugee in England for her Religion.

(h) It was Printed at Cologne in 1609. with ſix other Treatiſes of Mariana.

(i) call'd Mademoiſelle de la Roche.

(E) His Treatiſe (k) of the alteration of Money brought him into Trouble.] Alegambe does only tell us, that this Work diſcover'd the Frauds of the Times, and that at the Requeſt of the Ambaſſador of Spain, it was ſtopp'd by Paul V. but that the ſequel ſhow'd, that Mariana being Perſecuted for this Book, was a lover of Juſtice and Truth. (l) In tractatu de Monetæ mutatione cum acrius corruptelam ſui temporis perſtrinxiſſet, gravem in ſe concivit procellam; & tractatus ipſe poſtulante Catholici Regis Oratore, à Summo Pontifice Paulo V. tantiſper ſuſpenſus fuit, donec invidiæ & cum ea tempeſtas conquievit; docueruntque poſteriora tempora veri rectique amantem fuiſſe Marianam. Nicolas Antonio in ſome reſpects ſpeaks more generally, though he declares, that the chief Miniſters of State accus'd Mariana of having cenſur'd the Government. Nec tamen, ſays he (m), vir tot meritis ad famæ immortalitatem nitens effugere valuit læuæ famæ diſcrimina, interpretantibus quædam ejus ſcripta principibus in Curia viris tanquam iniqua exercendæ injuriosa ſibi ipſis, ac publicæ adminiſtrationi. Cujus rei nomine ſolemniter accuſatus non niſi poſt agitatam diu cauſam ægreque ſtatui priſtino fuit reſtitutus. But here is an Author who ſpeaks out more clearly; and he aſſures us, that Mariana diſcover'd ſo well the waſting of the Treaſury, by ſhowing the Robberies that were committed in the Coining of Money, that the Duke of Lerma who found himſelf plainly pointed at, could not reſtrain his Anger. It was not difficult for him to vex the Author, becauſe King Philip III. was clearly cenſur'd in this Work, as a lazy Prince who left the great Affairs of his Kingdom to the Diſcretion of his Miniſters. Monarchs who are moſt govern'd by a Favourite, are eaſily provok'd againſt thoſe who expoſe them to publick Contempt by a juſt and free cenſure of this Slavery. Mariana was caſt into Priſon, and did not come out till the Year's end; but the Event ſhow'd that he was not deceiv'd in foretelling, that the Abuſes which he reprov'd, would throw Spain into great Confuſion. The Writer who tells this is call'd Bernardin Giraldus, whom I have cited once before. Quarum (diſſertationem) una fuit, ſays he (n), de Monetæ mutatione in Hiſpania, quâ quidem fraudes, & inepti Miniſtrorum Regiorum Monetas publicas adulterandi detegebantur, oſcitantia, & dormitatio Philippi III. Regis Catholici perſtringebatur, ingentia denique damna in univerſam Hiſpaniam ex improbiſſimo Regiorum peculatu certo exoritura prænuntiabantur: quem librum qui legat, & hodiernum Hiſpaniæ ſtatum non ignoret, abeſſe haudquaquam poſſe judicet Marianam divinum hominem fuiſſe agnoſcat, ea, quæ hodie Hiſpania patitur mala, tanto antea vates occinerit) vel certe etiam genus divinationis eſſe intelligat. Verum ea res Lermæum Ducem, Regiæ Hiſpanicæ Sejanum, pupugit: quippe qui fundi Hiſpanici calamitas eſſet, ſeque à Mariana deſignari ſatis intelligeret. Hominem ergo in vincula poſcit, in iſque annum vertentem amplius continet.

(k) Mariana's Anſwer to the Criticiſms of Dr. Burnet, p. 84. Particulit.

(EΔ) And expos'd him to a Puniſhment which is ill related by Mr. Varillas.] This Hiſtorian (o) pretends that Ribadeneira "durſt not write in Spain under the "Reign of Philip II. what Charles V. had contribu- "ted to oblige the Court of Rome to proceed to "the laſt Extremities againſt Henry VIII. One "muſt have as little knowledge of the Court "of Spain as Dr. Burnet has, continues he, to be "ignorant that the ſame Philip II. baniſh'd Ma- "riana into Sicily for fifteen Years, upon a leſs im- "portant occaſion than that of writing againſt "Charles V. ſince it was only for writing a Trea- "tiſe about Money, which did not ſo directly "concern the Majeſty of the Catholick Kings, as "the Conduct of Charles V. with reſpect to Henry "VIII. There are three Falſhoods in theſe words. 1. Mariana was never baniſh'd into Sicily; much leſs did his Baniſhment, as is pretended, laſt fifteen Years. 2. Philip II. was dead when this Jeſuit wrote about Money. 3. This Treatiſe offended much more (p) the King of Spain who then Reign'd, than the Book of Ribadeneira would have offended Philip II. if he had deſcrib'd in it the Conduct of Charles V. towards Henry VIII. I take no notice of the Abſurdity that is in his Remark upon Ribadeneira, becauſe it has been ſolidly refuted (q) by the learned Man who reply'd to him.

(o) Varillas's Anſwer to the Criticiſms of Dr. Burnet, p. 84. Particulit.

(p) See in the preceding Remark the word of Bernard. Giraldus.

(F) There is nothing more ſeditious than this Book of Mariana.] The Title of it is, de Rege & Regis inſtitutione, and it was Printed at Toledo in 1598, with the King's Licenſe, and the uſual Approbations. The Author deſigning to enquire in the ſixth Chapter of the firſt Book, whether it be lawful to kill a Tyrant, enters on this Subject with a Narrative of the tragical End of Henry III. He admires the Courage of James Clement, and ſays there were different Opinions about the Action of this young Monk: Some commended it, and thought it worthy of Immortality; others blam'd it, becauſe they were of Opinion, that it is never lawful for a meer private Man to kill a Prince declar'd King by the Nation, and anointed with the ſacred Oil according to Cuſtom, although this Prince becomes a wicked Man and a Tyrant. (a) De facto monachi non una opinio fuit, multis laudantibus atque immortalitate dignum judicantibus: vituperent alii prudentiæ & eruditionis laude præſtantes, fas eſſe negantes cuiquam privata auctoritate Regem conſenſu populi renunciatum, ſacroque oleo de more delibutum ſanctumque adeo perimere, ſit ille quamvis perditis moribus, atque in tyrannidem degenerarit. We may clearly perceive, that Mariana is one of thoſe who approv'd the Action of James Clement; for he rejects the Principle, by virtue of which Wiſe and Learned Men condemn'd it. Beſides he affects to extoll the Courage and undaunted ſteddineſs of this Aſſaſſin, without dropping one word that tends to render him odious to the Reader. This Obſervation does admirably diſcover the whole venom of the Doctrine of this Jeſuit; for 'tis certain, that he only made uſe of the Example of Henry III. that he might deſcend from that Poſition to the Hypotheſis, and to ſhow the People a notable caſe of Tyranny, that ſo at all times when they ſhould find themſelves in the like Condition, they might think that their Circumſtances did warrant them to make uſe of the Knife againſt their Monarchs. But if it be once lawful to do this, when People live under ſuch a Prince as Henry III. I know not what Monarchs ought not to fear that they ſhall be aſſaſſinated or dethron'd: For often times the Good and Evil of two Conditions do balance one another when they are compar'd together. If therefore the faults of Government are not the ſame as they were under Henry III. yet it will be ſaid, that all things duly conſider'd they are equal, and from thence People will conclude, that they are in the

(a) Mariana de rege & regis inſtitutione l. 1. c. 6. p. m. 54.

(l) Alegambe, p. 258. col. 2.

(m) Nicol. Anton. ubi ſupra, p. 560.

(n) Bernard. Giraldus Patavinus, pro Senatu Veneto apologia, ſive de juſtitia decreti, quo Senatus Venetus adoleſcentes ditioni ſuæ ſubditos ad Jeſuitarum ſcholas accedere interdixit: deque conditionibus quibus Jeſuitæ redirum ad Venetos videntur impetrare poſſe. This Piece is in a Collection entituled Arcana Societatis Jeſu, Printed at Geneva in 1635, in the Knife of the Aſſaſſins, than this Book of John Mariana. It expos'd the Jeſuits, and chiefly in France, to a Thouſand bloody (G) Reproaches, and to very mortifying ſame Condition which the Jeſuit has deſcrib'd. However let us go on with the Explication of his Syſtem.

(b) He refutes them at the end of this 6th Chapter.

Mariana relates the Reaſons of thoſe who blam'd James Clement, i. e. according to him, the Reaſons of thoſe, who teach, that every one muſt patiently ſubmit to the Tyrannical Yoke of his lawful Sovereign, and before he anſwers them (b) he alledges the Arguments of the contrary Party built upon this fundamental Principle, (c) that the Authority of the People is ſuperior to that of Kings. This is his belov'd Poſition, for proof of which he ſpends (d) two whole Chapters. Having alledg'd the Reaſons of each Party, he declares, 1. That according to the Opinions of Divines and Philoſophers, a Prince who by force of Arms, and without the conſent of the People, is poſſeſs'd of the Sovereign Power, is one whom every private Perſon has a right to kill; (e) Perimi à quocunque, vita & principatu ſpoliari poſſe. 2. That if a Prince who is lawfully created, or who is a lawful Succeſſor to his Anceſtors, overturns the Religion and publick Laws, without hearkning to the Remonſtrances of the Nation, he muſt be turn'd out in the ſafeſt and ſureſt way. 3. That the ſhorteſt and ſureſt way of doing it, is to aſſemble the States, and in this Aſſembly to depoſe him, and there to order that an Army be rais'd againſt him, if it be neceſſary for removing his Tyranny. 4. That ſuch a Prince may be lawfully put to Death (f), and that each private Perſon who ſhall have the Courage to attempt to kill him, has a right to do it. 5. That if any Aſſembly of the States cannot be held, and it appears nevertheleſs to be the Will of the People to deſtroy the Tyrant, there is no private Perſon but may lawfully kill this Prince to ſatisfie the Deſire of the People (g), qui votis publicis favens eum perimere tentavit, haud quaquam inique eum feciſſe exiſtimabo. 6. That the Judgment (h) of a private Perſon, or of many, is not ſufficient; but they muſt be govern'd by the Voice of the People, and alſo conſult grave and learned Men. 7. That indeed it ſhows greater Courage to riſe up openly againſt the Tyrant; but there is no leſs Prudence to attack him ſecretly, and deſtroy him in the Traps that are laid for him. (i) Eſt quidem majoris virtutis & animi ſimultatem aperte exercere, palam in hoſtem reipublicæ irruere: ſed non minoris prudentiæ, fraudi & inſidiis locum captare, quod ſine motu contingat minori certe periculo publico atque privato. He deſires therefore either that he ſhould be attack'd in his own Palace with open force, or that a Conſpiracy ſhould be form'd againſt him; he will have it that open War, crafty Devices, Frauds and Treacheries are equally lawful: And if the Conſpirators, adds he, are not kill'd in the Attempt, they ought to be admir'd as Heroes all their Lifetime: If they periſh in it, then they are Victims acceptable to God and Men, and their Efforts deſerve immortal Praiſes. (k) Aut in apertam vim prorumpitur ſeditione facta armiſque publice ſumptis— aut majori cautione, fraude & ex inſidiis pereunt, uno aut paucis in ejus caput occulte conjuratis, ſuoque periculo reipublicæ incolumitatem redimere ſatagentibus. Quod ſi evaſerint, inſtar magnorum Heroum in omni vita ſuſpiciuntur: ſi ſecus accidat, grata ſuperis, grata hominibus hoſtia cadunt, nobili conatu ad omnem poſteritatis memoriam illuſtrati. Itaque aperta vi & armis poſſe occidi tyrannum, ſive impetu in regiam facto, ſive commiſſa pugna in conſeſſo eſt. Sed & dolo atque inſidiis exceptum. 8. That altho' there ſeems to be no great difference between an Aſſaſſin who kills a Man with the ſtab of a Knife, and one that Poiſons him; yet becauſe Chriſtianity has abrogated the Laws of the Athenians, which appointed Criminals to drink a poiſon'd Cup; Mariana does not approve that a Tyrant ſhould be kill'd by Poiſon mix'd with his Meat; but if any would make uſe of Poiſon, he would have it applied to his Cloaths, or to his Saddle. (l) Ergo me auctore neque noxium medicamentum hoſti detur, neque lethale venenum in cibo & potu temperetur in ejus perniciem. Hoc tamen temperamento uti, in hac quidem diſputatione licebit, ſi non ipſe qui perimitur venenum hauſire cogitur, quo intimis medullis concepto pereat: ſed exterius ab alio adhibeatur nihil adjuvante eo qui perimendus eſt. Nimirum cum tanta vis eſt veneni, ut ſola eo aut veſte delibuta vim interficiendi habeat.

(c) A republica, unde ortum habet regia poteſtas, rebus exigentibus Regem in jus vocari poſſe, & ſi ſanitatem reſpuat principatu ſpoliari, neque ita in Principem jura poteſtatis tranſtulit, ut non ſibi majorem reſervarit poteſtatem. Mariana ib. p. 57.

(d) The 8th and 9th of the firſt Book.

(e) Ibid. p. 58.

(f) Principem publicum hoſtem declaratum ferro perimere, eademque facultas eſto cuicunque privato, qui ſpe impunitatis abjecta, neglecta ſalute in conatum juvandi rempublicam ingredi voluerit. Id. p. 60.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) Neque enim id in cujuſquam privati arbitrio ponimus, non in multorum, niſi publica vox populi adſit, viri eruditi & graves in conſilium adhibentur. Id. ib.

Such is the Syſtem of this Jeſuit. The laſt part of it is very impertinent; it is a ridiculous diſtinction: For he that drinks Poiſon without knowing it, and believing it to be good Food, does not any ways contract the Guilt of thoſe who are the cauſe of their Death; and yet to preſerve a Tyrant from ſo great a Crime, Mariana would not have him to drink or eat Poiſon (m). Moreover, if it were true, that in drinking off the Poiſon, without knowing of it, he would be guilty of his own Death; he would be no leſs guilty in taking and putting on a poiſon'd Shirt: And yet Mariana makes no ſcruple to conſent, that his Cloaths ſhould be Poiſon'd, his Saddles, or any other things which act from without upon the inward Parts. I ſay therefore, that the Eighth Article of this Jeſuit is unworthy of a Man who underſtands Reaſoning; and I am ſurpriz'd, that a Man who had ſo much good Senſe, and ſo much Logick, ſhould trifle ſo childiſhly. Abating this many People are perſuaded, that his Syſtem is finely contriv'd, that the parts of it are well connected together, and that he proceeds naturally from one Conſequence to another. Suppoſe once, ſay they, that a King holds of the People, as being his ſupreme Judge, and that he is accountable to them, all the reſt will naturally flow from this Fountain. And therefore the Author who refuted Mariana, laid down a fundamental Principle quite oppoſite to this. viz. (n) That Sovereign Princes depend only upon God, to whom alone it belongs to call them to an account. I ſhall not enter upon the Diſcuſſion of this Queſtion, but ſhall only obſerve, that as the Doctrines of Mariana are very deſtructive of the publick Good; it had been better that he had argu'd inconſequently, than that he ſhould follow, like a good Logician, the conſequences of his Principle.

(m) Crudele exiſtimarunt, atque à Chriſtianis moribus alienum, quantumvis flagitiis coopertum eo adigere hominem, ut ſibi ipſi manus afferat pugione in viſcera adacto, aut lethali veneno in cibo aut potu temperato. Perinde enim eſt, neque minus humanitatis legibus, jurique naturæ contrarium: quo in vitam ſuam ſævire vetatur omnibus. Negamus ergo hoſtem, quem fraude dedimus perimi poſſe, veneno interfici jure. Mariana ib. p. 66.

(n) Rouſſel in ch. 17. of his Anti-Mariana.

(G) Expos'd the Jeſuits —— to a Thouſand bloody Reproaches.] The Catholicks and Proteſtants thundred upon them, out-vying one another, upon occaſion of theſe Doctrines of Mariana, and chiefly after the horrible Murder of Ravaillac: For it was ſaid, that the reading of Mariana had inſpir'd this cruel Aſſaſſin with the infamous deſign of ſtabbing Henry IV. Wherefore Father Coton publiſh'd a Letter which he wrote to Mary de Medicis, the Widow of that Prince, wherein he quotes ſome famous Jeſuits who taught the contrary to what Mariana had maintain'd: And beſides he aſſerted, that the Book of this Spaniſh Jeſuit was condemn'd in 1606, in one of their Congregations. I ſhall ſet down his own words: "(o) Such is the Senſe "and Sentence of theſe grave and eminent Do- "ctors of our Society; and therefore how can "the private Opinion of Mariana prejudice the Re- "putation of the whole Order, which, accord- "ing to its Inſtitution, being extreamly careful "of holding faſt the holy Ordinances of the "Church, and reſpectful to the Power and Au- "thority of Kings, who as to Temporals depend "upon God only, has of a long time diſown'd "the raſhneſs of a bold Pen, and particularly in the "Provincial Congregation of France, held in this "City of Paris, in 1606, wherein ex abundanti, "the Reverend Father Claudius Aquaviva, Gene- "ral of our Society, was requeſted, that thoſe who "had written to the prejudice of the Crown of "France, ſhould be reſtrain'd, and their Books "ſuppreſs'd: Which the ſaid Reverend Father "did afterwards very ſeriouſly and exactly, be- "ing very ſorry, that through miſtake, in his ab- "ſence, and without having ſeen the Work, "they had made uſe of his Approbation. The "words which he us'd in his Anſwer are theſe: "(a) We have approv'd the Judgment and the "Care of your Congregation, and are very "much troubled, that this was not perceiv'd be- "fore the Printing of ſuch Books; which never- "theleſs we have commanded to be Corrected, "and we will take very great care for the future, "that

(o) Coton Letter declaratory of the Doctrine of the Jeſuits, p. 8. & 9.

(a) See the following Remark.

(i) Ibid. cap. 7. p. 65. (k) Id. ib. pag. 64. (l) Ibid. pag. 67.

tifying Inſults, which are repeated every Day, and will never be ended, and Paſſionate Hiſtorians will tranſcribe them from one another; they appear the

" that ſuch things ſhall not happen. One Copy of " Mariana would ſcarce be found now, were it not " for the pernicious Liberality of the Heirs of " Wechel, who are known to be of the pretended " Reform'd Religion, and who Printed it at their " own Charges, not out of any deſire to ſerve " the Publick, as may be eaſily preſum'd, but " from a particular deſign to prejudice our So- " ciety. As to what concerns the reading of Mariana by Ravaillac, 'tis aſſerted in the ſame Letter (b), that the Parliament knew " by " the repeated Depoſition of this Wretch, that " Mariana contributed nothing to this execrable " Parricide, and could not influence him, ſince " the Wretch had not ſufficient knowledge of the " Language wherein his Book was written. Which " diſcovers, adds Father Coton, the uncharitable " Intention of thoſe who go on ſtill to ſay, that " he had it all by Heart." In another Book Father Coton returns to the Charge. " The " Hereticks of France, ſays he (c), will have Ma- " riana to have induc'd Ravaillac to give that un- " happy and execrable blow, as having learn'd " his Book by Heart: To which it will be re- " ply'd a hundred times, on peril of Honour " and Life, that Ravaillac did never ſee nor " read it, and did never ſo much as hear the " Name of Mariana, except when he was ask'd " whether he had read his Book; and he anſwer'd " no, and that he did not know what it was; " witneſs the Reverend Father M. Coffeteau, wit- " neſs alſo the verbal Proceſs which was made " of the Matter: From whence we may infer " what ſhameleſs Calumny will do; for there being " nothing more falſe than to ſay, that this Wretch " ſaw the Book of Mariana, yet ſome of the Com- " mon People by much hearing this, imagine " that he knew it from one end to the other, as " has been ſaid. I will add, that tho' Ravaillac " had read it, yet 'tis moſt falſe that Mariana " taught the Murder and Parricide which this " Wretch committed: But this is what the Ca- " lumniator both in this place and through his " whole Book endeavours to perſuade. Nay, " in ſome reſpect it were to be wiſh'd, that Ra- " vaillac had read Mariana in caſe he could have " underſtood him; for Mariana teaches expreſly, " as Gretſerus ſhows, that a lawful Prince ought " not to be kill'd by a private Perſon upon his " own private Authority." Father Coton is miſtaken, the Book of Mariana was very fit to inſpire one with the attempt of Aſſaſſinating Henry IV. for that Jeſuit ſays, that the Action of James Clement was good, and that if the Voice of the People, and the Counſel of ſome learned Perſons concurr to declare that the Prince oppreſſes Religion, a private Perſon may kill him. By joyning theſe two things together, one may infer the juſtice of Aſſaſſinating Henry IV. For if Henry III. a Catholick to the higheſt degree, was an oppreſſor of Catholiciſm, becauſe he labour'd for the Rights of an Heretical Prince who was to be his Succeſſor, one may believe in general, that every Prince who is favourable to Hereticks deſigns to oppreſs Religion. Now if it be lawful to kill an Oppreſſor of Religion, 'tis lawful doubtleſs to kill him who has a mind to oppreſs it as ſoon as he can: For Prudence will not permit that we ſhould ſuffer Evil to encreaſe till it be come to ſuch a height that 'tis difficult to put a ſtop to it; but we ought to prevent it and attack it whilſt it is weak. Beſides by the Voice of the People we muſt not underſtand the Judgment of all private Perſons; 'tis ſufficient that in every City there are many Perſons who join their Voices for certain things. Now it is paſt all doubt, that the Kingdom was full of People who ſuſpected Henry IV. had a mind to make the Reform'd Religion triumphant as ſoon as he could, and that he undertook a War againſt the Houſe of Auſtria only upon this proſpect. Thus Ravaillac reaſoning upon the Principles of Mariana, and joyning to them, according to Coton, a ſenſe of accommodation, might very well believe, that he had no leſs Right than James Clement. There were but too many learned Men, and in his Judgment very Pious, who confirm'd him in his pernicious deſign, and all for the good of Religion. See in the Remark HΔ. his Anſwer to them who ask'd him why he had committed this Aſſaſſination, and remember that he declar'd before the Judges, that he had a mind (d) to kill " the King, becauſe that Prince " had not endeavour'd (as he had Power) to re- " duce thoſe of the pretended Reform'd Religi- " on, to the Catholick, Apoſtolick and Roman " Church, and becauſe (e) he had heard that the " King would make War againſt the Pope, and " tranſlate the Holy See to Paris; for, making " War againſt the Pope, ſaid he (f), was to make " War againſt God, in as much as the Pope was " God, and God was the Pope.

A Catholick Writer (g) who refuted the Declaratory Letter written by Father Coton, in a Book Entitul'd Anti-Coton, informs me of ſome things which deſerve a place here. " This Book of Ma- " riana, ſays he (h), having been firſt Printed at " Toledo, was brought into France about eight " Years ago, and preſented to the King; and the " ſeditious Clauſes of this Book being repreſented to " his Majeſty, he call'd for Father Coton and ask'd " him, whether he approv'd of this Doctrine? But " the ſaid Jeſuit, who complies with Occaſions, " and ſuits himſelf to the Times, ſaid, that he " did not approve it. According to which An- " ſwer, his Majeſty, by the Advice of Monſieur " Servin his Advocate General, commanded Coton " to write againſt it; but he excus'd himſelf, " knowing very well, that he could not write a- " gainſt it without oppoſing the General of the " Order, and the Provincial of Toledo, and a " great Body of Jeſuits who had approv'd this " Book. But when he ſaw that by the Death of " this King the Jeſuits were loaded with an Uni- " verſal Hatred, and that he was urg'd by the " Court of Parliament, and by the Sorbonne, he " wrote an Epiſtle Declaratory, wherein he " condemns Mariana, but in terms ſo ſoft and " doubtful, that it plainly appear'd he is afraid " of offending him, for he ſays only, that it is " the raſhneſs of a bold Pen, whereas he ought to " have accus'd the Perſon of Hereſie, and perfi- " dious and barbarous Treaſon, and the Doctrine " of Impiety and Enmity to God and Men. And " if he had reprov'd Mariana, as he deſerves, " it had been too late; but he ſhould have " written when the King commanded him, " and not have ſuffer'd this Opinion to take " root in the Minds of the People, which coſt " the King his Life a few Years after." Father Coton found eight Lyes in this Narrative. See his Apologetical Anſwer to the (i) Anti-Coton. If the Jeſuits of France were troubled upon the account of their Brother Mariana, thoſe of Germany had likewiſe a ſhare in this Storm, as appears by the Apology which James Gretſerus (k) was oblig'd to publiſh. Let us add this Paſſage of Conringius (l). Prodiit & alius ejus (Marianæ) libellus de Inſtitutione Regis, multa præclara continens, in quo liberrime judicat quo modo Reges inſtituendi ſunt: Non dubitavit autem & aperte quoad docere, ſi Rex vel anathemate tactus, vel excommunicatus, ac nonnihil recedit a Romana Eccleſia, facere in illum gladio, igne ſcilicet animadvertere. Ea tamen pietate videri voluit, ut diceret Regem omnino tolli non licere, quaſi vero. Combuſtus vero hic eſt liber ob talem horrendam doctrinam Pariſiis, & caute fuere Jeſuitæ diſſonſum profiteri. Non dubitavit & Mariana ſcarium Henrici quarti Regis Gallia inter Sanctos memorare. I think that Conringius is twice miſtaken: Mariana did not affirm that it is lawful to kill a Prince who departs never ſo little from the Romiſh Communion, or who is nearly excommunicated: And ſince his Book was Printed above ten Years before the Death of Henry IV. he could not mention Ravaillac in it. If he had ſpoken of this Monſter in other Books as a Saint, doubtleſs this had been objected to the Jeſuits, every time that the ſeditious Maxims of Mariana were repreſented to them, ſince the Impreſſion of theſe other Books; but I do not think that it was ever done. There has always been a great difference put between Parricide and Tyrannicide. The latter had ſome that publickly approv'd him, nay, ſome that commended him highly; but the other

(b) Coton ib. p. 13.

(c) Apologetical Anſwer to the Anti-Coton, p. 34.

(d) The French Mercury, tom 1 fol. 440. See alſo fol. 442 verſo.

(e) Ib. Fol. 442 verſo.

(f) Ibid. fol 443.

(g) This Work was falſely, but to the Monſter Peter du Moulin.

(h) Anti-Coton, Printed in 1610, p. 12, & 13.

(i) Pag. m. 37. See alſo the Anſwer of Eudæmon Johannes to the Anti-Coton, p. 84.

(k) See his Veſpertilio hæretico Politicus. Father Coton ſpeaks of it in his Let. de Declaration, p. 7. and in his Apology and Anſwer, p. 33.

(l) Herman Conring. de regno Hiſpan. apud Pope Blount Cenſura Autorum. p. 614.

the more plauſible, becauſe the Book was Printed (H) with good Approbations. It has been publiſh'd in Print, that Ravaillac drew from it the abominable Deſign he executed againſt the Life of Henry IV. and that he (H Δ) confeſs'd it in his Anſwer to his Interrogatories. This was publickly contradicted. Another Treatiſe of the ſame Jeſuit has made a great other never had any ſuch that I know of. The Reaſon of this is plain, Henry III. was excommunicated when he was kill'd, but Henry IV. had been for a long time reconcil'd to the Pope when he was kill'd.

(a) Seckendorf Hiſt. Lutheran. l. 3. p. 332. n. 68.

Let us upon this occaſion make a Critical Remark upon Mr. Seckendorf. He pretends that the Doctrine of Mariana conſiſts in this, that a meer private Perſon being excited either by his own Zeal or the Pope's Orders, may attempt the Life of an Heretical King. Dudum quoque, male audit, ſays he (a), Jeſuitarum Societas propter doctrinam Joh. Marianæ, itidem Jeſuitæ Hiſpani, aliorumque, qui ſtatuerunt, licitum, immo laudabile eſſe, ſi quis, privatus licet aut ſubditus, Regem aut Principem hæreticum, mandato Pontificis, vel etiam ex zelo religionis quovis modo è medio tollat. But 'tis certain that Mariana laid down his Poſition in general Terms, and ſaid nothing in particular, either of heretical Princes, or the Permiſſions and Diſpenſations of the Court of Rome; his Maxims reſpect all Nations and all Tyrants: He excludes not from his Rules the Proteſtants, who ſhould live under a Tyrannical Government; he excludes not from them the Mahometans, nor the Pagans: He treats this Queſtion altogether as Ariſtotle would have done; neither do I ſee in what Milton, and ſuch like Writers, who are ſo numerous, can blame the Hypotheſis of this Spaniard, unleſs they ſhould condemn the Preamble which he made uſe of in favour of James Clement: But this Preamble is not exactly his Doctrine; it denotes only by way of Conſequences, the Application the Author would make of his Maxims (b).

(b) Note, that James Gretſer has ſhown, that there are Books more pernicious than that of Mariana. See alſo the Book Entituled, A Collection of Pieces about the Romiſh Doctrine and Practices of depoſing Kings, &c. Printed at Geneva, 1627, p. 251, &c.

(H) Was Printed with good Approbations.] Peter de Onna, Provincial of the Regulars for the Redemption of Captives, having read and examin'd it by order of the King of Spain, prais'd it and judg'd it worthy to be Printed. The Author obtain'd a Licenſe of his Catholick Majeſty for ten Years. Stephen Hojeda, a Jeſuit, Viſitor of the Province of Toledo, and Authoriz'd by the General of the Society, permitted the Impreſſion of this Work, after he knew the good Teſtimony which learned and grave Jeſuits gave of it. The Author of the Anti-Coton made this a ſufficient ground for aſcribing the Doctrine of this Author to the whole Society. " And that you may know, ſays he " (c), that this is not the Opinion only of a few " Jeſuits, in the Frontiſpiece of Mariana's Book, " there is an Approbation and Permiſſion to " Print it from the General of the Order Aquaviva, and from Stephen Hojeda, Viſitor of the So- " ciety of Jeſus, in the Province of Toledo. Nay, " in the ſame Permiſſion to Print it, there is this " Reaſon given, (1) That before the Permiſſion " was granted, theſe Books of Mariana were ap- " prov'd by Learn'd and Grave Men of the Or- " der of the Jeſuits. From whence it follows, " that tho' the General Aquaviva had been ſurpriz'd, (as Father Coton would make us believe, " by forging Letters at his pleaſure from this A- " quaviva) yet the Viſitor and Jeſuitical Doctors, " who examin'd the Book before it was Printed, " could not be ſurpriz'd." I ſhall here add the Anſwer of Father Coton, which contains ſomething very ſurprizing. " (d) The Calumniator " calls in queſtion the Anſwer of the R. Father " General Claudius Aquaviva; but the Tenor of " it here inſerted in the Margin (2) will ſhow, " that I do not impoſe upon as he does. And as " to the Doctors of whom he makes ſo great a " noiſe, who approv'd Mariana, they are no more " than three; which is a much ſmaller number " than that of thirty or forty, who have approv'd " the thirteen or fourteen Books of ſome of our " Society, who have taught and maintain'd the " contrary to Mariana, agreeably to the Council " of Conſtance. And if the Authority of the Reverend Father General is to be alledg'd to this " purpoſe, is it not more conſiderable in the Permiſſion he gave to a great number of Authors, " to Print, the aforeſaid Books, than in that ſingle " Permiſſion he gave to Mariana, which is now " objected?

(c) Anti-Coton, p m. 11, 12.

(1) Quippe approbatos prius à viris doctis & gravibus ex eodem noſtro ordine.

(d) Coton's Apologetical Anſwer, p. 35, 36.

(2) Ad ea quæ Congregatio Provinciæ proponenda cenſuit: reſpondeo, Probamus judicium ac ſtudium Congregationis; & ſane dolumus vehementer, ubi aliqua hujuſmodi poſt librorum tantum editionem obſervari cognovimus, & ſtatim emendari juſſimus, & in poſterum ut caveantur ſerio monuimus, ac monituri porro ſumus.

That which is ſurprizing in theſe words is, that Father Coton confeſſes, that the General Aquaviva approv'd the Book of Mariana, and Licens'd the Impreſſion of it. But this does not appear at the beginning of this Book, where we find only that the Father Viſitor, having a ſpecial Commiſſion from the General, permits the Book of Mariana to be Printed. This proves only that the General Aquaviva had entruſted this Viſitor with the Office of permitting or forbidding the Impreſſion of ſuch Books as were written by the Jeſuits; in conſequence whereof this Viſitor allow'd that Mariana ſhould publiſh his Book. But this does not prove, that the General knew either that Mariana had written de inſtitutione principis, or that this Book contain'd a pernicious Doctrine. There are Cenſors of Books in all Countries, who exerciſe this Office by Authority from the Prince, or from the Biſhops, &c. If they approve a Hereſie, does it follow that the Prince or the Biſhop from whom they receiv'd their Commiſſion, does alſo approve that Hereſie? By no means, unleſs it be known, either that they communicated the MS. to their Maſter, before it was approv'd, or that their Approbation was ratified by him. 'Tis very ſtrange, that neither Father Coton, nor Father Richeome (e) did never make uſe of this Reaſon. Their Brother Eudæmon Johannes had not ſuch a Miſt before his Eyes in this reſpect. See what he anſwers to the Author of the Anti-Coton: (f) p. 15. Affirmas Marianæ librum à Generali Societatis atque à Provinciali Toletano approbatum fuiſſe: pag. 23. Apologiam meam pro Henrico Garneto editam eſſe cum approbatione Præpoſiti Generalis. Utrumque mendacium eſt. Nam moderatores noſtri libros non recognoſcunt ipſi, ſed aliis tradunt recognoſcendos; qui ſi eos probaverint, tum demum poteſtatem edendi faciunt.——Neque difficilis eſt forma diplomatis, quod legitur in libro Marianæ, cujus edendi poteſtatem Generalis non fecit, ſed Viſitator, non, ut tu ſcribis Provincialis, cui partes in ea re ſuas Generalis delegerat, ut ſi liber is deſignatis eam ad rem Theologis probaretur, imprimendi ejus facultatem dare poſſet. The true way of rendring Aquaviva an Accomplice to the frightful Doctrine of Mariana, were to prove, that after he knew what his Subdelegate or Commiſſary had Licenſed he was content with it, and he conſented that Mariana ſhould leave in his Book all that was in it. But the Jeſuits took care not to be catch'd this way: They publiſh'd (g) that their Father General, being advertis'd by Richeome in 1599, and by the "Fathers in France, commanded that " the Book of Mariana ſhould be Correct- " ed, and there had never been, ſay they, any " Copy without Correction, had not the Here- " ticks who thought it would be for their ad- " vantage, preſently reprinted it." They publiſh'd a Fragment (h) of Aquaviva's Letter upon this occaſion, and alſo the general Order he ſent to all the Colleges of the Jeſuits, wherein he forbids them to publiſh and teach any Doctrine, which tends any wiſe to the ruine of Sovereigns. (i) Præpoſitus Generalis cum de Marianæ libro à Patribus Provinciæ Franciæ acceppiſſet, reſpondit; Primum collaudare ſe ſtudium, judiciumque Provinciæ; deinde ægerrime tuliſſe, quod libri ii ante emiſſi eſſent, quam ejus rei quicquam ad ſe deferretur. Cæterum, & ubi primum rem acceppiſſet, mandaſſe uti corrigeretur, & ſedulo daturum operam, ne quid ejuſmodi in poſterum acciderat. Neque eo contentus (cogit enim me importunitas tua effiare in vulgus ea, quæ Societatis legibus vulgari non oporteret) decretum etiam addidit vehemens & grave; ne quis è noſtris hominibus aut publice quicquam ſcriberet, doceretve; aut privatim conſilii cuiquam daret, quod in principum perniciem ulla ratione vergeret. Quod, quia vulgandi ejus Præpoſitus Generalis mihi poteſtatem fecit, ipſis ejus verbis adſcribam (k). See the Reflexions which are made upon all this by George Hornius (l), Profeſſor at Leyden.

(e) Richeome a Categorical Examination of the Libel Anti-Coton, ch. 10. p. 168, 169.

(f) Eudæmon Joannes in Confutatione Anti-Cotoni, p 52.

(g) Richeome ubi ſupra, p. 16. 3.

(h) Id. ib.

(i) Eudæmon Joannes in Confutatione Anti-Cotoni, c 1. p. 39.

(k) After this we ſee in the Book of Eudæmon Joannes the Decree of the General of the Jeſuits.

(l) In Diſſertation. Hiſtor. & Politicis, p. 116, &c.

(H Δ) That Ravaillac drew from it— and that he confeſs'd it in his Anſwer to his Interrogatories. This was great noiſe. 'Tis that wherein he obſerves the faults (I) in the Government of his Society; but his Brethren are not agreed that he is the Author of ſuch (IΔ) a Book.

contradicted.] The Paſſages of Father Coton related in the Remark G. are a ſufficient Proof of this Text; nevertheleſs I will add ſomething to them. The Interrogatories of Ravaillac are in the Mercure François (n), but not a word of Mariana. We find that the two Days he was kept at the Hotel de Raiz, he anſwer'd to thoſe who ask'd what mov'd him to this Aſſaſſination? "The Sermons which I "have heard, by which I learn'd the Cauſes for "which it was neceſſary to kill the King. Likewiſe "as to the Queſtion, whether it was lawful to kill a "Tyrant; he knew all the Evaſions and Diſtinctions, "and it was eaſie to perceive, that he had been carefully "inſtructed in this matter; for in all other points of "Theology he was ignorant and wicked, ſometimes ſay-"ing one thing, and ſometimes denying it? This is in no wiſe a proof that he had read Mariana's Book, for he might have learn'd either by Word of Mouth, or by reading many other Books, whether Printed, or in MS. all the Principles of this Spaniſh Jeſuit. It is very poſſible that this Propoſition ſhould be true, Such an one knew perfectly the maxims of Mariana, and yet he knew not that there was ſuch an Author as Mariana. To prove therefore that Ravaillac had read this Jeſuit's Book, there muſt be ſtronger Reaſons than this, He knew the Doctrine of this Writer; there muſt be other Arguments than this Paſſage of the Mercure François. "(o) The ſame "day of this Execution (p), becauſe Ravaillac in "all his Anſwers to the Queſtions which the Arch-"biſhop of Aix, the Preacher Coeffeteau, and ma-"ny others put to him during his Impriſonment, "about the Parricide he had committed, help'd "himſelf out very ſubtilly by the Maxims of "Mariana, and others, who have written, that it "is lawful to kill Tyrants: Before they pro-"ceeded to a new Prohibition of ſuch Books, "the Court deſir'd the Conſultation of the Fa-"culty of Theology, and enjoyn'd the Dean and "Syndic, &c. Note, That altho' it were moſt certain, that the Aſſaſſin had never read Mariana, yet it was reaſonable for the Abbot du Bois to make ſuch a Remonſtrance to the Jeſuits as he made from the Pulpit. They complain'd of it to the Queen, and accus'd this Abbot: "That dur-"ing the Octave (a) of the Holy Sacrament, "when he Preach'd at St. Euſtachius's Church, in "handling the Queſtion, whether it was lawful to "kill Tyrants, and refuting the Book of Mariana "and others, he made an Exhortation to the Fa-"thers Jeſuits, That they ſhould for the future take "great care, that no Author who might give offence "to France, ſhould come forth with the name of their "Society, and the Approbation of their Superiors, un-"leſs they had a mind deſignedly to expoſe them-"ſelves to dangers, which all their Prudence, ſup-"ported by the Authority of their Conſidents, could not "avoid. Theſe are the principal Points of Accu-"ſation, upon which they told the Queen, that "theſe words were to move like a Sedition a-"gainſt the Jeſuits. The Biſhop of Paris was or-"der'd to hear the ſaid Abbot, who told him in "his vindication, that it was neither Paſſion nor "Hatred againſt the Jeſuits, or others, that mov'd "him to Preach as he had done, but the dreadful "horror and unſpeakable Grief he had for the "ſurpriſing Death of his very good Maſter, and "the probability of danger to which the King "and Queen were expos'd, as long as theſe curs'd "Books of Mariana, and others, were ſpread a-"mong the People: Which being underſtood by "the Biſhop, he diſmiſs'd him, after he had gi-"ven him a gentle Admonition to live in Unity "with all the other Servants of God, and chiefly "with the Jeſuits; and to continue to preach the "Obedience due to the King and Queen, and to "praiſe the high Merits of the deceas'd King, "without offending any body.

(n) Tom. 1. fol. 440, &c.

(o) Mercure François, tom. 1. fol. 457.

(p) i. e. of Ravaillac.

(a) Ibid. fol. 493.

(I) The Book wherein he obſerves the faults in the Government of his Society.] While the Duke of Lerma detain'd him Priſoner for the Cauſes above-mention'd, all his Papers were rigidly examin'd by Francis Soſa, Biſhop of Oſma, and Counſellor of State, who had orders to deſtroy all the MSS. he ſhould find there, wherein the negligence of the King, and the tricks of the Duke of Lerma were cenſur'd. This Biſhop found a Book written with Mariana's own Hand, of the Government of the Society of Jeſus, wherein the Author repreſents the deadly Miſchiefs wherewith the Society was threatn'd unleſs they corrected the diſorder of their Government; to which end he offers very good Advices. The Biſhop of Oſma made no ſcruple to give this MS. to his Friends that they might read it, and to permit them to take Copies of it. Hence it came to paſs, that this Book fell into the Hands of ſome (b) Perſons who ſent it into France, Germany and Italy. A French Bookſeller Printed it not only in Spaniſh, which was the Original Language, but alſo in Latin, French and Italian. After it was carried to Rome, the Jeſuit Florentius, Confeſſor to Urban VIII. read it, and cry'd out, heu! heu! actum eſt de nobis Jeſuitis, quando nimis vera ſunt quæ liber hic canat. The General of the Jeſuits ſpar'd no pains to obtain the Condemnation of this Book, which at laſt was granted in 1631. (c) The Author I cite alledges ſome Paſſages of this Book of Mariana. You may find it intire in Spaniſh and French in the ſecond Tome of the Mercure Jeſuitique, Printed at Geneva in 1631, and you may ſee the whole ſixth Chapter of it in the Arcana Societatis Jeſu, Printed at Geneva in 1635. Father Alegambe could not paſs over in ſilence this Book of Mariana; which he mentions after this manner. (d) Circumferuntur præterea Hiſpanice, Gallice, Italice, Latine, excuſæ, Diſcurſus de erroribus, qui in forma gubernationis Societatis Jeſu occurrunt, conſtans 20 capitibus. Burdigalæ per Joannem de Bordes 1625, in 8°. & alibi. Sed clam illi ſubductus a malevolo quopiam ad eam landem Societati invidiam, extruſus in lucem eſt, adjecta etiam fortaſſe non paucis, ut pronum eſt exiſtimare, ab ipſius obſervationibus & animo alienis. Conringius is much miſtaken when he ſays, that Mariana himſelf publiſh'd this Book: (e) Tantam libertatem aſſumpſit ut & libellum ediderit de membris (f) Societatis, quem licet ſupprimerent Jeſuitæ, tamen in media Roma editum eſſe conſtat. rariſſimus hodie eſt inventu. I can hardly believe that it was Printed at Rome, tho' Conringius affirms it.

(IΔ) The Jeſuits are not agreed that Mariana was the Author of it.] This appears from an Affair wherein they were concern'd in 1697, which made a great noiſe. The Archbiſhop of Reims publiſh'd a very learn'd Decree the 25th of July in that Year, againſt two Theſes which had been maintain'd by the Jeſuits of Reim., and made uſe (g) of the Treatiſe of John Mariana, of ſuch things which require amendment in the Society of the Jeſuits. He ſays (h), that this Spaniſh Author, who liv'd in the time of the Congregations de auxiliis, informs us of the ſad Conſequences that follow'd, from the Liberty which Molina, and ſo many others took to publiſh their Viſions—— Mariana ſays therefore in Chap. 4. "That from the "liberty every one took in teaching his own Opinions, "there follow'd many Contentions with the Dominicans, "and he declares, that the Jeſuits had better have "own'd them for their Maſters. He adds, That upon oc-"caſion of a Book which Father Molina wrote about "Grace and Free-will, theſe Fathers were ſo much of-"fended, that they had recourſe to the Inquiſition, and "from thence to Rome, where he ſays, That at the "time of his writing, the Proceſs ſtill continu'd, and "was manag'd with great Arrogance and Paſſion; and "that though the Jeſuits ſhould come off victorious, "which was very doubtful, yet it would coſt them "many great Summs, beſides the Vexation of many "Years. I paſs by the other Extracts out of the ſame Book, which are to be found in the Decree of this Prelate. But let us ſee the Jeſuits Anſwer to him. They alledge at firſt two or three Arguments, and then they proceed after this manner. "(i) But, my Lord, without ſo much ar-"guing, I ought to tell you, that this Book did "not deſerve the honour to be cited in a great "Archbiſhop's Paſtoral Letter. This is, in few "words, the Hiſtory of it ſuch as our Enemies relate "it, the truth of which I do not pretend to vouch. "This MS, ſay they, was taken from Mariana "when he was put in Priſon at Madrid for another "Book he wrote about the change of Money, and "wherewith the Miniſters of Spain, and chiefly "the Duke of Lerma, were much offended. The "thing happen'd in 1609, or 1610. By this it ap-"pears, that the Enemies of the Jeſuits kept the "MS. for the ſpace of fifteen or ſixteen Years; i.e. "during all the remainder of the Life of Mariana.

(n) And particularly into the Hands of Nicolas Ricardus a Dominican, ſurnam'd the Monſter, upon the account of his great Hair and Learning. Bernardin Giraldus ubi infra.

(o) Taken from Bernardin Giraldus Apologia pro Senatu Veneto p. m. 140, &c.

(d) Alegambe, p. 258 col. 2.

(e) Conringius de Regno Hiſp. apud Pope Blount, ubi ſupra.

(f) Perhaps it ſhould be Moribus, or Morbis.

(g) The Decree of Charles Maurice Tellier, p. 55 of the Delft Edition, 1698.

(h) Ibid. p. 57.

(i) A Remonſtrance to the Lord Archbiſhop of Reims, p. m. 157. &c.

Book. His Scholia's upon the Scripture have deserv'd the Approbation (K) of Father Simon. I had forgot to observe, that the Evil he said of Henry III. was (L) partly the cause why his Book of the Institution of a Prince was Condemned at Paris.

I doubt whether he wrote the Book (M) de Republica Christiana, which a German Writer praises very much.

MARY or MIRIAM the Sister of Aaron and Moses, makes a notable Figure in the Scripture twice or thrice at least. She was the cause why her Mother was chosen by the Daughter (A) of Pharaoh to be Nurse to Moses. She put herself at the Head

(1) Page 57.

(2) Marianæ Opuscula, p. 415, 416, 430, 431, &c.

(k) Colomiés, Biblioth. choisie. p. 174, of the 2d Edition observes, that Auger de Mauleon, Sieur de Granier, Translated into French, The Treatise of Father Mariana about the Reformation of the Government of the Jesuits. See concerning Mr. Granier, the History of the French Academy, p. 225.

(l) Critical Hist of the Old Testament, B. 3. c. 12. p. m. 426.

(a) Critical Hist. of the principal Commentators of the New New Testament, c. 42. p. 637.

(b) Ibid. p. 639.

(c) Critical Hist of the Old Testament. B. 3. c. 18. p. 463.

(d) By Balthazar Lippius, 1665. That which I make use of is of the Year 1611. Typis Wechelianis apud hæredes Joannis Aubrii.

" who might have disowned it, either as a Supposititious or falsify'd Book It was not Printed till 1625, immediately after the Death of this Father, who died in 1624, being about 90 Years of Age. This single Circumstance renders this Book suspected, and some Books have been accounted Supposititious for weaker Reasons. It was Printed only to defame our Society; and can it be doubted, whether they did not at least alter and add many things in it? But that which puts the Cheat out of all doubt, is this, that the Original was never produc'd, nor the place named where it was, although the Jesuits at that time presently complain'd of it as a Forgery. In effect, the very place which is cited in the Pastoral Letter, is so contrary to the Notions of Mariana, in the matter de auxiliis, that we must believe him a Fool, if we believe it to be his. For he is made to say in this place, that the Jesuits had done better, as to the Controversies about Grace, (1) to own the Dominicans for their Masters, than to contend with them (2) And Mariana in his Book entituled, de morte & immortalitate, which he wrote in the greatest heat of these Disputes, as he himself observes, show'd so strong a byass against the Doctrine of the Thomists, that Molina himself could not have done more." See the Margin (k).

(K) His Scholia's upon the Scripture have deserv'd the Approbation of Father Simon.] " (l) The Scholia's, " or Notes of Mariana upon the Old Testament, " may also be very useful for understanding the " literal Sense of the Scripture, because he chiefly " applies himself to find out the proper signification of the Hebrew words. Thus at the beginning of Genesis, he has judiciously observ'd, " that the Hebrew word bara, which is commonly Translated to Create, does not properly signifie to make out of nothing, as is commonly believ'd; " and that even the Greek and Latin Authors who invented the word to Create, could not use it " in this Sense, for as much as that which is now " call'd Creation, or the production of a thing " out of nothing, was altogether unknown to " them. Altho' these Notes are short enough, " yet he might have avoided some Remarks, " which serve only to show his Learning, and " not to explain the Text. Yet this sort of Digressions happen to him but seldom, and we " may say, that Mariana is one of the ablest and " most judicious Scholiasts that we have upon the " Bible "Tis true, that he had but a moderate " knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew Tongues; " but the sharpness of his Wit, and his great Application supplied in some measure this want. " He commonly made choice of the best Sense, " neither is he tedious in the different Interpretations he relates." In another Book Father Simon says: " (a) As for Mariana, his Notes " upon the New Testament are true Scholia's, " wherein there appears no less Judgment than " Learning. (b) It were to be wish'd, that " the Observations of this learned Man had not " been so short. Nevertheless, he says much in a " few words. See also what the same Author says (c) about the Book of Mariana for the Vulgar Edition

(L) He Evil he said of King Henry III. was partly the cause.] This is manifest by the Tenor of the Decree; " The Court having seen—the Book of John " Mariana, entitul'd de Rege & Regis Institutione, Printed at Mentz (d), and other Places, which contains many Reproaches against the deceased King Henry " III. of most happy Memory, the Persons and States of Sovereign Kings and Princes, and other " Propositions contrary to the said Decree.—The " said Court hath ordain'd, and doth ordain, that " the said Book of Mariana shall be burnt by the " publick Executioner, before the Church of Pa-" ris—Done in Parliament June 8. 1610. If Mariana had only said, that Henry III. in his elder Years had stain'd all the Glory he acquir'd in his Youth, he could not be blam'd; for 'tis certain that no Prince ever became more unlike himself than he was. (e) Felix futurus, si cum priscis ultima contexuisset, talemque se Principem præstitisset, qualis sub Carolo fratre Rege fuisse credebatur adversus perduelliones copiarum belliquæ dux: qui illi gradus ad regnum Poloniæ fu- procerum ejus gentis suffragio. Sed cesserunt prima postremis, bonaque juventæ major ætas flagitio obliteravit. Defuncto fratre revocatus in patriam, Regnoque Galliæ renunciatus, omnia in ludibrium vertit. There was not a greater difference between Hector (f) victorious over Patroclus, and his Carcase drag'd by a Chariot, than between the Duke of Anjou victorious at Moncontour, and Henry III. beset by Monks and Minions, and forc'd to quit Paris to the Duke of Guise. Debauchery first began to enervate his Courage; but bigotry made him perfectly Effeminate. His Fraternities of Penitents, and their Sack-cloths bring to my Mind this place of Mr. Despreaux:

Dans ce sac ridicule où Scapin s'enveloppe,
Je ne reconnois plus l'Auteur du Misantrope.

I cannot any longer under this Sack-cloth, under this Equipage of a false Penitent, discern that brave Warrior who triumph'd over the Protestants at Jarnac and Moncontour, and who deserv'd the Suffrages of the Polanders for a great Kingdom. Ultima primis Obstant, dissimiles hic vir & ille puer. But Mariana did not confine himself to the observation of this change.

Note however, that 'tis falsly asserted in the last (g) Edition of Moreri's Dictionary, That he publish'd the Book de Rege & Regis Institutione to justifie the Assassination of Henry III. King of France. That was no-wise his design. He treated the matter according to the extent of the Title of his Book. What concerns the Authority he gives to Subjects over tyrannical Kings, is but a very small part of his Book, and he does not speak of Henry III. but occasionally and in a few words.

(M) The Book de Republica Christiana, which a German Writer praises very much.] He says, that it is an excellent Work publish'd by John Mariana in Spanish, in 1615, and dedicated to Philip III (h) King of Spain; and that after many other ingenious Devices and wise Proposals, he gives a description of the Head of a good Prince, with the lawful use of his five external Senses. If Mariana had publish'd such a Book, would the Writers of the Bibliotheque, of the Society, and Don Nicolas Antonio have pass'd it over in silence?

(A) That her Mother was chosen to be Nurse to Moses.] The Scriptures relates, that after he was expos'd, his Sister kept at a distance (i) to see what became of him, and that she said to Pharao's Daughter, who had the Child brought to her (k). Shall I go, and call to thee a Nurse of the Hebrew Women, that she may Nurse the Child for thee? And that after she receiv'd an Answer, she fetch'd her Mother who had orders to Nurse him. Josephus thinking that this Story was not sufficiently circumstantiated, supposes that the Daughter of Pharaoh employ'd at first Egyptian Nurses, but that the Infant would not suck any of them; and that Mary feigning to come there only out of curiosity, represented to the Princess that it was to no purpose to fetch a Nurse but one of the Hebrew Women, and that it would be well done to try whether it would be more tractable with a Woman of that Nation. The young Maid had order to seek out one, and she fetch'd her Mother, and because she (c) Mariana de Rege, l. 1. c. 6. p. m. 54.

(f) In somnis, ecce, ante oculos mœstissimus Hector Visus adesse mihi, largosque effundere fletus; Raptatus bigis, ut quondam, aterque cruento Pulvere, perque pedes trajectus lora tumentes. Hei mihi, qualis erat! quantum mutatus ab illo Hectore; qui redit exuvias indutus Achillei, Vel Danaûm Phrygios jaculatus puppibus ignes! Virgil. Æn. l. 2. v. 270.

(g) That of Paris. 1699.

(h) Post multa alia ingeniose excogitata cordateque prolata. Andreas Carolus Ambas Sacrorum in Duc. Wirtembergico Memorab. Eccles. seculi 17 l. 2. c. 26. p. 388.

(i) Exod.

He cites Selenian. An. 2. 4. (k) Ibid. ver

Head of all the Women of Iſrael after the Paſſage through the Red Sea, that they might ſing (B) the ſame Song that the Men had ſung. She joyn'd with her Brother Aaron (l) Joſeph. Antiq. l. 2 c. 5.

Child ſuck'd her freely, ſhe was appointed his Nurſe (l). This Supplement of Circumſtances is not ill contriv'd, although it multiplies Miracles a little. Note, that there are ſome Commentators, who think, that even according to the Relation of Holy Scripture, there is a Lye in the words of this Infant's Siſter; for ſhe feign'd that ſhe would go and ſeek out another Woman than her Mother. Whereupon they relate to us all the Examples of officious or pious Frauds that we read of in the ſacred Writers, that of Rebecca, Rachel, Michol, &c. and conclude, that there are Devices that are commendable, and a Deceitfulneſs that is of neceſſary uſe, not only in the profeſſion of Arms, and the Political Adminiſtration, but alſo in Domeſtick Affairs (m). This you will find in the Commentary of the Cordelier John Nodinus on the 2d of Exodus, and he grounds it upon the Authority of St. Baſil, and St. John Damaſcen. But this is altogether impertinent; for our Mary did nothing contrary to Sincerity, ſhe denied not that the Woman ſhe would fetch was her Mother: She only did not confeſs it, becauſe ſhe was not ask'd about it, nor oblig'd upon any account to tell what ſhe knew. The defenders of Equivocations cannot find any thing here that favours them.

(m) Ex Joanne Nodino in priora 15. capita Exodi, p. 67. edit. Lug. 1611.

(B) That they might ſing the ſame Song that the Men had ſung.] When I ſpeak thus, I confine my ſelf to the order of the Narrative in the Scripture. You ſee in the 15th Chapter of Exodus, the whole Song which Moſes and the Children of Iſrael ſung after the deſtruction of the Army of Pharaoh, and then you read thus: (n) And Mary the Propheteſs, the Siſter of Aaron, took a Timbrel in her Hand, and all the Women went out after her with Timbrels and with Dances. And Mary anſwered them, ſing ye to the Lord, &c. The word præcinebat in the vulgar Latin, ſeems to me better than the word anſwer'd in the Geneva Verſion; for it is very probable that Mary begun and ſet the Song and led the Dance of the Women. Conſult Philo who ſuppoſes that Moſes appointed two Quires, one of Men, and the other of Women, and that himſelf directed the Muſick in the former, and gave the management of the other to his Siſter, and that theſe two Chorus's anſwer'd one another. There are ſome who think, that Moſes either alone, or with the Men, ſung the Song, and that the others ſung only the beginning of it, which they repeated from time to time like the Burden of it. (o) Oleaſter hæc ſcribit. Credi derim equidem, Moſen & viros Hebræos Canticum hoc incœpiſſe, fœminas vero reſpondiſſe: ita quod Moſes aut ſolus, aut ſimul cum viris Canticum proſequebatur, fœminæ vero reſpondebant ſeu repetebant illud exordium Cantici Cantemus Domino, ut conſtat ex fine hujus Cantici, ubi talia verba repetuntur à Maria. Hoc enim ſolebat in aliis etiam Canticis fieri, ut patet in Pſal. 135 ubi unus aut duo dicebant: Confitemini Domino, quoniam bonus, quoniam in æternum miſericordia ejus. Et deinceps proſequebantur alios verſus: Cœtus autem aliorum repetebat ſemper illud: Quoniam in æternum miſericordia ejus. Idem quoque obſervare licet in primo libro Samuelis capite decimo octavo. Solebant enim Prophetæ choros canentium ducere, dum laudes Dei celebrarent Sic Oleaſter. Philo tamen in libro tertio de vita Moſis, ait, Moſen diſtribuiſſe omnem populum in duos choros, unum virorum, in quo ipſe viris præibat Carmen: alterum, in quo ſoror ejus Maria præcinebat fœminis. Ergo Moſes prior quemlibet verſum hujus Cantici canebat, & deinde populus eundem verſum cantabat. Sed enim idem Philo in libro de Agricultura, ſcribit, factos eſſe duos choros: unum mulierum: alterum virorum, è diverſo ſtantes, & alternis carminibus ſibi invicem reſpondentes. A Modern (a) Poet fancies, that this great Prophet plac'd himſelf in the middle of the two Chorus's, and diſtributed the parts of the Song, and kept time with his Rod. You may ſee a deſcription of the Habits and Geſtures of Mary, I ſay you may ſee it in this Paſſage of Father Menetrier. "(b) After the Paſ-
" ſage through the Red Sea, Moſes and Mary his " Siſter, to thank God for the preſervation of his " People, and the deſtruction of the Egyptians,
" who were drown'd in the purſuit of them,
" made two great Chorus's ſeparated from one an" other, the one of Men and the other of Wo" men, and dane'd to the Tune of a Song, which " makes the fifteenth Chapter of Exodus, a Song
" of Thankſgiving. A Modern Poet has elegant" ly deſcrib'd this Dance in the ſixth Book of his " Poem intituled Moſes Viator.

(n) Exod. xv 20, 21

(o) Pererius in c. 15. Exodi Diſput. 1. p. m. 484.

(a) It is a Jeſuit of Lyons, call'd Antonius Millinæus. See Alegambe, p. 40.

(b) Menetrier of Ancient and Modern Songs, p. 9, &c.

" Nunc (1) igitur memores animos ad Carmina mecum
" Adjicite; alternas ſubſultent caſtra choreas;
" Littora divinas referant ad ſidera laudes.
" Sic fatus jubet in partes diſcedere turmas
" Adverſiſque choris medius, geſtumque, modoſque
" Dividit, & virga modulans præit Enthea verba.
" Hæc poſtquam ſaltata Viris, modulataque Vate
" Chorona, paribus ſtimulis agit impetus idem
" Hæbreas cantare nurus, Diamque Pronæam
" Tinnula concuſſis ad tympana pſallere ſiſtris.
" Proſiluit ſancto Moſis ſoror exacta Phœbo,
" Prætexta lambente pedes, cinctuque modeſto
" Caſtigante ſinus: volat alto a vertice Sadon
" Carbaſina & Zephyros Zona retinente volucres.
" Subtileſque tument telæ pellentibus auris,
" Cærula jam niveos compleſſit tunica crines,
" Saltibus extremæ volitant per ton pora plantæ.
" Aſſultant digitiſque pedes, pulſuque moventur
" Ora, pedis, digitique pari, non molliter edunt
" Brachia, non humeri, aut ſuperis, aut corpore toto
" Vox ſonat, & cunctis loquitur Symphonia membris.
" Exiliunt paribus ſtudiis examina matrum
" Virgineique greges, hæ ſiſtra ſonantia pulſant
" Hæ citharas & plectra movent, hæ nabla canunt:
" Nec vultus torſiſſe pudor, caſta omnia caſti
" Obſequii decorat pietas. Tot Elisabetha virgo
" Inchoat, & geſtu cantum comitante figurat.

(1) Antonius Millinæus, l. 6. Moſis Viatoris.

Here follows another Paſſage of the ſame Writer which contains many things that do not relate to Mary; but ſince the whole is curious, I will not part what concerns the Song from the reſt (c). " It is the moſt ancient Song (d) we have, and " the greateſt part of the Interpreters of this " Song are of Opinion, that it is the firſt Com-" poſition in Muſick, which appear'd (e) three " Hundred Years before the Birth of Linus and " Orpheus, whom the Grecians make the Fathers of " Poetry. This Song is a meer Narrative; but " that which we have in the 32d Chapter of Deu-" teronomy, has all the beauties of Poetry and of " great Eloquence. God commanded Moſes to " write this Song the Day before his Death, to " ſerve for the Condemnation of the People of " the Jews, whoſe Ingratitude was exceeding " great. This faithful Miniſter of the Will of " God, did not only write but ſing it: And as " the Author of the Book of the Wonders of the " Scripture, which is inſerted among the Works " of St Auſtin, thought that God wrought a Mi-" racle with reſpect to the firſt of theſe Songs, " having inſpir'd all the People to ſing it with a " juſt Harmony, and a regular Conſort of ſo ma-" ny Voices without any Confuſion; ſo ſome " Interpreters are of Opinion, that God wrought " another Miracle with reſpect to the ſecond, " by giving Moſes a Voice ſo ſtrong and extenſive, " as to be heard by all the People, how diſtant " ſoever a great part of that prodigious Multitude " was from him.

(2) Menetrier, Repreſentation en Muſique, p. 9, &c.

(3) He ſpeaks of that which was ſung after the paſſage thro' the Red Sea.

(c) Here is why Pererius ſays ubi ſupra, p. 485, 486. Inter alias porro hujus Cantici excellentias, illa profecto perinſignis eſt, quod eſt primum omnium Canticorum, quæ fuiſſe unquam facta vel cantata, ſive in Cœlis, ſive in profanis literarum monumentis proditum ſit, nam Lini, Muſæi, & Orphei, qui ante bellum Trojanum fuerunt, hymnos, carmina, & cantus, plus trecentis annis poſt hoc Canticum Moſis eſſe factos, certatem-porum obſervatione compertum eſt.

Note, That it is ſomething probable, that Mr Herſant is not altogether of the ſame Opinion with the Jeſuit Menetrier. He hath Printed a Little Book with this Title, the Song of Moſes in the 15th Chapter of Exodus, explain'd according to the Rules of Rhetorick. He pretends that this Piece which was written in Hebrew Proſe, exceeds all that is moſt Ingenious in this kind in Prophane Authors, and that Virgil and Horace, the moſt perfect Patterns of poetical Eloquence, have nothing that comes near it. This we read in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres for the Month of March 17[illegible], p. 353, with this Circumſtance, that Mr. Herſant is at preſent with the Abbot de Louvois, and that he was before Profeſſor of Rhetorick in the College of Pleſſis. There is Reaſon to believe that he looks upon the Song of the

Aaron in murmuring againſt Moſes (C), and was ſeverely puniſh'd for doing it; for ſhe became Leprous, * and was ſeparated from the Camp for the ſpace of ſeven Days. She would not have been deliver'd from this Affliction, if Moſes had not implor'd the Mercy of God. She † died before her two Brethren, and in the ſame Year with them, β and was interr'd with Pomp, and at the Expence of the Publick in the Mountain of Sin. 'Tis believ'd that ſhe liv'd a Hundred and Thirty Years, or thereabout. The Rabbins make a ridiculous Remark, becauſe the ſacred Text does not contain the ſame Clauſe (D) concerning the Death of as Mary, as concerning the two Brethren. He that would know the Relation that is between this Siſter of Moſes, and the Pagan Goddeſſes needs only read Mr. Huet's Demonſtration γ.

MARY the Egyptian, an infamous Debauchee, and a famous Convert. When ſhe was twelve Years old, ſhe went out of her Father's Houſe, into the City of Alexandria, where ſhe ſpent twenty ſeven Years in lewd Practices, and then ſhe went to Jeruſalem to continue there the ſame kind of Life. But an inviſible Power having hinder'd her from entering into the Temple on the Day of the Exaltation of the Holy Croſs, ſhe felt ſuch a remorſe of Conſcience as oblig'd her to proſtrate her ſelf before an Image of the Holy Virgin, and to promiſe that ſhe would forſake her lewd Courſes. After that ſhe enter'd into the Temple, and having ador'd the Croſs, ſhe enquir'd of the Holy Virgin what ſhe ſhould do to pleaſe God. She heard a Voice which order'd her to go into the Deſert; which ſhe obey'd, and did Penance forty ſeven Years, without ſeeing any Body. She was ſerv'd there by Angels for the laſt Thirty Years. The Author ♪ who furniſhes me with theſe Materials, ſays nothing of the (A) Payment ſhe would have made to the Mariners for her Paſſage.

* Numb. chap. 12.

† Ib. c. 28.

β Joſeph. Antiq l. 4. c. 4. p. m. 109.

γ Huet. Demon. Evangel. prop. 4 c. 10. p. m. 252. &c. & in præfat. fol. c. 2. verſo.

♪ [redacted], Eſquire, Sieur de Petit-Puy in his Dictionary ſerving for an univerſal Library, Printed at Paris in 1649, in fol. p. 254. (wherein he cites Sophronius Biſhop of Jeruſalem. Nicephorus Calliſtus, B. 8 ch. 5. of his Hiſtory. St. John Damaſcen, in his 3. Oration of Images) & p. 325.

15th Chapter of Exodus, as more beautiful than that in Chap 32 of Deuteronomy. And this is not the Opinion of the Jeſuit Menetrier. We ſhall conclude with cenſuring a miſtake of Mr. Simon, who ſays (f) that the Song in Chap. 15. of Exodus was Compos'd by Mary.

(f) Simon's Dictionary of the Bible, p. 514. Note, That this Simon is different from him who wrote the Critical Hiſtory of the Bible.

(C) She joyn'd with her Brother Aaron in murmuring againſt Moſes.] The Scripture relates this in theſe words. (g) And Miriam and Aaron ſpoke againſt Moſes, becauſe of the Ethiopian Woman whom he had married; for he had married an Ethiopian Woman: And they ſaid, hath the Lord indeed ſpoken by Moſes? hath not he alſo ſpoken by us? In our Age many Readers complain, that a thing is not written ſhort enough, and accuſe all Authors of Prolixity, who do not leave the beſt of their Thoughts to be gueſs'd at. Such Readers would find theſe two Verſes of Moſes admirable, tho' they ſhould not believe them inſpir'd by God; for things are expreſs'd there by halves, and parted from one another by a great Gap. There are many Connections wanting, which they muſt ſupply, and ſince they love this Exerciſe, they may here find Matter for ſuch an agreeable Employment. The words of the ſacred Author, which I have related, are equivalent to theſe: Mary and Aaron ſpoke ill of Moſes, becauſe of his Marriage with an Ethiopian Woman, and their evil-ſpeaking was expreſs'd after this manner, Does none Propheſie but he? If he is a Prophet, we are ſo too. We do not ſee at firſt bluſh, how the Wife of Moſes was the cauſe of theſe Interrogations? The leap is a little too great from the Principle to the Conſequence, and the Mind is divided into divers Conjectures about the Connexion of Relation between theſe things. I think the famous Toſtatus did not conjecture amiſs, who ſuppoſes that Sephora the Wife of Moſes, was proud of the Glory and Prophetick Authority of her Spouſe, and from thence took occaſion to inſult her Siſter-in-Law, and affected to exalt the Merit of her Husband above that of Aaron. The Siſter-in-Law, and the Brother-in-Law, having no better way to humble her Pride, Criticiz'd upon the Marriage of Moſes with a Woman of another Nation, and boaſted that they had a ſhare in Propheſie as well as he. (h) Veriſimile eſt, quod ait Abulenſ. Sephoram more muliebri (hic enim ſexus, cum ſit imbecillis ingenii & judicii, ambitioſus eſt, & ſui honoris ſtudioſus) voluiſſe ſe præferre Mariæ, eo quod uxor eſſet Moſis, Moſenque ſuum, quaſi populi ducem, verbis extulſſe, ac præpoſuiſſe Mariæ & Aaroni: qua re primum concitata Maria, deinde Aaron, ſe erigere cæperunt, volentes ſe non tantum Sepholæ, ſed & Moſi æquare, jactitando ſe tam nobiles eſſe prophetas, quam erat Moſes. Id ita eſſe, colligitur tum ex v. ſeq. tum ex v. 6. ubi Deus hanc murmuris cauſam indicat, & præſumit, docetque eos in ambitione ſua falli; eo quod Moſ præſtantiſſimus, fidelliſſimus, Deoque familiariſſimus ſit propheta, cui nec quis alius comparari poſſit. This Suppoſition of Toſtatus connects the disjointed Pieces, and diſpels the obſcurity in the reaſoning of the ſacred Hiſtorian. Note, That there are ſome Commentators who maintain, that Sephora might be call'd an Ethiopian, tho' ſhe was of Arabia (i). But others pretend (k), that the Seventy Interpreters, and the Author of the Vulgar Latin, did not underſtand the true ſenſe of the Hebrew word, which they have tranſlated an Ethiopian Woman. Note alſo, that this Chapter of the Book of Numbers is proper to prove, that the Title of a Propheteſs which is given to Mary in Chap. 15. of Exodus, did properly belong to her, and that according to the higheſt ſignification of the word; i. e. That ſhe had a ſhare in the Divine Inſpiration (a).

(g) Num. c. 12. v. 1. & 2.

(i) Corn. à Lapide in Exod. c. 12. v. 1. p. m. 856.

(i) See Cornelius a Lapide. Ibid.

(k) See Mr. le Clerc upon this place of Numb.

(D) The ſame Clauſe concerning the Death of Mary, as concerning that of the two Brethren.] This Clauſe in the Verſion of Geneva ſignifies, that Aaron and Moſes died according to the Command of God; but the Jews pretend it ſignifies by the Mouth of God, as if the Breath of God had ſoftly drawn out their Soul. They add, that Mary died not after this manner, which is not fit for the feminine Sex, and that the Worm has no power over thoſe who die ſo. What Impertinence is here! (b) De Moſe quidem, Deut. cap. xxxiv. v. 5. De Aharone autem, Numb. cap. xxxiii. v. 38. dicitur, quod moriens fuit עַל פִּי יְהוָה ad os, i. in oſculo, Domini, quaſi anima eorum ipſius Dei halitu ſuaviſſime rapta fuerit. De eorum ſorore Mirjam dicunt, eam mortuam quidem כנשיקה ſed non עַל פִּי יְהוָה ad os Domini, quaſi hæc locutio ſequiori ſexui non conveniat. In hos vero vermem non habuiſſe poteſtatem in libro Jalkut legitur. The Pagan Superſtition is well known, which made Kinſmen apply their Mouth to that of dying Perſons. See the Commentators of Virgil upon theſe words of Dido's Siſter: (c) Et extremus ſi quis ſuper halitus erat, Ore legam. All thoſe who treat (d) de funeribus ſpeak of this Cuſtom.

(a) See Rivet in Exod. c. 15. v. 20. Oper. tom. 1. p. 963.

(b) Lomeier. genial. dierum decad. 1. p. 337, 338.

(c) Virg. Æn. l. 4. v. 684.

(d) See among others Kirchmannus de funeribus Romanorum, l. 1. c. 5.

(A) Of the Payment ſhe would have made to the Mariners.] Having no Money to give them for her Paſſage, ſhe offer'd to give them leave to uſe her Body as they pleas'd This made the famous Peter du Moulin ſay, that the Authors of the Legends had no Judgment, and manag'd the matter ſo, as if they deſign'd to ridicule the Saints they write of. (e) Vitas Sanctorum ſic deſcripſerunt Pontificii, quaſi propoſitum iis fuiſſet eos differre populo, & exſibilandos proponere. Mariam Ægyptiam perhibent cum non haberet unde naulum ſolveret, voluiſſe facere nautis corporis ſui copiam, ut quod non habebat in ære lucret in corpore. You will eaſily believe me, when I ſay that I will not take the part of the Legendary Writers; nevertheleſs I may ſay, that a judicious Writer might relate what Mr du Moulin alledges as a Proof of Indiſcretion: For if it were true, that Mary the Egyptian would have proſtituted herſelf to the Mariners for Payment of what ſhe owed them, becauſe ſhe had no Money; I do not ſee why any Hiſtorian ſhould ſuppreſs it: Is it not very proper to exalt the Mercy of God, and the Efficacy of (e) Petrus Molinæus in Hyperaſpiſtes adverſus Silveſtrum Petrafanctam, p. 46.

Paſſage. The Confeſſion of Sancy (B) has too much abridg'd the Hiſtory of this Woman: It is in the Chapter wherein there is a fraud (C) concerning St. Dominick, and a Nun call'd MARY. This Name will make my Remark not altogether impertinent; but Spirit? The more enormous the extravagance of a debauch'd Woman has been, the more we ought to admire her Converſion, and the long auſterities of her Penance: And therefore Diſcretion does not oblige an Author to ſay nothing of the ſingular Circumſtances of the Lewdneſs of the Convert. Moreover it cannot be objected to the Legendary Writers, that they tranſgreſs the Rule of Probability; for theſe Creatures, which are the Victims of publick Impurity, as Tertullian calls them, are ſometimes reduc'd to the laſt Farthing, or elſe they had rather gratifie their Creditors with the uſe of their Body, than diſcharge the Debt by paying the Money.

(B) Has too much abridg'd the Hiſtory of this Woman.] Here follow the words of d'Aubigne. " (f) " The Legend of the Saints is the Garden of the " Soul: In this Garden are Herbs, which at leaſt " give reſt, if they do not cure. A Spark " who complies with the Neceſſity of the Times, " knows what the Country People call Robbing. " If he finds that his diſſolute Soul cannot change " its Life, there is in the Legend, in the Chap. of " the Annunciation, an Example of a Knight, who " Robb'd without pity both Poor and Rich, and " was acquitted for ſaying once every Day, Ave " Maria. And as to the Soldiers of theſe Days, " it is what they commonly practiſe. If a Lady " of the Court feels in her diſſolute Soul, that " ſhe cannot leave her Great, Catholick and Uni- " verſal Lewdneſs, has not ſhe Mary the Egyptian to " comfort her, who from the Age of twelve Years, " till ſhe became contemptible for old Age, never " refus'd a Man? And have not we the Example " of St. Magdalen ſo ancient in famous Chrono- " cles. The writers of the Legend have after- " wards taught us, how ſhe by her Charms made " many Men of good Families ſell their Goods " for her; many valiant Men cut their Throats " through jealouſie of their Love, and then " ſhe had no ſooner left off, but preſently ſhe " was Canoniz'd." The omiſſion of this Author, with reſpect to St. Mary the Egyptian, and St. Magdalen, is inexcuſable; for he ſuppoſes that theſe two Proſtitutes were immediately advanc'd from their infamous place, to the Rank of Canoniz'd Saints, and by this Suppoſition he pretends to prove, that the Legend is very fit to let looſe the Reins to thoſe Ladies, who have a boundleſs deſire to ſpend their time with Men. If he had dealt candidly, he ſhould have told us of the long Penance of theſe two Saints; but ſince this would have ſpoil'd the Rallery he intended in the Objection againſt the Legendary Writers, he thought it would be better to ſay nothing of it, or even to deny it (g). Let us learn from hence, that Satyrical Writers are the People in all the World, againſt whom a Reader ſhould moſt guard himſelf. Theſe are the Men who reaſon the worſt of any, and by the pleaſantneſs of their Wit, hinder us from enquiring into their Sophiſtical Arguments. But let us remember, that if they can diſpenſe with many Rules, yet they ought to be no leſs ſubject to the Laws of Reaſoning (h) than grave Authors.

(C) Wherein there is a fraud concerning St. Dominick.] I make this Remark only to ſet in a clearer light what was ſaid juſt now; and therefore it ought not to be condemn'd as being foreign to this place. (i) " When I was a Huguenot, (they are Sancy's " words) I found nothing that made me laugh " ſo much as the Legend of Brother Jacopon. " There is alſo a Book in our Houſe, on which " I have made fine Annotations, as particularly " upon making his Brother confeſs his Sins by " Signs. Madam de Villeroy enquiring, how " he confeſs'd his Whoring, had alſo the cu- " riority to ask, how they call'd in Greek, that " light Oil which St Dominick ſpilt between the " Nuns Thighs, and call'd it the Oil of Love." 'Tis certain, that d'Aubigne falſifies the Legend, that he may give the Story a more diverting air; but I think that neither the Laws of Rallery, nor even of Satyr do allow of this. The Legend ſays (k), That a Nun being in an Extaſie, thought ſhe ſaw him come into her Chamber, accompanied with two Friars, and that he took out from under his Garment an Ointment of a very good ſmell, wherewith he rubb'd her Leg, and call'd it the ſign of Charity. (l) Maria ſanctimonialis in Extaſi vidit Dominicum cum duobus fratribus ante lectum ejus intrantem, qui de ſub cappa ungentum miræ fragrantiæ proferens, tibiam ejus inunxit, quam unctionem dilectionis eſſe ſignum dixit. By comparing theſe words with thoſe in the Confeſſion of Sancy, what falſifications do we not find? The Legend does not ſay, that Dominick applied an Ointment to the Nun's Leg, but it ſays, that the Nun being in an extaſy, thought ſhe ſaw this Saint who rubb'd her Leg with the Ointment; and ſo it was only a Dream, or a Viſion At leaſt d'Aubigne ſhould have ſtopt at the Nun's Leg, and not have corrupted the Text, by the falſe gloſs of ſpilling light Oil between the Legs. If the Queſtion was about the Trunk of a Tree, it would be a ſmall miſtake; a little nearer to, or farther from the Earth, would make no difference; but in ſuch a Subject as this the difference is Capital. Mr. du Moulin in his Anſwers to Petra-ſancta, promiſes to ſpeak elſewhere (a) of this Unction of St. Dominick. I do not know whether he kept his word, but his Brother-in-Law Andrew Rivet anſwering the ſame Jeſuit, does very candidly ſtop at the literal ſenſe of the Legend; he owns, that this anointing of the Leg was only a Dream; but he declares, that theſe extatick Viſions were ridiculous and juſtly ſuſpected (b) It was at this, as he pretends, that du Moulin ſcoffed, and not meerly at the uſe of Ointments for healing of the Sick, a thing practis'd by the Apoſtles. (c) Accuſat Molinæum, quod riſerit Dominicum ſanantem mulierem oleo, & Franciſcum aviculis concionantem. Primum illud non potuit ſimpliciter irridere Molinæus, qui noverat initio Chriſtianiſmi Apoſtolos unxiſſe ægros oleo, & ſanaſſe, Marc. 7. Sed riſit & merito, quod in legenda Dominici legatur, quod Maria Sanctimonialis, &c. (d). Obſerve that Petra-ſancta knowing that in the Library of Sedan, they had laughed at this Action of Dominick, did not make uſe of the Anſwer which the Legend could have furniſh'd him with, viz. That it was a Dream; for he was ignorant of this Circumſtance: But he anſwer'd very ſeriouſly, That they might as well make ſuch a rallery at Jeſus Chriſt, who anointed a dumb Man with his Spittle. (†) Sedani, dum Bibliotheca, his qui mecum advenerant, oſtenderetur, nihil fermè auditum eſt, præter Sanctorum irriſiones. Riſit aliquis ſanctum Dominicum, perſanantem oleo mulierem ægram Rideat perinde Chriſtum Dominum aut ſaliva utentem, aut luto, dum os muti aperiret, & dum oculis unius cæci nati explicaret lucem & diem This is a bad Anſwer, for this is to own the Matter of Fact After all, the Ralleries of d'Aubigne muſt needs be falſe, ſince they are founded upon a Lye And this ſhould teach the Readers, that if they would be well inſtructed in Controverſie, they muſt neither conſult Satyrs, nor Books of Burleſque: This were to ſit in the Seat of the Scorners, an Action condemn'd in the firſt Pſalm Such People when they have a mind to divert themſelves (f), ſpare not their beſt Friends, but they care little for Truth (g). See the Remark (D). Thus when the Poet whom I cite, makes this demand, " (b) Can any thing hinder one that jeſts " from ſpeaking the Truth? He might be anſwer'd " you'll find an Anſwer to this in your 4th Satyr, " where you ſay that a Jeſter gives no Quarter " even to his beſt Friends; much leſs does he re- " gard the Circumſtances of a Story." Nevertheleſs the Queſtion put by Horace is reaſonable, for it ſignifies no more but that 'tis poſſible for one in Rallery to ſpeak the Truth; and this is inconteſtable.

The Injury done by d'Aubigne will be better diſcover'd, if we conſider, that in all probability the Apology for Herodotus was his Original: In which Book I find theſe words " (i) I will not " forget another act of the ſame St. Dominick, re- " lated (f) Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy, B. 1. c. 2. p. m. 329.

(g) This d'Aubigne does in theſe words, She had no ſooner left off, but ſhe was preſently Canoniz'd.

(h) See the Article Colomies Remark C.

(i) D'Aubigne ubi

(k) In Jacobus de Voragine.

(l) Jacobde Voragine in Aurea Legenda, apud Rivetum in Caſtigat. notarum in epiſtol. Molinæi ad Balzacum, c. 6. n. 2. Oper. tom. 3 p. 511

(a) De Dominico conſricante femur puellæ unguento amoris ſuo loco agetur. Molinæus ubi ſupra p. 47

(b) Effaſes illæ monialium quæ monachos Sommant ingredientes & earum ungentes tibias unguento dilectionis de ſub cappa, & ridiculæ ſunt & ſuſpectæ. Rivet ubi ſupra

(c) Id ib.

(†) Petra-ſancta, nor in epiſtol. Molinæi ad Balzacum, c. 3 p. 32.

(f) Fenum habet in cornu, longe fuge dum modo riſum Excutiat ſibi non hic cuiquam parcet amico. Horat. Sat. 4. lib. 1

(g) Compare the Article Broſſier, Remark A.

(b) Ridentem dicere verum Quid vetat? Horat. Sat. 1. lib. 1. v. 24.

(i) Henry Stephen's Apology for Herodotus, c. 24. p. 367, 368 but ſince it is moreover deſign'd to oppoſe the bad Inclination Men have to truſt too much (CΔ) to Satyrical Writers, I hope I ſhall be excus'd for irregularity of placing it here.

If I could have conſulted (D) the Work, which is entituled S. Maria Ægyptiaca, muſta

" lated towards the end of his Legend, an Act " truly of a good Companion, at leaſt related in " ſuch a manner as will make good Companions " laugh, and afford them matter of jeſting; which " was this, that a Nun call'd Mary, having a pain " in her Thigh, endur'd it for the ſpace of five " Months, and deſpair'd of curing it. Then ſhe " ſaid to her ſelf, that ſhe was not worthy to pray " unto God, nor to be heard by him, and there- " fore ſhe deſir'd St. Dominick to be a Mediator be- " tween God and her, to obtain for her the Bleſ- " ſing of Health. And after this Requeſt, being " aſleep, ſhe ſaw near her St. Dominick, who took " from under his Garment an Oil of a good ſmell, " wherewith he anointed her Thigh. And when " ſhe ask'd how the Ointment was call'd, St. Do- " minick anſwer'd, that it was the Ointment of " Love." Thus you ſee that even by the Confeſſion of Henry Stephens the Nun was aſleep.

(k) Jurieu Prejug. 1. part. p. 198.

Mr. Jurieu confeſſes the ſame thing, but according to his Cuſtom he takes little care to ſpeak exactly. His words (k) are theſe. " The " ſame Legend ſays, that a Nun call'd Mary, ha- " ving for the ſpace of five Months a great pain " in the Parts next to thoſe which I dare not " name, St. Dominick appear'd to her in a Dream, " and pull'd from under his Habit an Ointment " of a very good ſmell, wherewith he rubb'd the " part affected, and being ask'd by the Maid what " it was, he anſwer'd, that it was call'd unguen- " tum amoris. This is as chaſt as the Amours of " Francis for St. Clara, and his Paſſion for Friar " Maſſius, whom he embrac'd and rais'd from the " Ground in his Arms. Which put Father Maſſius " in ſo great a heat, that he was like one in the " midſt of a Fire, ſays the Book of the Conformities." Note, that he puts in the Margin this Summary; The Abominations of St. Francis and St. Dominick; and conclude from thence, that he treats the Controverſie as if he were playing at Blind-Man's-Buff with his Eyes clos'd. I leave it to thoſe who believe it is not lawful to act deceitfully for the Religion, i. e. to tranſgreſs the Duties of Religion for the ſake of Religion; I leave it to them, I ſay to judge, whether Honour and Conſcience can permit, that the word tibia ſhould be tranſlated by the Parts next to thoſe which I dare not name. It is a Circumlocution which would be abſurd in all ſorts of Subjects; for in ſhort the word Leg, which anſwers that of tibia, has nothing in it which obliges a Man to uſe any Periphraſis: But to make uſe of it on purpoſe to give one an Idea of Impurity, is to carry the matter beyond an Abſurdity, and is a criminal Fraud. The Cheat does no leſs appear in the change of theſe Terms, ſignum dilectionis, into thoſe of unguentum amoris. But what will you ſay of a Writer, who rather than loſe the Compariſon he had found in the Apology (l) for Herodotus, compares the Viſion of a Nun in an Extaſie, with the Embraces of two Men full of vigor? Tho' it were certain the Nun had dream'd that St. Dominick came to Bed to her, and committed Uncleanneſs with her, muſt we therefore conclude that he was guilty? Are we anſwerable for the wild Fancies of another Perſon? Did the Mother of Julius Cæſar loſe any thing of her Merit, becauſe her Son dream'd (m) that he had to do with her? Here is a Controverſie who calls the Application of an Ointment the Abomination of St. Dominic, which was only an Appariſion in a Dream, as he himſelf ſays.

(l) Ubi ſupra, p. 368.

(m) Sueton. in Cæſare, c. 7.

(CΔ The bad inclination which Men have to truſt much to Satyrical Writers.] Theſe Writers are like thoſe Jeſters, who ſacrifice every thing to the pleaſure of putting off their Jeſts. Horace has very well deſcrib'd this Paſſion in the Verſes cited above. Quintilian makes uſe of the ſame Colours for drawing the Picture of ſuch ſort of People, and for giving a diſtaſte of their Character. Let us beware of the Maxim of thoſe, who had rather loſe their Friend than their Jeſt. (n) Ludere nunquam vetimus, longeque abſit propoſitum illud, potius amicum quam dictum perdidi. Cicero obſerves, that they ſlight all the Conſiderations of Decency, and have no regard either to Perſons or Occaſions, and could more eaſily keep Fire in their Mouths than a Jeſt. (o) Parcebat (Craſſus) adverſarii dignitati, in quo ipſe ſervabat ſuam, quod eſt hominibus facetis, & dicacibus difficillimum, habere hominum rationem & temporum, & ea quæ occurrant, quum ſalſiſſime dici poſſint, tenere. Itaque nonnulli ridiculi homines hoc ipſum non inſulſe interpretantur. Dicere enim ajunt Ennium flammam e ſapiente facilius ore inardente opprimi quam bona dicta teneat: hæc ſcilicet bona dicta quæ falſa ſint. Nam ea dicta appellantur proprio jam nomine. We muſt not wonder that they do not ſpare their Friends, for they do not ſpare themſelves: They make themſelves pleaſant at their own Coſt; and their Character is like that of thoſe Buffoons, who ſtrike indifferently themſelves and others. Ariſtotle (a) deſcribes them by this. They ſpare neither God nor Men; and the Religion of their Heart does not eſcape their poynant Wit. It is too weak a Barrier to keep off the irruption of a flaſh of Wit. Judge then, whether the Religion which they believe to be falſe can reſtrain ſuch ſallies of Wit. The Glory and Satisfaction which they expect from the boldneſs of a Jeſt, tranſports them beyond all other Conſiderations; and thoſe who have ſaid that a Poetick Vein (c) is a vomiting Potion, whoſe Operation cannot be ſtop'd without great danger of choaking, have given us a lively Image of the Paſſion of theſe People. We may add, that when they have their Pen in their Hand, they quit all things to run after ſome Satyrical Thoughts; and when they diſcover any Foot-ſteps of them, tho' far diſtant, they throw themſelves on that ſide at a random; and leſt they ſhould digreſs to no purpoſe, they force in and wind any Matter till they have adjuſted it to their purpoſe; and if they find it too long and too groſs, they contract and ſmooth it as much as their Intereſt requires. Theſe Writers (d) may be compar'd to Procruſtes, who made all his Priſoners equal to the meaſure of his Bed. Theſe words of Montagne agree to them exactly. " (e) There are ſome Fools that turn " out of their way a quarter of a League to hunt " after a fine word, aut qui non verba rebus aptant " (1), ſed res extrinſecus acceſſunt, quibus verba con- " venant. And that other Paſſage, (2) Qui alicu- " jus verbi decore placentis vocentur ad id quod non " propoſuerant ſcribere."

(o) Cicero de Orat. l. 2. c. 54. fol. m. 81 C.

(a) Δ' δὲ βωμολόχοι ἦτ- χον ἐξ τῆς γελοίας ὑ ὅτε ἑαυτῶ, ὅτε τῶν ἀλλων ἀπεχόμε- νοι δὲ γελοῖα ποιοῦσι. Scurra autem ridiculo moderari non poteſt, cum nec ſibi nec aliis parcat, dummodo riſum moveat. Ariſt. de morib. ad Nicomach. l. 4. c. 14. p. m. 42, 43.

(c) I have read this in a Romance entituled, The Queen of Æthiopia, Printed in 1670, or 1671.

There is more or leſs in all this, and I do not put together all theſe Ideas to prove, that all thoſe who delight in Rallery and Satyr, do equally, and without exception, adopt theſe Exceſſes. But it is a matter of moment to diſcover by the ugly ſide this Character of Wit, whereby Men are ſo eaſily deceiv'd. A Writer of Controverſies who has a good Wit, diverts many Readers of his Party, when he turns things maliciouſly, and with an Air of Rallery, Satyr and Burleſque; and the more he diverts them, the more forcibly he perſuades. Now, ſince the Method he adopts, engages him into a Thouſand Cheats, and a Thouſand Falſifications, 'tis neceſſary one ſhould know that he is a dangerous Impoſtor. This will inable as to ſtand upon our guard, to read an Author as one we muſt diſtruſt, to take nothing upon his word, to examine what he ſays, and to confront him with the Originals; and if we find he has chang'd ſignum delectionis into unguentum amoris, we'll tell him I am not your Cully, addreſs your ſelf to others.

(d) See in the Critique Generale de l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſm againſt Maimb. Letter 5. p. 95. of the third Edition, what uſe has been made of this Parallel. See alſo in p. 517. of Menage's Etymologies of the Italian Tongue, & p. 355. of his 1ſt Vol. of his Antibaillet, another compariſon between Procruſtes and the Sonnet.

(D) The Work entitul'd S. Maria Ægyptiaca.] Theophilus Raynaudus is the Author of it. I have ſeen in another of his Books, that he ſuppos'd the truth of the Hiſtory of this Saint, notwithſtanding all the Efforts of the Centuriators of Magdeburg, who look upon it as a Fable (f), that ſhe liv'd on two Loaves ſeventeen Years; that ſhe was taken up into the Air; that ſhe went over the River Jordan without ſwimming, and without a Boat, and that

(e) Montagne, Eſſays, B. 1. c. 25. p. m. 261.

(1) Words not ſuit words to matter, but force in things impertinent, to which their Words may agree. Quinct. l. 8. (2) Who ly the allurement of a word which pleaſes them, are carried away to that which they had no deſire to write. Senec. Epiſt. 59.

(f) Centur. 4. c. 10. p. 1334.

(n) Quintil. l. 6. c. 3. p. m. 288.

...musca de extremo fluminum Ægypti, sibilo Domini evocata I might have enlarg'd very much in this second Edition the Article of St. Mary the Egyptian; but not being able to recover it, I can only make this Addition. This Saint liv'd without Meat and Cloaths the last thirty Years of her solitude, and was so disfigur'd * with Heat and Cold, that she might have been taken for an Æthiopian. Two Loaves and some Herbs suffic'd her for the first seventeen Years of her Penance †.

...contis ... frigore & æstu tosta ut videretur Æthiopissa. Cornel. a Lapide in Deuteron. c. 8. v. 4. p. m. 1010.

† Taken from Cornelius à Lapide, ibid.

MARILLAC (CHARLES DE) Archbishop of Vienne, was born in Auvergne, about the Year 1510. He was Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, when perceiving himself suspected of Lutheranism, he follow'd John de la Forest Ambassador of Francis I. to Constantinople. Thus he avoided the terrible Persecution, which was to be fear'd from the Inquisitors. He was made Ambassador to the Sultan after the Death of la Forest, and afterwards was entrusted with several other Embassies ‡. which he perform'd very well. He was Abbot of St. Pere *, Archbishop of Vienne, and Counsellor in the Privy-Council, when there was an Assembly of great Men call'd together at Fontainebleau in the Month of August 1506. In it he deliver'd an Harangue (A), wherein Learning and Eloquence did no less appear than his Zeal for the Reformation of the Disorders in the Church and State: And there he also advis'd, among other things, the Convocation of a National Council, and a meeting of the States General. The Guises were offended at his Harangue, and obstructed the good Effects of his Counsels. He endeavour'd to take good Measures to prevent the Mischiefs where-with that some Lions took care of her Burial. I have seen also, that Nicolas Harsplsfeld, under the Name of Alanus Copus (g), has refuted on this Subject the Centuriators, and that there is in the Book of Theophilus Raynaudus an Appendix concerning the Women who left their Lewdness and became Saints. Porro hujus operis Mantissa est, Tractatio de mulieribus Sanctis e cœno turpitudinum emersis (h).

‡ In England and Germany, &c.

* Abb. Melun.

(g) Dial. 2. c. 1. & 14.

(h) Taken from Theophilus Raynaudus, Syntagm. de libris propriis, n. 24. p. 42. & 43. Apopompæi.

(A) A Harangue, wherein Learning and Eloquence did no less appear than his Zeal for ] You will find it entire in the President de la Place, in the 3d Book of the State of Religion and the Republick; and in the History of Francis II. written by Lewis Regnier. These two Writers agree in saying, that the Archbishop of Vienne, who gave his Opinion after the other Counsellors of the Privy-Council, carried away the Prize of Honour. "(i) For as he was a "Person endow'd with singular Gifts and Graces, "and had been employ'd in Embassies of great "Importance far and near with great applause; "so he did not only deliver his Opinion very "Learnedly, as was believ'd, but also gave satisfaction to the greatest part of the Company." These words of Lewis Regnier precede the Harangue of Marillac, and when he says: "(k) "Such was the Learned, Wise and Christian "Speech of this great Person, who liv'd not long "after it, being frighted by those whom he had "displeas'd. Others say, that seeing how things "grew worse and worse he died of Grief." Mr. Varillas gives us an Abridgment of this Speech, but not without some falsifications, of which this is one: He supposes, that Marillac represented (l), "That the ancient Affection of the French for "their King was notably diminish'd, and that "there was no other way to restore it but by an "Assembly of the States: That this was the only Tribunal appointed to hear the Complaints "of the whole Nation, and to satisfie them, as "the other Tribunals were for ending Differences "between private Persons: That the ancient "Founders of the French Monarchy had only reserv'd to themselves this Place, wherein they "might share with the King in the absolute Authority they had given him; where they might "be admitted to a kind of Equality, which was "necessary for repairing what the Prince had usurp'd over his Subjects, and what the Subjects has "usurp'd over their Prince; and lastly, where the "supreme and unlimited Power, wherewith they "had invested him should not hinder them from "Negotiating, and concluding Treaties with him, "which should be obligatory on both sides: "That this moderate Liberty had maintain'd the "Crown for Eleven Hundred Years, by the wonderful Counterpoise wherewith Power and Submission were balanc'd." 'Tis certain that the Archbishop of Vienne said nothing that contain'd these Maxims either formally or virtually, if I may use this word. How can we trust the Abstracts which this Historian makes of MSS. when we see how he corrupts Printed Speeches? You may see in the next Remark, how far he took the Liberty to alter and falsifie them.

(i) Lewis Regnier Hist. of Francis II. p. 523, 524.

(k) Id. ib. p. 553.

(l) Varillas Hist. of Francis II. B. 2 p. m. 23.

(B) There he advised——the calling——of the States General. ] He made use of the most solid Reasons that could be alledg'd, and answer'd very well the Objections, and particularly that which was taken from his saying, That the Authority of the King would be diminish'd. Those who say this, answered he, "(m) seem to me not to know "the Hearts of the French, who have always done "for their King what lay in their Power; and to "require more were an unjust Exaction and an Impossibility. And therefore to propose to Kings "things that are just, is to establish their Authority, and not to diminish it, since they cannot do otherwise without violating the Name "of a King; and by that means the King "may obtain every thing he has a mind to, "since he has so good a People that they will "refuse him nothing. And if it be replied, that "the King stints himself who has nothing without the consent of the People; I answer, That "since without assembling the States, and hearing the Reasons which mov'd the Prince to encrease the ancient Offices, the People have "formerly obey'd, without Contradiction, what "will not they do when they believe, that "the Reasons of the demand, made to the "States, will be found just? If it be urg'd, "that this is to make the People Judges, whether "what the King demands is just It may be replied, that among many People assembled, the "greatest part of them will seek the publick "good, and that the People are capable of understanding what is for their own Advantage, and "so of consenting to it, since the Voice of the "People is commonly that which is approv'd "by God." Can any thing be more contrary than this Discourse of the Archbishop of Vienne, and the words of Varillas related before? But the better to discover that this Historian did not apprehend the design of what he undertook to abridge, I must here set down another Passage of Marillac's Speech. We shall there see what were his Thoughts, as well with respect to Policy as to Religion: And we shall find, that as to the latter he resembled Erasmus; for he would have Abuses reform'd, but none to make use of Arms, either to support the Reformation, or to oppress the Reformers The fourth Preparative, says he, (n) is, "That in expectation of the Coun-"cil, the Seditious be check'd and restrain'd. "so that they may not disturb the Tranquility and "Peace of good Men, and to take this for an undoubted Maxim, that 'tis not lawful to take up "Arms for any thing whatsoever, without the "Will, Command and Permission of the Prince "who has the sole disposal of them This I say because of the sad Examples that have lately happen'd, and whereof we have daily new Informations On one side we have seen the Tumult of Amboise, under colour of presenting a Confession, whereas it ought to have been brought with "all humility. On the other side several Preachers have endeavour'd to raise up the People for "the extirpation of the Protestants under colour "of a Holy Sedition; as if Religion allow'd, that with the Kingdom was threatned; but ſeeing no probability of ſucceeding in it, he fell * into a melancholy, which brought upon him a Diſeaſe, whereof he quickly after died; which happen'd December 2. 1560, at his Abby of St. Pere. Gabriel de MARILLAC, his Brother, died Advocate General in the Parliament of Paris in 1551, and was an able underſtanding Man, and of an exemplary Probity: Conſult Thuanus †. You will find in Moreri's Dictionary, a very long Article of our Charles Marillac, and a long account of many Perſons of this Family; but you will find nothing there about Francis de MARILLAC, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, under Henry II. I ſhall ſay ſomething of him (C) in my Commentary. I don't think that the Advocate I have mention'd in another place was a different Man from this Charles Marillac,

(m) Lewis Regnier, ubi supra, p. 548

(n) Lewis Regnier, ib. p. 557

* Unde Viennenſis in profundum mœrorem & mœrore in letalem morbum incidit, ex quo paulo poſt deceſſit. Thuan. ubi infra.

† Thuan. l. 26. init. p. m. 520. ad an. 1560. See the Remark E.

" either for the planting or preſerving of it, to " make uſe of Sedition. Thus on both ſides " there was a fault: For as before Men were " kill'd upon pretence of being Proteſtants; ſo " on the contrary the Judges were forc'd, and " the ordinary Courts were aſſaulted to make " them deliver up the Proteſtant Priſoners: And " thus under the Mask of Religion, many uſurp'd " the Authority of the Magiſtrate, and took up " Arms, which was no wiſe lawful, being for- " bidden to them all. For the deſign of the Law is " to live Godlily, and not to offend any Body: " And the deſign of Arms is to make the Law " obey'd. The King therefore being the Con- " ſervator of the Law, and for that end ordain'd " by God, is conſequently the ſole diſpoſer of " Arms, which are given him to puniſh thoſe that " tranſgreſs the Law. Wherefore to conclude, " he makes himſelf King, who takes up Arms by " his own Authority, and is not ordain'd by God " to be one. And hence it follows, that every " body ſhould oppoſe him, as being one that re- " ſiſts the Ordinance of God, which is the ap- " pointment of a King.

WHETHER the meeting of the States General is profitable in France.

How wiſe ſoever the Advices of this Archbiſhop were concerning the Convocation of the States, they were much cenſur'd by a famous Lawyer: For Stephen Paſquier writes thus upon this Subject. " (b) He who firſt gave this Advice of holding a " Meeting of the States, was Charles Marillac. He " in the Aſſembly at Fontainebleau (either becauſe " the Affairs of France were not govern'd accord- " ing to his mind, or upon ſome other occaſion) " by a ſudden impulſe of Nature made a brisk Re- " monſtrance, wherein after he had conſider'd all " ſorts of Advices he could think of, he declar'd " that he found no Remedy more effectual for " the preſent Evil, than to call together the " States. It is an old Folly, that runs in the " Mind of the wiſeſt French, that nothing can ſo " much relieve the People, as ſuch Aſſemblies: " Whereas on the contrary, nothing does them " greater Prejudice, as I could prove by an infi- " nite number of Reaſons, but that I ſhould ex- " ceed the bounds of a Letter. This Opinion at " firſt troubled a little the Cardinal of Lorrain, " who was afraid leſt it ſhould give a check to the " King, and deſtroy the Authority which he and " the Duke of Guiſe had in the Government dur- " ing the Minority of the young King their Ne- " phew. And indeed from that time this Arch- " biſhop was never look'd upon by him with a good " Eye, and voluntarily baniſh'd himſelf from Court. " Nevertheleſs after he had conſulted with his " Servants, of what Conſequence this Convoca- " tion of the States might be, and finding that " it could be no prejudice to the King, whom he " and his Brother had made the moſt powerful, " he was ſo far from rejecting this Opinion, that " he embrac'd it very heartily, as thinking it " might prove a means for baniſhing with the " greater aſſurance and ſolemnity all the Prote- " ſtants out of France." Paſquier obſerves, that the Death of Francis II. ſpoil'd in an inſtant the Deſigns of this Cardinal; and having related part of what was inacted in the meeting of the States of Orleans, he adds, " (c) But for a ge- " neral Concluſion, they have granted for five " Years to the King, a ſubſidy of five Sous, for " each Barrel of Wine that is brought into " the Walled Towns. This is for the moſt part " the End and Concluſion of ſuch Aſſemblies, " to draw Money from the People, by an honeſt " bargain between the King and his three States." Note, I pray you, that Paſquier boaſted that he had an infinite number of Reaſons, to prove that nothing is more pernicious to France, than the meeting of the States General. I do not doubt but he could have produc'd many Reaſons upon this Subject, and I believe alſo that our Charles Marillac could have replied to them all, and that it is a matter which Men may diſpute eternally Pro and Con. But if we appeal to Experience, 'tis apparent, that the Opinion of Paſquier muſt prevail: For it would be very difficult, to ſhow any Advantages France has drawn from theſe Aſſemblies, and eaſie to prove (d), that they have ſerv'd to foment Factions. The Engliſh have reaſon to ſay, that the frequent meeting of Parliaments is neceſſary for the good of their Country; but France cannot ſay the ſame thing of the meeting of her States General. They were often call'd together under the Reign of the Sons of Henry II. and France was never more embroil'd and haraſſed than at that time; and inſtead of finding a Remedy by theſe Meetings, the Grievances were made worſe by them. No Man ought more freely to own this Truth than thoſe of the Reform'd Religion, for in theſe Aſſemblies their Enemies got new ſtrength. There are ſome who compare the meeting of the States General with the Councils. They are, ſay they, Aſſemblies that bode ill; they ſignifie that the publick Evils are great, and that Men begin to deſpair of curing them. It happens then, as in Diſeaſes that are almoſt deſperate; many Phyſicians are call'd for and ſent for from remote places; they conſult, they diſpute, they ſeldom agree, and at laſt they muſt come to a majority of Votes, and ſo manage the matter that the ſick Man may ſay (e), The multitude of Phyſicians has kill'd me. Fine Harangues are not wanting in theſe Aſſemblies, and much leſs Cabals and Intrigues; and for the moſt part the Concluſion is not the effect of Juſtice and Truth, but of the moſt powerful Faction.

(b) Paſquier's Letters, B. 4. p. 192, 193 of the firſt tome.

(c) Id. ib. p. 195.

(C) I ſhall ſay ſomething of Francis de MARILLAC.] He and Peter Robert were appointed Council to the Prince of Conde, in 1560, in the Suit about a capital Crime, which made ſo much noiſe, and which, as was thought, would have made him loſe his Head upon a Scaffold. (f) Cum præcipiti Guiſianorum violentia, amputatas omnes moras videret Condæi uxor, libello ſupplice à rege petit & impetrat, ut marito homines ſpectatæ eruditionis ac prudentiæ darentur, quorum conſilio uteretur: Nominati à Rege Petrus Robertus & Franciſcus Marillacus celeberrimi in foro patroni. I cite theſe words of Thuanus, becauſe they diſcover the Reputation of Francis Marillac. It had been not long before Advocate to Annas du Bourg. They have put in the Table of the Hiſtory of Francis II. that Marillac the Advocate betray'd du Bourg in pleading for him. This ought to be explain'd, for otherwiſe it might be inferr'd from it, that this Advocate was a Traitor and a Prevaricator, and this would be a great Injury done to him, ſince there was nothing in all his management but an officious Lye, which was deſign'd to ſave his Client's Life. The matter of Fact is thus related by the Sieur de la Planche. " (a) His cauſes of Recuſation (b) were by a De- " cree pronounc'd by Olivier, declar'd admiſſible, " and it was order'd that he ſhould have Coun- " cil, which had been before deny'd him, " ſo that the Cardinal was confounded. The " Advocate Marillac was aſſign'd him for Coun- " cil, and he us'd all his endeavours to make " him depart from his Confeſſion, alledging, that " without this he could not avoid Death; but " not being able to prevail with him to do it, he " perſuaded him to let him plead without in- " terrupting him, and then he might ſay what " he thought fit. Being therefore come before " the Judges, the Advocate remonſtrated the " Merits of the Cauſe, the manner of the Impri- " ſonment.

(d) One of the Reaſons that Charles Marillac had to oppoſe was this: He denied not the fact. Some, ſays he; ubi ſupra, p. 550. have ſet forth, what happen'd in the time of King John, when the States oblig'd the Dauphin to take many undecent Courſes.

(e) Hinc illæ circa ægros miſeræ ſententiarum concertationes, nullo idem conſente ne videatur acceſſio alterius. Hinc illa infelicis monumenti inſcriptio, Turba ſe medicorum periſſe. Plin. l. 29. c. 1. p. m. 667.

(f) Thuan. l. 26. p. 522. col. 1.

(a) Lewis Regnier Sieur de la Planche Hiſt. of Francis II. p. 53. Beza has tranſcrib'd all this Paſſage word for word in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſt. of the Churches l. 3. p. 222.

(b) i. e. thoſe writs du Bourg had alledged.

rillac, of whom la Croix du Maine * says, that he was a Gentleman of Paris, a Kinſman of the Archbiſhop of Vienne, an Advocate in Parliament, &c. a young Man very learned in the Greek, and well verſed in many Sciences, and that he died at Paris in 1581, or thereabouts, to the great grief of all his Friends. I ſee in Father Anſelm † one Charles de MARILLAC, who died Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, April 10. 1580, and who was Son to William de MARILLAC, Brother to the Archbiſhop of Vienna: There is no difference between (D) that Advocate and this Counſellor. Note, that la Croix du Maine obſerves that this Prelate β wrote many Books, of which there are but few Printed, and that thoſe that are in Print, are not Licenſed there being a Reaſon for it. Gilbert de MARILLAC, Baron of Puiſac and St. Geneſt, Eldeſt Brother to our Archbiſhop of Vienne, γ writ a Hiſtory of the Houſe of Bourbon, and among the reſt, the Life and great Actions of the Conſtable Charles de Bourbon, till the Month of March 1521. when he began his revolt. Antony de la Val, the King's Geographer, and Captain of the Caſtle of Moulins——has inſerted in this Hiſtory his Works Printed in 1605. The true Name (E) of this Family was Marlhac.

MARILLAC (Lewis de) Marſhal of France, Son to William de MARILLAC, who was Brother to the Archbiſhop of Vienna, was a Poſthumous Son, born in 1573 δ, or according to others, in the Month of July, 1572 ϑ. You will find in Moreri's Dictionary ζ the Employments that he had ſucceſſively, till he was ſeiz'd in Italy by the King's Order in 1630. He was try'd and condemn'd to loſe his Head, and was executed at Paris May the 10th 1632. The Curioſity of the Pariſians was ſo great η, that a Hundred Thouſand Perſons were witneſſes of the Execution, and that ſome Windows were let for eight Piſtoles. The moſt common Opinion is, that he was an innocent Victim, ſacrificed to the Reſentment of Cardinal Richelieu; but this can (A) hardly be believ'd

* La Croix du Maine, p. 46.

† Anſelm Hiſt. of the great Officers, p. 252.

β La Croix du Maine, ibid.

γ Vigneul Marville Melang. d'hiſtoire & de literat. tom. 2. p. 17. Dutch edit.

δ Anſelm Hiſt. of the great Officers, p. 251.

ϑ The Paris Gazette, May 17. 1632.

ζ Correct what he ſays ſuit, that he ſerv'd Henry III. on divers occaſions. He ſhould have ſaid Hen IV.

η The Paris Gazette, ubi ſupra

(a) Vigneul Marville Melange, tom 2 p. 16 Dutch Edition. 1700.

(b) Id. ib.

(f) That is, the Paris one, ex Officina Putеana 1563. in 16°

(g) Maludan Epiſt ad Lambinum, p. 367, Epiſtol clarorum, virorum edit. Lugduni 1561. I found this Paſſage in Mr Joly's Note on Loiſel's opuſcules, p. 707. ſee there in the 130 Page, a Paſſage of the Ciceronianus of Peter Ramus

(h) That is to ſay Denys Riant made the King's Advocate in 1551.

(i) That is to ſay Gabriel Marillac who was made the King's Advocate in 1545.

(k) I mention in Octob. 1732.

" ſonment which was ſuch as never had been practis'd, and much leſs the manner of Bertrand's " proceeding, who being void of all Shame and " Modeſty, had acted two or three Parts in " preſiding and aſſiſting at the three preceding Judgments. Whereby the Error did not " only moſt evidently appear, but alſo the nullity " of the Sentences and Decree; ſo that it was " neceſſary to begin the Proceſs anew, to null " and make void all the proceedings, ſince no " forms of the Courts of Juſtice had been obſerv'd. " But inſtead of concluding for his Appeal, he " ſubmitted, and had recourſe to the Mercy of " the King and the Court; confeſſing that his " Client had grievouſly offended God and Holy " Mother the Church, provok'd the King, and " had been diſobedient to his Biſhop, to whom " and the whole Roman Church he deſir'd to be " reconcil'd. Whereupon du Bourg, who was preſent, endeavouring to oppoſe what had been ſaid, " Marillac made a ſign to the Preſidents, deſiring " that his Life might be ſav'd by this means, who " inſtead of giving him a hearing, to know whether he acquieſced in what had been ſaid by his " Counſel, ſent him preſently back to his Priſon. " But while they were conſulting to depute two " among them, to acquaint the King with his " Converſion, and to beg his Pardon, behold a Paper written and ſign'd by du Bourg came, where- " in he diſown'd the Concluſions of his Advocate, " perſiſting in his Appeal, and in his Confeſſion " of Faith made before the King.

(a) Loiſel Dialogues des advocates du Parlement de Paris, p. 520.

(b) Loiſel's Opuſcul, p. 707.

(c) Loiſels, ubi ſupra, 551.

We ſee in a Dialogue of Antony Loiſel, that the chief Advocates of the Parliament of Paris were " (a) Mr. James Canaye of Paris, Claudius Mangot of Loudun, and Francis Marillac of Auvergne, who was " more eſteem'd than the other two, becauſe he " made very good Replies, but he was taken away " in the prime of his Years, ſo that his Houſe is " reduc'd to nothing, at leaſt if compared to " thoſe of Canaye and Mangot." Note (b), that he was of the ſame Family with the other Marillac's.

(1) Blanchard names two Charles de Marillacs Counſellors; one in 1541, who was—at laſt Archbiſhop of Vienne; the other was admitted the 20th of March, 1576, and is the Advocate of whom we are ſpeaking.

(2) In 1580. Blanch.

(D) There is no difference between that Advocate and this Counſellor.] We'll ſee what is ſaid of him in the ſame Dialogue of Antony Loiſel. " (c) Mr. " Charles Marillac ought not to be paſſed over in " ſilence, for he acquired as much Honour in that " little time he was at the Bar, as others do in all " their Lives. 'Tis true, anſwer'd Mr. Paſquier, he " was one of the moſt ſenſible and learned Men " that were then; but you know the Times in " which we live, and the ſmall value that is ſet upon Advocates in compariſon of the Counſellors, as " we complain'd at the beginning, and not without cauſe. His Relations did not give him " time to ſhew his ſufficiency, and the ſtrength of " his Parts as an Advocate, nor Death, what he " promiſed as a Counſellor; (1) for he was taken " off in the Flower of his Age. (2) I would ſay " more of him, if he had not learned of me.

(E) The true Name of this Family was Marlhac] " (d) 'Twas thus, That Gabriel Marillac, Advocate " General of the Parliament of Paris, ſign'd in all " the publick Acts and in his private Letters." The Author whom I quote aſſures us (e), that He learn'd this from an ancient Counſellor of State, who knew very well the illuſtrious Houſes and Families of France. After which he brings two Paſſages to prove, that this Advocate General, was as famous for his profound Knowledge as his rare Honeſty; one is from Thuanus, and the other from the Supplement to the Chronicle written by John Carion. He ſuppoſes that in the latter 'tis Gabriel Marillacus, but in my (f) Edition 'tis Gabriel Marlacus. This might have ſerv'd him to confirm what he had advanced. We may add to theſe two Paſſages, what Maludan writ to Denys Lambin. (g) Marilliacus Rigii Patronus, a. d. XI. Kal. Maias horâ quartâ pomeridianâ exceſſit è vitâ admodum Chriſtianè. Poſtridie funus duxerunt amici & propinqui ſine ullâ pompâ, ut moriens juſſerat: ſed non ſine omnium bonorum lachrymis. Deſiderant etiam inimici nunc ejus, λόγως ὀνησιμαλικὸς καὶ βδέλυς, καὶ χρειώδεις. Eo patrono ſiſcum nemo unquam dicere potuit, licuit, ut loquebatur olim Trajanus. In demortui locum ſuffectus eſt rideus (h). But nothing is more proper to confirm what was ſaid by a Counſellor of State to Mr. de Vigneul Marville, than the Marginal Note which is in the 504 Page of Antony Loiſel's Opuſcules: Here 'tis entire. " (i) He " is call'd Marlhac by Miraumont and Coquille, who " in his Commentaries on the Cuſtom of Nivernois, " Chap. 1. Art. 5. relates a Maxim of his in the " French Law (with great praiſe) in theſe words: " And as that very learned and good Man, Mr. Gabriel Marillac ſaid, who was the King's Advocate " in Parliament, and a good Model for the young Advocates who uſed to be at the Pleadings in the ſaid " Parliament, every Fraud deſerves in France extraordinary and corporal Puniſhment, if it be " manag'd as a Civil Affair.

(A) That he was an innocent Victim——but that can hardly be believ'd by ſuch Perſons as——ſubmit only to certainty] The Remark ΕΔ in the Article of Lewis XIII. might ſuffice for a Commentary upon this Text. Nevertheleſs I ſhall add to it many things. And at firſt I ſhall obſerve (k), that it is at preſent much more difficult to diſcover the Truth, than at the time when the Proceſs againſt Mr Marillac was entred, for then any one might be inform'd of matters by an infinite number of Perſons who knew this Marſhal: Then one might have enquir'd in the places where he Commanded, and one might have known the Names, the Titles, the Intereſts, and Reputation of the Witneſſes, and the Practices that were us'd on both ſides to put them on, either to depoſe or to retract. All this, and a hundred other things which at the time of the Proceſs were eaſie, are now impoſſible to be known. That Generation is now wholly paſt and gone, and we can only make uſe of the Prejudices and Books, which remain of that time. Let us enquire a lieu'd by ſuch Perſons as are not govern'd by Prejudices, and ſubmit only to certainty. I ſhall make ſome Obſervations upon this occaſion, and I imagine I ſhall not little what the Favourers of this Marſhal might ſay to thoſe whom they would perſuade of his Innocence, and who are fully reſolv'd to admit nothing but upon good Proof.

In the firſt place they might ſay, that the publick was then perſuaded and is ſtill, that he was guilty of nothing but diſpleaſing the Cardinal. 2. That it is notoriouſly known, that the Cardinal was ſo revengeful, that he ſpar'd nothing to ſatisfie his Reſentment. 3. That he was a Perſon of ſo great Credit, that he could compaſs his Deſigns, either by Promiſes or Threatenings. 4. That the Proceedings were attended with ſo many Irregularities wholly unjuſt, and fit to oppreſs the moſt innocent Perſon, that this alone is ſufficient to ſhow that the Marſhal was not guilty. 5. That his Sentence was reverſed by a Decree of the Parliament of Paris, after the Death of Cardinal Richelieu. The greateſt part of People do ſo little diſpute the Grounds on which they are made to believe ſome things, that they would eaſily acquieſce in the five Reaſons now propoſed: But there are others who have ſo little Faith, and are ſo very hard to be perſuaded, that they would not think them ſufficient grounds for their belief.

HOW much Cardinal Richelieu was hated.

I. To the firſt Reaſon they would anſwer, That the publick Opinion cannot be more ſuſpected in any caſe than in this. Cardinal Richelieu was become ſo odious through all France, that all the Evil that cou' 'be ſaid of his Conduct, was eaſily believ'd without any enquiry. He was in ſuch a Poſt wherein moſt Men are expos'd to Calumny and the Hatred of the People, and he behav'd himſelf in ſuch a manner as to draw upon him an infinite number of Enemies; for he daily encreas'd the Sovereign Authority, and puniſh'd great Men who durſt riſe up and cabal. This was to force them from an evil Cuſtom which was very pleaſant, and had been often profitable to them. He oppreſſed the People much more than had been done in other Reigns. In a word, the Yoak of the Royal Authority, which had always been too heavy in the People's Opinion, was become more unſupportable than ever under his Miniſtry. The People therefore were much diſpos'd to ſpeak ill of his Perſon, and they ſwallow'd down with joy, and as a kind of reſtorative, all the Satyrs, Complaints, Murmurings which were ſpread againſt his Reputation. France was then full of Malecontents, what was formerly call'd the Catholicon, and which cauſed ſo many Miſchiefs, and had left ſome Roots that remain'd ſtill. The greateſt part of the Devout People, and all the Bigots, were enrag'd, becauſe the Cardinal maintain'd the Proteſtants of Holland and Germany, and hindred the Houſe of Auſtria from ſubduing them. If he did good to ſome Perſons, they were thought unworthy of it: If he Perſecuted ſome, his Enemies complain'd, and bewail'd their being unworthily us'd. What relations were made of the laſt Moments of thoſe whom he got Condemn'd? What care was taken to collect all their pious Diſcourſes, all their acts of Love to God? It ſeem'd as if they had a deſign to ſwell the Martyrology, or to imitate that Famius whom have I mention'd in another place. The Execution at Lyons was not ſpoken of, but in a Style of Complaint: Which was very lawful as to Thuanus; but as to Mr. de Cinqmars, it was not enough to pity him; but they ſhould alſo have deteſted his Vanity, Ingratitude and Rebellion. Now ſince the Publick was thus diſpos'd towards Cardinal Richelieu, thoſe who will believe nothing but what is ſupported with good Proofs, can never be gain'd by this Argument: The general Opinion is, that Marſhal Marillac was only guilty of diſpleaſing the Cardinal, therefore he was guilty of nothing elſe.

II. The ſecond Reaſon has nothing in it that is convincing, ſince the Experience of all Tyrannick Reigns ſhows, that wicked Men fall ſome times into diſgrace under a bad Prince, or a very unjuſt Favourite, who ſacrifices to his Revenge every Body, who has the misfortune to diſpleaſe him. Read Tacitus, and the other relations of the ſame time, and you will find ſome Criminals among thoſe that were puniſh'd under Tiberius and Nero. The Informers attack'd ſometimes Perſons of a bad Life, and who could eaſily be convicted of the Crimes they were accus'd of. For any one therefore to conclude, becauſe ſuch an one loſt his Head upon the Scaffold under a bad Reign, therefore he was innocent, is to admit a falſe Conſequence, and to be deluded by a great Sophiſm. Much more ought we to take heed of this kind of Reaſoning, when we ſpeak of Lewis XIII. who was a very good King, and whoſe chief Miniſter, how violent and revengeful ſoever he was, was oblig'd to obſerve better Meaſures than are obſerved in a Tyrannick Reign.

III. To the third Reaſon the ſame Anſwer may be given as to the ſecond. Thoſe, whoſe Power was ſo great, that they could find Witneſſes and Judges enough to take away the Lives of innocent Men have had ſometimes Enemies who are wicked Men, and whom they puniſh'd with Death without doing any thing that is unjuſt and unreaſonable. Thus, tho' Cardinal Richelieu had been a hundred times more unjuſt and more powerful than he was, yet we cannot thence infer the innocence of any one of thoſe whom he got Condemn'd: For perhaps this Concluſion might be drawn in favour of thoſe guilty Perſons, who periſh ſometimes in the Courts of Tyrants. We muſt therefore lay aſide all Prejudices, and examine each Proceſs in particular. This is the only Expedient, for diſcovering whether ſuch and ſuch are innocent Victims ſacrific'd to the Anger of Cardinal Richelieu.

IV. Now we are come to the great and only Expedient. The Perſons whom I ſpeak of, who carefully enquire into the truth of what is propos'd to them to be believ'd, would deſire that the monſtrous irregularities might be prov'd which are alledg'd to be in the proceedings of the Commiſſioners who condemn'd our Marſhal: And if they were anſwer'd, that all thoſe, who might witneſs the truth of it, are dead; they would reply, How then do you know this matter of fact? To which the other Party might anſwer, that it is clearly ſet forth in two Printed Pieces, whereof one is entituled, A true Relation of what paſs'd at the Tryal of Marſhal Marillac, and of the execution of the Sentence given againſt him by the Commiſſioners appointed at Ruel, and of his laſt Words and Actions juſt before his Death; and the other is entituled, The happy Soul of Marſhal Marillac, to the unhappy Soul of Cardinal Richelieu. 'Tis true, will the others reply, we ought to examine theſe two Pieces; but withal we muſt examine a Printed Piece, which appear'd at the ſame time with this Title, Obſervations on the Life and Condemnation of Marſhal Marillac, and upon the Libel entituled, A Relation of what paſs'd at his Tryal, and at the Execution of the Sentence given againſt him. The Author of thoſe two firſt Pieces is not known; but 'tis certain the third was written by Mr. du Chaſtelet, a Man remarkable (a) for his Birth and his Offices; for he was Advocate-General in the Parliament of Rennes, Maſter of the Requeſts, Councellor of State in ordinary, and Intendant of Juſtice in the Royal Army. His Piece therefore ought to be eſteem'd of greater weight than the other two that are anonymous, which are to be ſeen in the Collection of what was publiſh'd in defence of the Queen Mother. Now we ſee that Mr. du Chaſtelet denies and refutes all that had been alledg'd about unjuſt and irregular Proceedings, and maintains that the moſt exact formalities were obſerv'd in the Tryal of Marſhal Marillac: Unleſs therefore you prove that he has falſly aſſerted ſome matters of fact and deny'd others, we cannot acquieſce in thoſe two anonymous Pieces. One thing which he does not deny, and we know moſt certainly, is, that Mr. Marillac was not try'd by the Parliament of Paris, but by Commiſſioners. This is a ſtrong Prejudice to the diſadvantage of the Cardinal; 'tis very well known what Judges extraordinarily created are capable of, when they are choſen by ſuch as are Enemies to the Party accuſed. However ſince we now ſeek for inconteſtable Proofs, or ſuch at leaſt as are ſtronger than great Preſumptions, we cannot pretend that this can determine us to believe the Marſhal innocent. We have ſome inſtances under that Reign, which prove, that ſome Commiſſioners choſen by Carnot be blam'd, if I ſet down part of the things which Mr. du Chaſtelet publiſh'd to the diſadvantage of this Marſhal. Every one may believe as he pleaſes, and ſince he was his Enemy, I am willing that he ſhould paſs for a very ſuſpected Witneſs. I ſhall not dinal Richelieu, did all that could be expected from a Court of the greateſt Integrity. Thoſe who judg'd Mr. de Cinqmars follow'd the practice in Criminal Cauſes with the greateſt exactneſs (c). Mr. de Laubardemont, who was thought to be entirely devoted to the Paſſions of the Cardinal, was the Reporter of the Proceſs. His Report was Printed (d), which is as clear, exact and agreeable to Rules as ever was ſeen. The Fact was prov'd by clear and full Evidence, and after this no good Judge in the Kingdom could judge otherwiſe than the Commiſſioners did who Condemn'd Mr. de Cinqmars. There was an extraordinary Court appointed in the next Reign for judging Mr. Fouquet, and none had reaſon to ſay that it oppreſs'd the innocent: Much leſs could any ſuch thing be ſaid of that which repared the Proceſs of Mr. de Luxembourg and judg'd him. If we inſiſt upon Prejudices, they will be found to favour Cardinal Richelieu, as to the Commiſſioners of Marſhal Marillac. The chief Man of the long Robe, the Keeper of the Seals, was plac'd at the head of them: The others were either Maſters of the Requeſts, or Preſidents, or Counſellors in the Parliament of Burgundy, &c. They referr'd to the Council of State the greateſt part of the Matters that came before them, and proceeded no further in them, but by virtue of the Decrees of that Council: So that if we will ſuppoſe that Marſhal Marillac was an innocent Victim, we muſt ſuppoſe that his Judges in number twenty three, and the greateſt part of the Counſellors of State, had conſpir'd the ruin of an innocent Man. This were a harſh ſuppoſal; for common Senſe inclines us rather to believe, that a Soldier has been guilty of evil Practices (e), than to believe that ſo great a number of ſuch Magiſtrates ſhould agree to condemn an innocent Man. Note, I pray you, that tho' ten of the Judges did not think him worthy of Death, yet all of 'em thought him guilty: And for this I refer my ſelf to the Narrative of Mr du Chaſtelet. "(f) After each of "the Judges had with an equal affection to Juſtice, prov'd his Opinion by the beſt Reaſons "the Subject could afford, and the Laws and "Proofs had been argued for the ſpace of two "Hours, all their Votes were reduc'd to theſe "two Opinions. Thirteen judg'd him worthy "of Death, and ten of them were for depriving "him of his Honour, his Offices and Eſtate, and "changing the ſentence of Death into perpetual "Baniſhment or Impriſonment, at the choice of "the King, and in ſuch a place as his Majeſty "ſhould pleaſe to keep him, as had been often "practis'd with ſuch Perſons." One of the Apologiſts for Mr. Marillac confeſſes, that the Cardinal "(g) mixed among the new Commiſſioners "three or four Perſons of great Integrity, which "he did, as he adds, the better to conceal his "Deſign, when he believ'd that his Party "was ſo ſtrong, that they would carry it for "his Condemnation." Is not this to acknowledge that three or four Perſons of great Integrity judg'd him worthy of perpetual Baniſhment or Impriſonment? And would any good Man vote againſt him, whom he believes to be innocent? In fine, I obſerve, that among ſo many People, whom Cardinal Richelieu Perſecuted, Baniſh'd and Impriſon'd, there were but few whom he try'd in Courts: Which is a ſign, that he did not think himſelf ſtrong enough to find Witneſſes and Commiſſioners to his Mind. He did not therefore appoint Commiſſions, but when he was ſure that the behaviour of an Enemy, ſuch as that of St. Preul was for inſtance, would furniſh ſufficient Proofs to the Commiſſioners.

(a) See the Hiſt. of the French Academy, p. 246, 247. edit of Paris. 1672.

V. As to the fifth Reaſon, ſee hereafter the Remark K.

Here two Objections do offer themſelves, which deſerv'd to be diſcuſs'd. It may be alledg'd: 1. That we muſt not conſider the Writing of Mr. du Chaſtelet, and the two anonymous Pieces I have cited as being of equal weight. 2 That the injuſtice of the Cardinal is viſible at leaſt in this, that he caus'd a Marſhal of France to be put to death, for ſuch Crimes as did not deſerve ſo great a Puniſhment, and which he left unpuniſh'd when People had not diſpleas'd him.

As to the firſt of theſe two Difficulties, I muſt obſerve, that I had reaſon to pretend, that the Writing of Mr du Chaſtelet is of equal weight with the two anonymous Pieces I know very well, that being appointed one of the Judges (a), he was excepted againſt as the Author of a very bitter Satyr againſt Mr. Marillac, and that the Marſhal, when he was at the Bar, did very much provoke him by his Reproaches. I know alſo that he own'd himſelf to be juſtly excepted againſt, and that he did not aſſiſt at the Judgment, and that he made in Priſon thoſe Remarks I have mention'd. to reconcile himſelf to the Court, and to procure his own Liberty (b). He was therefore one, you will ſay, who wrote on one ſide to ſatisfie his hatred, and on the other, to gain the favour of Cardinal Richelieu. But pray, upon what Motives did the other write the two Pieces, which I let againſt Mr. du Chaſtelet's? Had not he an extreme hatred againſt the Cardinal, and a paſſionate deſire to favour Marſhal Marillac? Ought we to diſtruſt leſs a Writer of Invectives than a flattering Writer? Do you think that thoſe fugitives who wrote at Bruſſels (c) for the Queen-Mother, thinking to make their Court to the Spaniards by defaming the Cardinal, and being exceeding angry to ſee, that the advantages they expected by adhering to the Intereſt of this Queen, were all vaniſh'd away, by the ſuperiority of the Cardinal's Party: Do you think, I ſay, that theſe Writers were more credible than thoſe who were hir'd by this chief Miniſter and Worſhipp'd him. 'Tis no partiality to ſuſpect all of them.

Satyr and Flattery are the two Plagues of Hiſtory, two Sources that poyſon the Relations of human Events; but we may ſay, that the Contagion of a detracting Writer, who is govern'd by Hatred and Reſentment, is more pernicious to Hiſtory, than the Contagion of thoſe who write Panegyricks. One of the moſt celebrated Hiſtorians of Antiquity obſerves (d), That the Hiſtories of Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius and Nero, were not faithful, becauſe they were either written in their Life-time, or a little after their Death: The Writers of the former told Lyes for fear, and the latter Hiſtorians were provok'd to be unfaithful by the freſh hatred they had for them He obſerves in another place, that the Truth had been corrupted on one ſide by the Flatterers of Princes, and on the other by the Malecontents of the Government, and that all of them took little care to inform Poſterity right; for the Readers muſt either chooſe an Hiſtorian that is officious to pleaſe, or one that is an Enemy But one can more eaſily ſecure himſelf from the Impoſture of a Flatterer, than of a Cenſurer: Mercenary Pens eaſily diſguſt, and Men greedily ſwallow Detraction and Malice Flattery is look'd upon as a vile Slavery, and the Malice of the Writer as a generous Love of Liberty. 'Tis impoſſible to think of theſe things more juſtly, and therefore I ſhall give you the Original of ſo ſenſible an Obſervation: (e) Peſtquam bellatum apud Actium, atque omnem potiſtatem ad unum conferre pacis interfuit; magna illa ingenia ceſſere. Simul veritas pluribus modis infracta, primum inſcitia Reipublicæ ut alienæ, mox libidine aſſentandi, aut viſus odio adverſus dominantes. Ita neutris cura poſteritatis, inter infenſos vel obnoxios. Sed ambitionem ſcriptoris facile adverſeris: obtrectatio & livor pronis auribus accipiuntur, quippe adulationi fœdum crimen ſervitutis, malignitati falſa ſpecies libertatis inſit. 'Tis certain, commonly ſpeaking, that the Praiſes of Flatterers ſink with thoſe to whom they are given, and that Poſterity is not deceiv'd by them; but a Critical Hiſtory of great Men, written with a well-govern'd Malice, is never loſt. This kind of Falſhood does more eaſily impoſe upon ſucceeding Ages than the other, for its Energy is Eternal. The Flatterers themſelves gather up this like Manna many Ages after, and make uſe of it to ſet off the merit of their Heroes. They praiſe without any bounds, and to make you believe (c) See at the end of the Memoirs of Montreſor, the Advices and Inſtructions which the Cardinal gave concerning the Proceſs and the way how the Judges managed it.

(d) See the ſame Memoirs of Montreſor.

(e) Note, that this is not given for a Rule; for it is well known that many Judges have been corrupted: But here I inſiſt upon the circumſtances of this particular trial.

(f) Chaſtelet's Obſervations upon the Life and Condemnation of Marſhal Marillac, p. 806, 807. of the Collection of divers Pieces to ſerve for Hiſtory. Edit. of 1643. in 4°.

(g) l'Eſprit bienheureux du Mareſchal de Marillac, p. m. 60.

(a) See the Relation of the Proceſs and Condemnation of Marſhal Marillac, p. 7.

(b) See the Hiſtory of the French Academy, p. 248.

(c) Note, that the anonymous Pieces I have mention'd are printed in the Collection of the Pieces for the defence of the Queen-Mother WHETHER Flatterers corrupt the Truth of Hiſtory more than Satyrical Writers.

(d) Tiberii, Caiique, & Claudii, ac Neronis res, florentibus ipſis, ob metum falſa, poſtquam occiderant, recentibus odiis compoſita ſunt. Tacit Annal. lib. 1 cap 1 not offer theſe things but as detractions which he publiſh'd, not in that * Latin Satyr that they do not love Flattery, they revile without Mercy thoſe that are dead; and herein they are the very reverſe of old Men (f). Mr. le Laboureur diſcover'd this Trick in ſome Writers of his time. "If I purſue, ſays he (g), each good "or bad Hero to his Cradle, I will alſo examine "his private Actions, as well as thoſe which "appear'd great in the Eyes of the World; be"cauſe this is the only way to deſtroy all the un"juſt Monuments that Flattery has erected, and "to break off or diſgrace the wretched Trade of "many Writers, who are devoted to a ſervile "and diſhoneſt intereſt, and are ſo indiſcreet, as "to addreſs that to Poſterity, which they have "written only to ſerve a turn. We have many "Examples of it, but I find none that deſerves "more to be blam'd than that of ſome Mo"dern Writers, who to make it appear, that "they were forc'd by the truth to write in Com"mendation of ſome Perſons that are odious, or "whoſe Merit is very doubtful, and have no"thing in them more commendable, but that "they are ſtill alive, and have it in their power "to do the Writer good, I ſay, to make this ap"pear, they affect to defame the moſt accom"pliſh'd Men, from whom they have nothing to "hope or fear, and treat them rather in the ſtyle "of a Satyr than of a Hiſtory, and freely beſpat"ter their Memory with all the foul things, that "a baſe and mercenary Detraction can inſpire.

(e) Idem hiſtor lib. 1. cap. 1.

Let us ſay ſomething of the ſecond Difficulty, and let us grant, that 'tis very probable, if Marſhal Marillac had not endeavour'd to ruin the Cardinal, he needed not have fear'd anything from a Court of Juſtice; and that if he had adher'd to the Intereſt of the Cardinal, his embezling of the publick Money, and taking of Bribes had not hinder'd the advancement of his Fortune. He was perhaps leſs guilty than ſuch and ſuch, who did not only commit the ſame Crimes with Impunity, but were amply rewarded for their Services by the recommendation of his Enemy. He repreſented to his Judges, "(k) That all his "Accuſation conſiſted in Facts ſo inconſiderable, "that they might be objected to every one that "had the leaſt command in the Army; and he "ſaid on the Day of his Execution, (i) That it was a "ſtrange thing he ſhould be Proſecuted as he had "been, when the Proceſs was only about Hay, "Straw, Stones, Wood and Lime, and that there "was nothing in all this for which a Lacquey "would be whipp'd." Mr. du Chaſtelet (k) refutes this by very ſtrong Proofs; but it is certain, that the Commanders of the Troops at that time did commonly make uſe of a Thouſand unjuſt ways to enrich themſelves. He makes a Remark to this purpoſe, that the Marſhal's Faults had paſs'd unpuniſh'd, if he had not incurr'd upon other Accounts the Indignation of the Court. Weigh well theſe words: "(l) The moſt rigorous "States have allow'd, that common Crimes ſhould "be paſs'd over in the chief Perſons: Their "Splendor and eminent Station, together with "the Favour of their Maſter, with which they many "times have cover'd their common faults: But "if it happen that Malice and Ungratefulneſs "deſtroy the favour they enjoy they are then "level'd with the meaneſt of the Kingdom, and "their Faults appear equal, and they become "ſubject to the Penalties appointed againſt other "Subjects. All Men employ'd in great Offices, "come to them only by the favour of their So"vereign, in whoſe Hand all the Laws are like "flaming Fires, to enlighten thoſe who pleaſe "him, and to conſume others when he think fit. "Robberies and bad Intrigues joyn'd together ruin"ed this Man." He means that the Court would have wink'd at ſuch-like Concuſſions made by another Marſhal of France, the reſt of whoſe Conduct had tended to the welfare of the State; but ſince this Man's Factions tended (m) only to ſow Diviſion in the Royal Family for the advantage of the Spaniards, it was thought neceſſary to deliver him up to the rigour of Juſtice. To ſpeak freely, thoſe who form'd Factions with Mary de Mediciſ, were altogether inexcuſable; for inſtead of cheriſhing in this Princeſs the paſſionate Deſire of Dominion, they ſhould have adviſ'd her to be quiet and peaceable. She [illegible]ted ſufficiently of the Royal Power in h[illegible]usband's Life-time, and during the Minorit[illegible]her Son. When he became of Age and wa[illegible]rried, ſhe ought to have ſtudied only to lead [illegible]teeable Life as a Queen Dowager, without endeavouring to preſcribe to Lewis XIII. the choice of ſuch and ſuch Miniſters, and without quarrelling with them. I believe one might apply to her what Tiberius ſaid one day to the Widow of Germanicus, You take every thing for an Injury which hinders you from Reigning. (n) Nurum Agrippinam, poſt mortem mariti, liberius quiddam queſtam, manu apprehendit: Græcoque verſu, Si non dominaris, inquit, filiola, injuriam te accipere exiſtimas? The Paris-Gazette contains a remarkable thing, concerning the Reaſons which oblig'd the King not to grant Letters of Grace upon this occaſion. "(o) The Death of Marſhal "Marillac, (ſo the Gazetteer expreſſes himſelf in "the Article from Bruſſels, dated May 15. 1632.) "makes People here talk differently: Neverthe"leſs the common Opinion is, that thoſe who "wrote in the Names of the Queen-Mother and "the King's Brother, Letters full of threats ad"dreſs'd to his Judges to fright them, inſtead of "doing him any Service, have been the cauſe of "his ruin, becauſe they hindred the King from "granting him a Pardon, and forc'd his Majeſty "to give him over to Juſtice, inſtead of that Cle"mency which he might have found from his Ma"jeſty, if the King had not apprehended with "great reaſon, that the favour would have been "imputed to his Weakneſs and Fear, which had "been owing only to his Mercy.

As to the Queſtion, whether the embezeling of the publick Moneys could be puniſh'd with Death, I refer you to Mr. du Chaſtelet, who maintains, that the Sentence paſs'd upon Marſhal Marillac does not exceed the rigour of the Laws. We have much ado to approve this Opinion, and the Judgment paſs'd upon the Marſhal would be better approv'd than it is, if it was like that which was paſs'd upon Mr. Fouquet. At the time of his Tryal there was publiſh'd a learn'd Book about embezeling the publick Moneys.

